The Tribunal's Final Report

Dear Mr. Coughlan

I enclose the Fifth and Final Report of this Tribunal which was established by Ministerial Order on 4 November 1997 (and amended by Instruments dated 15 July 1998, 24 October 2002, 7 July 2003 and 3 December 2004) to inquire into Certain Planning Matters and Payments, and to report its findings to the Clerk of the Dail. I have written in similar terms to An Taoiseach.

This Final Report includes detailed Recommendations in relation to existing legislation in the areas of conflicts of interest, ethics in public office, political finance, planning, local government, the investigation and prosecution of corruption, transparency of corporate bodies and the powers of tribunals.

One section of the Report (approximately 200 pages) has been withheld for legal reasons, and will be published as soon as possible.

In accordance with the precedent set by the Moriarty Tribunal in its Final Report in March 2011, and for similar reasons, this Report is immediately published in digital format. Two hard copies of the Report are also provided herewith for each House of the Oireachtas. Hard copies of the Report will become generally available within a few weeks.

I have also arranged today to provide each Member of the Oireachtas with a digital copy of the Final Report.

Yours sincerely

Dear Taoiseach

I enclose the Fifth and Final Report of this Tribunal which was established by Ministerial Order on 4 November 1997 (and amended by Instruments dated 15 July 1998, 24 October 2002, 7 July 2003 and 3 December 2004) to inquire into Certain Planning Matters and Payments, and to report its findings to the Clerk of the Dail. PREFACE

This is the fourth and final Report of this Tribunal of Inquiry. One Chapter of the Report – relating to one module of its public inquiries – has been withheld for legal reasons and will be published as soon as possible.

The preparation of this Report has proved to be an enormous and complex task because of the necessity to consider tens of thousands of pages of transcripts of evidence and documentation resulting from the sworn evidence of hundreds of witnesses.

The duration of the Inquiry (in excess of 14 years) has been significantly greater than anyone anticipated at the time of its establishment in late 1997. Several factors have contributed to its considerable length (and the consequential substantial cost), including and, in particular, wide ranging Terms of Reference which necessitated extensive and prolonged investigations by the Tribunal. The depth and scope of that investigative work necessarily required the Tribunal to hear evidence from many hundreds of witnesses, with the result that this Tribunal has become the longest Tribunal of Inquiry in the history of this State.

Other factors also contributed to the length and costs of the Tribunal's work, such as the failure on the part of some parties who were required to give evidence to the Tribunal to give truthful evidence, or indeed in some instances, to give evidence at all. By its very nature, the investigation of corruption will almost always be a slow process because of a dearth of documentation and paper trail evidence. The investigation of corruption in any sphere will always be very forensically orientated, and therefore notoriously time consuming.

The conduct of the Tribunal's inquiries (both private and public) and the preparation of this Report have been undertaken on the basis that fair procedures were paramount. The Tribunal, at all times, endeavoured to adopt and follow such procedures and to conduct its work and write its Report without fear or favour. In those instances where its procedures were successfully challenged in the Courts, the Tribunal readjusted them accordingly.

This Report was written by the Members of the Tribunal. The Report's findings were made without direction from members of its legal team, nor was any attempt made by them to influence those findings. We wish to state this categorically because of the fact that, on occasion, the contrary has been suggested in media articles relating to the Tribunal.

This Report is accompanied by Recommendations. These are made in the light of, and with regard to, information and evidence provided to the Tribunal over its lifetime, and with the benefit of exhaustive research conducted by the Tribunal over the past three years. We hope that they will be considered by the Government and the Oireachtas, as well as by interest groups and the public generally. These Recommendations have been made with a genuine belief that their adoption will considerably enhance public service and aid the battle against corruption.

The Tribunal's work was only made possible with the assistance and dedication of its staff – both legal and non-legal (and which at its busiest period numbered in excess of 50). The nature of that work frequently required members of its staff to work excessively long hours, and at weekends. We wish to express our deepest appreciation to all who worked in the Tribunal over the years. It is not practical, or indeed necessary, to identify particular individuals for special mention. Nevertheless, and somewhat in conflict with this statement, we believe it appropriate to express, in particular, our gratitude to Mr Peter Kavanagh, the Tribunal's Registrar and its de facto office manager who has been with the Tribunal since its establishment, and to Mr John Lynn, the Tribunal's Director of ICT who was responsible for the creation and publication of the electronic version of this Final Report.

We also wish to express our gratitude to our "line" Department, the Department of the Environment (and its Ministers since 1997), which was tasked with funding the Tribunal. That Department (and, indeed the other Government Departments and agencies with which the Tribunal had contact), at all times respected the Tribunal's independence and integrity.

And

- (ii) to ascertain the identity of any members of the Oireachtas, past or present, and/or members of the relevant local authorities who were involved directly or indirectly in any of the foregoing matters whether by the making of representations to a planning authority or to any person in the authority in a position to make relevant decisions or by the proposing of or by voting in favour or against or by abstaining from any such resolutions or by absenting themselves when such votes were taken or by attempting to influence in any manner whatsoever the outcome of any such applications, or who received payments from any of the persons or companies referred to at (i) above.

- 5. In the event that the Tribunal in the course of its inquiries is made aware of any acts associated with the planning process committed on or after the 20th June, 1985 which may in its opinion amount to corruption, or which involve attempts to influence by threats or deception or inducement or otherwise to compromise the disinterested performance of public duties, it shall report on such acts and should in particular make recommendations as to the effectiveness and improvement of existing legislation governing corruption in the light of its inquiries.
- 6. And the Tribunal be requested to make recommendations in relation to such amendments to Planning, Local Government, Ethics in Public Office and any other relevant legislation as the Tribunal considers appropriate having regard to its findings.

“payment” includes money and any benefit in kind and the payment to any person includes a payment to a connected person within the meaning of the Ethics in Public Office Act, 1995.
- B. And that the Tribunal be requested to conduct its inquiries in the following manner, to the extent that it may do so consistent with the provisions of the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Acts, 1921 and 1979:

- (i) to carry out such preliminary investigations in private as it thinks fit using all the powers conferred on it under the Acts, in order to determine whether sufficient evidence exists in relation to any of the matters referred to above to warrant proceeding to a full public inquiry in relation to such matters,
- (ii) to inquire fully into all matters referred to above in relation to which such evidence may be found to exist, dealing in the first instance with the acknowledged monetary donation debated in Dáil Eireann on the 10th September, 1997 Dáil Debates Columns 616-638 and to report to the Clerk of the Dáil thereupon,
- (iii) to seek discovery of all relevant documents, files and papers in the possession, power or procurement of said Mr. Michael Bailey, Mr. James Gogarty and Donnelly, Neary and Donnelly Solicitors,
- (iv) in relation to any matters where the Tribunal finds that there is insufficient evidence to warrant proceeding to a full public inquiry, to report that fact to the Clerk of the Dáil and to report in such a manner as the Tribunal thinks appropriate on the steps taken by the Tribunal to determine what evidence, if any, existed and the Clerk of the Dáil shall thereupon communicate the Tribunal's report in full to the Dáil,
- (v) to report on an interim basis not later than one month from the date of establishment of the Tribunal or the tenth day of any oral hearing, whichever shall first occur, to the Clerk of the Dáil on the following matters:

the numbers of parties then represented before the Tribunal;

the progress which has been made in the hearing and the work of the Tribunal;

the likely duration (so far as that may be capable of being estimated at that time) of the Tribunal proceedings;

any other matters which the Tribunal believes should be drawn to the attention of the Clerk of the Dáil at that stage (including any matter relating to the terms of reference).

- C. And that the person or persons selected to conduct the Inquiry should be informed that it is the desire of the House that –
- (a) the Inquiry be completed in as economical a manner as possible and at the earliest date consistent with a fair examination of the matters referred to it, and, in respect to the matters referred to in paragraphs 1 to 4 above, if possible, not later than the 31st December, 1997, and
 - (b) all costs incurred by reason of the failure of individuals to co-operate fully and expeditiously with the Inquiry should, so far as is consistent with the interests of justice, be borne by those individuals.
- D. And that the Clerk of the Dáil shall on receipt of any Report from the Tribunal arrange to have it laid before both Houses of the Oireachtas immediately on its receipt.

Text of Schedule to Resolution passed by Dáil Eireann at its meeting on 7th October 1997.

SCHEDULE

Kilinamonan House,
The Ward,
Co. Dublin.

8th June, 1989

Dear Mr. Gogarty,

PROPOSALS FOR DISCUSSION

Re: Your lands at Finglas, Ballymun, Donabate, Balgriffin and Portmarnock, Co. Dublin.

I refer to our many discussions regarding your following six parcels of land:-

- Lot 1: 100 acres (approx) at North Road, Finglas, including “Barrett’s Land”.
- Lot 2: 12 acres (approx) at Jamestown Road, Finglas.
- Lot 3: 100 acres (approx) at Poppintree, Ballymun.
- Lot 4: 255 acres (approx) at Donabate (Turvey House and Beaverton House).
- Lot 5: 250 acres (approx) at Balgriffin.
- Lot 6: 9 acres (approx) at Portmarnock.

I submit the following proposals for your consideration:-

PROPOSAL NO. 1 – Purchase Proposal

Lots 1, 2 and 3 Purchase Price £4,000 per acre
 10% deposit payable on the signing of the contract
 Completion 1 year from date of contract.

Lot 4 Purchase Price IR£1 Million
 Deposit 10% on contract
 Completion 2 years from date of contract.

Lot 5 Purchase Price IR £750,000
 Deposit 10% on contract
 Completion 3 years from date of contract.

Lot 6: Option to be granted for nominal consideration (£100.00) for a period of 2 years at a purchase price of £30,000.00 per acre.

PROPOSAL NO. 2 – Participation Proposal

As an alternative to the outright purchase proposal above I am prepared to deal with Lots 1 – 5 (inclusive) above on the basis that I would be given a 50% share in the ownership of the said lands in exchange for procuring Planning Permission and Building Bye Law Approval. The time span which I would require to be allowed to obtain the Permissions and Approval and my anticipated financial expenditure (apart from my time input) in respect of the different lots would be as follows:-

Lots 1, 2 and 3
 A period of 2 years within which to procure a buildable Planning Permission and Building Bye Laws Approval for mixed development including housing, industrial and commercial.
 My financial expenditure up to a figure of £150,000 (to include Architect’s fees, Consulting Engineer’s fees, Planning and Bye Law charges etc.).

Lots 4 and 5
 Time requirement – 3 years.
 Financial
 Expenditure - up to £150,000

In considering the above proposals the following points of information should be borne in mind by all parties:-

1. From the point of view of obtaining Planning Permission the entire lands (lots 1 to 6 inclusive) have the following shortcoming:-
 - NO zoning for development purposes
 - NO services.
 - NO proposal in current draft development plans (City and County) for the zoning of the lands or any part thereof for development purposes.
2. We face a very severe uphill battle to arrange for the availability of services and for the ultimate procurement of Planning Permission.
3. The steps to be taken on the way to procuring a buildable Planning Permission and Building Bye Laws Approval are notoriously difficult, time consuming and expensive. Material Contravention Orders must be obtained and this involves their procurement of a majority vote at 2 full Council Meetings at which 78 Council Members must be present and it also involves satisfactory compliance with extensive requirements and pre-conditions of the Planning Authority and the inevitable dealing with protracted Appeals to An Bord Pleanala.
4. It is essential that the Planning Application should be brought in the name of an active house building company which enjoys good standing and good working relationship with the Planners and the Council Members and in this regard I confirm that in the event of our reaching agreement regarding the within proposals that all Planning Applications would be made by one of my Companies which meets the said requirements.
5. In the case of all of the lands the applications will be highly sensitive and controversial and we can realistically expect strenuous opposition from private, political and planning sectors. One of my active companies will have to take the limelight in such applications and withstand the objections and protests which will inevitably confront it. Apart from the anticipated financial expenditure as outlined above it should be borne in mind that I will personally have to give extensively of my time and efforts over the entire period of the applications including the necessary preliminary negotiations in regard to services and zoning. It must be borne in mind that I will have to abandon other projects which would be open to myself and my companies in order to give proper attention to this project. If I am successful in changing your lands from their present status of agricultural lands with very limited potential even for agricultural use into highly valuable building lands I would have to be rewarded with a minimum 50% stake in the ownership of the lands. Our advisors would have to work out the details as to how this can be effected in the most tax-efficient manner.

I look forward to hearing from you in relation to the above proposals. In the case of the first proposal which relates to the outright purchase of the lands (excluding Lot 6) I would not be adverse to a proposal which would involve the vendors retaining a participation stake of up to 20% in the purchasing company if you felt that an ongoing interest in the future development of the lands would be more acceptable to the present owners.

Yours sincerely,

MICHAEL BAILEY.

Mr. Jim Gogarty,
Dublin 3.

Whether any substantial payments were made or benefits provided, directly or indirectly, to Mr. Raphael Burke which may, in the opinion of the Sole Member of the Tribunal, amount to corruption or involve attempts to influence or compromise the disinterested performance of public duties or were made or provided in circumstances which may give rise to a reasonable inference that the motive for making or receiving such payments was improperly connected with any public office or position held by Mr. Raphael Burke, whether as Minister, Minister of State or elected representative;

 - any other matters which the Tribunal believes should be drawn to the attention of the Clerk of the Dáil at that stage (including any matter relating to the terms of reference);and to furnish such further interim reports as the Tribunal may consider necessary.
- F. And that the Sole Member of the Tribunal should be informed that it is the desire of the House that:-
- (a) the Inquiry into the matters referred to in paragraph E hereof be completed in as economical a manner as possible and at the earliest date consistent with a fair examination of the said matters, and
 - (b) all costs incurred by reason of the failure of individuals to cooperate fully and expeditiously with the Inquiry should, so far as is consistent with the interests of justice, be borne by those individuals.
- G. And that the Clerk of the Dáil shall on receipt of any Report from the Tribunal arrange to have it laid before both Houses of the Oireachtas immediately on its receipt.”

- (3) The Tribunal may in the course of investigating any additional matter under paragraph J(2) or a matter being investigated under paragraph J(1) investigate any other matter of which it becomes aware when it is satisfied that such further investigation is necessary for the Tribunal to make findings on any such additional matter or a matter referred to in paragraph J(1) above.

- (5) Nothing in these amended Terms of Reference shall preclude the Tribunal from conducting hearings or investigations into any compliance or non-compliance by any person with the orders or directions of the Tribunal.
- (6) The Tribunal may in its sole discretion - in respect of any matter within paragraphs J(1), J(2) and J(3) of these amended Terms of Reference - decide:

of health is or is likely to be an impediment to such person being in a position to cooperate with the Tribunal or to give evidence to the Tribunal in private or in public;

(ii) The likely duration of the preliminary investigation or public hearing into any matter;

(iii) The likely cost (or other use of the resources of the Tribunal) of such investigation or any stage of the investigation into any matter;

(iv) Whether or not the investigation into the matter is likely to provide evidence to the Tribunal which would enable it to make findings of fact and conclusions and/or to make recommendations;

(v) Any other factors which in the opinion of the Tribunal would, or would be likely to, render an investigation, or the continued investigation into any matter inappropriate, unnecessary, wasteful of resources, unduly costly, unduly prolonged or which would be of limited or no probative value.

(7) Subject to paragraph J(3) any matter not brought to the attention of the Tribunal or of which it is not aware by the 16th day of December 2004 shall not be the subject of any investigation by the Tribunal.’ “

CHAPTER ONE – INTRODUCTION

1.01 This is the fifth and final report of the Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments which was established in order to inquire into concerns regarding corruption in the planning process from the late 1980s to the late 1990s.

1.02 It is clear from those inquiries that these concerns were well-founded. Throughout that period, corruption in Irish political life was both endemic and systemic. It affected every level of Government from some holders of top ministerial offices to some local councillors and its existence was widely known and widely tolerated. Although that corruption was occasionally the subject of investigation or adverse comment, those involved operated with a justified sense of impunity and invincibility. There was little appetite on the part of the State's political or investigative authorities to take the steps necessary to combat it effectively or to sanction those involved.

1.03 The Tribunal is aware that the corruption exposed by it, and by other Tribunals of Inquiry, has seriously undermined the public's faith in democracy and in particular, in its public officials, whether elected or appointed. This is doubtlessly attributable to both the scale of that corruption and the fact that it involved several high ranking public officials. However, the Tribunal firmly believes that the vast majority of public officials perform their functions with the utmost integrity. Those who believe that those in the public sphere are corrupt do a great disservice to these individuals. In addition, they may inadvertently contribute to corruption by both dissuading those of high integrity from entering public office and simultaneously contributing to lower standards on the part of those in public office, on the basis of a mistaken assumption that 'everyone is doing it.'

1.04 This introductory chapter comprises four main parts. The first part essentially gives an overview of the findings made by the Tribunal on the basis of its inquiries. The second part addresses a number of matters relevant to the main body of this report, including the Tribunal's terms of reference, the conduct of its inquiry, the burden of proof, the Tribunal's findings and the structure of this Report. The third part then considers various controversial matters including: attempts to interfere with the Tribunal's independence; the length of the Tribunal's inquiry; the costs of that inquiry; and the unauthorised disclosure of information. The fourth and final part deals in the main with post publication issues, namely witness costs and documentation.

1.05 Overall, this Report is divided into 18 chapters, 13 of which cover inquiries into the following lands: Quarryvale (Chapter 2); Cherrywood (Chapter 3); Ballycullen/Beechill (Chapter 4); Pye Lands (Chapter 5); Lissenhall (Chapter 6); Cargobridge (Chapter 7); Clogran (Chapter 8); Baldoyle/Penine (Chapter 9); Fox & Mahony (Chapter 10); Walls Kinsealy (Chapter 11); Balheary (Chapter 12); St. Gerards Bray (Chapter 13); Duff Lands (Chapter 14). A further chapter dealing with inquiries into other lands has been withheld for legal reasons and will be published as soon as possible.

1.06 A further two chapters deal with individuals who were common to several of the 13 modules, namely Mr Frank Dunlop and Mr Liam Lawlor. The three remaining chapters comprise this Introduction, an Executive Summary of the Tribunal's main findings and the Tribunal's Recommendations as to how the existing measures combating corruption could be made more effective in the light of those inquiries.

BACKGROUND

1.07 This Tribunal traces its origins to extensive public concerns regarding possible corruption in the planning system and in particular the concern that certain public officials, whether elected or appointed, were being bribed or otherwise profiting from their role in that system for their own benefit.

1.08 In the late 1980's and early 1990's Dublin County Council rezoned thousands of acres of land, repeatedly against the advice of the professional planners. There was a widespread belief that many of these rezoning decisions had been bought by developers and that some public officials, including local councillors, were for sale.

1.09 Matters came to a head in 1995, when Mr Colm Mac Eochaidh, a barrister, and Mr Michael Smith, the then Chairman of An Taisce, placed an anonymous advertisement in the Irish Times, through a firm of Newry solicitors, Donnelly, Neary & Donnelly Solicitors, offering a reward of IR£10,000 for information on land rezoning corruption that would lead to a conviction.

1.10 Mr James Gogarty was among those who responded and he claimed that the former Minister, Mr Raphael (Ray) Burke, had received IR£80,000 from certain developers. Details of this allegation subsequently emerged in the newspapers and Mr Burke was forced to resign from his ministerial post.

1.11 The resulting public outcry resulted in the establishment of this Tribunal by Ministerial Order on 4 November 1997, to inquire urgently into matters of public importance set forth in its Terms of Reference and to report to the Clerk of the Dáil on its findings.

FINDINGS

1.12 The Tribunal's inquiries uncovered evidence of deep-rooted, systemic corruption in Irish public life. It has already reported on some of this evidence in its Second and Third Interim Reports.

1.15 This, the Tribunal's fifth and final Report, has largely centered on its inquiries into corruption in the review of the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan which commenced in 1987 and in relation to the making of the 1998 Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Development Plan. It is based on evidence heard, predominantly, between October 2002 and December 2008 in the course of 589 days of public hearing during which the Tribunal heard evidence from 427 witnesses generating approximately 60,000 pages of transcripts.

1.16 Following on from this evidence, this Tribunal is satisfied that at least for some councillors in Dublin County Council, corruption had become a regular aspect of their public role. Those councillors exercised their public powers in their own interests rather than in the interests of the public and bartered that power in exchange for cash and/or other benefits. There was apparently no shortage of persons prepared to pay for the corrupt exercise of public power and large tracts of land were ultimately rezoned because of the making and receipt of corrupt payments rather than in the interests of proper land use and development.

1.17 This corruption was, at the time it occurred, an open secret. For example, according to evidence heard by the Tribunal, in February 1993, during the course of a Dublin County Council meeting, Cllr Trevor Sargent, a member of the Green Party waved in the air a cheque for the sum of IR£100, which had been sent to him by a developer, proclaiming that it was 'part of the corruption in here.' Following the incident, Cllr Sargent had to be escorted from the chamber for his own protection from some of his fellow councillors.

1.18 Subsequently, in May 1993, the then Minister for the Environment, Mr Michael Smith, TD in the course of a speech delivered at the Irish Planning Institute's Awards Ceremony, referred to zoning in Dublin as being 'a debased currency.' While Mr Smith did not directly refer to corruption in this speech, he did comment on the extent to which the process for rezoning land in County Dublin had become tarnished and was being operated in a manner which ignored the needs of the community. According to Mr Smith, rezoning was at risk of becoming 'no more than the product of a mechanism for arbitrating on the claims of a limited number of landowners, potential developers and their agents.'

1.19 After Mr Smith's speech, a deputation of Dublin county councillors came to meet him and, according to Mr Smith angrily indicated their disagreement with his views as expressed in his speech. That deputation included Cllrs Colm McGrath, G.V. Wright, and Cyril Gallagher, each of whom are the subject of findings of corruption in this report.

1.20 Corruption in the planning process was also the subject of several newspaper articles. In particular, a series of Irish Times articles in July 1993 openly discussed the payment of money by developers to elected councillors. Following on from those articles, Minister Smith requested the Commissioner of an Garda Síochána to investigate the allegations referred to in them. That investigation was conducted over a period of several months but did not result in any prosecutions.

1.21 Given the existence of such rampant public corruption, the obvious question is why it was allowed to continue unabated. The short answer to that question is that it continued because nobody was prepared to do enough to stop it. This is perhaps inevitable when corruption ceases to become an isolated event and becomes so entrenched that it is transformed into an acknowledged way of doing business. Specifically, because corruption affected every level of Irish political life, those with the power to stop it were frequently implicated in it. Moreover, the general apathy on the part of the public towards that corruption meant that there was insufficient pressure from the public to compel their representatives to take firm action to curtail or eliminate it. This apathy may in turn have been attributable to a lack of understanding regarding the corrosive and destructive nature of corruption. This situation did not change significantly, at least not until the events leading to the establishment of this Tribunal.

1.22 This Part addresses a number of matters relevant to the main body of the report, including: the Tribunal's Terms of Reference; the conduct of its Inquiry; the standard of proof; issues relating to the Tribunal's findings; the Tribunal's approach to witness credibility; its powers to make recommendations; the executive summary; as well as a number of stylistic matters. It also gives a brief overview of planning and development law as it was applied during the period at the focus of this Report.

THE TRIBUNAL'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

1.23 The Tribunal's original Terms of Reference focused on an allegation of a payment to Mr Ray Burke. However, in 1998 the Tribunal requested the Oireachtas to amend those terms, as explained in its Second Interim Report. Following on from that request and in view of other significant developments which had taken place since the setting up of the Tribunal, the Oireachtas amended the initial Terms of Reference by Instrument of the Minister for the Environment and Local Government dated 15 July 1998. The Tribunal interpreted its Terms of Reference on 21 October 1998 \(see Exhibit 2\).

1.24 Subsequently, in its Fourth Interim Report, the Tribunal again requested the Oireachtas to amend its Terms of Reference. Essentially, the amendments proposed by the Tribunal were designed to better enable the Tribunal to manage its, by then, very large and expanding workload. In particular, the Tribunal sought more discretion in determining whether or not to proceed with particular lines of inquiry with a view to curtailing its work load. In response to this request, the Tribunal's Terms of Reference were again, and for the last time, amended by Resolutions passed by the Houses of the Oireachtas on 17 November 2004, and by instrument of the Minister for the Environment, Heritage and Local Government dated 3 December 2004.

CONDUCT OF THE INQUIRY

1.25 The role of a Tribunal of Inquiry is radically different from that of a court. In particular, proceedings before a Tribunal are inquisitorial rather than adversarial in nature which means that the Tribunal itself has responsibility for obtaining the information necessary to enable it to carry out its functions and to determine the witnesses to be called to give evidence.

1.26 This Tribunal's inquiry was carried out in two key stages. First, it conducted preliminary investigations during which the Tribunal focused on gathering information of potential relevance to its Terms of Reference. The purpose of these investigations was to determine whether or not the evidence gathered was in fact relevant to those terms and whether there was sufficient evidence to proceed to public hearing in relation to a particular matter. Of necessity, the Tribunal conducted this phase of its investigation in private, in order to prevent unsubstantiated or irrelevant allegations from entering the public domain thereby encroaching on the constitutional rights of those who were the subject of those allegations.

1.27 The private inquiry stage was of considerable duration and involved intensive investigations including identifying and interviewing potential witnesses and following paper trails. The Tribunal was required to approach its inquiry with an open mind and the mere fact that an allegation or event appeared bizarre or unbelievable was not necessarily a basis for excluding it from further inquiry. For example, one allegation inquired into by the Tribunal was that the late Mr Liam Lawlor had turned up, uninvited, to a meeting in London claiming to be a representative of the Irish Government. While Mr Lawlor's Counsel, described this allegation as 'crazy stuff... off the wall' and 'intrinsically unworthy of belief' ultimately, having taken evidence from a number of witnesses, the Tribunal was satisfied that this allegation was in fact true.

1.28 Once the Tribunal was satisfied that a matter falling within its Terms of Reference warranted public inquiry, it then proceeded to hear evidence in public regarding that matter. In view of the multiplicity of issues and parties involved and in order to facilitate the orderly and focused examination of those issues and parties, it decided at an early date to divide its public inquiry into site specific inquiries forming individual modules. The Tribunal then proceeded to hear each module of evidence in turn, having circulated to all parties involved in the module copies of any material in the Tribunal's possession relevant to them. The Tribunal considered that this approach permitted all parties concerned to fully vindicate their rights whilst allowing the Tribunal to conduct its deliberations in a directed and efficacious manner. In particular, it better enabled witnesses and their legal representatives to prepare themselves for, on occasion, lengthy periods giving evidence, and/or cross examining other witnesses.

1.29 For the purposes of its public inquiry, the Tribunal at all times sat as a single body. While following the enactment of the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence)(Amendment) Act 2004, the Tribunal was empowered to sit in sub-divisions at the direction of the Chairman, it never in fact did so. This was because, by the time that Act was enacted, the Tribunal had already heard several modules of evidence some of which were so interlinked with subsequent modules that the possibility of an individual Member hearing one of those modules was neither practicable nor legally sound. The Tribunal was convinced that any attempt to exercise its power to hear evidence in sub-divisions would have almost certainly given rise to significant litigation and ultimately undermined the Tribunal's work.

1.30 At the conclusion of the public hearings of the Tribunal on 3 December 2008, all parties who faced the prospect of potential adverse findings in this Report were afforded an opportunity to submit written submissions to the Tribunal in relation to evidence relevant to them. A minority of parties chose to make such submissions which provided them with the opportunity to summarise their respective positions, and to comment on the evidence heard by the Tribunal in the course of its public hearings. The Tribunal took account of these submissions in preparing this Report.

STANDARD OF PROOF

1.31 The standard of proof adopted by this Tribunal was that of the 'balance of probabilities.' As the conclusions in a report such as this represent no more than a reasoned and informed expression of the Tribunal's opinion in relation to matters considered by it, the Tribunal considered that the criminal standard of proof, namely 'beyond reasonable doubt' was neither necessary nor appropriate. This was confirmed by the Supreme Court in Hazel Lawlor v Members of the Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters & Payments (SC No 376 of 2008) in which it rejected a claim that the Tribunal should apply that criminal standard in considering the evidence of or relating to the late Mr Liam Lawlor. Several other Tribunals of Inquiry have also made their conclusions on the balance of probabilities.

1.32 Despite the fact that its conclusions are in no way findings of either criminal or civil liability, the Tribunal remained very conscious that those conclusions could nevertheless reflect adversely on the personal reputation of those affected by them. Consequently, while the Tribunal reached its conclusions on the balance of probability, it also took the view that the degree of probability required to establish any fact was proportionate to the nature and gravity of the issue under consideration. In this respect, the Tribunal adopted the approach suggested by Murray J in Hazel Lawlor v the Members of the Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters & Payments, where he stated that:

‘The findings made must clearly be proportionate to the evidence available. Any such findings of grave wrongdoing should in principle be grounded upon cogent evidence.’

1.33 As a consequence of this approach, the Tribunal required a higher degree of probability to establish facts relied upon to make a finding of corruption, than, for example, to make a finding of inappropriate conduct.

1.34 Evidence comes in all shapes and sizes. Tribunals, like other fact finding bodies, are provided with both oral and documentary evidence of various quality. The weight which attaches to any one piece of evidence varies depending on many factors. These include in particular the credibility of a particular witness which is discussed further below. Corroborative evidence, when available, is especially valuable. While, as mentioned the Tribunal heard evidence in modules and has also adopted that structure in this Report, it nevertheless took into account the collective weight of the evidence relating to any particular individual when reaching its conclusions.

1.35 Not all of the Tribunal’s inquiries have resulted in findings. Specifically, in some instances the Tribunal did not consider that the evidence heard enabled it to make any findings regarding a particular matter. In such instances, this Report sets out the evidence heard by the Tribunal, without however, coming to any conclusions regarding that evidence.

CREDIBILITY

1.36 Over the course of its public inquiry, the Tribunal took evidence from 595 witnesses. Some times the same witnesses gave evidence in the context of several different modules on several different occasions.

1.37 In contrast to the situation in adversarial proceedings, there were no witnesses for the prosecution and no witnesses for the defence. Specifically, every witness was a witness to the Tribunal and examined by Counsel to the Tribunal. On occasion that witness was then cross-examined by their own Counsel and/or by the Counsel for other witnesses.

1.38 In the case of each witness, a key question for the Tribunal was whether that witness was a source of reliable information about a matter falling within the scope of the Tribunal's inquiry. In other words, whether that information was worthy of belief or confidence.

1.39 Assessments on credibility are not within the unique competence of judges. Each of us makes numerous assessments of credibility in any one particular day, albeit usually tacitly or subconsciously. The way in which we make those assessments frequently depends on our own experiences and assumptions. In particular, there is no mathematical formula for determining the credibility of information and any number of factors may influence that determination.

1.40 In assessing credibility, this Tribunal focused on two related questions. Firstly, whether the witness believed that he or she was giving truthful evidence and secondly, whether that information was in itself reliable. In assessing the first of these questions, key factors included the witnesses' demeanour and in particular whether he or she answered the questions put to him or her directly without attempting to evade or avoid them. The Tribunal also considered whether or not the witness had any motivation to lie.

1.41 In determining the reliability of the information provided by a witness, the Tribunal was influenced by factors including: whether the witness had direct knowledge of the events about which he or she testified; the plausibility of the witness' testimony; the consistency or inconsistency of that witness' testimony as compared with other testimony or information given either by that or another witness; and whether he or she displayed a bias, hostility or some other attitude that could affect the accuracy of their recollection.

1.42 In the case of each witness the Tribunal was of course conscious that a considerable amount of time had elapsed between the occurrence of the events into which it was inquiring and its public inquiry. The Tribunal made due allowances for the fragility of human memory in accurately remembering events which happened a number of years ago. In particular, the Tribunal considered that a certain degree of confusion or memory lapse regarding the precise date of an event, or some of its less salient details was more or less to be expected and did not necessarily throw into doubt the entire evidence of that particular witness.

1.43 As mentioned, in assessing the reliability of information provided by a witness in evidence, the Tribunal took into consideration whether or not a witness had made an earlier statement which was either consistent or inconsistent with his or her evidence.

1.44 The weight given by the Tribunal to the content of prior statements and in particular prior inconsistent statements was the focus of much attention during the course of its public inquiries. In essence, that weight depended substantially on the type of prior statement at issue, including the circumstances in which it was made, and the nature of the inconsistency. With regard to the former, the types of prior statements considered by the Tribunal fell into a number of different categories ranging from formal written statements made by the witness himself or herself, with the assistance of his or her legal representatives to notes of conversations with the witness made by third parties. Obviously, the Tribunal attached greater evidential weight to the former than to the latter. Factors which the Tribunal took into account in determining the evidential value of statements reported by third parties included: whether the note purported to be a complete account of the event in question; the purposes for which the note was taken; whether or not the witness had had the opportunity to review the note; and whether the witness accepted as accurate the information contained in the note. In instances where a witness gave a more complete account of a matter in evidence than in a note of a conversation regarding that matter, the Tribunal also took into account the duration of the event to which the note related as compared to the duration of the witness's evidence on the same matter.

1.45 Where a witness appeared in several different modules, the Tribunal's assessment of his or her credibility in one module affected its assessments of that witness' evidence in another module. For example, where the Tribunal was satisfied that a witness had given untruthful evidence in one module, this clearly affected its perception of the reliability of that witness's evidence in a subsequent module.

1.46 One witness before the Tribunal requested and was granted immunity by the Director of Public Prosecutions. While it was argued before the Tribunal that that immunity undermined the credibility of that witnesses evidence, the Tribunal did not consider this to be the case. Specifically, the immunity granted to the witness was conditional on that witness cooperating with the Tribunal, which necessarily included giving truthful evidence. Consequently, far from giving that witness carte blanche to lie to the Tribunal, that immunity should logically have acted as a further incentive for that witness to give truthful evidence.

ISSUES RELATING TO FINDINGS

1.47 As is clear from the above, the Tribunal's findings comprise its reasoned conclusions regarding the matters falling within its Terms of Reference. It cannot be emphasised sufficiently that these findings are not findings of either criminal or civil liability.

1.48 According to the Tribunal's Terms of Reference, it was required to report on:

Any acts associated with the planning process which may in its opinion amount to corruption, or which involves attempts to influence by threats or deception or inducement or otherwise to compromise the disinterested performance of public duties.

1.49 In his ruling on 21 October 1998, the then Sole Member of the Tribunal, Mr Justice Fergus Flood, interpreted the Tribunal's Terms of Reference. He explained that for the purpose of those terms the word 'corruption' includes:

destroying, hindering or perverting the integrity or fidelity of a person in the discharge of his duty, or the abuse of influence or power or duty by any person, or to bribe, or to induce another to act dishonestly or unfaithfully, or an attempt to do the same, or circumstances of control, influence or involvement with such person to the extent that it gives rise to a reasonable inference of unequal access, or favouritism, or a set of circumstances detrimental to his duties.

1.50 He went on to explain that the Tribunal interpreted the words 'attempts to influence':

As including an attempt through power or pressure or control of whatever character whether acting on fears or hopes or otherwise to induce or coerce or persuade another to act in a manner such that the free use of his judgment has been deprived.

1.51 There is obviously a considerable overlap between the Tribunal's definition of 'corruption' and that of 'attempts to influence.' The difference between the two lies primarily in the fact that an attempt to influence more readily encompasses extortion or coercion, although the definition of corruption also appears sufficiently broad to include this type of behaviour.

1.52 The Tribunal has not confined its findings of impropriety to corruption or attempts to influence. Specifically, in some instances it has termed behaviour to be improper, inappropriate, unethical or to constitute a conflict of interest rather than corrupt. This was done to reflect the seriousness with which the Tribunal viewed a finding of corruption.

1.53 The Tribunal's interpretation of the term 'corruption', in particular calls for a number of observations. Specifically, although at least until recent years the criminal law of corruption has been almost uniquely concerned with bribery, the definition of corruption used by the Tribunal extended beyond bribery to encompass other forms of corruption. Moreover, for the purpose of this Report the Tribunal considered a bribe to be an inducement improperly influencing the performance of a public function which is meant to be exercised gratuitously.¹ It was not concerned with whether the payment in question fell within the scope of the criminal bribery offences. This again reflects the fact, emphasised above, that the Tribunal's conclusions merely reflected its reasoned opinion of the matters investigated by it and were and are not in any way, shape or measure a finding of criminal or even civil liability.

1.54 Aside from bribery, the Tribunal's definition of corruption encompassed the following behaviour, or attempted behaviour: (1) destroying, hindering or perverting the integrity or fidelity of a person in the discharge of his duty; (2) the abuse of influence or power or duty by any person and; (3) inducing another to act dishonestly or unfaithfully. It also covered circumstances of control, influence or involvement with a person in the discharge of his duty to the extent that it gave rise to a reasonable inference of unequal access, or favouritism, or a set of circumstances detrimental to his duties.

1.55 For the most part, the Tribunal's inquiries focused on situations where it appeared that one or more payments may have been made to an elected or appointed public official. In circumstances where the Tribunal found that a payment had been made, it then went on to consider whether it was a corrupt payment: a) on the part of the payer; and b) on the part of the recipient. In considering these issues, the Tribunal took the view that it was possible for a payment to be corrupt, for example, on the part of the payer but inappropriately or even innocently received. Where appropriate, the Tribunal distinguishes these types of payments in its Report. In instances where the Tribunal finds a payment to be corrupt, then it means that it is corrupt on the part of both the payer and the recipient, unless otherwise stipulated.

1.56 The Tribunal considered the making of a payment to be corrupt if it was made in order to influence its recipient to either exercise his or her public functions in the payer's interests rather than those of the public or to take account of those interests when exercising those functions. The Tribunal considered a number of facts to be relevant when making this determination, including: the size of the payment; whether the payer stood to derive a benefit or suffer a loss from the recipient's exercise of his or her public functions, and the proximity of the payment to the exercise of those functions. In instances where the payment was described as a political donation, it also took into consideration the payer's overall history of making political donations and in particular whether he or she had made similar donations at times when he or she did not have a specific interest in the recipient's exercise of his or her public functions.

1.57 The Tribunal inquired into a significant number of payments made through intermediaries. In the case of such payments, it was necessary to determine both whether or not the payment was corrupt on the part of the intermediary as well as on the part of the person on behalf of whom the payment was made (the 'principal'). In the case of the intermediary, the factors listed in the previous paragraph were again relevant. In the case of the principal, the Tribunal also took account of matters such as: the amount and timing of the payments made to the intermediary; the method of payment; whether or not the intermediary issued invoices in respect of those payments; if invoices did issue, the level of specificity with which they described the nature of the services provided in relation to those payments; and where the principal was a corporation, the attribution of the payments within its books and records.

1.58 The Tribunal did not consider it necessary that the recipient was actually influenced by the payment or even aware of the payer's intention to influence him or her for the payment to be corrupt on the part of the payer. Nor did the Tribunal view the description of the payment to be a determining factor. In particular, the Tribunal found a significant number of payments claimed to be political donations to be corrupt payments. While the Tribunal of course recognised that perfectly legitimate political donations may be directly linked to their recipient's stance on a political issue, it considered that the more a donation was linked to a specific matter, the more likely it was to be a corrupt payment. In this respect, the Tribunal drew a distinction between, for example, a payment made because the recipient was generally pro-development and a payment made so that the recipient would vote in favour of a specific land rezoning in which the payer had an interest.

1.59 The Tribunal viewed the receipt of a payment to be corrupt if the recipient linked that payment to the exercise of his or her public functions in a specific matter. It was not necessary that the payment actually changed the way in which the recipient performed those functions. Specifically, the Tribunal believed that both elected and appointed public officials were and are under a duty to perform their public functions uniquely in the interest of the public. Where the Tribunal formed the view that a recipient accepted a payment in the knowledge that it was intended to induce him or her to show partiality to the payer in the performance of those functions, it concluded that the receipt of the payment was an abuse of the recipient's power or duty. In reaching its determination on this issue, the Tribunal took into account a number of the factors mentioned above, including for example, the size of the payment; where solicited, the manner and the circumstances in which it was solicited; the payer's history of making political donations to the recipient; whether or not the payer stood to gain an advantage or suffer a loss from the recipient's exercise of his or her public functions and the recipient's awareness of this fact.

1.60 As mentioned, in certain instances the Tribunal termed either the making or receipt of a payment as improper or inappropriate rather than corrupt in order to reflect the seriousness of a corruption finding. In the case of the making of a payment, factors taken into consideration by the Tribunal included whether or not the payer acted partially or entirely under duress on the part of the recipient. In the case of the recipient, relevant considerations included in particular the size of the payment and the nature of the recipient's relationship with a payer. Specifically, in the Tribunal's view, where a recipient of a payment was aware that the payer had an interest in a matter falling, or about to fall, within the exercise of his or her public powers, he or she should in all cases either have returned that payment or disclosed it before exercising that function. Nevertheless, the Tribunal was reluctant to declare the receipt of all such payments to be corrupt. This was particularly the case where the payment in question was for a minor sum or where there were other considerations which suggested that the payment fell short of a corrupt payment. However, perhaps inevitably, the distinction between an improper/inappropriate payment and a corrupt one was a matter of degree rather than an exact science.

1.61 The Tribunal is of course aware that in making a finding of corruption or impropriety it may well be criticised for judging the behaviour of the individuals who fell within the scope of its inquiries by today's standards rather than the ones which applied at the time. The Tribunal rejects these criticisms. In particular, while the level of transparency and accountability is certainly greater now than it was during the period inquired into by the Tribunal, it does not consider that there has been any fundamental change in the concept of what is or is not proper behaviour on the part of public officials. The Tribunal notes that in the case of certain payments into which it inquired, public officials refused donations made to them because they were conscious of the impropriety of those payments.

POWER TO MAKE RECOMMENDATIONS

1.62 As part of its Terms of Reference, this Tribunal was asked to make recommendations on how to improve existing legislation governing corruption in light of its inquiries. Indeed, in addition to making factual findings on the basis of the evidence heard, this is one of the core functions of an inquiry such as this one. The Tribunal's power to make recommendations is set out in paragraphs 5 and 6 of its amended Terms of Reference and is framed in the broadest terms:

5. In the event that the Tribunal in the course of its inquiries is made aware of any acts associated with the planning process which may in its opinion amount to corruption, or which involve attempts to influence by threats or deception or inducement or to otherwise compromise the disinterested performance of public duties, it shall report on such acts and should in particular make recommendations as to the effectiveness and improvement of existing legislation governing corruption in the light of its inquiries.

6. And that the Tribunal be requested to make recommendations in relation to such amendments to Planning, Local Government, Ethics in Public Office and any other relevant legislation as the Tribunal considers appropriate having regard to its findings.

1.63 Although the Tribunal's inquiries focused primarily on planning, as is clear from its Terms of Reference its power to make recommendations extends well beyond this area. This is attributable to the fact that in order to combat corruption effectively it is necessary to adopt a holistic approach. Specifically, combating corruption in planning would be impossible if corruption in other areas is allowed to continue unimpeded: if left unchecked, diseases like corruption tend to spread and infect every area of public life. On a related point, the Tribunal is of the opinion that the type of corruption into which it inquired was by no means unique to planning, rather that was simply the area in which it manifested itself at that time. Corruption will automatically be attracted to those areas in which controls are at their weakest and strengthening controls in one area to the exclusion of others will simply lead to its emergence in those less regulated areas.

1.64 The Tribunal's recommendations affect each of the following areas: planning; ethics in public office; political finance; lobbying; bribery; corruption in office; money laundering; asset confiscation; as well as a number of miscellaneous areas. These recommendations comprise an important component of its work and are a vital corollary to its inquiries. The Tribunal is convinced that if these recommendations are given effect they will help to prevent a recurrence of the corruption inquired into by this Tribunal and to ensure that, in the future, public power is exercised in the public's interest. The Tribunal hopes and trusts that there exists sufficient political will to prevent the future abuse of public power to ensure their full implementation. These recommendations are the Tribunal's final contribution to combating corruption in Ireland and a failure to implement them will greatly undermine the value of the work which it has accomplished.

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

1.65 Chapter 17 of this Report includes a Summary of the Tribunal's main conclusions. The purpose of this summary is to provide the reader with a short overview of the Tribunal's more significant findings. For obvious reasons it is no substitute for a detailed reading of the report. Moreover, in cases of any discrepancies between the findings as set out in the Summary of the Tribunal's main conclusions and the Report itself, obviously those in the Report are authoritative and take precedence.

Unfortunately, it was not possible to provide a more comprehensive executive summary giving not only the Tribunal's findings but an overview of the facts and evidence considered in making those findings. This is largely because this Report deals with fourteen separate inquiries and some of the chapters dealing with those inquiries are particularly complex and lengthy. To accurately summarise these chapters would have necessitated a relatively detailed recount of their subject-matter running to several hundred pages in length, which would have defeated the purpose of the summary.

STYLISTIC MATTERS

1.66 This report comprises over two thousand pages of analysis and conclusions. In the drafting of this Report, various decisions were taken by the Tribunal in the interests of clarity and to minimise the risk of confusion on the part of the reader.

1.67 The sequence in which the various modules of inquiry pursued by the Tribunal are presented in this Report reflects the order in which Dublin County Council approached its review of the 1983 County Dublin Development Plan, commencing in 1987. The majority of the modules concerned issues directly related to that review and the making of the 1993 County Dublin Development Plan. Two modules considered issues relating to the making of the 1998 Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Development Plan. The lengths of these chapters vary greatly reflecting the complexities of the evidence involved and in particular the length of the public hearings on each of them.

1.68 In preparing this Report, the Tribunal considered an enormous amount of oral and documentary evidence relating to particular individuals. At times those individuals acted personally, at others, they acted through corporate entities and/or other similar bodies. For convenience, and in order to accurately represent and reflect the personal responsibility for particular events which were the subject of this Tribunal's inquiries, this Report commonly attributes actions to an individual although in strict legal terms those actions may have been carried out by an entity under that individual's direction/control. For example, in instances in which the Tribunal referred to the activities of Mr Owen O'Callaghan, Mr Tom Gilmartin, Mr Christopher Jones, and Mr Frank Dunlop, to name but a few, it often did so on a personal basis, notwithstanding the fact that, on occasion, the individual named may have been operating through a company directed or controlled by him.

1.69 As mentioned, over the course of its inquiries for the purpose of this Report, the Tribunal heard evidence which generated approximately 60,000 pages of transcripts. Where it deemed it appropriate to do so, the Tribunal quotes extracts from those transcripts in this Report. The quotes are exactly as they appear in the transcripts and have not been edited or corrected in any way.

1.70 A number of chapters include exhibits which are to be found at the end of those chapters. These were either referred to or exhibited during the Tribunal's public hearings. It is hoped that these exhibits will assist the reader to achieve a better understanding of the matters discussed in the Report and to which they relate. As the Tribunal exhibited or made available for exhibition in excess of 80,000 pages of documentation in the course of its public hearings, it was obviously not possible to include all of them in this Report. The non-reproduction of particular documents in no way reflects negatively on their relevance, importance or evidential value.

PLANNING LAW

1.71 Ireland's planning system was first introduced on 1 October 1964 when the Local Government (Planning and Development) Act, 1963 came into effect. This Act conferred responsibility on local government to provide for the orderly planning and development of the country. It has been amended on numerous occasions and the legislation is currently consolidated in the Planning and Development Acts 2000 – 2011. However, this overview is focused on the planning system prior to the enactment of the Planning and Development Act 2000, which was in force during the period upon which this Tribunal's inquiries were concentrated. Therefore it outlines the system set out in the 1963 Act, the Local Government (Planning and Development) Acts 1976, 1982, 1983, 1990, 1992 and 1993 and the Local Government (Planning and Development) Regulations, 1994.

1.72 Under the Local Government (Planning and Development) Act 1963, as amended (the '1963 Act'), the planning system had three main functions: making (and varying) development plans; granting planning permission; and planning enforcement. The implementation of the physical planning system in Ireland was the responsibility of the local planning authorities, namely, county and district councils, and corporations. Functions of Local Authorities were (and are) separated into reserved (political policy) and executive (management) functions. The former were performed by the elected representatives, namely the Council/Corporation members and the latter by the relevant Local Authority Manager.

THE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

1.73 Under the 1963 Act, the Development Plan was the main instrument for regulating and controlling development, in particular it zoned land for the purpose of various uses. Land which was rezoned for development usually greatly increased in value.

1.74 Under s.19 of that Act, all Planning Authorities were required to make a development plan which consisted of a written statement and a plan indicating the development objectives of the area to which it related, and any major developments contemplated by the Planning Authority within its functional area. Under s.20(1) of the 1963 Act, once made, a development plan had to be reviewed at least once every five years for the purposes of either making a new development plan or varying the existing plan.

1.75 The development plan played a crucial role in the development and planning process. Specifically, s.22(1) of the 1963 Act required each Planning Authority ‘to take such steps as may be necessary for securing the objectives which are contained in the provisions of the development plan.’ Moreover, there was a presumption in favour of adhering to the development plan, in the sense that there was a significantly increased likelihood of planning permission being granted when the proposed development was in accordance with that plan. In particular, according to s.26(3)(a) of the 1963 Act, special procedures had to be observed before planning permission could be granted for development which was in material contravention of the plan. Furthermore, a Planning Authority itself could not effect any development which materially contravened the plan. Nevertheless, there was still some flexibility in the planning process and Planning Authorities were not expected to adhere slavishly to the development plan.

1.76 While the management of the relevant Planning Authority played a role in drafting the development plan, ultimately the decision making power rested with its elected councillors. Generally, the management first prepared review working papers and reports which it then submitted to those councillors for approval. Having obtained the councillors’ approval, the Manager then proceeded to draft the development plan or proposed variations of the existing plan and then again submitted it to the councillors for approval. Once approved, the Manager put the draft plan or variations on public display for three months. At the end of this period, having considered any submissions received as a result of the public consultation process, the councillors could make, vary, or amend the draft development plan or draft variation. In the case of an amendment, the procedure differed depending on whether or not the proposed amendment constituted a ‘material alteration’ of the draft plan or variation. Specifically, where the proposed amendment constituted a material alteration of the plan or variation, the Manager would display the plan publicly for a further period of one month during which the public were entitled to make submissions or observations on it. Where the proposed alteration was not a material alteration, the councillors could proceed to make the plan without any further public consultation. Once the development plan was made the Manager had to so inform the public.

1.77 Both the development plan and any variations to it were adopted by a majority of the votes of the elected councillors of the Planning Authority who were present, and who voted. Moreover, members could themselves make proposals on the contents of the draft plan and/or any proposed variations. According to the Standing Orders of Dublin County Council, any such proposal had to be by way of written motion and signed both by the councillor proposing the motion and the councillor seconding it. In addition, where necessary the motion had to be accompanied by a location map. The power of the councilors to submit motions, together with the exercise of their votes, enabled them to exercise a decisive influence on the final shape of the development plan.

PLANNING PERMISSION

1.78 The 1963 Act imposed a general obligation that (subject to specified exceptions) planning permission be obtained before any development could take place on land. Under s.26 of the Act, an application for planning permission had to be made to the planning authority within whose functional area this land was situated. That authority could then decide to grant the permission sought, with or without conditions, or refuse it. That section, provided that when dealing with applications for planning permission, the relevant planning authority was 'restricted to considering the proper planning and development of the area of the authority.'

1.79 Under the 1963 Act, the grant of planning permission was primarily an executive function falling within the competence of the Manager. However, the elected Councillors could be involved in the decision to grant or refuse planning permission in two ways. First, as mentioned, normally planning permission had to be in accordance with the development plan: the Manager could not grant permission for a development which was in material contravention of that plan. However, under s.26(3)(a) of the 1963 Act, the Councillors could, by resolution, grant permission for such a development provided the required public consultation procedures were followed. Pursuant to an amendment introduced by s.45 of the Local Government Act 1991, the resolution had to be passed by not less than three-quarters of the total number of those Councillors. Where such a resolution was passed the Manager had to grant the planning permission while where it was defeated, the Manager was required to refuse permission.

1.80 Secondly, the elected councillors were able to direct the Manager to grant planning permission under s.4 of the City and County Management (Amendment) Act 1955. Initially, to pass such a resolution, the number of the councillors voting in favour of the resolution had to exceed one-third of the total number of the members of the relevant Council/Corporation. However, an amendment introduced by s.44 of the Local Government Act 1991 had the effect that from that time such a direction had to be passed by resolution by no less than three-quarters of the total number of the Councillors of the Council/Corporation. Moreover, if the land was situated in a single local electoral area, the notice of the intention to propose a Section 4 motion had to be signed by at least three councillors of the local authority concerned. Where the land was situated in more than one such area, the notice had to be signed by not less than three-quarters, as respects each such area, of the total number of the Councillors of the relevant authority. Provided the resolution was valid, the Manger was required to give effect to it and could not exercise any discretion as to whether or not to obey the direction.

ENFORCEMENT

1.81 Enforcement was essentially concerned with ensuring that the planning and development system was respected. The relevant planning authority could take enforcement action where development took place without permission or where it did not comply with the conditions of a planning permission. Under the 1963 Act, the enforcement system had three essential objectives: (1) to ensure that objectionable development was discontinued; (2) to ensure compliance with planning permission; (3) to promote compliance with the requirement to obtain planning permission before the commencement of the development. As in the case of the grant of planning permission, enforcement was primarily a matter for the Local Authority Manager: councillors had no specific role to play in this area.

1.82 Both the nature and duration of this Tribunal's inquiries have been the subject of extensive public discussion and much criticism. In some instances this criticism was inevitable. The Tribunal owes its establishment to the inability of the normal political and investigative powers of the State to uncover or otherwise control the corruption which formed the subject of its inquiries. This inability is itself attributable to the endemic nature of that corruption and the fact that it involved powerful and influential individuals. It was perhaps inevitable that some of those individuals would attempt to blacken the name of the Tribunal in order to undermine its inquiries and its ultimate findings. Had the Tribunal found favour with those individuals or in the sectors of the media supportive of them, this would have been the first indication that the Tribunal was not doing its job.

1.83 Nevertheless, not all the Tribunal's critics fall into this category. On the one hand, some of the more sustained and virulent attacks on the Tribunal went beyond what could be termed as normal unpopularity and are best viewed as attempts to compromise its integrity and independence. On the other hand, some criticisms were understandable, if not always well-founded and the Tribunal wishes to comment on three issues, in particular, which have preoccupied the press at various times. These are: the duration of the Tribunal's inquiry; the costs of that inquiry; and the leaking of information. While the Tribunal did not think it appropriate to comment on these issues while it was still conducting its inquiries, it likewise does not consider it appropriate to conclude those inquiries without doing so.

THE INTEGRITY AND INDEPENDENCE OF THE TRIBUNAL

1.84 The origin of a Tribunal of Inquiry can usually be traced to serious public disquiet regarding a matter which needs to be investigated in order to either root out the wrongdoing at the source of that disquiet, or demonstrate that there is no basis for it. They are typically only used as a last resort, when other agencies of investigation have failed to work or are unlikely to work. In order to carry out their investigative role, Tribunals must possess both political and financial independence and enjoy public trust and confidence. Attempts to illegitimately undermine that independence or erode that trust and confidence are nothing less than attempts to undermine the inquiry being undertaken by the relevant Tribunal, and in so doing frustrate the will of the Oireachtas.

1.85 In the course of its inquiries, this Tribunal experienced the independence and support necessary for it to fulfil its mandate. However, in 2007/2008 at a time when this Tribunal was inquiring into matters relating to Mr Bertie Ahern, the then Taoiseach, it came under sustained and virulent attack from a number of senior Government ministers who questioned, inter alia the legality of its inquiries as well as the integrity of its members.

1.86 It was entirely inappropriate for members of the Government to launch such unseemly and partisan attacks against a Tribunal of Inquiry appointed following a resolution passed by both Houses of the Oireachtas to inquire into serious concerns regarding corruption in public life. There appears little doubt but that the objective of these extraordinary and unprecedented attacks on the Tribunal was to undermine the efficient conduct of the Tribunal's inquiries, erode its independence and collapse its inquiry into that individual. They were as regrettable as they were ill-considered and unfounded.

DURATION

1.87 The inquiry conducted by this Tribunal is the longest inquiry in the history of this State, a fact which has frequently been the subject of adverse comment both by the media and in other circles.

1.88 While the Tribunal fully recognises the desirability of accomplishing inquiries as expeditiously and as cost effectively as possible, it also believes that it has fulfilled this objective. Specifically, the duration of this Tribunal's inquiries cannot be viewed in isolation from their subject matter, as specified in its Terms of References and/or other events that also impacted on their duration.

1.89 Pursuant to its Terms of Reference, this Tribunal was mandated to investigate any acts associated with the planning process which may in its opinion amount to corruption or involving attempts to influence the improper performance of public duties. Those Terms were exceptionally wide, especially when compared to those of other Tribunals of Inquiry. Moreover, because of the number of acts involved, they took an extraordinary amount of time to inquire into. The Tribunal very much doubts that it could have effectively investigated those acts in any less time than it ultimately took.

1.90 Corruption itself is a notoriously difficult matter to investigate, partially because all parties to the transaction tend to be equally implicated in it, and partially because the Tribunal had, in effect, little information before it of corruption in the planning process. Few people came forward with information and, according to evidence given by Mr Frank Dunlop, there was a common perception that the Tribunal's establishment was some sort of PR exercise and that it was going nowhere. He also stated that there were discussions among certain politicians to the effect that 'if you don't tell them anything, nothing will ever happen.'

1.91 Ultimately, the Tribunal's progress depended on the meticulous and forensic investigations conducted by its legal team. These investigations were inevitably detailed and time-consuming. This was, as mentioned, partly because of the nature of corruption. However, the Tribunal also lacked the powers necessary to conduct those investigations more expeditiously. In particular, the Tribunal relied heavily on the voluntary co-operation of potential witnesses as it was not in a position to compel such witnesses to attend for private interview or to provide detailed written statements. Nor was the Tribunal able to obtain documents other than by way of a Discovery Order. Making such an Order was a time-consuming process which required the Tribunal to give notice of the proposed order and permit affected parties to make submissions as to whether the Order should be made and/or as to its terms. The discovery process also suffered from the disadvantage that it lacked any element of surprise and afforded parties every opportunity to conceal or dispose of documents in advance of the Order being made.

1.92 The duration of the Tribunal's inquiries was also affected by the considerable amount of litigation in which it was involved. While this litigation played a significant role in determining the contours of the fair procedures required of the Tribunal as well as other aspects of its role in circumstances where there had been little by way of judicial pronouncement in the past, it also diverted significant resources from the conduct of its inquiries. A list of the cases in which the Tribunal was a named party is included as an exhibit to this chapter.

1.93 Investigating and otherwise dealing with unauthorised disclosure of confidential information in the Tribunal's possession also diverted resources away from the Tribunal's inquiries.

COSTS

1.94 The costs of running a Tribunal of Inquiry have been a frequent matter of comment in the press. To date, this Tribunal has cost approximately €97 million, including some third party costs. However, the final costs will only become clear once the Chairman of the Tribunal has made his decision as to whether to award costs to those witnesses who apply for them. In 2007, the Chairman of the Tribunal, in response to a suggestion by a then Government minister that the likely cost of the Tribunal to the State would reach IR£1 billion estimated that the total costs would not exceed IR£300 million. The Tribunal continues to believe this to be the more realistic estimate.

1.95 The debate about the costs of the Tribunal is undoubtedly an important and legitimate one. However, the Tribunal also believes it to be important to call attention to the significant downstream gains to the Exchequer arising from its establishment and the conduct of its proceedings. In particular, the Tribunal has been instrumental in the recovery of substantial sums of money by the Revenue Commissioners. The Criminal Assets Bureau has also instituted civil forfeiture proceedings in relation to matters which were the subject of investigation by this Tribunal. In December 2008, the Comptroller and Auditor General estimated the combined amount recovered by the Revenue Commissioners and the Criminal Assets Bureau to be €51.2 million. It is also likely that the Tribunal's existence and the forensic nature of its public inquiries has led to a reduction in corrupt activity then might otherwise have been the case, and perhaps more importantly, a greater public awareness of this issue.

TECHNOLOGY

1.96 The Tribunal has at all times been conscious of the need, as required under its Terms of Reference to be cost effective and efficient in its work and in this regard the Tribunal has embraced technical advances in Information Technology under the supervision of the Tribunals Director of ICT in order to operate more efficiently and effectively, and reduce costs where possible. From the outset it has used document management software to manage the extensive discoveries made to the Tribunal pursuant to Orders of Discovery and Production made by the Tribunal. These systems speeded up research, investigative and preparatory work. The use of Information technology reduced the necessity for additional staff and the duration of its work. At the conclusion of the Tribunals public hearings in 2008, in excess of 1,600,000 pages of documents had been discovered pursuant to Orders of the Tribunal in relation to the matters which were the subject of this Report.

1.97 When the Tribunal was first established in November 1997 the dates of its public sittings were notified to the general public through advertisement in the Print media. Upon the establishment of the Tribunal website www.planningtribunal.ie in March 1999 all such notices and any public communications were published on its website. In September 2002 the Tribunal's Second Interim Report was published and uploaded to the website. By November 2002, in excess of 64,000 copies of this Report were downloaded.

1.98 In recognition of the the success of its website the Tribunal was anxious to extend its functionality and in this regard from the resumption of its public hearings in November 2002 it commenced to upload the daily transcript to the website thereby making it almost immediately available to witnesses and their legal representatives, and the general public. The Tribunal is grateful to Premier Captioning and Realtime who from 2002 provided the daily transcript and thus ensured its availability on the Tribunal website on a daily basis.

UNAUTHORISED DISCLOSURE

1.99 On a number of occasions in the course of its inquiries, the Tribunal was troubled by the unauthorised disclosure or leaking of information. In most instances, this involved the publication of information and/or material by newspapers in circumstances which not only damaged the reputation of individuals, but also undermined the Tribunal's reputation and hence its integrity.

1.100 On several occasions, journalists, politicians and other individuals suggested that the Tribunal itself was complicit in arranging or facilitating the leaking of information. While at times these suggestions were prompted by genuine concerns regarding the source of the leak, this was not always the case. Specifically, the Tribunal believes that at least on some occasions individuals attributed leaks to the Tribunal in an attempt to discredit it rather than from a genuine belief in the accuracy of that attribution.

1.101 In every instance where the media published leaked information, the Tribunal conducted its own inquiries into the source of that leak. The extent of that inquiry depended upon the nature of the leaked information. In particular instances, the Tribunal's inquiries were detailed and specific. Steps taken by the Tribunal in that investigative process included, variously, the conduct of its own in-house inquiries, correspondence with relevant parties, the questioning on oath of individuals; the involvement of An Garda Síochána, litigation with newspapers and the use of a documentary identification computer software system.

1.102 The Tribunal's efforts to establish the source of leaked information was successful in one instance, involving Mr Michael Bailey. In that instance, the Tribunal found that Mr Bailey himself was the source of the leaks in question. Mr Bailey had cynically used the leaks to question the integrity of the Tribunal and relied on them to delay furnishing information to the Tribunal.

1.103 On a number of occasions, individuals attributed the source of the leaks to the Tribunal itself. In particular, on 26 September 2006, the then Minister for State Mr Noel Tracy TD stated in the course of a radio interview with Newstalk that it was a well known fact that the Tribunal constantly leaked for political purposes, and that the conduit of such leaks was well known. Nevertheless the Tribunal is satisfied that the leaks did not originate within the Tribunal. In particular, those persons within the Tribunal who had access to information which was the subject of a leak also had access to other controversial or sensitive information which was not leaked. This, together with the nature of the information leaked and the timing of the various leaks is strongly indicative of the fact that it was attributable to parties outside the Tribunal. Moreover, when the Tribunal subsequently questioned Mr Tracy regarding his statements, he conceded that he had no information to support it and was unable to give any credible reasons for having made the allegation in the first place.

POST-PUBLICATION

1.104 The Chairman of the Tribunal will in due course adjudicate on applications by parties to have all or a portion of costs incurred by them in the course of their dealings with the Tribunal paid by the Minister for Finance. It will also consider whether or not to direct a party to pay the costs incurred by another party and/or the Tribunal itself.

1.105 The Chairman is empowered to refuse all or a portion of a party's costs where it makes a finding that that party has failed to co-operate with the Tribunal or failed to assist it in the conduct of its inquiries.

1.106 After publication of this report, the Tribunal intends to contact those persons who are at risk of a finding of failure to co-operate with or assist the Tribunal and invite them to make submissions in relation thereto within a stipulated timeframe. The Tribunal will not make a finding on these issues until it has taken into consideration any submissions made within that time frame.

SCHEDULE

Kilinamonan House,
The Ward,
Co. Dublin.

8th June, 1989

Dear Mr. Gogarty,

PROPOSALS FOR DISCUSSION

Re: Your lands at Finglas, Ballymun, Donabate, Balgriffin and Portmarnock, Co. Dublin.

I refer to our many discussions regarding your following six parcels of land:-

- Lot 1: 100 acres (approx) at North Road, Finglas, including "Barrett's Land".
- Lot 2: 12 acres (approx) at Jamestown Road, Finglas.
- Lot 3: 100 acres (approx) at Poppintree, Ballymun.
- Lot 4: 255 acres (approx) at Donabate (Turvey House and Beaverton House).
- Lot 5: 250 acres (approx) at Balgriffin.
- Lot 6: 9 acres (approx) at Portmarnock.

I submit the following proposals for your consideration:-

PROPOSAL NO. 1 – Purchase Proposal

Lots 1, 2 and 3 Purchase Price £4,000 per acre
10% deposit payable on the signing of the contract
Completion 1 year from date of contract.

Lot 4 Purchase Price IR£1 Million
Deposit 10% on contract
Completion 2 years from date of contract.

Lot 5 Purchase Price IR £750,000
Deposit 10% on contract
Completion 3 years from date of contract.

Lot 6: Option to be granted for nominal consideration (£100.00) for a period of 2 years at a purchase price of £30,000.00 per acre.

PROPOSAL NO. 2 – Participation Proposal

As an alternative to the outright purchase proposal above I am prepared to deal with Lots 1 – 5 (inclusive) above on the basis that I would be given a 50% share in the ownership of the said lands in exchange for procuring Planning Permission and Building Bye Law Approval. The time span which I would require to be allowed to obtain the Permissions and Approval and my anticipated financial expenditure (apart from my time input) in respect of the different lots would be as follows:-

Lots 1, 2 and 3

A period of 2 years within which to procure a buildable Planning Permission and Building Bye Laws Approval for mixed development including housing, industrial and commercial.

My financial expenditure up to a figure of £150,000 (to include Architect's fees, Consulting Engineer's fees, Planning and Bye Law charges etc.).

Lots 4 and 5

Time requirement – 3 years.

Financial

Expenditure - up to £150,000

In considering the above proposals the following points of information should be borne in mind by all parties:-

1. From the point of view of obtaining Planning Permission the entire lands (lots 1 to 6 inclusive) have the following shortcoming:-
 - NO zoning for development purposes
 - NO services.
 - NO proposal in current draft development plans (City and County) for the zoning of the lands or any part thereof for development purposes.
2. We face a very severe uphill battle to arrange for the availability of services and for the ultimate procurement of Planning Permission.
3. The steps to be taken on the way to procuring a buildable Planning Permission and Building Bye Laws Approval are notoriously difficult, time consuming and expensive. Material Contravention Orders must be obtained and this involves their procurement of a majority vote at 2 full Council Meetings at which 78 Council Members must be present and it also involves satisfactory compliance with extensive requirements and pre-conditions of the Planning Authority and the inevitable dealing with protracted Appeals to An Bord Pleanala.
4. It is essential that the Planning Application should be brought in the name of an active house building company which enjoys good standing and good working relationship with the Planners and the Council Members and in this regard I confirm that in the event of our reaching agreement regarding the within proposals that all Planning Applications would be made by one of my Companies which meets the said requirements.
5. In the case of all of the lands the applications will be highly sensitive and controversial and we can realistically expect strenuous opposition from private, political and planning sectors. One of my active companies will have to take the limelight in such applications and withstand the objections and protests which will inevitably confront it. Apart from the anticipated financial expenditure as outlined above it should be borne in mind that I will personally have to give extensively of my time and efforts over the entire period of the applications including the necessary preliminary negotiations in regard to services and zoning. It must be borne in mind that I will have to abandon other projects which would be open to myself and my companies in order to give proper attention to this project. If I am successful in changing your lands from their present status of agricultural lands with very limited potential even for agricultural use into highly valuable building lands I would have to be rewarded with a minimum 50% stake in the ownership of the lands. Our advisors would have to work out the details as to how this can be effected in the most tax-efficient manner.

I look forward to hearing from you in relation to the above proposals. In the case of the first proposal which relates to the outright purchase of the lands (excluding Lot 6) I would not be adverse to a proposal which would involve the vendors retaining a participation stake of up to 20% in the purchasing company if you felt that an ongoing interest in the future development of the lands would be more acceptable to the present owners.

Yours sincerely,

MICHAEL BAILEY.

Mr. Jim Gogarty,
Clontarf,
Dublin 3.

AND WHEREAS a resolution in even terms was, on the 8th day of October, 1997, passed by Seanad Éireann.

NOW THEREFORE, the Minister for the Environment and Local Government, in pursuant to the said Resolution, and in exercise of the powers conferred on him by section 1 (as adapted by or under subsequent enactments) of the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act, 1921, hereby orders as follows:

1. This Order may be cited as the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Acts, 1921 and 1979, (No.3) Order, 1997.
2. A Tribunal is hereby appointed to enquire urgently into and report and make such findings and recommendations as it sees fit to the Clerk of the Dáil on the definite matters of urgent public importance set out at parts A and B of the Resolutions passed by Dáil Éireann and Seanad Éireann on the 7th and 8th days of October, 1997.
3. The Honourable Mr. Justice Feargus Flood a Judge of the High Court, is hereby nominated to be the sole member of the Tribunal.
4. The Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act, 1921 (as adapted by or under subsequent enactments) and the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) (Amendment) Act, 1979, shall apply to the Tribunal.

Instrument amending the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Acts, 1921 and 1979

(No. 3) Order, 1997

WHEREAS a resolution in the following terms was passed by Dáil Éireann on the 1st day of July, 1998, and by Seanad Éireann on the 2nd day of July, 1998 ("the Resolutions"):

"That the terms of reference contained in the resolution passed by Dáil Éireann on the 7th October, 1997 and by Seanad Éireann on the 8th of October, 1997 under the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Acts, 1921 and 1979 be amended as follows:-

1. By the deletion from paragraph A.5 of the words "committed on or after the 20th June, 1985."
2. By the addition of the following paragraphs after paragraph D:-

"E The Tribunal shall, in addition to the matters referred to in paragraphs A(1) to A(5) hereof, inquire urgently into and report to the Clerk of the Dáil and make such findings and recommendations as it sees fit, in relation to the following definite matters of urgent public importance:-

1. Whether any substantial payments were made or benefits provided, directly or indirectly, to Mr. Raphael Burke which may, in the opinion of the Sole Member of the Tribunal, amount to corruption or involve attempts to influence or compromise the disinterested performance of public duties or were made or provided in circumstances which may give rise to a reasonable inference that the motive for making or receiving such payments was improperly connected with any public office or position held by Mr. Raphael Burke, whether as Minister, Minister of State or elected representative;
2. Whether, in return for or in connection with such payments or benefits, Mr. Raphael Burke did any act or made any decision while holding any such public office or position which was intended to confer any benefit on any person or entity making a payment or providing a benefit referred to in paragraph 1 above, or any other person or entity, or procured or directed any other person to do such an act or make such a decision.

And the Tribunal be requested to conduct its Inquiries in the following manner to the extent that it may do so consistent with the provisions of the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Acts, 1921 to 1998:-

- (i) To carry out such preliminary investigations in private as it thinks fit (using all the powers conferred on it under the Acts), in order to determine whether sufficient evidence exists in relation to any of the matters referred to in paragraphs E1 and E2 above to warrant proceeding to a full public inquiry in relation to such matters;
- (ii) To inquire fully into all matters referred to in paragraphs E1 and E2 in relation to which such evidence may be found to exist;
- (iii) In relation to any matters where the Tribunal finds that there is insufficient evidence to warrant proceeding to a full public inquiry, to report that fact to the Clerk of the Dáil and to report in such a manner as the Tribunal thinks appropriate on the steps taken by the Tribunal to determine what evidence, if any, existed and the Clerk of the Dáil shall thereupon communicate the Tribunal's report in full to the Dáil;
- (iv) To report on an interim basis to the Clerk of the Dáil on the following matters:-
 - the number of parties then represented before the Tribunal;
 - the progress which has been made in the hearing and the work of the Tribunal;
 - the likely duration (so far as that may be capable of being estimated at that time) of the Tribunal proceedings;
 - any other matters which the Tribunal believes should be drawn to the attention of the Clerk of the Dáil at that stage (including any matter relating to the terms of reference);and to furnish such further interim reports as the Tribunal may consider necessary.

F. And that the Sole Member of the Tribunal should be informed that it is the desire of the House that:-

- (a) the Inquiry into the matters referred to in paragraph E hereof be completed in as economical a manner as possible and at the earliest date consistent with a fair examination of the said matters, and

- (b) all costs incurred by reason of the failure of individuals to co-operate fully and expeditiously with the Inquiry should, so far as is consistent with the interests of justice, be borne by those individuals.

- G. And that the Clerk of the Dáil shall on receipt of any Report from the Tribunal arrange to have it laid before both Houses of the Oireachtas immediately on its receipt."

WHEREAS the Tribunal established pursuant to a resolution passed by Dáil Éireann on the 7th day of October, 1997 and by Seanad Éireann on the 8th day of October, 1997 ("the Tribunal") requested under paragraph (b) of Section 1A(1) (inserted by the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) (Amendment) (No. 2) Act, 1998 ("the Act of 1998")) of the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act, 1921, the amendment, specified in Article 1(a) of the following instrument, of the text of those resolutions set out in the preamble to the Tribunal of Inquiry (Evidence) Acts, 1921 and 1979 (No. 3) Order, 1997:

- (3) The Tribunal may in the course of investigating any additional matter under paragraph J(2) or a matter being investigated under paragraph J(1) investigate any other matter of which it becomes aware when it is satisfied that such further investigation is necessary for the Tribunal to make findings on any such additional matter or a matter referred to in paragraph J(1) above.

- (5) Nothing in these amended Terms of Reference shall preclude the Tribunal from conducting hearings or investigations into any compliance or non-compliance by any person with the orders or directions of the Tribunal.
- (6) The Tribunal may in its sole discretion - in respect of any matter within paragraphs J(1), J(2) and J(3) of these amended Terms of Reference - decide:

 - (ii) The likely duration of the preliminary investigation or public hearing into any matter;
 - (iii) The likely cost (or other use of the resources of the Tribunal) of such investigation or any stage of the investigation into any matter;
 - (iv) Whether or not the investigation into the matter is likely to provide evidence to the Tribunal which would enable it to make findings of fact and conclusions and/or to make recommendations;
 - (v) Any other factors which in the opinion of the Tribunal would, or would be likely to, render an investigation, or the continued investigation into any matter inappropriate, unnecessary, wasteful of resources, unduly costly, unduly prolonged or which would be of limited or no probative value.
- (7) Subject to paragraph J(3) any matter not brought to the attention of the Tribunal or of which it is not aware by the 16th day of December 2004 shall not be the subject of any investigation by the Tribunal.' "

TRIBUNAL OF INQUIRY INTO CERTAIN PLANNING MATTERS AND PAYMENTS

(Appointed by Instrument of The Minister for the Environment and Local Government dated the 4th day of November 1997 and as amended by Instrument dated the 15th day of July 1998)

SOLE MEMBER OF THE TRIBUNAL:
The Honourable Mr. Justice Feargus M. Flood

Interpretation of the Terms of Reference as Amended

Wednesday 21st October, 1998 at 9 a.m.

Interpretation

1. The Supreme Court in its recent decisions in the case of Haughey and Others v. Mr. Justice Moriarty and Others delivered on the 28th July 1998 has provided careful guidance to tribunals of inquiry in relation to both the time and the manner in which a tribunal of inquiry should interpret its terms of reference. In the course of its judgment at page 69 it held

"... the Court is satisfied that it is not the function of the High Court or this Court to interpret the Terms of Reference of the Tribunal at this stage. The interpretation of the Terms of Reference of the Tribunal is at this stage entirely a matter for the Tribunal itself."

2. The Chief Justice, speaking for the Court, adopted as a correct statement of the law and practice of tribunals of inquiry in Ireland the terms of paragraph 79 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Tribunals of Inquiry (November, 1966 Cmnd. 3121), and known as the Salmon Report, which states:

79. The Tribunal should take an early opportunity of explaining in public its interpretation of its terms of reference and the extent to which the inquiry is likely to be pursued. As the inquiry proceeds, it may be necessary for the Tribunal to explain any further interpretation it may have placed on the terms of reference in the light of the facts that have emerged.

3. The explanation of the terms of reference, today, by this tribunal may be expanded or revised in the light of other facts which may emerge during the course of this inquiry.

4. It should be clearly understood by any person or entity that has an interest in the work of this tribunal that they are entitled to make any submission to the tribunal relevant to their particular interest in relation to the interpretation of these terms of reference. The tribunal would request that, in the first instance, any submission made by an interested party should be in writing and should be received by the tribunal not later than fourteen days from the date of this public sitting. The tribunal does not require an immediate response from any interested party at this public sitting as to any possible difficulty they may perceive in relation to this interpretation.

5. The terms of reference of this Tribunal are set out in the Instrument of the Minister for the Environment and Local Government of the 4th November 1997 as amended and extended by a further Instrument of the same Minister of the 15th July 1998 made pursuant to the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Acts 1921 to 1998.

6. These terms of reference are to be read in conjunction and, for convenience, the Tribunal has made publicly available to any interested person a consolidated text.

7. This public sitting is not confined to an explanation of the terms of reference of this tribunal. The tribunal is also making a

Report Ref : Introduction - Exhibit 2

public statement on the related question of the extent to which this inquiry is likely to be pursued, and providing general guidance in relation to certain aspects of the Tribunal's procedure.

8. The tribunal is presently investigating definite matters in the course of its confidential preliminary investigation in private. The central purpose of this preliminary investigation is to identify what evidence is available to the Tribunal, and to determine whether that evidence is relevant to the matters into which this tribunal is required to inquire.

9. It is regrettable that this preliminary investigation is being delayed to an extent by persons and entities that have been less than whole-hearted in their co-operation with the tribunal. This situation will not divert the tribunal from discharging its task but it does have a bearing on the tribunal's view, at this time, as to the extent to which this inquiry is likely to be pursued.

10. The tribunal has had considerable success in assembling evidence in relation to particular matters into which it is required by its terms of reference to inquire. The tribunal has not, as yet, exhausted its endeavours in seeking to establish the existence of evidence that may be relevant to certain other matters pertinent to this inquiry.

11. The tribunal intends to make a further public statement in relation to the extent to which aspects of this inquiry are likely to be pursued at a future public sitting.

12. The Tribunal in approaching the task of interpretation has, in general, sought to apply the ordinary and natural meaning of words to the wording of the terms of reference. In certain instances particular words may have a special or technical meaning attributed to them, or particular words may have a specific statutory meaning. Where these instances of special, technical or specific statutory meanings occur the Tribunal has outlined its interpretation of those words.

13. The wording of the terms of reference is, in the view of the Tribunal, reasonably clear. I am satisfied that on a plain reading of the terms of reference they, in the main, convey a proper interpretation of the wording concerned. In certain instances specific words in the terms of reference may, in particular circumstances, have a statutory or technical meaning.

14. On any occasion where the Tribunal is interpreting specific words in the terms of reference in a particular way it will duly notify any interested person, where their interests are concerned, of that interpretation and the context in which it arises. At the same time the Tribunal intends to avoid a situation where any interested person seeks to impose a particular interpretation of the terms of reference with a view to limiting inappropriately, or delaying, this inquiry.

15. I now propose to outline in public specific aspects of the terms of reference that, in my view, require explanation by the Tribunal. It should be clearly understood that while the Tribunal welcomes any submission by an interested person in relation to an aspect of the interpretation of the terms of reference relevant to their particular interest, it is for the Tribunal to interpret its terms of reference.

16. It should be noted that where an explanation makes reference to a specific law, statute or regulation that reference should be taken as including, where appropriate, any relevant amendment of such provision.

Paragraph A

17. Paragraph A is divided into six distinct sub-paragraphs that detail specific matters to be inquired into by the Tribunal. I propose to deal with each sub-paragraph in turn.

Sub-paragraph A.1

18. This sub-paragraph requires the Tribunal to identify the lands listed in a letter dated the 8th June 1989 from Michael Bailey to James Gogarty. The terms of that letter are reproduced in the Schedule to the terms of reference of the Tribunal.

19. The meaning of the word "identification" in this sub-paragraph is interpreted by the Tribunal to include the exact boundaries and location of those lands, their ownership, and all their appropriate conveyancing particulars from the 8th June 1989 to a date prior to the commencement of the development of those lands.

26. The words "the servicing of the lands" in this sub-paragraph are interpreted by the Tribunal as including the drainage, electricity, footpath, gas, lanes, lighting, roads, sewers, telephone and water services to the lands concerned, and to what extent, where appropriate, any of those services had been taken in charge by a local authority.

52. The words "connected person or company" in this sub-paragraph are interpreted by the Tribunal as including the meaning specified in Section 2(2) of the Ethics in Public Office Act 1995. That statutory definition provides as follows:

(a) Any question whether a person is connected with another shall be determined in accordance with the following provisions of this paragraph (any provision that one person is connected with another person being taken to mean also that that other person is connected with the first-mentioned person);

- (i) a person is connected with an individual if that person is a relative of the individual,
- (ii) a person, in his or her capacity as a trustee of a trust, is connected with an individual who or any of whose children or as respects whom any body corporate which he or she controls is a beneficiary of the trust,

- (iii) a person is connected to any person with whom he or she is in partnership,
- (iv) a company is connected with another person if that person has control of it or if that person and persons connected with that person together have control of it,
- (v) any two or more persons acting together to secure or exercise control of a company shall be treated in relation to that company as connected with one another and with any person acting on the directions of any of them to secure or exercise control of the company.

(b) in paragraph (a) "control" has the meaning assigned to it by Section 157 of the Corporation Tax Act 1976, and any cognate words shall be construed accordingly.

53. The statutory definition of "control" in Section 157(8) of the Corporation Tax Act 1976 provides:

"control" shall be construed in accordance with Section 102 (meaning of "associated company" and "control").

54. Section 102(2) of the Corporation Tax Act 1976 defines "control" in the following manner:

For the purposes of this Part a person shall be taken to have control of a company if he exercises, or is able to exercise or is entitled to acquire, control, whether direct or indirect, over the company's affairs, and in particular, but without prejudice to the generality of the preceding words, if he possesses or is entitled to acquire-

- (a) the greater part of the share capital or issued share capital of the company or of the voting power in the company; or
- (b) such part of the issued share capital of the company as would, if the whole of the income of the company were in fact distributed among the participators (without regard to any rights which he or any other person has as a loan creditor), entitle him to receive the greater part of the amount so distributed; or
- (c) such rights as would, in the event of the winding up of the company or in any other circumstances, entitle him to receive the greater part of the assets of the company which would then be available for distribution among the participators.

55. Section 102 (3),(4),(5) and (6) of the Corporation Tax Act 1976 additionally provide as follows:

- (3) Where two or more persons together satisfy any of the conditions of sub-section (2), they shall be taken to have control of the company.

(4) For the purposes of sub-section (2) a person shall be treated as entitled to acquire anything which he is entitled to acquire at a future date, or will at a future date be entitled to acquire.

(5) For the purposes of sub-sections (2) and (3), there shall be attributed to any person any rights or powers of a nominee for him, that is to say, any rights or powers which another person possesses on his behalf or may be required to exercise on his direction or behalf.

(6) For the purposes of sub-sections (2) and (3), there may also be attributed to any person all the rights and powers of any company of which he has, or he and associates of his have, control or any two or more such companies, or of any associate of his or of any two or more associates of his, including those attributed to a company or associate under sub-section (5), but not those attributed to an associate under this sub-section; and such attributions shall be made under this sub-section as will result in the company being treated as under the control of five or fewer participators if it can be so treated.

56. The word "payment" in this sub-paragraph is interpreted by the Tribunal in the same manner as outlined in sub-paragraph A.6.

57. The word "benefit" in this sub-paragraph is interpreted by the Tribunal as including the meaning specified in Section 2 of the Ethics in Public Office Act 1995 which provides:

"benefit" includes-

(a) a right, privilege, office or dignity and any forbearance to demand money or money's worth or a valuable thing,

(b) any aid, vote, consent or influence or pretended aid, vote, consent or influence,

(c) any promise or procurement of or agreement or endeavour to procure, or the holding out of any expectation of, any gift, loan, fee, reward or other thing aforesaid, or other advantage and the avoidance of a loss, liability, penalty, forfeiture, punishment or other disadvantage.

Sub-paragraph A.5

58. The word "corruption" in this sub-paragraph is interpreted by the Tribunal as including destroying, hindering or perverting the integrity or fidelity of a person in the discharge of his duty, or the abuse of influence or power or duty by any person, or to bribe, or to induce another to act dishonestly or unfaithfully, or an attempt to do the same, or circumstances of control, influence or involvement with such person to the extent that it gives rise to a reasonable inference of unequal access, or favouritism, or a set of circumstances detrimental to his duties.

59. The words "attempts to influence" in this sub-paragraph are interpreted by the Tribunal as including an attempt through power or pressure or control of whatever character whether acting on fears or hopes or otherwise to induce or coerce or persuade another to act in a manner such that the free use of his judgment has been deprived.

60. The words "corruption" and "attempts to influence" are both words which, where relevant to this inquiry, plainly depend on their factual context. There is no single set of circumstances that constitute "corruption" or "attempts to influence".

Paragraph E

Sub-paragraph E.1

61. The words "substantial payments" in this sub-paragraph are interpreted by the Tribunal as including any monetary amounts, benefits, enrichment, gain, advantage or some other consideration, or payment in kind, or services rendered, or the transfer of property, or a set-off or release or discharge of an obligation, or pecuniary or other reward which in the opinion of the Tribunal is substantial. In interpreting the word "substantial" the Tribunal will have regard, inter alia, to the size of any payment, the time at which it was made, the question as to whether that payment is reasonably related to any other payment, the resources of the person or entity making any payment and the resources of the person or entity receiving any payment.

62. The words "improperly connected" in this sub-paragraph are interpreted by the Tribunal as including a connection which reasonable judgment would not condone, or a connection not likely to promote the proper exercise of the duties relating to that public office or position.

63. The word "person" in this sub-paragraph is interpreted by the Tribunal in the same manner as the word "persons" as outlined in sub-paragraph A.3.

64. The word "entity" in this sub-paragraph is interpreted by the Tribunal as including the interpretation of the word "companies" as outlined in sub-paragraph A.3, or undertaking, regulator or authority, organisation or society, whether incorporated or not.

PROCEDURE

65. The Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Acts 1921 to 1998 does not establish any detailed model of procedure to be adopted by a tribunal of inquiry in carrying out its function. This is a sensible policy having regard to the wide variety of circumstances and subject-matter in respect of which the Oireachtas has on previous occasions established tribunals of inquiry.
66. The result is that once established it is for a tribunal itself to model its own rules of procedure.
67. The starting point for any tribunal, in this State, in relation to the model of procedure to be adopted is the Constitution. A tribunal must at all times fully respect the constitutional rights of all persons whose interests may be affected by the course of the inquiry work.
68. In addition, in appropriate circumstances, the tribunal must also have regard to the statutory and other legal rights of any person where they may be affected by the work of an inquiry.
69. The Supreme Court in a number of decisions, including the recent decisions in the cases of Haughey & Others v Mr. Justice Moriarty and Others and Bailey & Others v Mr. Justice Flood & Another both delivered on the 28th July 1998, has provided considerable guidance to tribunals of inquiry as to the legal and constitutional parameters in which the work of an inquiry is to be carried out. It is the intention of this tribunal to fully implement the guidance outlined in those decisions.

70. A tribunal of inquiry is established as a matter of last resort where the ordinary processes of inquiry, or civil or criminal litigation, are considered by the Oireachtas to be inappropriate to attempt to establish the true facts giving rise to the establishment of such tribunal. Tribunals of Inquiry are, not infrequently, in this country and elsewhere established in circumstances where there has been an apparent loss of confidence in some aspect of public administration.
71. It is important to keep in mind that the terms of reference of this tribunal of inquiry expressly require this inquiry to be carried out "urgently". The matters to be inquired into are described as "definite matters of urgent public importance". The specific mandate of the tribunal is to undertake an inquiry with a view to reporting to the Clerk of Dail Eireann any "findings" and to make any appropriate "recommendations".
72. The essence of a tribunal of inquiry has been recently encapsulated by the Chief Justice in the recent Haughey decision where he stated at page 64 of the judgment of Supreme Court:

"... the principal function of such tribunals has been to restore public confidence in the democratic institutions of the State by having the most rigorous possible inquiry consistent with the rights of the citizens into the circumstances which gave rise to the public disquiet."

73. The Chief Justice also describes, at page 121 of that judgment, the procedural phases of a tribunal of inquiry as follows:

- " 1. A preliminary investigation of the evidence available;
2. The determination by the Tribunal of what it considers to be evidence relevant to the matters into which it is obliged to inquire;
3. The service of such evidence on persons likely to be effected thereby;
4. The public hearing of witnesses in regard to such evidence, and the cross-examination of such witnesses by or on behalf of persons effected thereby;
5. The preparation of a report and the making of recommendations based on facts established at such public hearing."

74. This Tribunal is presently carrying out a confidential preliminary investigation in private. The purpose of this phase of the inquiry is to establish what evidence is available to the Tribunal, and to determine whether that evidence is relevant to the subject-matter of this inquiry. In carrying out this confidential work the Tribunal has relied on the voluntarco-operation of persons who the Tribunal are satisfied may have documentation or information relevant to this inquiry.

75. In certain instances, for a variety of legal reasons, it has been necessary to invoke the compulsory statutory powers available to a tribunal of inquiry in an effort to discover the extent of any relevant documentation or information. In those cases the Tribunal will adopt the guidance of the Supreme Court in relation to the manner in which those compulsory powers are to be exercised.
76. The matters being investigated by this Tribunal are very serious and it is becoming apparent that a small number of persons and entities may be seeking to avoid or delay the disclosure of what the Tribunal considers to be relevant documentation and information.
77. The concern of the Tribunal that such person may seek to avoid or delay the inquiry work of this Tribunal does not have the effect of negating their constitutional, legal or statutory rights. These rights are enjoyed by all persons in the State irrespective of any preliminary, or other views, that the Tribunal may form.
78. The Tribunal has an overriding duty to discharge its urgent mandate from the Oireachtas to the extent possible. The Oireachtas has, in the terms of reference, anticipated the possibility that certain individuals may fail to co-operate fully and expeditiously with this inquiry. In the event that the Tribunal were to conclude that a given individual or entity did in fact fail to co-operate fully and expeditiously the Tribunal will report that "finding" to the Oireachtas.

79. For the avoidance of doubt the Tribunal should indicate that it has not, to date, made a finding against any person or entity that they have failed to co-operate fully and expeditiously. In addition the Tribunal would necessarily take all reasonable steps to respect the constitutional, legal and statutory rights of any such person before considering making a finding of this type.

CHAPTER TWO - QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 1 - INTRODUCTION

A DESCRIPTION OF THE LANDS

1.01 The lands which lent their name to this module comprise approximately 180 acres and lie to the west of Dublin City, and are bordered by the M50 motorway to the east, the Dublin/Galway/Sligo road to the north, the Fonthill Road to the west and the Coldcut Road to the south. The lands are now home to the Liffey Valley Shopping Centre and retail park. The 'Neilstown lands' which in the context of this inquiry were closely associated with the Quarryvale lands, are located in north Clondalkin, County Dublin, approximately one mile to the south of the Quarryvale lands. The Tribunal's inquiries concerning these lands related to their purchase, development and rezoning in the late 1980s, and throughout the 1990s.

THE OWNERSHIP OF THE QUARRYVALE AND NEILSTOWN LANDS

1.02 The Quarryvale lands which ultimately comprised the Quarryvale development site, were originally in the ownership of a number of landowners, including Dublin County Council and Dublin Corporation, until they were gradually acquired in the late 1980s by Mr Tom Gilmartin, a United Kingdom based property developer who, together with Arlington Securities Ltd (Arlington), had been involved in the proposed development of the Bachelors Walk site in Dublin City also in the late 1980s.

1.03 Although Mr Gilmartin commenced his acquisition of this site in 1988, the 180 acre site itself was not fully assembled until the early 1990s. Mr Gilmartin financed the purchase of the earlier acquired lands from his own resources. However, by late 1989 he had a requirement for the injection of substantial finance to complete the site assembly. On 19 February 1990, Allied Irish Banks (AIB) advanced IR£8m to Barkhill Ltd (Barkhill) a company owned by Mr Gilmartin and his wife Mrs Vera Gilmartin and into which he had transferred those sites already acquired by him. It was intended that this advance from AIB would be utilised to complete the assembly of the site, and that the sum advanced, together with interest would be repaid to AIB by the end of August of that year. At the date of advance of this facility by AIB, Mr Gilmartin believed that the site would be granted designated status (under the Urban Renewal Act, 1986) by the Government in the forthcoming Budget.

1.04 Although situated in west County Dublin, the Neilstown lands were originally owned by Dublin Corporation, and were part of the Ronanstown lands which were zoned for Town Centre use in the 1972 and 1983 Development Plans. In 1988, Merrygrove Ltd (Merrygrove) (a company then under the control of Mr Albert Gubay, a property developer) entered into an Agreement with Dublin Corporation for the purchase (subject to conditions) of these lands for IR£3m. Under the terms of this agreement, Merrygrove would pay a deposit of IR£0.3m to the Corporation and apply within a stipulated timeframe for planning permission to develop the site as a town centre.

1.05 Following negotiations, Mr Gubay agreed to sell his interest in Merrygrove to Mr Owen O’Callaghan, a property developer from Cork, for a consideration of IR£0.8m (which included the IR£0.3m deposit payable to the Corporation). In February 1989, Mr Gubay’s interest in Merrygrove was transferred to O’Callaghan Properties Ltd.

1.06 Mr O’Callaghan in turn entered into an agreement on 31 January 1989 with Mr Gilmartin whereby he was granted an option to acquire the Merrygrove contract with Dublin Corporation for IR£3.5m. It was agreed that he would pay a deposit of IR£0.8m on execution of the agreement, and the balance of IR£2.7m in two tranches of IR£1.35m each. The date of payment of both these tranches, and in particular the second, was the subject of much conflict between the parties, both at the time, and in the course of the Tribunal’s public hearings.

1.07 Mr Gilmartin paid the deposit of IR£0.8m on 31 January 1989, and the first tranche of IR£1.35m on 21 February 1990 with funds from the sale of his 20% interest in the Bachelors Walk Development with Arlington.

1.08 By September 1991, Barkhill was indebted to AIB in respect of their facility of February 1990 (which it had not been in a position to repay by the end of August 1990), and Mr Gilmartin was himself being pursued by Mr O’Callaghan for the second tranche of IR£1.35m.

1.09 In September 1991, an agreement was entered into between the parties, whereby Mr and Mrs Gilmartin transferred 40% of their shareholding in Barkhill to Riga Ltd (Riga), a company owned jointly by Mr O’Callaghan and his solicitor and business partner, Mr Deane. They transferred a further 20% to AIB. In return, O’Callaghan Properties Ltd transferred Merrygrove Ltd to Barkhill, and abandoned its claim to the outstanding IR£1.35m. In addition, Riga advanced a loan of IR£1m to Barkhill and guaranteed a loan from AIB of a further IR£1m. AIB, for their part, sanctioned a further facility to Barkhill to enable it complete the site acquisition. The Gilmartins retained a 40% interest in Barkhill until it was finally acquired from them in March 1996, when Grosvenor Estates Ltd, a large property development company from the United Kingdom, bought into Barkhill.

THE 1983 DEVELOPMENT PLAN

1.10 The 180 acres approximately which would ultimately constitute the fully assembled Quarryvale site were zoned as follows in the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan:

- (i) Objective 'E' – 'to provide for industrial and related uses',
- (ii) Objective 'F' – 'to preserve and provide for open space and recreational amenities', and,
- (iii) Objective 'A1' – 'to provide for new residential communities in accordance with approved action area plans'.

1.11 The Neilstown Lands (also referred to as Ronanstown or Balgaddy)¹ were zoned Objective 'D' – 'to provide for major town centre activities' for the Lucan/Clondalkin area. The 1983 Development Plan zonings of the Quarryvale and Neilstown lands were outlined in Maps 12 and 13 of the said Development Plan.

THE REVIEW OF THE 1983 DEVELOPMENT PLAN

1.12 The Lucan/Clondalkin lands were the subject of discussion at a special meeting of the County Council on 16 February 1990. Mr Willie Murray, Deputy Dublin Planning Officer, outlined the development proposals for the area, and, following a discussion it was agreed that a report on the general policy for this area would be submitted to the next special meeting of the County Council dealing with the Development Plan review. Subject to a further report on certain proposals, the Draft Written statement and maps 16 and 17 were noted. The following changes on map 16 related to the Quarryvale lands:

- (i) Change number 9: An area to the west previously zoned 'F' (open space) to be zoned A1 (for the development of a residential community)
- (ii) Change number 10: An area to the east previously zoned 'F' – (open space) to be zoned 'E' (industry)

The substantive part of the site would remain zoned 'E' (industry) as it was in the 1983 Plan.

¹ A central position in the new development area was chosen for each of the three new town sites of Blanchardstown, Clondalkin/Lucan and Tallaght. In the case of Tallaght and Blanchardstown the name of the existing village was taken as the name of the new town site but because the third town was to be based on two existing villages (Clondalkin/Lucan) it was considered that a name associated with neither might be used and therefore Ronanstown, a townland located in the centre of the development area was the name selected at an early stage to describe the greater development area that included Lucan, Clondalkin and the area in between.

1.13 At a special meeting of the County Council held on 8 March 1990, a report entitled ‘Report on Development Options for Lucan/Clondalkin (Ronanstown)’ by the Dublin Planning Officer was circulated to, and then debated by the Councillors. This report outlined the planning policy up to that time for the proposed three western towns, Blanchardstown, Clondalkin/Lucan and Tallaght, namely that each town should ultimately be served by a major town centre which would provide higher order shopping and a range of employment, civic, recreational and other uses. Further, each town centre would be conveniently located at the hub of the transportation network (both public and private transport) serving the new town area. In relation to Ronanstown, the Report set out two possible options, namely:

- (i) To abandon the Ronanstown ‘New Town’ concept as expressed in the 1972 and 1983 Development Plans and concentrate on Lucan and Clondalkin as lower order centres; or
- (ii) To leave the zoning of the area under consideration largely intact and either re-enforce the existing new town centre concept in its present position, re-locate it as a major town elsewhere or split it to associate part with Lucan and part with Clondalkin.

1.14 Having explained in detail the different options, the Manager recommended ‘that the Council continue to implement and re-enforce the 1972 and 1983 Development Plan policies for the completion of the new town of Ronanstown and that it should adopt the following objectives in order to secure the achievement of these aims:

- (i) Continue pressure for the construction of the Fonthill road.
- (ii) Continue pressure for Tax Incentives in the Town Centre area.
- (iii) Continue positive marketing of local authority lands for private housing.
- (iv) Implement a landscaping programme for local authority lands adjoining the Fonthill road.
- (v) Re-zone the area between the railway and the canal to residential use to support the Town Centre and Rail proposals.
- (vi) Oppose major commercial development in Lucan and Clondalkin villages until the Town Centre is underway.
- (vii) Resist additional zoning of areas West of Lucan as this would remove the impetus for development of both housing and the Town Centre from the area between Lucan and Clondalkin and should not be considered until the central area has been developed.
- (viii) Pursue the construction of the road link between the Town Centre lands and the Motorway.’

1.15 Following discussion, a motion in the names of Cllrs Fitzgerald, Rabbitte, Cass, Lawlor, McGrath, Hand, Laing, Owen, McGennis, Flood, Maher, McMahon and Ridge which provided ‘that the Managers Report of 8th March 1990 on the development of Lucan/Clondalkin be rejected and that new maps be prepared for the separate development of the greater Lucan area and the greater Clondalkin area’ was passed unanimously.

1.16 At a special meeting of the County Council on 7 September 1990, a report by the Manager entitled ‘Report providing for the Separate Development of the Greater Lucan Area and the Greater Clondalkin Area’, was presented to the Councillors. The Manager considered ‘that the original concept of an integrated ‘new town’ with its own higher order town centre is the preferred model for the development of the area. However, if it is to be abandoned, then a sub-division of the area into three districts in the manner outlined could be recommended as the best alternative arrangement’. In other words, if the town centre at Ronanstown was to be abandoned, the next alternative would be to divide the area into three districts served by three separate district centres, Lucan Village, Clondalkin Village and a reduced centre on the former town centre site at Neilstown.

1.17 A decision on the Manager’s Report was deferred to the next special meeting of the County Council which was held on 14 September 1990, when it was agreed that Maps 16, 17 and 18 as presented to the Council in February 1990 would be adopted. These Maps showed the site of the Town Centre designated in the original position at Neilstown.

1.18 It was a condition of the purchase agreement between Dublin Corporation and Merrygrove of 21 November 1988, that Merrygrove would make an application for planning permission for a town centre development on the Neilstown lands within two months. Later, this time limit was extended by agreement to 31 December 1989. On 22 December 1989, a planning permission application was made by the Ambrose Kelly Partnership on behalf of Merrygrove for a town centre development of 24,678 square metres on the Neilstown lands. On 28 September 1990, Dublin County Council decided to grant planning permission for the proposed development subject to 34 conditions. On 13 November 1990, Merrygrove appealed to An Bord Pleanála against the said decision. On 21 May 1991 (shortly after the Special Meeting of Dublin County Council of 16 May 1991 detailed below) Merrygrove withdrew the planning application, and on 28 May 1991, An Bord Pleanála declared that as ‘the said application has been withdrawn, it is no longer before the Board for determination and that there is, therefore, now no appeal in relation to the application before the Board.’

1.19 In January 1991, the members were afforded an opportunity to submit motions for insertion on a ‘wrap-up’ agenda for consideration by the County Council prior to putting a draft development plan on display. By letter of 18 January 1991, the members were advised that motions had to be submitted not later than Friday 8 February 1991, a deadline later extended to 15 February 1991. Among the 160 motions received was one signed by Cllr McGrath, which was ultimately scheduled for consideration at a special meeting of the County Council on 16 May 1991, and which was drafted in the following terms:

‘Dublin County Council hereby resolves that the lands at Palmerstown, Quarryvale comprising of approximately 180 acres as outlined on the attached map, adjacent to the Western Parkway intersection with the Galway Road be rezoned to D and E in the draft revision of the County Dublin Development Plan to provide a major town centre, business and industrial park.’

THE SPECIAL MEETING OF 16 MAY 1991

1.20 On 16 May 1991, it was proposed by Cllr McGrath and seconded by Cllr Hand, that this motion be amended by inclusion of the following:

‘That a statement be included in the Development Plan to indicate that the total area of commercial development in the area zoned ‘D’ shall not exceed the total area of commercial development which would be appropriate to the Lucan/Clondalkin Town Centre site designated in the County Development Plan.’

1.21 This amendment was signed by Cllrs McGrath, Hand and Hanrahan. The motion, as amended, was then passed by 29 votes in favour to 13 votes against. The practical effect of this successful motion was to transfer the Town Centre zoning from Neilstown to Quarryvale with a cap of approximately 500,000 sq feet on its size. Map 16 of the 1991 Draft Development Plan, which went on public display between 2 September and 3 December 1991, therefore showed the greater part of the Quarryvale lands as zoned ‘D’ (to provide for major town centre activities) with smaller parts of the lands as zoned ‘E’ (to provide for industrial and related uses). The Neilstown lands carried an ‘E’ industrial zoning. The draft written statement reflected the terms of this successful motion at paragraph 5.4.9, under the heading ‘Town Centre’, as follows:

‘5.4.9(i) It is proposed to relocate the Town Centre at Quarryvale. The zoning of the original town centre will change from ‘D’ to ‘E’ industrial.

5.4.9(ii) The Council has resolved that the total area of commercial development in the area zoned ‘D’ should not exceed the total area of commercial development which would be appropriate to the Lucan/Clondalkin Town Centre site designated in the County Development Plan’.

1.22 During the period of public display between 2 September and 3 December 1991, 23,866 objections and representations were received, and 487 requests for oral hearings facilitated. 16,826 objections and representations were received in relation to the Quarryvale proposals, some 16,600 of which consisted of standard form submissions. Of these, 6,000 objected, and 10,600 supported the 1991 Draft Development Plan provisions in respect of the Quarryvale site.

THE SPECIAL MEETING OF 17 DECEMBER 1992

1.23 On 19 October 1992, Dublin County Council received an application from The Ambrose Kelly Group on behalf of Merrygrove seeking planning permission for a stadium/arena on 13.3 hectares (32.8 acres) at Neilstown. This planning application was pending when Maps 16, 17 and 18 were considered by the Councillors at a special meeting of the County Council on 17 December 1992.

1.24 The Planning Officer’s report as presented to that special meeting of 17 December 1992, considered the planning strategy for Lucan/Clondalkin, and stated that the town centre designated land had been left without adequate road access, and that it was relatively remote (except for the north-east and east) from existing development. The completion of the Fonthill road would provide access only to the east of the town centre lands, and its development potential in the short term, in the absence of major growth and infrastructural provision in the area, was called into question. The report went on to state that the proposed relocation of the Town Centre to Quarryvale, where it was proposed to be bounded to the north and east by major through roads, and with access through two proposed industrial/business park areas (it was in excess of 600m from the Fonthill road) would leave it remote from most of the population of Lucan/Clondalkin. The report said that:

‘It would be unlikely to function in any way as a central place, a transportation hub and a focus for civic, commercial, social and recreational life for the people of Lucan and Clondalkin. It could also if of a certain size adversely affect shopping provision in Blanchardstown and the City Centre. It would appear however, that the site is viable in the short term for commercial development and such development could be advantageous in that timescale, for the area.’

1.25 The report went on to state that the full achievement of a sizeable town centre on the Neilstown lands could take many years and that, 'nevertheless for reasons of consistency and continuity, because of the signs of a resurgence of development referred to above, and because of possible compensation implications it is recommended that the policy contained in the 1983 Plan be continued for a further period.'

1.26 The Councillors were advised that the planning decision to be made by them was whether to continue with the 1972 and 1983 strategy (which was recommended), or to modify that strategy so as to envisage the development of three distinct communities, instead of one. The Councillors were informed that if it was decided by them that the process of achieving the integration of Lucan and Clondalkin into a new urban entity was to be spread over an unacceptably long timeframe in social and community terms, then a modified approach could be suggested for consideration by the County Council. In that event, it was recommended that the Quarryvale lands (approximately 180 acres) should be jointly zoned 'C' ('to protect, provide for and/or improve Town/District Centre facilities') and 'E' ('to provide for industrial and related uses'). The area should also be the subject of a specific objective to foster the creation of employment opportunities in this area, and to facilitate the provision of a district centre to serve the larger community. It was also recommended that the lands at Neilstown should retain the 'D' zoning ('to provide for major town centre activities'), as in the 1983 Development Plan, but with the specific objective 'to encourage the development of specialised commercial, recreational, industrial and residential uses in this area.'

1.27 There were twelve motions relating to the Quarryvale site on the agenda of the County Council for this meeting, and a number of them, if successful, would have had the effect of transferring back the town centre zoning to the Neilstown lands, thus leaving the Quarryvale lands with only an industrial zoning. One of the motions, in the names of Cllrs O'Halloran, McGrath, Ridge and Tyndall, which was received by the County Council on the 9 December, 1992, proposed that the Manager's Report relating to Lucan/Clondalkin overall planning strategy be adopted. This report recommended the approval of the 'C' and 'E' zoning on the Quarryvale lands so as to ensure the provision of a suitable centre to meet the overall needs of the area.

1.28 Motions proposing that the Quarryvale lands be zoned 'E' were considered by the County Council, but were voted against by a majority of Councillors. As a consequence, a number of similar motions also fell. An amendment to the O'Halloran/McGrath/Ridge/Tyndall motion proposing 'C1 zoning with a cap of 100,000 sq. ft. on the Quarryvale site', was defeated by 32 votes to 37. An amendment to the O'Halloran/McGrath/Ridge/Tyndall motion in the names of Cllrs Devitt, McGrath, Tyndall and O'Halloran was proposed by Cllr Devitt and seconded by Cllr McGrath. This proposed 'to restrict the retail shopping to 250,000 sq. ft.', and was passed by 39 votes in favour and 28 votes against, with two abstentions.

1.29 Finally, a further amendment in the names of Cllrs O'Halloran, McGrath, Ridge and Tyndall, proposed by Cllr O'Halloran and seconded by Cllr McGrath, sought to amend the motion by the addition of the following paragraph:

'To approve the Manager's recommendation that the lands at Neilstown zoned for town centre uses in the 1983 Development Plan should be zoned 'D' ' (to provide for major town centre activities) with the Specific Objective, 'It is an objective of the Council to encourage the development of specialized commercial, recreational, industrial and residential uses in this area.'

This proposal was passed by 39 votes in favour, and 28 votes against, with two abstentions. This motion, as further amended, was then passed unanimously. As a consequence, a number of other motions relating to Quarryvale were either withdrawn, or were not put to the meeting.

1.30 On 27 April 1993, the County Council received a motion signed by Cllrs O'Halloran, Ridge, McGrath and Tyndall proposing the following changes to the Draft Written Statement:

'Dublin County Council hereby resolves to delete paragraph 5.4.9 of the Draft Written Statement and to substitute the following:

It is an objective of the Council to foster the creation of employment opportunities in the Quarryvale area and to facilitate the provision of a district town centre to service the larger community. It is proposed to designate a district town centre site at Quarryvale. This district town centre shall be in the order of 250,000 sq. ft. retail floor space. The original town centre site retains its 'D' ('to provide for major town centre activities') zoning with the following objective - 'to encourage the development of specialised commercial, recreational, industrial and residential uses in the area.'

1.31 This motion was considered at Special Meetings of Dublin County Council on 3 and 4 June, 1993. At the Special Meeting of 4 June 1993, it was proposed by Cllr Gilbride and seconded by Cllr Tyndall that the above motion be amended by:

- (a) Deleting the words ‘district town’ in lines 6, 7 and 8 and substituting the words ‘District /Town’.
- (b) Deleting the words ‘retail floor space’ in line 9, and substituting the words ‘of retail shopping’.
- (c) Adding the words ‘but not exceeding’ after the words ‘in the order of’ in line 9.’

1.32 This amendment was passed unanimously. The substantive amended motion was then put to the Councillors and was also passed unanimously.

1.33 The Dublin County Development Plan 1993 amendments to the 1991 Draft Development Plan went on public display between 1 July and 4 August, 1993. The effect of the successful motion of 17 December 1992 was to amend the proposed zoning of the Quarryvale lands to ‘C’ and ‘E’, subject to a cap of 250,000 sq. ft. on its retail shopping element. It also had the effect that the original town centre site at Neilstown would remain zoned ‘D’ to provide for major town centre activities but with the additional specific objective to encourage the development of specialised commercial, recreational, industrial and residential uses in this area.

1.34 These proposed amendments were confirmed at a Special Meeting of Dublin County Council on 19 October 1993, in accordance with the Manager’s recommendations. The Manager also recommended the adoption of the proposed amendments to the Written Statement and these were confirmed at a Special Meeting of the Council on 16 November 1993. Finally, on 10 December, 1993, the Councillors adopted the 1993 Dublin County Development Plan, which contained the aforementioned changes in relation to the Quarryvale and Neilstown lands.

THE REVIEW OF THE 1993 DEVELOPMENT PLAN BY SOUTH DUBLIN COUNTY COUNCIL

1.35 On 1 January 1994, Dublin County Council was divided into three newly established Local Authorities, namely South Dublin County Council, Dún Laoghaire/Rathdown County Council and Fingal County Council. The Quarryvale and Neilstown lands were situated within the functional area of the new South Dublin County Council.

1.36 In May 1997, position papers prepared as a part of South Dublin County Council review of the 1993 Dublin County Development Plan recognised Quarryvale as a District Centre, which it defined as a centre ranging from 3,000 to 20,000 square metres in size and serving a district catchment of a 2 to 3 mile radius. Members were advised that the Quarryvale district centre proposal included 23,500 square metres of shopping. There was no recommendation in these position papers for or against lifting the cap on retail space for Quarryvale.

1.37 There was no mention of Quarryvale in a presentation made on 2 December 1997, to the Councillors, of a report which included a list of agreed amendments for incorporation into the Draft Plan. A Motion to display the Draft Plan was passed by the Councillors at this meeting, and it was placed on public display on the 9 February 1998 for the statutory three month period, ending 11 May 1998. The Draft Plan did not contain any specific objectives restricting the quantum of retail shopping space permissible on the Quarryvale lands. This omission reflected the view of senior management within South Dublin County Council, that the imposition of a cap on retail space was inappropriate. The absence of such a restriction on retail space meant that if the 1998 Draft Development Plan for South County Dublin was ultimately adopted without further change, the cap imposed in the Dublin County Development Plan 1993 would be permanently removed.

1.38 The County Manager provided a comprehensive report to the Councillors on 13 August 1998, on the representation/objections lodged in relation to the Draft Plan. Representations objecting to the removal of the retail cap at Quarryvale were made by Leixlip Town Commissioners, the Retail, Grocery, Dairy, the Allied Trades Association, The Square (Tallaght) Management Committee and the Mid East Regional Authority. In the report the County Council officials outlined in summary form the objections to the lifting of the cap at Quarryvale, and the zoning history of the land up to that time. The report recommended to the Councillors that the removal of the cap on retail floor space be confirmed.

1.39 On 1 September 1998, the County Council received a motion signed by Cllr Gus O’Connell dated 31 August 1998, which, in essence, sought to reverse the changes proposed in respect of the Quarryvale and Balgaddy town/district centres, and to reintroduce the cap as outlined in the 1993 Dublin County Development Plan. At a Special meeting of the County Council on 24 September 1998, this Motion was considered by the Councillors, having been proposed by Cllr O’Connell, and seconded by Cllr Muldoon. In his report to this meeting, the Manager stated that the imposition of a special restriction on the size of the retail shopping element of the Quarryvale/Liffey Valley Shopping Centre was unique in County Dublin. He indicated that in the context of the present day development in retail shopping a restriction on the size of such developments was considered inappropriate. Following discussion, the O’Connell/Muldoon motion was defeated, with 4 councillors voting in favour and 18 against, thus ensuring that the cap on the size of retail development at Quarryvale would not be re-imposed.

1.40 At a meeting of the members of South Dublin County Council held on 1 October 1998, it was resolved that material amendments to the 1998 Draft South Dublin Development Plan as agreed in the course of special meetings, including the meeting of 24 September 1998, be placed on public display for one month. There were no material amendments relating to Quarryvale. At a Special meeting of South Dublin County Council held on 15 December 1998, the Draft Development Plan for South Dublin County Council was adopted, with the Quarryvale lands carrying a Specific Local Objective ‘that within the lands at Quarryvale and Balgaddy designated as zoning objective DC on the Development Plan No 1, the use, classes and categories as set out in table 3.7, Section 3 Development Control, will apply when assessing the acceptability or otherwise of development proposals’. This had the effect of providing that while the Quarryvale and Balgaddy lands retained district centre zoning, the use of the lands would be permitted to include the use and classes relating to town centre facilities.

THE PUBLIC HEARINGS IN THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

1.41 The Quarryvale Module was divided into two parts, because of its size and the large number of witnesses scheduled to give evidence. The first part of the module was the subject of inquiry in the public hearings held between 3 March 2004 and 29 July 2004. The second part of the module was the subject of public hearings held between 29 November, 2005 and 1 December 2005, and between 28 May 2007 and 29 October 2008. In total, 202 witnesses gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal in the course of the module.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 2 – THE DEVELOPERS IN QUARRYVALE – MR TOM GILMARTIN AND MR OWEN O’CALLAGHAN

INTRODUCTION

1.01 The three most prominent personalities who featured in the Tribunal’s public inquiry in its largest module, Quarryvale, were Mr Tom Gilmartin, Mr Owen O’Callaghan and Mr Frank Dunlop. Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan (with their companies) were the individuals who were primarily involved with the promotion of the Quarryvale project (to have Quarryvale rezoned and prepared for development), with Mr Gilmartin’s involvement pre-dating that of Mr O’Callaghan. Mr Dunlop’s involvement was as a lobbyist for the project, having been retained for that task by Mr O’Callaghan.

1.02 In this part of the Report the Tribunal considered particular issues, relating to, separately, Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan, as well as aspects of their often volatile relationship, in the context of their shared ambitions for Quarryvale. It should therefore be read and considered with due regard to the Tribunal’s detailed consideration of the evidence heard by it in the Quarryvale module.

1.03 The matters considered in the following pages are:

- (i) Mr Owen O’Callaghan and Mr Tom Gilmartin - their relationship.
- (ii) The immunity granted to Mr Tom Gilmartin.
- (iii) Mr Tom Gilmartin’s prior statements to the Tribunal.
- (iv) Mr Owen O’Callaghan’s prior statements to the Tribunal.
- (v) Mr Gilmartin’s allegations that he received information from Mr Owen O’Callaghan, and other anonymous sources, of substantial payments to senior politicians.

MR GILMARTIN & MR OWEN O’CALLAGHAN: THEIR RELATIONSHIP

1.04 Mr Gilmartin was, perhaps, the witness most closely associated with the Quarryvale module in the mind of the public. Mr Gilmartin’s¹ 58 days of evidence in public far exceeded the total days of evidence given in the module by other lengthy witnesses, such as Mr Frank Dunlop¹ (31 days) and Mr Owen O’Callaghan¹ (38 days).

¹ All three witnesses gave evidence on many of these days for half days only, following medical advice provided to the Tribunal on behalf of each of them.

1.05 That being so, it was in fact the case that a large amount of the evidence heard in public in the course of the Quarryvale module related to matters in which Mr Gilmartin was not directly involved.

1.06 The Quarryvale module examined Mr Gilmartin's involvement in, to a limited extent, the Bachelor's Walk, Dublin development in which Mr Gilmartin represented the interests of a UK property development company, Arlington Securities Plc, and, to a greater extent, the Quarryvale project, and, primarily, the rezoning of 180 acres of land at Quarryvale in west County Dublin in order to facilitate its development as a major shopping centre/retail park between 1987 and 1997. The Quarryvale lands, when developed, became Liffey Valley Shopping Centre and Retail Park. Mr O'Callaghan had no involvement with the Bachelor's Walk development.

1.07 Much of the information which fuelled the extensive private inquiry in relation to Quarryvale originally emanated from Mr Gilmartin. Included in the information provided by Mr Gilmartin to the Tribunal were allegations of wrong doing and corruption, some of which were based on his personal knowledge, but many of which stemmed from information which Mr Gilmartin claimed had been provided to him by Mr O'Callaghan and by others. These allegations were repeated by him to the Tribunal in the course of its private inquiry into Quarryvale, and later in his sworn evidence.

1.08 The Tribunal's private and public inquiry was not conducted merely as an inquiry into the allegations (both the allegations based on his own knowledge and those of wrong doing revealed to him by others), of Mr Gilmartin, although many of those allegations were in fact inquired into. The purpose of conducting the extensive Quarryvale inquiry in public was to comprehensively examine the process whereby the Quarryvale lands were rezoned by Dublin County Council in the early 1990s for the purposes of identifying any acts of corruption associated with the zoning/planning process. The inquiry involved a detailed examination of many issues, and only some of which were allegations sourced to Mr Gilmartin.

1.09 Nevertheless, Mr Gilmartin was a central character in the Quarryvale story, his evidence was frequently controversial and often subject to challenge from the Tribunal itself and from parties directly affected by it.

1.10 Arguably, of all the witnesses called by the Tribunal to give evidence in the course of the Quarryvale module it was Mr Gilmartin's credibility (together with that of Mr Frank Dunlop) that was subjected to the most sustained attack. Mr Gilmartin was invariably accused of lying, embellishing, exaggerating, misleading the Tribunal, and more.

1.11 The role and activities of Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin were examined in considerable detail by the Tribunal as was their relationship with each other and with others linked to both of them. The focus of the Tribunal’s inquiries was to examine the process by which the lands at Quarryvale, Co Dublin (consisting of approximately 180 acres), were rezoned for development and the linked planning issues that arose in the course of, and subsequent to, that process, and to ascertain if that process involved acts of wrongdoing or corruption involving elected public representatives and/or public officials or others.

1.12 The level of inquiry required to enable the Tribunal reach conclusions on the matters referred to, in general terms, in the preceding paragraph inevitably and necessarily involved some degree of collateral inquiry into the commercial relationship between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin (as well as the companies and individuals linked to both men).

1.13 It is important to emphasise that the Tribunal’s only purpose in conducting any aspect of its inquiry into that commercial relationship was to aid its substantive inquiry into the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. It was not a function of the Tribunal to make determinations or judgments in respect of that commercial relationship, and insofar as it has done so or appears to have done so, it has been done only for the purposes of placing itself in a position to enable it make findings of fact appropriate to its inquiry into substantive matters or issues.

1.14 The commercial relationship between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin began, somewhat informally, in or around December 1988 when both men first met in a Dublin hotel. On this occasion Mr O’Callaghan suggested to Mr Gilmartin that he, Mr O’Callaghan, should become a participant in Mr Gilmartin’s project to develop the Quarryvale lands, which necessarily involved the rezoning of the lands by Dublin County Council. Their commercial relationship was primarily formalised on two separate events,² the first being the occasion when the ‘Merrygrove Option agreement’ was signed (31 January 1989), and the second being the occasion when the first shareholders agreement relating to Quarryvale was signed (13 September 1991).

1.15 There was in addition to the commercial relationship between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin, a commercial relationship between both men and AIB Bank, in its capacity as banker/lender to the Quarryvale project, from February 1990, and in its capacity as co-shareholder in Barkhill Ltd from September 1991.

²The Merrygrove option deal was agreed after Mr Gilmartin had rejected Mr O’Callaghan’s suggestion of a joint venture agreement in relation to Quarryvale.

1.16 The commercial relationship between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin concluded in May 1996 when Mr O’Callaghan effectively bought Mr Gilmartin out of the Quarryvale lands, and Mr Gilmartin and his wife relinquished their shareholding in Barkhill Ltd, for a consideration of IR£8.7m (IR£7.6m net).

1.17 Central to its determination of a number of issues arising in the course of evidence heard by the Tribunal, was that of the credibility of Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin. In some instances that credibility issue was capable of determination by the mere process of preferring the evidence of one as against the other. In other instances a consideration of evidence from other witnesses or from documentation enabled the Tribunal to reach conclusions on credibility issues relating to both individuals. It was not possible for the Tribunal to determine every issue of contention between Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan.

THEIR CONTRASTING WITNESS STYLES

1.18 Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin presented as greatly contrasting witnesses, with each exhibiting quite distinctive evidential styles.

1.19 Mr O’Callaghan was a calm and generally confident witness. He tended to listen with great care to questions put to him in the course of cross-examination, and was careful and precise in his responses. He sought a clarification of questions when in doubt as to their true meaning or intent. He was unfailingly polite and non-confrontational.

1.20 Mr O’Callaghan frequently displayed and vocalised a deep-rooted dislike of Mr Gilmartin and at times indeed, visible anger at what he perceived to have been a long-running attempt by Mr Gilmartin to smear his reputation with false allegations against him, and his business.

1.21 Mr Gilmartin, on the other hand, often exhibited a sense of bitterness, frustration and anger in the manner in which he responded to questions put to him as a witness. He sometimes failed to fully listen to or comprehend questions put to him, requiring repeated questioning on the same topic, and many interventions by the Tribunal Members or by examining Counsel for the purposes of prompting him to answer particular questions. He regularly displayed poor memory, particularly in recalling dates or the detail of particular events, and occasionally conflated those events.

1.22 Mr Gilmartin’s attitude towards Mr O’Callaghan was one of intense dislike and deep contempt, clouded by a rarely concealed bitterness. He believed that Mr O’Callaghan (aided and abetted by AIB Bank) was primarily responsible for frustrating his efforts to successfully manage and complete the project to rezone and develop the Quarryvale lands. From Mr Gilmartin's perspective, Mr O'Callaghan, together with others, destroyed his commercial ambition to develop the Quarryvale lands and engaged in corrupt activity to achieve that end, including the orchestration of his personal bankruptcy in the UK. Serious allegations of corrupt activity on Mr O'Callaghan's part were made by Mr Gilmartin to the Tribunal both prior to and in the course of his sworn evidence.

1.23 In many instances, Mr Gilmartin's allegations concerning Mr O'Callaghan were based on his recollections of what he had been told by Mr O'Callaghan, and by others, rather than personal knowledge on his part.

THE GRANT OF IMMUNITY TO MR TOM GILMARTIN

2.01 Mr Gilmartin was formally granted immunity from criminal prosecution in respect of certain matters which were the subject of investigation by the Tribunal in the course of the Quarryvale module, on 1 October 1998, by the (then) Director of Public Prosecution.³ The following facts were pertinent to the grant of that immunity:

- i. The grant of immunity from prosecution was that of the (then) Director of Public Prosecutions, and not that of the Tribunal. The grant of immunity was made following a request for same from the then Sole Member of the Tribunal.
- ii. The grant of immunity was stated by the DPP to have been given 'in the public interest' and was conditional.
- iii. The conditions upon which it was granted were, that Mr Tom Gilmartin would cooperate fully⁴ with the Tribunal in its investigations and hearings, and that he would immediately give truthful evidence on Affidavit to the Tribunal in relation to the matters which he had already described to Counsel for the Tribunal.

THE CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH THE GRANT OF IMMUNITY WAS AGREED

2.02 Mr Tom Gilmartin met members of the Tribunal's legal team in Luton near London on 30 September 1998. This was the second occasion on which he met with the members of the Tribunal's legal team, and was the meeting which immediately preceded the request by the Tribunal to the Director of Public Prosecutions to grant immunity to Mr Gilmartin.

⁴ 'Cooperating fully' includes giving truthful evidence to the Tribunal. See comment of the Chairman of the Tribunal on Day 759 pg. 3 of the transcript.

2.03 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin was adamant that the request for a grant of immunity was made as a result of advice given to him by his then solicitor, Mr Noel Smyth. Mr Smyth confirmed in his evidence to the Tribunal that he did in fact give such advice to Mr Gilmartin, in addition to advice to seek an undertaking in relation to costs from the Tribunal before proceeding to cooperate with them in their inquiries. Such an undertaking in relation to costs from the Tribunal was not provided.

2.04 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he did not himself want immunity, or believe that he needed immunity, as he was strongly of the view that he had done nothing wrong.

2.05 A note prepared by Senior Counsel to the Tribunal, Mr Pat Hanratty SC relating to the discussion he had with Mr Tom Gilmartin on 30 September 1998 near Luton Airport stated the following:

He (Mr Tom Gilmartin) left us to Luton railway station. After John and Desmond (members of the Tribunal's legal team) had got out of the car he turned to me (Mr Hanratty S.C.) in the back of the car and said 'don't forget that matter we talked about.' I asked him which matter and he said 'immunity.' I said that we did not think that he needed immunity but that if he wanted it we would get it.

2.06 In the course of the opening statement to Quarryvale I made to the Tribunal by Mr John Gallagher SC on Day 455, the following was stated in relation to the immunity granted to Mr Gilmartin:

'In 1998, Mr Gilmartin was resident in Luton and could not be compelled to assist or attend to give evidence before the Tribunal. At that time he stated that whilst he did not believe that he required immunity, as he had done nothing wrong, he had been advised not to cooperate with the Tribunal until he received a letter of immunity from the DPP. In those circumstances, the then Director of Public Prosecutions at the request of the then Sole Member, Mr Justice Flood, decided that it was in the public interest that he should grant Mr Gilmartin immunity from prosecution subject to Mr Gilmartin cooperating fully and giving truthful evidence to the Tribunal.'

2.07 In the course of his evidence, Mr Gilmartin was asked to explain why he had denied seeking immunity in circumstances where the documentary evidence indicated that in fact he had done so. Mr Gilmartin's explanation was (as had been stated in the opening statement), that the decision to seek immunity was not his own decision, but merely represented his adoption of advice provided to him by his then solicitor Mr Noel Smyth.

2.08 When asked, on Day 758 (18 September 2007), to explain the note prepared by Mr Hanratty SC, at the conclusion of the meeting between members of the Tribunal's legal team and Mr Gilmartin near Luton Airport on 30 September 1998, Mr Gilmartin responded as follows:

'The only thing I remember is that since it was mentioned here as well, that at the station in Luton I reminded the people of the Tribunal what Mr Smyth had asked me to say. I reminded him to remember that subject we discussed, which was immunity.'

2.09 Also on the same date in the course of being cross-examined, Mr Gilmartin was asked the following question: 'Mr Gilmartin, I am putting it to you that twice in each of these references, twice you lied on oath to this Tribunal.'

2.10 This question referred to two occasions on which Mr Gilmartin had denied requesting immunity in discussions with the Tribunal's legal team.

2.11 Mr Gilmartin answered the question in the following terms: 'No, I did not. I did not knowingly lie to the Tribunal. I made the statement quite clearly, I would never have asked for immunity because I did not need immunity.'

2.12 Mr Gilmartin, and indeed the Tribunal itself, were challenged by the legal representatives of a small number of witnesses in relation to the grant of immunity to Mr Gilmartin. A central theme to much of the criticism of Mr Gilmartin receiving a grant of immunity, was that it provided him with a degree of protection in his dealings with the Tribunal and placed him in a different position to that of other witnesses, vis-a-vis giving evidence to the Tribunal.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE GRANT OF IMMUNITY

2.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that the request for immunity from prosecution was made by Mr Gilmartin on the advice of his then solicitor Mr Noel Smyth.

2.14 The Tribunal had a duty to take reasonable steps, within the law, to ensure that persons who had (or appeared to have) significant and important information of obvious or apparent relevance to matters being investigated pursuant to the Tribunal's Terms of Reference, provided such information, and if requested to do so, had to make themselves available to give evidence in the course of the Tribunal's public hearings. It was within this context that the Tribunal considered the request for immunity for Mr Gilmartin, and sought same from the Director of Public Prosecutions. The Tribunal was concerned to ensure as far as possible and practicable that Mr Gilmartin, as an individual who was then living outside the jurisdiction, might be persuaded to assist the Tribunal in its work.

2.15 Mr Gilmartin was the only individual to whom immunity was granted in connection with the work of this Tribunal. No other individual made a similar request to the Tribunal or, to the Tribunal's knowledge, to the Director of Public Prosecutions. Nothing in the Tribunal's Terms of Reference, and nothing stated by the Tribunal at any time, prohibited any party from requesting a similar grant of immunity to that granted to Mr Gilmartin.

2.16 The Tribunal rejected any suggestion that the grant of immunity to Mr Gilmartin in any of itself facilitated Mr Gilmartin in lying to, or misleading the Tribunal, or failing to cooperate with the Tribunal in any way. The grant of immunity was conditional upon Mr Gilmartin's cooperation with the Tribunal and this requirement necessarily included giving truthful evidence to the Tribunal. In the event that Mr Gilmartin lied to or otherwise misled the Tribunal, such would have rendered his grant of immunity useless.

2.17 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin gave evidence to it in the honest belief that such evidence was true and accurate. The Tribunal was satisfied that the conditions, under which the grant of immunity was made to Mr Gilmartin, were met, and has duly informed the Director of Public Prosecutions.

MR GILMARTIN'S PRIOR STATEMENTS TO THE TRIBUNAL⁵

3.01 Mr Gilmartin gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal on 58 days of public hearings between 3 March 2004 and 24 October 2007. He was examined by Counsel for the Tribunal on approximately 24 days, and was cross-examined by a number of his co-witnesses, or their legal representatives, on approximately 34 days. The most extensive cross-examinations of Mr Gilmartin were conducted by Counsel representing respectively, Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Bertie Ahern and AIB Bank.

3.02 Prior to the commencement of Mr Gilmartin's sworn evidence to the Tribunal, and indeed prior to the commencement of public hearings in the Quarryvale module, information was provided to the Tribunal, by Mr Gilmartin on occasion, either directly or through solicitors instructed by him.

3.03 On many occasions, in the course of Mr Gilmartin's sworn evidence to the Tribunal, his credibility was challenged. This challenge concentrated largely on identifying inconsistencies between Mr Gilmartin's sworn evidence and his prior statements to the Tribunal, as well as inconsistencies between those prior statements themselves. On occasions Mr Gilmartin's credibility was also challenged on the basis that a particular matter referred to by him, in his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, had not been referred to at all in his prior statements to the Tribunal.

3.04 Those parties who perceived themselves as potentially most exposed to adverse findings being made by the Tribunal as a consequence of Mr Gilmartin's allegations, in the event of Mr Gilmartin's evidence being accepted as true and accurate by the Tribunal, understandably went to considerable lengths to challenge and undermine Mr Gilmartin's credibility. They sought to establish Mr Gilmartin to have been a lying, malevolent and malicious individual determined to destroy their reputations, and to have been motivated by bitterness and revenge towards those whom he blamed for his own commercial failure in relation to, in particular, the Quarryvale project.

3.05 All such challenges were considered and assessed by the Tribunal in the preparation of this Report. However, the Tribunal deemed it unnecessary to address in the Report each and every occasion on which Mr Gilmartin's credibility was challenged, as to have done so would have been not only impractical, but in many instances impossible. Some of the challenges to Mr Gilmartin's evidence were based on what appeared to be serious inconsistencies, and were canvassed in evidence with Mr Gilmartin and other witnesses in considerable detail, and on occasions over prolonged periods. Other inconsistencies were of a relatively minor nature, and were inconsequential from an evidential or probative viewpoint, and were therefore not the subject of specific analysis in the Report.

3.06 Where questions of inconsistencies in Mr Gilmartin's information or evidence provided to the Tribunal were canvassed or raised by Counsel for the Tribunal, or by other lawyers (or witnesses), the Tribunal, subject to its approach as indicated in the immediately preceding paragraph, endeavoured to adequately probe and evaluate them, and in so doing assess Mr Gilmartin's credibility as a witness. The Tribunal was strongly urged by a number of witnesses (or their lawyers) directly affected by allegations (both direct and based on hearsay) made or repeated by Mr Gilmartin, to reject Mr Gilmartin's evidence as unreliable, unbelievable, inaccurate, knowingly untruthful and misleading.

3.07 Serious allegations were on occasion made by witnesses or their lawyers to the effect that the Tribunal itself sought to support or shore up Mr Gilmartin and his credibility, in order to protect its ‘star’ witness, and that this was done at the cost of the truth. The Tribunal absolutely rejects any such accusation. As an inquisitorial fact finding body, the Tribunal had no interest or motivation to act in such a manner in relation to Mr Gilmartin, or indeed any other witness. The Tribunal’s mandate, and its sole focus was to identify the truth without fear or favour, and it could only have done that in circumstances where it was prepared to (as indeed it did) critically examine relevant evidence in its search for the truth, irrespective of its source.

3.08 The Tribunal was at all times quite prepared to declare Mr Gilmartin to be an unreliable witness, or a witness whose evidence was misleading and/or untruthful, if such was found to have been the case.

3.09 In its efforts to determine the credibility of Mr Gilmartin’s evidence, and indeed that of the evidence of other witnesses, it was necessary and appropriate that the Tribunal not simply make that determination on the basis of one or more inconsistencies, albeit of a significant nature, being established. Having taken sworn evidence from Mr Gilmartin over a period of 58 days, in the course of which many matters were closely canvassed with him, the Tribunal had an ample and prolonged opportunity to consider and evaluate those inconsistencies (both of a minor and of a significant nature) which were suggested, alleged and/or established on his part. The Tribunal also had an ample and prolonged opportunity to assess the demeanour, style and attitude of Mr Gilmartin as a witness. As has been stated elsewhere in this Report, Mr Gilmartin was, from the Tribunal’s perspective, a difficult and often fractious witness.

3.10 The Tribunal’s task of identifying and evaluating inconsistencies, be they apparent or actual, minor or significant, and in so doing determining not only the truthfulness or otherwise of evidence, but also the credibility of the witness, required that it pose itself the following questions to establish the motivation, cause or reason for those inconsistencies.

3.11 These were:

- i. Was there a deliberate intention to lie and/or mislead?
- ii. Was there a lack of care, or a cavalier approach, in relation to the accuracy of the information or evidence?
- iii. Was there a desire to inflict reputational damage, or otherwise undermine the evidence of another witness?

- iv. Was there a desire to mislead, obstruct and frustrate the Tribunal in its investigative work?
- v. Was there an inability to accurately communicate historical facts on the part of the witness?
- vi. Was there a tendency to display an inability to distinguish or identify the sources of different pieces of information because of the passage of time and/or the nature and similarity of certain information?
- vii. Was there a tendency to exaggerate or embellish information which nevertheless had a truthful or accurate basis?
- viii. Did the witness portray a poor recollection for detail?
- ix. Where inconsistencies were found to exist, were they of a significant or minor nature? If the former, did they undermine the evidence to which they related, and if so, to what extent?
- x. Were the inconsistencies found of a nature and/or so frequent in number as to require that the witnesses' evidence, either in relation to specific issues, or generally, should be repudiated in its entirety?

3.12 It does not necessarily follow that there is a wilful or intentional or deliberate decision to state untruths or mislead the Tribunal on the part of a witness, where such information or evidence is subsequently established as being untrue or inaccurate. Sworn evidence or information provided in prior statements, may be inaccurate, but nevertheless given or provided in the honest belief by a witness of its truthfulness and/or accuracy. On the other hand such information may be provided in the full knowledge that it is untrue and/or inaccurate, and with the intention to mislead.

THE DIFFERENT CATEGORIES OF MR GILMARTIN'S PRIOR STATEMENTS

4.01 The evidential and probative value of the prior statement of any witness provided to any agency conducting an inquiry (including the Courts and Tribunals) will vary depending on the nature/category of that prior statement, and the circumstances in which it was made and/or recorded. In most instances, the prior statement will consist of a verbatim record of what was stated by the statement maker, on occasion prepared by the statement maker with assistance and advice from his or her solicitor, and on occasion electronically or stenographically recorded, and almost always, considered and (if in written format) signed by the statement maker upon its completion. This category of ‘considered’ prior statement unquestionably carries a very strong, if not almost certain presumption that it accurately represents the words and thoughts of the statement maker. Where the prior statement is in a question and answer format (such as for example the private interviews conducted with a number of Tribunal witnesses by Counsel for the Tribunal prior to those witnesses giving sworn evidence or as in Mr Gilmartin’s case, a taped conversation between his then solicitor and himself), the context in which information is provided by the interviewee is usually clear, although with the caveat that in some instances (as occurred with the Tribunal private interviews and Mr Gilmartin’s taped discussion with his solicitor), the completed record of the discussion is not formally ‘signed off’ or approved by the interviewee.

4.02 Somewhat uniquely, in Mr Gilmartin’s case, a substantial body of information was provided to the Tribunal in the course of unrecorded telephone conversations and face to face meetings between Mr Gilmartin and Senior Counsel representing the Tribunal, and in respect of which Tribunal Counsel prepared a series of notes either in the course of the relevant discussions or shortly thereafter. While undoubtedly the experienced Counsel who prepared these notes did so with care to ensure that the information provided by Mr Gilmartin was accurately noted, it was quite apparent that they did not necessarily note every word uttered by Mr Gilmartin, or always indicate the precise context in which particular discussions took place. Mr Gilmartin was not provided with the opportunity to read, or to otherwise consider the accuracy and content of these notes, a fact which, while it cannot take from their status as a prior statement, leaves them open to challenge by Mr Gilmartin himself as to their detail, and explanation as to their context.

4.03 In relation to Mr Gilmartin’s prior statements, the Tribunal considered them with particular regard to the following:

- i. The category of prior statement in question.
- ii. The extent to which the subject matter was detailed or canvassed or discussed in the prior statement in question (or as the case may be, omitted from the prior statement in question).
- iii. The extent to which detailed and forensic examination of any issue in the course of evidence given at public hearings did, as occurred in a number of instances, provide far greater and more detailed information that was found or might have been expected to have been found in prior statements.

- iv. The extent to which a detailed and forensic examination of an issue in the course of evidence given at public hearings provided a witness with the opportunity to expand, elaborate, exaggerate or embellish information provided in prior statements. The expansion and/or elaboration of such information while giving sworn evidence is legitimate and appropriate and on occasions a necessary and helpful event in the assimilation of evidence. On the other hand, the exaggeration and/or embellishment of such information while giving sworn evidence is distinctly unhelpful and can amount to untruthful and misleading evidence.

4.04 The totality of the information, other than his sworn evidence, provided by Mr Gilmartin to the Tribunal (hereinafter referred to as his prior statements) consisted of the following:

- [A] Narrative statements from Mr Gilmartin and correspondence from his solicitors providing information based on Mr Gilmartin's instructions to them, including:
- A narrative statement dated 17 May 2001 consisting of 86 paragraphs and signed by Mr Gilmartin on 25 May 2001.
 - A letter dated 2 March 2004 from A&L Goodbody Solicitors on behalf of Mr Gilmartin, with linked correspondence.
 - A narrative statement dated 10 March 2004 consisting of two pages, and signed by Mr Gilmartin.
 - A narrative statement dated 26 May 2004 consisting of two pages, and signed by Mr Gilmartin.
 - A narrative statement dated 28 October 2005 consisting of one page, and signed by Mr Gilmartin with linked correspondence.
 - Correspondence from solicitors representing Mr Gilmartin, addressed to the Tribunal, with linked correspondence from the Tribunal, in which information, based on instructions from Mr Gilmartin, was provided to the Tribunal.
- [B] Notes of face to face meetings and telephone conversations between Mr Gilmartin and members of the Tribunal's legal team between 5 February 1998 and 3 October 2002. These notes were prepared by members of the Tribunal's legal team.
- [C] The transcript of a taped recording of Mr Gilmartin in discussion with his then solicitor, Mr Noel Smyth on 20 May 1998 at a London address. This discussion was tape-recorded by Mr Smyth with Mr Gilmartin's knowledge.

[D] An Affidavit sworn by Mr Gilmartin on 2 October 1998 at the request of the Tribunal, together with a 'final draft' of that Affidavit with handwritten amendments, also dated 2 October 1998, and Affidavits of Discovery sworn by Mr Gilmartin.

[E] A short letter dated 15 February 1999 written by Mr Gilmartin personally to the Tribunal.

4.05 The foregoing five categories of prior statements provided the Tribunal and interested parties with a considerable body of information, and more importantly from an evidential perspective, a valuable insight into the nature and quality of the information provided by Mr Gilmartin to the Tribunal prior (for the most part) to his sworn evidence to the Tribunal. It is appropriate and necessary that the Tribunal should, in the clearest possible terms, indicate, in general, its attitude and approach to these different categories of prior statements. It endeavours to do so in the following pages.

[A] NARRATIVE STATEMENTS SIGNED BY MR GILMARTIN AND INFORMATION PROVIDED TO THE TRIBUNAL IN CORRESPONDENCE FROM MR GILMARTIN'S SOLICITORS.

4.06 Unless otherwise indicated and established in the course of sworn evidence, the Tribunal assumed that the information provided by Mr Gilmartin either himself directly, in the form of a narrative statement, or indirectly through his solicitors, was information carefully considered by Mr Gilmartin and agreed by him as accurate prior to it being provided to the Tribunal. The information in this category of prior statement was drafted professionally and with access to legal advice.

[B] NOTES OF FACE TO FACE MEETINGS AND TELEPHONE CONVERSATIONS BETWEEN MR GILMARTIN AND MEMBERS OF THE TRIBUNAL'S LEGAL TEAM
BETWEEN 5 FEBRUARY 1998 AND 3 OCTOBER 2002

BACKGROUND TO THE TELEPHONE DISCUSSIONS AND FACE TO FACE MEETINGS

4.07 Between 5 February 1998 and 3 October 2002, Mr Gilmartin (then a resident in Luton, UK) and Counsel for the Tribunal communicated by telephone on 34 separate occasions. These telephone calls were not stenographically or electronically recorded. Counsel for the Tribunal (usually Mr Patrick Hanratty SC) noted a series of occasionally disjointed pieces of information conveyed to the Tribunal by Mr Gilmartin in the course of these telephone discussions, either during the telephone discussions or shortly after their conclusion. The final two telephone discussions with Mr Gilmartin were conducted with Mr Hanratty, after Mr Hanratty ceased to be a member of the Tribunal's legal team and had returned to private practice. In these instances Mr Hanratty passed on to the Tribunal notes made by him relating to those telephone conversations.

4.08 These telephone calls and Counsel's notes relating to them took place in the course of the Tribunal's private inquiries relating to, in particular, the rezoning of Quarryvale. Their purpose was to elicit information from Mr Gilmartin in order to assist the Tribunal in those inquiries. These notes were, prior to March 2005 considered by the Tribunal to be confidential, and were not released to any third party. These notes were not provided to Mr Gilmartin at the time they were prepared, or indeed at any time prior to 2005. Accordingly Mr Gilmartin was not afforded the opportunity to consider the content of the notes, or the opportunity to confirm that they accurately represented the information provided by him to the Tribunal. In 2005, Mr O'Callaghan successfully judicially reviewed the Tribunal's policy decision not to release all Mr Gilmartin's prior statements. The High Court (and on appeal, the Supreme Court) held that Mr O'Callaghan was entitled to all Mr Gilmartin's prior statements, including the notes relating to his telephone conversations with Counsel for the Tribunal, for the purposes of testing the credibility of Mr Gilmartin.

THE EVIDENTIAL OR PROBATIVE VALUE OF COUNSEL'S NOTES OF THE TELEPHONE AND FACE TO FACE DISCUSSIONS

4.09 Although Counsel's notes of information provided by Mr Gilmartin over a five year period provided, as was their purpose, information to the Tribunal which was both potentially relevant and material to its private inquiries then underway, they did not always constitute a verbatim account of the information provided by Mr Gilmartin, or indeed indicate the precise context in which specific information was provided. It was apparent for example, from a perusal of the notes, that frequently, questions put to Mr Gilmartin which resulted in him providing certain information, were not recorded, or made the subject of any note.

4.10 The Tribunal was satisfied however that the Counsel who conducted these telephone conversations with Mr Gilmartin were experienced Counsel and doubtlessly competent note-takers, and would not have approached their task of noting information given to them by Mr Gilmartin in the course of the Tribunal's private inquiries in the absence of due care and diligence.

4.11 The Tribunal accordingly undertook both its private and public inquiries on the assumption and basis that, unless established as a matter of probability to be otherwise, by reference to other documentation or sworn evidence, the information noted by Tribunal Counsel as having been provided by Mr Gilmartin in this series of telephone calls reasonably and accurately represented information provided by Mr Gilmartin at the time.

4.12 While the preceding paragraphs refer specifically to the telephone discussions between Mr Gilmartin and Counsel for the Tribunal, the observations expressed by the Tribunal apply equally to the four face to face meetings which occurred between Mr Gilmartin and Counsel for the Tribunal, and which were the subject of note-taking by Counsel for the Tribunal. As was the case with the telephone discussions, the face to face meetings were conducted in the absence of stenographic or other recording.

4.13 In order to ensure that the notes of the said telephone and face to face discussions between Mr Gilmartin and Counsel for the Tribunal were considered in their proper context, the Tribunal was cognisant of the following:

- The notes made by Counsel did not constitute verbatim accounts of everything stated by Mr Gilmartin.
- The notes did not, on their face, constitute considered narrative statements, such as Mr Gilmartin's statements of 17 May 2001 and 10 March 2005.⁶
- Mr Gilmartin was not provided with an opportunity to confirm or reject the accuracy of the notes taken by Tribunal Counsel, at or shortly after their preparation.
- The context in which some of the noted information was provided by Mr Gilmartin was not always clear from the notes themselves.
- The notes did not always fully reflect or record the entire of the discussions between Mr Gilmartin and Counsel for the Tribunal, as was evident from the following:

⁶ The variation in the quality and evidential value of different categories of prior statements appeared to have been acknowledged by cross-examining Counsel when on Day 780, he asked the following question of Mr Gilmartin (referring to Mr Gilmartin's written narrative statement of 10 March 2004):

'It wasn't a statement that you made just off the top of your head, it was one I suggest that was made after detailed and measured consideration by you, isn't that right?'

- i. A telephone discussion on 16 June 1998 was stated by Mr Hanratty SC (Counsel for the Tribunal) to have lasted just ten minutes short of two hours. Yet, Mr Hanratty's notes cover less than four pages, or if measured in time, approximately ten to fifteen minutes of conversation.
- ii. A meeting between Mr Hanratty and his colleague Mr John Gallagher SC with Mr Gilmartin in the Strathmore Hotel, Luton, on 2 October 1998 commenced at 11.15pm and was intended to last for one hour. Yet, the notes of that meeting comprise less than two pages, or if measured in time, approximately five minutes of conversation.
- iii. A telephone discussion on 30 October 1998 was stated to Mr Hanratty SC to have continued for 'approximately two hours.' Yet, only five pages of notes were prepared, or if measured in time probably in the region of twenty to thirty minutes of conversation.
- iv. A telephone discussion on 4 June 1999 between Mr Hanratty SC and Mr Gilmartin was described by Mr Hanratty as 'two long telephone conversations today...' Yet, the notes relating to the two telephone conversations consist of, in total, two pages.
- v. A meeting held on 8 July 1999 between Mr Hanratty and Mr Gilmartin and two solicitors from Mr Gilmartin's then firm of solicitors, Eugene F. Collins, at a hotel in Luton, UK, was stated to have lasted for four and a half hours. Yet, Mr Hanratty's notes relating to this lengthy meeting comprise just twelve pages.

[C] THE TRANSCRIPT OF A TAPED RECORDING OF MR GILMARTIN BY HIS (THEN) SOLICITOR MR NOEL SMYTH ON 20 MAY 1998 AT AN ADDRESS IN LONDON

4.14 Between 5 February and 20 May 1998, Mr Gilmartin had been in contact with members of the Tribunal's legal team on five separate occasions, consisting of one face to face meeting and four telephone discussions.

4.15 On 20 May 1998, Mr Gilmartin and his (then) solicitor Mr Noel Smyth met by arrangement at an address in London for the purposes of Mr Smyth receiving instructions from Mr Gilmartin in relation to matters then associated with the Tribunal's inquiries, which were at the time at an early stage.

4.16 In the course of this meeting with Mr Smyth on 20 May 1998, which lasted four or five hours, their discussions were taped using Mr Smyth's dictaphone. A subsequent stenographical transcript of the tapes of these discussions exceeded 100 pages. The taped discussions recorded lengthy statements of information from Mr Gilmartin, intermittently preceded or prompted by questions from Mr Smyth. The taped discussion was in fact conducted in the style of an interview with Mr Gilmartin by Mr Smyth.

4.17 In his evidence to the Tribunal, the following matters were highlighted by Mr Gilmartin in relation to the taped discussion, and the circumstances in which it was conducted:

- The decision to tape the interview was that of Mr Smyth, and not that of Mr Gilmartin. Mr Gilmartin was aware that his discussions with Mr Smyth were being taped and he raised no objection to it.
- The tapes (or their transcript) were never intended to constitute a statement to the Tribunal.
- Subsequent to the taped interview (and prior to its delivery to the Tribunal) Mr Gilmartin did not confirm, check or 'proof read' its content.

Mr Gilmartin stated the following, referring to his taped discussion with Mr Smyth: 'I was talking into a microphone so I – for a very short space of time, so I just went through in general what I knew about what was going on.'

4.18 He also stated:

'... it was not my statement for the Tribunal. It was never intended to be my statement. It had never been proof read, checked, anything, it was just a conversation, talking into - and there was just, general broad brush questions from Mr Smyth, which I gave an answer to in my own way, so it was never intended to be a statement to the Tribunal.'

4.19 Mr Gilmartin also said:

'Noel Smyth asked me to just, to run through, to run through, it was not a statement, it was not intended to be a statement, and I was sitting at a table in London with no back-up evidence, no back-up papers whatsoever, and just talking about events that took place over a period of the best part of ten years, and so I just gave a brief flavour of what went on.'

4.20 Mr Smyth told the Tribunal that the content of his taped discussion with Mr Gilmartin was 'more conversational as opposed to instructive' and: 'It was more as a briefing note... I never anticipated that it was going to be a piece of evidence to the Tribunal.'

4.21 Mr Smyth also stated: '...I didn't view the material as being material as I said I thought it was like a briefing note to me as a solicitor as opposed to being, if I call it affidavit quality instructions.'

4.22 Mr Smyth also stated:

'...Tom Gilmartin at the point in time is now living in Luton, he solved his issues as far as Barkhill and the bank were concerned. He has been asked by a Tribunal to facilitate and help them. He is not quite sure which way he is going to go. He has met Members of the Tribunal, he is impressed by the fact that they have come to see him and he is impressed by the fact that they are looking for his help. But he is not convinced at this point in time how far that is going (to) go. So you know, at this point, what I said to you earlier, this document was never intended to see the light of day. So, therefore, Tom Gilmartin would have seen the informality in which we were dealing with it, it was a tape, it wasn't bringing him before a Commissioner for Oaths, it wasn't being sworn. I am not saying that the document itself is wrong, but I am saying that it wasn't, I wasn't being precise, if you look at the way I asked some of the questions, the way he interrupted and he's gone off on a, I won't say ramble, but gone off into various tangents which if you were trying to deal with issues in the normal course of event you'd stop. You'd exhaust the point, and then make a note and say, is that correct.'

4.23 Mr Smyth told the Tribunal that on the occasion of his taped discussion with Mr Gilmartin, he told Mr Gilmartin that he would provide him with a transcript of the tape to enable him use it as a basis for making a statement to the Tribunal. In fact, Mr Smyth provided Mr Gilmartin with a transcript of the tape approximately one month after providing the Tribunal with a copy.

4.24 In subsequent discussions between Mr Gilmartin and Counsel for the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin informed the Tribunal of the existence of his taped discussion with Mr Smyth, and he, Mr Gilmartin, apparently instructed Mr Smyth to furnish it to the Tribunal.⁷

4.25 In terms of its evidential value, the taped discussion between Mr Smyth and Mr Gilmartin at least enabled the Tribunal to fully appreciate exactly what was said by Mr Gilmartin to Mr Smyth on 20 May 1998 and, equally, if not more importantly, the precise questions put by Mr Smyth to Mr Gilmartin, which elicited the information then provided by Mr Gilmartin. To this important extent the evidential value of the taped discussion was greater than that of the notes of Mr Gilmartin's telephone conversation with Counsel for the Tribunal.

[D] THE DRAFT AFFIDAVIT AND AFFIDAVIT PREPARED AND SWORN RESPECTIVELY ON 2 OCTOBER 1998

4.26 The draft affidavit was prepared in advance of the meeting between Mr Gilmartin and Counsel for the Tribunal in London on 2 October 1998. The finalised affidavit was duly sworn by Mr Gilmartin on that day. The sworn affidavit was provided to the Tribunal at its request, and at a time when the Tribunal was concerned that Mr Gilmartin might not be available to give sworn evidence to the Tribunal at its public hearings, as he was residing outside the Irish jurisdiction and could not be compelled to attend.

4.27 The sworn affidavit represented, in the Tribunal's view, a considered narrative statement made by Mr Gilmartin to the Tribunal.

[E] A SHORT LETTER DATED 15 FEBRUARY 1999 WRITTEN BY MR GILMARTIN PERSONALLY

4.28 This short letter sent to the Tribunal by Mr Gilmartin constituted a considered written statement by Mr Gilmartin.

THE TRIBUNAL'S GENERAL CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO MR GILMARTIN'S CREDIBILITY VIS-A-VIS INCONSISTENCIES APPARENT IN HIS PRIOR STATEMENTS AND/OR SWORN EVIDENCE TO THE TRIBUNAL

- i. The Tribunal did not accept as accurate all of the information and evidence given to it by Mr Gilmartin. Some of it was mistaken and erroneous. In those instances where Mr Gilmartin's information/evidence was found to have been mistaken, inaccurate, erroneous, unreliable and/or significantly inconsistent or otherwise deficient, and where the Tribunal conducted a sufficiently comprehensive inquiry such as enabled it to make determinations in relation to that information or evidence, it did so.

- ii. As has been stated elsewhere in this Report, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin was an honest witness, and that he gave information and evidence to the Tribunal in the honest belief that it was true and accurate, even though it was not always so.
- iii. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin both in his prior statements to the Tribunal and in his sworn evidence, did not deliberately lie and/or mislead the Tribunal or seek to obstruct and frustrate its work.
- iv. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin in his prior statements to the Tribunal and in his sworn evidence to the Tribunal did not deliberately or maliciously seek to inflict reputational damage on, or undermine the evidence of, other witnesses, or in any way deliberately exaggerate or embellish information or evidence.
- v. Because of Mr Gilmartin's admitted and often exhibited poor recollection for detail, and a tendency, on occasion, to conflate or confuse information which had been provided to him by others (including Mr O'Callaghan), the Tribunal took particular care when making findings based partly or entirely on Mr Gilmartin's evidence relating to such information, so as to satisfy itself to the greatest possible extent as to what information (if any) had been in fact provided to Mr Gilmartin.

4.29 Because of the unusual nature of many of Mr Gilmartin's prior statements (in that they consisted of notes prepared by Counsel for the Tribunal following telephone discussions or face to face meetings with Mr Gilmartin), and having regard to the extent to which Mr Gilmartin's credibility was challenged in relation to those prior statements, the Tribunal has included Mr Gilmartin's prior statements to the Tribunal in this section of the Report (Appendix 2 – Book 4). These have been subjected to some limited redaction for the purpose of excluding references to information which was not canvassed in the course of the Tribunal's public hearings, or references of a particularly personal nature.

4.30 Appendix 1 also includes a memorandum of information which was said to have been provided to Mr Sean Haughey and Mr Frank Feely by Mr Gilmartin on 23 February 1989, and which is the subject of review elsewhere in this Chapter.

MR OWEN O'CALLAGHAN'S PRIOR STATEMENTS TO THE TRIBUNAL⁸

THE TRIBUNAL'S EARLY CONTACT WITH MR O'CALLAGHAN

5.01 The Tribunal initially sought information from Mr O'Callaghan in relation to its then private inquiry into Quarryvale in letters to Mr O'Callaghan's companies, Barkhill and Riga Ltd on 15 October 1998. Shortly thereafter, Messrs Ronan Daly Jermyn Solicitors came on record on behalf of Mr O'Callaghan (and his companies). On 20 November 1998, Mr O'Callaghan's solicitors wrote to AIB, Deloitte & Touche, and to Mr Dunlop's solicitors directing them not to release any documents relating to their client's affairs to the Tribunal in response to the Tribunal's request to those entities for same. Mr O'Callaghan effectively withdrew that direction in 1999.

5.02 In December 1998, and again in January 1999, following the Tribunal's indication to Mr O'Callaghan solicitors of its intention to make certain Discovery Orders against Mr O'Callaghan and his companies, submissions were made to the Tribunal by Mr O'Callaghan's legal representatives in relation to this issue.

5.03 Eleven Discovery Orders were subsequently made against Mr O'Callaghan and his companies in the period 2000 – 2007.

5.04 The orders of 12 February 1999 directed Barkhill Ltd, Riga Ltd and Mr O'Callaghan to discover on oath records relating to their dealings with Shefran Ltd, Mr Frank Dunlop, Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, Barkhill Ltd, Riga Ltd and Mr O'Callaghan, as well as their financial records and records of any payments made to any elected representative or local authority official for the period 1 September 1991 to 1 September 1993. Discovery Orders of 17 May 2000 extended the period from 1 January 1994 to the date of the Orders.

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S WRITTEN NARRATIVE STATEMENTS TO THE TRIBUNAL

5.05 Mr O'Callaghan made a number of written statements to the Tribunal, both in the course of its private inquiry in relation to Quarryvale, and thereafter. Mr O'Callaghan gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal on 38 days between 2004 and 2008.

5.06 The Tribunal initially sought a written statement from Mr O’Callaghan on 17 December 1999, in relation to any payments made by him (or by companies associated with him) to elected councillors or other public representatives. On 6 January 2000, Mr O’Callaghan agreed to make the requested statement. On 16 March 2000, the Tribunal reminded Mr O’Callaghan to provide the promised statement. On 30 March 2000, Mr O’Callaghan’s solicitors assured the Tribunal that the promised statement would be made available to it within the following week. Ultimately, Mr O’Callaghan provided his first written statement to the Tribunal on 12 April 2000 (the day following Mr Dunlop’s first public appearance at the Tribunal), some four months after it having been requested by the Tribunal. Subsequently, Mr O’Callaghan furnished the Tribunal with a number of further written statements.

5.07 Written statements were provided by Mr O’Callaghan (in addition to information provided through his solicitors in correspondence with the Tribunal) on the following dates:

- 12 April 2000
- 3 May 2000
- 16 May 2003
- 24 November 2003
- 1 March 2004
- 4 November 2005
- 25 April 2007
- 11 July 2007
- 9 November 2007
- 9 November 2007
- 3 December 2007
- 22 February 2008

5.08 Mr O’Callaghan’s business partner, Mr John Deane, made a written statement to the Tribunal on 3 May 2000.

5.09 It was evident from subsequent information provided by Mr O’Callaghan and from evidence given to the Tribunal, that Mr O’Callaghan, in his April and May 2000 statements understated the payments to both Mr Lawlor and Cllr Colm McGrath. In relation to Mr Lawlor, Mr O’Callaghan incorrectly indicated that the only payment to him within the approximately three year period up to 31 December 1993 was IR£5,000 (in November 1991), whereas in fact it was subsequently established to have been IR£10,000 in September 1991. In the case of Cllr McGrath, Mr O’Callaghan understated the payments to him by IR£10,700. In his two statements in 2000, he disclosed that Cllr McGrath had received two payments of IR£10,000 and IR£20,000, but he failed to refer to a payment of IR£10,700 paid on 21 May 1992 on behalf of Cllr McGrath, following a request for assistance from Cllr McGrath. Mr O’Callaghan first disclosed this payment to the Tribunal in a written statement on 16 May 2003.

MR O’CALLAGHAN’S PRIVATE INTERVIEW WITH THE TRIBUNAL

5.10 Mr O’Callaghan was privately interviewed by Counsel for the Tribunal on one occasion, on 11 October 2000. That private interview dealt solely with the Denis ‘Starry’ O’Brien issue.⁹

5.11 In October 1998, Mr O’Callaghan, through his Counsel, Michael McDowell SC, offered to make himself available to the Tribunal for private interview. This offer was not at that time taken up. In the Judicial Review proceedings taken by Mr O’Callaghan against the Tribunal in November 2005, Mr O’Callaghan and his co-plaintiffs (unsuccessfully) claimed that the refusal on the part of the Tribunal to take up their offer of a meeting in private at that time was evidence of bias on the part of the Tribunal in its dealings with them in relation to its inquiries. This allegation was rejected by the Tribunal in its Affidavit sworn in the course of these proceedings, wherein it gave its reason for not seeking to privately interview Mr O’Callaghan at that time:

‘Statements and documents provided to the Tribunal by the Applicant were comprehensive on the issues which the Tribunal had determined merited public hearing and the Tribunal did not pursue the intended course for arranging for an interview with the Applicant thereafter.’

5.12 Subsequently, on 1 September 1999 the Tribunal wrote to Mr O’Callaghan’s solicitors indicating that it now wished to take up the opportunity to privately interview Mr O’Callaghan. The Tribunal was advised on 15 September 1999 by Mr O’Callaghan’s solicitors, that Mr O’Callaghan was agreeable to the proposed private interview, but was anxious first, to find a replacement for his Senior Counsel who had been appointed Attorney General. In any event, the above mentioned private interview never took place. Mr O’Callaghan commenced his oral evidence to the Tribunal on 7 July 2004.

5.13 Mr O’Callaghan gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal on 38 days between 2004 and 2008. On 16 June 2008, the Tribunal acceded to Mr O’Callaghan’s request, based on medical advice, to restrict his sworn evidence to half days.

⁹ In 2000, it was reported in a Sunday newspaper that a Cork businessman, Mr Denis ‘Starry’ O’Brien had paid IR£50,000 cash to Mr Bertie Ahern in the late 1980s, on behalf of Mr O’Callaghan. Mr Ahern instituted libel proceedings in the Circuit Court, and was awarded damages and his costs.

MR TOM GILMARTIN'S ALLEGATIONS OF REQUESTS TO HIM FOR SUBSTANTIAL PAYMENTS AND THAT HE RECEIVED INFORMATION FROM MR OWEN O'CALLAGHAN AND OTHER SOURCES OF SUBSTANTIAL PAYMENTS TO SENIOR POLITICIANS

6.01 Both in his sworn evidence, and in other information provided to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin referred to information which he alleged had been provided to him by third parties, to the effect that substantial payments were made by Mr O'Callaghan to politicians, including Mr Bertie Ahern, Mr Ray MacSharry and Mr Albert Reynolds. These payments, if in fact they had been made, and were made for the reasons which Mr Gilmartin alleged were indicated to him by his sources, would have almost certainly constituted corrupt payments. Mr Gilmartin however emphasised to the Tribunal that this information was provided to him by others, and that he himself was not claiming that any such payments had in fact been made, nor was he in a position to provide any proof of such payments.

6.02 Mr Gilmartin did however make specific allegations of requests made to him for payments of a corrupt nature by politicians. One of the allegations concerned a request for IR£100,000 by Mr Lawlor (in addition to a similar amount for Mr George Redmond) while attending a meeting in Mr Redmond's office in 1988. Another allegation concerned a request for IR£100,000 by Cllr Finbarr Hanrahan in the course of a meeting in Buswells Hotel, Dublin in early 1989.

6.03 Mr Gilmartin also alleged that a demand for IR£5m was made of him immediately following a meeting with Government Ministers and the then Taoiseach, Mr Charles J. Haughey at Leinster House. Mr Gilmartin was unable to identify the individual in question.

6.04 No money was paid by Mr Gilmartin on foot of any of these requests for money.

6.05 Mr Gilmartin also maintained that, separately, Mr Pdraig Flynn and Mr Bertie Ahern, both then Government Ministers, solicited donations from him for the Fianna Fail Party, and that in response to Mr Flynn's request he paid a sum of IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn for the Fianna Fail Party (but which Mr Flynn claimed was a donation intended for him personally). In addition, Mr Gilmartin maintained that Mr Sean Sherwin, a senior Fianna Fail official also solicited a donation to the Party from him.

6.06 All of the above matters are considered in greater detail elsewhere in this chapter.

6.07 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that the sources of the information provided to him in relation to substantial payments made by Mr O’Callaghan to senior politicians, included not only Mr O’Callaghan himself, but other, anonymous sources. As the Tribunal’s inquiries concerning Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan related only to matters relevant to Quarryvale, the Tribunal restricted its focus, wherever possible, to matters associated with the project to rezone and develop the Quarryvale lands, and, more particularly, information or evidence which indicated or identified the possibility that payments of money might have been made to politicians or public officials in the course of, or arising from, that project. It was neither practicable nor appropriate that all allegations relating to possible payments of money to senior political figures, but which related to matters unconnected to Quarryvale, should be the subject of inquiry, and especially of detailed inquiry by the Tribunal.

6.08 Nevertheless, a number of allegations made by Mr Gilmartin which, on their face, indicated or suggested improper or corrupt payments of money by Mr O’Callaghan to senior political figures featured in the course of the Tribunal’s public hearings. While some of these were referred to in passing or briefly, others were the subject of closer examination by Counsel to the Tribunal and/or cross-examination by Counsel representing Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Ahern and others.

6.09 Because these allegations were not all the subject of detailed inquiry by the Tribunal, the Tribunal has not made determinations in relation to all of them. It is important to emphasise that the mere fact of the recounting of allegations and the limited extent to which some were the subject of examination and cross-examination in the course of the Tribunal’s public hearings cannot and does not in any way whatsoever establish wrongdoing on the part of the individuals referred to therein.

6.10 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that certain information was provided to him relating to payments to senior politicians. He attributed the source of this information to three people in particular. They were Mr O’Callaghan, an unidentified individual who provided information to him over the telephone and who had been referred to him by a personal friend living in Co Cork, Mr Peter Kearns (now deceased), and another also unidentified individual who Mr Gilmartin said contacted him by telephone on two occasions, one or two weeks apart, in 2002 in or about the time of the publication of the Tribunal’s Second Interim Report (September 2002). This latter individual was believed by Mr Gilmartin to have been a UK based banker, because of the fact that, following one of the telephone calls to him from this individual, Mr Gilmartin telephoned the caller’s telephone number (which appeared on the screen of his own telephone), whereupon the call was answered by a person who was identified as an employee of a bank in Jersey.

6.11 In the course of his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin was the subject of very detailed examination and cross-examination in relation to certain information provided by him to the Tribunal prior to his sworn evidence to the Tribunal. This was understandable as the thrust of Mr Gilmartin's allegations in relation to these matters was potentially very damaging to the reputations of Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Ahern, and others.

6.12 Listed in the Tables below is a summary¹⁰ of the majority of the items of information passed to the Tribunal by Mr Gilmartin concerning alleged payments to politicians and which, he alleged had been told to him by third parties (including Mr O'Callaghan), rather than information in respect of which he had personal or direct knowledge. Some of the matters referred to are dealt with comprehensively elsewhere in the Report.

TABLE A

HIM BY MR O'CALLAGHAN

1. Mr Gilmartin claimed that he was informed Mr O'Callaghan and others met with Mr Bertie Ahern, then Minister for Finance, prior to the fall of the FF Government on 14 December 1994, in a Dublin hotel for the purposes of, essentially, arranging the granting of tax designation status to the Golden Island Development in Athlone (with which Mr O'Callaghan was associated) and other locations.
2. Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that Mr O'Callaghan told him that at a dinner in his house in Cork in March 1994, he paid IR£150,000 ('over IR£100,000, IR£150,000 or something') to Mr Reynolds at 3am in a bedroom prior to Mr Reynolds flying from Cork by helicopter, before travelling to the US for St Patrick's Day.
3. Mr Gilmartin alleged that Mr O'Callaghan told him that Cllrs Sean Gilbride, Colm McGrath and Mr Liam Lawlor were on his 'payroll.' Mr Gilmartin said that in the course of a taxi journey to Dublin Airport with Mr O'Callaghan, Mr O'Callaghan showed him a cheque which he was going to give to Cllr Colm McGrath. Mr Gilmartin said that Mr O'Callaghan told him that at a meeting in Mr Dunlop's offices, Mr Lawlor had demanded a payment of IR£100,000, and that he had paid Mr Lawlor a total of IR£50,000.ⁱ
4. Mr Gilmartin alleged that in excess of IR£100,000 was paid by Mr O'Callaghan to Mr Ahern. In evidence Mr Gilmartin broke down this figure as including IR£30,000 paid to Mr Ahern in relation to the Blanchardstown tax designation issue, IR£50,000 paid to Mr Ahern in 1989 or 1990 at a football match in relation to the purchase of the Irishtown lands, and a sum paid in relation to Golden Island.
5. Mr Gilmartin claimed that Mr O'Callaghan boasted about making substantial payments to Mr Ahern and Mr Reynolds in relation to Golden Island.

6.	Mr Gilmartin alleged that Mr O'Callaghan advised him that Cllr Sean Gilbride was on his 'payroll' and was paid a retainer of 'some thousands a month.'
7.	Mr Gilmartin alleged that Mr O'Callaghan showed him a cheque for a substantial amount which he, Mr O'Callaghan, intended to give to Cllr Colm McGrath.
8.	Mr Gilmartin stated that Mr O'Callaghan had told him that he paid a five figure ¹¹ sum to the Cork Fianna Fail TD Mr Micheál Martin.
9.	Mr Gilmartin claimed that Mr O'Callaghan told him, when they first met in December 1988, that he had paid IR£50,000 to Mr Ray McSharry, and that Mr McSharry had travelled to Cork to collect the money.
10.	Mr Gilmartin alleged that Mr O'Callaghan had told him that Mr Ahern had to receive 'his cut' from the IR£150,000 paid to Mr Reynolds.
11.	Mr Gilmartin said that Mr O'Callaghan told him that Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern were on his 'payroll.'
12.	Mr Gilmartin alleged that Mr O'Callaghan told him that he, Mr O'Callaghan, had paid politicians.
13.	Mr Gilmartin alleged that Mr O'Callaghan told him that he spent around IR£150,000 on politicians, in 1989.

TABLE BTHE INFORMATION MR GILMARTIN CLAIMED WAS GIVEN TO HIM
BY AN ANONYMOUS SOURCE

1. Mr Gilmartin alleged that he was told by an anonymous source that Mr O’Callaghan paid IR£40,000 to Mr Albert Reynolds in connection with Golden Island, Athlone.
2. Mr Gilmartin claimed that an anonymous source advised him that Mr O’Callaghan had paid money to Mr Bertie Ahern in connection with Golden Island.
3. Mr Gilmartin claimed that an anonymous source had told him that the then Taoiseach Mr Reynolds had to intervene to persuade or ensure that Mr Ahern took the necessary steps to grant tax designation status to Golden Island a night or two prior to the fall of the Fianna Fail Government in December 1994.
4. Mr Gilmartin said he was told by an anonymous source that Shefran Ltd (Mr Dunlop’s company) was being used for money laundering purposes.
5. (i) Mr Gilmartin alleged that an anonymous source warned him to ‘stay clear of Starry O’Brien’ because an attempt was being made to have Mr Gilmartin backup Mr O’Brien’s ‘cock and bull story.’ (ii) Mr Gilmartin also claimed that an anonymous source told him that Mr ‘Starry’ O’Brien and Mr O’Callaghan had been business partners or associates. (iii) Mr Gilmartin also claimed that his anonymous source alleged that Mr O’Callaghan had paid Mr O’Brien’s debts.
6. Mr Gilmartin alleged that his anonymous source told him that Mr O’Callaghan paid circa IR£150,000 to senior politicians in 1989, and circa IR£250,000 to senior politicians in relation to Quarryvale. In his evidence, Mr Gilmartin also alleged that this information came from Mr O’Callaghan.

THE TRIBUNAL’S GENERAL CONCLUSIONS CONCERNING MR GILMARTIN’S ALLEGATIONS THAT HE HAD BEEN PROVIDED WITH INFORMATION BY OTHERS

7.01 While the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin endeavoured to provide information and evidence to the Tribunal accurately, he was not always successful in these endeavours. The Tribunal was however satisfied that on all the occasions when he advised the Tribunal of information which he alleged had been provided to him by Mr O’Callaghan or by other sources, Mr Gilmartin honestly believed that his attribution of the source thereof was accurate and correct. Nevertheless it was apparent to the Tribunal both from his prior statements to the Tribunal, and in his subsequent sworn evidence to it, that Mr Gilmartin occasionally conflated different pieces of information provided to him by different sources (including Mr O’Callaghan). This had the unfortunate consequence that Mr Gilmartin’s identification of sources to the Tribunal was not always accurate, nor always consistent. Consequently, it was at times impossible for the Tribunal to determine not only the precise information provided to Mr Gilmartin by his different sources, but also the identity of the source responsible for a particular piece of information. Furthermore, the Tribunal was satisfied that while Mr Gilmartin received information from Mr O’Callaghan directly, and from the two anonymous sources indicated by him to the Tribunal, he also received information from journalists and others.

7.02 As already stated, the Tribunal did not seek to establish the truth or accuracy or otherwise of every piece of information which Mr Gilmartin claimed he learned from Mr O’Callaghan or from other sources. To have done so, would have resulted in enormously prolonged inquiries which undoubtedly, in many instances, would have yielded no definite result. Furthermore, the Tribunal was anxious to avoid extending its inquiries in the Quarryvale module, to matters which appeared to it to have little or no association with Quarryvale, and more particularly risk extending its inquiries beyond its Terms of Reference.

7.03 Much of the information provided to the Tribunal by Mr Gilmartin which he claimed was given to him by Mr O’Callaghan or by an anonymous source, was imprecise, vague as to detail, and difficult or impossible to verify (and certainly impossible to do so other than by engaging in a prolonged and expensive inquiry process). Much of the information passed to the Tribunal by Mr Gilmartin was provided (initially, at least) in response to requests by the Tribunal to provide every possible piece of information that might be, even remotely of interest or relevance to it, including information which might reasonably be categorised as third party and/or hearsay. Mr Gilmartin always maintained that he provided this ‘third party’ or ‘hearsay’ information on the basis that he was unable to verify its truth and accuracy.

7.04 Thus, this category of information provided by Mr Gilmartin to the Tribunal, while obviously potentially of value to an inquisitorial body (such as this Tribunal) charged with the task of identifying suitable and appropriate matters for inquiry, particularly in its private inquiry phase, was often of poor evidential or probative value in its public inquiry phase. This category of information often provided the Tribunal with little assistance in its task to determine facts in the course of its investigation into the Quarryvale project. Nevertheless the information which was provided by Mr Gilmartin to the Tribunal was always relevant to the issue of witness credibility, and in particular the credibility of Mr Gilmartin.

7.05 An unfortunate consequence of any wide-ranging public inquiry (or indeed, a court case) is that allegations of, what in reality amount to wrong-doing, because of the impossibility (for practical, legal or other reasons) on the part of the inquiry body to conduct a full and comprehensive investigation, may result in severe reputational damage to individuals. It was important therefore that the Tribunal should clearly state, as it now does, that in these instances where the Tribunal for whatever reason did not comprehensively inquire into, not only the allegations by Mr Gilmartin that he was provided with certain information, but also the truth or otherwise of the information conveyed by Mr Gilmartin or by others, such allegations remain unproven and do not in any way impugn the character of those linked to or associated with them.

ⁱ In a subsequent statement to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin alleged that this money was paid to Mr Lawlor by Mr Dunlop.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 3 - MR TOM GILMARTIN'S INVOLVEMENT WITH ARLINGTON / THE BACHELOR'S WALK DEVELOPMENT, AND HIS EARLY INVOLVEMENT IN THE QUARRYVALE PROJECT

INTRODUCTION

1.01 Mr Tom Gilmartin was born in Sligo and emigrated to England in 1957 where he settled. In England, Mr Gilmartin worked in the mechanical engineering and property business, in which he achieved a significant degree of success. He was involved, inter alia, in property development in Milton Keynes in England, and in Bangor, Northern Ireland. Mr Gilmartin returned to Ireland in 2001.

1.02 In 1986, Mr Gilmartin began his association with Dublin property development in the Bachelor's Walk area of the city. He told the Tribunal that a motivating factor in his decision to bring investment into Ireland was the spectacle in the early 1980s of thousands of unemployed Irish people in England without prospects.

1.03 Having acquired a number of properties in the Bachelor's Walk area from his own resources, Mr Gilmartin said that a number of UK-based property investors expressed an interest in becoming involved with him in the proposed Bachelor's Walk development. One of these, Arlington, ultimately reached an agreement with him in 1987 to take over the site assembly and development of Bachelor's Walk. According to this agreement, Mr Gilmartin was to assist Arlington with the Bachelor's Walk project, and in particular: to assist Arlington in the coordination and negotiation of the acquisition of the properties; to assist in drawing up schemes for planning and other necessary consents for the Development; and to effect introductions to national and local government officials. For his part, Mr Gilmartin was to receive IR£250,000, reimbursement of his expenses, and a percentage of the profits generated in the project. In early 1990 by which time he had begun his involvement with the Quarryvale project, Mr Gilmartin's (and Arlington's) involvement in Bachelor's Walk drew to a close and he was paid IR£1.3m.

BACKGROUND TO MR GILMARTIN'S INVOLVEMENT WITH THE QUARRYVALE LANDS

2.01 According to Mr Gilmartin, his initial introduction to the Quarryvale lands arose in the course of a conversation he had with Mr Seán Davin, an auctioneer, in 1986 or 1987 (or earlier) when the latter inquired of Mr Gilmartin whether he might be interested in developing lands adjacent to the Dublin–Galway road in west Co. Dublin. Although he appreciated the potential of the lands, Mr Gilmartin did not pursue the matter at that time because he learned that portions of the lands were subject to compulsory purchase orders by Dublin County Council and/or Dublin Corporation. In the following year (i.e. early 1988) senior Council officials, Mr Paddy Morrissey and Mr Seán Haughey¹, asked Mr Gilmartin if he was interested in developing any of the proposed western towns—namely Blanchardstown, Tallaght or Neilstown/Clondalkin (Neilstown).

2.02 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that for a variety of reasons he did not consider getting involved in either Blanchardstown or Tallaght, but in early 1988 he walked the Neilstown lands in the company of Mr Michael McLoone (chief valuer to Dublin Corporation and County Council) and Mr Richard Forman (an advisor). Because of problems with location and road access, Mr Gilmartin did not consider the Neilstown site to be viable for development. Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that by the time he visited the Neilstown site he had become aware of the proposed M50 motorway and the consequential potential of the nearby Quarryvale lands for retail development. He returned to his home in England and arranged for Creighton's, a graphic design company, to produce a brochure for him. He retained Nathaniel Lichfield & Co to carry out a feasibility study for retail development on the Quarryvale lands.

2.03 By April 1988, Taggarts Architects and Engineers (then acting on behalf of Marks & Spencer), had informed Nathaniel Lichfield & Co that Marks & Spencer had an interest in becoming involved in a retail enterprise on the Quarryvale site.

2.04 In early 1988, Mr Gilmartin set about the task of ascertaining the identity of the owners of the Quarryvale lands, with a view to assembling a site suitable for development.

MR GILMARTIN'S FIRST MEETING WITH MR LIAM LAWLOR TD (FF)

3.01 Mr Gilmartin and Mr Liam Lawlor, who was at the time both a councillor representing the Lucan area and a Fianna Fáil TD for West Dublin, met for the first time in early May 1988 in the Deadman's Inn public house at Palmerstown, Co. Dublin.

3.02 Mr Gilmartin had earlier asked Mr Paul Sheeran, his then Bank Manager² and a personal friend, for advice as to how he might go about identifying the owners of different land banks within the Quarryvale site. Mr Sheeran introduced Mr Gilmartin to a bank customer, Mr Brendan Fassnidge, who telephoned Mr Lawlor and arranged for the meeting in the Deadman's Inn that evening. Mr

² Mr Sheeran was manager of the Blanchardstown branch of Bank of Ireland

Sheeran believed that he drove Mr Gilmartin to the meeting at the Deadman's Inn where Mr Fassnidge introduced Mr Gilmartin to Mr Lawlor.

3.03 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that while his purpose in meeting Mr Lawlor was to seek assistance in identifying the Quarryvale land owners, Mr Lawlor seemed intent on focusing their discussion on the proposed Arlington development at Bachelor's Walk in Dublin City. According to Mr Gilmartin, Mr Lawlor stated that Bachelor's Walk was 'on his patch', and that he had been appointed by the Government 'to take care of it'. Despite Mr Gilmartin's efforts to switch the discussion back to the issue of land ownership, Mr Lawlor persisted with queries relating to the proposed Bachelor's Walk development and requested a meeting with Arlington. Mr Gilmartin told Mr Lawlor that he was meeting with Arlington at its London head office on the following Thursday, and that he would pass on Mr Lawlor's request on that occasion.

3.04 According to Mr Gilmartin, at the conclusion of the meeting in the Deadman's Inn, Mr Lawlor told him that he would obtain a copy of a map of the Quarryvale area identifying the ownership of the different pieces of land within it. No arrangements were made for a further meeting.

3.05 Mr Gilmartin also gave evidence regarding his first meeting with Mr Lawlor in the course of defamation proceedings brought by Mr Sherwin against Independent Newspapers. In the context of that evidence, Mr Gilmartin stated that, at that meeting, he had not explained very well his plans regarding Quarryvale to Mr Lawlor as he was keeping it quiet until he assembled the site. He also claimed that Mr Lawlor was not interested in Quarryvale at that time, but wished to discuss Bachelor's Walk.

3.06 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Lawlor acknowledged that a meeting did take place at the Deadman's Inn public house between himself and Mr Gilmartin in May 1988. However, he contended that this meeting was of short duration and that a second meeting was arranged between himself and Mr Gilmartin which took place the following day at his clinic in his home in Lucan.

3.07 According to Mr Lawlor, on the Saturday morning when Mr Gilmartin attended his clinic he had advised Mr Lawlor of the investment of hundreds of millions of pounds being brought to the Bachelor's Walk development and he mentioned his intention to acquire lands in Quarryvale/Clondalkin for development. Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal that he had told Mr Gilmartin that he would arrange for him to meet the appropriate local authority official in relation to Quarryvale.

3.08 Mr Gilmartin disputed Mr Lawlor's claim that, immediately after their meeting in the Dead Man's Inn he met Mr Lawlor in the latter's clinic. Mr Gilmartin claimed to have visited that clinic on only one occasion subsequent to his initial meeting with Mr Lawlor and when he was accompanied by Mr Forman.

3.09 The Tribunal believed Mr Gilmartin's account of his first meeting with Mr Lawlor to have been accurate and the Tribunal accepted that it took place in its entirety in the Deadman's Inn, and not, as claimed by Mr Lawlor, partially in the latter's clinic. The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that it was Mr Lawlor who introduced the topic of Bachelor's Walk and Arlington at the meeting in the Deadman's Inn. The Tribunal also accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that Mr Lawlor claimed to be a representative of the Irish Government, and, also, that he told Mr Gilmartin that Bachelor's Walk was 'on his patch'. Mr Gilmartin was consistent in his account of the meeting in question. In particular, the Tribunal took cognisance of the note taken by Chief Superintendent Hugh Sreenan³ of a conversation he had with Mr Gilmartin on 9 March 1989, some ten months after the latter's meeting with Mr Lawlor. Chief Superintendent Sreenan noted the words then being ascribed to Mr Lawlor by Mr Gilmartin, as follows: 'Gilmartin, Gilmartin, you are the man who has set up the deal in Bachelor's Walk. The Government has instructed me to take care of you and get that deal into Dublin.'

3.10 Further, the Tribunal did not consider there to have been any significant inconsistency between Mr Gilmartin's account of his initial meeting with Mr Lawlor given in the Sherwin trial,⁴ and that given by him in his evidence to the Tribunal, as suggested in cross-examination of Mr Gilmartin by Mr Conor Maguire, SC (Counsel for Mr Bertie Ahern).

THE LONDON ARLINGTON MEETING

4.01 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that within days of his meeting with Mr Lawlor, he attended his scheduled meeting with executives of Arlington Securities Plc at its head office at Brewer's Green, London. Mr Gilmartin said that shortly after the meeting commenced Mr Lawlor arrived at the Arlington offices and claimed to have been invited to the meeting. Mr Gilmartin said that although he had told Mr Lawlor in the Deadman's Inn of his then forthcoming meeting with Arlington, he had not invited him to attend. Mr Gilmartin said he told the Arlington executives at the meeting that his business with Mr Lawlor did not concern the Bachelor's Walk development.

³ Chief Superintendent Sreenan was promoted to the rank of Assistant Commissioner in 1989 but had retired by the time he gave evidence to this Tribunal. In this section, Mr Sreenan is referred to as Chief Superintendent on all occasions, for convenience.

4.02 Mr Gilmartin described Mr Lawlor’s arrival in the meeting room as follows:
‘So he walks into the meeting and he pulls up a chair, sits in at the table, and he said that he was a—that he had been invited by me. I was sitting there. He was lying right straight in front of my face, and I was never so embarrassed in my life. I had just told the meeting that I had not invited Mr Lawlor, but he contradicted me. So here I was in a situation where there’s two Paddies in the room, going to start an argument, so I decided to bite my tongue. So anyway, he proceeded to say that he was appointed by the Government and that he was a member of the parliament, that Bachelor’s Walk was in his patch, as he put it, and that he was appointed by the Government to take care of it and having him on board would make the difference between it gets off the ground and not.’

4.03 Following upon Mr Lawlor’s arrival at the meeting a decision was taken by the Arlington executives to speak with him in Mr Gilmartin’s absence. Mr Gilmartin and Mr Ted Dadley (Chairman of Arlington Retail Developments, a subsidiary of Arlington Securities) walked to a nearby hotel.

4.04 Approximately half an hour after Mr Gilmartin left the meeting, he was joined in the hotel by Mr Lawlor who told him that Arlington had taken him on board as a consultant in relation to the Bachelor’s Walk development. Mr Lawlor told Mr Gilmartin that Arlington had requested that Mr Gilmartin give Mr Lawlor one half of his 20 per cent share in the development. This suggestion was rejected out of hand by Mr Gilmartin. Mr Gilmartin said he remonstrated with Mr Lawlor about the embarrassment he had caused by arriving at the meeting unannounced and uninvited, and he said that Mr Lawlor dismissed Mr Gilmartin’s concerns, saying: ‘...forget about it now, Arlington has taken me on and I know the wrinkles and I know the road blocks and I will see that it gets taken care of.’

4.05 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that Mr Lawlor informed him that Arlington had engaged him as a consultant at an agreed fee of IR£3,500 per month. Mr Dadley also advised him of the agreement for the monthly fee to Mr Lawlor. Mr Gilmartin was to make these payments to Mr Lawlor and then be reimbursed by Arlington. Mr Gilmartin also said that Mr Dadley had told him that, at the meeting, Mr Lawlor had demanded IR£100,000 and a 20 per cent shareholding in the Bachelor’s Walk project and that both demands had been rejected. Mr Gilmartin said that Mr Lawlor’s demands were also recounted to him by Mr Raymond Mould (an Arlington director) sometime later.

4.06 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Dadley confirmed that Mr Lawlor had said at a meeting in their London offices that he was representing the Government. He said that Mr Lawlor had indicated that he 'could help us through the corridors of power'. Mr Dadley, while he could not be specific as to the sum claimed, confirmed that Mr Lawlor had sought payment from Arlington and he confirmed that Mr Lawlor had sought a percentage of Mr Gilmartin's share of the Bachelor's Walk development.

4.07 According to Mr Mould, he first met Mr Lawlor in the Arlington Offices in Brewers Green. He was at a meeting discussing the project in Dublin, Bachelor's Walk when the receptionist rang through to say that Mr Liam Lawlor was in reception and would like to see them. Mr Mould recalled that Mr Gilmartin was quite annoyed when Mr Lawlor turned up at the meeting. Mr Mould remembered the gist of the meeting as being that as a TD, Mr Lawlor claimed he could be helpful to Arlington in seeing its way through the corridors of power in Dublin.

4.08 Both Mr Dadley and Mr Mould, in evidence, agreed that on the occasion in question Arlington concluded an agreement with Mr Lawlor whereby the latter was to be paid IR£3,500 per month, and that a request was made of Mr Gilmartin that he make the payments to Mr Lawlor and in turn be reimbursed by Arlington.

4.09 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Lawlor denied attending at the Arlington offices in London in the manner described by Mr Gilmartin. Mr Lawlor claimed that he had been to Arlington's offices in London on two occasions, and that he had been invited on each occasion by Arlington. He said he did not ever meet Mr Gilmartin at the Arlington offices. Mr Lawlor denied ever holding himself out to be a representative of the Irish Government and suggested that any such representation would have been futile, having regard to the fact that the Arlington executives had, by May 1988, met with a number of Government ministers. Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal that the payments made to him by Arlington were made pursuant to an agreement reached between himself and Arlington whereby the latter agreed to support Mr Lawlor politically.

4.10 The Tribunal noted that Mr Lawlor's attendance at the Arlington meeting in May 1988 was referred to by Mr Gilmartin in the course of complaints he made some ten months later (in February/March 1989) to Mr Frank Feely, Dublin City and County Manager and to Mr Seán Haughey, Assistant City and County Manager.⁵ Furthermore, the Tribunal was satisfied, from the evidence of Chief Superintendent Sreenan⁶ that on 6 March 1989 when he met with Mr

Haughey, Mr Haughey conveyed this information to him as being one of the complaints made by Mr Gilmartin to Mr Haughey and Mr Feely on 24 February 1989.

4.11 The Tribunal was also satisfied that in Chief Superintendent Sreenan's manuscript note of 9 March 1989 (which detailed a telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin) the following reference to Mr Lawlor was made:

There is money being paid to one fellow who threatened that if the investment was to get off the ground he is getting £3,500 per month, blackmail money. Arlington got scared and I opposed and refused and told the Government he was a gangster. He walked into Arlington and put a proposition on the table a year ago and since June of 1988 has been getting his payoff.

4.12 Although Mr Lawlor's name was not mentioned specifically in the note, Chief Superintendent Sreenan told the Tribunal that as of 6 March 1989 he was aware from his conversation with Mr Feely and Mr Seán Haughey that Mr Lawlor was the subject of this particular complaint by Mr Gilmartin.

4.13 Superintendent Thomas B. Burns⁷ note, made on 6 March 1989, of the interview conducted with Mr Seán Haughey and Mr Feely contained Mr Haughey's description of what Mr Gilmartin had told him about the Arlington meeting in London and Mr Lawlor. Superintendent Burns noted as follows:

In connection with the Bachelor's Walk project Mr Gilmartin told Mr Haughey that he, Gilmartin, attended a board meeting of Arlington Investment the developers, in London and to his surprise Liam Lawlor, TD, was present. Mr Lawlor offered his services as a Consultant and in any event Mr Gilmartin was instructed to pay Lawlor £3,500 per month. This he has continued to do and on one occasion made out a cheque for £3,500 (sought urgently by Lawlor) and payable to Mr Lawlor personally. Mr Gilmartin said he had been reimbursed by Arlington.

4.14 The Tribunal was satisfied to accept Mr Sheeran's evidence that, within a short time after the Arlington meeting in London, he learned of the payments to Mr Lawlor. Likewise, the Tribunal accepted that in 1990 Mr Colm Scallon (a property consultant), was told of the events of that day by Mr Gilmartin, namely that Mr Lawlor had 'invaded' a meeting and had been retained as a consultant against Mr Gilmartin's wishes. Similarly, Mr Seán Sherwin, National Organiser for Fianna Fáil in 1990, told the Tribunal in evidence that when he met Mr Gilmartin in October 1990, see further below, one of the matters complained of by Mr Gilmartin was that Mr Lawlor had gate-crashed the Arlington meeting and that Arlington had taken him on as a consultant, against Mr Gilmartin's wishes.

4.15 The Tribunal was satisfied that the account of the meeting in Arlington's London offices in or about May 1988 as recounted by Mr Gilmartin, and as corroborated to a significant degree by Mr Dadley and Mr Mould, accurately represented the correct detail of that meeting. The Tribunal rejected in its entirety the evidence of Mr Lawlor in relation to that meeting.

4.16 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor: arrived at the London offices of Arlington uninvited; purported to represent the Irish Government in relation to the proposed Bachelor's Walk development; used and promoted his position as a TD to persuade Arlington to pay him a monthly retainer (through Mr Gilmartin); and, unsuccessfully, sought a more substantial payment of a percentage take in the Bachelor's Walk development from both Arlington and Mr Gilmartin.

4.17 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor was being untruthful when he denied attending the Arlington meeting uninvited and purporting to represent the Irish Government at that meeting.

PAYMENTS TO MR LAWLOR FROM ARLINGTON

5.01 According to Mr Gilmartin he objected to any involvement on Mr Lawlor's part in the Bachelor's Walk project, but felt he had little choice but to accede to the direction of Arlington that Mr Lawlor be paid IR£3,500 per month as a type of consultancy fee, that the payments be initially discharged by him, and that he would be reimbursed later by Arlington. Mr Gilmartin gave evidence that this was the process of payment and reimbursement generally adopted in practice as between himself and Arlington at that time.

5.02 Documentation and sworn evidence provided to the Tribunal established the following course of events:

- 1) 28 June 1988: following confirmation to Mr Gilmartin from Arlington that Mr Lawlor was to be paid IR£3,500 per month, and that Arlington would reimburse him for these payments, Mr Gilmartin provided a cheque for IR£3,500 to Mr Lawlor. Mr Gilmartin left the payee section of the cheque blank at Mr Lawlor's request. Documents furnished to the Tribunal showed that the cheque was duly made payable to Advance Proteins Ltd (a company owned by Mr Lawlor) and that it was lodged to an account in that name at Bank of Ireland, Lucan on 28 June.

2) 15 July 1988: Mr Gilmartin provided Mr Lawlor with a cheque for IR£3,500. The payee section of the cheque was left blank, again at Mr Lawlor's request. The copy cheque made available to the Tribunal showed the payee as 'APL' (Advanced Proteins Ltd). The cheque was duly lodged to an account of Advanced Proteins Ltd on 18 July 1988.

3) 6 September 1988: Mr Gilmartin wrote a cheque for IR£7,500. Mr Gilmartin recalled an occasion when a request was made by Mr Lawlor for a double payment as he was short of money. Mr Gilmartin recalled writing a cheque for IR£7,500 instead of IR£7,000 in response to this request. There was no indication to the Tribunal that this cheque was ever debited to Mr Gilmartin's account.

4) 7 September 1988: Mr Sheeran wrote a cheque for IR£7,700 drawn on Mr Gilmartin's account at Bank of Ireland, Blanchardstown. Mr Sheeran gave evidence that he had authorisation from Mr Gilmartin to write such cheques on Mr Gilmartin's account and retained a series of chequebooks for that purpose. Mr Lawlor's brother-in-law, Mr Noel Gilson, appeared to have been named as payee on the cheque and to have endorsed it although he denied doing so or knowing anything about it. The Tribunal was satisfied that this was a cheque given to Mr Lawlor pursuant to his arrangement with Arlington. While there was no evidence of this cheque being lodged to any account associated with Mr Lawlor, the Tribunal was satisfied that the proceeds of this cheque found their way into Mr Lawlor's hands. This cheque was duly debited to Mr Gilmartin's account on 13 September 1988.

5) 5 October 1988: Mr Lawlor was provided with a cheque for IR£3,500 signed by Mr Gilmartin and again attributed to 'Arlington' in his cheque stub. The copy cheque furnished to the Tribunal revealed the payee to have been Mr Noel Gilson and once again the cheque appeared to have been endorsed by Mr Gilson. (Mr Gilson denied endorsing the cheque and suggested that his signature had been forged). This cheque was lodged to the account of Advance Proteins Ltd on 5 October and was debited from Mr Gilmartin's account on 7 October.

6) 14 October 1988: Mr Gilmartin provided a cheque to Mr Lawlor in the sum of IR£7,000. It was credited to the account of Advance Proteins on the same day, 14 October 1988.

7) November 1988: Mr Gilmartin provided Mr Lawlor with a cheque for Stg£3,500 at Mr Lawlor's request. Mr Lawlor had requested that this payment be provided to him while he was awaiting a connection to Iraq at London's Heathrow Airport.

8) 11 January 1989: Mr Sheeran signed a cheque for IR£7,000, drawn on Mr Gilmartin's Bank of Ireland account and made payable to Mr Lawlor. The Tribunal is satisfied that this cheque was issued from the chequebook retained by Mr Sheeran on foot of his authorisation from Mr Gilmartin to make payments. The cheque was debited to Mr Gilmartin's account on 17 January.

5.03 The Tribunal was satisfied that, between June 1988 and January 1989, excluding the 6 September 1988 cheque for IR£7,500 which was not debited to Mr Gilmartin's account, Mr Lawlor was the recipient of approximately IR£32,200 plus Stg£3,500 by way of periodic payments through Mr Gilmartin, on foot of the arrangement entered into by Mr Lawlor and Arlington.

THE DEMAND FOR IR£10,000 BY MR LAWLOR

6.01 Mr Sheeran gave evidence to the Tribunal of a particular incident which occurred on a date in March 1989, when he was approached by Mr Lawlor who asked him to pay him a sum of IR£10,000 from Mr Gilmartin's bank account. Mr Lawlor intimated to Mr Sheeran that Mr Gilmartin had sanctioned the payment. When Mr Sheeran telephoned Mr Gilmartin, he told him that no such sanction had been given and that there was no arrangement for any such payment to Mr Lawlor.

6.02 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Lawlor denied that any such incident occurred. He accused Mr Sheeran of lying.

6.03 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that this incident prompted him to stop making any further payments to Mr Lawlor. There was no evidence that any further payments were made to Mr Lawlor by Arlington via Mr Gilmartin.

6.04 The Tribunal was satisfied that the request by Mr Lawlor for IR£10,000 was made by him, that it was refused in the circumstances outlined by Mr Gilmartin and Mr Sheeran, and that Mr Sheeran had not lied to the Tribunal.

PAYMENT OF STG£33,000 BY ARLINGTON SECURITIES TO ECONOMIC REPORTS LTD

7.01 On 24 April 1989, the sum of IR£39,099.52 was credited to the account of Economic Reports Ltd. This sum was the proceeds of a cheque for Stg£33,000 dated 19 April 1989 which was drawn on the account of Arlington Securities and payable to Economic Reports Ltd⁸ (Economic Reports). Although Mr Mould of Arlington confirmed that the cheque had been drawn on the account of Arlington Securities Plc and paid as indicated, he claimed to have no knowledge of the circumstances in which the payment arose or the reasons for it. He was certain that it would not have been paid in the absence of an invoice, although no invoice was provided to the Tribunal.

7.02 Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal that the Stg£33,000 payment was a political contribution. According to Mr Lawlor, it had been paid to him following a telephone call to him from Mr Dadley of Arlington, in which Mr Dadley informed him that the Bachelor's Walk development project was going to be terminated, and that Arlington was keen to make a further political contribution to Mr Lawlor in appreciation for his help. Mr Lawlor believed that he requested the cheque to be made out to Economic Reports, and that no invoice had been furnished to Arlington in relation to it. The payment, according to Mr Lawlor, was 'a complete surprise' as he believed that Arlington, in making the payments through Mr Gilmartin, had honoured their commitment to support him politically.

7.03 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Dadley said he had no recollection of making any telephone call to Mr Lawlor and he claimed that he had no recollection of the circumstances in which the payment of Stg£33,000 was made to him.

7.04 Mr Lawlor maintained that all payments received from Mr Gilmartin and/or Arlington were political contributions. Both Mr Dadley and Mr Mould believed that the payments were consultancy fees paid in respect of assistance provided and advice given by Mr Lawlor.

7.05 The Tribunal was satisfied that none of the payments made to Mr Lawlor by Arlington Securities, whether through Mr Gilmartin or otherwise, were political donations. The true purpose of the payments and the motivation for making them was, as described by Mr Mould, so that Mr Lawlor would help Arlington 'through the corridors of power' in relation to the Bachelor's Walk development.

7.06 While Mr Gilmartin was probably aware of the true nature of the payments, he was not party to the decision to make such payments or to any discussion that led to the agreement that the payments be made and opposed the making of those payments.

7.07 The Tribunal rejected the claim by Mr Dadley and Mr Mould that they had no recollection of the reasons for the payment of Stg£33,000 to Mr Lawlor in April 1989, or the circumstances surrounding the payment. The Tribunal was satisfied that the two men were the individuals within Arlington who interacted with Mr Lawlor at all relevant times and the Tribunal was of the firm view that either Mr Dadley or Mr Mould, or both, must have been involved in organising the April 1989 payment to Mr Lawlor. The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that he was apprised at an early stage by Mr Dadley that Mr Lawlor had sought an upfront payment of IR£100,000 from Arlington. The Tribunal believed that it may well have been the case that the payment of Stg£33,000, together with the payments made through Mr Gilmartin, was intended to satisfy, to some extent, Mr Lawlor's demands.

7.08 The Tribunal was satisfied that, on the basis of Mr Lawlor's representations, Arlington believed that Mr Lawlor was so close to the Government and the authorities in Dublin that a failure on their part to make significant payments to him might result in a lack of support by the Government and those authorities for the proposed development at Bachelor's Walk, rendering the aims of that project more difficult to achieve. The Tribunal believes that this is what prompted Arlington to expend almost IR£75,000 in payments to Mr Lawlor over an eleven month period. Having regard to the fact that he was an elected councillor and TD, Mr Lawlor's demands for payments and his acceptance of money in these circumstances was entirely inappropriate and corrupt.

7.09 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor failed to give a truthful account to the Tribunal as to the circumstances in which he was paid money directly and indirectly by Arlington, and in particular the circumstances in which he was paid Stg£33,000 in April 1989.

MR GILMARTIN'S MEETING WITH MR GEORGE REDMOND AND MR LAWLOR

8.01 Following Mr Gilmartin's initial meeting with Mr Lawlor in the Deadman's Inn public house in Palmerstown, Co. Dublin in May 1988, Mr Lawlor took Mr Gilmartin to meet with Mr George Redmond, Assistant City and County Manager. The Tribunal believed that this meeting is likely to have occurred in late May 1988 or June 1988.

8.02 According to Mr Gilmartin, Mr Lawlor collected him from Dublin Airport and drove him to the offices of Dublin County Council on O'Connell Street, Dublin. Mr Gilmartin said that in the course of that drive, Mr Lawlor informed him that he was taking him to meet Mr Redmond, as Mr Redmond 'had something' for him (Mr Gilmartin).

8.03 Mr Gilmartin's description of the meeting with Mr Redmond in the presence of Mr Lawlor suggests that it was relatively short. Mr Gilmartin did not disclose, either to Mr Redmond or to Mr Lawlor, the purpose for which he wanted to purchase the Quarryvale lands, although he suspected that Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond guessed the purpose. According to Mr Gilmartin, he explained to Mr Redmond that he intended buying some land along the Dublin–Galway road and that, for that purpose, he wished to ascertain the identities of the owners of the lands in question. Mr Redmond then opened a drawer in his desk and produced a map, which he duly gave to Mr Gilmartin.

8.04 Mr Gilmartin described the map as being approximately 24 to 30 by 24 inches, more or less square. It was colour coded and had ownership details for the entire Quarryvale area, including the identities of the owners and the quantities of land held by each owner. Mr Gilmartin described the map as a type of Ordinance Survey map which had been coloured. Mr Gilmartin placed the map in his briefcase.

8.05 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that at this point, Mr Redmond stood up from his desk and appeared to take a telephone call at another desk. Mr Gilmartin believed that the telephone call was a pretence and that in fact Mr Redmond was not in contact with anyone. According to Mr Gilmartin, while Mr Redmond was engaged in the pretence of taking a telephone call, Mr Lawlor said to Mr Gilmartin that he would have to pay him IR£100,000 and that he would also have to pay money to Mr Redmond.⁹

8.06 Mr Gilmartin stated that he responded to Mr Lawlor's request by way of some non-committal comment. As they left the office Mr Lawlor repeated his demands with words to the effect: '. . . if you're going to go anywhere, you have to pay George, you have to take care of George' and 'you have to have me on board.'

8.07 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he understood from the meeting and his exchange with Mr Lawlor that he was facing a demand from Mr Lawlor of IR£100,000 for himself and IR£100,000 for Mr Redmond.

8.08 Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond vehemently denied that any request had been made to Mr Gilmartin for a sum of money for either or both of them. Both denied that Mr Gilmartin was provided with any map at that meeting.

⁹ Mr Gilmartin was questioned on a number of occasions in relation to what Mr Lawlor said to him about a payment of money to Mr Redmond. While his responses were not on all occasions identical, the Tribunal was satisfied that the thrust of Mr Gilmartin's evidence was that Mr Lawlor had sought IR£100,000 for both himself and Mr Redmond (a total of IR£200,000). Indeed he confirmed this to have been the case in a response to Mr Sreenan SC (Mr O'Callaghan's Counsel) on Day 465.

8.09 Both Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor agreed in evidence that a meeting with Mr Gilmartin had taken place. They told the Tribunal that they had met together with Mr Gilmartin on one occasion only and that it was their belief that that meeting had taken place on 28 June 1988, and not on a date in May 1988, as suggested by Mr Gilmartin. Mr Redmond's diary included a reference to a meeting with Mr Gilmartin on that date.

8.10 Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor both informed the Tribunal that the meeting with Mr Gilmartin related to his proposals regarding the building of an industrial/business park on the Quarryvale lands and the provision of service station motorway facilities to service the planned M50. Mr Redmond put to Mr Gilmartin that what he was saying was an 'incredible story'. Mr Lawlor suggested to Mr Gilmartin that he was 'lying through his teeth.'

8.11 According to Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor, Mr Redmond gave short shrift to the proposals which they alleged Mr Gilmartin made on the day of the meeting in relation to motorway facilities and/or an industrial park and they maintained that Mr Redmond's response was evidenced by the contents of a letter written to Mr Gilmartin by Mr Michael Hartnett, a county council official, on 28 July 1988.

8.12 Moreover, Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor maintained that Mr Hartnett's reference to 'Deputy Liam Lawlor' in his letter to Mr Gilmartin of 28 July 1988 referred to the one and only meeting Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor had with Mr Gilmartin.

8.13 Mr Hartnett's letter did not refer to Mr Redmond specifically. It was addressed to Mr Gilmartin and stated:

"I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated 6th July 1988, and in reply I wish to reiterate the council's position as stated to you and at the recent meeting with yourself and Deputy Liam Lawlor who organised the meeting. At the present time there are no motorways in Dublin, it is a fact that two sections of the Dublin ring motorway are under construction and it is expected that both sections should be opened to traffic, open for traffic within about two and a half years from now. It is accepted that as the motorway system in County Dublin is developed, there will be a need to consider the provision of service facilities. However this matter is being considered by the technical staff at Dublin County Council in the Department of the Environment. And it is the considered view that it would be premature to make decisions now with respect to any particular area until an overall policy for the motorway ring has been determined. This is the official position and this applies to all elements of the motorway, including slip ways. You should bare the foregoing in mind in relation to any plans or projects you have in mind or land in areas contiguous to the motorway."

8.14 Mr Redmond's diary for 28 June 1988 showed an entry which appeared to state as follows: '(Deputy L Lawlor) Tom Gilmartin from UK re: Palmerstown).'

8.15 According to Mr Redmond this diary entry, which he claimed was likely to have been made by his secretary on the morning of the meeting, related to the one and only meeting he had with Mr Gilmartin in the presence of Mr Lawlor. A reference to Mr Gilmartin in Mr Redmond's diary for 28 July 1988, was, according to Mr Redmond, an aide memoire relating to a letter to be sent to Mr Gilmartin, and not a reference to a meeting. Moreover, Mr Redmond stated that the purpose of the 28 June 1988 meeting was clearly evidenced by the contents of a letter written by Mr Gilmartin to Mr Redmond on 6 July 1988 which stated as follows:

Dear Mr Redmond,

Re: Motorway facilities

I was very pleased to have the opportunity of meeting you and I would like to thank you for your advice and assistance.

I have instructed the consulting engineers to liaise with the U.K. Road Engineering experts that I have retained for advice regarding the provision of motorway facilities with particular emphasis on complying with safety and international road engineering standards.

We are compiling a selection of aerial and photographic views to outline specific examples of the appropriate entrance and exit designs. The construction engineers will prepare a sketch layout showing our suggestion for consideration by yourself and your Road Engineering colleagues in the Council to further the exploratory discussions.

We fully accept and note the point raised, that your Council acts as an agent for the Department of the Environment, Roads Division, on overseeing the construction of the Motorway and National Primary Road schemes.

We believe if agreement can be reached, that our proposal for a business park and motorway service at the Palmerstown/Rowlagh location would bring much needed investment to the area.

We hope to be in a position to seek a further meeting with yourself and your colleagues in the Roads Department, to discuss our proposal further. I will contact your secretary in due course to arrange a date and time suitable to your itinerary.

Yours sincerely,

Tom Gilmartin

8.16 According to Mr Redmond (and indeed Mr Lawlor), the contents of that letter to Mr Redmond identified the sole subject matter discussed on the single occasion when Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor together met with Mr Gilmartin.

8.17 Mr Gilmartin, in his evidence, did not dispute either the fact of his having written to Mr Redmond on 6 July 1988 or the contents of the letter. However, Mr Gilmartin said that the meeting he referred to in his letter of 6 July 1988 to Mr Redmond was a reference to a different meeting he had had, together with his advisors, with Mr Redmond¹⁰ which, as evidenced by the contents of the letter, related to motorway facilities and the proposal to locate a service station on the Quarryvale lands contiguous with the M50.

8.18 Mr Gilmartin maintained that the meeting referred to in the letter of 6 July 1988 was not the same meeting at which Mr Redmond produced the land ownership map and Mr Lawlor made the demand for money for himself and for Mr Redmond.

8.19 Mr Gilmartin's belief was that the 'map meeting' had occurred a relatively short time after his encounter with Mr Lawlor at Arlington's London offices in May 1988 but before any meeting he had had with Mr Redmond about the provision of an industrial park and/or motorway facilities serving the proposed M50.

THE MAP

9.01 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he subsequently provided the map given to him by Mr Redmond to representatives of AIB. He believed that this had occurred in 1991.

9.02 Mr Eddie Kay of AIB told the Tribunal that he recollected receiving a large map from Mr Gilmartin in January 1990. It was coloured blue and detailed the ownership of the Quarryvale lands. According to Mr Kay, Mr Gilmartin had such a map in his possession in his early meetings with the bank. AIB's concern in 1990 (at a time when it was contemplating funding Mr Gilmartin's land acquisitions) was to ascertain the ownership of the lands in which Mr Gilmartin was interested. Mr Jim Donagh, of AIB, agreed that in January and February 1990 AIB was in possession of a number of maps associated with the Quarryvale lands, and it was his belief that two of these maps had come to the bank either directly or indirectly from Mr Gilmartin.

¹⁰ Initially, Mr Gilmartin stated that the reference was to his first meeting with Mr Redmond (in Mr Lawlor's company) but in later evidence stated that this was incorrect, and that the meeting referred to in the letter was a different meeting.

9.03 Mr Neville O’Byrne of William Fry, solicitors for AIB, gave evidence relating to two maps located in the files of William Fry relating to AIB and Mr Gilmartin, in or about February 1990.

9.04 Mr O’Byrne identified Map ‘A’— the ‘Lisney map’— as the map which was attached to a report furnished to AIB by Lisney Auctioneers on 21 February 1990. Mr Nick Molloy of Lisneys confirmed this to be the case. According to Mr Molloy, Map A had not been prepared by his firm and he indicated that it was possible that it had come to Lisneys from Irish Intercontinental Bank,¹¹ the entity which had first commissioned the report sent by Lisneys to AIB in February 1990.

9.05 According to Mr O’Byrne, Map ‘B’, also found on the files of William Fry, had been handed over to his firm sometime prior to 29 January 1990. The Tribunal was satisfied that this map was in all probability provided to William Fry by Mr Kay or another AIB representative at some stage after AIB first became involved with Mr Gilmartin, and before 29 January 1990 and that, as a matter of probability, this map was provided to AIB by Mr Gilmartin.

9.06 Map B was referred to in Mr O’Byrne’s report furnished to AIB on 29 January 1990. While that report was primarily concerned with five parcels of lands which Mr Gilmartin, via Barkhill, was in the process of purchasing, the report contained a reference to a map, not apparently directly referable to any of the individual land parcels referred to in the report, which Mr Gilmartin had furnished to AIB. In the report the map is referred to as follows: ‘The map attached to the tender documents shows a much smaller area than that coloured in blue on the map originally furnished to you by Mr Gilmartin.’

9.07 Mr Gilmartin identified Map B as identical to the map he had received from Mr Redmond in May of 1988. However, in subsequent evidence, Mr Gilmartin expressed his belief that Map A was more akin to the map he had received from Mr Redmond; this map had references to the provision for residential housing on some of the Quarryvale lands, a feature he recalled was represented on Mr Redmond’s map.

9.08 Notwithstanding Mr Gilmartin’s identification of Map A as likely to have been the one he received from Mr Redmond, the Tribunal considered that either Map A or Map B may have been the Redmond map, given: 1) their similarity; 2) the fact that both maps denoted Quarryvale land ownership; and 3) the fact that both maps were in existence by January 1990 (indeed Map A, the Lisney map, was extant at least on 1 December 1989); and 4) the likelihood that both maps were in Mr Gilmartin’s possession prior to the aforesaid dates.

9.09 In order to ascertain whether one or other map (or both) might have had its origins within the county council the Tribunal heard evidence from a number of council officials.

9.10 The Tribunal was satisfied, on the basis of evidence given by a Dublin County Council official, Mr Niall Hayden, that the base map from which both Map A and Map B were constructed was of a type that was available in the offices of Dublin County Council in 1988. Mr Hayden told the Tribunal that such base maps were commonly used in the county council and were held by the Roads Forward Planning section. Moreover, he said that, on occasion he prepared maps similar to Maps A and B for Mr Redmond, in his capacity as a technical draftsman employed within the county council. With specific reference to Maps A and B, Mr Hayden could not state categorically whether either or both originated within the county council, having regard to the fact that neither map bore a signature or a date. However, Mr Hayden confirmed that it was not unusual for such maps not to carry a title block, or the identity of the individual who prepared them, given that they were usually prepared as informal maps for in-house consideration. Mr Hayden told the Tribunal that within the council it was usual to maintain maps with details of land ownership to assist council personnel in relation to matters such as compulsory purchase orders.

9.11 Mr Leo Bolton, a County Council official in the Roads Planning Control department of Dublin County Council during the relevant period, confirmed to the Tribunal that a copy map found on one of his files was a reduced photocopy of Map B. While Mr Bolton had no recollection of preparing the original Map B he did recall having been requested to provide a copy of this map.

9.12 The Tribunal found it noteworthy that Mr Bolton's county council file contained a photocopy of Map B, albeit in reduced format. The Tribunal was satisfied, therefore, that at some point Dublin County Council had in its possession Map B, being one of the maps identified by AIB representatives as furnished to them by Mr Gilmartin.

9.13 The Tribunal was satisfied, in light of the evidence provided by Mr Hayden and Mr Bolton, and having regard to the evidence of Mr Kay, Mr Donagh and Mr O'Byrne, that Mr Gilmartin's account of receiving a map from Mr Redmond in May 1988 was entirely credible, and that therefore either Map A or Map B (or a similar map) was likely to have been the map produced by Mr Redmond from his drawer and given to Mr Gilmartin at their first meeting.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS RELATING TO THE DEMANDS FOR PAYMENTS BY MR LAWLOR

10.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor facilitated a meeting with Mr Redmond for Mr Gilmartin, prior to the scheduled meeting between the three men, as referred to in Mr Redmond's diary. To this end the Tribunal did not accept Mr Lawlor's or Mr Redmond's evidence that all three met on one occasion only. The Tribunal believed it more likely that at some point between his meeting with Mr Gilmartin in the Deadman's Inn and bringing Mr Gilmartin to meet Mr Redmond, Mr Lawlor apprised Mr Redmond of Mr Gilmartin's request for details of ownership of the Quarryvale lands and arranged with Mr Redmond that the latter would meet with Mr Gilmartin in this regard.

10.02 The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that in May 1988 Mr Redmond gave him a map detailing ownership of the entire Quarryvale site. Moreover, the Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that Mr Lawlor requested IR£100,000 for himself and a similar amount for Mr Redmond.

10.03 In preferring Mr Gilmartin's evidence regarding the meeting to that of either Mr Redmond or Mr Lawlor, the Tribunal took cognisance of the evidence given by a number of other witnesses, and in particular the fact that Mr Gilmartin told others about that meeting within a relatively short time thereafter.

10.04 The Tribunal accepted Mr Sheeran's evidence that a short time after Mr Gilmartin's meeting with Mr Redmond, as facilitated by Mr Lawlor, Mr Gilmartin told him of Mr Lawlor's demand for IR£100,000 for himself and a similar amount for Mr Redmond. Mr Sheeran initially told the Tribunal that he did not recollect any reference to a map, but, having reflected on the matter, he recollected Mr Gilmartin advising him that he had been provided with a land ownership map by Mr Redmond. Under cross-examination by Mr Redmond, Mr Sheeran stated to the Tribunal that 'the only thing that sank' into his brain in 1988 was Mr Gilmartin's telling him of Mr Lawlor's demand for money.

10.05 Mr McLoone's evidence was that in or about 1989, at the time Mr Gilmartin made a number of complaints to Mr Seán Haughey and Mr Feely, Mr Gilmartin had relayed to him a demand Mr Lawlor had made of him for IR£100,000 for himself and a similar amount for Mr Redmond. Mr McLoone said that Mr Gilmartin had also advised him that an unnamed councillor also requested IR£100,000 from him.

10.06 Mr Feely, (to whom Mr Gilmartin made complaints about a number of issues on 24 February 1989), could not recollect Mr Gilmartin telling him that he had received a map from Mr Redmond, and also could not recollect Mr Gilmartin making any allegation that Mr Lawlor had, in a specific setting, asked for IR£100,000 for himself and another IR£100,000 for Mr Redmond. However, the Tribunal was satisfied that by 3 March 1989 the Gardaí had been informed, through a Department of Justice memorandum, about complaints of this nature then being made by Mr Gilmartin.

10.07 On 3 March 1989 the Minister for the Environment, Mr Pádraig Flynn met the Minister for Justice, Mr Gerard Collins, and advised him of certain complaints being made by Mr Gilmartin. Mr Flynn's source for such complaints was a meeting he had on 28 February 1989 with Mr Feely and Mr Seán Haughey, who in turn had received their information from Mr Gilmartin some four days earlier.¹²

10.08 A memorandum ('Alleged planning permission irregularities, note 2') (apparently prepared by Mr Des Matthews, Secretary of the Department of Justice) which Chief Superintendent Sreenan acknowledged was in the possession of the Gardaí by 3 March 1989, prior to any communication by him with Mr Gilmartin, contained, inter alia, the following:

Mr Flynn said that he had come into possession of some further information that was related to the Gardaí investigation. At 1:15pm on Tuesday the 28th February, he had met at their request, Mr Frank Feely, the City and County Manager and Mr S. Haughey, Asst. City and County Manager, who told him the following.

On the previous Thursday or Friday (23 or 24 Feb),—the Minister was not sure which day—a Mr T. P. Gilmartin had come to see them (this is the same Mr Gilmartin mentioned at the meeting on 2 March with the Taoiseach). Mr Gilmartin told them that he was interested in property development in Dublin, but that irregular propositions had been put to him in connection with certain planning procedures that he had to go through. Large sums of money 'upfront' were requested as a consideration for giving him whatever approval he needed. Gilmartin named two people who were alleged to be involved in these transactions—Mr George Redmond, Asst. Manager with responsibility for Co. Council matters and Deputy Liam Lawlor. He also said that certain other Co. Councillors were involved and Councillor Finbar Hanrahan was named as one. Gilmartin said that the amounts of money requested were vast. There was a mention of payment of £5 million and also a reference to '£100,000 per man'. Gilmartin was 'frightened' by the extent of the corruption he was confronting and decided to tell his story to the authorities [Minister Flynn said that Gilmartin was a tough-principled man ...]

10.09 The Tribunal also noted that an aide memoire compiled by Chief Superintendent Sreenan before he telephoned Mr Gilmartin on 4 March 1989 contained, inter alia, the following information about Mr Gilmartin:

He was interested in developing property in Ireland but he was worried about irregularities. He was told by somebody there would have to be money put upfront to people. 1. George Redmond Assistant County Manager. 2. Liam Lawlor T.D. 3. A No. of other County Councillors 1 named Finbarr Hanrahan, a FF Conc. for Lucan’.

10.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that by 3 March 1989 Mr Gilmartin had identified both Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond to persons in authority in the context of demands being made of him for money. The Tribunal accepted that Mr Gilmartin was likely to have told Mr Feely and Mr Seán Haughey that Mr Lawlor made, inter alia, a demand of him for money for himself and for Mr Redmond. This was subsequently related by them to Mr Flynn who in turn apprised Mr Matthews and the Minister for Justice.

10.11 The Tribunal accepted that Chief Superintendent Sreenan’s memorandum of his telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin of 4 March 1989 did not identify specifically either Mr Lawlor or Mr Redmond in relation to any matter and that there was no specific reference to the demands made by Mr Lawlor for IR£100,000 for himself and for Mr Redmond. Nonetheless, it was satisfied that (as conceded by Chief Superintendent Sreenan) certain references in that memorandum identified Mr Redmond and were, on 4 March 1989, understood by Chief Superintendent Sreenan to be references to Mr Redmond.

10.12 The Tribunal rejected Mr Redmond’s and Mr Lawlor’s account as to what took place in the course of their meeting with Mr Gilmartin.

10.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin gave a true and accurate account of his meeting in late May 1988 with Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond. The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin’s evidence that while Mr Redmond pretended to take a telephone call in his office, Mr Lawlor requested a payment of IR£100,000 for himself and a similar amount for Mr Redmond. It also accepted that Mr Lawlor either expressly or by implication made it clear to Mr Gilmartin that he would not realise his ambition to purchase and develop the lands at Quarryvale unless the substantial payments were made as demanded.

10.14 The Tribunal was satisfied that while Mr Redmond did not himself make any demand for payment from Mr Gilmartin on this or on any other occasion, he was aware of the demand being made of Mr Gilmartin by Mr Lawlor on his behalf and was, indirectly, party to that demand.

10.15 The said demand was corrupt.

THE TRUST HOUSE FORTE MEETING

11.01 The Tribunal heard evidence that a meeting took place in November 1988 at the Trust House Forte Hotel at Dublin Airport which was attended by Mr Gilmartin and a number of his professional advisors, including his architect and a quantity surveyor.

11.02 According to Mr Gilmartin, in the course of that meeting Mr Lawlor arrived uninvited and proceeded to join Mr Gilmartin and his group. Mr Lawlor informed Mr Gilmartin that Mr Gilmartin's son had told him of the meeting when he attempted to contact Mr Gilmartin at his home earlier.

11.03 According to Mr Gilmartin, Mr Lawlor then proceeded to tell him that if he was going to progress his Quarryvale proposals he was 'going to have to deal with Mr [Owen] O'Callaghan whether [Mr Gilmartin] liked it or not' because Mr O'Callaghan had 'the Neilstown site'. Mr Lawlor proceeded to inform Mr Gilmartin that Mr O'Callaghan's architects, Ambrose Kelly & Co, had prepared plans for the development of the Neilstown site, and that Mr O'Callaghan was applying for planning permission for retail development on that site. Challenged by Mr Gilmartin, who expressed the view that no-one would build a shopping centre on the Neilstown site because of various problems with it, Mr Lawlor replied as follows: 'It doesn't matter. You'll go nowhere because Mr O'Callaghan, all he has to do is to threaten to build it and you'll be there forever.'

11.04 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that, conscious of the reality of what Mr Lawlor had stated, he agreed to Mr Lawlor's suggestion that a meeting between himself and Mr O'Callaghan should be arranged.

11.05 According to Mr Gilmartin, some days following the Trust House Forte meeting, Mr Lawlor contacted him in relation to arranging a meeting between himself and Mr O'Callaghan in Dublin. Following contact between Mr Gilmartin and Mr O'Callaghan, they met at the Royal Dublin Hotel on 7 December 1988. At this meeting they reached an agreement in principle whereby Mr Gilmartin would purchase Mr O'Callaghan's interest in the Neilstown lands. This agreement was subsequently signed at the end of January 1989.

11.06 Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal that he did not attend any meeting with Mr Gilmartin at the Trust House Forte Hotel, although he acknowledged that he may have advised Mr Gilmartin to come to an arrangement with Mr O’Callaghan in the interests of developing the Quarryvale lands.

11.07 The Tribunal was satisfied that by the autumn of 1988, if not sooner, Mr Lawlor had been well apprised of Mr Gilmartin’s plans for Quarryvale. The extent of his knowledge was evidenced by a letter he drafted for Mr Gilmartin, to be sent to the Minister for the Environment, Mr Flynn, which he faxed to Mr Gilmartin’s advisor, Mr Forman, on 7 September 1988.

11.08 The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin’s evidence of his encounter with Mr Lawlor at the Trust House Forte Hotel and the accuracy of his recollection as to what Mr Lawlor had said to him.

11.09 The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr Lawlor’s encounter with Mr Gilmartin at the Trust House Forte Hotel occurred after a meeting between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Lawlor in November 1988. A memorandum compiled by Mr O’Callaghan dated 4 November 1988 and described as: ‘Notes on meetings with: - Liam Lawlor, Robin Cherry and Finbarr Hanrahan’, inter alia stated:

I met with Liam Lawlor on Wednesday last. Lawlor told me that Flynn and McSharry asked him to look after Gilmartin and would have preferred if nothing happened on the Clondalkin¹³ site and was under the impression, like everybody else, that the site was going nowhere. Lawlor is quite confident that Gilmartin will get his permission but that we are in the driving seat for the time being. He also feels that the provision of the road is essential to our scheme and suggested that we write to Paddy Morrissey or George Redmond immediately to establish the situation with the road. I am not sure whether Lawlor is trying to be helpful to us or just looking for information. Lawlor suggested that a meeting be arranged between Gilmartin and myself.

11.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that the reference to Mr O’Callaghan being in ‘the driving seat for the time being’ is consistent with the tenor of Mr Gilmartin’s description of what Mr Lawlor had relayed to him in the Trust House Forte Hotel.

11.11 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor’s evidence relating to the meeting with Mr Gilmartin was untruthful.

THE OPTION AGREEMENT OF THE 31 JANUARY 1989

12.01 On 31 January 1989, Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan entered into an agreement for the sale to Mr Gilmartin of Mr O’Callaghan’s option to purchase the Neilstown lands from Dublin Corporation for the sum of IR£3.5m. The agreement was made in the offices of Mr Gilmartin’s then solicitor, Mr Seamus Maguire. Also present on that occasion were Mr Maguire and Mr John Deane, Mr O’Callaghan’s solicitor and business partner. Mr Gilmartin’s purpose in purchasing the Option from Mr O’Callaghan was to clear the way for his proposed Quarryvale development.¹⁴

12.02 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that the agreement provided that he would pay Mr O’Callaghan IR£800,000 upfront, followed by a payment of IR£1.35m on the anniversary of the signing of the contract and a further payment of IR£1.35m when the Quarryvale lands were rezoned. Mr Gilmartin had wanted the final payment to be made subject to planning permission for the development of Quarryvale, but Mr O’Callaghan would not agree to this proposal. In his written statement to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin maintained that the final payment of IR£1.35m was to be paid when zoning had been achieved in respect of the Quarryvale lands.

12.03 Mr John Deane told the Tribunal that he prepared a draft of the agreement which was signed by the parties on 31 January 1989. He said that he brought that draft agreement to Mr Seamus Maguire’s (Mr Gilmartin’s Solicitor) office on that date, and that it had been prepared in accordance with the verbal agreement reached between Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan at their meeting in the previous month. The draft of the agreement which Mr Deane brought to Mr Maguire’s offices on 31 January 1989 was in fact a redraft of an earlier draft of the agreement prepared by Mr Deane and furnished by him to Mr Maguire on 19 January 1989 and was in fact the fourth draft of the agreement. Sometime subsequent to the verbal agreement between Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’ Callaghan being reached, Mr O’ Callaghan advised Mr Deane that instead of a straight forward agreement Mr O’ Callaghan’s interest was going to proceed by way of an option being granted to Mr Gilmartin. This first draft was identified as Draft A in the Quarryvale One Module which was forwarded to Mr Maguire on 19 of January 1989. Thereafter there were at least three different subsequent versions of the draft agreement, none of which were forwarded to Mr Maguire. Those drafts were identified as drafts B, C and D, in the Quarryvale One Module. Draft E was a further draft option agreement which was the document that Mr Deane brought to the offices of Mr Maguire in Blanchardstown at about 10:30 the morning of 31 January 1989.

¹⁴ The Merrygrove contract required that a planning application be lodged within two months of the agreement or such extended period as might be agreed. Merrygrove sued O’Callaghan Properties Ltd in early February 1989 for breach of agreement arising from their failure to lodge the necessary planning application. These proceedings were compromised later that month with the transfer of Mr Gubay’s shareholding in Merrygrove to O’Callaghan Properties Ltd.

12.04 The evidence to the Tribunal established that in the course of the meeting in Mr Maguire’s office on 31 January 1989, certain amendments were made to Mr Deane’s draft document, and a further redraft was prepared by Mr Maguire following discussion with Mr Gilmartin. A final version of the document was then typed in Mr Maguire’s office, and signed by Messrs O’Callaghan and Gilmartin in the presence of their respective Solicitors, Messrs Deane and Maguire.

12.05 Mr Deane recalled Mr Maguire advising Mr Gilmartin not to sign the agreement unless the final payment (of IR£1.35m) was made subject to the Quarryvale lands being given planning permission for development, but Mr Gilmartin rejected this advice.

12.06 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin alleged that the agreement document which was presented to him in the course of his evidence, and which had been provided to the Tribunal on the basis that it was the agreement dated 31 January 1989 entered into by Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan, was not in fact the document which he had agreed to, and had signed on that date. Mr Gilmartin stated: ‘This document I am reading here is not the document I signed, to the best of my recollection. This document bears no relationship to the document I signed.’ Mr Gilmartin acknowledged that the signature on the document was his.

12.07 In the following exchange, between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Gilmartin, Mr Gilmartin explained the basis for his belief that the executed agreement did not represent the agreed terms as between himself and Mr O’Callaghan:

‘Q. 362 Why did you not put in something to the effect that it was subject to getting zoning on the land?’

A. It was put in. [...]

Q. 367 I just want to put the remaining paragraph of Mr. O’Callaghan’s statement to you. He says: ‘Seamus Maguire later advised at the same meeting that in his opinion Tom Gilmartin would be unwise to sign any agreement which was not subject to planning permission. My solicitor, John Deane, indicated that the obtaining of planning permission by Tom Gilmartin for his Quarryvale site was not a term of the agreement and Tom Gilmartin agreed with this. Tom Gilmartin subsequently signed the option agreement unconditionally and handed over a cheque for 800,000 pounds.’

A. Yes, that has a truthful ring to it because they did object to the planning, to it being subject to planning. I don't see anything wrong with that statement by Mr. Deane because it was – they objected to the idea of it being subject to planning. They were not in control of what we were going to plan for the site. [...]

Q. 369 Do you accept that Mr. Maguire advised you that you shouldn't sign it unless it was subject to obtaining planning permission?

A. He may have done. He may have advised me because of the risk I was taking that it should be subject to planning, but I agreed with what Mr.

O'Callaghan had suggested because at that stage I had bought him and paid him for the Neilstown site and he had no control over what we were going to plan for that site. So I relented on that point.

Q. 370 So do you say that the agreement that you signed was one which provided for the payment of the 800,000 pounds there and then, which you paid over the sum of 1.35 million to be paid on the anniversary of the signing of this agreement, which we know was 31st January 1989, and a further 1.35 million to be paid when the lands were rezoned?

A. Zoning on the anniversary, our zoning, whichever were the earlier.

Q. 371 That is a change from what had been agreed, you say, on 7th December of 19—

A. Yes, it was altered at the meeting.

Q. 372 I see. So the third issue, the third condition or provision, was that a final sum of 1.35 million pounds would be paid on the obtaining of planning permission – sorry, on the zoning or on the anniversary of the – the second anniversary of the date of signing of agreement, whichever came first?

A. That's correct.

Q. 373 Is that correct?

A. That's correct.'

12.08 In his evidence, Mr O'Callaghan testified as to the terms of his agreement with Mr Gilmartin, as follows:

'I produced my plan of Balgaddy and said that, Tom said, well can we come to an arrangement and I said that we actually had a projected profit figure of 7 million pounds on that development, on Balgaddy if we proceeded with it. That's where Tom has got his figure of 7 million pounds. I told him that we were prepared to walk away from the deal and sell our interest in Balgaddy to him for 3 million pounds plus the half a million pounds that we had to give to Albert Gubay to buy out his contract. Tom agreed immediately and we shook hands on the deal. It lasted not too long. That was almost at the end of the meeting. That was based on an unconditional contract, Tom would buy Balgaddy from us, buy our interest in Balgaddy from us. In other words he was stepping into my shoes and take over the Dublin Corporation contract...Tom rang me back within a matter of days, to ask me could we change the unconditional agreement to an option agreement.'

12.09 In the course of his evidence, Mr O'Callaghan said, referring to Mr Gilmartin's claim that the written agreement did not represent what had in fact been agreed between himself and Mr Gilmartin, the following: 'As I said to you... he has his dates and everything else mixed up like that. The question of zoning and planning was never, never mentioned. It was an unconditional contract, it was then an unconditional option agreement.'

12.10 Mr O'Callaghan denied that the agreement had been altered by himself or Mr Deane, following its execution.

12.11 Undoubtedly, Mr Gilmartin was unhappy with the terms of the agreement and he expressed his dissatisfaction with those terms long before the establishment of the Tribunal, although not on the basis that the agreement had been altered after its execution. For example, in a letter dated 4 February 1991, Mr R. Edmund McMullan of Sentinel Investments (a Cayman Islands company which was then engaged in the process of locating an investor for the Quarryvale project), advised Mr Kay (of AIB) that:

We are advised by Mr. Gilmartin... that Mr. O'Callaghan and he have an agreement, which was omitted in error from their executed agreement...which stated in fact that final payment would not be due until the approval of the planning.

This letter was copied to, inter alia, Mr Gilmartin and Mr Seamus Maguire. Mr Gilmartin also told Mr Kay that the executed agreement did not represent what had been agreed between himself and Mr O'Callaghan in December 1988, and had blamed Mr Maguire for changes (which he claimed) had been made to the original verbal agreement.

12.12 In early 1996, when Mr Gilmartin was instructing his then solicitor Mr Noel Smyth in relation to certain litigation which Mr Gilmartin was contemplating at that time, Mr Smyth noted that Mr Gilmartin informed him that Mr Maguire had made an error in failing to include conditions relating to planning permission¹⁵ in the Option Agreement of 31 January 1989. Mr Gilmartin did not instruct Mr Smyth that the 31 January 1989 agreement had been altered in any fashion subsequent to his signing the document.

¹⁵ Mr Gilmartin, when giving evidence to the Tribunal, stated that he had intended to specify 'zoning', rather than 'planning permission.'

12.13 Mr Deane told the Tribunal that at the conclusion of the meeting on 31 January 1989, he took possession of the original copy of the signed agreement, and that this was one and the same document as that which was subsequently provided to the Tribunal. Mr Deane, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Maguire were all steadfast in their denial that the agreement, as executed by Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan in Mr Maguire’s office on 31 January 1989, had been subsequently altered or interfered with in any way.

12.14 Conclusions of the Tribunal in relation to the Option Agreement.

- (i) The Tribunal did not hear evidence which in any way supported Mr Gilmartin’s allegation that the Option Agreement of 31 January 1989 had been altered or interfered with following its signing on that date. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin signed the said agreement in spite of advice from his solicitor Mr Maguire that the agreement did not make the payment of the final sum of IR£1.35m conditional on planning permission being granted for the Quarryvale lands.
- (ii) The Tribunal was satisfied that, although Mr Gilmartin was clearly unhappy with aspects of the agreement signed by him on 31 January 1989, his allegation that the document had been interfered with following its signature by him was completely without foundation.

THE BUSWELLS HOTEL MEETING WITH CLLR FINBARR HANRAHAN (FF)

13.01 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he attended at Buswells Hotel in Dublin for a prearranged meeting with Cllr Hanrahan in order to lobby him to support the Quarryvale project. Mr Gilmartin had been advised by Mr Lawlor in early December 1988 that he should ensure that he had a number of identified councillors ‘on board’ if the rezoning of Quarryvale was to become a reality. One of the names provided to Mr Gilmartin by Mr Lawlor was that of Cllr Hanrahan, a councillor in the Lucan area. Following telephone contact with Cllr Hanrahan, a meeting was arranged for Buswells Hotel.

13.02 While Mr Gilmartin believed that the meeting occurred around Christmas time, and probably on the afternoon of 28 December 1988, this date was disputed by Cllr Hanrahan. It was also disputed by Mr O’Callaghan and Mr John Deane, Mr O’Callaghan’s business partner, both of whom witnessed (but did not participate in) the meeting with Cllr Hanrahan. All three believed that the meeting took place in late January or early February 1989.

13.03 According to Mr Gilmartin as he entered the bar area where the meeting took place, he observed Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Deane, Mr Ambrose Kelly, (Mr O’Callaghan’s architect), Mr Lawlor and ‘another gentleman’ at the end of the bar area.

13.04 Mr Gilmartin said that as he approached the group, Mr Lawlor disappeared from view and the man who had been with the group moved away to a corner of the bar. At this point, Mr O’Callaghan nodded towards where the man who had been with the group was now sitting, an action interpreted by Mr Gilmartin as an indication to him that this man was Cllr Hanrahan.

13.05 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that prior to his arrival at Buswells Hotel he had not informed anyone, including Mr O’Callaghan, of his scheduled meeting with Cllr Hanrahan, although Mr Gilmartin had met with Mr O’Callaghan earlier that day. Mr Gilmartin proceeded to describe his encounter with Cllr Hanrahan as follows:

‘Well, I introduced myself and I had a—I talked about the scheme we were proposing. At that time I had a little brochure and I showed it to him and I indicated that we could provide the scheme and bring the jobs et cetera, and after a general chit-chat about the scheme, he said to me, ‘Well, this is going to damage quite a few of my friends in Lucan and there’s little people there who was taking care of me over a number of years and if I am to support your scheme, I expect to get something for it’, so I says, ‘Yeah’. So he said, ‘Yeah, I want £100,000 for my support because those people have taken care of me for a number of years and they’re all going to be damaged by this scheme.’ So then he said, ‘I’ve met people like you’, or words to that effect, ‘Before who when they got what they wanted they didn’t pay up, so I want 50,000 up front’. And I said, ‘Yeah’, so I exchanged just a few words and walked out.’

13.06 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that as he left the bar at Buswells, Mr O’Callaghan asked him ‘Did he [Cllr Hanrahan] tap you?’ to which Mr Gilmartin had replied, ‘What do you think?’

13.07 According to Mr Gilmartin, those were the only words he uttered to Mr O’Callaghan relating to the demand at the time. However, he said that on a subsequent date, towards the end of January 1989, he had specifically told Mr O’Callaghan that Cllr Hanrahan had made a demand for IR£100,000.

13.08 Mr Gilmartin said that he then left the hotel and travelled to Dublin Airport and caught a flight home to Luton.

13.09 Cllr Hanrahan disputed Mr Gilmartin’s claim that the meeting took place on 28 December 1988, stating that on that date he was on holiday in Co Kerry.

13.10 Cllr Hanrahan totally rejected Mr Gilmartin’s allegation that he demanded IR£100,000 in return for his support for Quarryvale and described it as an 'outrageous lie'. He had, he claimed, agreed to meet Mr Gilmartin in Buswells Hotel as a result of Mr Gilmartin's aggressive pursuit of his support for Quarryvale through telephone calls. He met with Mr Gilmartin in order to advise him that he did not support Quarryvale and that he intended to support the designated Neilstown/Clondalkin Town Centre project.¹⁶ Cllr Hanrahan said that his meeting with Mr Gilmartin was brief and that the only mention of money came from Mr Gilmartin when he advised Cllr Hanrahan that he had made IR£200,000 profit selling sites at Bachelor's Walk in Dublin.

13.11 Cllr Hanrahan told the Tribunal that, when he made it clear to Mr Gilmartin that his Quarryvale proposal was 'far-fetched' and that he would not be supporting it, Mr Gilmartin became incensed, threatening and abusive, and that they parted on bad terms. Cllr Hanrahan said that Mr Gilmartin told him that he 'would be sorry' for not supporting the project. Cllr Hanrahan's belief was that Mr Gilmartin probably told Mr O'Callaghan of an alleged claim by him for IR£100,000 because Mr Gilmartin was 'vindictive' towards him. Furthermore, Cllr Hanrahan maintained that he had not seen either Mr O'Callaghan or Mr Deane at Buswells Hotel on the day he met with Mr Gilmartin.

13.12 In their evidence to the Tribunal, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Deane agreed that Mr Gilmartin met with Cllr Hanrahan in Buswells Hotel, and agreed that they were present in the hotel bar on the occasion in question.

13.13 According to Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Gilmartin asked him to introduce him to Cllr Hanrahan. Although Mr O'Callaghan did not claim to have set up the meeting, both he and Mr Deane maintained that, having met with Mr Gilmartin earlier in the day at Mr Gilmartin's offices, they had then accompanied him to Buswells Hotel, for the purpose of introducing him to Cllr Hanrahan. Upon entering the hotel bar Mr O'Callaghan pointed out Cllr Hanrahan to Mr Gilmartin.

13.14 Both Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Deane denied that either Mr Lawlor or Mr Kelly were in attendance in Buswells Hotel on the day. Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly also denied being present.

13.15 There was a stark conflict between the evidence of Mr Gilmartin on the one hand and the evidence of Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Deane on the other hand, as to what occurred in the immediate aftermath of Mr Gilmartin's meeting with Cllr Hanrahan. This conflict extended to Mr Gilmartin's claim that although he told Mr O'Callaghan of the demand for IR£100,000 from Cllr Hanrahan, he did not do so until some weeks later.

¹⁶ However, Cllr Hanrahan would go on to give support to the Quarryvale rezoning in May 1991. By December 1992 he was no longer supportive of the project.

13.16 According to Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Gilmartin did not get a taxi to Dublin Airport following his exit from Buswells Hotel, but rather he and Mr Gilmartin had walked to the Shelbourne Hotel and dined together. Also, Mr O’Callaghan specifically disputed Mr Gilmartin’s version of what occurred between them immediately after Mr Gilmartin’s encounter with Cllr Hanrahan. According to Mr O’Callaghan, some fifteen minutes or so after Mr Gilmartin had gone to speak with Cllr Hanrahan, he, Mr O’Callaghan, had seen Mr Gilmartin exit the hotel ‘in a bit of a huff’. He followed him out on to the street where Mr Gilmartin ‘was looking ruffled’, and was clearly upset. There and then according to Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Gilmartin told him of Cllr Hanrahan’s demand for IR£100,000. Mr O’Callaghan denied that he uttered the words ‘did he tap you?’ to Mr Gilmartin, eliciting the response from Mr Gilmartin ‘what do you think?’

13.17 Mr Deane recollected having been informed by Mr O’Callaghan on the street outside Buswells Hotel that Mr Gilmartin had told him that Cllr Hanrahan had sought IR£100,000. While Mr Deane had not spoken to Mr Gilmartin it was clear to him that Mr Gilmartin was ‘annoyed’. Mr Deane said he was ‘shocked’ at what Mr O’Callaghan had told him in relation to a demand for money.

13.18 Mr O’Callaghan was challenged in the course of cross-examination about his claim that he disbelieved Mr Gilmartin’s allegation that Cllr Hanrahan had sought IR£100,000 from him.

13.19 In response to a series of questions on the topic put to him by Mr Donal O’Donnell SC, Counsel for Mr Gilmartin, Mr O’Callaghan said he found it difficult to decide if it was his belief that Mr Gilmartin’s allegation on this issue was untrue or exaggerated. When asked by Mr O’Donnell to elicit which of these descriptions represented his view, Mr O’Callaghan responded: ‘Difficult to call that. Exaggerated I would say.’ Mr O’Callaghan also commented ‘I did not believe him totally when he said it to me.’

THE TRIBUNAL’S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE BUSWELLS HOTEL MEETING

14.01 In seeking to determine the circumstances of the Buswells Hotel meeting, and in particular, what was said as between Mr Gilmartin and Cllr Hanrahan, the Tribunal identified the following issues for particular consideration:

- 1) The likely date of the meeting.
- 2) The likely explanation for Mr O’Callaghan’s and Mr Deane’s presence in Buswells Hotel on the day in question.
- 3) Whether Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly were present in the hotel at the time of Mr Gilmartin’s arrival.

- 4) Whether, Cllr Hanrahan demanded IR£100,000 from Mr Gilmartin.
- 5) If such a demand was in fact made, what, if anything, did Mr Gilmartin tell Mr O'Callaghan about that demand immediately after it was made.

THE LIKELY DATE OF THE MEETING

14.02 The Tribunal believed that the meeting between Mr Gilmartin and Cllr Hanrahan took place towards the end of January 1989, or early February 1989, rather than on 28 December 1988, as claimed by Mr Gilmartin. It may well have been the case that it was on 28 December 1988 in Buswells Hotel that Mr Gilmartin obtained the names of a number of councillors including that of Cllr Hanrahan from Mr Lawlor and that Mr Gilmartin confused the date of that encounter and the date of the Hanrahan meeting.

THE LIKELY EXPLANATION FOR THE PRESENCE IN BUSWELLS HOTEL OF MR O'CALLAGHAN AND MR DEANE

14.03 The Tribunal did not accept Mr O'Callaghan's explanation that his attendance in Buswells was because he had been asked by Mr Gilmartin to introduce him to Cllr Hanrahan. Had such a request been made, the Tribunal believed that, rather than the casual 'introduction' to Cllr Hanrahan by Mr O'Callaghan, he would in all probability have brought Mr Gilmartin over to Cllr Hanrahan and effected a formal introduction. The Tribunal believed it likely that Mr O'Callaghan was present in Buswells on that day of his own volition.

MR GILMARTIN'S CLAIM THAT MR LAWLOR AND MR AMBROSE KELLY WERE IN ATTENDANCE

14.04 The Tribunal believed that Mr Lawlor was in attendance in Buswells Hotel on the day in question, at least fleetingly. The Tribunal saw no reason to disbelieve Mr Gilmartin's evidence on this issue, and was in any event aware of Mr Lawlor's propensity to turn up at meetings Mr Gilmartin scheduled with third parties. Similarly, the Tribunal believed that Mr Kelly was in attendance and in the company of Messrs O'Callaghan and Deane on the occasion in question. In arriving at such a conclusion the Tribunal noted Mr O'Callaghan's evidence that on the day of the meeting, he was, in all probability, in Dublin to inform Mr Kelly that his Neilstown/Clondalkin project, in respect of which he had retained Mr Kelly's architectural services, would not proceed because of the agreement that he had concluded with Mr Gilmartin in relation to the option to purchase the Neilstown lands.

DID CLLR HANRAHAN, AS ALLEGED, DEMAND IR£100,000 FROM MR GILMARTIN?

14.05 The Tribunal was satisfied that, in the course of the meeting that took place between Mr Gilmartin and Cllr Hanrahan in Buswells Hotel, Cllr Hanrahan demanded IR£100,000 in return for his support for Quarryvale and that he sought IR£50,000 of this ‘up front’. This demand was undoubtedly corrupt.

14.06 The Tribunal rejected Cllr Hanrahan’s account of the meeting and the events leading up to it almost in its entirety. Furthermore, the Tribunal rejected Cllr Hanrahan’s contention that the claim being made by Mr Gilmartin was as a result of Mr Gilmartin’s vindictiveness because Cllr Hanrahan had declined to support the Quarryvale project. The Tribunal preferred the account provided to it by Mr Gilmartin as to what was said between the two men, to that provided by Cllr Hanrahan.

14.07 Evidence given by a number of witnesses assisted the Tribunal in arriving at its determination that Mr Gilmartin was credible in relation to the claim he made regarding Cllr Hanrahan. In particular:

- 1) Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that, almost immediately following Mr Gilmartin’s short encounter with Cllr Hanrahan, he was made aware of Cllr Hanrahan’s IR£100,000 demand by an upset and angry Mr Gilmartin, whose agitated demeanour was also noted by Mr Deane. Furthermore, the Tribunal was satisfied that within a relatively short period following the Buswells Hotel meeting, Mr Gilmartin relayed to a number of individuals, both formally and informally, the fact of a demand for IR£100,000 having been made to him by Cllr Hanrahan.
- 2) The Tribunal accepted Mr Sheeran’s evidence that he was informed by Mr Gilmartin of Cllr Hanrahan’s demand for IR£100,000, fairly soon after its occurrence. Likewise, the Tribunal was satisfied that this information was conveyed to Mr McLoone by Mr Gilmartin, probably around the time Mr Gilmartin was in contact with Mr Haughey and Mr Feely. While Mr McLoone, in evidence, was loath to name Cllr Hanrahan as the person about whom the allegation was made as he said that he could not specifically recall the name given to him by Mr Gilmartin in 1989, the Tribunal was satisfied that it was Cllr Hanrahan’s name that was, with others, identified to Mr McLoone by Mr Gilmartin in 1989.
- 3) The memorandum dated 28 February 1989 compiled by Mr Feely and Mr Haughey, following Mr Gilmartin’s complaints on 24 February 1989 (at most some three and a half weeks or so after the meeting in Buswells) recorded the following: ‘Cllr H. asked for £100,000 in a brown paper bag—notes—no cheques'. Mr Feely told the Tribunal that when he met with Mr Gilmartin on 24 February 1989, he understood Mr Gilmartin to have made the aforementioned complaint against Cllr Hanrahan.

- 4) On 3 March 1989, Mr Pádraig Flynn apprised the Minister for Justice (as per the memorandum of 3 March 1989 prepared by Mr Matthews) of the nature of Mr Gilmartin's then complaints, as relayed to him by Mr Seán Haughey and Mr Feely on 28 February 1989, some four days following their meeting with Mr Gilmartin.
- 5) The Tribunal was equally satisfied, having regard to Chief Superintendent Sreenan's handwritten note prepared prior to his telephone call of 4 March 1989, to Mr Gilmartin, and having regard to the evidence of Superintendent Burns, that by 4 March 1989 the Gardaí had been apprised, via Mr Matthews' memorandum, that Cllr Hanrahan had been identified by Mr Gilmartin in the context of county councillors who had sought money from him.
- 6) Mr Seán Sherwin recalled in evidence being told by Mr Gilmartin in or about October/November 1990, of Cllr Hanrahan's demand for IR£100,000, in return for the latter's support for Quarryvale, and of Mr Gilmartin's refusal to pay. Mr Sherwin told the Tribunal that he was initially informed by Mr Colm Scallon that Mr Gilmartin was experiencing difficulties with his development project and might not proceed with it.
- 7) According to Mr Gilmartin, he told Mr Scallon of this, and other matters, and that it had been Mr Scallon who had brought Mr Gilmartin to Mr Sherwin. Notwithstanding Mr Scallon's lack of recollection of having been told by Mr Gilmartin about Cllr Hanrahan's demand, the Tribunal was satisfied, as a matter of probability, that Mr Scallon was made aware in a general way of this, and other complaints, by Mr Gilmartin in 1990, and that these matters most likely prompted Mr Scallon to arrange the meeting with Mr Sherwin.

THE MANNER IN WHICH CLLR HANRAHAN'S DEMAND WAS RELAYED BY MR GILMARTIN TO MR O'CALLAGHAN?

14.08 The Tribunal was satisfied that either as Mr Gilmartin left the bar area of the hotel, or immediately thereafter on the street outside the hotel, Mr O'Callaghan asked him if Cllr Hanrahan had sought money from him. Mr O'Callaghan may or may not have used the precise words 'did he tap you'.

14.09 The Tribunal was further satisfied that at some stage during their discussions, either in the hotel bar, on the street outside or later that evening, Mr Gilmartin informed Mr O’Callaghan of the precise demand made by Cllr Hanrahan.

MR O’CALLAGHAN’S ACTIONS SUBSEQUENT TO THE BUSWELLS MEETING

14.10 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that he did not, when questioned in the course of the subsequent Garda Corruption Inquiry, inform Superintendent Burns of Mr Gilmartin’s allegation. This was notwithstanding the facts that: he was present in Buswells Hotel on the day Mr Gilmartin met Cllr Hanrahan: he acknowledged that Mr Gilmartin was visibly upset and angry immediately following that meeting; and that Mr Gilmartin told him there and then of Cllr Hanrahan’s demand for IR£100,000. According to Mr O’Callaghan he did relay to Superintendent Burns allegations made to him by Mr Gilmartin concerning Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond.

14.11 Mr O’Callaghan’s explanation to the Tribunal for this non-disclosure to the Gardaí of Mr Gilmartin’s allegation against Cllr Hanrahan (information which, according to Superintendent Burns, in evidence, would have been of assistance to the inquiry given Mr O’Callaghan’s proximity to the alleged events) was that he did not ‘fully believe’ Mr Gilmartin and thus did not wish to promote rumour and scandal.

14.12 The Tribunal found this explanation by Mr O’Callaghan to lack credibility having regard to the fact that Mr O’Callaghan experienced no such reluctance in imparting to Superintendent Burns complaints Mr Gilmartin had made to him regarding Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond. In each case, Mr Gilmartin had made allegations of corrupt demands for substantial money relating to Quarryvale involving elected politicians and a senior county council official. It appeared to the Tribunal that the most credible reason for Mr O’Callaghan’s reluctance to inform the Gardaí of Mr Gilmartin’s complaints regarding Cllr Hanrahan was a conscious decision on his part to protect Cllr Hanrahan. In particular, Cllr Hanrahan was well-known to Mr O’Callaghan at the time of the Buswells demand.

14.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that, on being informed by Mr Gilmartin of Cllr Hanrahan’s demand of him for IR£100,000, Mr O’Callaghan believed and accepted the allegation as being true. In the circumstances, the Tribunal saw no reason why Mr O’Callaghan would have believed otherwise.

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S RELATIONSHIP WITH CLLR FINBARR HANRAHAN PRIOR TO 1989

15.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that by the end of 1988, and prior to Mr Gilmartin ever having met with Cllr Hanrahan, Mr O'Callaghan and Cllr Hanrahan were well known to each other. In May 1988, Cllr Hanrahan was approached, in his capacity as a county councillor for West Dublin, for the purposes of obtaining his signature to a Section 4 motion in respect of the lands at Cooldrinagh, Lucan, where Mr O'Callaghan was proposing to develop a shopping centre. Cllr Hanrahan duly signed the motion, together with two other county councillors. The Tribunal was satisfied that at that time and for that purpose, a direct approach was made to Cllr Hanrahan by Mr O'Callaghan and/or an agent acting on his behalf. That Section 4 application was withdrawn in June of 1988. However, it was clear to the Tribunal, from a perusal of the memorandum dated 4 November 1988, compiled by Mr O'Callaghan, that Mr O'Callaghan and Cllr Hanrahan also had a shared interest in other matters ongoing in Dublin at that time.

15.02 It was common case that by early November 1988, Mr O'Callaghan had acquired the Neilstown/Balgaddy lands – the site of the designated town centre for West Dublin as proposed by the county council and planners. According to Cllr Hanrahan it was this site that he told Mr Gilmartin he was supporting in preference to Mr Gilmartin's Quarryvale site, when approached by Mr Gilmartin in Buswells Hotel. Yet it was not primarily Mr O'Callaghan's plan for the Neilstown/Balgaddy site which was the subject of discussion between Mr O'Callaghan and Cllr Hanrahan in November 1988, as detailed by Mr O'Callaghan's memorandum of 4 November 1988. Rather, it was Mr Gilmartin's acquisition of the Sharpe lands (part of the Quarryvale site), and the efforts then underway to secure an entrance from those lands on to the Galway road¹⁷ which were the subject of discussion between the two men on 2 November 1988. Mr O'Callaghan's memorandum, inter alia, recorded as follows:

I spoke to Finbarr Hanrahan this morning in Cork. Finbarr was our main supporter in Lucan and it was he who told me about the Gilmartin site some three months ago. As you know Gilmartin has an option on this site which is owned by Paul Sharpe. The land was zoned industrial and is now zoned residential. Dublin County Councillors put a section 4 through instructing Dublin County Council officials to give Gilmartin an entrance onto the Galway road. The County Manager refused to carry out this instruction and the High Court ruled against him some months ago. The case is now with the Supreme Court and a decision will be made on Tuesday next 8th November. Hanrahan is confident the decision will be in favour of Gilmartin and the Councillors. All Gilmartin has then to do is get a change of use to retail. This site is obviously a better location than Clondalkin.

15.03 The Tribunal considered Mr O’Callaghan’s memorandum to be evidence of ongoing communication and of close contact with Cllr Hanrahan in relation to a number of matters, including Mr Gilmartin’s plans for Quarryvale. It was evident that at this time, Mr O’Callaghan perceived Cllr Hanrahan as a close confidant and an important contact, in his capacity as an elected county councillor in West County Dublin.

MR LAWLOR’S DEMAND FOR AN INTEREST IN QUARRYVALE

16.01 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin alleged that Mr Lawlor, on two occasions, made demands for an interest or share in Mr Gilmartin’s Quarryvale project. Mr Gilmartin said that Mr Lawlor had requested a 20 per cent interest in Quarryvale in the autumn of 1988, while the two men were walking the Quarryvale lands. Mr Gilmartin regarded Mr Lawlor’s claim as ‘grossly exorbitant.’ When making the demand Mr Lawlor was already the recipient of a monthly payment of IR£3,500, on foot of the arrangement he had entered into with Arlington Securities Plc regarding his ‘consultancy’ work in relation to the Bachelor’s Walk proposal.

16.02 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that the second such request by Mr Lawlor was made in the course of a meeting he had with Mr Lawlor at the latter’s home, on which occasion Mr Gilmartin had been accompanied by his advisor, Mr Forman. Mr Forman, in evidence, confirmed having attended a meeting with Mr Lawlor at the latter’s home and his recollection that this meeting had occurred sometime in 1988, but in any event at a relatively early stage of the Quarryvale project. It was the recollection of both Mr Gilmartin and Mr Forman that at this meeting Mr Lawlor had impressed upon them his knowledge of land in West County Dublin, and the importance of his, Mr Lawlor’s, role in advancing any plans Mr Gilmartin might have for such lands.

16.03 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that as he and Mr Forman prepared to leave the meeting, Mr Lawlor called him aside to have a private word with him. Mr Forman agreed that this had occurred. According to Mr Gilmartin, Mr Lawlor stated that ‘he had to have a 20 per cent stake in it [Quarryvale] otherwise I [Mr Gilmartin] wasn’t going anywhere.’ Mr Gilmartin described his response to Mr Lawlor as ‘unrepeatable’. Mr Lawlor was told in no uncertain terms that he was not getting any such interest. Mr Forman told the Tribunal that although Mr Gilmartin had not confided in him at the time, he was made aware of Mr Lawlor’s demand by Mr Gilmartin at a later stage, probably in the early 1990s.

16.04 Mr Gilmartin subsequently went on to inform Mr Sheeran and Mr McLoone of Mr Lawlor’s demand for a stake in the Quarryvale project. Both men confirmed in the course of their evidence having been told by Mr Gilmartin of Mr Lawlor’s demands.

16.05 Mr Lawlor denied ever making a request or a demand for a stake in Quarryvale from Mr Gilmartin.

16.06 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor did, as claimed by Mr Gilmartin, seek a 20 per cent stake of the Quarryvale project from him on two separate occasions. Such demands were corrupt, having regard to Mr Lawlor’s position as an elected public representative.

16.07 Such requests by Mr Lawlor were consistent with his demand for a payment of IR£100,000 for himself and something for Mr Redmond in the course of the meeting in May or June 1988 with Mr Gilmartin and Mr Redmond, and with his demands of Mr Gilmartin and of Arlington Securities in relation to the Bachelor’s Walk project.

THE LEINSTER HOUSE MEETING

17.01 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that on a date in early February 1989, probably 1 February or possibly 2 February, he attended a meeting with a number of Government ministers and the then Taoiseach, Mr Charles J. Haughey in Leinster House.

17.02 Mr Gilmartin said that some short time prior to this meeting, at the end of January 1989, he received a telephone call from Mr Lawlor who informed him that ‘his boss’ (a reference to the Taoiseach) wished to meet him. Mr Gilmartin wrote the following references into his notebook for Wednesday 1 February 1989: ‘5:30 meeting with Ministers. At Dáil Eireann in (Leinster House)’ and ‘Meet Mr L. Lawlor at Buswells Hotel.’

17.03 Having regard to the aforesaid diary/notebook entries, Mr Gilmartin believed the meeting to have taken place on 1 February 1989. He was not, however, categorical as to the date but he was adamant that it took place in the early days of February 1989.

17.04 Mr Gilmartin said he arranged to meet Mr Lawlor in Buswells Hotel on the day of the meeting. Arriving some 20 minutes late, Mr Lawlor beckoned to Mr Gilmartin, whereupon Mr Gilmartin followed Mr Lawlor through the open gates of Leinster House, and into the Dáil lobby.

17.05 Mr Gilmartin said that he then accompanied Mr Lawlor down a ‘long hallway’ towards a lift where they encountered Mr Ray Burke, the then Minister for Industry and Commerce, and the Minister for Communications. Mr Lawlor cursorily introduced Mr Gilmartin to Mr Burke who, while he acknowledged Mr Gilmartin, did not speak to him. Mr Lawlor and Mr Burke engaged in conversation in the lift. Exiting the lift on an upper floor, Mr Lawlor and Mr Gilmartin turned right and travelled along a gangway past partitioned offices on either side towards a lobby area. Mr Gilmartin described being ushered by Mr Lawlor into a room through dark oak double doors. Mr Lawlor remained outside as Mr Gilmartin entered the room.

17.06 Mr Gilmartin then proceeded to describe the actual meeting with a number of Government personnel. He stated that in the room there was a large rectangular table and that Mr Pádraig Flynn, Minister for the Environment, sat at the top left hand corner of the table. Beside Mr Flynn was Mr Albert Reynolds, Minister for Finance. Beside Mr Reynolds was a man whom Mr Gilmartin believed might have been Mr Gerard Collins, Minister for Justice. Seated at the right hand side of the table were Mr Bertie Ahern, Minister for Labour, Mr Brian Lenihan, Tánaiste and Minister for Foreign Affairs and Mr Seamus Brennan, Minister of State at the Department of Industry and Commerce. Standing behind Mr Brennan was a man whom Mr Gilmartin did not recognise and to whom he was not introduced. According to Mr Gilmartin, Mr Ahern, Mr Brennan and Mr Lenihan greeted him on his arrival into the room.

17.07 Mr Gilmartin then described how Mr Burke (whom he had met earlier in the lift with Mr Lawlor) entered the room through a door located in the middle of the room, followed by the Taoiseach, Mr Haughey. Mr Haughey proceeded to walk around the table to where Mr Gilmartin stood and after Mr Flynn’s introduction Mr Haughey’s first words to Mr Gilmartin were ‘I know you, you’re Gilmartin from Lislary.’¹⁸ Mr Haughey chatted to Mr Gilmartin about his two schemes (Bachelor’s Walk and Quarryvale) and complimented him for bringing such schemes to Ireland at a time when jobs were desperately needed. Mr Gilmartin was given assurances by Mr Haughey that there would be no obstacles to his plans.

17.08 In the course of the conversation, Mr Gilmartin mentioned to Mr Haughey that he knew Mr Seán Haughey (the senior official with Dublin County Council). Mr Haughey had taken this to be a reference to his son, Mr Seán Haughey, rather than to his brother, and had proceeded to tell Mr Gilmartin that his son was, or was about to become, Lord Mayor of Dublin, and encouraged Mr Gilmartin to call to the Mansion House. Mr Haughey ended his conversation with Mr Gilmartin by enquiring ‘if Liam was taking good care of me’ (a reference to Mr Lawlor).

17.09 Mr Gilmartin also told the Tribunal that, at some point while he was in the room another Government minister, Mrs Mary O’Rourke (then Minister for Education) entered through the same door as had been used by Mr Burke and Mr Haughey. Mr Flynn proceeded to introduce her to Mr Gilmartin at whom she nodded before exiting the room.

17.10 Mr Gilmartin recalled being ushered out of the room by, he believed, the unidentified man who had been standing behind Mr Brennan.

17.11 Mr Gilmartin described the meeting as having been informal, and relatively brief.

THE IR£5 MILLION DEMAND

18.01 Mr Gilmartin said that as he left the meeting room and entered into a lobby area, he observed Mr Lawlor and another man in conversation to his left. Yet another unidentified man then approached him from his right-hand side. Mr Gilmartin alleged that this unidentified individual demanded that, in return for the assistance that Mr Gilmartin was going to receive in relation to his Bachelor’s Walk and Quarryvale projects, he was to deposit IR£5m into a bank account in the Isle of Man. Mr Gilmartin described the man as shorter in stature than himself with ‘salt and pepper’ short cropped hair. He was well groomed and well spoken and was wearing a Magee-type tweed jacket.

18.02 Mr Gilmartin graphically described the encounter between himself and this unidentified man in the following terms:

‘Well, he approached me, I looked around, and he approached me and he said ‘Do you realise that you’re going to get every assistance to get these two projects off the ground’ and I says, ‘Well, I am bringing in—it’s a major investment that I’m bringing into Ireland, so I would expect that they would be happy to see it under the current economy’, and he says to me, ‘You also—we’re all aware that you are going to make hundreds of millions out of these two projects, and I says, ‘Well not me. Whoever invests in it. It won’t be me that will make the hundreds of millions’, and he said to me, ‘Well, we think that you should give us some of that money upfront’ so I says ‘Yeah’, and he says, ‘Yes, we would like you to deposit 5 million pound before you start’, and I says ‘What do you mean?’ and he says, ‘Well, we want you to deposit 5 million pounds and we want it deposited into an Isle of Man account’ and I says, ‘Oh, yeah, that’s not much', or some words to that effect, you know, 'That's not a lot', and with that he had his hand in his jacket pocket and he took out this piece of paper about that long [indicates] a striped piece of paper and it was about an inch and a half wide, and he says, 'I want you to deposit the money into that account', so he seemed to think that I was already au fait with what he was saying to me, and when I looked at the paper and all that, I turned to him and I told him 'You people make the so and so Mafia look like monks'. I said, 'You're not serious are you?', and I walked away . . . He sort of tapped me on the hand but actually he grabbed me by the hand, and I think he was attempting to get the piece of paper, because I held onto the piece of paper, and I think—he may have been, and he says 'You so and so could wind up in the Liffey for that statement', so I told him to so and so off and walked on.'

18.03 Mr Gilmartin stated that although Mr Lawlor had been in the lobby when he was approached by the said unidentified man, by the time Mr Gilmartin and this person had concluded their conversation, Mr Lawlor was no longer present in the lobby. Mr Gilmartin next observed Mr Lawlor in the downstairs area of the Dáil as Mr Gilmartin was leaving the building. Mr Lawlor did not acknowledge Mr Gilmartin at this time. Some days later, Mr Gilmartin said that he raised the incident with Mr Lawlor, and asked him to identify the individual who had approached him in the lobby area and demanded IR£5m from him. Mr Lawlor, according to Mr Gilmartin, claimed not to have seen any such individual, and claimed that he had no recollection of anyone approaching Mr Gilmartin in his presence.

18.04 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he assumed that the approach to him with the demand for IR£5m was in some way connected to Mr Lawlor and Mr Charles J. Haughey.

18.05 Mr Gilmartin's further evidence to the Tribunal on this issue stated that as he prepared to leave the lobby area and proceed towards the lift, following his encounter with the unidentified man and the IR£5m demand, Mr Seán Walsh¹⁹ approached him and took him to his office where he warned him about Mr Lawlor, claiming that Mr Gilmartin was being 'set up' by Mr Lawlor. Mr Walsh also named other councillors (including Cllr Finbarr Hanrahan) and the Dublin Assistant City and County Manager, Mr Redmond, in the context, as understood by Mr Gilmartin, of warning him about individuals, as Mr Walsh suggested, he 'needed to watch out for.'

¹⁹ The late Mr Seán Walsh was a TD for Dublin South West.

18.06 Mr Gilmartin said that Mr Walsh said to him: ‘Remember, you are being shafted, you are being set up’ and ‘you must watch your back.’

THE RESPONSES OF THOSE IDENTIFIED BY MR GILMARTIN AS BEING IN ATTENDANCE AT THE LEINSTER HOUSE MEETING

19.01 All of the persons whom Mr Gilmartin had identified as being present at the Leinster House meeting (save for Mr Haughey and Mr Lenihan), gave evidence to the Tribunal. With the exception of Mrs O’Rourke, all claimed to have no recollection of attending such a meeting, as described by Mr Gilmartin, and some maintained that no such meeting had in fact occurred.

19.02 Mr Ahern, in the course of his evidence, accepted that, as a general principle, an informal meeting (or in Mr Ahern’s words a ‘chit chat’ meeting), as described by Mr Gilmartin, could have taken place, but he claimed to have no recollection of being present at such a meeting and that it was his ‘firm belief’ that he had not attended any such meeting. Mr Ahern queried, in particular, Mr Gilmartin’s description of the location of the meeting. Mr Ahern believed that while informal meetings regularly took place on the first floor ministerial corridor of Leinster House, the then Taoiseach, Mr Haughey did not have an office on that floor in 1989.

19.03 An entry in Mr Ahern’s diary for 5pm on 1 February 1989, placed him at a certificate presentation ceremony in Glasnevin, therefore suggesting that it was impossible for him to have been in Leinster House at the time identified by Mr Gilmartin. Mr Ahern’s diary for 2 February 1989, placed him in Leinster House at a 3pm meeting with Dublin Corporation and County Council officials in relation to urban renewal, a meeting also attended by the Taoiseach and other ministers. A 5.25pm entry in his diary on that date referred to the expected arrival at Dublin Airport of a UK minister, Mr John Cope, although Mr Ahern could not say if he attended at Dublin Airport to greet him.

19.04 Mr Burke had no recollection of being in attendance at the meeting, as described by Mr Gilmartin, on either 1 or 2 February 1989. Mr Burke agreed that delegations regularly met ministers on the first floor ministerial corridor in Leinster House and he was of the belief that Mr Haughey may have had an office on that floor in 1989. Mr Burke said that his ministerial diary indicated that he was not in Leinster House ‘at the times that are being spoken about’ on either date.

19.05 Mr Brennan stated that he was satisfied he did not attend a meeting such as that described by Mr Gilmartin. As a junior minister at the time he had no reason to meet with Mr Gilmartin. Mr Brennan's belief was that he first met Mr Gilmartin in September 1989. Mr Brennan was in the vicinity of Leinster House on 1 and 2 February 1989.

19.06 Mr Reynolds said he had no recollection of attending any meeting when Mr Haughey and a group of ministers met with Mr Gilmartin. Mr Reynolds did agree that informal meetings between ministers and third parties regularly took place on the first floor ministerial corridor. He was in the precincts of Leinster House on 1 and 2 February 1989.

19.07 Mr Collins was of the belief that he did not attend a meeting such as that described by Mr Gilmartin, and he was satisfied that he had never met Mr Gilmartin. Mr Collins told the Tribunal that if such a meeting took place, it was likely to have been on the first floor ministerial corridor and he was of the belief that in 1989, Mr Haughey had a temporary office connected by a corridor to this area.

19.08 Mr Flynn maintained that he had no recollection of being in attendance at the meeting described by Mr Gilmartin, and he maintained that the meeting did not happen, having regard to Mr Gilmartin's description of the location of the meeting and his description of his access to it.

19.09 Mrs O'Rourke, however, told the Tribunal that she had a clear recollection of a brief meeting with Mr Gilmartin, such as that described by him. She recalled that the meeting was attended by the then Taoiseach, Mr Charles J. Haughey and a number of other ministers including Mr Flynn, Mr Burke, Mr Lenihan and Mr Ahern. She believed that the meeting took place on some date between the beginning of February and 18 March 1989.

19.10 Mrs O'Rourke provided a detailed description to the Tribunal of being in her office on the first floor ministerial corridor at Leinster House, when Mr Flynn invited her to accompany him to meet Mr Gilmartin. Mrs O'Rourke had a particular recollection of this and it was 'etched in her mind', because Mr Flynn had mentioned that Mr Gilmartin was originally from Sligo and in that context made a kind remark about Mrs O'Rourke's then recently deceased mother, who was also from Sligo. Mrs O'Rourke's sojourn in the room was brief, and her introduction to Mr Gilmartin perfunctory. Nevertheless, according to Mrs O'Rourke, because of Mr Flynn's 'larger than life' persona, she was able to recall the declamatory tone in which he had introduced her to Mr Gilmartin.

19.11 Mr Lawlor denied arranging the meeting or bringing Mr Gilmartin to the meeting at Leinster House. He said that Mr Charles J. Haughey did not request him to arrange such a meeting and that he had not met Mr Gilmartin in Buswells Hotel on the day in question, although he accepted that he did occasionally meet with him at that location. Mr Lawlor suggested that it may well have been the case that, on an occasion when Mr Gilmartin was meeting with Mr Flynn in Leinster House they may have encountered Mr Haughey and other ministers in an informal way on the first floor ministerial corridor. Mr Lawlor also denied any knowledge of the demand for IR£5m. Mr Lawlor accused Mr Gilmartin of making 'wild, wicked allegations.'

19.12 Mr Gilmartin was subjected to lengthy and on occasion, distinctly aggressive, cross-examination by a number of parties in relation to the informal meeting at Leinster House described by him. Indeed, Mr Ahern's Senior Counsel suggested to Mr Gilmartin that his evidence about the Leinster House meeting was an 'utter invention' on his part.

19.13 Moreover, Mr Gilmartin was challenged about the marked inconsistencies between his sworn testimony, stating that an unidentified man had made the demand for IR£5m, and the information recalled by some of the individuals to whom Mr Gilmartin relayed allegations of demands for money made of him.

19.14 On 28 February 1989, following an interview with Mr Gilmartin (on 24 February 1989), Mr Feely, Dublin City and County Manager, recorded the following note:

[Mr Gilmartin] also said that LL [a reference to Mr Lawlor] asked for £5m to be paid into a bank account in the Isle of Man, in respect of his support for a development which [Mr Gilmartin] proposed at Irishtown, which would represent a material contravention of the County Plan.

19.15 Mr Feely told the Tribunal that he understood Mr Gilmartin to have alleged to him that Mr Lawlor himself had made the IR£5m demand.

19.16 Chief Superintendent Sreenan told the Tribunal that, in the course of a telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin on 9 March 1989, he understood Mr Gilmartin to complain, inter alia, that Mr Lawlor had sought IR£5m from him to be paid into an offshore account. Chief Superintendent Sreenan claimed that his rough notes of that meeting, as later transposed into a more readable format in 2004, recorded:

There is money being paid to one fellow who threatened that if the investment was to get off the ground he is getting three and a half grand per month, blackmail money. Arlington got scared and I opposed and refused and told the Government he was a gangster. He walked into

Arlington and put a proposition on the table a year ago and since June 1988 has been getting his payoff. He wanted 5 million in an offshore account, then a 10% stake in Bachelor's Walk deal or it might not get off the ground, and he was supposed to be speaking on behalf of the Government. He came to us on the basis that the Government had instructed him to help get the deal done. I only met him about a year ago.

19.17 Mr Gilmartin vehemently denied that he had ever stated to anyone that it was Mr Lawlor who had made the demand for the IR£5m. He strongly asserted that it was not Mr Lawlor who had made such a demand, nor was it Mr Lawlor who had threatened that Mr Gilmartin could 'wind up in the Liffey'. It was Mr Gilmartin's contention that both Mr Feely and Chief Superintendent Sreenan had misunderstood the information he had relayed to them concerning the IR£5m demand in that they erroneously believed that Mr Gilmartin had identified Mr Lawlor as the individual who had demanded £5m.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE LEINSTER HOUSE MEETING AND THE IR£5M DEMAND

20.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin did, as he claimed, meet the then Taoiseach and a number of Government ministers in Leinster House, and that this meeting took place in the early days of February 1989.

20.02 The Tribunal rejected as untruthful Mr Lawlor's evidence to the effect that the Leinster House meeting did not take place, and that Mr Gilmartin had made up his evidence in relation to it. It also rejected the allegation made by Mr Ahern, through his Counsel, that Mr Gilmartin had invented the meeting. The Tribunal was satisfied that: the said meeting at Leinster House was organised by Mr Lawlor; Mr Lawlor brought Mr Gilmartin into Leinster House and to the room where the meeting took place; and Mr Lawlor waited outside the room during the course of the meeting. The Tribunal was satisfied that the meeting was brief and informal.

20.03 The Tribunal concluded that those whom Mr Gilmartin met at the meeting in question included Mr Haughey, Mr Ahern, Mr Reynolds, Mr Flynn, Mr Lenihan, Mr Burke, Mr Brennan, Mrs O'Rourke and Mr Collins.

20.04 Assisted by information given by Mr Burke, Mr Collins and Mrs O'Rourke as to the layout of the first floor ministerial corridor in or about February 1989, the Tribunal was reasonably satisfied that the meeting room where Mr Gilmartin met with Mr Haughey and the ministers was located on the first floor of Leinster House.

20.05 The Tribunal in particular noted, and accepted, the clear recollection Mrs O'Rourke had of the meeting and, in particular, her vivid memory of Mr Flynn having invited her to join the meeting and the manner in which he effected his albeit perfunctory introduction to her of Mr Gilmartin. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mrs O'Rourke's evidence in relation to the meeting was entirely truthful.

20.06 The Tribunal accepted as truthful and accurate Mr Gilmartin's evidence as to what had occurred in the lobby area immediately outside the meeting room shortly after the conclusion of the meeting. In particular, the Tribunal accepted that Mr Gilmartin was approached by an unidentified individual and was requested to pay a sum of IR£5m into an offshore account. This demand was undeniably corrupt. The Tribunal was satisfied that at the beginning of this encounter, Mr Gilmartin did see Mr Lawlor standing nearby and that Mr Lawlor had left the lobby area by the time the encounter had concluded.

20.07 Notwithstanding the fact that several of the persons Mr Gilmartin told of the demand for IR£5 million understood that Mr Lawlor himself made the demand, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin gave truthful evidence when he stated that he was asked for IR£5m by a man unknown to him rather than by Mr Lawlor. In particular, there was no apparent reason for Mr Gilmartin to claim that the demand had been made by someone other than Mr Lawlor if this was not the case. In addition, Mr Gilmartin had no hesitation in making complaints about Mr Lawlor as evidenced by the myriad of other complaints made by him. The Tribunal also noted that Mr Gilmartin's evidence was consistent with what he told Mr Sheeran shortly after the meeting, as set out below.

20.09 The Tribunal believed it altogether possible that the persons to whom Mr Gilmartin recounted the story of the demand may either have assumed that Mr Lawlor made the demand, given his role in arranging the meeting and his presence in the lobby around the time the demand was made, or misunderstood what Mr Gilmartin was in fact saying, possibly due to a lack of clarity on Mr Gilmartin's part.

20.09 In the course of his sworn testimony to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin described how, in 1989, he had assumed that there was a connection between the unidentified man and Mr Lawlor. Mr Gilmartin's evidence in this regard was stated in the following terms:

'I was invited by Mr Lawlor to meet the Taoiseach. I went to meet the Taoiseach. I went into the Dáil. I met the majority of the Ministers who were sitting around the table, and on my way out, just at the door, a gentleman asked me—told me because of the amount of money I was going to make out of all the help they were going to give me, et cetera, et cetera, these two projects, that I should give them 5 million pounds' . . . 'So all in all I could only come to only one conclusion, that the place was totally corrupt.'

20.10 The Tribunal believed it likely that in 1989, when Mr Gilmartin related to Mr Feely and to Chief Superintendent Sreenan the fact that a demand for IR£5m was made of him by an unknown man, Mr Gilmartin also advised them of his belief that there was a connection between that individual and Mr Lawlor. In addition, the Tribunal believed that the detail regarding the unidentified man provided by Mr Gilmartin may well have escaped either or both Mr Feely and Chief Superintendent Sreenan, given that Mr Gilmartin recounted to them multiple allegations regarding demands for money (and for an interest in Mr Gilmartin's projects) involving Mr Lawlor.

20.11 The Tribunal accepted the evidence of both Mr Sheeran and Mr McLoone that within a relatively short time following the Leinster House meeting, they were informed by Mr Gilmartin of his meeting with Mr Haughey and the Government ministers, and that they were told by Mr Gilmartin about the IR£5m demand following that meeting. Mr Sheeran, in particular, recalled that he had been told this story by Mr Gilmartin on numerous occasions over the years. Mr Sheeran said that 'Absolutely unquestionably', he had heard about it in or about 1989;

'...almost immediately. When I say immediately, on the first occasion on which myself and Mr. Gilmartin would have met or being discussing what was happening with his business, I would have heard that. It was an important event.'

20.12 Mr Sheeran also stated that he had been apprised by Mr Gilmartin that the latter had been given a piece of paper with an account number on it which, Mr Sheeran believed, related to an account in Bank of Ireland, Isle of Man, although he had no recollection of what details he would have received from Mr Gilmartin or what inquiries he himself had made of Mr Gilmartin in this regard. In response to questions in cross-examination by Counsel for Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Sheeran stated: 'My memory seems to tell me now that Mr. Gilmartin advised me it was a Bank of Ireland account, or thought it was a Bank of Ireland account.'

20.11 In the course of that cross-examination, Mr Sheeran was questioned about his understanding (as a result of his conversation with Mr Gilmartin), as to why the IR£5m demand was being made of Mr Gilmartin, in response to which Mr Sheeran stated:

'I would have to say that somebody somewhere was looking for money for their assistance, I would have to agree to the comments Mr. Gallagher made. I am not aware that Mr. Gilmartin suggested that anybody, that the Government as a group certainly were looking for five million, I don't think that was ever suggested by him at all, I think it was some individual that was looking for money and he approached him for it. There was a lot of demands being made on him for money.'

20.12 Asked what Mr Gilmartin had given him to believe he would get for the IR£5m, if he was to pay it, Mr Sheeran stated:

'I think he was told what he wouldn't get if he didn't pay it....That he wouldn't get planning for Quarryvale, it would go nowhere.'

20.13 Mr Sheeran's description of Mr Gilmartin's reaction to the demand was as follows:

'He certainly was perturbed about it, there was no doubt about it. It was yet another very unusually event. He was met with demands that he had never, as I said earlier on this morning, bribery and corruption never, never entered the language of this man, until these projects in Ireland started. In all my lifetime, and indeed I might say since either, no word of bribery or corruption has ever been mentioned by Mr Gilmartin, except in connection with these two projects.'

20.14 Mr Sheeran was subjected to vigorous cross-examination by Mr Lawlor as to why, as a Bank of Ireland Manager, he had not pursued the information he had been given by Mr Gilmartin concerning the IR£5m demand and, in particular, why he had not sought to ascertain the identity of the holder of the account in Bank of Ireland, Isle of Man.

Q. '.....Mr. Gilmartin told you about this five million pounds claim, and he told you he had an account number in a Bank of Ireland branch, of all coincidences, but did it never occur to you to pick up the phone and ask who was the numbered account in the Isle of Man so you could have established for the Tribunal, on a phone call, who was asking monies to be put into what account. You were the single man in the position to wrap this whole thing up in a phone call and you seem to A not report it to your seniors, B not pursue it and – we have a little statue in the members bar in the Dail, the three brass moneys, see nothing, hear nothing and say nothing. Would you agree that's what you seem to have done?

A. I think that particular terminology would be more appropriately applied to you than to me. If I may deal –

Q. You deal with the matter. You are the man in responsible position, deal with the question.

Chairman: Mr. Lawlor just give him a chance.

A. I am dealing with the question, I am just rather amused when you give me the title of senior executive of the Bank of Ireland, I wouldn't have minded being a senior executive of the Bank of Ireland I never achieve that had exalted position. I am not quite sure what question you are asking me on it.

You have asked me about three or four or five different questions. It's hard to know if they are questions or not. As regards the particular demand Mr. Gilmartin has made it perfectly clear to me, insofar as I can recollect, that you were not a party to it. When I came into possession of the information in respect of the numbered account or otherwise I cannot tell you, I was trying to think about it over the weekend. I should imagine I knew reasonably soon after it, but to suggest to me, I don't know if Mr. Gilmartin was actively dealing with the Bank of Ireland at that particular moment of time, in a big way, so it would not, if he wasn't there was no reason why he should have rung my head office in that matter, and a lot of these things, as you so rightly say were floating around. I couldn't ring my Head Office – you referred to as Superintendent Sreenan's

Q. Assistant Commissioner Sreenan?

A. Assistant Commissioner Sreenan, I think he mentioned somewhere or Mr. Feeley mentioned somewhere, or something along the line that doors were closed when he asked certain questions and at the tail end of his investigation, I think he wound up with the line that, I cant I cant say it refers to you or to who, that this gentleman emerged with his good name and reputation intact. So I am not able to comment, the police or the Gardai at that stage did not have access to documentation and you can just imagine if I picked up the phone and said a customer of mine has been touched for five million, outside the door in Dail Eireann, or an office of Dail Eireann, on which six or seven Ministers and Mr. Haughey were standing, I would – I think it would be treated with contempt and disdain, with due respects to you.

Now Mr. Gilmartin has made perfectly clear to a number of senior ministers, to Mr. Feeley and to a large variety of persons of that demand and from that information supplied a Garda inquiry arose. So I had very little to add to what has already happened. And we all know the results of that Garda inquiry.'

Q. 'But we know it was the first or second of February that the meeting supposedly took place. So we assume within a week, a month after that, so you were put in possession of the knowledge within a month of the 2nd of February at the latest, and you went on at a later stage to advance monies to the tune of 800,000 pounds. Now I am not suggesting, other than you should have made the inquiry for Mr. Gilmartin, because here his project was going to be frustrated by some Machiavellian involvement of effing monks and Mafias or whatever his words were, you seem to let all that pass by, none of that have is your concern, yet as I have already pointed out to you five or six months later you are writing him a cheque for 800,000 pounds and you are oblivious to this potential crisis, if it's true his project was doomed if he hadn't responded to such an outrageous demand.

The Tribunal is going to have to try and conclude did it ever happen, you could have found out if it did and who held the account in the Isle of Man, that's all you had to find out, you didn't have to go beyond that and report to Mr. Gilmartin that's it's X person holds that account. But you didn't do anything. Yet you went on and you did business, associated in the knowledge of that serious allegation.

A. Mr. Lawlor, you are making a large number of assumptions there which with due respect to you are very unfair to me. Now, I don't know and cannot know, I am not in a position to deny that I was aware of the demand and that I heard about the number and I possibly heard the name of the official. I just am not in a position to deny that, but neither am I in a position to say to you that I heard it the following day, the following week or the following month. And my dealings with the bank and in relation to Mr. Gilmartin were purely and totally above board. And there was no, nothing wrong with that and even if I had, you know, who in the name of God would have believed how could I substantiate any of that in any shape, fashion or form.

Q. You didn't have to. You just had to make inquiries to who the account holder was.

A. That's assuming.

Q. Nothing else, nothing else just find out who the account holder was?

A. Sorry. That's fine. That's assuming that I knew the number and name and I didn't and I never saw the document, so I have no idea.

Q. Do you think –

A. To this day.

Q. Do you think it actually happened Mr. Sheeran?

A. Yes. 100 per cent.

Q. So Mr. Gilmartin told you in detail and told you he had a number of an account in Bank of Ireland Isle of Man, is that right, is that your evidence?

A. Sorry excuse me, I think I said it was Bank of Ireland, my recollection seems to tell me it was the Bank of Ireland.

Q. I think Mr. Gilmartin's evidence –

A. Sorry I am reasonably satisfied to that thing. I am satisfied Mr. Gilmartin told me and he gave me the name of the official and the number, but I cannot tell you when I became, came into receipt of that information.'

20.17 Mr Willie Farrell, who was known to Mr Gilmartin since childhood, gave evidence to the Tribunal of a number of meetings he had with Mr Gilmartin. At that time Mr Farrell was a Fianna Fáil Senator and had met Mr Gilmartin in Leinster House. Although Mr Farrell did not recollect being told by Mr Gilmartin about a demand for IR£5m, he confirmed that Mr Gilmartin had told him of demands made to him for money and that he said to the person or persons looking for money that they 'made the mafia look like monks.'

20.18 The Leinster House log book recorded Mr Gilmartin meeting Senator Farrell on 15 February 1989.

20.19 Mr Johnny Fortune²⁰ gave evidence that in 1989 he had met with an 'ashen faced' Mr Gilmartin who told him that a demand for 'a seven figure sum' had been made of him in relation to his business interests in Quarryvale. Mr Fortune had been left with the impression that it was Mr Lawlor who had asked Mr Gilmartin for this money. While the Tribunal cannot state conclusively that what Mr Gilmartin told Mr Fortune related to the demand for IR£5m made of Mr Gilmartin in the confines of Leinster House, it may well have been the case that the information concerning the seven figure sum demand was in fact linked to what had occurred in Leinster House in early February 1989. While not claiming that the demand was made by Mr Lawlor, Mr Gilmartin may well have mentioned Mr Lawlor's name in the context of the Leinster House incident.

20.20 The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that in the course of his encounter with the unidentified man in Leinster House, he was provided with details of an Isle of Man bank account into which the IR£5m was to be paid. The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that he had, for a period of time, retained the piece of paper on which the bank details had been written and which, Mr Gilmartin maintained, had been provided to him by the unidentified man. The Tribunal also accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that the piece of paper was subsequently destroyed by his son, in circumstances outlined by Mr Gilmartin, although the Tribunal regarded it as unfortunate that this information was not retained by him.

20.21 The detail of Mr Gilmartin's recollection of the conversation between himself and the unidentified man was accepted by the Tribunal as being accurate. In particular, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin was indeed threatened in the manner described by him in his evidence.

THE CATALYST FOR MR GILMARTIN'S COMPLAINTS TO A NUMBER OF THIRD PARTIES OF CORRUPT DEMANDS BEING MADE OF HIM

21.01 In 1988, as part of Mr Gilmartin's plan to establish a land bank at Quarryvale, he sought to acquire two parcels of land owned by Dublin Corporation and Dublin County Council respectively. Dublin Corporation owned 68 acres of land, known as 'the Irishtown lands' while Dublin County Council owned 12 acres of lands referred to as 'the Wood Farm lands'. Both parcels of land were located in the functional area of Dublin County Council.

21.02 In his efforts to acquire the local authority lands, Mr Gilmartin had discussions with Mr Michael McLoone, Chief Valuer to both Dublin Corporation and Dublin County Council. In November 1988, Mr McLoone was instructed by Dublin Corporation to enter into negotiations with Mr Gilmartin for the sale of the Irishtown lands. At about the same time, negotiations began between Mr McLoone and Mr Gilmartin for the sale to Mr Gilmartin of the Wood Farm lands.

21.03 Correspondence between Mr McLoone and Mr Gilmartin in December 1988, indicated that Mr McLoone was prepared to recommend the disposal of both parcels of land to Mr Gilmartin at a price of IR£2.74m for the Irishtown lands, and IR£481,600 for the Wood Farm lands, a price equivalent to approximately IR£40,000 per acre. This was similar to the price agreed between Mr Gilmartin and other land owners in Quarryvale.

21.04 In January 1989, Mr Gilmartin agreed to purchase the lands at the prices suggested by Mr McLoone, subject to contract.

21.05 On 30 January 1989, Mr McLoone recommended to Dublin County Council to proceed with the sale of the Wood Farm lands to Mr Gilmartin for IR£481,600, and on 2 February 1989, Mr McLoone made a similar recommendation to Dublin Corporation in relation to the sale to Mr Gilmartin of the Irishtown lands for a sum of IR£2.74m.

21.06 The proposed sale of both parcels of lands to Mr Gilmartin required the sanction of the members of Dublin County Council in respect of the Wood Farm lands and of the members of Dublin City Council in respect of the Irishtown lands. Mr McLoone was, however, satisfied that, subject to the necessary sanction from both local authorities, Mr Gilmartin had a deal to purchase the lands at IR£40,000 per acre.

MR GILMARTIN'S COMPLAINTS

21.07 Mr Gilmartin believed that the proposed sale of the Dublin Corporation lands at Irishtown to him was being frustrated and interfered with by, in particular, Mr Redmond. Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he was informed by Mr McLoone that Mr Redmond had alerted Mr John Corcoran of Green Property Ltd, the owners of the nearby Blanchardstown development lands, of Mr Gilmartin's proposed purchase of the Irishtown lands, and that Mr Redmond had, in effect, encouraged Mr Corcoran to bid for the same lands. Mr Gilmartin also told the Tribunal that Mr McLoone had informed him that Mr Redmond, who was due to retire from his position as Assistant City and County Manager in June 1989, was then going to work for Mr Corcoran and Green Property Ltd (Green Property). Furthermore, Mr McLoone had advised him that both Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor, in the course of a Dublin County Council meeting, had referred to 'cosy deals' that Mr Gilmartin had entered into with the Corporation in respect of the Irishtown lands. Mr Gilmartin claimed to have been told by Mr McLoone that because of these allegations of 'cosy deals', the Corporation was preparing to withdraw from the agreement it had reached with Mr Gilmartin in relation to the Irishtown lands and this withdrawal duly occurred.

21.08 Mr Gilmartin's evidence to the Tribunal of interference by Mr Redmond was to a considerable extent confirmed by Mr McLoone's evidence. Specifically, Mr McLoone confirmed having told Mr Gilmartin that there was interference by Mr Redmond and that Mr Redmond had advised Mr Corcoran to take steps to stop Mr Gilmartin acquiring the Irishtown lands. Mr McLoone agreed that he had told Mr Gilmartin that Mr Redmond intended to work for Green Property following his imminent retirement from Dublin County Council. Mr McLoone told the Tribunal that there was either a rumour to this effect within Dublin Corporation in the spring of 1989, or that Mr Redmond himself had told him. Although Mr McLoone did not specifically recollect doing so, it was possible that he had relayed to Mr Gilmartin an allegation made by Mr Redmond that Mr McLoone was engaged in 'cosy deals' with Mr Gilmartin. Mr Paddy Morrissey, a Senior Official of Dublin Corporation, also told the Tribunal that he became aware that Mr Redmond alerted Green Property of the fact that the Corporation proposed selling its Quarryvale lands to Mr Gilmartin.

21.09 Mr Gilmartin's concern about the aforementioned matters was the subject, inter alia, of complaints he made to Mr Haughey and Mr Feely on 24 February 1989. Mr Feely's memorandum of that meeting included the following reference:

[Mr Gilmartin]²¹ said GR was opposing his development at Irishtown for the wrong reasons... [Mr Gilmartin] said a recent announcement by J.C. that the Blanchardstown Centre was going ahead was to stymie [him]. He felt G.R. advised J.C. who he believed was going to employ G.R. when he retired shortly. He also felt G.R. had informed P.M. to go back on an agreement concerning price for Corp. Lands at Irishtown . . .

21.10 On 4 March 1989 Mr Gilmartin advised Chief Superintendent Sreenan as follows:

'A meeting was called and there was an announcement to the Managers that O'Callaghan and I were getting together so the conflict was gone. The development to go ahead was to be mine. One of the managers came out—he had taken mine all along as a joke and he realised now it was a goer. He rang some people with vested interests and informed them of the possibility of making money. They, in turn, started pulling strokes. It was delicate because of the deal with O'Callaghan. The land was not worth more than ten grand per acre but I paid over forty grand an acre. There was a great risk to me because I already owned some of the land the worst I felt I could do was to get my money back. This Manager started putting out rumours that I was doing a cosy deal and the Corporation were forced to withdraw land. I was not aware at the time why this was happening. Completely apart from that fellows were trying to hold me to ransom. I lost the land vital to the whole thing. I had the land which I had bought from Bruton, Sharpe and others but I could not get in or out of there...'

21.11 In a subsequent telephone conversation with Chief Superintendent Sreenan on 9 March 1989, Mr Gilmartin was recorded as having stated the following: 'The valuer announced that the deal was not on and thought I was going to hit him. The valuer was embarrassed.'

21.12 A note taken by Chief Superintendent Sreenan and Superintendent Burns of a meeting between themselves and Mr Feely on 6 March 1989, recorded the concern then being expressed by Mr Feely after receiving, on the same date, a letter dated 2 March 1989 from Mr Corcoran of Green Property indicating an interest in purchasing the Irishtown lands, the same lands which were the subject of Mr Gilmartin's agreement with the Corporation. In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Feely stated that he had considered the receipt of such a letter significant and implied it to be a corroboration of the information that Mr Gilmartin had conveyed to him on 24 February 1989.

21.13 Sometime between the end of March and mid-April 1989, Dublin Corporation made a decision to advertise the Irishtown lands for sale by way of tender. The lands were duly advertised on 21 April 1989. By the closing date for receipt of tenders on 19 May 1989, two tenders had been received, one from Mr Gilmartin and the other from Windar Ltd – a subsidiary of Green Property. Mr Gilmartin's tender of IR£5.1m (or approximately IR£70,000 per acre) was the higher tender and was recommended for acceptance to Dublin City Council. The decision to sell the Irishtown lands to Mr Gilmartin was made by the Council on 12 June 1989, and Mr Gilmartin was duly informed of this by letter on 19 June, 1989.

21.14 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Redmond acknowledged that he had had contact with Mr Corcoran of Green Property concerning the sale of the Irishtown lands but claimed that this contact had been initiated by Mr Corcoran and not by himself. According to Mr Redmond, Mr Corcoran had telephoned him and queried him about Mr Gilmartin's proposed retail shopping centre scheme for Quarryvale and Mr Corcoran had asked him whether the lands were available for acquisition by his company for use as an industrial park. Mr Redmond said he informed Mr Corcoran of Mr Gilmartin's negotiations with Dublin Corporation regarding the Irishtown lands (being mostly industrial zoned lands) and of the agreed price of IR£40,000 per acre. Mr Redmond claimed that he only became aware that Mr Corcoran had lodged a bid for these lands having read about it subsequently in the newspapers.

21.15 Mr Redmond rejected the assertion that Mr Corcoran's professed interest in the Irishtown lands was for any purpose other than acquiring them for use as an industrial park and more particularly to thwart Mr Gilmartin's plans for Quarryvale.

21.16 Mr Redmond further claimed that he was not in favour of selling the local authority lands and that his views in this regard were known to Mr Morrissey. While Mr Redmond himself had formed the view that the agreed price of IR£40,000 per acre for both the Wood Farm and the Irishtown lands, negotiated between Mr Gilmartin and Mr McLoone was too low, he claimed not to have informed anyone of his views in this regard. Moreover, while he was aware that this was the price that had been negotiated by Mr McLoone, Mr Redmond claimed that, in his capacity as the individual with responsibility for the County Council's Wood Farm lands, the agreement reached between Mr McLoone and Mr Gilmartin regarding these lands had never been formally brought to his attention.

21.17 Mr Lawlor denied in his evidence that he had interfered in any way with Mr Gilmartin's purchase of the Irishtown lands.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE INVOLVEMENT OF MR REDMOND IN THE SALE OF THE IRISHTOWN LANDS

22.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that the decision of Dublin Corporation not to proceed with the proposed sale of its lands to Mr Gilmartin for a sum of approximately IR£40,000 per acre was precipitated by actions on Mr Redmond's part and that these actions included a tip-off by Mr Redmond to Mr Corcoran of Green Property of the proposed sale of the lands to Mr Gilmartin.

22.02 The Tribunal rejected Mr Redmond's assertions that his actions in relation to the Irishtown lands were motivated by a desire on his part to ensure that the best possible price was achieved for both the Irishtown and Wood Farm lands and in the best interests of both local authorities. The Tribunal found Mr Redmond's evidence to be evasive, contradictory and on occasions blatantly untruthful.

22.03 Mr Redmond's evidence that he had an issue regarding the price achieved between Mr Gilmartin and Mr McLoone for both parcels of lands was not credible. There was no suggestion at any point that Mr Redmond had taken issue with the price negotiated with Mr Gilmartin and the Tribunal was satisfied that at all relevant times prior to the introduction of Mr Corcoran into the matter, a price of IR£40,000 per acre was regarded within both Dublin County Council and Dublin Corporation as a fair and reasonable price for the lands in question. Furthermore, the Tribunal rejected any suggestion made by Mr Redmond that the initial non-tendering for the lands by either the Corporation or the Council was in any way unusual. The Tribunal took particular note of the fact that in November 1988, Mr Redmond himself, in his capacity as Assistant Manager responsible for the disposal of Dublin County Council lands, authorised Mr McLoone to enter into negotiations with Mr Gilmartin in relation to the sale of the Wood Farm lands, in the absence of any tendering process.

22.04 In any event, the tendering process belatedly undertaken in respect of both the Wood Farm and Irishtown lands, as a consequence of what can reasonably be described as Mr Redmond's mischievously motivated contact with Mr Corcoran, resulted in a substantially increased price being paid by Mr

Gilmartin to the local authority, compared to that originally agreed with Mr McLoone (IR£70,000 per acre as against IR£40,000 per acre).

22.05 Mr Corcoran told the Tribunal that his primary objective in his attempt to purchase the Irishtown lands was to stop the development of Quarryvale.²² The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Corcoran's actions were motivated by commercial considerations. Mr Corcoran acknowledged that he told Mr Morrissey and Mr Seán Haughey that he wanted to develop an industrial park on the Irishtown lands.

22.06 The Tribunal did not accept that it was Mr Corcoran who telephoned Mr Redmond concerning Mr Gilmartin and the Irishtown lands.

22.07 Mr Corcoran was aware in February 1989 of Mr Gilmartin's plans for Quarryvale. Mr Corcoran himself knew that Mr Gilmartin was planning a retail shopping centre for Quarryvale. He therefore had no need to telephone Mr Redmond to ascertain this fact.

22.08 The Tribunal believed it likely that Mr Redmond telephoned Mr Corcoran following his attendance, in his capacity as Dublin Assistant City and County Manager, at a meeting regarding urban renewal which took place on 2 February 1989, between Dublin City and County officials, the then Taoiseach, Mr Haughey and a number of ministers. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Redmond understood from statements made at that meeting by Mr Pádraig Flynn, that Mr Gilmartin had acquired Mr O'Callaghan's interest in the Neilstown lands. The Tribunal was satisfied that it became clear to Mr Redmond at that point that, having obtained control of the Neilstown/Balgaddy site, Mr Gilmartin was in a strong position to advance the case for a retail shopping centre on the Quarryvale lands. The Tribunal believed this information propelled Mr Redmond to contact Mr Corcoran and urge him to interest himself in the Irishtown lands.

22.09 The Tribunal believed that the actions of Mr Redmond in February 1989 vis-à-vis Mr Gilmartin and the Irishtown lands related back to the meeting in Mr Redmond's office in May 1988, when it became clear that Mr Gilmartin was not amenable to the demands for money then made of Mr Gilmartin by Mr Lawlor on behalf of both himself and Mr Redmond.

22.10 Mr Redmond may also have been motivated to thwart Mr Gilmartin's plans for Quarryvale by his resentment at the circumstances surrounding an aborted meeting between himself and Mr Gilmartin on 22 February 1989, and Mr Gilmartin's involvement of Mr Seán Haughey in that matter (see below).

22.11 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Redmond's actions were also associated with his plan to take up employment with Green Property following his then expected retirement.

22.12 It was common case that in 1985, Mr Redmond had applied to, and had been offered, employment with Green Property, in anticipation of his then expected retirement. Mr Redmond did not then take up the position because he did not retire at that time. However, in February 1989, Mr Redmond was within two to three months of retiring from his position as Dublin Assistant City and County Manager. The Tribunal is satisfied that Mr Redmond was cognisant of the possibility that he would take up an employment opportunity with Green Property, following his retirement. The Tribunal accepted the evidence of Mr McLoone that, in or around February 1989, there was a rumour within the county council that Mr Redmond was preparing to take up employment with Green Property on his retirement from the County Council.

THE ABORTED MEETING OF 22 FEBRUARY 1989

23.01 Independently of the process of acquiring the Irishtown and Wood Farm lands from Dublin Corporation and Dublin County Council, Mr Gilmartin had meetings with Mr Redmond in the spring of 1989, in the latter's capacity as the individual within Dublin County Council with responsibility for road planning. One such meeting took place on 15 February 1989, when Mr Gilmartin and his professional team met with Mr Redmond to, in Mr Gilmartin's words, 'lay the ground work' for a meeting which was scheduled to take place shortly thereafter between Mr Gilmartin and his professional team and the county council's roads engineers. On 21 February 1989, Mr Gilmartin's professional team duly met with members of Dublin County Council's Planning Department to discuss the proposed Quarryvale project.

23.02 According to Mr Gilmartin, the next proposed meeting with the county council's road engineers, was scheduled for 10am on 22 February 1989, in Mr Redmond's office.

23.03 Prior to the meeting, Mr Gilmartin and his professional team assembled in the Gresham Hotel across the road from the Dublin County Council offices. When Mr Gilmartin telephoned Mr Redmond to announce his imminent arrival at Mr Redmond's offices, Mr Redmond denied that any meeting had been scheduled and terminated the telephone call. Mr Gilmartin then telephoned Mr Redmond's office and was informed by Mr Redmond's secretary that a number of roads engineers had in fact been awaiting Mr Gilmartin in Mr Redmond's office but had left when Mr Gilmartin failed to arrive.

23.04 On hearing this, Mr Gilmartin proceeded to attend at Mr Redmond's office where he confronted Mr Redmond. A heated exchange ensued between the two men in relation to the earlier cancelled meeting, whereupon Mr Redmond ordered Mr Gilmartin (accompanied by his architect) to leave his office.

23.05 Following Mr Redmond's refusal to meet with Mr Gilmartin and his professional team on the morning of 22 February 1989, Mr Gilmartin contacted Mr Seán Haughey, Assistant City and County Manager whom he regarded as 'a very straightforward honest man'. Following Mr Haughey's intervention, a second meeting was scheduled for later that day, 22 February 1989. That meeting took place in Mr Redmond's office, and involved Mr Redmond, a number of local authority roads engineers, Mr Gilmartin and his professional team.

23.06 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that when, on the afternoon of 22 February 1989, he and his professional team returned to the County Council office for the rescheduled meeting they encountered Mr Seán Haughey in an upset state. Mr Haughey expressed the view to Mr Gilmartin that 'there are so many games going on here, somebody has to do something.'

23.07 Mr Gilmartin stated that, shortly before the rescheduled meeting commenced, he witnessed an altercation between Mr Haughey and Mr Redmond, which he described in the following terms:

'Mr Haughey went in [to Mr Redmond's office] and he asked Mr Redmond 'what's your game' in a bit stronger language, 'what's going on?' and Redmond's answer was 'Ask your brother' [a reference to the Taoiseach Mr Charles J. Haughey] and Mr Seán Haughey's response was, 'I'm not my so and so brother's keeper, and George, your game is going to stop, I can assure you.'

23.08 The rescheduled meeting achieved little, according to Mr Gilmartin. He said that Mr Redmond was 'acting the clown' and 'making wise cracks'.

23.09 Mr Gilmartin's evidence was substantially corroborated by that of Mr Forman who stated in evidence that he specifically recollected Mr Seán Haughey uttering the words 'I'm not my brother's keeper'. In his statement to the Tribunal, Mr Forman described Mr Redmond in the course of that rescheduled meeting as being 'off-hand' and 'rude' and observed that an extraordinarily negative atmosphere pervaded the meeting.

23.10 Mr Redmond told the Tribunal that he could not recollect avoiding or cancelling a scheduled meeting with Mr Gilmartin on 22 February 1989, although he acknowledged that the meeting in the afternoon of 22 February 1989, did in fact occur. He suggested that there had been some ‘confusion’ about the timing of the meeting.

23.11 Mr Redmond could not account to the Tribunal for a reference in a statement furnished by him on 20 January 2004, wherein he had stated that ‘as far as I [Mr Redmond] was concerned there were cogent reasons for endeavoring to avoid the meeting’. In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Redmond on occasion denied that he had attempted to avoid the meeting with Mr Gilmartin, but on other occasions, in response to questions put to him in cross-examination, Mr Redmond appeared to tacitly accept that he had aborted the scheduled meeting.

23.12 Mr Redmond told the Tribunal that he believed Mr Sean Haughey’s presence at the meeting was ‘political’, as Mr Haughey had no official function in relation to the matters then under discussion. Mr Redmond claimed not to have any recollection of the exchange which Mr Gilmartin described as having taken place between Mr Haughey and Mr Redmond, or of Mr Redmond remarking to Mr Haughey ‘ask your brother.’

23.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that a meeting scheduled for the morning of 22 February 1989, between Mr Redmond, county council officials, Mr Gilmartin and a number of his professional team was aborted and cancelled by Mr Redmond in the circumstances detailed by Mr Gilmartin in his evidence.

23.14 The Tribunal was satisfied that, following a complaint to Mr Seán Haughey by Mr Gilmartin, the meeting with Mr Redmond and his officials was rescheduled and that Mr Haughey attended the meeting.

23.15 The Tribunal accepted as true and accurate Mr Gilmartin’s evidence that the exchange of words between Mr Haughey and Mr Redmond which culminated in Mr Redmond’s stating ‘ask your brother’ and Mr Haughey responding ‘I am not my so-and-so brother’s keeper’ did indeed take place.

23.16 The Tribunal was satisfied that the actions of Mr Redmond on 22 February 1989, were prompted by Mr Redmond’s desire to thwart the progress of Mr Gilmartin’s Quarryvale scheme.

23.17 The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr Redmond falsely claimed to have had no memory of aborting or cancelling the meeting with Mr Gilmartin on 22 February 1989, and that, on the contrary, he had a full recollection of the event, including the rescheduled meeting and his altercation with his colleague Mr Seán Haughey.

23.18 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin relayed the events of 22 February 1989 to Mr Sheeran and Mr McLoone. Moreover, Mr Sherwin in evidence recollected that when he met Mr Gilmartin in October/November 1990, one of the matters complained of by Mr Gilmartin was Mr Redmond's behaviour on 22 February 1989.

23.19 In the course of Mr Redmond's cross-examination of Mr Sheeran, Mr Sheeran was questioned about Mr Gilmartin's attitude to Mr Redmond. Mr Sheeran responded thus:

'Mr Gilmartin, in fairness to him, is a man that normally does not bear grudges and he really is a very decent man. You are correct in saying that, he certainly felt that you were not helping him. He felt that you were as I have already stated and I don't like stating it again, but he felt that through Mr Lawlor that there was a demand made for money on your behalf I am not saying you made, I am just saying it was made on your behalf. He would say yes that generally speaking you were unhelpful and he, there would seem to be reasonable grounds for that in respect of a meeting that he arranged with engineers. That he always felt that you deliberately cancelled or postponed or set aside or something and he had to intervene with another City Manager or County Manager, Assistant Manager Mr Haughey to get it to reset. So you know, he would have felt those things.'

MR GILMARTIN'S COMPLAINTS TO MR FRANK FEELY AND MR SEÁN HAUGHEY

24.01 On 23 February 1989, in the aftermath of Mr Seán Haughey's intervention with Mr Redmond on 22 February 1989, Mr Gilmartin met with Mr Seán Haughey and informed him of a number of matters, including allegations of demands for money which had been made of him. Mr Seán Haughey duly arranged for Mr Gilmartin to meet with Mr Feely, the then Dublin City and County Manager, and a meeting duly took place on 24 February 1989, which Mr Seán Haughey, Mr Herbert Niall,²³ Mr Feely and Mr Gilmartin attended.

24.02 A handwritten memorandum note of the issues discussed at the meeting was made by Mr Feely, and initialled by Mr Seán Haughey on 28 February 1989. This memorandum identified a number of complaints by Mr Gilmartin as against Mr Lawlor as follows:

- That he had told Mr Gilmartin that he was commissioned by the Government to look after the Arlington site.
- That he had asked for a 5 per cent interest stake.
- That Mr Gilmartin had responded by calling Mr Lawlor a gangster.
- That Mr Lawlor had said that, ‘men had ended up in the Liffey for less.’
- That Mr Lawlor had walked into a meeting of Arlington in London and that he had again repeated his assertion that he had been commissioned by the Government and had asked to be compensated.
- That Arlington, against Mr Gilmartin’s advice, had told Mr Gilmartin to pay Mr Lawlor IR£3,500 per month which he had done.
- That the cheques for the payments to Mr Lawlor had been made payable to him, save in one instance when the cheque had been issued by Mr Sheeran, a bank manager/friend.
- That Mr Lawlor had asked for IR£5m to be paid into a bank account in the Isle of Man in return for his support for Mr Gilmartin’s proposed development at Irishtown.
- That Mr Lawlor had bought a Mercedes car from a Mr Brady in Lucan but had left the vendor short IR£20,000, saying that such sum was due to him for services rendered in relation to a planning permission that had been obtained for access for a garage onto a new road.
- That Mr Lawlor had received a payment in respect of a permission for a McDonald’s at Palmerstown, Co. Dublin.

24.03 The handwritten memorandum also noted the following complaints/allegations made by Mr Gilmartin as against Mr George Redmond:

- That Mr Redmond was opposing Mr Gilmartin’s development at Irishtown for the wrong reasons.
- That within an hour of the meeting of managers with Government ministers, Mr Redmond had told Mr Sharkey, a land owner that Mr Gilmartin had bought out Mr O’Callaghan.
- That Mr Redmond was advising Mr John Corcoran whom Mr Gilmartin believed was going to employ Mr Redmond following on the latter’s retirement in relation to how Mr Corcoran could ‘stymie’ Mr Gilmartin.
- That Mr Redmond had told Mr Morrissey to go back on an agreement concerning the price of Dublin Corporation lands at Irishtown.
- That Mr Redmond had received a payment in respect of the McDonald’s permission.

- That a Mr Brady had linked Mr Redmond to the Lawlor/Brady car issue by saying that Mr Redmond had been paid by Mr Brady.
- That Mr Redmond made concessions in relation to roads at Blanchardstown which the council would not normally make.
- That Mr Gilmartin said he met Mr Redmond and told him he “would see him all right if the permission went through” and that Mr Redmond had said there was “no need for that.”

24.04 The memorandum also recorded Mr Gilmartin’s complaints as against Cllr Finbarr Hanrahan as follows:

- That Cllr Hanrahan had asked Mr Gilmartin for £100,000 ‘in a brown paper bag—notes—no cheques.’

24.05 According to Mr Feely’s memorandum, Mr Gilmartin mentioned Cllr Hanrahan’s name in the context of describing how Mr Seán Walsh TD, ‘who was innocent of any wrongdoing’, had given Mr Gilmartin the names of eight councillors, four of whom, including Cllr Hanrahan, he had met. Mr Feely noted that Mr Gilmartin alleged that three other unnamed councillors whom he met took ‘a similar line’ to Cllr Hanrahan.

24.06 Mr Feely recorded Mr Gilmartin as stating that Mr Seán Haughey, Mr Paddy Morrissey and Mr John Prendergast (all senior Corporation/County Council officials) and Mr Feely, the County Manager, were ‘absolutely honest’ and that Mr Gilmartin had told this to the Minister. (In Mr Feely’s memorandum these four individuals were identified by their initials, SH, PM, JP and CM).

24.07 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin, while he agreed with much of what had been noted by Mr Feely, took issue with a number of matters recorded in Mr Feely’s handwritten memorandum (which was initialled by Mr Seán Haughey) as follows:

1) Mr Gilmartin vehemently denied that he had, on 24 February 1989 alleged to Mr Feely that it was Mr Lawlor who had demanded IR£5m to be deposited in an Isle of Man bank account. Mr Gilmartin claimed that he told Mr Feely about his meeting in early February 1989 in Leinster House, and of the demand which had been made of him by an unidentified man in the corridor of Leinster House, with Mr Lawlor in the vicinity. Mr Gilmartin was also certain that he had never suggested that it was Mr Lawlor who had threatened him that ‘men had ended up in the Liffey for less’.

2) Mr Gilmartin also vehemently denied telling Mr Feely at the meeting on 24 February 1989 that he had stated to Mr Redmond that he, Mr Gilmartin, ‘would see him all right if the permission went through’, or that he had told Mr Feely that Mr Redmond had said there was ‘no need for that’.

3) In relation to references to Mr Seán Walsh TD giving Mr Gilmartin the names of eight councillors, Mr Gilmartin stated that he had not told Mr Feely that Mr Walsh had given him the names in the context of ‘a material contravention vote’, rather, Mr Walsh had provided the names in the context of people Mr Gilmartin should ‘watch out for.’

24.08 Mr Feely told the Tribunal that he believed that he had accurately recorded the information provided to him by Mr Gilmartin on 24 February 1989. Mr Feely said that he had taken rough notes in the course of that meeting, (which were not available to the Tribunal), and that these notes were written up by him (as the memorandum initialled by Mr Seán Haughey) within 24 hours of the meeting. Mr Gilmartin disputed that Mr Feely had in fact taken notes during the course of their meeting.

24.09 The Tribunal was satisfied that, as suggested by Mr Gilmartin, Mr Feely’s handwritten memorandum dated 28 February 1989, did in some respects, inaccurately record information provided by Mr Gilmartin to him.

24.10 In particular, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin did not tell Mr Feely and Mr Seán Haughey that he had informed Mr Redmond that he, Mr Gilmartin, would see Mr Redmond ‘all right’, or that Mr Redmond had responded that there was ‘no need for that’. It appeared inconceivable to the Tribunal that Mr Gilmartin, whose meeting with Mr Feely and Mr Haughey was triggered by Mr Redmond’s conduct two days earlier and who, as evidenced by Mr Feely’s memorandum, made a litany of complaints against Mr Redmond, would have had an exchange of that nature with Mr Redmond. More importantly, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Matthews’ note of 3 March 1989 entitled ‘Alleged planning permission irregularities note 2’, was a more accurate record of what Mr Gilmartin advised Mr Feely and Mr Haughey concerning Mr Redmond, on 24 February 1989. Mr Matthews’ note, wherein he recorded what Mr Flynn told the Minister for Justice on 3 March 1989, regarding Mr Flynn’s meeting with Mr Feely and Mr Seán Haughey on 28 February 1989, inter alia, included the following:

... large sums of money ‘up front’ were requested as a consideration for giving him whatever approval he needed. Gilmartin named two people who were alleged to be involved in these transactions—Mr George Redmond, Asst. Manager with responsibility for Co. Council matters and Deputy Liam Lawlor. He also said that certain other Co. Councillors were involved and Cllr Finbarr Hanrahan was named as one. Gilmartin said that the amounts of money requested were vast. There was a mention of payment of £5 million and also a reference to ‘£100,000 per man’. Gilmartin was ‘frightened’ by the extent of the corruption he was confronting and decided to tell his story to the authorities.

24.11 At all times during the course of his evidence, Mr Gilmartin maintained that Mr Redmond never made any direct demand for money from him. Mr Gilmartin maintained that the demand for IR£100,000 (which he believed was being made on behalf of Mr Redmond and with Mr Redmond’s knowledge) was made by Mr Lawlor. The Tribunal believes that it was in this context that Mr Feeley noted (correctly) the following: ‘GR never demanded money and never made any improper suggestion to him.’

24.12 The Tribunal did not attribute any bad faith to Mr Feely in the manner of his recording. It was satisfied that Mr Feely had endeavoured to accurately note a myriad of complaints made by Mr Gilmartin over the course of a lengthy three-hour meeting on 24 February 1989, 24.13 Further, the Tribunal was not entirely satisfied that Mr Feely’s handwritten memorandum was compiled within 24 hours (i.e. by 25 February) of his and Mr Seán Haughey’s 24 February 1989 meeting with Mr Gilmartin, as claimed by Mr Feely. Mr Feely’s report of 6 March 1989²⁴, which was compiled following a meeting with Mr Flynn on 3 March 1989, was strongly suggestive that Mr Feely’s handwritten memorandum had been in fact compiled on the same day it was dated, namely, 28 February 1989, following a meeting Mr Feely had with Mr Flynn earlier that day. Mr Feely gave his handwritten memorandum note to Mr Flynn on 3 March 1989. The lapse of some days between Mr Feely’s meeting with Mr Gilmartin and Mr Feely’s preparation of his memorandum of information provided to him by Mr Gilmartin at that meeting probably resulted in some of that information being recorded inaccurately.

24.14 It appeared to the Tribunal that there was no immediately contemporaneous note available to it of Mr Feely’s meeting with Mr Flynn. The Tribunal was satisfied, however, that whatever was conveyed to Mr Flynn by Mr Feely and Mr Seán Haughey on 28 February 1989, was sufficient to propel Mr Flynn to speak with the then Taoiseach, Mr Charles J. Haughey, between then and 2 March 1989, and request that Mr Gilmartin’s complaints be added to a Garda investigation into similar but unrelated matters, which had begun in early February 1989, on Mr Flynn’s initiative.

24.15 A memorandum prepared by Mr Matthews on 3 March 1989, entitled ‘Allegations of Irregularities in the Planning Permission area note 1’ following a meeting on 2 March 1989, between An Taoiseach, Mr Charles J. Haughey, the Minister for Justice, Mr Gerard Collins and the Attorney General recorded the direction by the Taoiseach that An Garda Síochána investigate the complaints made by Mr Gilmartin. As already indicated a further meeting took place on 3 March 1989, between Mr Pádraig Flynn and the Minister for Justice, when Mr Gilmartin’s complaints were again discussed.

24.16 At this meeting Mr Flynn recounted what he had been told by Mr Seán Haughey and Mr Feely on 28 February 1989. This meeting was documented by Mr Matthews under the heading ‘Alleged planning permission irregularities note 2.’

24.17 Mr Gerard Collins told the Tribunal that he had no recollection of the events which had triggered a Garda investigation, which commenced on 7 February 1989, into allegations of planning irregularities (unconnected to Mr Gilmartin’s complaints), or of the events which led to Mr Gilmartin’s complaints being encompassed in that Garda investigation. Mr Collins stated that the contemporaneous documentation which recorded his involvement did, to some extent, assist him in recalling a meeting with the then Taoiseach, Mr Haughey. Mr Collins did not dispute the contents of the manuscript notes compiled by Mr Matthews in March 1989. Mr Collins stated however, that in 1989, he was unaware that a Government back-bencher (Mr Lawlor) was central to Mr Gilmartin’s complaints at that time, and said that he was unaware at that time of Mr Gilmartin’s claim of substantial money being demanded of him. Mr Collins acknowledged that as Minister for Justice, he met the Garda Commissioner in 1989 to ascertain the progress of the Garda investigation.²⁵

THE 1989/90 GARDA INQUIRY

25.01 The Garda investigation into Mr Gilmartin’s complaints commenced on 3 March 1989. It concluded on 2 May 1990, when a final report was passed by the investigating Gardaí to the Garda Commissioner, who in turn furnished it to the Department of Justice. In the course of the inquiry the Department of Justice was kept apprised of developments by way of interim reports.

25.02 When the inquiry began on 3 March 1989, the Gardaí received a briefing from the Department of Justice on the nature of the complaints being made by Mr Gilmartin. It was clear from a comparison of an aide memoire compiled by ²⁵A memorandum compiled by Mr Matthews on 27 June 1989, documented Mr Collins emphasising to the Commissioner the necessity for a very thorough high priority investigation.

Chief Superintendent Sreenan in advance of his first telephone contact with Mr Gilmartin, with the note compiled by Mr Matthews, Secretary General of the Department of Justice, on 3 March 1989, that the Gardaí were apprised of the information that Mr Flynn had relayed to the Minister for Justice on 3 March 1989, concerning Mr Gilmartin.

25.03 In essence, Mr Gilmartin's complaints, as known in general terms by the investigating Gardaí on 3 March 1989, were:

- He was a property developer who had been told that before he could develop in Ireland money would have to be paid 'up front' to people.
- He had named three individuals in this context, namely Mr Liam Lawlor TD, Mr George Redmond, Assistant City and County Manager, and Cllr Finbarr Hanrahan, Cllr Hanrahan being but one of a number of councillors who, Mr Gilmartin had alleged, made demands for money.
- He was 'frightened' by the magnitude of the demands.
- A figure of IR£5m had been mentioned.
- A figure of IR£100,000 'for each man' had been demanded of him.

25.04 The principal personnel involved in the Garda investigation were Chief Superintendent Hugh Sreenan and Superintendent Thomas B. Burns, the latter being the 'operational' head of the inquiry.²⁶

25.05 As far as the Tribunal could ascertain, the investigation into Mr Gilmartin's complaints, underway from 3 March 1989 to 24 May 1990, appeared to have comprised the following:

- 1) Three telephone conversations between Chief Superintendent Sreenan and Mr Gilmartin at the latter's home in Luton, England on 4, 9 and 20 March 1989.
- 2) An interview conducted by Chief Superintendent Sreenan and Superintendent Burns on 6 March 1989, with Mr Feely and Mr Haughey.
- 3) An interview with Mr Owen O'Callaghan in Cork on 5 April 1989, carried out by Superintendent Burns accompanied by another investigating Garda.
- 4) An interview carried out with Mr Gerard Brady, the proprietor of a car dealership in Castleknock, on 5 June 1989, by Superintendent Burns and another investigating Garda. The interview with Mr Brady arose on foot of information supplied to the Gardaí by Mr Feely and Mr Haughey on 6 March 1989, the occasion of their own Garda interview and the occasion on which they relayed to the investigating Gardaí certain information which Mr Gilmartin in turn had relayed to them on 24 February.

²⁶ See footnotes 3 and 7 above

5) On 7 November 1989, Chief Superintendent Sreenan and Superintendent Burns interviewed two Arlington executives in London, namely Mr Dudley and Mr Mould.

25.06 Following the submission of the final report to the Department of Justice in May 1990²⁷, no further steps or other action appear to have been taken in relation to the complaints made by Mr Gilmartin approximately one year previously.

TELEPHONE CONTACT BETWEEN CHIEF SUPERINTENDENT SREENAN AND MR GILMARTIN IN MARCH 1989

26.01 In the course of correspondence with the Tribunal, Chief Superintendent Sreenan provided to the Tribunal handwritten notes which he had made of his three telephone conversations with Mr Gilmartin, on 4, 9 and 20 March 1989²⁸. The Tribunal was also furnished with more detailed typed notes of the telephone conversations of 4 and 20 March 1989 with Mr Gilmartin. According to Chief Superintendent Sreenan's evidence, these were typed by him almost immediately following the cessation of the telephone conversations from the rough notes he had taken in the course of those telephone calls. These typed notes ultimately formed part of the Garda final report, and it appeared that the typed note of the 4 March 1989 telephone contact also formed part of an interim report made to the Department on 6 March 1989.

26.02 No reference or replication of any typed note Chief Superintendent Sreenan might have made regarding his telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin on 9 March 1989, appeared in an interim report or in the final Garda report. Chief Superintendent Sreenan believed that he had compiled such a typed note at the time, and could not explain its omission from the final report. (Chief Superintendent Sreenan was not directly involved in the preparation of the final report).

26.03 On 14 December 2003, Chief Superintendent Sreenan prepared notes from his contemporaneous rough notes and furnished to the Tribunal 'a slightly more expanded' version of the conversation he said he had with Mr Gilmartin on 9 March 1989.

26.04 Of the three contemporaneous records of his contact with Mr Gilmartin in 1989 retained by Chief Superintendent Sreenan, only those of 9 March 1989

²⁷Mr Ray Burke, the Minister for Justice in 1990, recalled that a summary of the final report had been brought to his attention.

²⁸ 4/3/1989 telephone conversation – see Exhibit 10.11
9/3/1989 telephone conversation –see Exhibit 21.11

contained a reference to Mr Gilmartin's allegation that a demand for IR£5m had been made of him while he was engaged in business in Dublin. While the Garda final report ultimately furnished to the Department of Justice in May 1990 recited many of Mr Gilmartin's complaints, in various guises, the report contained no reference to Mr Gilmartin's allegation that a sum of IR£5m had been demanded of him.

THE GARDA TELEPHONE CONVERSATION WITH MR GILMARTIN OF 4 MARCH 1989

27.01 Chief Superintendent Sreenan recorded²⁹ that in the course of a telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin, which he stated lasted some 45 minutes or so, Mr Gilmartin recounted a myriad of matters, including complaints of a serious nature. However, the notes of that conversation did not identify any particular person in connection with the complaints being made by Mr Gilmartin. In evidence, Chief Superintendent Sreenan agreed that his typed notes of 4 March 1989, were significantly more expansive than the rough scribbled notes he had made while speaking to Mr Gilmartin. Chief Superintendent Sreenan explained that, while on the telephone, it was not possible for him to write down everything that Mr Gilmartin said. The expanded typed version those notes was prepared by him within an hour of the telephone call terminating.

27.02 Chief Superintendent Sreenan acknowledged that in the course of his contact with him, Mr Gilmartin had made complaints, of an extremely serious nature, some of which related to issues of bribery and corruption and interference with Mr Gilmartin's Dublin projects by third parties. Chief Superintendent Sreenan described Mr Gilmartin as having been reluctant to name names on the telephone.³⁰ However, a particular description given by Mr Gilmartin, enabled him to identify that Mr Gilmartin was speaking about Mr George Redmond. Chief Superintendent Sreenan gleaned this from the prior briefing the Gardaí had received from the Department of Justice.

27.03 In general, there was substantial agreement between Mr Gilmartin and Chief Superintendent Sreenan on the contents of the latter's recorded note of 4 March 1989, with Mr Gilmartin describing the contents as 'generally accurate'.

²⁹See Exhibit. (Handwritten notes of 4 March & Final Report & Interim Report & Explanatory note)

³⁰In a later telephone conversation on 20 March 1989, Mr Gilmartin indicated that reluctance was because of his concern about libel.

THE GARDA INTERVIEW OF MR FRANK FEELY AND MR
SEÁN HAUGHEY ON 6 MARCH 1989

28.01 Some two days following Chief Superintendent Sreenan's first telephone contact with Mr Gilmartin, Mr Feely and Mr Haughey were interviewed by Chief Superintendent Sreenan and Superintendent Burns. The content of that interview was described in Chief Superintendent Sreenan's notes and the final Garda report.

28.02 On 6 March 1989, Mr Haughey conveyed to the Gardaí, inter alia, the following information concerning Mr Gilmartin and his complaints:

- That Mr Redmond was not taking Mr Gilmartin seriously in relation to his dealings with him.
- That Mr Gilmartin had difficulty in acquiring land for his Quarryvale project.
- That Mr Gilmartin had come into contact with Mr Liam Lawlor and that Mr Lawlor had put him in touch with eight councillors, four of whom Mr Gilmartin had met in Buswells, and that each of the four he met had demanded IR£100,000 from him for their support of Quarryvale.
- That as a result of these demands for money Mr Gilmartin had discontinued efforts to make contact with the remaining four councillors.
- That Mr Lawlor had been paid IR£3,500 per month by Arlington through Mr Gilmartin.

28.03 The Gardai were advised by Mr Feely who, according to Chief Superintendent Sreenan read from notes, that:

- Mr Redmond was about to retire on age grounds in June 1989 and, according to Mr Gilmartin, was going to work for Mr John Corcoran of Green Properties.
- Mr Feely considered the receipt by him on 6 March 1989, (the day of the interview), of a letter from Mr John Corcoran expressing interest in lands then being acquired by Mr Gilmartin as 'very significant'.
- Mr Feely had expressed concern about this.

28.04 Mr Haughey told the Gardaí that Mr Gilmartin had told him that Mr Lawlor had undertaken to obtain planning permission for a development in Blanchardstown concerning a Mr Fassnidge in return for a 5 per cent stake in the development.

28.05 Both Mr Haughey and Mr Feely advised the Gardaí of information conveyed to them by Mr Gilmartin which involved the purchase by Mr Lawlor of a Mercedes car at an agreed price of IR£40,000 from Mr Gerard Brady. According to that information Mr Lawlor had paid Mr Brady only IR£20,000 for the car and that Mr Lawlor had refused to discharge the balance of the purchase price on the basis that Mr Brady ‘owed’ Mr Lawlor for a planning approval.

28.06 In relation to the reference to Mr Lawlor having been in receipt of IR£3,500 per month, Chief Superintendent Sreenan, in evidence, agreed that at the time he interviewed Mr Haughey and Mr Feely, he understood them to relay Mr Gilmartin’s specific complaint that Mr Lawlor was in receipt of monies from Arlington and that Mr Gilmartin was unhappy about this.

28.07 Chief Superintendent Sreenan accepted that the record of his interview with Mr Haughey and Mr Feely indicated that it was Mr Lawlor whom Mr Gilmartin had identified as the person who had put Mr Gilmartin in touch with eight councillors, four of whom Mr Gilmartin had met and who, he alleged, had each asked for IR£100,000.

28.08 Chief Superintendent Sreenan believed that this recital in the Garda report was correct, notwithstanding the reference in Messrs Feely and Haughey’s memorandum of 28 February 1989, to the effect that Mr Seán Walsh TD was the individual who had given Mr Gilmartin the names of the eight councillors.³¹

28.09 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Feely stated that he believed that a copy of the notes he read from during his interview with the Gardaí on 6 March, was given to them, but neither Chief Superintendent Sreenan nor Superintendent Burns recollected this being done.

28.10 It appeared from Messrs Feely and Haughey’s memorandum of their interview with Mr Gilmartin of 24 February 1989, and the description in the final Garda report of the interview with Messrs Feely and Haughey that not all of the matters which Mr Gilmartin complained of to Messrs Feely and Haughey were either recorded in Messrs Feely and Haughey’s memorandum, or were advised to the Gardaí on 6 March 1989.

28.11 The Tribunal noted the following:

- While there was a reference in the Garda report to Mr Lawlor having sought a 5 per cent stake in the business interests of a Mr Fassnidge, there was no reference to this matter in Messrs Feely and Haughey’s note of their interview with Mr Gilmartin. Mr Feely, however, acknowledged that Mr Gilmartin met Mr Haughey on occasions when he was not present.

³¹ Mr Gilmartin in evidence rejected this suggestion that it was Mr Walsh who had given him the names. He stated that insofar as Mr Walsh had given him the names of individuals he had done so only in a specific context when he encountered Mr Gilmartin in Leinster House. Mr Feely was certain, however, that his note of Mr Walsh being the individual who gave Mr Gilmartin the councillors’ names reflected what he had been informed.

- Messrs Feely and Haughey's notes recorded Mr Gilmartin advising them on 24 February of a demand for IR£5m (albeit attributed to Mr Lawlor) yet there was no written record of Chief Superintendent Sreenan and Superintendent Burns being advised of this IR£5m demand by Messrs Haughey and Feely on 6 March 1989. Chief Superintendent Sreenan claimed that he had no recollection of this matter being told to him on 6 March 1989. Superintendent Burns said he was confident that Chief Superintendent Sreenan's note was accurate. However by 6 March 1989, Chief Superintendent Sreenan at least was aware of an allegation of a demand for IR£5m, as was clear from the aide memoire prepared by him following the briefing of Gardaí by the Department of Justice on 3 March 1989.

28.12 Mr Feely told the Tribunal that he believed he had given the Gardaí all the information in his possession concerning Mr Gilmartin's complaints and he maintained that all his notes had been handed over to them.

THE GARDA TELEPHONE CONVERSATION WITH MR GILMARTIN ON 9 MARCH 1989

29.01 The only extant contemporaneous note of this telephone conversation were Chief Superintendent Sreenan's rough notes made on the day of the call. Those notes were elaborated by him over fourteen and a half years later in a document which he provided to the Tribunal in December 2003.

29.02 Similar to the notes made by Chief Superintendent Sreenan of 4 March 1989 telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin, the 9 March 1989 note was replete with complaints made by Mr Gilmartin, in a general way, of corrupt demands encountered by him as he went about his business in Dublin. Mr Gilmartin took issue with the note in some material respects.

29.03 Chief Superintendent Sreenan had recorded Mr Gilmartin as stating the following:

'There is money being paid to one fellow who threatened that if the investment was to get off the ground he is getting £3,500 per month, blackmail money. Arlington got scared and I opposed and refused and told the Government he was a gangster. He walked into Arlington and put a proposition on the table a year ago and since June 1988 had been getting his pay off. He wanted £5 million in an offshore account, then a 10% stake in Bachelor's Walk deal or it might not get off the ground, and he was supposed to be speaking on behalf of the Government. He came to us on the basis the Government had instructed him to help get the deal done. I only met him about a year ago.'

29.04 Mr Gilmartin agreed that he would have relayed such information to Chief Superintendent Sreenan without naming names.

29.05 Mr Gilmartin did not dispute that he had made a reference to 'one fellow' getting '£3,500 per month blackmail money'. Chief Superintendent Sreenan, in evidence, stated that from information already available to him as a result of his interview with Messrs Feely and Haughey on 6 March 1989, he was aware that Mr Lawlor was the person being spoken about by Mr Gilmartin as having received these monies.

29.06 With regard to the phrase 'he wanted £5 million in an offshore account', Mr Gilmartin vehemently disputed that he had ever attributed the IR£5m demand to Mr Lawlor.

29.07 According to Chief Superintendent Sreenan's evidence, he had understood the reference made by Mr Gilmartin in the context of the IR£5 million demand to have been to Mr Lawlor. However he said that he was uncertain as to the exact context in which Mr Gilmartin had asserted that Mr Lawlor sought IR£5m to be paid into an offshore account.

29.08 Chief Superintendent Sreenan agreed that a logical reading of his note, as taken on 9 March 1989, suggested that Mr Gilmartin had asserted that someone (understood by Chief Superintendent Sreenan to be Mr Lawlor) had made such a demand in connection with the Arlington/Bachelor's Walk development. However, in evidence, Mr Gilmartin maintained that the demand for IR£5m was made in the context of both Bachelor's Walk and Quarryvale. Furthermore, no connection was made between the IR£5m demand and the Arlington/Bachelor's Walk development in the memorandum compiled by Mr Feely and initialled by Haughey on 28 February 1989 (in relation to the meeting with Mr Gilmartin on 24 February 1989). That memorandum, however, recited Mr Gilmartin as having told them that a demand was made in relation to the 'Irishtown' (Quarryvale) development. However, this memorandum did attribute the IR£5m demand as having been made by Mr Lawlor.

29.09 Chief Superintendent Sreenan confirmed that on 9 March 1989, Mr Gilmartin did not mention Mr Lawlor's name to him but that he had made the connection to Mr Lawlor and the IR£5m by himself.

29.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin did not, in his conversation with Chief Superintendent Sreenan on 9 March 1989, attribute the demand for IR£5m made of him to Mr Lawlor. Mr Gilmartin was at all times, both prior to and in the course of his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, adamant that he was asked for IR£5m by an unidentified man.

29.11 Mr Gilmartin also took issue with the manner in which Chief Superintendent Sreenan recorded a meeting Mr Gilmartin had with Mr Seán Walsh TD. The 9 March 1989 note recorded the following:

I had to meet the Belgard committee on material contravention. I had to meet with Seán Walsh, Chairman. Met Seán Walsh in the Dáil—he felt it was fantastic. He is fair. Seán Walsh gave me a list of names of elected members that would have to be filled in and be aware of what it is about.

Mr Gilmartin said he did not provide this information and in fact never met the Belgard Committee.

29.12 Chief Superintendent Sreenan said that he did not know Mr Walsh, and intimated that the information recorded by him could only have come from Mr Gilmartin in the circumstances.

29.13 Mr Gilmartin maintained that he had spoken to Mr Walsh only in specific circumstances and not as recorded by Chief Superintendent Sreenan.

29.14 The Tribunal believed that Chief Superintendent Sreenan's reference to Mr Walsh was not correct. It may well have been a conflation of different pieces of information given to him by Mr Gilmartin at about the same time.

29.15 Chief Superintendent Sreenan conceded, in the course of his evidence, that both his rough and expanded notes of his 9 March 1989 telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin, were 'bitty' and 'disjointed'. It was clear to the Tribunal that in December 2003, when he compiled his expanded note, it was difficult for Chief Superintendent Sreenan to recreate from those rough notes the detail of a conversation he had had over fourteen and a half years earlier. Understandably, his expanded note was less than one hundred per cent accurate.

30.01 Chief Superintendent Sreenan's typed note of this telephone call recorded that he was advised by Mr Gilmartin that he did not intend to cooperate further with the Garda inquiry, and was thinking of 'pulling out altogether'. Mr Gilmartin did not dispute that he had so informed Chief Superintendent Sreenan.

30.02 No written statement of complaint was ever provided by Mr Gilmartin to the Gardaí. According to Chief Superintendent Sreenan, it was a fear of libel that dissuaded Mr Gilmartin from cooperating with the Garda investigation.

THE 'GARDA BURNS' TELEPHONE CALL TO MR GILMARTIN

31.01 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that within a day or two of his telephone conversation of 4 March 1989 with Chief Superintendent Sreenan, he received a telephone call from a man who introduced himself as 'Garda Burns'. According to Mr Gilmartin, the caller had sufficient information to lead him to believe that this individual had knowledge of the matters relayed by him to Chief Superintendent Sreenan on 4 March 1989. Mr Gilmartin said he was advised by this individual that the complaints he was making were not welcome and that the best thing he, Mr Gilmartin, could do was go back to where he had come from.

31.02 No complaint of having received such a call was made by Mr Gilmartin to the Gardaí.

31.03 Mr Gilmartin stated that he did not know the true identity of the individual calling himself 'Garda Burns'. Mr Gilmartin emphasised that he had no reason to suspect that this call was in fact from Superintendent Burns, or anyone directly associated with the Garda investigation. As far as Mr Gilmartin was aware he had had no contact with Superintendent Burns.

31.04 Superintendent Burns stated that he had never spoken to, or had any contact with, Mr Gilmartin.

31.05 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin did receive a telephone call from an individual who introduced himself as 'Garda Burns', and that he was effectively warned away from the path that he had by then embarked on, namely dialogue with the Gardaí regarding allegations of corrupt practices and demands for money. It was common case that Mr Gilmartin's liaison with the Gardaí ended on 20 March 1989. The Tribunal was satisfied that the purpose of the telephone call (and, indeed its effect) was to, discourage, intimidate or warn Mr Gilmartin to desist from any further cooperation with the Garda inquiry. The Tribunal was also satisfied that, prior to the 'Garda Burns' telephone call, Mr Gilmartin had cooperated with the Garda inquiry and had provided them with information which he believed was true and accurate.

31.06 The Gardaí did not interview Messrs Lawlor or Redmond or Cllr Hanrahan in the course of their investigation. This was despite the fact that that investigation commenced with the Gardaí being briefed, albeit in general terms, by the Department of Justice about what were, on their face, serious allegations made by Mr Gilmartin of demands for money and other corrupt practices encountered by him and that those individuals were mentioned in that context. Insofar as Mr Redmond (already identified to the Gardaí by third parties, in connection with planning irregularities, prior to Mr Gilmartin's complaints) was interviewed by the Gardaí in 1989, it appeared he was not interviewed in connection with Mr Gilmartin's complaints.

31.07 The Tribunal found that the failure to interview these individuals was puzzling, having regard to the fact that, subsequent to 20 March 1989, the Garda inquiry into Mr Gilmartin's claims continued for a number of months, up to November 1989.

31.08 While Chief Superintendent Sreenan rejected any suggestion that decisions to interview or not to interview particular individuals were the subject of discrimination, he nevertheless revealed in the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, that the fact that Mr Lawlor was a TD may have been a factor in the decision not to interview him. Superintendent Burns, however, vehemently rejected any suggestion that Mr Lawlor's position as a TD was the reason that he was not interviewed. The Tribunal, however, believed it likely that Mr Lawlor's position as a TD was indeed a factor in the decision taken by the investigating Gardaí not to interview him.

31.09 Within this period the Gardaí interviewed Mr Owen O'Callaghan on 5 April 1989, Mr Brady on 5 June 1989, and the two Arlington executives, Mr Dadley and Mr Mould, on 7 November 1989, in London.

THE GARDA INTERVIEW WITH MR OWEN O'CALLAGHAN

32.01 Mr O'Callaghan was interviewed in Cork by Superintendent Burns on 5 April 1989. According to the latter, the decision to interview Mr O'Callaghan followed on from the Gardaí learning from their contact with Messrs Feely and Haughey that Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin had entered into an arrangement regarding their respective business dealings in Dublin.

32.02 Superintendent Burns told the Tribunal that he did not allude to the names of Mr Lawlor, Mr Redmond, and Cllr Hanrahan in the course of his interview with Mr O'Callaghan. Instead, he had outlined, in a general way, Mr Gilmartin's complaints of having been obstructed in the course of his business dealings in Dublin by people looking for money in return for support. Mr O'Callaghan indicated that he was aware of Mr Gilmartin's problems and complaints. According to Superintendent Burns he told Mr O'Callaghan of Mr Gilmartin's reluctance to continue his involvement with the Garda investigation and Mr O'Callaghan had undertaken to speak to Mr Gilmartin, with a view to persuading him to meet senior Garda officers to discuss his complaints and difficulties. A Garda interim report in April 1989, recorded Mr O’Callaghan as having telephoned Superintendent Burns on 18 April 1989, to inform him that Mr Gilmartin was not prepared to discuss the matter further with the Gardaí. Mr Gilmartin denied that Mr O’Callaghan had asked him to co-operate with the Gardaí inquiry. On the contrary, according to Mr Gilmartin Mr O’Callaghan told him that he was shooting himself in the foot by going to the Gardaí, and that this was not the way business was done in Ireland. Mr O’Callaghan denied this assertion.

32.03 In the final Garda report of 24 May 1990, Superintendent Burns set out his understanding of what Mr O’Callaghan had told him regarding his and Mr Gilmartin’s respective projects in Dublin as follows:

According to Mr O’Callaghan, the two projects, i.e. O’Callaghan’s and Mr Gilmartin’s could not go ahead together. According to Mr O’Callaghan, Government Ministers were anxious that Mr Gilmartin’s project went ahead and states that Mr Pádraig Flynn, T.D., Minister for the Environment asked him to step aside and let Gilmartin’s project go ahead. As a result of this, he (O’Callaghan) came to an agreement with Mr Gilmartin that the latter’s project went ahead. They agreed to work together. This decision was communicated to Dublin County Council.

32.04 In the course of his evidence, Mr O’Callaghan strongly rejected the suggestion that he had ever told Superintendent Burns that he had been asked by Mr Pádraig Flynn to step aside and to let Mr Gilmartin’s project go ahead, or that he and Mr Gilmartin had agreed to work together. Mr O’Callaghan’s evidence was that he had told Superintendent Burns merely what Mr Gilmartin had told him, i.e., that Mr Flynn and his colleagues were encouraging Mr Gilmartin in his endeavours. Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal he had had no dealings either with Mr Flynn or Government Ministers in relation to these matters. Mr O’Callaghan said he believed that he told Superintendent Burns that government ministers were anxious that Mr Gilmartin’s project should proceed and in doing so was repeating what he himself had been told by Mr Gilmartin.

32.05 Mr O’Callaghan was aware that Gardaí were investigating Mr Gilmartin’s complaints concerning Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond, when he was interviewed by Superintendent Burns. Mr O’Callaghan advised Superintendent Burns of information that Mr Gilmartin had told him concerning Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond.

32.06 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that his recollection of Mr Gilmartin’s complaints relating to Mr Lawlor, was that the latter was ‘muscling in’ on Mr Gilmartin’s Quarryvale and Bachelor’s Walk developments. However Mr

O'Callaghan maintained that he had not heard Mr Gilmartin specifically mention demands for money (other than in relation to Cllr Hanrahan). Mr O'Callaghan recalled that Mr Gilmartin's complaints regarding Mr Redmond merely related to the issue of Mr Redmond's role in the selling of local authority public lands.

32.07 The Tribunal believed it was unlikely that Mr Gilmartin failed to include in his complaints about Mr Lawlor to Mr O'Callaghan a complaint relating to a demand for money and a demand for a stake in Mr Gilmartin's development projects. As previously set out, the Tribunal believed that Mr O'Callaghan's failure to mention Cllr Hanrahan's demand for IR£100,000 was attributable to his relationship with Cllr Hanrahan.

32.08 As to the accuracy of Superintendent Burns' record of what Mr O'Callaghan had stated to him regarding Mr Flynn, the Tribunal was satisfied that Superintendent Burns' record was correct. In arriving at this conclusion, the Tribunal took cognisance of the content of the note of an interview Mr O'Callaghan had with Mr Sean Haughey and Mr Morrissey on 8 March 1989. According to that note, Mr O'Callaghan informed Mr Haughey that he had approached Mr Gilmartin with a view to arriving at some arrangement with him with regard to their respective developments, following discussions which Mr O'Callaghan had with Mr Flynn.

THE GARDA INTERVIEW WITH MR GERARD BRADY

33.01 Notwithstanding Mr Gilmartin's declared intention by 20 March 1989 not to make a statement to the Gardaí, the Garda investigation into Mr Gilmartin's complaints continued, with an interview on 5 June 1989 with Mr Gerard Brady, the proprietor of a car dealership located on the Navan Road, Castleknock. Details of this interview were furnished by Superintendent Burns to the Assistant Commissioner on 26 June 1989, in the following terms:

With regard to the verbal allegations of Thomas Gilmartin of Luton, that Liam Lawlor, T.D. had obtained a Mercedes car from a Mr Brady, and that Mr Lawlor had subsequently refused to pay £20,000 (balance of payment for car) on the basis that Brady owed him this for Planning Approval. On 5th June, 1989, I interviewed Mr Jerry Brady, of Messrs. Brady's, Blanchardstown, Co. Dublin.

This firm is a main Mercedes dealer. I asked him if any prominent person had refused to pay the balance on a new Mercedes car. He replied no. I then asked him if he was involved in any planning application and he said that his firm had planning permission for new premises on the forthcoming Blanchardstown Bye-Pass.

33.02 In his evidence, Superintendent Burns conceded that notwithstanding the reference to a prominent ‘person’ in the interim report, it was likely he queried Mr Brady as to whether a prominent ‘politician’ had purchased a car from him and had refused to pay the balance due. Superintendent Burns had not, in the query he made of Mr Brady, identified Mr Lawlor by name.

33.03 Mr Brady, in his evidence, recalled his interview with Superintendent Burns, but could not recollect what had been asked of him on that occasion, save that he had been asked if a prominent politician had purchased a car from him. Mr Brady said he had assumed that reference to be to Mr Lawlor. Mr Brady was unable to recall if he had been asked by Superintendent Burns if money was outstanding on the transaction. He told the Tribunal that he did not tell Superintendent Burns that, as of 5 June 1989, that money was in fact outstanding on a new Mercedes car he had sold to Mr Lawlor in January of 1989.

33.04 In an unsworn Affidavit furnished to the Tribunal by Mr Lawlor in the course of Discovery, the following reference is attributed to Mr Brady:

A number of years ago a senior garda officer came to my premises and asked for a private discussion with me. He (the garda) stated that he had knowledge that a well-known politician had obtained a car from me and asked me bluntly if the car had been paid for. I responded to him that the transaction had been carried out in a normal fashion and that there was most certainly nothing incorrect about it. My recollection is that I showed the garda my records in relation to this transaction and he was happy about it. I was not contacted again by the guards or anybody else until the Tribunal made contact with me.

33.05 Mr Brady, in response to a question, stated that he had advised Mr Lawlor in 1999, that he had provided this information to the Gardaí. Mr Brady accepted that the information in the unsworn Affidavit was information he had had in 1999. Mr Brady intimated that the Affidavit may have been drafted by a firm of solicitors in Castleknock to whom he had been taken by Mr Lawlor in 1999.

THE GARDA INTERVIEW WITH THE ARLINGTON EXECUTIVES IN NOVEMBER 1989

34.01 In an attempt to ascertain whether Mr Lawlor was in receipt of sums of IR£3,500 per month from Arlington and if so, for what purpose, Chief Superintendent Sreenan and Superintendent Burns interviewed two Arlington executives, Mr Dadley and Mr Mould, on 7 November 1989, in London.

34.02 The final Garda report summarised the interview with the Arlington executives in the following terms:

We outlined the nature of our enquiries in so far as they were concerned and that we were making enquiries into the activities of an Irish Politician who had been mentioned in the context of their Dublin Enterprise. We did not name the politician. Both Mr Dadley and Mr Mould then said they assumed we were enquiring about Mr Liam Lawlor and we agreed. They stated that Mr Lawlor had indeed visited their Head Office in connection with the Bachelors' Walk Project and that he had suggested they put a bowling alley in the basement. They did not take him seriously. He was treated courteously. There was no offer by Mr Lawlor to act as a Consultant and no fee, money, or any benefit was given him, nor was same suggested by either side.

34.03 Later in the report, the following observation was made by Superintendent Burns:

I would also point out that the interview by Gardaí of Edward A. Dadley, Chairman of Arlington Retail Developments Ltd., and Raymond Mould, Deputy Chairman and Chief Executive of Arlington Securities P.L.C. concerning Mr Lawlor's presence at Arlington's Offices in London differs substantially from Thomas Gilmartin's account.

34.04 In their interview with the Gardaí, neither Mr Dadley nor Mr Mould disclosed the fact that substantial sums of money had in fact been paid, directly and indirectly, to Mr Lawlor by Arlington. Had they done so, the Gardaí would have learned that between June 1988 and early 1989, Mr Lawlor received in total a sum of IR£32,500 and Stg£3,500 from Arlington, albeit paid, by and large, in monthly instalments by Mr Gilmartin, and, further, that on 19 April 1989, Arlington Securities Plc had paid a cheque in the sum of Stg£33,000 to Mr Lawlor, through Economic Reports Ltd.

34.05 The following exchange took place on Day 493 between Tribunal Counsel and Chief Superintendent Sreenan:

Q. 395 'Did you have any reason to suspect at that time when you met Mr Dadley and Mr Mould that they were being less than frank with you?'

A. 'Well one had their own opinion of whether or not they were in receipt of information that they were not giving to us. It was difficult to be sure but I would agree with what you have said, what you are suggesting there.'

34.06 Mr Dadley, giving evidence on Day 466, told the Tribunal that he could not recall the exact conversation, or any detail of the interview that had taken place with the Gardaí in November 1989. He sought to explain the information provided to the Gardaí on 7 November 1989, to the effect that Mr Lawlor had not been paid consultancy fees by Arlington, on the basis that such fees had been paid by Mr Gilmartin and not Arlington.

34.07 The Tribunal did not accept this explanation in the light of Mr Dadley and Mr Mould's own admission in the course of their evidence to the Tribunal that Mr Gilmartin had paid Mr Lawlor in 1988/9 on behalf of Arlington. Furthermore, at the time of that interview in November 1989, it must have been fresh in their minds that an Arlington cheque for Stg£33,000 had issued only some seven months previously to Economic Reports Ltd (a payment then unknown to Mr Gilmartin).

34.08 The Tribunal was satisfied that Messrs Dadley and Mould deliberately concealed from the Gardaí the true factual position regarding payments made to Mr Lawlor by Arlington. The Tribunal believed that Messrs Dadley and Mould's reluctance to apprise the Gardaí of the true position was probably because of a concern that any such admission of payments to Mr Lawlor would embroil them, and their company, in the Garda investigation, and that Arlington's payments to Mr Lawlor to assist them 'through the corridors of power', would become a matter of public controversy.

THE GARDA INTERVIEW WITH MR GEORGE REDMOND

35.01 Superintendent Burns told the Tribunal that he interviewed Mr Redmond sometime after the latter's retirement on 26 June 1989, in relation to an issue concerning a way leave at Ballyogan, Dublin.³² However, apparently Mr Redmond was not interviewed regarding Mr Gilmartin's allegations.

35.02 Superintendent Burns, in evidence, agreed that prior to Mr Redmond retiring on 26 June 1989, he was telephoned by Mr Feely in relation to Mr Redmond, and in connection with the latter's pension. Superintendent Burns told the Tribunal that notwithstanding that the Garda inquiry was ongoing, he was apparently satisfied to give Mr Feely a 'clean bill of health' for Mr Redmond. Superintendent Burns explained his decision to do so on the basis that the issue of Mr Redmond's entitlement to his pension could be revisited at a later stage if subsequent events merited it.

35.03 Superintendent Burns told the Tribunal that when he interviewed Mr Redmond, he did not question him about Mr Gilmartin's allegations. He had not contemplated the use of the Bankers Books Evidence Act, (as amended), in connection with his inquiries regarding Mr Redmond, despite the fact that this procedure had been utilised in relation to other aspects of the corruption inquiry.

THE OUTCOME OF THE GARDA INQUIRY

36.01 In the final Garda report of 24 May 1990, the following statement appeared, concerning Mr Redmond:

The allegations made against former Dublin Assistant City and County Manager, George W. Redmond by Thomas Gilmartin and others have been thoroughly investigated. There is no evidence to suggest that this man has committed any crime. In the case of the granting of way leave across Dublin County Council lands I consider this a matter which might be brought to the notice of the Auditor, Department of the Environment, for the reasons already set out herein.

36.02 With regard to Mr Lawlor, in the final Garda report, Superintendent Burns stated:

No evidence of criminal conduct by Mr Liam Lawlor T.D. has emerged in this investigation. Where verbal allegations have been made, they have been found wanting and Mr Lawlor emerges, as far as I am concerned, with his good reputation unscathed. Mr Lawlor is an associate of James Kennedy, Auctioneer and Land Developer who in turn is a friend of George W. Redmond, former Assistant City and County Manager.

36.03 The following further observation regarding Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond was also made:

Gossip and rumour abound in Ireland and many an innocent, defenceless person has had his good name tarnished as a result. Therefore, it was an important part of this enquiry to delve fully into the allegations made by Thomas Gilmartin and others concerning Mr Liam Lawlor, T.D. and Mr George W. Redmond, former Assistant City and County Manager. Mr Liam Lawlor T.D. emerges from this enquiry with his good reputation unscathed.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS RELATING TO THE GARDA INQUIRY³³

37.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that the conclusions set out in the Final Garda Report of 29 May 1990 were unwarranted having regard to the nature and extent of that inquiry. Contrary to what was stated in the preceding paragraph, the Tribunal was satisfied that the complaints made by Mr Gilmartin concerning Mr Redmond, and Mr Lawlor (and indeed Cllr Hanrahan), were not thoroughly investigated by the investigating Gardaí.

³³ While Chief Superintendent Sreenan was involved in the Garda investigation in the earlier stages, he did not appear to have had an involvement in its final stages or in the preparation of the final report.

37.02 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin's decision to discontinue contact with the Gardaí after 20 March 1989 arose directly as a consequence of the intimidatory telephone call from 'Garda Burns', which the Tribunal accepted was received by Mr Gilmartin.

37.03 The Garda inquiry would almost certainly have benefited from further contact with Mr Gilmartin after 20 March 1989. Nevertheless, by this time Chief Superintendent Sreenan had spoken to him by telephone on three occasions and the Gardaí had sufficient information to have conducted a thorough inquiry had they then proceeded to interview a number of individuals. However, they neither made nor attempted to make contact with those individuals.

37.04 Notwithstanding Superintendent Burns' evidence to the contrary, the Tribunal, believed it likely that Mr Lawlor's position as a TD was a factor in the decision taken by the investigating Gardaí not to interview him.

37.05 The Tribunal was puzzled as to why the final Garda report went to such lengths to exonerate Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond in the absence of a more comprehensive inquiry into complaints of corruption involving those two individuals.

MR GILMARTIN'S CONTACT WITH MR AHERN RELATING TO HIS ATTEMPTS TO PURCHASE THE IRISHTOWN LANDS

38.01 On 19 May 1989, Mr Gilmartin formally tendered to Dublin Corporation for the purchase of its Irishtown lands at Quarryvale, although it was his belief that he had previously effectively concluded a deal for the purchase of the lands with the Corporation, through its Chief Valuer, Mr Michael McLoone. The value of the tender was IR£5.1m, and the tender document was accompanied by a bank draft for IR£255,000 by way of deposit.

38.02 On 24 May 1989, Mr Gilmartin's tender for IR£5.1m was accepted by a senior official of Dublin Corporation, subject to formal City Council approval. Mr Gilmartin's tender was for a significantly greater sum than the only other tender submitted, from a subsidiary company of Green Property Plc.

38.03 On 26 May 1989, the Planning and Development Committee of the Corporation recommended approval of Mr Gilmartin's tender to the City Council. On 12 June 1989, the tender was finally approved by the City Council, and some days later, on 19 June 1989, Dublin Corporation's law agent formally advised Mr Gilmartin that his tender had been accepted and requested the payment of IR£255,000, being the balance of the deposit, which was duly paid by Mr Gilmartin. The sale of the Irishtown lands to Barkhill Ltd was finally completed in February 1990.

38.04 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal of a discussion he had with Mr Bertie Ahern, the then Minister for Labour, in May 1989, in relation to the purchase of the Irishtown lands, at the time when Mr Gilmartin's tender bid was being processed in Dublin Corporation. Mr Gilmartin said that discussions he had with Mr McLoone at this time heightened his concerns that, notwithstanding his previous complaints, there was ongoing interference by Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor with his bid to acquire the Irishtown lands. Mr McLoone acknowledged to the Tribunal that he may have advised Mr Gilmartin that he was being 'shafted' by Mr Redmond, but he said he was unaware of interference by Mr Lawlor. Prompted by a query from Mr McLoone as to whether there was anyone he could trust to assist him, Mr Gilmartin thought of Mr Ahern, and duly telephoned him and outlined the complaints and concerns he had regarding Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor. Mr Ahern's response was to state that he would see what he could do. Mr Ahern told the Tribunal that he had no recollection of Mr Gilmartin's telephone call or of complaints about Mr Redmond and/or Mr Lawlor.

MR GILMARTIN'S MEETINGS WITH CLLR JOE BURKE (FF)

39.01 According to Mr Gilmartin, some days after his conversation with Mr Ahern, Cllr Joe Burke, a political associate and friend of Mr Ahern and a member of Dublin Corporation Planning and Development Committee, arrived into Mr Gilmartin's office in St Stephen's Green. He proceeded to advise Mr Gilmartin that he had been sent by Mr Ahern to see what might be done to assist him. Mr Gilmartin said that he relayed the history of the events relating to the Irishtown lands to Cllr Burke who then agreed to look into the matter.

39.02 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that, a few days later (13 June 1989), Cllr Burke telephoned and advised him that Dublin Corporation had approved his tender (approved by the Council on 12 June 1989), and indicated to him that he would have no further problems. Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that following Cllr Burke's telephone call to him to advise him of the success of his tender, Cllr Burke called the following day to Mr Gilmartin's office and also on another occasion when Mr Sheeran was present. Mr Gilmartin was formally advised by Dublin Corporation of the approval of his tender by letter dated 19 June 1989.

39.03 Mr Gilmartin's recollection of the number of meetings between himself and Cllr Burke was confusing and somewhat inconsistent. In his January 1999 telephone conversation with Counsel for the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin suggested that there had been two meetings with Cllr Burke. The note taken of that telephone conversation by Counsel for the Tribunal stated:

In the case of the Corporation Quarryvale lands, Mr Gilmartin said that he went to Bertie Ahern to complain about what was going on. He said that the first time he spoke to Mr Ahern about this, Mr Ahern suggested that he make a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party. In any event Mr Ahern said that he would send in someone to sort out the problem. He sent in Joe Burke who was from Donegal but who was on the Corporation. Joe Burke came to see Mr Gilmartin and asked him what was going on. Mr Gilmartin told him that Redmond and Lalor (sic) were pulling a stroke. Mr Gilmartin told Mr Burke said that he was fed up with the corruption that was going on and might do something about it. Mr Gilmartin said that he believed that Bertie Ahern sent Burke in as damaged limitation exercise for Fianna Fail and for the purpose of protecting the Party. In any event Mr Burke went in and did something. Mr Gilmartin says that the Corporation has details of the Burke intervention. Mr Gilmartin did not know precisely what Bertie Ahern did. However, at the second meeting a week later, the tender was approved.

About a week after that, Burke arrived to Gilmartin's office. He himmed and hawed and while he did not overtly refer to money, Mr Gilmartin got the distinct impression that he was looking for a donation of money. Mr Gilmartin said that he did not 'take the bait' and then Mr Burke said that Bertie Ahern would like to meet him. Mr Gilmartin said that he was going out to Dublin Airport to catch a flight to England. Mr Burke said that he would give him a lift and they could call to see Bertie on the way out to the airport. Mr Burke gave Mr Gilmartin a lift in a truck and they stopped at a pub in Drumcondra. Mr Burke asked Mr Gilmartin to wait in the truck and went into the pub. He was in there for about twenty minutes. He came out after twenty minutes and said that Bertie was not in there. He then drove to another pub somewhere off Griffith Avenue or somewhere like that which he said was Bertie Ahern's own local. He again asked Mr Gilmartin to wait in the truck and went into the pub. After a few minutes, he came out and said that Bertie was not there yet. Mr Gilmartin said that he had to go and Mr Burke drove him to the airport.

39.04 In the course of a meeting between Mr Gilmartin, his own solicitors, and members of the Tribunal's legal team in London on 8 July 1999, Cllr Burke's involvement was again discussed. A note as to what had been discussed with Mr

Gilmartin, which was prepared by Tribunal Counsel and dated 12 July 1999, stated:

We then turned to discuss the date of Mr Gilmartin's meetings with Mr Joe Burke. Mr Gilmartin says that he had previously overlooked the fact that he had had a third meeting with Mr Burke. There were three meetings in total. The first meeting came about after Mr Gilmartin had been told by Paddy Morrissey and Martin McCloone that George Redmond and Liam Lawlor were doing everything in their power to block his purchase. Mr Gilmartin already knew that George Redmond had tipped off Green Properties and that it was as a result of this that the matter was put out to tender. Martin McCloone asked Mr Gilmartin did he know anybody and strongly suggested that if he did, he'd better do something or his tender might be defeated. Tom Gilmartin said that Paddy Morrissey was sick and tired of Lawlor and Redmond's antics.

And

... he telephoned Bertie Ahern who said that he would send somebody down to see him. He sent down Joe Burke. This was Mr Gilmartin's first meeting with Joe Burke. The second meeting with Joe Burke was the occasion when Mr Burke drove Mr Gilmartin to the Airport in a pick-up truck, stopping at two public houses on the way looking for Bertie Ahern. This was after the Gilmartin tender had been approved on the 12th June, 1989. The third meeting with Mr Burke which was also attended by Mr Paul Sheerin, occurred later in June, 1989. Mr Gilmartin said that all three meetings with Mr Burke occurred within the space of one month.'

39.05 Mr Gilmartin made a formal written narrative statement to the Tribunal dated 17 May 2001. In his statement, Mr Gilmartin described how he telephoned Mr Bertie Ahern and informed him about the difficulties which he was experiencing in relation to the purchase of the Irishtown and Wood Farm lands. Mr Gilmartin went on:

He told me that he would see what he could do. I was contacted a few days later by Joe Burke who arranged to meet me at my office at 25 St. Stephen's Green in the middle of June 1989. He told me that he had been instructed by Mr Ahern to look into my complaints and I told him about the problems that I was encountering. A few days later the final approval was given for the sale of the Irishtown and Wood Farm lands. Mr Burke informed me of this news in a subsequent telephone conversation and also told me that I would have no further problems. Mr Burke met me in my office afterwards and suggested I should meet with Mr Ahern later that evening. However, Mr Burke was unsuccessful in locating Mr Ahern. On the 20th June 1989 I telephoned Mr Ahern to thank him for his intervention. During the course of that conversation he asked me whether I had given a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party. I informed him that I had given 'IR£50,000' to Mr Flynn and Mr Ahern made no further reference to the matter.

39.06 Finally, in Mr Gilmartin's sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin said that he believed there was a fourth meeting with Cllr Burke.

39.07 In the course of his sworn evidence, Mr Gilmartin was questioned on different days in the course of public hearings about his contact with Cllr Burke. While continuing to insist that he had had four meetings with Cllr Burke, Mr Gilmartin was clearly confused as to when they had occurred and the precise sequence of those meetings. Mr Gilmartin's recollection was that two of the four meetings involved Cllr Burke casually calling to his office. Mr Gilmartin was, however, consistent in his evidence that on one occasion he was given a lift to Dublin airport by Cllr Burke.

39.08 It was in any event clear that Cllr Burke met Mr Gilmartin in his office on more than one occasion and probably on three or four occasions.

THE IR£500,000 ALLEGATION

40.01 Mr Gilmartin alleged that in the course of a conversation between himself and Cllr Burke during their fourth and last encounter, when Mr Burke had called to his office unexpectedly, he understood that Cllr Burke in a roundabout or indirect fashion, had sought IR£500,000 from him. Mr Gilmartin said that in the course of 'chit chat' and when he was somewhat distracted by a telephone call, he heard Cllr Burke mention 'half a million pounds'. Mr Gilmartin had initially interpreted this as a reference to the full deposit of IR£510,000 that he had by then expended on the acquisition of the Irishtown lands.

40.02 Mr Gilmartin was questioned regarding this discussion with Cllr Burke. Following upon a question put to him by Counsel for the Tribunal based on an assumption that Mr Gilmartin had, in effect, suggested that Mr Burke had made a demand for a payment of IR£500,000, the following exchange took place:

'A.It wasn't a demand it was talking about 500,000 pounds. Whether I would pay it. It wasn't a demand. It wasn't a question, like being Lawlor hand me, you know, £100,000. This wasn't a demand like that. It was what I call a typical Donegal fashion, talking in circles. Talking around and around a half a million.' 'I understood it to mean just that

Q. He asked me would I be prepared to pay half a million pounds because I knew that Bertie Ahern was looking after him?

A. That was after I made the reference 'I'd pay a fing half a million pounds to get out of here, if I got my money back' . . . And he said would you

Q. There's no ambiguity about that statement, Mr Gilmartin, is there, in fairness. It says he asked me would I not be prepared to pay half a million pounds because I knew that Bertie Ahern was looking after me?

A. Yeah.

Q. There's no ambiguity about that.

A. That's the only figure that was mentioned, half a million pounds.

Q. Yes

A. But it was talked around in circles for the best part of ten, fifteen minutes.

Q. Yes. And then the phone rang and Mr?

A. To start with and then I began to realise he was looking for money

Q. Yes?

A. And the only figure mentioned was the half a million pounds.

Q. The conversation, Mr Gilmartin, as you describe it appears to fall into two. There was a conversation chit chat as you described it about a half million pounds. The phone rings. You answer the phone, you have your conversation with Mr Boland. And then the conversation resumes. And it's in the resumed conversation, if I understand you correctly that Mr Burke said to you would you not be prepared to pay half a million pounds because you knew that Bertie Ahern was looking after you?

A. It was after I made the statement I'd pay a half a million pounds to get out of here if I got my money back.

Q. Yes. Who were you to give the half a million pounds to, Mr Gilmartin?

A. I don't know.

Q. Was there any discussion . . .

A. I assumed that since he brought me to meet Mr Ahern and went from . . . in a ride in the pick up to two different pubs to meet Mr Ahern. At the end of the day, I thought it was Mr Ahern who he was asking on behalf of.'

Q. 'Yes. Well he had already said that. He said would I not be prepared to pay half a million pounds because I knew that Bertie Ahern was looking after me?

A. Yeah.

Q. And you went along with this . . .

A. It was after I made the statement.

Q. Yes?

A. That I'd pay half a million pounds if I got me money back to get out of here.

Q. What did you think you were going to get for your half a million pounds Mr Gilmartin?' . . . 'What did you believe you were going to receive?

A. Didn't think anything. It was an off the cuff remark. If I could get me money back at that time I would be happy to take a plane back to England and . . . for . . .

Q. What did you think Mr Burke could deliver or indeed Mr Ahern could deliver for half a million pounds?

A. I don't know. I was looking for nothing. I categorically refused to pay any corrupt payments to anybody. At all times I have. I refused Lawlor. I refused Redmond. I refused Hanrahan. I would not be involved in any corruption or buying a favour from anybody.'

40.03 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he never equated the words uttered by Cllr Burke with a straightforward demand for money, unlike demands made of him by Mr Lawlor. Various, Mr Gilmartin described Cllr Burke as talking in 'reels', talking 'around' IR£500,000 and asking for money in a 'roundabout' fashion. In the course of his testimony, Mr Gilmartin steadfastly maintained that he had understood from Cllr Burke that there was a price payable for the assistance rendered by Mr Ahern. Mr Gilmartin emphasised to the Tribunal that he was not alleging that Mr Burke's demand had been made with Mr Ahern's knowledge.

40.04 Mr Gilmartin's first formal narrative statement dealing specifically with this issue was provided to the Tribunal on 10 March 2004. It stated as follows:

'I remember that Joe Burke came to meet me at my Arlington office located on St. Stephen's Green, some time in September, 1990... During the course of some chitchat with Mr Burke, he mentioned half a million pounds. Before I could respond to him, my telephone rang. It was Barry Boland, Arlington's representative in Dublin, who was telephoning to ask me to turn off the lights in the office, when I left.

Picking up again on my conversation with Mr Burke, I said to him that I was not concerned about recovering the half a million pounds which was approximately the amount which I had submitted with my tender for the Dublin Corporation lands. I had thought that Mr Burke was referring to that transaction, when he had made a reference to half a million pounds earlier. I told him that even if my tender was refused, I was confident that I would recover that half a million.

I remember that Mr Burke followed up by saying he was not talking about the Dublin Corporation transaction, but asked me would I not be prepared to pay half a million pounds because I knew that Bertie Ahern was looking after me.

... Mr Burke then asked me whether or not I could meet with Bertie Ahern... Mr Burke offered to take me to the airport, and on the way, he said he would take me to meet Mr Ahern.

We then made arrangements to leave the office and Mr Burke gave me assistance to take from the office, the model of the Quarryvale Development which I was bringing back to England.

Mr Burke then drove to the Deadman's Inn Public House... I recall that Mr Burke was in the pub for about 20 minutes. When he came out he told me that Mr Ahern was not inside but he thought he might be in another pub.

I recall Mr Burke then driving me to another pub located in the vicinity of Beaumont Hospital. Again, I remember Mr Burke going inside and being in the pub for about 10 minutes, while I waited outside in his car. When Mr Burke came out he told me that Mr Ahern would be there shortly. However, I was very anxious at that stage that I would miss my flight back to Luton.

I told Mr Burke that I had a commitment to attend a meeting the following morning which I could not miss and I had to insist that he drive me immediately to the airport. Mr Burke tried to persuade me to wait for Mr Ahern's arrival but when I refused to do so, Mr Burke got very upset'.

40.05 In his subsequent statement to the Tribunal dated 26 May 2004 (and stated to be supplemental to his statement of 10 March 2004), Mr Gilmartin stated that the reference in his earlier statement to Cllr Burke's 'car' should have been a reference to a 'pick-up truck' and he stated that the reference to the 'Deadman's Inn Public House' should have been a reference to 'Fagan's Public House'.

40.06 In his supplemental statement Mr Gilmartin also stated:

This figure (£500,000) was mentioned on several occasions by Mr Burke during that conversation and I initially believed that the reference to £500,000 was to the deposit which I had paid for the tender of the Dublin Corporation lands. As the conversation developed, I became aware that Mr Burke seemed, in a roundabout fashion, to be asking for £500,000. I did not let on to Mr Burke that I had formed that impression and the chitchat continued.

40.07 Later in that supplemental statement, Mr Gilmartin alleged that Cllr Burke asked him 'would you pay?', and that Mr Gilmartin understood this to mean would he pay IR£500,000. Mr Gilmartin on that occasion went on to state that Cllr Burke then said to him 'you know you can trust Bertie' and 'you know that Bertie is looking after you.'

40.08 On 20 May 1998, in the course of a taped conversation with his then solicitor, Mr Noel Smyth, Mr Gilmartin briefly referred to Cllr Burke in the context of his seeking money. In that conversation, Mr Gilmartin said he was visited by Cllr Burke and he believed that Cllr Burke had come to let him know that there was a cost arising from his (Cllr Burke's) involvement but that he, Mr Gilmartin, did not give Cllr Burke the opportunity (to look for money) and that no request for money was made.

40.09 The taped conversation recorded Mr Gilmartin stating that he had been given the impression by Cllr Burke that 'a favour was due' and 'I believe he came to let me know there was a cost attached to it' and 'He never specifically asked for anything.'

40.10 In Mr Gilmartin's affidavit sworn on 2 October 1998, reference was made to Mr Burke by Mr Gilmartin, but there was no reference to him seeking the payment of money or other favour.

40.11 In the course of his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin said that he believed that he had mentioned what he understood to be a demand for money by Cllr Burke in the course of his discussions with Counsel for the Tribunal prior to the affidavit being drafted and therefore suggested that such a reference should have been included in the affidavit sworn by him.

40.12 The Tribunal noted that on 26 January 1999, Counsel for the Tribunal recorded Mr Gilmartin having stated, in the course of a telephone conversation, when making reference to Cllr Burke and while relaying an encounter he had had with him, that he had got the 'distinct impression' that Cllr Burke was looking for 'a donation of money'. There was reference in that memorandum to Mr Gilmartin having advised Counsel for the Tribunal of Cllr Burke driving him to the airport and stopping off en route at two public houses in search of Mr Ahern.

40.13 In the course of his sworn testimony, Mr Gilmartin emphasised to the Tribunal that no direct demand was made of him by Cllr Burke for money. In response to the suggestion that it had been his evidence that a demand for money had in fact been made of him by Cllr Burke, Mr Gilmartin stated the following: 'I never said that a demand was made of me for any particular sum of money. The conversation circled around half a million pounds that he thought the help I was given was worth something' and 'I wasn't asked for £500,000 directly. It was talked around and around and the reference made to the amount of money that would be made on Quarryvale. That is complete, that is an accurate as far as I remember, a description of what took place.'

40.14 In his 26 May 2004 statement, Mr Gilmartin said:

Mr Burke then asked if I would meet Bertie Ahern and said that we could meet him on the way to the airport. Therefore, while Mr Burke did not specifically ask me to pay £500,000, this is what I understood to be the gist of the conversation.

And

I believed that the money was being sought on behalf of Bertie Ahern. However, I wanted to confirm whether it was actually Mr Ahern or Mr Burke himself who was seeking the £500,000, and therefore, I agreed to go with Mr Burke when he offered to take me to Mr Ahern on the way to the airport.

40.15 In his first formal statement to the Tribunal on 17 May 2001, Mr Gilmartin specifically referred to Cllr Burke assisting him in relation to problems encountered in the purchase of the local authority lands and Cllr Burke subsequently suggesting to him that he should meet Mr Ahern. However, Mr Gilmartin did not, in that statement, make any reference to Cllr Burke, directly or indirectly, seeking money from him.

40.16 In that statement, Mr Gilmartin said:

'I was subsequently informed by Mr McLoone in a telephone conversation in June 1985³⁴ that Mr Redmond was responsible for what had happened (i.e. that the lands had been put out to tender), that 'there was a game going on' and that I was being 'shafted'. It was suggested that if I knew someone in Government I could trust I should contact them. I subsequently decided to contact Bertie Ahern T.D. who was then a Minister in the Government, as I had previously spoken with him on a number of occasions and found him approachable and very supportive of the development plans for Bachelor's Walk. I had met Mr Ahern on two prior occasions. To the best of recollection the first meeting took place in autumn 1987 in Mr Ahern's office in the Department of Labour building in Mespil Road. At this meeting we discussed the plans for the Bachelor's Walk development. Mr Ahern was affable and approachable and he was very supportive of my plans. The next meeting I had with Mr Ahern was in October 1988. To the best of my recollection that meeting took place on Monday 10 October, 1988 in Mr Ahern's constituency office located above Fagan's Public House in Drumcondra. I do not recall anything of significance from that meeting other than the fact that I informed Mr Ahern of the plans for Quarryvale as well as updating him on the progress of the Bachelors Walk development. Mr Ahern was again supportive about both of these developments. Following my conversation with Mr McLoone I telephoned Mr Ahern and informed him about the difficulties which I was experiencing in relation to the purchase of the Irishtown and Wood Farm lands. He told me that he would see what he could do. I was contacted a few days later by Joe Burke who arranged to meet me at my office at 25 St. Stephen's Green in the middle of June 1989. He told me that he had been instructed by Mr Ahern to look into my complaints and I told him about the problems that I was encountering. A few days later the final approval was given for the sale of the Irishtown and Wood Farm lands. Mr Burke informed me of this news in a subsequent telephone conversation and also told me that I would have no further problems. Mr Burke met me in my office afterwards and suggested I should meet with Mr Ahern later that evening. However Mr Burke was unsuccessful in locating Mr Ahern. On 20 June 1989 I telephoned Mr Ahern to thank him for his intervention. During the course of that conversation he asked me whether I had given a donation to the Fianna Fáil party. I informed him that I had given IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn and Mr Ahern made no further reference to the matter.'

40.17 Mr Gilmartin was questioned both by Counsel for the Tribunal and Counsel for Cllr Burke as to the reason for the omission in his statement of 17 May 2001, of a reference to Cllr Burke seeking money from him. In response, Mr Gilmartin stated that he could not account for why the issue (namely his belief that he had been asked for half a million pounds by Cllr Burke) was omitted from his detailed statement.

THE TRIP TO THE AIRPORT

41.01 Mr Gilmartin claimed that in the course of this meeting he agreed to accept an offer from Cllr Burke to drive him to Dublin airport to catch his flight home to Luton. Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that as he was curious to ascertain if Cllr Burke was indeed seeking money for Mr Ahern, he agreed to Cllr Burke's suggestion that while en route to the airport they locate Mr Ahern. Cllr Burke then drove Mr Gilmartin in his 'pick-up truck' firstly to Fagan's public house (in Drumcondra), and subsequently, to another public house near Beaumont Hospital, in search of Mr Ahern. Mr Gilmartin said that he spent twenty minutes in Cllr Burke's pick-up vehicle while Cllr Burke entered into Fagan's public house in search of Mr Ahern. An additional ten minutes were spent waiting for Cllr Burke while he searched for Mr Ahern in the public house near Beaumont Hospital. These efforts to locate Mr Ahern proved unsuccessful. Despite being pressed by Cllr Burke to await Mr Ahern, Mr Gilmartin said he insisted on being driven to the airport to catch his flight.

41.02 Cllr Burke then drove Mr Gilmartin to the airport. Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that following this encounter, he did not meet Cllr Burke again. Mr Gilmartin also stated that he had never raised this matter with Mr Ahern.

THE RESPONSES OF CLLR BURKE AND MR AHERN TO MR GILMARTIN'S ALLEGATION

42.01 Neither Cllr Burke nor Mr Ahern disputed the fact that in or about May/June 1989, Cllr Burke met with Mr Gilmartin, at the behest of Mr Ahern. Cllr Burke however did not recall a second or any subsequent meeting with Mr Gilmartin, or any meeting with Mr Sheeran present. Mr Sheeran confirmed that he met Cllr Burke briefly in Mr Gilmartin's office on one occasion, but did not indicate when such a meeting might have taken place. Mr Ahern in his evidence to the Tribunal stated that he had been reminded by Cllr Burke's statement and Mr Gilmartin's evidence that Cllr Burke had gone to see Mr Gilmartin in relation to an issue concerning Quarryvale rather than the issue of the Arlington/Bachelor's Walk project, as first suggested by Mr Ahern in his statement to the Tribunal on 10 December 2003.

42.02 The extent of actual assistance, if any, provided by Cllr Burke, other than meeting Mr Gilmartin, clarifying details of his perceived problems, and monitoring the sale of the Corporation lands, was unclear. However, Cllr Burke and Mr Ahern generally agreed with the reason suggested by Mr Gilmartin for contacting Mr Ahern (his difficulty in finalising the purchase of the Irishtown lands), and of Cllr Burke's involvement.

42.03 In his statement to the Tribunal, through his solicitors, on 11 March 2004, Cllr Burke stated:

At no time did I mention or solicit any sum from Mr Gilmartin. I have never solicited money on behalf of Mr Bertie Ahern, nor has he ever asked me to. I deny categorically Mr Gilmartin's evidence regarding mention of a sum of 1/2 million pounds or any sum being sought by me from him on any occasion.

42.04 Cllr Burke strongly rejected Mr Gilmartin's allegation that he had sought, directly or indirectly, IR£500,000 (or any sum) from Mr Gilmartin, either for himself or Mr Ahern.

42.05 Mr Ahern also denied that Cllr Burke had ever sought money from Mr Gilmartin on his behalf.

42.06 Neither Mr Ahern nor Cllr Burke had any recollection of the complaint that had been relayed to them by Mr Gilmartin in May/June 1989, but Mr Ahern accepted that Mr Gilmartin must have advised him of some difficulty in order for him to have sent Cllr Burke to see him. Cllr Burke had no recollection of what he and Mr Gilmartin had discussed at their meeting in May/June 1989, although his belief was that Mr Gilmartin's problem related to the purchase of the Irishtown lands. Cllr Burke professed to have no recollection of any subsequent meetings with Mr Gilmartin, or of meeting Mr Sheeran in Mr Gilmartin's office.

42.07 Cllr Burke accepted that, although he had no recollection of doing so, it was 'possible' that he had driven Mr Gilmartin to the airport. However, Cllr Burke vehemently rejected any suggestion that he might have stopped at two public houses in search of Mr Ahern. He told the Tribunal that he had Mr Ahern's mobile telephone number and could easily have contacted him without having to call to public houses in search of him.

42.08 Cllr Burke stated that he believed that he would not have driven Mr Gilmartin in a truck or pick-up truck as described by Mr Gilmartin, but would have made any such journey in his car. Cllr Burke acknowledged that he did own a 'truck' (but not a 'pickup truck'), that he occasionally drove it himself, but would not have used it for a trip to the airport or to pick up Mr Gilmartin.

THE DATE OF THE MEETINGS WITH MR BURKE IN THE COURSE OF WHICH THE ISSUE RELATING TO IR£500,000 AROSE

43.01 Mr Gilmartin gave conflicting information and evidence to the Tribunal as to when the alleged meeting took place with Cllr Burke, during which Mr Gilmartin understood Cllr Burke to have requested IR£500,000 from him. Mr Gilmartin's first apparent reference to this meeting was in the course of a telephone conversation with Mr Pat Hanratty SC (Counsel for the Tribunal) in January 1999, when Mr Hanratty noted that Mr Gilmartin referred to a 'second' meeting with Mr Burke, one week after the approval of the tender (the tender was approved on 12 June 1989). Subsequently, at a meeting between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Gilmartin in London on 8 July 1999, Mr Gilmartin again referred to a second meeting with Cllr Burke 'after' the approval of the tender.

43.02 In the taped conversation between Mr Gilmartin and Mr Smyth on 20 May 1998, there was also an apparent reference to this meeting as having taken place after the Corporation's ratification of the sale of the Irishtown lands to him. That reference would place the meeting in late June, or possibly in July 1989.

43.03 Mr Gilmartin's narrative statement on 17 May 2001 appeared to suggest that the meeting in question took place a few days after the Corporation approval of the sale of the lands to him, again in late June 1989.

43.04 Mr Gilmartin's March 2004 statement suggested that the meeting occurred in September 1990.

43.05 Mr Gilmartin gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal about this meeting with Cllr Burke on at least six different occasions, in the period May to October 2007. On day 726 (29 May 2007), Mr Gilmartin dated the meeting as having occurred in autumn 1989, or 'around' September 1989, and identified it as the fourth meeting between himself and Cllr Burke. In the course of his evidence on that day, Mr Gilmartin also suggested that the meeting had occurred four months after Cllr Burke's intervention, thus dating it in September/October 1989, and he also suggested that the meeting had definitely occurred on a date after the meeting on 28 September 1989 between himself and Mr Ahern, in the company of Mr Dadley of Arlington Securities Plc. In the course of his evidence on that occasion, Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he was not good at recalling dates, and that he was not sure of the year in question.

43.06 Subsequently, on Days 736 (28 June 2007), 737 (29 June 2007), and 764 (26 September 2007), Mr Gilmartin dated the meeting to September 1990 or the autumn of 1990. On Day 778 (19 October 2007), Mr Gilmartin suggested that the meeting took place in late 1990, and on Day 780 (24 October 2007), he suggested 1990, or a year or more after Mr Burke was sent to him by Mr Ahern (i.e. on or after late June 1990).

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS CONCERNING MR GILMARTIN'S CONTACT WITH MR BURKE

44.01 The Tribunal found Mr Gilmartin's account of a meeting with Cllr Burke during which Cllr Burke allegedly made reference to IR£500,000, to be confused and unreliable as to detail (including the likely date of the meeting). However, the Tribunal accepted that Mr Gilmartin had more than one meeting with Cllr Burke and that he had an encounter with him in 1990, at a time when he had paid over the balance of his full deposit for the Irishtown lands (the total deposit was IR£510,000).

44.02 The Tribunal was satisfied, insofar as in 2004, Mr Gilmartin alleged a demand by Cllr Burke for IR£500,000 and that this allegation was not a 'new' allegation. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin alluded to what he understood was a request for money by Cllr Burke in the course of his taped conversation on 20 May 1998 with Mr Smyth, and again in a telephone conversation with Tribunal Counsel on 26 January 1999.

44.03 The Tribunal accepted that Mr Gilmartin was driven by Cllr Burke to the airport, and that en route, Cllr Burke visited two public houses on the city's north side in search of Mr Ahern. The Tribunal was unable to determine the reason for Cllr Burke's anxiety to have Mr Gilmartin meet Mr Ahern on that occasion, and there was no evidence to support any suggestion that the search for Mr Ahern was to facilitate a request to Mr Gilmartin for the payment of money.

44.04 Notwithstanding the Tribunal's reference to the confused and unreliable nature of Mr Gilmartin's account of a discussion with Cllr Burke immediately prior to the trip to the airport, the Tribunal was satisfied that a discussion did take place in the course of which Mr Gilmartin understood that Cllr Burke was, in a roundabout fashion, seeking money for himself, or for Mr Ahern. The Tribunal also believed that Mr Gilmartin's suspicion that he was being asked for money on Mr Ahern's behalf was fuelled by Cllr Burke's efforts to locate Mr Ahern in the course of his journey with Mr Gilmartin to Dublin Airport.

44.05 The Tribunal had insufficient evidence to make a finding as to whether Cllr Burke, directly or indirectly, sought money from Mr Gilmartin, either for himself or for Mr Ahern. There was no evidence that Mr Ahern was aware of Cllr Burke's discussion with Mr Gilmartin or of Cllr Burke's attempts to locate him while en route to Dublin Airport with Mr Gilmartin.

THE PAYMENT OF IR£50,000 TO MR PÁDRAIG FLYNN TD (FF) BY MR GILMARTIN

45.01 In late May or early June 1989, Mr Gilmartin handed a cheque for IR£50,000 drawn on his personal bank account to Mr Flynn, then Minister for the Environment, at a brief meeting in Mr Flynn's office.

45.02 Both prior to and during his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin maintained that the IR£50,000 cheque had been given to Mr Flynn as a political donation for the Fianna Fáil Party. Mr Gilmartin maintained that he made this donation in specific circumstances and subsequent to a request which Mr Flynn had made for a substantial donation for Fianna Fáil.

45.03 Mr Flynn's evidence to the Tribunal was that while he received IR£50,000 from Mr Gilmartin, this was given as an unsolicited personal political donation and was never intended by Mr Gilmartin for the Fianna Fáil Party. Mr Flynn further denied that he had previously sought a donation from Mr Gilmartin.

45.04 The Tribunal examined in considerable detail the relationship between Mr Gilmartin and Mr Flynn, particularly in the period leading up to the payment of the said cheque in late May or early June 1989, as well as the circumstances surrounding the payment, and the manner in which Mr Flynn dealt with it after its receipt. In particular, the Tribunal attempted to ascertain the purpose of the payment, its intended beneficiary, and the manner in which it was expended by Mr Flynn.

THE BACHELOR'S WALK/ARLINGTON RELATED CONTACT WITH MR FLYNN

45.05 For approximately three years commencing in October 1987, there was considerable contact between Mr Gilmartin and Mr Flynn, in Mr Flynn's capacity as Minister for the Environment. The initial contact was most likely a meeting between Mr Gilmartin, accompanied by his professional advisor Mr Forman, and Mr Flynn on 4 November 1987. This followed a letter sent by Mr Gilmartin to the Department of the Environment dated 21 October 1987, requesting a meeting relating to the then proposed Arlington development at Bachelor's Walk in Dublin. Mr Gilmartin's and Arlington's primary focus in meeting Mr Flynn at that time was to lobby Mr Flynn, and by extension the Irish Government, to extend tax designation status pursuant to the Urban Renewal Scheme, to that portion of the Bachelor's Walk development site which had not already been designated under the - Scheme.³⁵ That purpose was achieved by early 1988, by which time the Government had extended the designated area to include the entire of the Bachelor's Walk development site.

45.06 The Tribunal was satisfied that between 1987 and January 1990, Mr Gilmartin, in his capacity as a joint venture partner and/or consultant with Arlington Plc, continued to have many dealings with Mr Flynn in relation to the proposed Bachelor's Walk development, including a number of meetings. Such meetings were on some occasions held on a one-to-one basis, while on other occasions Mr Gilmartin met Mr Flynn in the company of Arlington executives and their advisors.

THE QUARRYVALE-RELATED CONTACT WITH MR FLYNN

46.01 There was considerable divergence between the evidence provided to the Tribunal by Mr Gilmartin and that given by Mr Flynn as to the extent to which Mr Gilmartin discussed his proposed plans for Quarryvale with Mr Flynn.

46.02 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Flynn learned of Mr Gilmartin's plan to develop a major retail shopping centre on the Quarryvale site, and was, from an early stage, kept informed by Mr Gilmartin on an ongoing basis of the progress of those plans. In particular, the Tribunal was satisfied that much of Mr Flynn's knowledge about the Quarryvale project came from his discussions with Mr Gilmartin.

46.03 However, the Tribunal was additionally satisfied, having regard to the contents of Mr Owen O’Callaghan’s memorandum of 4 November 1988, that Mr Flynn was also receiving information about Mr Gilmartin’s plans from Mr Lawlor. It was noteworthy that as of December 1988, there was a passing reference to Mr Gilmartin’s plans for Quarryvale within Mr Flynn’s own department in a document prepared for him which dealt with tax designation and referred to the proposed Neilstown/Clondalkin Town Centre, and Mr O’Callaghan’s plans for the proposed development. Furthermore, Mr George Redmond’s recollection was that Mr Flynn was aware of Mr Gilmartin’s plans for Quarryvale as early as September 1988.

46.04 By early February 1989, Mr Flynn certainly appeared to be aware of Mr Gilmartin’s purchase of Mr O’Callaghan’s interest in Merrygrove³⁶. This purchase cleared the way for Mr Gilmartin to promote the development of a retail shopping centre on the Quarryvale site without fear of competition from the Neilstown lands (a designated town centre site under the 1983 Development Plan). Mr Redmond told the Tribunal that at the second Urban Renewal Task Force meeting, organized by the then Taoiseach, Mr Charles J. Haughey, with Government ministers and officials of the County Council (held on 2 February 1989), Mr Flynn advised the meeting that Mr Gilmartin had ‘taken out’ Mr O’Callaghan in relation to the Neilstown/Quarryvale site.

46.05 By early 1989, with the threat of the development of the Neilstown site apparently out of the way, Mr Gilmartin’s quest to promote the development of Quarryvale as a retail shopping centre began in earnest. Mr Gilmartin agreed that part of the then strategy for Quarryvale included the pursuit of urban renewal tax designation and/or enterprise zoning status for the site. While he maintained in his evidence that Quarryvale did not need tax designation for its success, and that any development that required tax designation was not worth being built, Mr Gilmartin nevertheless conceded that tax designation, if granted, would have been ‘tremendous’ and ‘a huge bonus’ for Quarryvale. It was also apparent that when, in late 1989/early 1990, Mr Gilmartin approached AIB for a loan facility for Barkhill, he conveyed to the bank his belief that Quarryvale was to receive tax designation status.

46.06 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that in the course of his meetings with Mr Flynn as Minister for the Environment the issue of tax designation and/or enterprise zoning status for Quarryvale was discussed between them throughout

1989 and into 1990. He claimed that Mr Flynn gave him assurances that Quarryvale would be granted tax designation as, indeed, did a number of other ministers, including Mr Bertie Ahern and Mr Brian Lenihan Snr.

46.07 However, Mr Flynn denied that he had ever discussed the issue of tax designation or enterprise zoning status for Quarryvale with Mr Gilmartin. According to Mr Flynn, his focus in the course of his meetings with Mr Gilmartin had been at all times on the proposed Arlington development at Bachelor's Walk. Mr Flynn suggested that, insofar as the issue of Quarryvale was raised, Mr Gilmartin had raised it in order to keep Mr Flynn informed of the progress of land acquisition relating to that site.

46.08 The Tribunal rejected Mr Flynn's evidence that he had not discussed either tax designation or enterprise zoning status for Quarryvale with Mr Gilmartin. Even in the absence of Mr Gilmartin's sworn testimony, which the Tribunal accepted, there was documentary evidence which indicated clearly the extent to which tax designation and enterprise zoning had been discussed between Mr Gilmartin and Mr Flynn from mid-1989 until mid-1990.

46.09 A note contained in Mr Gilmartin's diary/notebook for 16 May 1989, clearly related to Mr Gilmartin's intention to telephone Mr Flynn about Quarryvale. That note recorded that topics for discussion were to be the degree of Government support for Quarryvale, the method of application for planning permission for the site, and the possibility of designating the site for tax incentives. On Mr Flynn's own admission, he had a meeting with Mr Gilmartin on 23 May 1989, although he maintained that this was a short meeting during which he received a donation of IR£50,000 from Mr Gilmartin for his political campaigns. Mr Gilmartin, in evidence, agreed that this meeting took place and maintained that Quarryvale was the topic of discussion. Mr Gilmartin denied that it was at this meeting that he gave Mr Flynn the IR£50,000 cheque. He believed that he had done so at another later meeting, held in the first week of June 1989.

46.10 By mid to late 1989, Mr Gilmartin had informed a number of third parties about his meetings with Mr Flynn regarding Quarryvale.

46.11 A memorandum of a telephone call by Mr Gilmartin to Irish Intercontinental Bank on 28 September 1989, referred to Mr Gilmartin having informed the bank as follows:

Following from earlier contact I spoke with Tom Gilmartin of the above for an update. Tom is in the process of acquiring a 178-acre site at the junction of the New Western Parkway and Galway roads in the Palmerstown area of Dublin. The site is currently zoned commercial/industrial and, inter alia, he plans a major shopping centre. However, critical to Tom's plans is obtaining designated status for the site and in this regard Tom advised that he was meeting with the government minister responsible today to further his claim. He is absolutely confident that designation will be forthcoming giving the prominence of this site and its location—assurances already received.

46.12 Mr Flynn's diaries for 1989 recorded three further meetings with Mr Gilmartin, on 25 October, 8 November and 21 November, 1989.

46.13 On 7 November 1989, Mr Kieran O'Malley, Mr Gilmartin's Planner, wrote to Mr Gilmartin in the following terms:-

Dear Tom,

Herewith copy of the Urban Renewal Act, 1986, which regulates the Custom House Docks Development. Under this Act the Custom House Docks Development Authority (CHDDA) consulted with the Planning Authority in preparing a development scheme which was then sent to the Minister for the Environment for his approval, and off they went , i.e. no planning application was required. I don't quite see how the same thing could be done in our case. Could the Minister set up another authority for your area, to do more or less what the CHDDA did in the docks? or what? If not, planning will still be required!!!

46.14 This letter was clearly intended to assist Mr Gilmartin in formulating submissions to be made to Mr Flynn. On 16 November 1989, Mr O'Malley followed up that letter by faxing to Mr Gilmartin a document which contained information relating to the CHDDA. The portion of the document highlighted by Mr O'Malley for Mr Gilmartin's attention read as follows:

In accordance with its statutory obligation under the Urban Renewal Acts the Authority published its planning scheme on June 4th, 1987. This Scheme has an important Planning Control function. Following approval of the Planning Scheme by the Minister for the Environment, the carrying out of any development in the area which is consistent with this Planning Scheme and which is so certified by the Authority does not require any further Planning Permission. By law Approval must be sought from Dublin Corporation in the normal manner for all phases of the construction.

46.15 The Tribunal believed it likely that at one or other of his meetings with Mr Flynn on 8 and 21 November 1989, Mr Gilmartin raised the prospect of the Quarryvale site being granted enterprise zoning status analogous to the CHDDA.

46.16 On 30 November 1989, approximately nine days after Mr Gilmartin met Mr Flynn, documentation prepared by the Bank of Ireland (from whom Mr Gilmartin was then seeking funding for Quarryvale) recorded that Mr Gilmartin advised the bank as follows: ‘On the issue of planning, he states that he has assurance from within the Government (Taoiseach) that the site will be granted ‘Enterprise Status’ by early spring which will obviate the need to go through the regular planning process. He has however, nothing in writing to this effect.’

46.17 On 12 December 1989, an Irish Intercontinental Bank credit application document relating to Mr Gilmartin noted that ‘Gilmartin is confident at having the site designated as an incentive area under the terms of the Urban Renewal Act, 1986. We regard this as prime real estate with undoubted potential even without designation.’

46.18 The Tribunal was satisfied that tax designation and/or enterprise zoning status for Quarryvale was discussed with Mr Flynn in 1989 and that Mr Gilmartin had reason to believe that tax incentives for Quarryvale would be forthcoming. This fact was quite evident from AIB bank documentation relating to the internal bank loan facility application for Barkhill Ltd in early 1990, and the evidence of Mr Eddie Kay of AIB.

46.19 It was noteworthy that, while Mr Flynn admitted to meeting Mr Gilmartin on numerous occasions throughout 1989 and 1990, the Department of the Environment did not appear to have any record of such meetings. This was because, as acknowledged by Mr Flynn, no civil servant was present at any of the meetings where Mr Flynn met Mr Gilmartin on a one-to-one basis and Mr Flynn himself did not prepare notes or memoranda in relation to such meetings.

46.20 Mr Kay’s note of a discussion he had with Mr Gilmartin in early December 1989, included the following:

Tom Gilmartin told me that he is going ahead with the Palmerstown development and is also involved with Arlington and the Batchelors Walk Project and holds 20% of it. He requires a short-term facility of 6 million (8 million)³⁷ to get to the project to the planning stage. He has a number of funds interested in coming in with him but he wishes to wait for the site to obtain designated status before entering into detailed negotiations with the funds. He also has held detailed discussions with the government and he expects to be able to short circuit the planning process by getting a similar planning status to the Custom House Docks, i.e. once the design of the project is accepted by the Government, there would be no planning objections entertained.

³⁷ The figure ‘6 million’ was amended to ‘8 million’ by handwritten note on the document.

46.21 By 19 January 1990, the Credit Committee of AIB, which was recommending the provision of a loan of IR£8.5m to Mr Gilmartin observed:

‘Tom Gilmartin is extremely confident that the Palmerstown site will receive designated status as part of the 1990 budget proposals and also be declared an enterprise zone, with significant planning benefits.’

46.22 The same document under the heading ‘Commercial Risks’ observed the following:

Designation: Designation of the site would generally enhance the value of the site and would make it very attractive for development with purchasers/lessors of units obtaining the same tax incentives as the Custom House Docks and Tallaght designated areas.

This week the Government Press Office issued statement by junior minister stating additional designated areas for the Dublin region would be announced as part of the Budget in two weeks time. Only credible new retail development centres would be Palmerstown, Clondalkin (O’Callaghan properties) and Blanchardstown (Green Properties). Deal already agreed with O’Callaghan on Clondalkin and Palmerstown in a far superior site to Blanchardstown site.

Minister of Environment to telephone us to confirm designated status will be obtained for Palmerstown site in the Budget 1990.

46.23 Mr Gilmartin believed that he had not arranged with AIB for Mr Flynn to telephone the bank to confirm designation for Quarryvale. Likewise, Mr Flynn denied that he had ever had contact with AIB in relation to this matter. Mr Kay told the Tribunal that AIB did not contact Mr Flynn, nor did Mr Flynn contact AIB.

46.24 In a further memorandum of 2 March 1990, detailing his contacts with Mr Gilmartin, Mr Kay noted:

Phone conversation with Tom Gilmartin on 2/3/90.

He told me that he is expecting a call from Minister Flynn to travel to the West to discuss the position with him. He now believes that the Government may take a decision on the designation on the week commencing 25th March but it is unlikely to be announced until the following week.

46.25 While Mr Gilmartin disputed that he ever had an arrangement to meet with Mr Flynn in the West of Ireland, as suggested by the aforesaid note, he accepted that at that time there were ongoing discussions regarding tax designation between himself and Mr Flynn.

46.26 In advance of the April 1990 Budget, Mr Flynn was actively involved in his capacity as Minister for the Environment in the consideration of an extension of the Urban Renewal Scheme for certain areas in and outside Dublin. As was clear from a Department of Finance document dated 13 March 1990, Mr Flynn at that time was promoting four areas within the Dublin area for tax designation. Mr Flynn's proposals did not include Quarryvale or Blanchardstown. When the Government decision on the extension of the Urban Renewal Scheme was made on 26 April 1990, and announced by Mr Flynn on 1 May 1990, neither Quarryvale nor Blanchardstown was included.

46.27 There was no evidence before the Tribunal that the question of tax designation status for Quarryvale was ever seriously considered by the Department of the Environment, or the Department of Finance, in the lead-up to the April 1990 Budget. However, it was recognised within the Department of the Environment that in the, admittedly unlikely, event that either Blanchardstown or Quarryvale were to receive tax designation, it would follow that the other should also receive designation. In evidence, this was referred to as parity of treatment for the two developments.

46.28 It appeared to the Tribunal that by April 1990, Mr Gilmartin was effectively being weaned off any expectation of tax designation or enterprise zoning status for Quarryvale, at least in the short term. Mr Kay made the following note of a telephone conversation he had with Mr Gilmartin:

Phone conversation with Tom Gilmartin on 11/4/90.

Tom Gilmartin told me that he met Pdraig Flynn on 11th and discussed the up to date position in relation to the Palmerstown site. Flynn was generally positive and stated that Gilmartin would be 'pleasantly surprised within the next three weeks.' He apparently would not elaborate on this and it appears not to mean designation. Flynn was adamant that Gilmartin proceed as soon as possible to apply for outline planning permission and to get the proposed development generally known. It appears that the Government believe that this is vital before they can make any move to be seen to assist the project as of now, no public perception of the potential is around and in addition, there is the situation whereby it contravenes existing zoning on the site. . . .

46.29 Mr Flynn told the Tribunal that he was unable to recollect the topic discussed with Mr Gilmartin on 10 April 1990,³⁸ but denied (notwithstanding his lack of recollection) that the subject matter referred to in Mr Kay's memorandum was discussed.

46.30 In a memorandum prepared by Mr Gilmartin's Auditors, Deloitte & Touche, in relation to a meeting they had with him on 11 April 1990, the following was noted: 'Tom has now to go to the County Council for planning permission before the government will designate his land.'

46.31 In a letter dated 12 April 1990, from Camargue Communications (Mr Gilmartin's PR Advisors) to Mr Forman, the status of Quarryvale (therein referred to as West Park) was referred to in the following terms:

Plans were discussed up to a year ago with the Minister of the Environment and continue to this day. The development has strong political connotations. Initially there was a very positive response and it seemed the scheme would gain designated area of status fairly easily. DAS [Designated Area Status] endows a development scheme with the following benefits:

100% capital allowances

Double rent allowance

Rate free holiday and other grants

Far less planning restrictions.

In the last weeks though, the Government's position has become more cautious. The site's scale, location and magnitude in terms of the overall Irish economy will have a strong political impact and those in a position to take decisions in its favour are probably more cognisant of this fact than they were a year ago. The high profile of any decisions taken and the effect of sustained lobbying have both created an atmosphere of caution. Avoiding the planning process via achieved Designated Area Status is therefore now unlikely.

Another problem is that if West Park is given Designated Area Status the government will be obliged to grant Green Property's site the same. One school of thought is that the government is holding back from granting West Park DAS because it does not want to provide Green Property's with a similar advantage until West Park is more advanced . . .

46.32 Under the heading 'West Park current objectives' Camargue stated as follows:

On the advice of the Minister of the Environment, the current objective is to go public, to get a planning application in for the revised master plan and to undertake all the activities necessary to facilitate planning approval.

It is anticipated that the application will then go to appeal stage (there is an independent Appeals Board in Ireland) and that the Government may then step in and give the site designated area status.

Submitting the initial planning application allows the government to test public reaction . . .

46.33 It was clear from these documents that by 12 April 1990, three entities associated with Mr Gilmartin’s Quarryvale project, namely, his Bankers, his Auditors, and his Public Relations Advisors, had been informed by Mr Gilmartin of the outcome of recent discussions with Mr Flynn. The Tribunal had no reason to suspect that Mr Gilmartin was relying on anything other than what he was being told by Mr Flynn in April 1990, in relation to the tax designation issue.

46.34 In his evidence, Mr Flynn distanced himself from any hint or suggestion that in his dealings with Mr Gilmartin the issue of tax designation or enterprise zoning status for Quarryvale had arisen.

46.35 The Tribunal was satisfied that the extent to which Mr Flynn sought to deny such discussions was prompted by his desire to dismiss or reject any suggestion or inference that his receipt of a claimed personal donation of IR£50,000 from Mr Gilmartin might be linked in any way to discussions between himself and Mr Gilmartin on the issue of tax designation for Quarryvale.

46.36 Although Mr Gilmartin was adamant that tax designation and enterprise zoning status for Quarryvale featured in some of his discussions with Mr Flynn, he vehemently disputed any suggestion that the donation of IR£50,000 made by him in May/June 1989 to Mr Flynn, for the benefit of the Fianna Fáil Party was in any way associated with the issue of tax designation or other incentives for Quarryvale, or that it was a bribe. Mr Gilmartin contended that the IR£50,000 was a political donation intended for the Fianna Fáil Party.

46.37 On Day 726, Mr Gilmartin was asked the following question:

‘Q. Did you leave that cheque with Mr Flynn in the belief that by making that payment your path for zoning or tax incentives for this site would be smoothed or relieved in some way, Mr Gilmartin?’

A. No, I didn’t believe that at all. What I wanted smoothed was the interference from certain elements that was demanding money of me and who I would not pay.’

46.38 Mr Paul Sheeran, Mr Gilmartin’s Bank Manager and friend, told the Tribunal that Mr Gilmartin spoke to him about the payment shortly after making it. Mr Sheeran also explained his understanding of Mr Gilmartin’s attitude to the question of tax designation for Quarryvale. He said:

'... he had a very basic philosophy that if the development did not stand up without a tax designation that it really wasn't much good in the first place and he wouldn't have been that mad about it. He saw no reason, and I think the reason I mentioned tax designation there, I think the reason Mr Gilmartin mentioned it, I think Mr Monahan at the time was lobbying very hard or may have achieved tax designation for Tallaght. I think Green Properties at that time were also lobbying for tax designation for their shopping centre. I don't know if they got it or not. And he saw no reason why he shouldn't get tax designation or try to get tax designation, he recognised the fact that it would be added value for Quarryvale, that was the context in which the matter was discussed.'

46.39 Mr Sheeran said that he did not recollect Mr Gilmartin conveying to him his belief or hope that a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party would ease or smooth his path in relation to tax incentives or zoning. Mr Sheeran told the Tribunal of his understanding as to the reason for the payment, having spoken to Mr Gilmartin shortly after the payment. He said, referring to Mr Gilmartin:

'His primary object in making a donation to Fianna Fáil was to try and ensure that the people that were putting obstacles in his way for whatever reason, because they weren't being paid money or were looking for money, would be admonished or disciplined or eliminated by the Fianna Fáil party.'

46.40 Later in his evidence, Mr Sheeran, again referring to his discussion with Mr Gilmartin shortly after the payment was made, stated:

'... he was meeting opposition, he was being asked for bribes, it was as simple as that. There were certain people standing in his way and he had formed a view, I feel from some senior politicians in Fianna Fáil, that if a donation was made to the party that they would deal, or was hoping that they would deal with these people to stop them interfering or seeking money, and this is what he wanted.'

46.41 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he had been promised that the 'three sites' (a reference to Quarryvale, Blanchardstown and Tallaght) would get tax designation. He said he had absolute assurances from 'several ministers'. He named the ministers who provided this assurance to him as Mr Lenihan (Snr.), Mr MacSharry, Mr Ahern and Mr Flynn. He said he was also told by Dublin Corporation that the 'three towns' would get tax designation. Mr Gilmartin said this view was also held by Mr Liam Lawlor. Mr Gilmartin reiterated over and over again that it was his view at the time that Quarryvale did not need tax designation in order to make it a success, but that if granted, it would have been a bonus.

THE PROVISION OF THE IR£50,000 CHEQUE TO MR FLYNN

47.01 Mr Gilmartin outlined the circumstances which led him, in late May or early June of 1989, to hand Mr Flynn a cheque for IR£50,000, which he maintained was intended for the Fianna Fáil Party and was given in response to an earlier request made by Mr Flynn for a substantial donation to the Fianna Fáil Party.

47.02 According to Mr Gilmartin, in the period from February to June 1989, he had a number of meetings with Mr Flynn in the course of which he informed Mr Flynn of problems he was encountering in respect of his Quarryvale project. On the evening of 22 February 1989, the day of the aborted meeting with Redmond, or possibly the following day, Mr Gilmartin met Mr Flynn and advised him of the efforts by Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor to, as he believed, frustrate the Quarryvale project. He also told Mr Flynn of demands for money being made of him by Mr Lawlor, Cllr Hanrahan and Mr Redmond.

47.03 While Mr Gilmartin was uncertain as to whether or not he had told Mr Flynn on that occasion of the demand for IR£5m that had been made within the confines of Leinster House at the beginning of February 1989, Mr Gilmartin's evidence was that on 22 February 1989, he had said to Mr Flynn words to the effect that had he succumbed to the demands then being made of him for money, it would have cost him IR£7m before he even commenced the project.

47.04 On 19 April 1989, in the course of a scheduled meeting between Mr Flynn, Mr Gilmartin and Mr Dadley for the purpose of discussing the Arlington/Bachelor's Walk project, Mr Gilmartin again informed Mr Flynn of the 'road blocks', obstacles and interference being put in his way in relation to the Quarryvale project, and, in particular, Mr Redmond's interference and the 'games that he was playing'. According to Mr Gilmartin, he had no compunction in speaking to Mr Flynn about such matters in the presence of Mr Dadley, as Mr Gilmartin had informed Mr Dadley of what was then happening relating to his Quarryvale project. Mr Flynn's response to Mr Gilmartin was to let the Gardaí deal with such issues.³⁹ Mr Flynn's only other response, according to Mr Gilmartin, was to suggest that a substantial contribution to Fianna Fáil from Mr Gilmartin 'might help curb' such activities.

47.05 On Day 460, Mr Gilmartin was questioned by Tribunal Counsel about Mr Flynn's request for a substantial contribution for Fianna Fáil, as follows:

³⁹By 19 April 1989, the Garda investigation into Mr Gilmartin's complaints had been underway for approximately six weeks.

'Q. 82 In your statement you say that you referred to the demands for money which you had received and the trouble which Mr Redmond had been causing.

A. Yes, I opened up. I was quite incensed at the fact that I had been to the Gardaí—the thing went to the Gardaí. It was Mr Haughey that took it to the Gardaí—Mr [Seán] Haughey (Snr) and Mr Feely, and nothing had happened and there was no effort by anybody in Leinster House to do anything about what was going on.

Q. 83 What did Mr Flynn say in response?

A: Pardon?

Q. 84 What did Mr Flynn say in response?

A. Well, he said that it was a Garda matter and I had—you know, they had to leave it to them and that was all, so then he said—I think he aimed it at both of us, I don't know what Mr Dadley's recollection of that is, but he aimed it at both of us that they expected a substantial donation to the party. The party was—it was in deep problems financially, a figure of IR£3m or something in debt was mentioned, and they expected a substantial donation.'

47.06 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that, although Mr Flynn's request for a donation had been made in the presence of both himself and Mr Dadley, it was his belief that the request was intended for him, because Mr Flynn had stated that a substantial donation 'could help to curb these activities'. Mr Gilmartin stated that he believed that he was being asked for money in order to get 'a level playing field' in relation to his Quarryvale project.

47.07 Mr Gilmartin also told the Tribunal that the issue of Mr Flynn's request for a substantial contribution was discussed between himself and Mr Dadley, with the latter stating 'everybody's looking for money, déjà vu.'

47.08 Mr Flynn denied that he requested or suggested to Mr Gilmartin that he make a substantial donation or that he raised any such issue with Mr Gilmartin.

47.09 Mr Dadley told the Tribunal that while he could not 'swear' to the fact that Mr Flynn had requested a substantial donation in his presence at the meeting on 19 April 1989, it was, he said, nonetheless 'quite likely' that such a request had been made. Mr Dadley told the Tribunal that he knew 'requests were made to Mr Gilmartin for donations' and that 'suggestions were put forward that donations would be gratefully received.'

47.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Flynn requested that Mr Gilmartin make a substantial donation, most probably at their meeting on 19 April 1989, and that the request was made on the understanding that steps would be taken to ease or remove obstacles and difficulties then being faced by Mr Gilmartin in relation to the Quarryvale project, which Mr Gilmartin perceived to be improper or unlawful.

47.11 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that in the immediate aftermath of the 19 April 1989 meeting and Mr Flynn's request for a donation, he had decided against making any donation, although he said it was likely that he had responded to Mr Flynn's request by stating that he would consider doing so. Later, however, Mr Gilmartin changed his mind about making a donation. This change of mind was prompted, according to Mr Gilmartin, by his ongoing concern about improper interference with his attempts to acquire the Dublin Corporation Irishtown lands. Mr Gilmartin said that he was made aware, in the course of his dealings with the Corporation officials during the tendering process for the lands which was ongoing from mid-April 1989, of continued interference in that process and of the possibility that the sale of the lands might be withdrawn by the Corporation.

47.12 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that, on, he believed, the evening of 2 June 1989, in the course of his discussion of these matters with Mr McLoone, the Corporation's Chief Valuer, he informed Mr McLoone of the various demands for money that had been made of him by a number of parties, and told him about the suggestion that had been made to him by Mr Flynn—to wit, that if Mr Gilmartin gave a donation to Fianna Fáil, it might help 'smooth out' the problems he was encountering. On being informed that Mr Gilmartin was then considering making such a donation, Mr McLoone, according to Mr Gilmartin, had exclaimed 'they'll take your f--- money and they'll still do nothing for you.'

47.13 In his evidence, Mr McLoone recalled being told on a number of occasions by Mr Gilmartin that he had been asked to make a substantial donation to Fianna Fáil and that he was considering doing so. Mr McLoone confirmed to the Tribunal that he cautioned Mr Gilmartin against making such a donation.

47.14 Mr McLoone told the Tribunal that, at the time Mr Gilmartin was considering making such a donation, he, Mr McLoone, was aware that Mr Redmond was interfering in the sale of the Dublin Corporation lands to Mr Gilmartin. He was also aware that this and other matters had been the subject of complaint by Mr Gilmartin to Messrs Seán Haughey and Frank Feely and that such complaints were the subject of a Garda inquiry. Moreover, Mr Gilmartin had told him that he was not cooperating with the Garda inquiry because he feared that if he did there would be twice as many obstacles placed in his way. By this time, Mr Gilmartin had also told Mr McLoone about the demand for IR£5m made of him in Leinster House some months earlier.

47.15 Throughout his discussion with Mr Gilmartin, Mr McLoone understood that Mr Gilmartin's intention was to make a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party in anticipation that obstacles to the Quarryvale project would be removed as a consequence.

47.16 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that on resolving to make a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party, he telephoned Mr Gerry Rice, Mr Flynn's private secretary, to see if Mr Flynn was available for a meeting. According to Mr Gilmartin, he subsequently met Mr Flynn in his office in the Custom House. Mr Gilmartin believed that this meeting probably took place on either 1 or 2 June 1989, or at the very latest within the early days of June 1989. The meeting was brief, as Mr Flynn appeared to be in a hurry. Mr Gilmartin said he told Mr Flynn of his decision to make a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party, and wrote the cheque. He asked Mr Flynn to whom should he make the cheque payable, to which Mr Flynn replied 'leave it, leave it on the desk'. Mr Gilmartin left the payee blank and left the cheque on Mr Flynn's desk. This cheque was not one of his standard cheques, as on the occasion in question, he had no cheque book with him and so had arranged with Mr Sheeran to collect a Bank of Ireland cheque on the bank's College Green branch. The cheque in question was, however, processed through Mr Gilmartin's personal account, and its value (being IR£50,000) was subsequently debited to that account.

47.17 Mr Gilmartin was adamant that he handed the IR£50,000 cheque to Mr Flynn in his capacity as a Treasurer of Fianna Fáil and in response to the earlier request made of him by Mr Flynn for a 'substantial contribution' to the Fianna Fáil Party. Mr Gilmartin assumed that Mr Flynn would in due course pass on the cheque to the Fianna Fáil Party.

47.18 Mr Gilmartin explained his reason for acceding to Mr Flynn's request for a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party in the following terms:

'All I wanted was to give some chance to the scheme getting off the ground because, after all, it was creating 20,000 jobs; after all I risked everything to put it there, including my name. And it had been suggested to me by a Government official that I had to pay to get justice, so I felt that I had no option but to do that.'

47.19 Commenting on the microfiche copy of the cheque made available to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin stated that the word 'cash' on the cheque was not written by him, and he reasserted his claim that the payee section of the cheque had been left blank at Mr Flynn's direction. Mr Gilmartin denied Mr Flynn's assertion to the Tribunal that, when handing over the cheque, Mr Flynn asked if the cheque was intended for Fianna Fáil or for himself, or that he, Mr Gilmartin, had stated to Mr Flynn that the cheque was intended for use by Mr Flynn in his political campaigns.

47.20 No receipt or acknowledgement was sought by Mr Gilmartin or sent to him, either by Mr Flynn or by the Fianna Fáil Party.

47.21 Mr Paul Sheeran told the Tribunal that shortly after the event he was informed by Mr Gilmartin that he had given IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn for the Fianna Fáil Party. At no time did Mr Gilmartin state to him that the payment had been made to Mr Flynn personally. Mr Sheeran's understanding, based on information provided to him by Mr Gilmartin, was that the payment was made by Mr Gilmartin 'to smooth his path through tax incentives and zoning etc.', and to motivate senior Government members to remove and eliminate problems being placed in the way of the Quarryvale project. According to Mr Sheeran, Mr Gilmartin was under the impression that if he paid the IR£50,000 to the Fianna Fáil Party, 'corrupt demands' then being made of him would cease.

47.22 Mr Sheeran told the Tribunal that his understanding of why Mr Gilmartin had made a donation of IR£50,000 to Fianna Fáil was:

'... that somewhere along the line he was led to believe that if he made a donation to Fianna Fáil it would smooth the path for him. More in a sense that he wanted to—it was in connection with the difficulties he was having with the councillors and the people that were looking for money from him, and he was hoping that this was going to stop by making a payment to Fianna Fáil, he was led to believe that this, these demands for money would cease. That was my primary understanding of it.'

47.23 Mr Sheeran's statement of 10 February 2004 to the Tribunal referred to payment of the IR£50,000 cheque in the following terms:

In respect of the payment of £50k to Mr Pdraig Flynn, I was made aware of this payment to Fianna Fáil. It was made known to me almost immediately the cheque was issued. In what ever way, it had been made clear to Mr Gilmartin that a donation to Fianna Fáil party funds could possibly ease or smooth his path re: Tax Incentives/ Zoning etc.

My understanding at the time and since, is that Mr P. Flynn advised Mr Gilmartin that there was no guarantee or promise on the zoning/planning issues. It was simply a contribution to Fianna Fáil with no strings attached and no promises or obligations by the Fianna Fáil party or individual members. This is the best recollection as told to me by Mr Gilmartin at the time of the donation.

47.24 In response to questioning by Counsel on behalf of Mr Flynn, Mr Sheeran described his February 2004 statement as:

'..badly worded by me..(Mr Gilmartin) was meeting opposition, he was being asked for bribes, it was as simple as that. There were certain people standing in his way and he had formed a view, I feel from some senior politicians in Fianna Fáil, that if a donation was made to the party that they would deal, or was hoping they would deal with these people to stop them interfering or seeking money, and this is what he wanted'.

47.25 Mr Sheeran also stated that it was his understanding that 'There was nothing promised by way of tax incentives, zoning, planning or anything else on behalf of Mr Flynn or on behalf of the government, absolutely not'. He also stated:

'...there was no such payment made for the purpose of obtaining favours.....Other than to eliminate the obstacles by people seeking corrupt payments from him, on a variety of fronts'.

47.26 In response to questions put in cross-examination by Counsel for Mr O'Callaghan, and refuting the suggestion that Mr Gilmartin's purpose in giving the IR£50,000 was to have certain obstacles removed from the planning process, Mr Sheeran stated:

'..Mr. Gilmartin was not seeking to have obstacles removed in the planning process, Mr. Gilmartin was seeking to have the people who were creating artificial obstacles or otherwise, people who were looking for bribes, corruption or otherwise, he wanted that stopped. That was the primary purpose and nothing else.'

47.27 Again, responding to questioning by Mr Redmond, Mr Sheeran clarified that Mr Gilmartin's purpose in making the donation was not to eliminate people who were 'making objections' to his proposals but to '..eliminate people who were looking for money to assist in planning.'

47.28 Challenged by Mr Lawlor in the course of his cross-examination that he had sought to change the content of his February 2004 statement, claiming that it had been made clear by Mr Gilmartin to him that the payment of IR£50,000 to Fianna Fáil '..could possibly ease or smooth his path re Tax Incentives/Zoning etc.'

Mr Sheeran again stated that Mr Gilmartin:

'..was hoping to get the cooperation of senior Fianna Fail people to either eliminate, control or discipline or do something with the members of Dublin County Council who were looking for substantial amounts of funds, to assist him in getting planning permissions’.

Mr Sheeran also stated:

‘It was my impression and would have, in passing, that if you didn’t pay these people to cooperate with you then they were not going to cooperate with you, and in fact would actively oppose anything that you were doing, but you either paid and got the cooperation, or you didn’t pay and you didn’t get the cooperation. So he was hoping that the government, the ruling party or the government shall we say the major, I don’t know what the state of the parties were at that stage in any event, shall we say the government party, primarily Fianna Fail, would be able to curtail these activities’.

47.29 Asked by Mr Lawlor if Mr Gilmartin had used the words ‘tax incentive’ and ‘zoning’ when explaining to him why he had made the IR£50,000 contribution, Mr Sheeran replied:

‘It is not a yes or no answer. I certainly have no recollection of Mr. Gilmartin saying to me that he gave it to get tax incentives or zoning but I don’t, if you want me to give you a point blank denial, I will give it to you, but I don’t know precisely the terminology that he used, my overall impression, the purpose for the for the donation, the Fianna Fail was exactly as I have stated to this Tribunal. It was to curtail the activities of Dublin County Councillors who were seeking money to aid and abet him in getting planning for a shopping centre. I don’t think I can make it any clearer than that’.

47.30 On Day 475, Mr Gilmartin himself addressed this issue in the course of his cross-examination by Mr Lawlor:

Q. ‘Did you utter the words to Mr. Sheeran that you paid the 50,000 pounds to smooth the way for zoning?’

A. ‘No I made a lot more statement than that to him about the crooked...’

Q. ‘No’ –

CHAIRMAN: ‘No but Mr. Gilmartin did you say those words?’

A. ‘I possibly did.’

CHAIRMAN: ‘Or something close to those words?’

A. ‘I possibly did. That they would, that it would smooth the way, smooth my path through the quagmire of corruption and the zoning etcetera’.

47.31 Mr McLoone stated that he recalled Mr Gilmartin discussing the IR£50,000 payment with him on a number of occasions and it was his recollection that he tried to dissuade Mr Gilmartin from making the payment.

47.32 Mr Flynn told the Tribunal of his belief that the meeting with Mr Gilmartin at which the cheque was handed over took place on 23 May 1989, in Leinster House. Mr Flynn’s diary for that date recorded a meeting with Mr Gilmartin without reference to any specific location and Leinster House records confirmed that Mr Gilmartin visited on that date at 3.00pm to see Mr Flynn. According to Mr Flynn, Mr Gilmartin arrived at the meeting with a cheque, which he then handed to Mr Flynn. When he looked at the cheque, Mr Flynn said he initially thought it was for a sum of IR£5,000, and said to Mr Gilmartin ‘there was no need for that’. When he again looked at the cheque he realised it was for IR£50,000, and he remarked to Mr Gilmartin that ‘there was absolutely no need for that’.

47.33 Mr Flynn further stated, in the course of his evidence:

‘And I asked him—I specifically asked him, is this for the Party and he said no it’s for you, for your political campaigns and I said well you know I said that I have done nothing for you and I can’t do anything for you and there can be no strings attached to any political contribution you make. He agreed wholeheartedly, he said he understood all that. But he thanked me and that was it.’

47.34 According to Mr Flynn, the cheque which was handed to him by Mr Gilmartin had already been made payable to ‘cash’, and Mr Gilmartin had not left the payee space blank, as he alleged. Mr Flynn told the Tribunal that, although the cheque was for an amount of IR£50,000 (a sum approximately equal to the annual salary of a government minister), he was not concerned about accepting such a cheque, or about the fact that, according to Mr Flynn, it was made payable to ‘cash.’

47.35 Mr Flynn said that he did not inform anyone in the Fianna Fáil Party of his receipt of the IR£50,000 cheque, nor did he formally record or acknowledge its receipt.

47.36 Mr Flynn confirmed that the dealings he had with Mr Gilmartin were undertaken by him in his capacity as the Minister for the Environment. He accepted that had he not held this position he probably would never have encountered Mr Gilmartin, and that other than these dealings, no political or business relationship, friendship or connection had ever existed between them.

47.37 Mr Flynn acknowledged that at the time the cheque for IR£50,000 was handed to him by Mr Gilmartin he, Mr Flynn, was aware, both from Mr Gilmartin and from third parties (Mr Seán Haughey, Mr Feely and the Garda Síochána), that Mr Gilmartin had made allegations of corrupt demands for money against members of the Fianna Fáil Party (namely Mr Lawlor and Cllr Hanrahan) and of the wrongful receipt of monies against Mr Lawlor.

47.38 Mr Flynn also accepted that, irrespective of what Mr Gilmartin himself told Mr Flynn either on 22 February 1989, or the day after, by the time he accepted the cheque for IR£50,000 he had had sight of Mr Seán Haughey’s and Mr Feely’s memorandum of their meeting with Mr Gilmartin on 24 February 1989. That memorandum noted complaints then being made by Mr Gilmartin regarding the demand for IR£5m and the fact that Mr Lawlor was in receipt of IR£3,500 per month from Arlington. Mr Flynn told the Tribunal that, notwithstanding knowledge of these matters, he had no concern in accepting the cheque for IR£50,000 from Mr Gilmartin.

47.39 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that his decision to donate IR£50,000 to the Fianna Fáil Party was made in the hope that the on-going difficulties and obstacles he was encountering in mid-1989 in relation to the Quarryvale project, would cease. Mr Gilmartin rejected any suggestion that these difficulties involved the failure, to that point in time, to achieve tax designation for the site, and he vehemently rejected a suggestion that his payment of IR£50,000, was a ‘bribe’. Mr Gilmartin maintained that in early June 1989, the difficulty which he needed to have addressed was the continued interference with his efforts to acquire the Irishtown lands from Dublin Corporation, and his concern that Mr Redmond or Mr Lawlor, or both, might take some action which would prevent his tender being accepted.

47.40 Mr Gilmartin, in reply to questions put to him in cross-examination stated:
‘I gave the donation to the party out of desperation at the time because of the games that was going on’. Mr Gilmartin described as absolutely ‘despicable’ the fact that, as he saw it, he had to pay money to get justice, and to get ‘a level playing field.’

47.41 Mr Gilmartin, in the course of cross-examination by Mr Paul Sreenan SC (for Mr O’Callaghan), explained what he meant by the term ‘a level playing field’, as appeared from the following exchange:

‘Q. When you paid the cheque in the hope of getting a level playing field, did you specifically want something done in relation to Mr Lawlor’s activities?’

A. The least I expected was the government of this country to control their members and not be soldiers of fortune instead of soldiers of destiny.’

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS AS TO THE STATUS OF THE IR£50,000 PAYMENT

48.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that:

- 1) Mr Flynn did not truthfully account to the Tribunal as to the circumstances in which Mr Gilmartin provided him with the IR£50,000 cheque.
- 2) Mr Gilmartin was advised by Mr Flynn that the making of the substantial donation to the Fianna Fáil Party would help curb the activities in respect of which Mr Gilmartin had complained to, among others, Mr Flynn.
- 3) Mr Gilmartin duly made his donation to Fianna Fáil, via Mr Flynn, on this basis.
- 4) Mr Gilmartin intended that his cheque for IR£50,000 would be paid to the Fianna Fáil Party, and not to Mr Flynn personally, and he assumed at the time that this would be arranged by Mr Flynn.
- 5) Mr Gilmartin gave the cheque to Mr Flynn with the payee section blank at Mr Flynn's request, and the word 'cash' was written in subsequently by Mr Flynn (or a person on his behalf).
- 6) Mr Flynn was aware at the time when the cheque was handed to him that Mr Gilmartin intended it to be paid to the Fianna Fáil Party, and not to him personally.
- 7) Mr Gilmartin's motivation in making the payment of IR£50,000 to (as he intended) the Fianna Fáil Party was his hope and expectation that difficulties that had arisen, or were perceived by him as having arisen, in relation to his ambition to develop the Quarryvale lands would be solved, curbed or otherwise cease. These included;
 - problems he encountered in relation to the purchase of the Irishtown lands from Dublin Corporation, which he associated with Mr Redmond (and Mr Lawlor);
 - demands for money by (or on behalf of) Mr Lawlor, Mr Redmond, and Cllr Hanrahan, and the demand for IR£5m made in Leinster House;
 - the intimidating telephone call from 'Garda Burns' which ended his cooperation with the Garda corruption inquiry.
- 8) Mr Gilmartin believed himself to have had little choice but to make a substantial donation to the political party then in power, having regard to, in particular, to the following;

- the politicians who had requested money from him were all prominent members of Fianna Fáil, namely Mr Flynn himself, Mr Lawlor and Cllr Hanrahan;
 - a demand for IR£5m had been made of him immediately following a meeting he had with Government ministers and the Taoiseach, all of whom were members of the Fianna Fáil Government.⁴⁰
- 9) Mr Gilmartin genuinely believed that he had exhausted all avenues of complaint in an effort to curb activities which he believed to be improper or unlawful, that were designed to undermine the Quarryvale project, and in particular he had;
- provided detailed complaints and information to Mr Flynn, Mr Seán Haughey, Mr Feely, Mr McLoone, and others;
 - cooperated with a Garda corruption inquiry until he received an intimidating telephone call from a ‘Garda Burns’.
- 10) Mr Gilmartin, having initially rejected any notion of making a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party following Mr Flynn’s request, ultimately relented and decided to make a substantial donation, and he did so with great reluctance, and to a significant degree under duress and pressure to do so.
- 11) Mr Flynn wrongfully and, in the circumstances, corruptly sought a donation from Mr Gilmartin for the Fianna Fáil Party.
- 12) Mr Flynn, having been paid IR£50,000 by Mr Gilmartin for the Fianna Fail party, proceeded wrongfully to use the money for his own personal benefit (see below).

48.02 With regard to the specific circumstances in which Mr Gilmartin came to make the donation, it was clear that as of 28 February 1989, Mr Flynn was privy, via Mr Gilmartin and Messrs Seán Haughey and Frank Feely, to a number of serious allegations made by Mr Gilmartin involving corrupt demands for money by a number of individuals. Mr Gilmartin went to Mr Flynn immediately following the meeting aborted by Mr Redmond, which event triggered the series of complaints Mr Gilmartin made thereafter. By 3 March 1989, Mr Flynn had received Mr Feely’s written account (which was initialled by Mr Seán Haughey) of Mr Gilmartin’s complaints, including complaints concerning Mr Lawlor.

48.03 Among the complaints against Mr Lawlor were the following:

⁴⁰ There was no evidence linking any person in attendance at the meeting with the IR£5m demand made of Mr Gilmartin by an unidentified man as Mr Gilmartin left the meeting.

- He had made himself out to be a representative of the Irish Government at an Arlington meeting in London and had claimed that he had been commissioned by the Irish Government to ‘look after’ the Arlington site.
- He had requested to be compensated for that assistance and was paid a sum of IR£3,500 per month.
- He had asked Mr Gilmartin to pay IR£5m into a bank account in the Isle of Man ‘in respect of his support for a development which TK proposed at Irishtown, which development would represent a material contravention of the County Plan.’

48.04 Irrespective of the issue of the accuracy as to the identity of the requester of the IR£5m, this information was provided to Mr Flynn on 3 March 1989 by two senior local authority officials.⁴¹

48.05 In their document, Mr Feely and Mr Seán Haughey had also recorded Mr Gilmartin as alleging that, Cllr H[anrahan], sought ‘£100,000 in a brown paper bag—notes—no cheques’ in return for his support for a material contravention vote for the Irishtown lands.

48.06 Moreover, Mr Matthews’ note (‘Alleged planning permission irregularities note 2’, already referred to) of the meeting on 3 March 1989, between Mr Flynn and Mr Gerard Collins, Minister for Justice, recorded that Mr Flynn himself recounted to Mr Collins, in graphic terms, what he, Mr Flynn, had been told regarding Mr Gilmartin on 28 February 1989 by Mr Feely and Mr Seán Haughey.

48.07 The Tribunal was satisfied, therefore, that by early March 1989, Mr Flynn had knowledge of a number of very serious complaints made by Mr Gilmartin against three individuals, Mr Lawlor, Cllr Hanrahan and Mr Redmond, which were apparently sufficiently grave in his view to prompt him to speak with the Taoiseach, Mr Haughey, and to request that Mr Gilmartin’s complaints be included in a Garda investigation into corruption matters unconnected to Mr Gilmartin or Quarryvale, which had begun on 2 February 1989.

48.08 The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin’s evidence that it was at a meeting with Mr Flynn on 19 April 1989 (when he once again informed Mr Flynn of the demands for money that had been made of him as well as the obstacles and ‘roadblocks’ that had been put in his way), that Mr Flynn solicited a donation for ⁴¹Mr Gilmartin’s evidence was that he may not have told Mr Flynn, when he met him on 22 February, about the IR£5m demand because of the fact that the demand had been made of him in the confines of Leinster House and in the immediate aftermath of a meeting he had had with the then Taoiseach, Mr Haughey and Government ministers.

the Fianna Fáil Party on the basis that its payment would help ‘curb’ the activities complained of.

48.09 In the course of his evidence, and particularly in the course of his cross-examination, Mr Gilmartin strongly rejected the suggestion that the payment constituted an act of corruption or bribery on his part.

48.10 The decision on the part of Mr Gilmartin to make a payment to Fianna Fáil through Mr Flynn was misconceived and entirely inappropriate. However, he did so in circumstances involving an element of duress or coercion, where he believed he had no choice but to act accordingly in order to avoid the obstructive and improper behaviour of elected public representatives and of a senior public servant, and (to use Mr Gilmartin’s own words) to create ‘a level playing field.’

48.11 In arriving at this conclusion, the Tribunal was mindful of the fact that by May/June 1989, Mr Gilmartin had steadfastly resisted efforts by public representatives (Mr Lawlor and Councillor Hanrahan) to corruptly extract money from him and had also rejected Mr Lawlor’s attempt to extract money on behalf of Mr Redmond. He had, moreover, rejected a demand for IR£5m from an individual whom he, Mr Gilmartin, associated with politicians, and had formally made complaints of what he perceived as corruption to Government ministers, senior local Government officials and to the Gardai. Yet, as he perceived it, his difficulties in relation to Quarryvale were continuing.

48.12 The Tribunal concluded that the IR£50,000 payment, was not, in the circumstances, a bona fide political donation.

48.13 The Tribunal rejected the suggestion that Mr Gilmartin’s motivation in making the payment was to promote or secure a Government decision to grant tax designation status to the Quarryvale lands (which was not in any event granted). In particular, there was no evidence to suggest that Mr Gilmartin, subsequent to the payment of the IR£50,000, complained that Mr Flynn had broken an agreement or understanding that in return for the payment, Quarryvale would receive tax designation status.

MR FLYNN’S TREATMENT OF THE IR£50,000 PAID BY MR GILMARTIN

49.01 On 7 June 1989, the cheque for IR£50,000 which Mr Gilmartin had given to Mr Flynn was lodged to a bank account in the names of Mrs Dorothy and Mr Pádraig Flynn at AIB, Castlebar, Co. Mayo.

THE NON-RESIDENT AIB ACCOUNT NO. 10000-022

49.02 AIB account no. 10000-022, into which the IR£50,000 was lodged, was an account in the names of Mrs Dorothy and Mr Pádraig Flynn, whose address on the account was stated to be 34 Northumberland Road, Chiswick, London. Mr Flynn told the Tribunal that, after he handed the cheque to his wife, he was unaware of how the cheque was handled by her or into what account it was lodged. However, the Tribunal found this evidence of Mr Flynn to be incredible and rejected it as untrue.

49.03 This bank account was opened by Mrs Flynn in or about February 1986. AIB bank statements produced to the Tribunal described the account thus: ‘Dorothy Flynn and Pádraig Flynn external account UK deposit.’

49.04 The account was operational from 12 February 1986 until 4 May 1993.

49.05 Mr Flynn, in evidence, claimed to have no knowledge of the opening or existence of this account, or indeed of two other similar non-resident accounts also held in his and his wife’s name, until some time in the early 1990s. According to Mr Flynn, on learning of the existence of account no 10000-022, he asked Mrs Flynn to close it.

49.06 Although Mrs Dorothy Flynn acknowledged that it was her signature on the document which opened the account, she maintained that she had never seen that document, and claimed to have no knowledge of the fact that, not one, but three external deposit accounts were opened in the names of herself and her husband in AIB in Castlebar in the 1980s.

49.07 The Tribunal regarded the evidence tendered by Mr and Mrs Flynn in this regard to be astounding, incredible and untrue. The Tribunal was satisfied that at all relevant times both Mr and Mrs Flynn were aware that they had opened and maintained non-resident accounts in the period 1985–93, with a London address with which they had no apparent connection.

THE FORM ‘F’ DECLARATION

49.08 In relation to account no 10000-022, both Mr and Mrs Flynn signed a form ‘F’ declaration, which individuals opening a non-resident account had to be completed for Revenue purposes. In doing so Mr and Mrs Flynn declared that the persons beneficially entitled to the interest payable or credited to money held in the account were not resident in the Republic of Ireland throughout the relevant year and were not so resident at the date of the document’s execution, and that interest payable on the account was not required to be included in any return to the Revenue Commissioners.

49.09 The Tribunal was satisfied that, when Mr and Mrs Flynn signed the form 'F' declaration, they intended that they themselves be the persons beneficially entitled to bank interest accruing to the account.

49.10 Although the form 'F', as signed by Mr and Mrs Flynn, was not dated, and while no particular year was specified in the body of the form, the Tribunal was nonetheless satisfied, based on information provided by AIB, that, as a matter of probability, the declaration was made on a date between 6 April 1989 and 5 April 1990. According to AIB, between 12 February 1986 and 5 April 1989 the account, while described as an external UK deposit account, did not have the status of a non-resident account and DIRT was deducted from the account. However, beginning on 5 April 1990, interest on the account was paid gross (without deduction of tax) in accordance with ordinary non-resident bank rules.

49.11 It was acknowledged that at all times up to 4 January 1993, when Mr Flynn was appointed an EU Commissioner (based in Brussels), he and Mrs Flynn were ordinarily resident in Ireland. Between March 1987 and January 1993, save for the period between 8 November 1991 and 11 February 1992, Mr Flynn was a Government minister.

49.12 The credit balance of Mr and Mrs Flynn's AIB account no 10000-022 (into which Mr Gilmartin's IR£50,000 was lodged on 7 June 1989) stood at approximately IR£6 prior to the said lodgement. However, records indicated that in the two-and-a-half year period between February 1987 and 23 June 1989, some IR£94,230 (including the 7 June 1989 lodgement which contained Mr Gilmartin's cheque) was lodged into this account.

THE OTHER TWO NON-RESIDENT ACCOUNTS

49.13 AIB account no 09620-053, also in the names of Mr and Mrs Flynn, was opened on 14 August 1985, with their address stated to be 34 Northumberland Road, Chiswick, London. This account was closed in 1989.

49.14 AIB account no 09998-046 was opened in the names of Mr and Mrs Flynn on 5 October 1989 and was described as an external deposit account associated with an address at Northumberland Road, Chiswick, England. Subsequently, in or about March 1993, the address on this account was changed from Chiswick, London, to an address at 17 Avenue Jules César, Brussels, 171150, Belgium, presumably to reflect the reality of Mr Flynn's then residence in Brussels, pursuant to his appointment as EU Commissioner in January 1993.

LODGEMENTS TO THE NON-RESIDENT ACCOUNTS

49.15 In the period 1987–93, lodgements made to the three aforementioned non-resident accounts totalled IR£155,278. This figure included the sum of IR£94,230 lodged to external deposit UK account no 10000-022 between February 1987 and June 1989, and approximately IR£58,000 lodged to account no 09998-046 between October 1989 and January 1993. None of the lodgements to the aforesaid accounts appeared to relate to salary or income earned by Mr Flynn due to his position as a TD or minister. Mrs Flynn did not herself have an income at this time.

49.16 When questioned as to the source of the lodgements to account no 10000-022, Mr Flynn could only identify Mr Gilmartin’s IR£50,000, and not the additional IR£3,920 lodged with it. The source of the following lodgements also remained unexplained by either Mr or Mrs Flynn:

10 February 1987: IR£3,345

20 February 1987: IR£9,780

20 October 1987: IR£1,000

9 August 1988: IR£10,000

13 June 1989: IR£10,090

15 June 1989: IR£1,050

49.17 In relation to account no 09998-046, Mr and Mrs Flynn could only identify the source of three lodgements, namely: a lodgement of IR£16,226.61 made on 5 October 1989 (being money received from the sale of sites); a lodgement of IR£1,000 on 18 February 1989 (being the proceeds of the sale of shares); and a lodgement of IR£8,000 on 5 January 1993 (being monies paid by National Toll Roads (NTR) and described as a political contribution). Mr Flynn adverted to the possibility that Davy Stockbrokers was the source of one of the remaining lodgements to account no 09998-046. Davy Stockbrokers confirmed that they had paid IR£3,000 to Mr Flynn in November 1992 as a political donation.

49.18 Mr Flynn only recollected that NTR was the source of a payment of IR£8,000 after NTR wrote to him on 8 January 2001, reminding him of the payment. Prior to that correspondence, Mr Flynn claimed he was unable to assist the Tribunal as to the source of this IR£8,000 lodgement.

49.19 Mr Flynn failed to explain the source of the following lodgements to external deposit account no 09998-046:

25 February 1991: IR£2,700

1 May 1991: IR£4,000

3 December 1991: IR£6,000

6 January 1992: IR£1,000

19 January 1992: IR£9,280

23 November 1992: IR£2,300

7 December 1992: IR£4,000

49.20 In correspondence with the Tribunal in July 2000, Mr Flynn, through his solicitors, advised the Tribunal that the unidentified lodgements to the aforesaid accounts were probably the accumulation of political contributions.

49.21 However, on 8 November 2000, Mr Flynn's solicitors wrote to the Tribunal stating that the information previously furnished by them regarding the likely source of the lodgements in question was erroneous. Mr Flynn now maintained that the said lodgements consisted partially rather than solely of election contributions.

49.22 This latter position was maintained by Mr Flynn in his evidence to the Tribunal when he reiterated that, save for the few lodgements to the external deposit accounts that were identified (one of these being Mr Gilmartin's IR£50,000), he was unable to identify the source of any of the other lodgements queried by the Tribunal. Mr Flynn maintained that during the period in question he kept no records of the receipt by him of political donations.

MOVEMENTS ON THE AIB NON-RESIDENT ACCOUNT NUMBER 10000-022 SUBSEQUENT TO THE LODGEMENT OF MR GILMARTIN'S CHEQUE.

49.23 It appeared therefore to the Tribunal that the source of some IR£77,000 out of a total of IR£155,000 (approximately) lodged to two of the three external deposit accounts operated by Mr and Mrs Flynn between 1985/6 and 1993 remained unaccounted for. The Tribunal was satisfied that all of the monies lodged to these accounts were monies obtained by Mr Flynn, as the evidence of both Mr and Mrs Flynn was that Mrs Flynn was not in receipt of income independent of that of Mr Flynn during the period in question (save for an inheritance which was accounted for).

49.24 On 3 October and 20 November 1989 respectively, two substantial cash withdrawals of IR£25,000 were made from account no 10000-022. In response to queries posed by the Tribunal in 1999, Mr Flynn, by letter of 4 June 1999, sought to account for the expenditure of these monies in the following manner: ‘the purpose of the withdrawals was, inter alia, to defray and reimburse expenditure and to fund investment.’

49.25 Both in correspondence and in his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Flynn maintained that he had reimbursed himself from these withdrawals to the extent of IR£13,000 in respect of monies spent on the June 1989 General Election. No documentary evidence of such expenditure was provided by Mr Flynn, save one cheque paid on 26 July 1989 to Carr Communications to the value of IR£1,945.95.

49.26 Between July and October 1989, prior to the cash withdrawal of the two aforementioned sums of IR£25,000, approximately IR£14,500 (in total) was withdrawn from account no 10000-022, in amounts ranging from IR£500 to almost IR£6,000. It was likely that these sums were withdrawn to defray election expenses.

49.27 The first of the IR£25,000 cash withdrawals was made on 3 October 1989. According to Mr Flynn the cash was placed in a safe in his home, and used to pay election expenses. Mr Flynn had no records or receipts relating to any such expenses, but identified in very general terms the type of expenditure that occurred at election time, such as advertising, printing, office, and subsistence costs.

49.28 While the polling date of the election referred to by Mr Flynn was 15 June 1989, nearly four months prior to the withdrawal of the IR£25,000. Mr Flynn suggested that it was normal ‘for some’ to discharge election expenses three or four months after an election.

THE FOREIGN INVESTMENTS

49.29 Of the two IR£25,000 sums withdrawn in cash, on 3 October and 20 November 1989 respectively, the evidence suggested that the latter withdrawal was used by Mr Flynn to purchase unit trust investments through National Irish Bank (NIB). This purchase was organised on behalf of Mr and Mrs Flynn by their daughter, Ms Beverly Cooper Flynn, then an employee of NIB.

49.30 The Tribunal was satisfied that the IR£25,000 cash withdrawn on 20 November 1989 was provided to Ms Cooper Flynn for that investment purpose, sometime between 20 November and 22 November 1989. This sum of IR£25,000 was lodged overnight with National Irish Investment Bank on 22 November 1989, and on that date Mr and Mrs Flynn and Ms Cooper Flynn signed exchange control documentation in relation to the proposed unit trust funds investments.

49.31 On 23 November 1989, following an investment report prepared by Ms Cooper Flynn, which had been provided to her father on 17 October 1989, Ms Cooper Flynn (on behalf of her parents) invested the IR£25,000 in cash in the following unit trust funds:

IR£15,000: MIM Britannia European Performance⁴²

IR£5,000: MIM Britannia Nippon Warrant

IR£5,000: Fleming Flagship Eastern Opportunities.

49.32 Neither Mr and Mrs Flynn nor Ms Cooper Flynn could definitively recollect how the IR£25,000 was actually taken to National Irish Investment Bank. Mr Flynn thought that he may have bought a bank draft.

49.33 The three investments listed above were held jointly in the names of Mr and Mrs Flynn and Ms Cooper Flynn. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Flynn was at all times anxious to ensure that the existence of such investments remained as secret as possible, hence the direction, as noted on NIB documentation, to wit, 'no correspondence to Pdraig or Dorothy Flynn as per Bev.' The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr and Mrs Flynn were the beneficiaries of these funds, and of the investment.

49.34 The Tribunal was also satisfied that in July 1990, a further sum of IR£10,000 in cash was provided to Ms Cooper Flynn by Mr Flynn for the purpose of making a further investment into the Fleming Flagship Eastern Opportunities fund. Ms Cooper Flynn professed to have no recollection of receiving this money from her father.

49.35 Mr Flynn told the Tribunal of his habit of keeping large sums of cash in his safe in Castlebar at that time. The Tribunal believed that all, or a substantial portion of the IR£10,000 used to top up the Fleming Flagship Eastern Opportunities fund came from the first IR£25,000 cash withdrawal made from account no 10000-022 on 3 October 1989.

49.36 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr and Mrs Flynn's investments (to the extent of IR£35,000 as outlined above) in the three funds were financed to a significant extent (if not exclusively) from lodgements to account no 10000-022, ⁴²These funds were switched in May 1991 to the Asia Tiger Fund, but for ease of reference in the Report they will be referred to as the European Performance Fund.

including Mr Gilmartin's cheque for IR£50,000, which he gave to Mr Flynn in May/June 1989.

49.37 In February 1993 and December 1994 respectively, two of the three investments which Mr and Mrs Flynn had made in November 1989 (the Fleming Flagship Eastern Opportunities and the MIM Britannia European Performance) were encashed, producing funds in excess of IR£44,000.

THE OPENING OF THE NIB MONAGHAN 'NON-RESIDENT ACCOUNT'

49.38 On 2 March 1993, a sum of IR£20,227.99 (being the proceeds of the Fleming Flagship Fund investment encashed on 10 February 1993) was lodged to a 'non-resident account' in the names of Mr and Mrs Flynn at NIB Monaghan, which had been opened for them at the request of Ms Cooper Flynn. The address provided for the purposes of this account was Avenue Jules César 17, Brussels. Mr Flynn was an EU Commissioner in Brussels from January 1993.

49.39 On 25 January 1995, a sum of IR£24,017.57, representing the net proceeds of the European Performance Fund investment⁴³ was lodged to the NIB Monaghan 'non-resident account', at the direction of Ms Cooper Flynn.

49.40 By early 1995 therefore, Mr and Mrs Flynn had some IR£46,514.00 inclusive of interest standing to their credit in this 'non-resident account' in NIB Monaghan.

49.41 On 30 May 1995, an additional sum of IR£10,923.92 was lodged to the same NIB account. This sum represented the proceeds of a BES investment. As of November 1996, therefore, some IR£62,388.66 was standing to the credit of Mr and Mrs Flynn in their NIB 'non-resident' account.

49.42 The Tribunal was satisfied that during the currency of the NIB Monaghan 'non-resident' account of Mr and Mrs Flynn, its proceeds, save for the sum of IR£10,923.92 (being the proceeds of the BES investment) had as its source (entirely or to a substantial extent) lodgments to account no. 10000-022, including the cheque for IR£50,000 given by Mr Gilmartin to Mr Flynn for Fianna Fáil.

⁴³ Encashed on 14 December 1994.

THE WITHDRAWALS FROM THE NIB MONAGHAN 'NON-RESIDENT'
ACCOUNT NO 93062406

49.43 On 20 February 1997, IR£25,000 in cash was withdrawn from the NIB Monaghan account. The Tribunal was satisfied, notwithstanding Ms Cooper Flynn's failure of recollection in this regard, that this withdrawal was likely to have been made by her on behalf of her parents.

49.44 Mr Flynn told the Tribunal that he spent the IR£25,000 cash on a number of projects and items, namely the repair of a road, holidays, presents for his family, part payment on a car and house furnishings. Mr Flynn provided those details in a letter to his accountant in January 2000, but erroneously referred in that letter to the withdrawal of the IR£25,000 cash as having occurred in February 1996 rather than February 1997.

49.45 Likewise, a withdrawal (by way of bank draft) from the NIB Monaghan account on 27 March 1997 of a sum of IR£37,553.74 was erroneously stated by Mr Flynn in the letter to his accountant to have occurred in 1996 rather than in 1997.

49.46 It appeared to the Tribunal from both documentary and oral evidence that, following the withdrawal of IR£37,553.74 (which effectively closed the account), this money was, in the first instance, transferred to a joint account of Mr and Mrs Flynn at AIB Castlebar and subsequently transferred to an account in Mrs Flynn's name at AIB Castlebar.

49.47 The sum transferred to Mrs Flynn's sole account was subsequently used by her to purchase a farm at Cloonanass, Co. Mayo, (the purchase price for the 100-acre farm was approximately IR£45,000).

THE CLOONANASS FARM AND ITS GRANT BENEFITS

49.48 Although Mrs Flynn did not visit the farm prior to purchasing it or at any time engage in farming activities, she availed of a Department of Marine and Natural Resources grant scheme for the planting of trees on the farm. This grant was payable by the department in addition to an annual premium to the landowner. In order to avail of this annual farmer's premium, it was necessary for Mrs Flynn to show that 25 per cent of her annual income came from farming. Mrs Flynn appeared to have satisfied the authorities that she met this criterion. Mr Flynn's accountant's note of Mr Flynn's instructions includes the following:

- North Mayo—all planted.
- Premium IR£7,000 p.a. for life contingent on being a farmer,
- farm profile due 1997/1998

- >25% of total income from farming
- Needs to show c £1,100 'sold hay'
- Date of signing the contract for planting.

49.49 Mrs Flynn confirmed to the Tribunal that since the purchase of the farm she had been and remained the recipient of a yearly premium of IR£7,064.35 payable over 20 years by the Department of Marine and Natural Resources (the first two payments made to Mrs Flynn by the Department were apparently paid to contractors who planted the land on her behalf). Mrs Flynn acknowledged that at the time of her successful application to the Department for the relevant grant she was not a farmer, nor was 25 per cent of her income (or indeed any of her income) derived from farming, and that this position had not changed in the intervening years.

49.50 Mrs Flynn acknowledged that the benefit accruing to her over a 20-year period from the premiums would be in the region of IR£140,000.

49.51 Both Mr and Mrs Flynn disputed Tribunal Counsel's suggestion that the acquisition of the farm at Cloonanass had been entirely or substantially funded by Mr Gilmartin's payment of IR£50,000. Mr Flynn, in particular, maintained that little, if any, of Mr Gilmartin's IR£50,000 was used directly or indirectly in buying the farm at Cloonanass.

49.52 The Tribunal was satisfied, however, that the contrary was the case, and that the proceeds of lodgments to account no. 1000-022, including the IR£50,000 cheque given to Mr Flynn by Mr Gilmartin in late May/early June 1989, ultimately funded most or all of the purchase of the farm at Cloonanass in Co. Mayo. The Tribunal was also satisfied that only a small amount, if any of that £50,000 was used by Mr Flynn for political purposes.

49.53 The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr Flynn went to considerable lengths to conceal the receipt of the IR£50,000, including having it lodged in the first instance to an external, bogus non-resident account.

49.54 The Tribunal noted the manner in which Ms Cooper Flynn, most probably at the direction of Mr Flynn, sought to ensure that the investment in 1989 of a portion of Mr Gilmartin's money in the three funds remained as confidential as possible. When two of these three fund investments were cashed in February 1993 and December 1994 respectively, Mr Flynn, then residing in Brussels, availed of the opportunity to open a bona fide non-resident account.

49.55 Mr and Mrs Flynn and Ms Cooper Flynn frequently exhibited a lack of recollection as to the circumstances relating to the movement of funds from the receipt of IR£50,000 by Mr Flynn in late May/early June 1989 and the eventual purchase of the farm at Cloonanass in Co. Mayo. The Tribunal was not convinced that their evidence in this regard was entirely truthful.

FIANNA FÁIL'S KNOWLEDGE OF THE IR£50,000 PAYMENT

CONTACT BETWEEN MR GILMARTIN AND MR BERTIE AHERN IN JUNE 1989

50.01 Mr Gilmartin claimed that he informed Mr Ahern (then a Government minister) on 20 June 1989 that he had made a donation of IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn on behalf of the Fianna Fáil Party. Mr Gilmartin said that on that date he telephoned Mr Ahern to thank him for the assistance rendered in relation to his bid to purchase the Irishtown lands (Mr Gilmartin's tender had just been approved by Dublin Corporation and Mr Gilmartin had been notified of this by a letter from Dublin Corporation to his solicitor on 19 June 1989). Mr Gilmartin claimed that in the course of their telephone conversation, Mr Ahern adverted to a forthcoming fundraising event by Fianna Fáil scheduled to be held in the Reform Club in London in November 1989. Mr Ahern stated that the Fianna Fáil finances were 'in a bit of a state' and asked Mr Gilmartin if he could see his way to making a donation to the party. Mr Gilmartin responded by informing Mr Ahern that he had already donated IR£50,000 to Fianna Fáil. When asked to whom the donation had been given, Mr Gilmartin told Mr Ahern that it had been given to Mr Flynn.

50.02 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Ahern stated that he had no recollection of any such telephone call from Mr Gilmartin. Mr Ahern denied that he requested a donation from Mr Gilmartin for Fianna Fáil and proclaimed that in 27 years of political life he had never personally sought a donation on behalf of Fianna Fáil, or for himself. At the same time, Mr Ahern firmly stated his belief that there was nothing improper, or indeed uncommon, in making a request for a donation in such circumstances. Mr Ahern told the Tribunal that had he been told by Mr Gilmartin of a IR£50,000 donation to Mr Flynn intended for Fianna Fáil, it would not have aroused any suspicion in his mind as Mr Flynn was at that time a joint treasurer of the Fianna Fáil Party and might have been expected to have received donations on behalf of the party.

50.03 Mr Ahern did, however, state that if Mr Gilmartin had referred to the question of a contribution in the course of the telephone conversation on 20 June 1989, he, Mr Ahern, 'might have asked him did he give a contribution.'

50.04 When asked whether, if an individual speaking to him on the telephone raised the subject of a donation, he might say that the party could do with a donation, Mr Ahern responded: 'No, I doubt that. I doubt that. I very much doubt I would do that.'

50.05 Mr Ahern also rejected Mr Gilmartin's evidence that in the course of the telephone call on 20 June 1989, he, Mr Ahern, might have intimated that he would be attending a fundraising event in London, and hoped to see him there (Mr Ahern did attend such an event in London in November 1989).

50.06 The Tribunal is satisfied that Mr Ahern's telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin on 20 June 1989 took place and accepted Mr Gilmartin's recollection of that conversation. It was satisfied that Mr Ahern suggested, or requested, that Mr Gilmartin make a contribution to the Fianna Fáil Party.

50.07 The Tribunal was further satisfied that in the course of his conversation with Mr Ahern on 20 June 1989, Mr Gilmartin informed Mr Ahern of his then very recent payment to Mr Flynn of IR£50,000 intended for the Fianna Fáil Party.

50.08 The Tribunal believed that Mr Gilmartin's memory of his telephone discussion with Mr Ahern on 20 June 1989, particularly in relation to the issue of Mr Ahern requesting a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party, was more likely than not to remain in his memory, if for no other reason than that it was close in time to his payment of IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn intended for the Fianna Fáil Party.

MR GILMARTIN'S MEETING WITH MR SEÁN SHERWIN

50.09 In or about October/November 1990, Mr Gilmartin was brought by Mr Colm Scallon (a property consultant) to the Mount Street offices of Fianna Fáil to meet Mr Seán Sherwin, then National Organiser for Fianna Fáil. Mr Gilmartin had relayed a number of complaints to Mr Scallon about difficulties he was encountering and had encountered relating to both the Bachelor's Walk and the Quarryvale projects. Mr Scallon confirmed to the Tribunal that he was told by Mr Gilmartin of corrupt demands being made by people who ought to have been providing him with assistance, and, according to Mr Scallon, the import of what Mr Gilmartin had told him was that Mr Gilmartin 'was being shafted all over the place'. Mr Scallon recalled, in particular, having been told by Mr Gilmartin of demands for money being made by Mr Lawlor, and by other councillors, who were not identified by Mr Gilmartin, and of how Mr Lawlor 'invaded the board meeting in London.' Mr Scallon, however, did not recollect Mr Gilmartin specifically mentioning Cllr Hanrahan or the demand for IR£100,000. Mr Scallon agreed that the allegations made by Mr Gilmartin amounted to ‘a horrendous scene’, and a ‘disgraceful scene.’

50.10 Mr Sherwin acknowledged that he met Mr Gilmartin in 1990, and he accepted that most of the complaints which Mr Gilmartin claimed he made were indeed relayed to him by Mr Gilmartin.

50.11 There was no significant dispute between Mr Gilmartin and Mr Sherwin as to what complaints were relayed by Mr Gilmartin, save that Mr Sherwin did not believe that Mr Gilmartin told him of Mr Lawlor’s demand for a 20 per cent equity stake in his development.⁴⁴ Mr Gilmartin’s complaints about Mr Lawlor, according to Mr Sherwin, centred largely on the manner in which Mr Lawlor had orchestrated a consultancy arrangement with Arlington Securities Plc, a matter which appeared to him to have been of concern to Mr Gilmartin.

50.12 After his meeting with Mr Gilmartin and Mr Scallon, Mr Sherwin discussed Mr Gilmartin’s complaints with Mr Paul Kavanagh (a businessman and voluntary chief fundraiser for Fianna Fáil). Mr Sherwin told the Tribunal that he did not pass on any complaint concerning Mr Lawlor to Mr Kavanagh, as he, Mr Sherwin, had not understood Mr Gilmartin to have made any complaint of improper conduct on Mr Lawlor’s part.

50.13 Mr Sherwin also conceded that Mr Gilmartin raised Mr Redmond’s name in relation to efforts to frustrate his Quarryvale development, although he claimed that Mr Gilmartin’s specific complaint at the meeting was in relation to a meeting with county council officials which Mr Redmond had cut short. Mr Sherwin’s evidence was that the complaint Mr Gilmartin made in this context did not, in his view, merit being notified to Mr Kavanagh.

50.14 Mr Sherwin accepted that Mr Gilmartin, in the course of the meeting, made a serious allegation against Cllr Hanrahan, namely that the latter, at a meeting in Buswells Hotel, had demanded IR£100,000 from Mr Gilmartin in return for his support for the rezoning of Quarryvale, information which, Mr Sherwin told the Tribunal, ‘astounded’ and ‘shocked’ him. Mr Gilmartin had told Mr Sherwin that he had refused to accede to Cllr Hanrahan’s demands.

50.15 Mr Sherwin acknowledged to the Tribunal that Mr Gilmartin had informed him about the IR£50,000 donation to Mr Flynn stating: ‘he indicated to me that he had made a contribution of £50,000 to Pdraig Flynn, as I understood on behalf of Fianna Fail.’

⁴⁴ However, Mr Scallon told the Tribunal that the issue of Mr Lawlor seeking an equity stake in Mr Gilmartin’s project was mentioned to Mr Sherwin by Mr Gilmartin at the meeting.

50.16 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he informed Mr Sherwin at this meeting of the IR£50,000 given to Mr Flynn/Fianna Fáil, some 18 months earlier. Mr Gilmartin said that he told him when Mr Sherwin had raised with him the issue of a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party. Mr Gilmartin's specific evidence in relation to this request was as follows:

'Q. 168 And you have said that Mr Sherwin suggested you make a political donation to Fianna Fáil?

A. No, he was talking about the demands for money and he was aware that there was a Garda investigation.

Q. 169 Mr Sherwin was aware?

A. Yeah. So then he said to me, he said if there is any money going the party could do with it and he made some reference to them being IR£3m in debt and that the party could do with it.'

50.17 Mr Sherwin contradicted Mr Gilmartin's evidence in this regard. Mr Sherwin stated on Day 477:

'....First of all I did not ask him for a donation. It would have been, I think you perhaps would agree, it would be an extraordinary thing if this man was here in my office telling me about his difficulties and problems and that I would make his difficulties and problems even more difficult by asking him for a contribution to Fianna Fail, the last thought in my mind would have been that. So I didn't ask him for any contribution I certainly did not ask him, as you recited there, how much did I, did he give to Pdraig Flynn. He offered the information to me. He simply said I have given 50,000 pounds to Pdraig Flynn. I assumed frankly that he was saying I gave 50,000 pounds to Pdraig Flynn on behalf of Fianna Fail.'

50.18 He also denied Mr Gilmartin's assertion that in the course of their conversation, he absented himself from the meeting for a short period of time, returned, and informed Mr Gilmartin that the Fianna Fáil Party had not received the IR£50,000 donated through Mr Flynn. However, Mr Sherwin agreed that he did, within a short time after the meeting took place, establish from Mr Kavanagh that Fianna Fáil had not received a donation from Mr Gilmartin. Mr Sherwin said that it did not occur to him to revert to Mr Gilmartin with this news. Mr Sherwin described the IR£50,000 as 'a very very significant, very much unusual amount of money and any contributions that the party would have gotten around that time would have been much more in the range of, 1,000 to, 2,000 or, 5,000 whatever.'

MR SHERWIN'S INQUIRIES

50.19 Mr Sherwin stated that following his meeting with Mr Gilmartin, he resolved to bring two matters to the attention of Mr Kavanagh: Mr Gilmartin's allegation that Cllr Hanrahan had sought IR£100,000, and Mr Gilmartin's claim to have paid IR£50,000 to Fianna Fáil through Mr Flynn. In relation to the Cllr Hanrahan issue, Mr Sherwin believed that Mr Kavanagh would, by way of 'due diligence', bring this allegation to the attention of the then Taoiseach, Mr Charles Haughey, and therefore he himself did not pursue it further.

50.20 In relation to the IR£50,000 donation to Fianna Fáil, Mr Sherwin believed that Mr Kavanagh, in his capacity as chief fundraiser within Fianna Fáil, was the most suitable person to ascertain whether Mr Gilmartin had in fact donated IR£50,000 to Fianna Fáil, and Mr Sherwin believed that Mr Kavanagh would similarly bring this issue to the attention of the Taoiseach, Mr Haughey.

50.21 Mr Sherwin testified that some days after he informed Mr Kavanagh of the IR£50,000 donation, the latter informed him that there was no evidence of any donation from Mr Gilmartin. On Day 477 the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Sherwin:

'Q. And were you shocked when you were told that 50,000 pounds had been given to Mr. Padraig Flynn and when you learned that that had not been, that found it's way into the coffers of the party?

A. I was in disbelief to be truthful.

Q. Were you shocked?

A. I was yeah and in disbelief.

Q. Why what was the disbelief or what was the reason for your disbelief?

A. I couldn't make out whether Tom Gilmartin was giving me this information in a truthful way, I just couldn't make up my mind, and when I found through Paul Kavanagh that the money did not find it's way into Fianna Fail, I was then in more disbelief, I was quite certain it didn't happen.

Q. That it didn't happen.

A. Yes.

Q. At that stage Mr. Flynn was the party treasurer or one of the joint treasurers of the party?

A. Yes joint honorary treasurer.

Q. He was a Minister in government?

A. Yes.

Q. Why did you not go to Mr. Flynn at that stage, if you did not believe that he had received 50,000 pounds, and say to him 'Mr. Gilmartin has alleged that he gave you 50,000 pounds for the Fianna Fail party, it hasn't gone to the Fianna Fail party and I am satisfied that I believe that it's a grossly defamatory statement of you, its untrue and I am prepared to give evidence on your behalf if you seek to take an action against Mr. Gilmartin?'

A. Well to start with, I wasn't in a position of belief, I was in disbelief and may I – my first opportunity I raised it with who I considered to be the appropriate person, Paul Kavanagh who was head of fundraising, I felt that it would be his job and he would have the ability to find out whether or not it came to Fianna Fail, as alleged by Tom Gilmartin.

Q. But Mr. Kavanagh told you, according to your statement that there was no record in the Fianna Fail party of the payment, isn't that right?

A. That's right, yes, some days later. Sorry, I met him some days later and then it took him a further period to find out.

Q. Within, whether it was on the day or within a few days?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Certainly in or about October of 1990 you knew that any monies Thomas Gilmartin had paid, if any, to Mr. Flynn had not found their way into the Fianna Fail coffers?

A. That's right.

Q. And if Mr. Gilmartin is truthful and accurate in his, what he told you, he had given 50,000 pounds to Mr. Flynn?

A. Yes.

Q. And you did nothing further about that at that time, either by going to Mr. Flynn or by telling Mr. Gilmartin he should go to the Gardai or by writing to anybody in your organisation, telling your superior about this outrageous grossly defamatory claim that was being made, if untrue, isn't that right?

A. Well that's true. I didn't go to anyone else for two reasons. One I had gone to Paul Kavanagh who was the appropriate person and secondly, for I to spread, if it turned out to be not just untrue but scandalous, I wasn't going to be found guilty of spreading scandal to persons. I certainly felt that Paul Kavanagh was the appropriate person and that's who I spoke to.

Q. Did you inquire from him as to whether or not he had spoken to anybody else in the organisation, who was the ultimate senior party official or officer at that time?

A. No the auditors wouldn't have anything to do with it.

Q. Officer sorry?

A. Well as you said, the joint honorary treasurer, or one of them, was Pdraig Flynn. Paul Kavanagh came back to me days later and told me that it did not, directly or indirectly, that's to say from Pdraig Flynn, directly or indirectly it did not come to Fianna Fail. I was frankly relieved because I couldn't believe that it had gone to Pádraig Flynn personally, I then as I said inquired whether or not it had come to Fianna Fáil itself and I was relieved when it hadn't, so I was probably convinced more in my own believe that this never happened.'

50.22 Mr Sherwin told the Tribunal that he did not ask Mr Kavanagh if Mr Gilmartin's claim about the IR£50,000 had been brought to the attention of Mr Haughey.

50.23 Mr Kavanagh acknowledged to the Tribunal that he was briefed by Mr Sherwin about Mr Gilmartin's claim to have paid IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn for the benefit of Fianna Fáil, but he had no recollection of being told by Mr Sherwin of the Cllr Hanrahan allegation. Mr Kavanagh said that at the time Cllr Hanrahan was unknown to him. However, the Tribunal believed it likely that Mr Kavanagh was so informed.

50.24 Mr Kavanagh told the Tribunal that he had instructed Mr Seán Fleming⁴⁵ to conduct an examination of Fianna Fáil's records to determine if there was any record of a donation from Mr Gilmartin, and that none was found. Mr Kavanagh said that he did not 'believe the whole Gilmartin thing' and stated that the information which had been relayed to him about Mr Gilmartin and the IR£50,000 simply related to Mr Gilmartin seeking a receipt for his donation (whereas, Mr Gilmartin denied that he had sought a receipt).

50.25 Neither Mr Sherwin nor Mr Kavanagh asked Mr Flynn whether he had received any donation from Mr Gilmartin. The Tribunal found this failure to inquire of Mr Flynn remarkable, having regard to the fact that over a year previously, in June 1989, having being informed from a reliable source that Mr Ray Burke (then a Government Minister), had received a substantial donation intended for Fianna Fáil. Mr Kavanagh had telephoned Mr Burke to ascertain the truth of that information and had also raised the matter with the then Taoiseach, Mr Haughey.

50.26 In the course of Mr Flynn's cross-examination, Counsel for Mr Gilmartin, Mr Hugh O'Neill, SC, asked Mr Flynn: 'At any stage up until 1998, did anyone in Fianna Fáil approach you and ask you is there any truth in what Mr Gilmartin says that he gave you £50,000 for Fianna Fáil and that it hasn't arrived in the Fianna Fáil coffers?' Mr Flynn answered in the negative.

50.27 The Tribunal was satisfied that in the course of their meeting in October 1990 Mr Gilmartin informed Mr Sherwin that he provided a IR£50,000 cheque to Mr Flynn for the Fianna Fail Party, information which Mr Sherwin duly relayed to Mr Kavanagh for the purposes of his checking party records.

50.28 The Tribunal did not accept Mr Sherwin's contention that he disbelieved Mr Gilmartin's claim that he had given the IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn with the intention that he pay it over to the Fianna Fáil Party.

50.29 It appeared to the Tribunal that in the absence of any inquiry made by Mr Kavanagh of Mr Flynn, and without Mr Sherwin himself asking Mr Flynn whether or not he had received IR£50,000, neither Mr Sherwin nor Mr Kavanagh could logically or reasonably conclude in October 1990, as they claim they did, that Mr Gilmartin had misled them in relation to the issue. Moreover, it also appeared to the Tribunal that Mr Sherwin did not believe Mr Gilmartin had misled him in 1990. The Tribunal regarded a number of Mr Sherwin's answers to questions posed to him in cross-examination as particularly instructive as to his likely state of mind.

50.30 On Day 478, the following exchange occurred between Mr Donal O'Donnell SC, Counsel for Mr Gilmartin, and Mr Sherwin:

'Q. 574 And you wanted to believe in Pádraig Flynn, you wanted to have faith in him and whatever Mr Kavanagh told you confirmed your faith in him, is that right?

A. No, Paul Kavanagh confirmed that the money did not come to Fianna Fáil. That does not answer any question or thought about whether Tom Gilmartin was truthful in saying that he had given this money to Pádraig Flynn.

Q. 575 Because it left open the possibility that both Mr Gilmartin and Mr Kavanagh were right, that Mr Gilmartin had paid the money to Mr Flynn and Mr Flynn had kept it, is that right? That was simple, simple logic?

A. We all know that now.

Q. 576 But it was, you knew it then?

A. I didn't know—

Q. 577 It was unavoidable consequence of the piece of information you had?

A. There were two things, either Tom Gilmartin was not telling me the fact.

Q. 578 Or Pádraig Flynn had received the money?

A. Or that Fianna Fáil had gotten the money. I established that Fianna Fáil had not been given the money. I wasn't prepared to believe that Pádraig Flynn received the money.

Q.579 So as far as you were concerned, what Mr Gilmartin was telling you wasn't true and that there was no truth—

A. I was much happier believing that Tom Gilmartin was not telling me the truth.'

50.31 The Tribunal was satisfied that for a considerable period following his encounter with Mr Gilmartin, Mr Sherwin remained alive to the possibility, or indeed the probability, that Mr Flynn had in fact received IR£50,000 from Mr Gilmartin for the Fianna Fáil Party. As already indicated, Mr Sherwin when giving evidence put it thus: 'I was much happier believing that Tom Gilmartin was not telling me the truth.'

50.32 In February 1992, Mr Sherwin brought to the attention of the then incoming Taoiseach, Mr Albert Reynolds, who was then in the process of appointing his cabinet, what Mr Gilmartin had told him in relation to the payment to Mr Flynn of IR£50,000 for Fianna Fáil. This information, according to Mr Sherwin, was relayed to Mr Reynolds in the latter's home, following a telephone call from Mr Sherwin to Mr Reynolds seeking an appointment with him. Mr Sherwin said he informed Mr Reynolds of the claim out of a sense of duty to him as the incoming Taoiseach and because he believed that 'any minister should be above any suspicion.'

50.33 Mr Reynolds told the Tribunal that Mr Sherwin had never contacted him as claimed. Mr Reynolds confirmed that Mr Flynn was reappointed by him as Minister for the Environment in February 1992. According to Mr Reynolds, Mr Flynn did not disclose to him that he had received IR£50,000 from Mr Gilmartin, or that he had lodged it into an off-shore account.

50.34 Mr Flynn told the Tribunal that prior to 1998 (when the issue became the subject of media comment), no one in Fianna Fáil, including Mr Sherwin, Mr Kavanagh or Mr Reynolds, had ever approached him in relation to the Gilmartin IR£50,000 payment.

50.35 The Tribunal accepted Mr Sherwin's evidence that he advised Mr Reynolds in February 1992, at a meeting in Mr Reynolds' home, of the payment of IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn. The fact that Mr Sherwin elected to inform Mr Reynolds of Mr Gilmartin's claim to have paid Mr Flynn IR£50,000 for the Fianna Fáil Party established, in the Tribunal's view that Mr Sherwin had not entirely disbelieved Mr Gilmartin's claim to have paid the IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn for the benefit of the Fianna Fáil Party.

THE 1998/9 INQUIRY BELATEDLY MADE BY FIANNA FÁIL OF
MR FLYNN IN RELATION TO THE IR£50,000 DONATION

50.36 On 6 October 1998, the General Secretary of the Fianna Fáil Party wrote to Mr Flynn at his Brussels address and made certain inquiries of him in the context of media reports which referred to Mr Gilmartin having made an allegation to the Tribunal that he had given a sum of IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn for the Fianna Fáil Party. This letter to Mr Flynn was sent on the direction of the then Taoiseach, Mr Bertie Ahern.

50.37 Mr Flynn was informed in the course of that letter that as a result of the allegation being made by Mr Gilmartin, the trustees of the Fianna Fáil Party wished Mr Flynn to answer the following questions:

- 1) Did you or anyone on your behalf receive IR£50,000 or any other sum of money from Tom Gilmartin?
- 2) If so was this money given to you or anyone on your behalf intended for the Fianna Fáil Party?
- 3) Was the money passed on to the Fianna Fáil party?
- 4) If so to whom in Fianna Fáil was the money given and when was it so given?
- 5) Was any receipt issued for same by Fianna Fáil?

50.38 Furthermore, Mr Flynn was asked to provide any documentation in his possession relating to the said monies.

50.39 Mr Ahern told the Tribunal that no response to the letter was received from Mr Flynn.

50.40 On 11 February 1999, Mr Ahern personally wrote to Mr Flynn and brought to his attention the passing of a Dáil motion on 10 February 1999 which called upon Mr Flynn ‘to make a full, immediate statement clarifying his position in relation to allegations that he received IR£50,000 while Minister for the Environment in 1989.’

50.41 Mr Flynn responded on 24 February 1999 to Mr Ahern’s request, stating that because of ongoing correspondence with the Tribunal in relation to the matter, he felt it ‘inappropriate’ to make a public comment on the matter.

50.42 The Tribunal considered it noteworthy that Mr Ahern’s decision to contact Mr Flynn in 1998/1999 in relation to Mr Gilmartin’s allegation that he had paid him £50,000 for Fianna Fail, followed media speculation relating to that payment. When in October/November 1990 (and indeed in 1992), senior personnel within Fianna Fail had essentially the same information, (effectively from 'the horse's mouth'), the matter was not raised with Mr Flynn at that time.

TELEPHONE CONTACT BETWEEN MR FLYNN AND MR GILMARTIN IN 1998

50.43 On 20 September 1998, the Sunday Independent newspaper published an article with the heading 'Another ex-FF Minister kept £50,000 donation'.

50.44 It was common case that this article triggered a series of telephone calls made to Mr Gilmartin by Mr Flynn between 20 September and 1 October 1998.

50.45 The Tribunal was satisfied that it was this public ventilation of the alleged receipt and retention by a 'former Fianna Fáil Minister' of a IR£50,000 donation from a building contractor intended for the Fianna Fáil Party, as well as the Tribunal's interest in the matter (as indicated in the article), that prompted Mr Flynn to contact Mr Gilmartin. Although neither Mr Flynn nor Mr Gilmartin was named in the newspaper in connection to the IR£50,000, Mr Flynn, by his own admission, made the connection between what was reported in the newspaper and the money he had received from Mr Gilmartin in 1989. Subsequently however, on the following Sunday, both men were named in a newspaper article in connection with the payment.

50.46 Mr Flynn made a series of notes which, he told the Tribunal, represented some of the details of the discussion that took place between himself and Mr Gilmartin in the course of these telephone conversations.

50.47 Mr Flynn's explanation for this contact with Mr Gilmartin was that he wished to obtain confirmation from him that the IR£50,000 donation in 1989 was intended for him personally and was not intended for the Fianna Fáil Party.

50.48 Mr Flynn claimed to have received such confirmation from Mr Gilmartin in the course of the series of telephone conversations. Mr Flynn said he documented that confirmation, together with other matters, in the notes he made.

50.49 Mr Gilmartin acknowledged that Mr Flynn contacted him by telephone on a number of occasions in September/October 1998. However, Mr Gilmartin strenuously contested the accuracy of some of the notes penned by Mr Flynn, and of Mr Flynn's recollection of some of the important details of what was discussed between them. Mr Gilmartin maintained that Mr Flynn, in the course of these telephone conversations, put pressure on him to inform the Tribunal that Mr Flynn had returned the IR£50,000 donation to him and that when Mr Gilmartin refused to accede to this request Mr Flynn had proceeded to request Mr Gilmartin to inform the Tribunal that the IR£50,000 donation was intended for Mr Flynn personally and not for the Fianna Fáil Party. Mr Gilmartin said that he also refused to accede to this request. Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he advised Mr Flynn in the course of these conversations that he, Mr Gilmartin, did not intend to co-operate with the Tribunal.

50.50 Mr Flynn's notes relating to the telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin on 20 September 1998 (which lasted two hours) documented a vast store of information allegedly given to him by Mr Gilmartin, much of which referred to Mr Gilmartin's experiences in Dublin in the period from 1988 to 1996 and also to contact between Mr Gilmartin and the Tribunal in 1998.

50.51 Among the notes made by Mr Flynn were the following statements, attributed to Mr Gilmartin:

'Press on all week that I gave £ I said I gave donation to party'

'Tribunal demanded my account in Bank of Ireland also asking permission to investigate'

'I'm asked to cooperate'

'Sherwin said no £ went into party funds'

'I gave a donation to Fianna Fáil party'

'I said I had no complaint against you'

'I told them Flynn was straight'

'Sherwin asked for a substantial donation maybe problem could be solved'

'I told him I gave it to PF'

'PF only one I could talk to'

'I said there was a hung parliament and I gave a donation to PF. for his election'

50.52 Mr Flynn told the Tribunal that he interpreted this latter statement 'I said there was a hung parliament and I gave a donation to PF for his election' to be confirmation by Mr Gilmartin of his, Mr Flynn's, own stance regarding the true intended recipient of the IR£50,000 cheque. Mr Gilmartin denied that he said this or conveyed this information to Mr Flynn. Mr Gilmartin commented that this was a note of what Mr Flynn wanted him, Mr Gilmartin, to state. Mr Flynn also acknowledged that he did not question Mr Gilmartin about the latter's prior reference, as also noted by Mr Flynn, to wit, 'I gave a donation to Fianna Fáil party'.

50.53 Telephone records produced to the Tribunal reveal that Mr Flynn made contact with Mr Gilmartin’s home on 24 September, although no record of what, if any, conversation ensued between the two was provided by Mr Flynn to the Tribunal.

50.54 Prior to the 24 September 1998 telephone call to Mr Gilmartin, Mr Flynn received from the Sunday Independent newspaper a number of queries relating to the alleged receipt by Mr Flynn of IR£50,000 from Mr Gilmartin.

50.55 Mr Flynn’s next noted telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin was on 26 September 1998. In Mr Flynn’s notes arising from this telephone call were the following statements concerning the IR£50,000, attributed by Mr Flynn to Mr Gilmartin:

‘I told them I made donation to Fianna Fáil through PF’

‘I gave donation to PF’

‘What for?—for campaigns’

‘I gave it to Flynn’

‘It must be a bribe then’

‘What was the bribe for?’—TG ‘I got no designation’

50.56 Mr Flynn claimed that the following note represented accurately the dialogue that ensued between himself and Mr Gilmartin in the course of the 26 September 1998 telephone discussion:

PF ‘I’m saying you gave me a personal contribution for my political campaigns. I didn’t ask and you didn’t ask for anything—no strings attached.’

TG ‘That’s right—I’ll settle it with Tribunal crowd on Wednesday you had nothing to do with anything.’

PF ‘I take it Tom that it’s agreed and understood that that’s what happened and it’s the truth.’

TG ‘That’s right, I’ll sort it out.’

50.57 Mr Gilmartin denied any allegation, as suggested in Mr Flynn’s note, that he had assured Mr Flynn that he would tell the Tribunal that the IR£50,000 had been given to him as a personal donation for his campaigns, or, as also claimed by Mr Flynn in evidence, that he had told Mr Flynn that Tribunal Counsel had suggested to Mr Gilmartin that he should say that the money was intended for the Fianna Fáil Party, otherwise it could be interpreted as a bribe.

50.58 Mr Gilmartin’s evidence was that he had told Mr Flynn quite openly that the Tribunal was investigating him, Mr Gilmartin, in the context of payments made to Mr Lawlor, and in the context of the IR£50,000 he paid to Fianna Fáil through Mr Flynn.

50.59 Mr Gilmartin disputed the accuracy of Mr Flynn’s note of their dialogue, and stated that the words recorded were not his but those of Mr Flynn. Mr Gilmartin said he did not state to Mr Flynn that he would tell the Tribunal that the IR£50,000 had been given to Mr Flynn for his personal campaigns. Mr Gilmartin claimed to have told Mr Flynn that he, Mr Flynn, ‘could tell the Tribunal what he liked.’

50.60 Mr Flynn made two telephone calls to Mr Gilmartin’s home on Sunday 27 September 1998 (the date on which a number of newspapers gave extensive space to the IR£50,000 story and Mr Flynn was identified in the Sunday Independent as the conduit for Mr Gilmartin’s donation to Fianna Fáil). On that date also, the Sunday Independent quoted from Mr Flynn’s responses to the series of questions posed to him by the newspaper some days earlier.

50.61 The full text of the questions posed by the Sunday Independent and Mr Flynn’s responses thereto, as published in that newspaper on 4 October 1998, was as follows:

[Q.] 1. Has the Flood Tribunal, which has been investigating certain planning matters in Ireland, been in touch with you?

[A.] In common, I believe, with all T.Ds, Senators and Ministers, present and former, I received a general letter from the Tribunal at the outset asking if I had any information or documentation relevant to the Tribunal. I responded saying NO. I have had no subsequent request, invitation, correspondence from the Tribunal.

[Q.] 2. Are you aware that certain allegations have been made to the Tribunal in which your name figures?

[A.] NO. Only rumours and speculation reported in the newspapers. I understood Tribunal investigations to be confidential.

[Q.] 3. Have you ever had any dealings with Mr Thomas Gilmartin in relation to funds?

[A.] See answer 4.

[Q.] 4. Were you the recipient of a cheque for IR£50,000—intended as a contribution to Fianna Fáil—from Mr Gilmartin.

[Q.] 5. Are you aware that the payee of that cheque was left blank?

[A.] See answer 4.

[Q.] 6. Was that at your request?

[A.] See answer 4.

[Q.] 7. Did you pass the cheque on Fianna Fáil as it was intended? If not, what did not (you) do with it?

[A.] See answer 4.

[Q.] 8. Were any favours asked for or given in return for the contribution?

[A.] See answer 4.'

50.62 It was noteworthy that, notwithstanding Mr Flynn's claim to have received confirmation from Mr Gilmartin on 20 September 1998 that the IR£50,000 was intended for him, and not for Fianna Fáil, no such confirmation or hint of same was evident in Mr Flynn's responses to the questions posed by the Sunday Independent.

50.63 Mr Flynn did not produce any contemporaneous note of the first of two telephone conversations with Mr Gilmartin on 27 September 1998, although it was evident from phone records that their duration was for a period of 15 minutes.

50.64 Among the statements attributed by Mr Flynn to Mr Gilmartin in the course of the second telephone call he made to Mr Gilmartin on the evening of 27 September 1998 were the following:

'They knew I had given you a donation'

'T.G. Nothing asked—nothing given by you'

'They knew I had given you a donation'

'No problem to say a donation for his pol campaigns'

'The size a matter for me'

'I liked him and wished him well'

'I'll tell Tribunal on Wednesday'

'It's the facts'

'I told Tribunal that Flynn did nothing wrong'

'I'll tell Tribunal'

'I will do it'

50.65 A further documented call made by Mr Flynn to Mr Gilmartin on 29 September 1998 made no reference to the IR£50,000 donation.

50.66 Mr Flynn's note of his discussion with Mr Gilmartin on 27 September 1998 indicated that Mr Gilmartin confirmed to him that he had given the IR£50,000 donation to Mr Flynn personally, and that Mr Gilmartin would tell the Tribunal this 'on Wednesday'. A meeting took place between members of the Tribunal's legal team and Mr Gilmartin in Luton on Wednesday 30 September 1998. Notes taken by a member of the Tribunal's legal team as to what was discussed with Mr Gilmartin in the course of that meeting did not suggest that any reference was made by Mr Gilmartin to the IR£50,000 on that occasion.

50.67 The first telephone conversation between Mr Flynn and Mr Gilmartin on 1 October 1998 (the fifth such conversation) prompted Mr Flynn to make a note of what he maintained to the Tribunal was the following statement made by Mr Gilmartin to him: 'Told Tribunal yesterday that contribution was for Flynn's own campaigns because he liked him and was supportive.'

50.68 On 1 October 1998, Mr Flynn made two telephone calls to Mr Gilmartin. The second of these (effectively Mr Flynn's sixth recorded conversation with Mr Gilmartin) contained the following statement, attributed by Mr Flynn to Mr Gilmartin: 'I handed that thing to you for your political purposes.'

50.69 On 2 October 1998, just one day following Mr Flynn's note of what he claimed was Mr Gilmartin's assertion that he had clarified to the Tribunal that the IR£50,000 was a personal donation for Mr Flynn, Mr Gilmartin swore an affidavit wherein he averred as follows:

. . . later Pádraig Flynn (and others) asked me for a donation to the Fianna Fáil party and said that this could help to resolve the problems I was having. This was sometime before an election in 1989, probably in late Spring of that year. The impression I got was that if I paid a donation some of these 'games' would stop.

[. . .] In about June, 1989, I decided to give a cheque for IR£50,000 to the Fianna Fáil party. I wrote the cheque out in Mr Flynn's presence and signed it. I asked 'who do I make it payable to' and he told me to 'leave it' meaning that I should leave it blank. I now know that the name of the payee was inserted by someone as 'CASH'. The sum of IR£50,000 was debited to my account in Bank of Ireland in Blanchardstown. Sometime later, Colm Scallan took me to meet Seán Sherwin who asked me for a donation to Fianna Fáil. I told him that I had already paid IR£50,000 as a donation to the party. He said 'if you did we never got it.'

50.70 Mr Flynn, in evidence, described Mr Gilmartin's affidavit as 'a litany of inaccuracies and untruths'.

50.71 The Tribunal believed it extremely unlikely that, in or about the same time as Mr Gilmartin was prepared to swear on oath (as he did) that his payment of IR£50,000 was intended for the Fianna Fáil Party, he assured Mr Flynn that the payment was intended for Mr Flynn personally.

50.72 The Tribunal was satisfied that in his sworn affidavit of 2 October 1998, and in the course of his testimony to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin gave truthful and accurate evidence when he stated that in 1989 the IR£50,000 cheque handed to Mr Flynn was intended for the Fianna Fáil Party.

50.73 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Flynn’s notes did not accurately reflect the telephone conversations between himself and Mr Gilmartin and probably recorded what Mr Flynn wished Mr Gilmartin to say rather than what Mr Gilmartin actually said.

50.74 Mr Flynn sought to explain the apparent contradictions between what he had noted Mr Gilmartin as having stated in relation to the IR£50,000 donation and the information provided to the Tribunal by Mr Gilmartin in 1998. He did so by suggesting that in the course of Mr Gilmartin’s dealings with the Tribunal in 1998 it had been urged upon him by Tribunal Counsel to state that the Fianna Fáil Party was the intended recipient of the IR£50,000 rather than Mr Flynn, because if Mr Gilmartin were to adhere to the claim that he had given a political donation to Mr Flynn, it might be construed by the Tribunal as a bribe.

50.75 The Tribunal rejected Mr Flynn’s evidence on this matter, and to the extent that, in his notes of his telephone conversations with Mr Gilmartin, Mr Flynn purported to record as much, the Tribunal believed he did so in an effort to create an escape from the situation in which he found himself in 1998.

50.76 The Tribunal was satisfied that in October/November 1990, long before the establishment of the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin informed Mr Sherwin of a donation made by him to the Fianna Fáil Party through Mr Flynn.

50.77 The Tribunal also noted Mr Gilmartin’s instructions to his then solicitors, Noel Smyth & Co in 1996, as set out in Mr Smyth’s brief to Counsel⁴⁶ dated 22 February 1996, wherein the following was asserted:

The Querist will state that in the intervening period, immense pressure was brought upon him to take on O’Callaghan as his partner as he was the bank’s preferred option for the development of the property in question. During this time, the Querist will also say that while the rezoning was postponed on several occasions, he was under duress to pay contributions to TDs, councillors, and members of the then Fianna Fáil government and was openly threatened that in the event of his failing to do so, then his rezoning would not take place. In most instances he resisted these claims but on a number of occasions, believing that it would significantly help the process, agreed to make financial contributions to the party which, in one case (a sum of IR£50,000), it was retained by the individual minister himself.

50.78 Mr Gilmartin was cross-examined in relation to the reference in the foregoing extract to ‘in most instances’. It was put to him that these words suggested that in some instances he had succumbed to requests for the payments of bribes, including the payment of IR£50,000. Mr Gilmartin denied that he had ever bribed anyone and maintained that he could not be held accountable for the phrasing of Mr Smyth’s document.

50.79 As the Tribunal was satisfied that the IR£50,000 cheque given by Mr Gilmartin to Mr Flynn in 1989 was a donation intended for the Fianna Fáil Party, it was therefore satisfied that Mr Flynn’s contacts with Mr Gilmartin between 20 September and 1 October 1998 were undertaken by Mr Flynn solely for the purpose of urging Mr Gilmartin to change his story to accord with that of Mr Flynn.

50.80 The penultimate telephone contact between Mr Flynn and Mr Gilmartin took place on 3 October 1998 at 6.15pm. This call was initiated by Mr Flynn. The final call at about 7pm on the same evening was initiated by Mr Gilmartin and appeared to have been short in duration. In the course of the final telephone contact between Mr Flynn and Mr Gilmartin, Mr Gilmartin informed Mr Flynn that he could not meet with him on the following day, 4 October 1998, as had been arranged earlier at Mr Flynn’s suggestion.

50.81 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Flynn produced a piece of paper to the Tribunal on which he had noted the content of the discussion between Mr Gilmartin and himself on 3 October 1998. On the reverse side of this note, there appeared the following handwritten note: ‘You will NOT give it to FF let him do his own messages!!! give it to a mediator If Tom G won’t accept then have it donated to charity.’

50.82 Mr Flynn was questioned as to who was the author of this note, and its purpose and meaning. The following exchange took place between Counsel for the Tribunal and Mr Flynn:

‘Q. Who made that note?

A. I don’t know.

Q. In what circumstances can you recollect was there any discussion about Mr Gilmartin and doing his own messages or giving something to Fianna Fáil?

A. No.

Q. Do you know anything about this document?

A. No.

Q. Do you know how it comes to be among your documents?

A. Obviously it was on the back of what I was taking as my message of the telephone conversation.

Q. Is it your belief, Mr Flynn, that when you came to make the notation in relation to Mr Gilmartin on the 3rd October 1998, this advice or note was already on the other side of the page?

A. I don't know

Q. So can you tell me in terms of date order which note[. . .] was created first?

A. I cannot.

Q. Can you assist the Tribunal at all in relation to the material that is contained on the reverse of the page dealing with Fianna Fáil and Mr Gilmartin and a mediator?

A. No, I didn't write it.

Q. Was there ever a suggestion made, Mr Flynn, or floated at any stage that you would dispose of the IR£50,000 by returning it to Fianna Fáil or by returning it to Mr Gilmartin?

A. No.

Q. Was there ever any suggestion that a mediator would be appointed and if Mr Gilmartin wouldn't accept that, then have it donated to charity?

A. No.

Q. Do you agree that it's likely that the subject matter of this discussion or note is the IR£50,000 that Mr Gilmartin . . .

A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know?

A. No.

Q. But do you not agree that it's likely? Because do you agree first of all, that part of the subject matter of this must be about money?

A. Obviously.

Q. Because what is being discussed there is having something donated to charity, isn't that right?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And the only thing that you, business you had with Mr Gilmartin involving money related to the £50,000, isn't that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And isn't it likely that what this is, is a note or advice by somebody to you as to what you should do with the IR£50,000 in the light of the publication of all the material in the newspapers?

A. I can't say.

Q. Isn't it likely, Mr Flynn?

A. I can't speculate.'

50.83 Mr Flynn was then asked if he recognised the handwriting in the note. Mr Flynn responded: 'It's not mine. It may be my wife's. I cannot say yes or no to that'. And Mr Flynn added: 'But it's certainly not mine. That's not my style.'

50.84 Mr Flynn was also asked, later in his evidence, did he recognise the handwriting as that of his wife, to which he responded: 'I think it might be, yes', and added: 'I can't say for sure.'

50.85 Mr Flynn then said that he doubted that his wife would have been in a position to assist the Tribunal in relation to the document, but was unable to say why she could not assist.

50.86 This note, on its face, appeared to corroborate Mr Gilmartin's assertion that at some point between 20 September and 1 October 1998, Mr Flynn had suggested to Mr Gilmartin that he take back the IR£50,000 and that Mr Gilmartin had declined to do so.

50.87 The Tribunal did not accept Mr Flynn's evidence that he had no knowledge of this note and that he could not definitively identify its author. The Tribunal believed that Mr Flynn knew perfectly well the identity of the author of this note.

THE LONDON FUNDRAISER

51.01 On 23 November 1989, a Fianna Fáil fundraising event took place in the Reform Club in London, attended by, amongst others, Mr Flynn and Mr Bertie Ahern, both Government ministers.

51.02 Prior to the event, Mr Flynn had telephoned Mr Gilmartin and they met by arrangement on the evening of the fundraiser.

51.03 Mr Dadley of Arlington Plc told the Tribunal that he attended the fundraising event at the Reform Club at Mr Flynn's request. Mr Dadley spoke at the event in support of investing in Ireland. It was his understanding that the event was designed to promote investment in Ireland, and he was unaware that it was in fact a fundraising event for the Fianna Fáil Party.

51.04 Mr Dadley told the Tribunal that in the course of the event, Mr Flynn asked him for a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party. More specifically, he asked Mr Dadley for a donation 'for the boys' in reference to the Fianna Fáil Party. Mr Dadley said he was offended by this request and, following a brief discussion with his colleagues and fellow Arlington executive Mr Mould, rejected the request.

51.05 Mr Flynn acknowledged that he requested a donation for the Fianna Fáil Party from Mr Dadley. He believed that this was the first occasion in his political life, save church gate-type collections, that he had requested a political donation for the Fianna Fáil Party from an individual. He acknowledged also that he may have used the words ‘for the boys’ when making the request of Mr Dadley.

51.06 On day 466, Mr Donal O’Donnell SC, Counsel for Mr Gilmartin, put the following suggestion to Mr Dadley: ‘Mr Dadley, whatever the precise sequence of events, was it your impression that the warmth of the welcome somewhat dimmed after Arlington had been unwilling to respond to Mr Flynn’s request?’ To this Mr Dadley responded: ‘Dimmed, I would not use. Terminated would probably be better.’

Dear Mr. Redmond

Re: Motorway Facilities

I was very pleased to have the opportunity of meeting you and I would like to thank you for your advice and assistance.

I have instructed the consulting engineers to liaise with the UK Road Engineering experts that I have retained for advice regarding the provision of motorway facilities with particular emphasis on complying with safety and international road engineering standards.

We are compiling a selection of aerial and photographic views to outline specific examples of the appropriate entrance and exit designs. The construction engineers will prepare a sketch layout showing our suggestion for consideration by yourself and your Road Engineering colleagues in the Council to further the exploratory discussions.

We fully accept and note the point raised, that your Council acts as an agent for the Department of the Environment, Roads Division in overseeing the construction of the Motorway and National Primary Road schemes.

We believe if agreement can be reached, that our proposal for a business park and motorway service at the Palmerstown/Rowlagh location would bring much needed investment to the area.

We hope to be in a position to seek a further meeting with yourself and your colleagues in the Roads Department to discuss our proposal further. I will contact your secretary in due course to arrange a date and time suitable to your itinerary.

Yours sincerely,

Tom Gilmartin

Alleged Planning Permission irregularities

Note 2

At 2.30 pm on Friday 3 March, 1989 the Minister asked me to join him in his office where the Minister for the Environment, Mr. P. Flynn was already present and had been shown Garda report dated 27 February.

Mr. Flynn said that he had come into possession of some further information that was related to the Garda investigation. At 1.15 pm on Tuesday 28 February he had met at their request, Mr. Frank Feely, the City and County Manager and Mr. S. Haughey, Asst. City and County Manager, who told him the following.

On the previous Thursday or Friday (23 or 24 Feb) - the Minister was not sure which day - a Mr T.P. Gilmartin had come to see them (this is the same Mr. Gilmartin mentioned at the meeting on 2 March with the Taoiseach). Mr. Gilmartin told them that he was interested in property development in Dublin but that irregular propositions has been put to him in connection with certain planning procedures that he had to go through. Large sums of money "up front" were requested as a consideration for giving him whatever approval he needed. Gilmartin named two people who were alleged to be involved in these transactions - Mr. George Redmond, Asst. Manager with responsibility for Co. Council matters and Deputy Liam Lawlor. He also said that certain other Co. Councillors were involved and Councillor Finbar Hanrahan was named as one. Gilmartin said that the amounts of money requested were vast. There was a mention of payment of £5 million and also a reference to "£100,000 per man". Gilmartin was "frightened" by the extent to the corruption he was confronting and decided to tell his story to the authorities [Minister Flynn said that Gilmartin was a tough principled man - as a wealthy Irishman living in England he had been pressurised by the PIRA to contribute to their funds and he had resolutely refused].

Minister Flynn was concerned about what he should say to Mr. Feely who was, in turn anxious about what action (if any) he should take in relation to Mr. Redmond. He was advised that the whole affair required thorough investigation that this could be done only by the Gardai, that the Garda investigation was already underway and that the additional information he had provided would be immediately conveyed to the Gardai. There was danger that any premature confrontation with Mr. Redmond or any of the other persons named would be contrary to the interest of the Garda investigation. Minister Flynn said that he could get the address and phone number of Mr. Gilmartin - this would help the Garda enquiry [T.P. Gilmartin, 20 White Hill Avenue, Luton, Phone ~~0582-25640~~].

The Garda Commissioner called to my office at 4 pm approx., at my request, and I gave him all information referred to above. He appreciated the importance of proceeding quickly with the investigation and undertook to keep me informed of all significant developments. He was very definitive in his view that any approach to Mr. Redmond at this stage would frustrate Garda enquiries and I confirmed with the Note of responses made by Mr. T. P. Gilmartin, 20 White Hill Avenue, Luton (Tel. 0582 25846) in course of conversation on telephone with Chief Superintendent Hugh Sreenan on Saturday, 4th March, 1989.

Saturday, 4th March, 1989 - 3.12 p.m.

Chief Superintendent Sreenan telephoned Mr. Gilmartin and explained purpose of his call.

Mr. Gilmartin.

" I don't know if I want to get involved in that. A number of things have gone on. A lot of things have happened. I won't be over there until sometime later on. Obviously I did not want to really get involved in what was going on. As I saw it I could go away without doing anything. I was involved in something and if I failed after going in with my eyes open then that was my fault but if I had to fail because of dubious tricks being pulled, then I felt I should do something about it. I would not really want to get involved in things that have been going on for years.

They are not as naive over there as not to realise at this point in time what is going on. If you go out to the west side of Dublin that is where you will get to know all about it. I don't know that I want to become involved. I do not know that I could help in terms of providing any evidence. I am pretty well tied up all next week here even if you were to come over. I have meetings in London all of Tuesday and Wednesday and other things to attend to.

There are a number of people around Dublin complaining bitterly about things that are going on. Why are they not doing something about it? No way was I going to walk away and lose myself a substantial sum of money without saying what was going on.

It was because of the current so called boom in Dublin that I got involved. I got in on the Bachelor's Walk project. I formed a joint venture with Arlington Securities in this project. Then came the question of a development on the west side of Dublin and I was asked to have a look at it. I began to run up against problems motivated by greed or worse than that in a contract involving the City and Council. Land disappeared. We had agreed a contract on a substantial chunk of land and it was withdrawn. They would not deal. There were some dirty tricks being pulled. There were people I was not prepared to talk to. People in authority were trying to put the screws on for money.

I have resolved the land problem for the moment. Proving anything would be very difficult for me except that I lined up meetings and taped what was happening. One guy is more subtle than all the rest - saying one thing to my face and something else behind my back.

There was no point in walking away losing a lot of money due to dirty tricks. I'm not complaining because of opposition, genuine opposition. If I'm in I deal straight and will not bribe or corrupt.

I was involved on the west side of Dublin and in Dublin City. Things are going on absolutely on a very wide scale. I'm an emigrant myself, arrived here in the 1950's and took the opportunities. I'm from Lissadell in north Sligo and I go back there to visit my sister. There are thousands of young people still coming over here and they won't go back because they say there is no hope there. I felt the time was ripe with the so called property boom in Dublin. I risked a hell of a lot of money in Bachelor's Walk. Arlington Securities only wanted to come in when I had got it going. There is a one hundred and fifty million pound investment there and when that was under way the other development, in the middle of Clondalkin/Palmerstown, came up. This will lift that area for all time. There is a hell of a risk there but I knew that. I was prepared to ride along with it until they began to take the feet from under me without a chance. I was told 'if this goes you are making a lot and pay up or else we will make it f - ing difficult'. To prove that land disappeared would be difficult but that was what happened to me.

I avoid publicity like the plague and do not want to be involved in anything which would bring me into it.

There is one particular gentleman. One or two others in positions of power told me to keep quiet. I decided that before I would disappear I would do something about it.

The site in Clondalkin was zoned for retail to build something here. I had a look at it and there were major road problems. I told them it was in the wrong place and could not work. It would be a slum. I thought, if I were to do anything there, where would I do it. I moved to another spot, about 500 yards away and near the west link road, and decided that's where it should be. I set about seeing if I could make it work. I got a terrific response from major international traders. The Clondalkin site had in the meantime been sold to Gubay and he would not go in on it either. O'Callaghan from Cork was then trying to do one in Lucan but he ran up against my problems. His architect and agent persuaded him to get involved in Clondalkin and then he heard of my one. I was told by the Ministers that the Government would want my scheme. The other one was zoned for retail. It was suggested that over.....

It was suggested that

I and O'Callaghan should get together. We met and he agreed that his was a mistake. He had paid a deposit and there was no way that he could make it work and he did not know what to do. We agreed to work together and if mine was a success I would see he would be reimbursed and and if mine failed he could go ahead with his own then. A meeting was called and there was an announcement to the Managers that O'Callaghan and I were getting together so the conflict was gone. The development to go ahead was to be mine. One of the Managers came out - he had taken mine all along as a joke and he realised now it was a goer. He rang some people with vested interests and informed them of the possibility of making money. They, in turn, started pulling strokes. It was delicate because of the deal with O'Callaghan. The land was not worth more than ten grand an acre but I paid over forty grand an acre. There was a great risk to me but because I already owned some of the land the worst I felt I could do was to get my money back. This Manager started putting out rumours that I was doing a cosy deal and the Corporation were forced to withdraw land. I was not aware at the time why this was happening. Completely apart from that fellows were trying to hold me to ransom. I lost the land vital to the whole thing. I had land which I had bought from Bruton, Sharpe and others but I could not get in or out of there.

This was going to be a major retail, such as D I Y warehousing, with a major business park and a leisure development. It would create 10,000 jobs. It would cover 180 acres. Nothing like it has been seen before in Ireland. It would solve the problems of the area for ever. It rattled me that this should happen. I was told long before the Corporation pulled out that it was going to happen. O'Callaghan was told by some of the boys that the Manager had 'phoned people. He is the Co. Council Manager. He has been involved in lots of things.

I had no problem at all of that kind in Bachelor's Walk. The only one thing was a press report which put up the price of some of the properties which we had not finalised at the time. Arlington Securities are not street wise as far as deals in Dublin are concerned. I was dealing with Paddy Morrissey, Sean Haughey and others and they have assisted and so have the Ministers, who were anxious to get investment in. Many others, Abbey and so on, were pulling out at the time I decided to go in.

I must say that in one way I'm happy with your call. I took a risk and was not sure about what I was doing but it reassures me that the people I decided to trust are genuine and are anxious to have things done right. I was beginning to wonder where it might end.

That gentleman is at this for years but it will be very difficult to pin

nothing. He is retiring in June. He is one of the king-pins but the circle extends to a lot of elected members. I called one gentleman a gangster and said that the mafia paled by comparison with them. He told me that was dangerous talk and that a person could find himself in the Liffey for saying something like that. I took that to be a threat.

I will be in Dublin probably on Tuesday week. There are people whom I would like to see - the people I have already talked to there - and I would like to think this whole thing over, but I will contact you. If it came to a Court case it would be difficult to prove and I don't know that I want to get involved. There are things going on over there in the news at the moment about a certain representative but I bet they will all come out whiter than white. I can tell you that they are not even the tip of the iceberg as far as that person is concerned.

I'm in a delicate situation. From one point of view it could be seen to be in my interest to expose all and to be only an act on my part to get what I am looking for. From the other point of view the thing is only beginning and if I go ahead it can only get worse. I am not concerned with genuine objections to my plans. I know, for instance, that the Planning Manager, Mr. Prendergast, is entirely opposed to my development but I also know that this is a genuine belief on his part as it is contrary to the overall plan already adopted for the area and it is up to me to prove that my proposals have merit if I am to succeed.

I believe in the country and would like to do what I can. I'm in the business of trying to make money but apart from that I would like to do something to help stem the flow of young people. I visited my sister in the village of Dromahair the week before last and heard that three hundred young people have left the area. Soon all that will be left will be old people and children. To have this continue will only ruin the country.

I have you telephone No. and I will contact you the week after next."

Draft Letter

Mr. Pdraig Flynn T.D.,
Minister for the Environment,
Department of the Environment,
Custom House,
Dublin 1.

Re: Neilstown/Rowlagh Area Outside Clondalkin

Dear Minister,

I am writing to inform you of a very major project I have been progressing for the above area, as shown on the enclosed drawing. The Neilstown/Rowlagh area has in excess of 5,000 mainly Local Authority (Dublin Corporation) houses and very little other facilities. The project I am proposing incorporates a major retail participation and the bulk of the land ownership is held by Dublin Corporation and Dublin County Council. We have had preliminary discussions with the appropriate personnel in the relevant departments, at administration, technical and land acquisition levels.

We are preparing a brochure on the project and would welcome the opportunity of meeting with you week commencing 25th September to outline in detail our proposals.

- Total Estimated Capital Investment in the West Centre would be EX
- Providing during construction X Jobs
- When Centre is fully operational X Jobs

There would also be substantial job creation spin-off from manufacturers and suppliers to the various outlets in the project's new centre.

I will contact your private secretary to arrange a meeting and look forward to the opportunity of outlining in detail the proposed project.

Yours etc

MEMORANDUM

To: Mr. Edward Lyons Date 4th November, 1988.
From: Owen O'Callaghan Ref. Clondalkin

Subject: Notes on meetings with:- Liam Lawlor;
Robin Cherry and Finbarr Hanrahan

Liam Lawlor

I met with Liam Lawlor on Wednesday last. Lawlor told me that Flynn and MacSharry asked him to look after Gilmartin and would have preferred if nothing happened on the Clondalkin site and was under the impression, like everybody else, that the site was going nowhere. Lawlor is quite confident that Gilmartin will get his permission but that we are in the driving seat for the time being. He also feels that the provision of the road is essential to our scheme and suggested that we write to Paddy Morrissey or George Redmond immediately to establish the situation with the road. I am not sure whether Lawlor is trying to be helpful to us or just looking for information. Lawlor suggested that a meeting be arranged between Gilmartin and myself.

Robin Cherry

I met Robin Cherry in Limerick yesterday and discussed Clondalkin with him. He confirmed that Quinnsworth have an option on the best located unit in Tallaght and had already paid quite an amount of money to Monaghan and were not going to progress any further with Monaghan until he had a second anchor in place. He felt this would be difficult as Quinnsworth had tied up the best location.

Building Companies: - Riga Limited - Tulovin Housing Limited.
Directors: J.J. O'Callaghan B.E., M.Eng.Sc., A. Lacey (Secretary), Owen O'Callaghan F.O.B.I.

On Blanchardstown - he felt that the scheme was too large and too costly and will never get off the ground. However, he felt that with regard to Clondalkin, Quinnsworth would sit on the fence and wait. His own feeling was that Clondalkin was a good scheme because it was basically a practical scheme but he emphasised that the provision of the road was essential.

Finbarr Hanrahan (Dublin County Councillor)

I spoke to Finbarr Hanrahan this morning in Cork. Finbarr was our main supporter in Lucan and it was he who told me about the Gilmartin site some three months ago. As you know Gilmartin has an option on this site which is owned by Paul Sharpe. The land was zoned industrial and is now zoned residential. Dublin County Councillors put a section 4 through instructing Dublin County Council officials to give Gilmartin an entrance onto the Galway road. The County Manager refused to carry out this instruction and the High Court ruled against him some months ago. The case is now with the Supreme Court and a decision will be made on Tuesday next 8th November. Hanrahan is confident the decision will be in favour of Gilmartin and the Councillors. All Gilmartin has then to do is get a change of use to retail. This site is obviously a better location than Clondalkin.

Sharky's Accountant, Jerry McEvoy, rang me this morning to know if I was prepared to have a meeting with Sharky.

I feel it is essential that Ambrose and yourself, and myself if necessary, open initial discussions with Redmond and Morrissey on:

- (a) the road
- (b) the Gilmartin situation.

Please ring me when you get this fax.

SOLICITORS,

CORK.

23 February 1989: T.K made allegations to S.H. in the course of an interview, concerning LL, Cllr. H & G.R., S.H informed C/M/ who asked him to arrange interview with T.K.

24 February 1989: C/M interviewed T.K with S.H + H.N.

T.K alleged that L.L said he was commissioned by the Government to look after the 'Arlington' site. He asked for a 5% interest. T.K responded by calling LL a gangster. L.L said men had ended up in the Liffey for less. Shortly after to T.K's surprise, LL walked into a meeting of Arlington in London. T.K had mentioned the meeting in his earlier conversation with L.L.. At the London meeting LL again said he was commissioned by the Govt. + asked to be compensated. Arlington, against T.Ks advice told T.K to pay LL £3,500 p. month. He did so, the cheques not being made payable to LL except in one case, when the cheque was issued by Mr. S, a bank manager friend.

T.K also said that LL had asked for £5 mill to be paid into a bank account in the Isle of Man, in respect of his support for a development which TK proposed at Irishtown, which development would represent a material contravention of the County Plan.

T.K also said LL had bought a Mercedes car from a Mr. B in Lucan, but had left the vendor short by £20,000 saying this was due in respect of services rendered in relation to a permission obtained giving access for a garage to the new road.

TK said LL got a payment in respect of a permission for a 'Mc Donalds' at Palmerstown.

T.K said that S.W who was innocent of any wrongdoing, gave him the names of 8 members of C.C. who would be involved in any material contravention vote for the Irishtown lands. He (T.K) met four of them. Cllr. H asked for £100,000 in a brown paper bag - notes - no cheques. The other three, whose names he did not recall took a similar line. He did not meet the other four, feeling he might he expected to pay such money to 40 members.

TK said G.R was opposing his development at Irishtown for the wrong reasons. Within one hour of a meeting of Managers with Government Ministers. [We did not confirm whether there had been such a meeting] Mr G.R had told Mr Sha that the Minister had said that Mr K had bought out Mr. OC. [Mr. Sha owns land adjacent to Mr OCs]. Mr K said Mr. R was a friend of Mr Sha.

T.K said a recent announcement by J.C that the Blanchardstown Centre was going ahead was to stymie T.K. He felt G.R advised J.C, who he believed was going to employ G.R when he retired shortly. He also felt G.R had informed PM. to go back on an agreement concerning price for Corp Lands at Irishtown.

T.K. said G.R had received payment in respect of a permission for a Mc Donalds in Palmerstown. In the Mr B case mentioned earlier Mr K said when LL said he was holding back money in respect of the car, Mr B responded that he had already paid

Mr. G.R. He T.K also alleged that concessions were made in relation to roads at Blanchardstown, by G.R, which the Council would not normally make.

The allegations against G.R were not substantiated in any way by reference to source or otherwise [except in the case of the alleged passing of information to Mr Sha., in which case TK mentioned the name of a person ' phoned by Mr. Sha] although C/M asked TK for sources.

T.K said he met G.R + told him he 'would see him all right if the permission went through. G.R said there was 'no need for that'. T.K said he wanted to stress that G.R never demanded money and never made any improper suggestion to him. He also said that S.H, P.M whom he had met were absolutely honest as were J.P and C/M whom he had not met but he knew this from all he had heard. He had told this to the Min.

T.K said he had give much if not all of the information given to SH + C/M to the Minister recently

C/M told T.K. they could not tolerate any improper conduct of which they had notice in dealings on property or permissions and advised T.K. that if at any time he felt he was being improperly dealt with, he should come to C/M about it.

On the afternoon of Fri. 24th C/M appraised J.P of the allegations + asked him to examine the files concerned.

Note of telephone conversation with Mr. TP Gilmartin on 9th of March 1989 at 10.20 am.

I am probably responsible for the current boom in Dublin. I went in when everyone pulled out. I did not plan on running into this problem. Did not expect to get involved in this. I'm to go over there next week. Some cover their tracks very well. Nothing tangible. Have to be taped in order to do something with them. People walk away from investing. Does not rub off too good. Enough problems as Irish here can get institutions downed due to bad propaganda. You are scuttled with this.

I have arranged for a meeting with certain political people next week who obviously want to encourage me to keep going. Also encouraged to keep my mouth shut in certain political quarters. They don't want a scandal and wouldn't want to distance themselves. Only a few people involved. Only a few people involved playing games, but would not know. Quite frankly there is a need for a couple of undercover people to do a job.

I have a deal tied up. There was a hell of a risk. Something extraordinary for the west side of Dublin and it is a winner. Could be looked at that I am doing this for selfish reasons. If this is to be done there is a question of fair play and not for it to be stopped because of gangsters. Talk of the General. These fellows make him look like a monk. I am sitting here and I do what I have been doing for the past 30 years. No high profile. I deal straight, I am not motivated by money. My hesitancy is not that I don't want "effers" put where they belong. Went for a drive around the area with Bank Manager, Blanchardstown. Started off from social rather than financial view. Bachelors - in a shambles. The bank manager said "you have got to be mad, touch nothing in there". I asked him to stop the car. He told me I was mad. I said "I would build the whole area - one block if not two". He told his wife that time he felt that I was gone crackers. I came back a week later with money and he knew that I was serious. Then Arlington came in on it. They took the risk out for me and we done a deal to build it.

There is money being paid to one fellow who threatened that if the investment was to get off the ground he is getting three and a half grand per month, blackmail money. Arlington got scared and I opposed and refused and told the government he was a gangster. He walked into Arlington and put a proposition on the table a year ago and since June 1988 has been getting his payoff. He wanted 5 million in an offshore account, then a 10% stake in Bachelors Walk deal or it might not get off the ground, and he was supposed to be speaking on behalf of the government. He came to us on the basis the government had instructed him to help get the deal done. I only met him about a year ago.

When offered the Clondalkin site by the Corporation I went out with the chief valuer and he showed me the site and told me the price of the site. I said "I would not touch it". I worked out the figures to see if it was commercial. I checked around and came back, could not make it work. The development was in the wrong place. I said I would not do a development here as it was only a slum, and would add and not take from it. I decided to have a look around to see where I would pick. I decided on a site in Palmerstown. It would have to be something big and special, and I put out feelers in London and internationally and was amazed at the response. I spoke to Paul Sheeran, Bank Manager from Blanchardstown, a friend rather than a business relationship, and I asked who owned the land along the Galway Road. Fassnidge a customer, had got planning permission at that time. He had a word with Fassnidge. He knew of Bruton & Company, Sharpe who had planning permission for homes but had problems - the guy that knew was a TD for the area, said "I will have a word with him". Asked to meet this gent in Deadman's Inn at 6 pm. We went out to meet him. I told him of my interest. Five minutes after he said "Gilmartin, Gilmartin you are the man who has set up the deal in Bachelors Walk. The government has instructed me to take care of you and get that deal into Dublin." He only wanted to know of the deal in Bachelors Walk. Said he was chairman of various groups, said "I want to meet you tomorrow". I decided then to find out myself and I went to Des Bruton - he has land at the corner of the Western Parkway on the Galway Road. He was not interested in selling his home place. I contacted him again and he had a chat with his wife in the meantime. They were interested in a stud farm but not at present in a position to buy it. I agreed a deal subject to planning permission and the stud farm coming on the market. That and another, Keane and Conways came on the market and I bought Conway's from him and got the land. Sharpe was in trouble over two houses - was under pressure from the bank. He agreed a deal and I bought his 60 acres. I started to assemble the site. The chance of planning was a risk. Alan Goubay then bought the Clondalkin site from the Corporation. Goubay realised he could not make it work. He was pulling out and O'Callaghan of Cork came in and he had plenty of problems with that too.

I gave the TD back the deal and told him that Arlington were going to do a deal and had a meeting lined up. I met him the following day and he put the bite on. I had told him of the Arlington meeting the following week to report progress. Then he put the bite on. He mentioned massive figures if the thing was to get off the ground. He might get it off in two years or earlier if we complied. I refused. I asked him if the government knew. He said "you can F-ing tell them if you like". I did not want to start bringing it up at the Arlington meeting. Out of the blue he had walked in and said I had asked him to come.

He then turned and pleaded with the meeting. He began to talk possibilities and then put the squeeze on them. He blatantly told lies in front of me. I was amazed. The managing director and retail director of Arlington, and when he went off they asked what is all this about? I said "money". Raymond Moulder said "we are in for millions can he stop us?" After I left to think about it, and the friend was waiting outside. He suggested a cup of coffee I said that I don't know what does Arlington think of this and think of me. He said "don't mind, take me on board and I'll steer through this and that and if not they may never get on". I left and the next I knew was that he wanted 5% and so much in the Isle of Man and eventually there was an agreed retainer of 3 ½ grand per month. That's paid through me, treating it as a consultancy. They said "you have a joint venture with us and already being paid on a consultancy, and for an easy life give him a consultancy fee to keep him quiet". I said "I'm sorry I did not know anything like this". The demand in my deal is 20% or else, and he is not getting it.

I had to meet the Belgard committee on material contravention. I had to meet with Sean Walsh, Chairman. Met Sean Walsh in the Dail - he felt it was fantastic. He is fair. Sean Walsh gave me a list of names of elected members that would have to be filled in and be aware of what it is about. Warning that because of Clondalkin site being sold to Goubay I would have a fair fight on my hands but should see it through because of the scale. Suggested I should talk to Mr. Goubay. Mr. O'Callaghan had then come in. He had an awful struggle. He approached me saying I am in for so much. I said there is enough for us if it comes off the ground. O'Callaghan to come in joint but the scale frightened him. We came to an agreement. I would underwrite his cost in the site on Clondalkin. The site is dead at the moment. Once that happened alarm bells went up with the crooks. The Taoiseach called a meeting and the Minister for the Environment announced that the Clondalkin deal was not going ahead and they wanted mine given every chance. One of the County managers came out and contacted persons who had vested interests. The other gent was always there organising meetings with people and with Ministers. One might ask what had he got to do? Told no real involvement. Told me to distance myself from that gent. Told he is not speaking on behalf of the government. Told his attention was peculiar. The Minister said "I can well imagine what is happening here". Sean Walsh said he would like to see it work. Marked out names to fill in and explained what it was all about and if I had a brochure. I organised meetings and probably met twelve out of seventy eight. Met two or three and it was "bingo" every time. Brown paper bag with £100,000 each time. Did not meet the rest. I rang some and said sorry I could not make their meeting. I told this to the Minister and he said if it goes on the deal was not worth doing. I did not mention names as it became an embarrassment for the government. When during stroke pulling a week ago. I could put the whole thing together. Did lose my rag, said there was nothing here but a shower of gangsters. I don't have to do this. The valuer announced that the deal was not on and thought I was going to hit him. The valuer was embarrassed. I knew already, having got a ring from Cork. I knew what I was going to hear. I decided that day - having the whole load of consultants, designers for various meetings - one man from the county council set me up to look stupid. Getting planning permission in Blanchardstown - don't want to go for material contravention as the deal is not worth that. Told yesterday in London by professional people, architects, that the screws were put in for £100,000. That I will give you if I can prove it is correct. Quantity surveyors if they are going to get the deal off the ground. The guy involved - I would like to know more of him if he is gilding the lily or making a true statement. The deal is off in England have shut base in Ireland".

 Note of telephone conversation with Mr. T.P. Gilmore on 9th March, 1989 at 10.20am.

I am probably responsible for the current issue in Dublin, I went in when everyone pulled out. I did not plan on running into this problem - did not expect to get involved in this. I'm to go over there next week. Some cover their tracks very well, nothing tangible. Have to be kept in order to do something with them. People will walk away from investing. Does not rub off too good.

Enough problems as Irish here. Can get restrictions downed due to poor propaganda. You are scuttled with this.

I have arranged for a meeting with certain political people next week who obviously want to encourage me to keep going. Also encourages to keep my mouth shut in certain political quotes. They don't want a scandal and wouldn't want to distance themselves. Only a few people involved. Only a few people involved playing games but would not know. Quite frankly there is a need for a couple of undercover people to do a job.

I have a deal tied up - there was a hell of a man - something extraordinary for the west side of Dublin and it is a winner. Could be looked at that I am doing this for a selfish reason. If this is to be done there is a question of fair play and not for it to be stopped because of gangsters. Talk of the General - those fellows make him look like a monk. I am sitting here and I do what I have been doing for the past thirty years. No high profile. Ideal strength. I am not motivated by money, my hesitancy is not that I don't want offers, but where they belong. Went for a drive around the area with bank manager - Blanchardstown - started off from a social rather than financial view. Bachelors - in a shanties. The bank Manager said "you have got to be mad - touch nothing in there". I asked him to stop the car. He told me that Jews had. I said "I will build the whole area - one block if not two. He told his wife that time He felt that Jews were crooked. I came back a week later with money and then he knew that Jews serious. Then Arlington came in on it. They took the risk out for me and we done a deal to build it.

There is no money being paid to one fellow who threatened that if the investment was to get off the ground. He is getting three and a half grand per month blackmail money. Arlington got scared and I opposed and refused and told the Government he was a gangster. He walked into Arlington and put a proposition on the table a year ago and since June, 1988 has been getting his pay-off. He has a $5 million in an off-shore account - then a 10% stake in Bachelor's Walk deal or it might not get off the ground and he was supposed to be speaking on behalf of the Government. He came to us on the basis that the Government had instructed him to help to get the deal done. I only met him about a year ago.

When offered the Clondalkin site by the Corporation I went out with the thing Palmer and he showed me the site and told me the price of the site. I said "I would not touch it. I worked out the figures to see if it was commercial. I checked around and came back. Could not make it work. The development was in the wrong place. I said I would not do a development here as it was only a shell and would add and not take from it. I decided to have a look around to see where I would pick. I decided on a site in Palmestown. It would have to be something big and special and I put out feelers to London and internationally and Jews amazed at the response. I spoke to Paul Sheeran, Bank manager in Blackrockstown, a friend rather than a business relationship and I asked who owned the land along the Galway road. Fassnidge, a customer had got planning situation at that time. He had a word with Fessenden. He knew of Benton and Co. - Sharpe who had planning permission for houses but had problems - the guy that knew was a T.D. for the area. Said I'd have a word with him. Asked to meet this guy in the December Inv at Eps. We went out to meet him. I told him of my interest. Five minutes after he said to me, "You are the man who has set up the deal on Bachelor's Walk. The Government has instructed me to take care of you and get that deal into Dublin. The only trouble is to know of the deal in Bachelor's Walk. Said he was Chairman of various groups - said "I want to meet you tomorrow". I decided then to find out myself and I went to see Benton - his land at the corner of the Western Parkway and the Galway road. He was not interested in selling his home place. I contacted him again and he had a chat with his wife in the meantime. They were interested in a deal from but not at present in a position to buy it. I agreed a deal subject to planning permission and the other farm coming on the market. That and another, Kers and Conveys came on the market and I bought Conveys from him and got the land. Sharpe was in trouble over two houses - was under pressure from the bank. He agreed a deal and I bought his two acres. I started to assemble the site. The chance of planning was a risk. Allan Conway then bought the Glendalough site from the Corporation. Conway realised he could not make it work. He was pulling out and O'Callaghan of Land Case was and he had plenty of problems with that too.

 I gave the T.D. back the deal and told him that Arlington were going to do a deal and had a meeting lined up. I met him the following day and he put the bids on. I had told him of the Arlington meeting the following week to report progress. Then he put the bids on. He mentioned massive figures if the thing was to get off the ground. He might get it off in two years or earlier if we complied. I refused. I asked him of the Government knew. He said "you can find out if you like". I did the blue he had worked in and said that I had asked him to come.

 He then turned and pleaded with the meeting. He began to talk possibilities and then put the squeeze on them. He blatantly told us in front of me. I was amazed. The Managing Director and Retail Director of Ardington and when he went off they asked what is all this about. I said "money". Raymond Howler said "we are in for millions, can he sleep us". After I left to think about it and friend was waiting outside. He suggested a cup of coffee.
 I said that I don't know what does Ardington think of this and think of me. He said "don't mind take me on board and I'll start through this and that and if not they may never

ACCOUNT OF MEETINGS WITH MR. SEAN HAUGHEY,
ASSISTANT DUBLIN CITY MANAGER AND MR. FRANK FEELÉY, DUBLIN CITY AND COUNTY MANAGER ON THE 6TH MARCH, 1985.

At 3p.m. Monday the 6th March 1989 with Detective Superintendent Thomas B. Burns I interviewed Mr. Sean Haughey, Assistant Dublin City Manager at his office in Exchange Buildings, Exchange St., Dublin. We told Mr. Haughey that we were investigating allegations of bribery concerning Local Authority Officials and Politicians in their dealings with property developers and in particular allegations made by a Mr. Thomas Gilmartin a property developer based at Luton, England. I outlined some details of a telephone conversation with Mr. Gilmartin and then asked Mr. Haughey if he could help with our enquiries.

Mr. Haughey said he knew and had met Mr. Gilmartin. He first gave us details of functions of senior local government officials in Dublin City and County. At the top was the Dublin City and County Manager Mr. Frank Feeléy who had under him six Assistant Managers with delegated responsibility for specific functions. Mr. Haughey was one of these Assistant Managers with responsibility for Dublin City and other functions such as Fire Service in both City and County.

Mr. George Redmond, Assistant Manager, was responsible for the Dublin County Council area.

Sean Haughey said he had a telephone conversation with Thomas Gilmartin on February the 22nd 1989 during which Mr. Gilmartin complained he was being obstructed in connection with the development of a "Town Centre" Building Project at Irishtown, Clondalki Co. Dublin. Because of what Mr. Gilmartin said he asked Gilmartin to call to his office. On 23rd February 1989 Mr. Haughey met Mr. Gilmartin, ^{AND} later that day a meeting took place between Mr. Gilmartin, Mr. Haughey, Mr. Frank Feely and the Personnel Officer of Dublin Corporation. The meeting lasted three hours. Mr. Feely and Mr. Haughey took notes of what Gilmartin said.

Mr. Haughey informed us that Thomas Gilmartin had been involved initially with the development of a project at Bachelors Walk, Dublin, in conjunction with an English consortium Arlington Investments. During this time Gilmartin looked at a Clondalkin site and was not in favour of the planned location for a major Town Centre Project. He indicated his preference for another site in the area for the Project and commenced to investigate the possibility of developing his preferred site at Irishtown, Clondalkin.

During this time a Company controlled by Albert Gubay arranged to purchase the original site shown to Gilmartin and paid the deposit. This Company later decided against development and a Company controlled by a Mr. Owen O'Callaghan, Property Developer, of Cork bought out Gubay's interest. Subsequent to this Gilmartin and O'Callaghan came to an arrangement regarding the development of Gilmartin's site and the latter arranged to buy out O'Callaghan's interest in the original site.

Mr. Gilmartin said he had dealings with George Redmond, Assistant County Manager regarding the County development but said that Redmond did not appear to take him serious. Mr. Gilmartin said that when he started to develop this site he began to have difficulties in regard to planning and acquiring land and came in contact with Liam Lawlor, T.D. To get planning permission or consent for the alternative Town Centre site a vote of the majority of members of Dublin County Council was necessary. Mr. Lawlor told him that he needed the consent of eight members of Dublin County Council with direct interest in the area in question. Mr. Lawlor put him in touch with eight members of Dublin County Council. He met four of them in Buswells Hotel, Dublin and each demanded £100,000 for support.

Mr. Gilmartin then discontinued the effort.

In connection with the Bachelors Walk Project Mr. Gilmartin told Mr. Haughey that he, Gilmartin, attend a Board Meeting of Arlington Investments the Developers, in London to his surprise Liam Lawlor, T.D., was present, Mr. Lawlor offered his services as a Consultant and in any event Mr. Gilmartin was instructed to pay Lawlor £3,500 per month. This he has continued to do and on one occasion made out a cheque for £3,500 (sought urgently by Lawlor) and payable to Mr. Lawlor personally. Mr. Gilmartin said he had been reimbursed by Arlington.

A general conversation concerning the affair then took place and at 4.30p.m. Mr. Haughey introduced us to Mr. Frank Feely Dublin City and County Manager. Again the entire affair was discussed and Mr. Feely read extracts from the notes he had taken at the meeting on the 23rd February 1989.

Mr. Feely said George Redmond was due to retire on age grounds, i.e. 65 years of age in June 1989 and was at present on holidays, he Mr. Feely was going to the U.S.A. on Thursday the 9th March 1989.

Mr. Feely further stated that Gilmartin had told him of the fact that George Redmond, on his retirement, would be going into employment with a Mr. Corcoran, Principal of Green Properties who were developing in Blanchardstown. Mr. Feely showed us a letter which he had received on that day the 6th March, indicating the interest of this Company in purchasing the lands which Gilmartin is interested in developing at Clondalkin. Mr. Feely thought the timing of the letter to be very significant and was very concerned about it.

Both Mr. Haughey and Mr. Feely recounted an incident told by Gilmartin relating to the purchase of a Mercedes car by Liam Lawlor, T.D., from a Mr. Brady. The agreed price was £40,000. Lawlor sent a man to collect the car who was given £20,000 for Brady. When Brady subsequently asked Lawlor for the balance of £20,000 Lawlor response was that Brady owed him that for a planning approval. Mr. Gilmartin stated that Mr. Brady was very annoyed and had made arrangements to repossess the car when a suitable opportunity would arise.

Mr. Haughey told us that Gilmartin said that in connection with a development concerning a Mr. Fassnidge in the Blanchardstown area Mr. Lawlor had undertaken to get the necessary planning permission in return for a 5% stake in the development.

Allegations of irregularities in the Planning Permission area

On 7th February, 1989 the Minister told me, in the utmost confidence that the Taoiseach had sent for him to put him in the picture about certain allegations about irregularities in obtaining building planning permission, that had come to the Taoiseach's knowledge through the Minister for the Environment, Mr. P. Flynn. I was told that some person or persons (not named to me) has made the allegations to Mr. Flynn that certain planning approvals in the Dublin area had been procured by virtue of the handing over of sums of money to people connected with An Bord Pleanála. The Minister and I agreed that we would ask the Garda Commissioner to come to the Department later in the day to tell him of the allegations and to get the Garda investigation under way. I was occupied at a meeting and on other business for the rest of the morning and when I mentioned the matter to the Minister some time later in the day (or possibly early the following day) he told me that he had already seen the Commissioner about it and that the Garda enquiry had been put in hand.

Garda report dated 27 February, 1989 was shown to the Minister as soon as it arrived in the Department and the Minister conveyed a copy of the report to the Taoiseach either on that day or the next. On 28 February, and 1 March, 1989 the Minister and I were on official business in London.

On 2 March, 1989 I attended a meeting at 3.15 pm called by the Taoiseach in the Taoiseach's office with the Taoiseach, the Minister for Justice and the Attorney General, at which the Garda report was considered. The Taoiseach asked the AG's advice on whether, in view of the serious ramifications of the allegations made, the DPP should be informed - he appreciated that in the normal way the DPP would become involved only when the Gardai had completed their investigation and had prepared a file for presentation to him. The AG said that he would like to consider the matter before deciding but he thought that perhaps the Gardai should see if they could pursue their investigations a bit further before he considered going to the DPP.

I said that I had checked with the Gardai before coming to the meeting and this position as in the report represented the latest state of play. The Gardai considered that none of the people interviewed so far was likely to make a signed statement - they could, apart from any other consideration, leave themselves open to prosecution for being a party to the payment of bribes. The Gardai would now do some more digging to see if any other names or evidence might be uncovered - perhaps some aggrieved person who has not agreed to pay, in response to demands made on him.

The Taoiseach said that he had been apprised of a further name. A Mr. Tom Gilmartin had been making allegations in regard to improprieties in the granting of planning permission. Gilmartin was an Irish man with interests in London in contracting and/or property development and he was also involved in some way with the Arlington Group who were concerned with the development of property on the Dublin Quays. The Taoiseach directed that this name also be passed on to the Gardai and that they be requested to follow up their investigations with Gilmartin and wherever else their enquiries might lead them. The Taoiseach made the point that all that had been learned so far about this whole matter was so far unsubstantiated and it might all turn out to be "a bottle of smoke" - but it was absolutely essential that it be thoroughly investigated to get to the bottom of it.

On my return to my office I phoned the Commissioner to convey the Gilmartin lead to him but he was in Dundalk at the funeral of a Soldier killed while on UNIFIL duty in the Lebanon. I decided to convey the message only personally to the Commissioner. I did this by phone at approx. 9.45 am on 3 March, 1989. I gave him as much information as I had about Gilmartin and the Commissioner seemed to think that the Garda investigation would have no difficulty in tracing him. I asked to be kept informed of all developments.

At 2.30 pm on Friday 3 March 1989 the Minister asked me to join him in his office where the Minister for the Environment, Mr. P. Fyfe, was already present and had been shown Zanda report dated 27 Feb.

Mr. Fyfe said that he had come into possession of some further information that was related to the Zanda investigation. At 1.15 pm on Tuesday 28 Feb. he had met, at their request, Mr. Frank Fox, City and Country planner, and Mr. S. Hamby, Asst. City and Country planner, who told him the following:

On the previous Thursday or Friday (23 or 24 Feb) - the Minister was not sure which day - a Mr. T.P. Gilmartin had come to see them (this was the same Mr. Gilmartin mentioned at the meeting on 2 March with the Treasurer). Mr. Gilmartin told them that he was interested in a property development in Dublin but that irregular proposals had been put to him in connection with certain planning procedures that he had to go through. Large sums of money "up front" were requested as a condition for giving him whatever approvals he needed. Gilmartin named two people who were alleged to be involved in these transactions - Mr. George Boland, Asst. Planner with responsibility for Co. Council matters and Deputy Area Officer. He also said that certain other Co. Councilors were involved and Committee Finance Handbook was named as one. Gilmartin said that the amount of money requested were vast - there was a mention of payment of $5 million and also a reference to

At 2.30 pm on Friday 3 March 1989 the witness asked me to join him in his office where the witness for the Government, Mr. P. Flynn, was already present and had been shown Zanda report dated 27 Feb.

Mr. Flynn said that he had come into possession of some further information that was related to the Zanda investigation. At 1.15 pm on Tuesday 28 Feb. he had met, at their request, Mr. Frank Fealy, City and County Manager, and Mr. S. Hanrahan, Asst. City and County Manager, who told him the following:

On the previous Thursday or Friday (23 or 24 Feb.) - the witness was not sure which day - a Mr. T.P. Gilman had come to see them (this was the same Mr. Gilman mentioned at the meeting on 2 March with the two searchers). Mr. Gilman told them that he was interested in a property development in Dublin but that irregular proposals had been put to him in connection with certain planning procedures that he had to go through. Large sums of money "up front" were requested as a condition for giving him whatever approvals he needed. Gilman named two people who were alleged to be involved in this transaction - Mr. George Boland, Asst. Manager with responsibility for Co. Council matters and Deputy Area Manager. He also said that certain other Co. Councilors were involved and Councillor Finbar Handahan was named as one. Gilman said that the amounts of money requested were vast - there was a mention of payment of £5 million and also a reference to

"£100,000 per man". Gilman was "frightened" by the extent of the conspiracy he was confronting and decided to tell his story to the authorities. [Winston Flynn said that Gilman was a tough, former-soldier man - in a military position during in England he had been persecuted by the P.O.R. in contrast to their funds had he had resolutely refused.]

Winston Flynn was concerned about what ~~what~~ he should say to Mr. Dealy who was, in turn, anxious about what action (if any) he should take in relation to Mr. Redmond. He was advised that the whole affair required thorough investigation that this could be done only by the Gardaí; ~~was~~ that the Gardaí investigation was already underway and that the additional information he had provided would be immediately conveyed to the Gardaí. There was the danger that any premature communication with Mr. Redmond or any of the other persons named would be counter to the interests of the Gardaí investigation.

Winston Flynn said that he could get the address and phone number of Mr. Gilman - this would help the Gardaí enquiry. [T.P. Gilman, 70 White Hill Ave, Luton, Phone 0582-25846]

The Garda Commissioner called to my office at 4 pm approx, at my request, and I gave him all the information referred to above. He appreciated the importance of proceeding quickly with the investigation and undertook to keep me informed of all significant developments. He was very definite in his view that any approach to Mr.

Redmond at the stage would prosecute Zanda enquiries and I conferred with the Minister that Minister Flynn advised to Mr Feely had been not to have any confrontation with Mr Redmond, advise him for the present at any rate.

NOTE OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION WITH MR. T. P. GILMARTIN ON 20TH MARCH, 1989, AT 11.25 A.M.

Chief Superintendent Sreenan telephoned Mr. Gilmartin at 11.25 a.m. on 20th March, 1989, and referred to the fact that Mr. Gilmartin had not contacted him, as arranged, when in Dublin last week.

MR. GILMARTIN

"I was only there for two days. I ran into problems and went from Meeting to Meeting. I had problems with the land there. I had to be back here for St. Patrick's Day.

On this thing, I'm being told by all and sundry that it is not in my interest to open this can of worms up. I'm thinking of pulling out altogether. The thing I've been talking to you about, it's as far as I'm going to take it. I've made my living over here and kept nice and quiet and I think I'll stay that way. It's a waste of time over there. There are too many involved and too much to get involved in. There are too many dirty tricks .

Yes, I did say that at a Meeting over there on Friday. Officially, I'll probably announce it within the next couple of weeks. It's not my problem to clean it up. You can't do anything except that someone has the will and the power to do something about it. There is neither the will nor the power there. The General thinks he is a fly boy but he is way behind some of these fellows.

*(about the effects of withdrawal from West Side Project and the consequences for the unemployed in the area who might have got jobs because of the Project).
Those are forgotten people. I'm not suprised at this now because of what I know. They may be Housebreakers or Criminals but I can excuse them. They are left there as dogs to rot. In fact that is what they have been referred to as by some of the people I've met, dogs. I left Ireland young. Like many others I had a romantic view of Ireland but that is not the case with me now.*

The fellows that brought that (reports of Bribery, etc.) to notice have lived and known of fraudulent deals for the last thirty years. They acted because I made a Complaint and at the same time they are telling me - you won't get anywhere because these fellows are well able to cover their tracks. I can be the villain for them and leave myself open to libel actions, but I am not interested and I am not going to be used. I accept that your interest is genuine but I am not going to let myself in for something that is not my responsibility. I know that I could do it (West Side Project) but there are too many hills to climb.

They are not allegations. They are true but difficult to prove. Yes, I have your Telephone Number and will contact you if I decide to change but you can take it that that's it. There would not be any point in coming over here to me."

The Secretary to the

Dublin 1

Dear Sir,

Dublin City Centre Redevelopment Proposals

I have been actively involved in property development and investment over the course of a number of years in both England and Ireland, concentrating primarily on retail, office and industrial schemes.

During my frequent visits to Dublin I have been very conscious of the general dilapidation of the properties bordering the River Liffey in the City Centre, and I have been looking at ways in which this important land area can be rejuvenated to make a significant contribution as part of the overall city framework.

As a result of these studies I have initiated a major new commercially driven project that will involve the substantial redevelopment of the north bank of the River Liffey within an area bounded by Bachelors Walk, O'Connell Street, Abbey Street, and Liffey Street.

I have discussed these proposals in some detail with the Dublin Corporation and also with the Inner City Development Agency and with the confidence of their wholehearted support I am now pushing strongly ahead with these development proposals which will involve a total investment approaching £100 million, commencing initially with the acquisition of the necessary properties.

In view of the size and nature of the proposals I would now very much like the opportunity of meeting with the Minister of the Environment together with the Minister of Finance in order to fully brief them on my proposals and also to discuss the Government's current and future proposals relating to the incentives available for new investment in this part of the City.

I would be very grateful if you could arrange such a meeting for me and I look forward to hearing from you with suggested times that would be convenient for the two Ministers indicated.

I look forward to discussing this situation further.

Yours faithfully,

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 4 - THE INVOLVEMENT OF MR GILMARTIN, MR O'CALLAGHAN AND OTHERS WITH AIB IN THE PERIOD 1990 TO 1996

INTRODUCTION

1.01 In this Part the Tribunal considered Mr Gilmartin's early dealings with AIB, the circumstances in which Riga (Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Deane) became co-shareholders with Mr Gilmartin and his wife in Barkhill and Barkhill's banking relationship with AIB prior to the involvement of Riga and AIB as shareholders, or putative shareholders, in the company. Certain aspects of these relationships are also considered and further elaborated upon in Parts 5 and 6 (in particular AIB's knowledge of the involvement of Mr Dunlop/Shefran¹ in Quarryvale).

1.02 AIB's involvement with Quarryvale commenced in late 1989 when Mr Gilmartin approached AIB seeking finance to enable him to complete the assembly of the Quarryvale site pending the introduction of an investor/development partner. That involvement continued until early 1998. AIB was a 20 per cent shareholder in Barkhill between 1991 and 1998. In 1998, AIB's 20 per cent share sold for IR£1.5m (a value negotiated downwards from an earlier agreed figure of IR£2m).

1.03 AIB's relationship with Quarryvale (and its main players, Mr Gilmartin and Mr O'Callaghan) was conducted, for the most part, through a small number of its executives and senior staff, whose identities and positions within AIB were as follows:

Mr Edmund (Eddie) Kay: In his capacity as the Senior Manager of Property and Construction in AIB's Corporate Commercial Division, Mr Kay was the Bank Executive who (with Mr Jim Donagh) dealt mostly with Mr Gilmartin/Barkhill between late 1989 and approximately September 1992 (including meeting Mr Gilmartin in London in December 1992)

Mr Michael O'Farrell: In September 1992, Mr O'Farrell was appointed the Senior Manager of Property and Construction in AIB's Corporate and Commercial Division, in succession to Mr Kay, who at that time was transferred to another position within the bank. Mr O'Farrell's involvement with Barkhill Ltd continued from approximately September 1992 until 1996.

Mr James (Jim) Donagh: Mr Donagh held the position of Assistant Manager Corporate Banking Division in AIB, reporting to Mr Kay. His involvement with Barkhill (the company which developed Quarryvale), was within the period 1990 to 1992.

Mr David McGrath: Mr McGrath was an Executive in AIB, and from April 1991, a manager of AIB's Corporate Business in the Retail, Indigenous Manufacturing, Motor and Property and Construction Sections. Mr McGrath's involvement with Barkhill commenced in April 1991. He accompanied Mr Kay to London for the December 1992 meeting with Mr Gilmartin.

Ms Mary Basquille: Ms Basquille was an Account Officer in AIB. She managed the Barkhill file on a day to day basis from September 1992, and was in regular contact with Mr Gilmartin following Mr Kay's transfer to another Division within the bank.

Mr Eamon McElroy: Mr McElroy was the General Manager in AIB's Branch and Corporate Banking Ireland Division. He was the Chairman of the Corporate Banking Credit Committee which approved Barkhill's loan application on 19 January 1990.

Mr Andrew Rogals: Mr Rogals was the Chief Manager in AIB's Business Support Unit. He was a member of the Credit Committee which approved the Barkhill loan application on 19 January 1990.

Mr Barry Pitcher: Mr Pitcher was an Executive in AIB. He was appointed a Director of Barkhill Ltd in 1991, representing the Bank's 20% shareholding in the company. He resigned as a Director of Barkhill in early 1998 when the bank disposed of its 20% shareholding in the company.

MR GILMARTIN'S EARLY DEALINGS WITH AIB

2.01 Mr Gilmartin's initial contact with AIB was through Mr Kay in approximately December 1989 when he sought a short-term loan facility for his company, Barkhill, primarily to enable him to complete the assembly of the Quarryvale site. By this time, Mr Gilmartin had invested approximately IR£4.4m in the project and intended seeking an investor/business partner to assist in its completion.

2.02 At the time of Mr Gilmartin's approach to AIB, the bank had an established banking relationship with Mr O'Callaghan and his companies. Mr Kay had known Mr O'Callaghan since approximately 1983 and was the AIB executive most closely associated with Mr O'Callaghan through his direct involvement in the arrangement of loan facilities for Mr O'Callaghan in his property development business. Mr Kay knew Mr Liam Lawlor from the 1970s/early 1980s from his previous involvement in branch work within AIB. He organised the loan for Mr Lawlor's purchase of lands adjacent to his home in Somerton, Lucan in Co. Dublin in the 1970s.

2.03 Following telephone contact with Mr Gilmartin in December 1989, Mr Kay first met him in person in January 1990 and proceeded to prepare a loan application for presentation to the bank's Credit Committee on 19 January 1990, at a meeting chaired by one of its senior executives, Mr McElroy. This application sought to raise a short-term facility for Barkhill in the sum of IR£9m. By January 1990, Mr Gilmartin had assembled the bulk of the Quarryvale lands but required additional funding to complete some of the purchases, including the Irishtown lands owned by Dublin Corporation. Mr Gilmartin informed Mr Kay that:

- He had invested approximately IR£4.4m of his own money in the project.
- He had loan approval from Irish Intercontinental Bank (IIB). By 2 February 1990 he already owed Bank of Ireland IR£1.2m (initially stated to be IR£1m) in relation to Quarryvale.
- He was actively engaged in seeking an equity partner/investor to assist in the financing of the completion of the Quarryvale project and required a short-term facility from AIB to bridge the gap in time prior to that investment being put in place. Mr Gilmartin maintained that Arlington Plc (with which he was already involved in the Bachelors Walk development) was extremely interested in becoming involved in the Quarryvale project.
- He was confident that Quarryvale would receive tax designation status (as had Bachelors Walk) and this was expected to materialise in the January 1990 budget or soon thereafter.

2.04 Mr Kay told the Tribunal that AIB looked favourably upon Mr Gilmartin's application for a loan facility because, in particular, Mr Gilmartin had already invested a very substantial amount of his own personal money in the project. The bank considered this fact to be the second most important factor in Mr Gilmartin's favour (the most important being the site's location). Other positive aspects from AIB's perspective included Arlington Plc's (the UK company with which Mr Gilmartin was associated in relation to the Bachelor's Walk development) expression of interest in investing IR£10m when planning permission was obtained for Quarryvale and the likelihood of Quarryvale being granted tax designation status in the immediate future.

2.05 Mr Kay presented Barkhill's loan application to AIB's Credit Committee with a positive recommendation. The amount sought was IR£8.5m.

2.06 The documentation presented by Mr Kay to the Bank's Credit Committee recommended that the loan facility be granted to Barkhill subject to four conditions. The third of these four conditions was that there be 'verbal confirmation that Designated Status would be forthcoming. The fourth condition stipulated that the IR£1.325m [sic] payable by Mr Gilmartin to O’Callaghan Properties (in relation to the Neilstown site option agreement) be deferred until ‘Designation is obtained.’

2.07 Mr Kay’s presentation to the Bank’s Credit Committee also included a ‘Risk Profile Summary.’ This document made a number of references to the tax designation status issue, including one paragraph which stated as follows:

Minister of Environment to telephone us to confirm designated status will be obtained for Palmerstown site in the Budget 1990’. (At that time, Mr Pádraig Flynn was the Minister for the Environment).

2.08 The document also provided that certain conditions would be triggered if tax designation status did not materialise. These essentially required Mr Gilmartin to accept an offer of IR£20m from Arlington Plc for the Quarryvale site, and in the event that Arlington Plc withdrew that offer, AIB would then proceed to dispose of the site.

2.09 Somewhat unusually the application to the Credit Committee was withdrawn by it for further consideration over a number of hours before it was acceded to. The Credit Committee’s decision to grant Barkhill the loan facility apparently adopted all but one of the four conditions which had been stipulated in Mr Kay’s recommendation. The deleted condition was the requirement that the relevant Government minister verbally confirm to the bank that tax designation status would be granted to Quarryvale in the forthcoming budget. Mr McElroy, the Chairman of the Credit Committee, told the Tribunal that the delay in the consideration of the application arose because of a degree of dissent amongst the Credit Committee’s members as to whether or not to approve the facility. Another member of the AIB Credit Committee, Mr Andrew Rogals, confirmed to the Tribunal that there was disagreement within the Committee as to the merits of the Barkhill application. He personally was opposed to granting the facility.

2.10 Mr McElroy maintained that the condition requiring verbal confirmation from the appropriate Government department to the effect that tax designation status would be granted to Quarryvale was removed because he ‘did not believe it to be appropriate for the bank to seek such a condition as part of its credit assessment process’. Mr McElroy advised the Tribunal that one of the reasons for his decision to approve the Barkhill facility was ‘the strong written expression of interest to purchase 50% of the site, whether ‘designation’ was or was not changed.’

2.11 It was clear, however, from Mr Kay's evidence that AIB was advised by Mr Gilmartin of his, Mr Gilmartin's, confidence that Quarryvale would be granted tax designation status and that this was a particularly important and compelling consideration for Mr Kay in his assessment (and presumably that of AIB itself) of any risk in the decision to lend money to Barkhill. Mr Gilmartin advised Mr Kay that he had had contact with Mr Padraig Flynn (the Minister for the Environment) and with other members of the Cabinet, in relation to tax designation.

2.12 AIB was in no doubt from the information provided by Mr Gilmartin that tax designation status for Quarryvale was likely to be granted and that the Quarryvale project had the support of the Government. AIB was also aware that Mr Gilmartin's previous development project in Bachelors Walk received tax designation and this fact boosted the bank's confidence that Mr Gilmartin would achieve a similar benefit for the Quarryvale site.

2.13 Mr Kay testified that Mr Gilmartin had told him that he, Mr Gilmartin, would ask Mr Flynn to telephone Mr Kay to confirm that tax designation was forthcoming. The Tribunal was told that Mr Flynn did not telephone Mr Kay in relation to Quarryvale. Mr Kay had felt that it would have been inappropriate for himself (or anyone else in AIB) to contact the Minister directly in order to seek confirmation in relation to the tax designation issue.

2.14 In a letter of clarification from Mr Gilmartin's solicitors to the Tribunal dated 29 November 2006, Mr Gilmartin advised the Tribunal that he had never requested Mr Flynn to confirm anything in relation to tax designation to AIB, as had been suggested in a note in an AIB memorandum dated 19 January 1990 prepared by Mr Kay.

2.15 Nevertheless, even in the absence of this verbal confirmation from Mr Flynn, it appeared that certainly in 1990, and indeed into 1991, AIB continued to have confidence that Mr Gilmartin's expectation that Quarryvale would receive tax designation would ultimately materialise. Mr Kay told the Tribunal that he believed Mr Gilmartin to have been genuine when he assured the bank of his belief that tax designation would be forthcoming, and it was also his belief and understanding that Mr Gilmartin was himself disappointed when this did not ultimately occur.

2.16 Irrespective of whether contact with or from Mr Flynn was anticipated by AIB, it appeared that the bank continued to take an interest in the progress, or otherwise, of the tax designation issue. In a telephone conversation on 2 March 1990, Mr Gilmartin advised Mr Kay that he was 'expecting a call from Minister Flynn to travel to the West to discuss the position with him.' Mr Gilmartin denied that he had made any such statement to Mr Kay or that he had ever made arrangements to travel to the West of Ireland to meet Mr Flynn. However, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Kay's memorandum of that telephone conversation of 2 March 1990 accurately represented what Mr Gilmartin had said to him at that time.

2.17 On 11 April 1990 a memorandum prepared by Mr Kay noted that Mr Gilmartin had told him that he had met Mr Flynn on that day and discussed with Mr Flynn the up-to-date position in relation to Quarryvale. Mr Gilmartin told Mr Kay that Mr Flynn was very positive and told him that he, Mr Gilmartin, would be 'pleasantly surprised within the next three weeks'. Mr Gilmartin testified however that he did not believe this to be a reference to the grant of tax designation status to Quarryvale. According to Mr Kay, Mr Gilmartin had also told him that Mr Flynn had been adamant that Mr Gilmartin should proceed to apply for outline planning permission for Quarryvale and take steps to release the news of the proposed development publicly. Mr Kay understood from this that Mr Flynn had effectively told Mr Gilmartin that the Government would not consider tax designation for Quarryvale until outline planning permission had been granted thus the reality was that the Quarryvale lands would first have to be rezoned for commercial use before any such application could be made with any likelihood of success.

2.18 It was clear from bank documentation provided to the Tribunal that by 29 April 1990 AIB was aware of reports that Green Property Plc was actively seeking tax designation status for its Blanchardstown development site. A newspaper article at that time, a copy of which was on AIB's file, reported that the Minister for the Environment favoured the granting of tax designation to 'another nearby similar project' to Blanchardstown, which Mr Kay understood to be a reference to Quarryvale.

THE PERIOD LEADING UP TO THE HEADS OF TERMS AGREEMENT DATED 14 DECEMBER 1990

3.01 By April/May 1990, AIB was becoming concerned about its exposure in relation to the funding which it advanced to Barkhill. It was disappointed with the progress that Mr Gilmartin appeared to be making in relation to his UK interests. By this time Mr Gilmartin was to have received Stg£1m from his involvement in a development in Milton Keynes. It was also becoming increasingly apparent to AIB that the hoped-for grant of tax designation status to Quarryvale was not as certain as it had previously appeared. Nevertheless, in the early months of 1990 AIB was hopeful that Mr Gilmartin would succeed in finding a suitable partner/investor such as would enable suitable alternative finance to be put in place by the end of August 1990, when the AIB facility to Barkhill fell due for repayment, thus enabling AIB exit its involvement with the project.

3.02 On 26 June 1990, Mr Kay wrote to Mr Gilmartin advising him that the repayment date was drawing closer and that the bank would be calling in its loan at that time in the absence of a definite agreement entered into between Barkhill and a suitable development partner. Mr Kay told the Tribunal that this letter was written because of AIB's impression at that time that Mr Gilmartin had expectations that AIB would permit the loan facility to continue beyond the end of August 1990.

3.03 A public presentation of the Quarryvale project was made by Mr Gilmartin in the Berkeley Court Hotel in Dublin on 5 July 1990. Although Mr Kay did not attend this function, it was his understanding from AIB colleagues who were in attendance that it received a very negative reaction. He had a sense at that time that Mr Gilmartin lacked understanding as to how the retail business operated in Ireland. Mr Kay told the Tribunal that there was considerable adverse media reaction to the launch of the project on that occasion. AIB was by now very concerned about its exposure to the Quarryvale project and of Mr Gilmartin's ability to bring it successfully to fruition.

3.04 In late June or July 1990, Mr Kay and Mr Donagh met Mr Gilmartin in London. Mr Gilmartin's account of this meeting was that he was pressured by the AIB officials to agree to the involvement of Mr O'Callaghan in the Quarryvale project. Mr Kay rejected Mr Gilmartin's evidence that during the meeting his colleague, Mr Donagh, had suggested to Mr Gilmartin that Mr O'Callaghan had better political clout than Mr Gilmartin had. Mr Donagh denied Mr Gilmartin's allegation that at this meeting he, Mr Donagh, was hostile towards Mr Gilmartin or that he had told Mr Gilmartin that he would have to take Mr O'Callaghan on board in relation to the project.

3.05 On 2 August 1990 Mr Gilmartin and Mr Donagh met in AIB's Bankcentre. A memorandum of that meeting was prepared by Mr Donagh in which he noted a number of matters which were discussed between himself and Mr Gilmartin, including Mr Gilmartin's ongoing efforts to find an investor. In the course of this meeting, in that context, Mr Gilmartin referred to options including equity participation by two separate entities. The memorandum also suggested that Mr Gilmartin informed AIB that 'O'Callaghan/Deane have indicated that they would take equity in the project'. Mr Gilmartin denied that this information came from him and suggested that in fact Mr Donagh himself had made the suggestion of Mr O'Callaghan's possible involvement in Quarryvale.

3.06 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he had come under pressure from AIB to involve Mr O’Callaghan as a partner in the Quarryvale project. He said that following his London meeting in June/July with the AIB officials he met with Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane shortly thereafter, also in London. In a letter to AIB on 5 September 1990, Mr Gilmartin advised the bank that Mr O’Callaghan had expressed a keen interest in negotiations regarding a joint venture or other type of involvement in Quarryvale but that Mr O’Callaghan first wanted the payment to him of the sum of IR£1.35m.²

3.07 Mr Deane told the Tribunal that by this date, 5 September 1990, there were tentative discussions underway between Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan on the issue of Mr O’Callaghan becoming involved in Quarryvale. Mr O’Callaghan, however, took issue with his partner Mr Deane in relation to this aspect of Mr Deane’s evidence. Mr O’Callaghan denied having expressed any such interest to Mr Gilmartin prior to 5 September 1990. Mr O’Callaghan speculated that Mr Gilmartin was advising AIB that he was interested simply in order to keep AIB happy.

3.08 Mr O’Callaghan acknowledged that in or about late September/early October 1990, he spoke to a Mr Saunders (an individual identified by Mr Gilmartin as a potential investor in Quarryvale), about a possible involvement on his, Mr O’Callaghan’s part, in Quarryvale, but in circumstances where Mr O’Callaghan was first paid the IR£1.35m due to him.

3.09 A memorandum prepared by Mr Donagh on 19 September 1990, following a telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin, suggested that pressure was mounting on Mr Gilmartin in relation to the Neilstown option agreement and the IR£1.35m that was due to Mr O’Callaghan. Mr Gilmartin at that time advised Mr Donagh that he was engaged in ongoing discussion with third parties in relation to identifying an equity investor for Quarryvale. In a memorandum prepared by Mr Donagh on 27 September 1990, Mr Gilmartin was noted as having indicated to Mr Donagh that his plans to bring in an investor, namely Mr Saunders, were on course and in that event he would then be in a position to pay Mr O’Callaghan the IR£1.35m in relation to the Neilstown option agreement.

3.10 On 28 September 1990, Dublin County Council granted planning permission for a town centre development on the Neilstown site. This fact significantly increased the pressure on Mr Gilmartin to arrive at some compromise with Mr O’Callaghan. Mr O’Callaghan refuted Mr Gilmartin’s allegation that his application for planning permission for the Neilstown site was merely a tactic to put pressure on him to enter into an arrangement with him in relation to Quarryvale and emphasised the fact that Merrygrove Ltd (the company which held the Option on the Neilstown lands) was required to apply for planning permission on the Neilstown site on foot of its contract with Dublin Corporation.

3.11 A memorandum prepared by Mr Donagh, following a meeting on 1 October 1990 between himself and Mr Kay, Mr Saunders and a Mr Kearns, confirmed that Mr Saunders and Mr Kearns would be introducing equity and loans to (a) enable the Quarryvale site assembly to be completed (b) to pay Mr O’Callaghan his IR£1.35m in relation to the Neilstown site and (c) to clear the debt to AIB. Both Mr Saunders and Mr Kearns had confirmed that between them they had up to IR£20m available.³ They also apparently expressed a view that they would consider Mr O’Callaghan’s participation in the project. In evidence, Mr Gilmartin took issue with the suggestion that either of these potential investors might have suggested any involvement of Mr O’Callaghan, as they knew, according to Mr Gilmartin, that he would never have agreed to any such suggestion other than on the basis that Mr O’Callaghan would invest money in the project on a similar basis as any other investor.

3.12 A memorandum written by Mr Kay on 2 October 1990, following a telephone conversation with Mr O’Callaghan noted that Mr O’Callaghan had met with Mr Saunders and Mr Kearns and that Mr O’Callaghan had indicated to them that if he received the outstanding IR£1.35m from Mr Gilmartin he would walk away from the Neilstown site. On that occasion also, Mr O’Callaghan reported to the bank that Mr Saunders and Mr Kearns were prepared to proceed with their equity participation in Quarryvale once certain land issues were resolved. In the course of the telephone call, Mr O’Callaghan advised the bank that he had recently been granted planning permission for the Neilstown site (28 September 1990) and that he was now under pressure from his partner Mr Deane and from members of his professional team to proceed with the development of that site. He further informed the bank that he had a potential anchor tenant for the site. Mr Kay’s memorandum also stated that Mr O’Callaghan had advised Mr Saunders and Mr Kearns that in the event of Mr Gilmartin paying him the IR£1.35m due in respect of the Neilstown site option, he would be willing to participate in the Quarryvale project.

3.13 On 30 October 1990, Mr Kay wrote to Mr Gilmartin stating that the amount outstanding on the loan facility as of 2 November 1990 was a sum in excess of IR£9m. Shortly prior to this letter, on 22 October 1990, a memorandum of a meeting at AIB between Mr Gilmartin, Mr Saunders, Mr Kearns, Mr Kay and Mr Donagh was the first indication that the Saunders/Kearns proposed investment in Quarryvale was running into difficulty. Mr Saunders and Mr Kearns were now suggesting a smaller injection of funds than had previously been the case, and on the basis that a portion of the security that AIB held in relation to the lands in Quarryvale would be released in order to allow them to raise money. This suggestion was unacceptable to the bank, save in respect of one portion of the site.

3.14 On 8 November 1990, Mr O'Callaghan wrote to Mr Gilmartin and informed him that because of Mr Gilmartin's failure to pay him the outstanding IR£1.35m, he now had no choice but to proceed to develop the Neilstown site. In the course of his evidence, Mr O'Callaghan suggested that, possibly, Mr Gilmartin might have telephoned him a couple of days after receiving the letter and reiterated previous promises that the IR£1.35m would be paid shortly.

3.15 In a memorandum prepared by Mr Donagh on 14 November 1990 it was noted that in the course of a telephone conversation with Mr Saunders, the latter had indicated that he was having difficulty in finalising a financing package and he sought a further 28 days from AIB in which to complete the matter. This suggestion was not acceptable to AIB because of outstanding issues in relation to the site assembly at Quarryvale, the payment due to Mr O'Callaghan and AIB's principal debt. Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that at this point (i.e. mid November 1990) he himself was no longer optimistic that Mr Saunders' financing deal would materialise. He blamed this on 'the bank and the O'Callaghan set up'. However, as appeared from a memorandum prepared by Mr Kay on 21 November 1990 (and confirmed by Mr Gilmartin in evidence), Mr Gilmartin was then advising AIB that he was still in negotiation with Mr Saunders and was also in negotiations with other potential partners, including Abbey Gate Properties and Bankers Trust. On that same date, an AIB memorandum noted that Mr Saunders had advised the bank that he was not proceeding with his intended participation in Quarryvale because he had run into difficulty in raising the necessary finance.

3.16 An AIB meeting followed on 23 November 1990. It was attended by Mr Gilmartin, Mr Kay and Mr Donagh. Reference was made in the course of this meeting to the fact that Mr Saunders was unable to raise the necessary finance. The memorandum recorded the following reference to Mr Gilmartin: 'he hopes O'Callaghan will accept half the money due or come in for an equity stake.'

3.17 The memorandum went on to state that AIB's position was that they were dissatisfied with matters as they then were and requested that there be a joint meeting with Mr O'Callaghan to discuss his position and also to ascertain Mr Saunders' exact position in relation to raising finance. At this meeting it was agreed that AIB would meet Mr O'Callaghan in relation to Quarryvale. The memorandum stated, referring to AIB, that: 'we indicated we considered it important that O'Callaghan is now brought in on the overall Barkhill project.'

3.18 A further meeting was held at AIB on 25 November 1990. In attendance were Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Deane, Mr Kay and Mr Donagh. Its purpose was to ascertain Mr O'Callaghan's attitude to the IR£1.35m due to him by Mr Gilmartin in relation to the Neilstown option being deferred in return for his participation in the Quarryvale project. Prior to this meeting, Mr Gilmartin telephoned AIB to say that he was unable to attend but he authorised the bank to discuss Barkhill's affairs with Mr O'Callaghan.

3.19 At this meeting Mr O'Callaghan indicated his intention to proceed with his Neilstown development but agreed to hold off doing so until 30 November 1990 to enable Mr Gilmartin to find the IR£1.35m. Mr O'Callaghan told the bank that he would not be prepared to convert the IR£1.35m debt to him into an equity stake in Quarryvale in circumstances where Mr Gilmartin remained in a controlling position in Barkhill. Mr O'Callaghan was recorded as stating that he did not believe that Mr Gilmartin would come up with the necessary additional equity. According to the memorandum of the meeting, Mr O'Callaghan had conceded that the Quarryvale site was superior to the Neilstown site.

3.20 By 28 November 1990, as confirmed by Mr Kay in evidence, AIB's position was that it intended to take a hard line with Mr Gilmartin. The strategy was to try and arrange for Mr O'Callaghan to take a significant stake in Barkhill and in so doing sideline Mr Gilmartin. AIB had by this time lost confidence in Mr Gilmartin's ability to bring the project to fruition. An AIB memorandum of 23 November 1990 clearly indicated that AIB had by then told Mr Gilmartin that its preferred option was the involvement of Mr O'Callaghan as Mr Gilmartin's development partner. Mr Kay denied, however, that there was any collusion between AIB and Mr O'Callaghan in putting Mr Gilmartin under pressure to enter into some arrangement with Mr O'Callaghan.

3.21 On 4 December 1990, Mr Deane and Mr O'Callaghan telephoned AIB to propose an arrangement which would include O'Callaghan Properties taking an equity stake of 25 per cent in Quarryvale with Mr O'Callaghan and AIB having control of daily decisions in relation to the project. The memorandum of that telephone call noted that Mr Deane and Mr O'Callaghan had confirmed to the bank their belief in the potential of the Quarryvale site and their belief that they could ‘deliver on site rezoning/planning and designation’. The memorandum also suggested that the bank was advised that Mr Gilmartin had confirmed his interest in the proposal and his agreement in principle to Mr O’Callaghan’s participation.

3.22 Mr O’Callaghan confirmed the content of this memorandum but took issue to some extent with the reference to his ability to deliver rezoning/planning and designation. Mr O’Callaghan believed (as did Mr Deane) that what he may have told the bank in fact was his belief that the zoning could be moved from Neilstown to Quarryvale. His evidence was that he would have then intimated that planning would have followed in the ordinary way. He did not believe that he had mentioned tax designation to AIB and he was certain that he did not give any undertaking or promise that he would deliver on that issue. However, the Tribunal was satisfied that the issue of tax designation for Quarryvale was indeed discussed. Asked by the Tribunal to explain how he might ‘deliver’ the rezoning of Quarryvale, Mr O’Callaghan stated that he would commence with the lobbying of all 78 county councillors in the hope that they might be persuaded to support Quarryvale because the Neilstown site was not now going to be developed. Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that at that time he was unaware of the exact procedure for bringing a motion before a County Council meeting, but he was aware that the County Council had to make a decision in relation to the rezoning as part of its review of the County Dublin Development Plan.

3.23 Another AIB memorandum, also dated 4 December 1990, of a telephone call to it from Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane recorded the following:

They [referring to Messrs O’Callaghan and Deane] were worried that they had received no proposals since last week’s meeting. They are really in a jam politically as they have to indicate on Thursday night whether they are proceeding or not. The suggestion has been made that they are ‘stuck in the middle’ of the Dublin ?????? situation and that they are delaying things happening. He now has to provide answers and cannot avoid same any longer.

3.24 The reference to Thursday night in the memorandum was to the Fianna Fáil President’s Dinner. Mr Kay said that he did not know who or what Mr O’Callaghan was referring to when he said he had to indicate whether or not Quarryvale was proceeding by the Thursday night. Mr O’Callaghan explained that he was anxious at the time to be in a position to inform politicians⁴ about the ⁴ Mr O’Callaghan identified Mr Liam Lawlor, Mr Brian Lenihan Snr, Mr Pádraig Flynn and Mr Albert Reynolds as politicians he expected might question him about his plans in West Co. Dublin.

Quarryvale development, as he expected that they would be asking him questions relating to it in the course of the function.

3.25 On 6 December 1990, Mr Kay and Mr Donagh met with Mr McKeon (General Manager of Commercial Banking) to agree on a strategy for the involvement of Messrs O’Callaghan and Deane in Quarryvale. The memorandum of the meeting noted that, inter alia, the ‘objectives’ were that Mr O’Callaghan would get a 25 per cent stake in Barkhill ‘or such other percentage as shall be agreed with Tom Gilmartin’, that Mr O’Callaghan (with Mr Deane) would have a significant involvement in the management of the project and that the rezoning of Quarryvale would be actively pursued by ‘the shareholders’.

3.26 In a note of a telephone conversation with Mr Kay on 6 December 1990, Mr Gilmartin was recorded as anticipating progress in relation to a possible County Council rezoning vote. The memorandum of this telephone conversation recorded Mr Gilmartin stating that ‘a vote will eventually be taken on the 15th January next incorporating the whole draft development plan for Dublin.’⁵ Mr Gilmartin was said to have envisaged that Mr O’Callaghan would inform the County Council within ‘the next few days’ that he was not going ahead with Neilstown, and that that information would then leak out progressively. According to the memorandum, Mr Gilmartin also envisaged that Mr O’Callaghan would hold onto Neilstown but would give a commitment to AIB and Mr Gilmartin not to proceed with its development. In this way, Mr O’Callaghan could reactivate the Neilstown development in the event that Quarryvale was not rezoned.

THE FIRST HEADS OF AGREEMENT DATED 14 DECEMBER 1990

4.01 Mr O’Callaghan’s participation in Quarryvale was effected by means of a ‘Head of Terms Agreement’ which was signed by Mr Gilmartin, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Kay, on 14 December 1990. It provided, inter alia that:

- O’Callaghan Properties would receive a 25 per cent stake in Barkhill in lieu of cash consideration.
- An additional and extended loan facility subject to conditions would be made available by AIB.
- Barkhill’s board of directors would include Mr Gilmartin, Mr O’Callaghan and two (or, if AIB desired, three) representatives of AIB.
- The agreement could be terminated by the payment in full of the outstanding amount to AIB and by the payment of IR£1.35m to O’Callaghan Properties on or before 10 January 1991.
- All the terms to be achieved and a formal agreement to be entered into by 10 January 1991.

⁵ In fact no such vote was scheduled for 15 January 1991. However, there was a deadline for submission of ‘wrap up’ motions of 8 February 1991, later extended to 15 February 1991.

4.02 In his evidence Mr O’Callaghan commented as follows on the agreement: ‘Mr Gilmartin never wanted us involved in Quarryvale. And he agreed to this Agreement only because the banks, I would say insisted on it. We did not want this agreement. We were literally, and I use the word ‘dragged in’ by the banks so you have two people, two groups together who really didn’t want to be in there, but we didn’t seem to have much of [a] choice actually. We were prepared to go ahead with this because we had to now at this particular stage, our Neilstown site had been, if you like, sterilised at this stage. And we wanted to get on with development. And so we had no choice but to go with this. Tom Gilmartin did not adopt that policy I’m afraid.’

4.03 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he was unhappy with the 14 December 1990 agreement but that he felt that he had no choice but to sign it. He claimed that the agreement was worthless as he had been in Luton and did not have the benefit of legal advice when it was signed. It was his belief that he was in his home in Luton on 14 December 1990 when the agreement was finalised and that he signed it and returned it by fax to AIB.

THE PERIOD BETWEEN 14 DECEMBER 1990 AND THE SECOND HEADS OF AGREEMENT DATED 15 FEBRUARY 1991

5.01 Following the signing of the Heads of Agreement on 14 December 1990, Mr Gilmartin continued with his efforts to find an investor for Quarryvale into January 1991. There was some contact between AIB and a Mr McMullen of ‘Sentinel Investments’ in this respect. Under the terms of the 14 December 1990 agreement Mr Gilmartin had the option, in the event that he found an investor, to pay off AIB, to pay the IR£1.35m sum to Mr O’Callaghan on or before 10 January 1991 and in so doing terminate his relationship with both.

5.02 Mr Gilmartin described Mr McMullen’s interest in Quarryvale as a ‘scam’ and his proposed involvement as an investor came to nothing.

5.03 Mr Gilmartin succeeded in having the 10 January 1991 deadline stipulated in the 14 December 1990 agreement extended, initially to 29 January 1991, and subsequently to 31 January 1991. Therefore, within this extended period Mr Gilmartin retained the opportunity to buy out of his agreement with Mr O’Callaghan.

5.04 On 24 January 1991, Mr O’Callaghan wrote to Mr Gilmartin and conceded that both he and Mr Gilmartin were unhappy with the 14 December 1990 agreement and that he was prepared to agree to it being torn up. He formally advised Mr Gilmartin that unless all matters were resolved to his satisfaction by 31 January 1991, he intended to proceed with his Neilstown site development. One of these outstanding matters was the payment by Mr Gilmartin of the IR£1.35m to Mr O’Callaghan.

5.05 On 15 January 1991, Mr Gilmartin received a letter from Cllr Colm McGrath stating that it was his intention to table an appropriate motion to rezone the lands of Quarryvale at the February 1991 Development Plan review meeting of Dublin County Council and that he was confident that the motion would enjoy unanimous cross-party support ‘particularly in view of your successful negotiations with the developer of the former Town Centre site [Neilstown] which is not now being proceeded with’. At this time Mr Gilmartin was in contact with a number of councillors including Cllr Gilbride and Cllr Tommy Boland (then the Chairman of Dublin County Council). In addition to contact with the author of the letter of 15 January 1991, Cllr McGrath, Mr Gilmartin had occasional contact with Mr Lawlor (who was then a Councillor and a TD). He also knew that Mr Lawlor was in contact with Mr O’Callaghan in relation to the issue of the bringing of a motion to Dublin County Council to have Quarryvale rezoned. Mr Gilmartin said that he was aware from his contact with Cllr Boland that there was strong cross-party support for the rezoning of Quarryvale.

5.06 On 7 February 1991, AIB wrote to Mr Gilmartin. In the letter they referred to a Dublin County Council meeting, at which the proposal to rezone Quarryvale was to feature, being rescheduled for the following day, 8 February 1991 and indicated that it might be further postponed to 15 February 1991. It was probable that what was being referred to in that letter was that a deadline of 8 February 1991 had been set by the County Council for the receipt of motions, which was later revised to 15 February 1991. This letter stated that the rezoning of Quarryvale at the proposed County Council meeting was ‘critical’ of the overall shopping centre development plan for Quarryvale and Mr Gilmartin was reminded that he had to either discharge his obligations to O’Callaghan Properties prior to this meeting or reach an alternative acceptable arrangement ‘which will facilitate this rezoning process’.

5.07 Mr O’Callaghan did not believe that he had any contact with Mr Gilmartin around this time (early to mid February 1991) and had not therefore discussed the rezoning meeting issue with him. Mr O’Callaghan said (as did Mr Deane) that as of 12 February 1991, it was his belief that Mr McMullen would find the money to enable Mr Gilmartin to pay him his IR£1.35m.

5.08 On 12 February 1991, AIB wrote to Barkhill and formally called in their loan facility which then stood at approximately IR£9.35m. The position therefore, as of 12 February 1991, was that Mr Gilmartin was being advised by AIB that it was no longer prepared to wait for him to finalise an agreement with Mr O'Callaghan and in so doing enable the process to have Quarryvale rezoned proceed. AIB had, in effect, given up on Mr Gilmartin, and wanted an arrangement with Mr O'Callaghan put in place.

'THE NIGHT OF THE LONG KNIVES'

6.01 The second 'Heads of Terms' agreement was signed by Mr Gilmartin, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Kay on behalf of AIB on 15 February 1991. This new proposed 'Heads of Terms' was faxed to Mr Gilmartin's Luton home by Mr Kay of AIB on the evening of 15 February 1991. Mr Gilmartin claimed that he signed the agreement under duress and more particularly on the basis of his understanding that unless he signed it Cllr McGrath's motion to rezone Quarryvale would not be lodged with Dublin County Council on that date (the deadline for lodging the motion) and that, consequently, the opportunity to have the Quarryvale lands rezoned would be missed.

6.02 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that in the course of the evening of 15 February 1991 he was in telephone contact from his home in Luton with Mr Kay, Mr O'Callaghan, Cllr McGrath and Cllr Sean Gilbride. Cllr McGrath had telephoned him from the offices of Dublin County Council and told him that AIB and Mr O'Callaghan were preventing him lodging the Quarryvale motion and that the motion would not be lodged unless he signed the 'Heads of Terms' agreement with Mr O'Callaghan and AIB. It was his belief that this telephone call from Cllr McGrath was made at around five or six in the evening. Mr Gilmartin said that he also received a telephone call from Cllr Gilbride with, in effect, the same message as that given to him by Cllr McGrath. Mr Gilmartin said that in total he had two telephone calls from Cllr McGrath and one telephone call from Cllr Gilbride. He also received telephone calls from Mr Donagh who advised him to sign the agreement 'or else' the Quarryvale motion would not be lodged. He said that Mr O'Callaghan telephoned him on one occasion. He understood that Mr O'Callaghan was present in the bank at the time of this telephone conversation, as he could hear Mr Kay in the background.

6.03 Mr Gilmartin remarked that Mr O'Callaghan, AIB and Cllrs McGrath and Gilbride 'threatened me with everything bar execution'. Mr Gilmartin labelled the evening of 15 February 1991 as 'the night of the long knives' because of the pressure he said was placed on him on to sign the new agreement or alternatively miss the opportunity to have the Quarryvale lands rezoned.

6.04 Mr Gilmartin eventually agreed to sign the agreement and, having done so, faxed it to AIB at 9.05pm. He signed the agreement having discussed the matter with his solicitor, Mr Séamus Maguire.

6.05 Cllr McGrath denied that he had telephoned Mr Gilmartin on 15 February 1991 and told him that the rezoning motion for Quarryvale would not be lodged with Dublin County Council unless the proposed agreement with AIB and Mr O’Callaghan was signed by him. In particular, Cllr McGrath denied that, as alleged by Mr Gilmartin, he told Mr Gilmartin that he was being prevented from lodging the motion. Cllr Gilbride acknowledged that he may have telephoned Mr Gilmartin on the day. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin received telephone communication from Cllrs McGrath and Gilbride in the circumstances and manner described by him.

6.06 Mr Donagh had no recollection of speaking with Mr Gilmartin on the night of 15 February 1991 but he accepted that as a matter of probability he did so. Mr Kay accepted that AIB put Mr Gilmartin under pressure to sign the second ‘Heads of Terms’ agreement. He acknowledged that he advised Mr Gilmartin that a new situation would exist if he did not sign it and probably implied to Mr Gilmartin that AIB would ‘take some other steps’ if he did not sign. He was unable to say what these steps might have been but he acknowledged that, in effect, AIB were telling Mr Gilmartin on 15 February 1991 that the rezoning motion for Quarryvale would not proceed unless he entered into an agreement to accommodate Mr O’Callaghan.

6.07 Mr Kay told the Tribunal that to the extent that he understood that a motion could not proceed on 15 February 1991 in the absence of Mr O’Callaghan’s agreement, he was probably informed of this by Mr O’Callaghan himself. His understanding would also, he maintained, have been reinforced by what Mr Gilmartin had told him on a number of occasions, namely, that the zoning could not go forward without there being an arrangement between himself and Mr O’Callaghan. Mr Kay agreed that, in effect, Mr O’Callaghan was virtually in complete control of the situation on the evening of 15 February 1991.

6.08 Mr O’Callaghan denied putting any pressure on Cllrs McGrath and/or Gilbride to withhold or delay lodging the Quarryvale motion, as alleged by Mr Gilmartin.

6.09 He claimed that he was unaware at this time that a motion had to be lodged by 15 February 1991 or by any specific date. He said that prior to March/April 1991 it was his understanding that a written motion was unnecessary and that a proposal to rezone land could be brought to the County Council 'on the floor of the Council Chamber'. Mr O'Callaghan also maintained that on 15 February 1991 the bringing of a motion to rezone Quarryvale was of 'no interest at all to me'. He however acknowledged that in early January 1991 he had checked with Mr Lawlor in relation to the zoning matters that were due to come before the County Council in the course of its review of the Development Plan. Mr O'Callaghan said he was unaware that Cllr McGrath had lodged a motion on 15 February 1991 until after it had been lodged and maintained that he only became aware of the lodging of the Quarryvale motion over the following weekend (15 February 1991 was a Friday), having been so informed by Mr Lawlor. He was unable to recollect the circumstances in which he was in contact with Mr Lawlor over the weekend of the 16-17 February 1991 and maintained that Mr Lawlor contacted him 'out of the blue'. Mr O'Callaghan said he informed Mr Lawlor that an agreement had been reached and that he, Mr O'Callaghan, was now involved in Quarryvale. Mr Lawlor had told him that the McGrath motion 'would not be functional' unless a motion was lodged to 'dezone' the Neilstown site. He said that Mr Lawlor told him that he, Mr Lawlor, would 'look after it', and that Mr Lawlor did so.

6.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that from commercial/banking considerations, in particular, AIB's fear of an inability on the part of Mr Gilmartin/Barkhill to repay its debts to the bank, prompted them to pressure him to enter into an agreement with Mr O'Callaghan and ensure that it would be Mr O'Callaghan who would be the driving force in the Quarryvale project from February 1991 onwards.

THE MOTION TO 'DEZONE' NEILSTOWN

7.01 On Wednesday 20 February 1991, Mr Deane wrote to Mr Donagh in relation to the Heads of Terms agreement signed on the previous Friday. In that letter, Mr Deane stated 'I confirm that Mr Liam Lawlor T.D. has at our request lodged a Motion with Dublin County Council'. This was a reference to the 'dezoning' motion prepared by Mr Lawlor, signed by Cllr McGrath and lodged with Dublin County Council. It sought to remove the town centre zoning attaching to the Neilstown lands and replace it with industrial zoning, thereby facilitating the development of Quarryvale as a town centre.

7.02 The Neilstown motion should have been lodged along with the Quarryvale motion by close of business on 15 February 1991, and when subsequently submitted was declared by County Council officials to be out of time.

7.03 On 19 February 1991, Mr O'Callaghan wrote to Mr Kay enclosing a copy of the Dublin County Council agenda which had been provided to him by Mr Lawlor, together with a copy of the Neilstown motion. In that letter Mr

O'Callaghan also referred to other advice given to him by Mr Lawlor as to how to proceed in relation to Quarryvale.

7.04 The content of a document entitled 'Strategic Plan re Westpark' which was faxed to Mr O'Callaghan by Mr Lawlor on 26 February 1991 included the following: 'Motion [a reference to the Quarryvale rezoning motion] likely to be considered 7/22 March. Motion to change Merrygrove to E (Industrial) not accepted by Planning Department due to arrival after closing time Friday 15 February.'

7.05 Mr Lawlor went on to advise Mr O'Callaghan that he should inform senior officials of Dublin County Council immediately of his intention (as part of a joint venture) to promote the Westpark (Quarryvale) proposal and that he should also seek to negotiate with Dublin Corporation to withdraw the proposed development on the Fonthill (Neilstown) lands. This faxed communication from Mr Lawlor clearly indicated to Mr O'Callaghan that there was a deadline for the lodging of rezoning motions. When this position was outlined to him by Tribunal Counsel, Mr O'Callaghan stated 'I didn't take any great notice of that'. He said he was unsure if he had read the communication, although he acknowledged that some handwritten notes on the document were his.

7.06 Mr O'Callaghan accepted that he was present in AIB until late on the evening of 15 February 1991 in an effort to conclude his agreement with Mr Gilmartin. Mr O'Callaghan maintained however that in the course of this meeting AIB had not raised any issue with him in relation to the necessity to have the motion to rezone Quarryvale lodged on that particular date.

7.07 Mr Deane told the Tribunal that he had 'no recollection whatsoever' of the issue of the Quarryvale motion being raised in the course of the meeting on 15 February 1991. He rejected Mr Gilmartin's allegation that he could have been told by Cllr McGrath that he was being prevented from lodging the motion on 15 February 1991 unless Mr Gilmartin executed the agreement. Mr Deane also said that there had been no contact between Mr O'Callaghan (or bank officials) with Cllrs McGrath and Gilbride in relation to the motion in his presence.

7.08 The Tribunal did not accept Mr O'Callaghan's evidence that as of 15 February 1991 he was ignorant of the fact that that date was the deadline for the lodging of a motion to rezone Quarryvale or that he was ignorant of the fact that a motion was lodged on that date. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan had been advised on or before 15 February 1991 (probably before) by Mr Lawlor of the necessity to lodge a motion to rezone Quarryvale. It appeared quite incredible to the Tribunal, having regard to Mr O'Callaghan's own evidence and the content of Mr Lawlor's communication with him, that Mr O'Callaghan was not fully conscious of these matters at the time of his meeting in AIB on 15 February 1991. The Tribunal was thus satisfied that the issue of the Quarryvale rezoning motion was a subject of consideration at the meeting in AIB on 15 February 1991.

7.09 Mr Kay, when under cross examination by Counsel for Mr O'Callaghan, appeared to resile somewhat from his earlier evidence of having been advised by Mr O'Callaghan that unless Mr Gilmartin signed the agreement, the Quarryvale motion would not be lodged. However, the Tribunal noted that when giving his earlier evidence on this issue he had done so in a clear and unambiguous manner. The Tribunal remained satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan was aware by 15 February 1991 of Cllr McGrath's proposed motion. Moreover, the Tribunal believed it to have been likely that by 15 February 1991 Cllr McGrath and Mr O'Callaghan had probably been in contact with each other in relation to the necessity to lodge the motion. It was inconceivable that the situation could have been otherwise, particularly having regard to the fact that Mr O'Callaghan had requested Mr Lawlor to put in train a motion to, in effect, dezone the Neilstown lands, a motion which Cllr McGrath duly signed at Mr Lawlor's behest. It appeared to the Tribunal illogical that Mr O'Callaghan, in requesting Mr Lawlor to put this motion in train, would have been at the same time unaware of the McGrath motion which sought to re-zone Quarryvale for Town Centre use.

7.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin had been advised on 15 February 1991, as testified to by him and indeed by Mr Kay, that the motion would not be lodged unless he signed the agreement.

THE 15 FEBRUARY 1991 'HEADS OF TERMS' AGREEMENT

8.01 In many respects, the provisions of the 15 February 1991 agreement were similar to those of the Heads of Terms agreement dated 14 December 1990. The essential differences were as follows:

- O'Callaghan Properties Ltd was to receive 33⅓ per cent equity stake in Barkhill.
- Mr Gilmartin and O'Callaghan Properties were to use their best efforts to obtain an outside investor to acquire one-third of the equity in Barkhill at a price of IR£4m.
- A formal agreement was to be entered into by the parties on or before 31 March 1991.

THE PERIOD BETWEEN 15 FEBRUARY 1991 AND 31 MAY 1991

9.01 By 21 February 1991, following the Heads of Terms agreement on 15 February 1991, Mr O’Callaghan engaged himself fully in the Quarryvale rezoning project, as evidenced by Mr Kay’s memorandum of that date which noted as follows:

John Deane told me that Owen O’Callaghan held a lengthy meeting with Tom Gilmartin and that the relationship was good...it is proposed that Tom will travel to Dublin and in company with Owen O’Callaghan will meet the City and County Managers and other professionals with a view to progressing the zoning issue . . .

9.02 Mr Gilmartin agreed that AIB asked him to meet County Council officials at this time. However, he took issue with the suggestion in Mr Kay’s memorandum that relations between himself and Mr O’Callaghan were good and suggested that this was merely ‘wishful thinking’. To some extent however the Tribunal was satisfied that there was a measure of co-operation between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin at this time, not least because of the knowledge of both of the impending rezoning vote.

9.03 The issue of the granting of tax designation status for Quarryvale continued to be the subject of discussion as evidenced by the content of the following AIB ‘credit review mark up’ of 20 March 1991, which noted as follows:

Tom Gilmartin has always maintained that the Government would be disposed to granting designation status to the site which would give it the same tax benefit as received by Tallaght Town Centre. He remains convinced that the site will receive designated status but has been told this status for political reasons cannot be given in advance of the obtainment of the necessary zoning of the land. Owen O’Callaghan also believes designated status will be obtained in due course. In summary, the politicians have not yet delivered on commitments given.

9.04 It therefore appeared to be the case that, as late as March 1991, AIB still held out hope that the Quarryvale lands would receive tax designation status. This hoped-for outcome on the part of AIB appeared to be based very much on what Mr Gilmartin was continuing to tell the bank in March 1991, and, according to Mr Kay, on what Mr O’Callaghan himself was advising the bank. Mr O’Callaghan denied that he had ever given AIB any basis for expressing any such view, a denial rejected by the Tribunal.

9.05 According to Mr Kay, Mr O’Callaghan had undertaken to take on the role of securing rezoning and of convincing councillors of the merits of the proposal. Mr Kay maintained that Mr Gilmartin was only in Dublin on a few occasions between February and May 1991. Mr Kay told the Tribunal that AIB did not take any direct steps to ensure that Quarryvale would be rezoned but did encourage Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin to pursue this goal. Mr Kay stated that he did not know exactly what Mr O’Callaghan was doing in his efforts to secure rezoning but he knew that he was lobbying councillors and meeting interest groups⁶.

9.06 Mr Kay confirmed that he became aware immediately after the 15 February 1991 Heads of Terms agreement that Mr Lawlor was providing strategic advice to Mr O’Callaghan in relation to Quarryvale. He was also aware at that time that Mr Lawlor was an elected county councillor. In answer to a question put to him as to whether he believed Mr Lawlor’s involvement was appropriate, given that he was a councillor, Mr Kay responded that he would not have thought Mr Lawlor’s involvement ‘improper’ if he had made ‘his position clear’.

9.07 On 3 April 1991 Mr Donagh described Mr O’Callaghan as ‘confident’ that the Quarryvale rezoning would proceed on either 18 or 25 April 1991. In a further AIB memorandum of 9 April 1991, Mr Donagh noted Mr Gilmartin as being ‘satisfied things are in good shape with local elected reps and community associations’ and his view that ‘Owen O’Callaghan has done great work in this regard.’ However, Mr Gilmartin denied that he described Mr O’Callaghan’s efforts in relation to Quarryvale in these terms.

9.08 By 15 April 1991, as suggested in an AIB memorandum of that date, the bank appeared to be of the belief that Mr Gilmartin’s other efforts to refinance were unlikely to bear fruit. However, a Bank of Ireland memorandum (Mr Gilmartin continued to have financial dealings with Bank of Ireland in 1991) suggested that as of 23 April 1991 Mr Gilmartin was still endeavouring to procure outside financing in order to enable him to discharge Barkhill’s indebtedness to AIB and to Mr O’Callaghan.

9.09 An AIB memorandum of 15 April 1991 recorded, inter alia:
Agreement has now been reached between Tom Gilmartin and O’Callaghan Properties to ensure re-zoning of the site can proceed. Dublin County Council are to vote on a motion to re-zone Palmerstown⁷ site to Retail on 2nd May 1991. Subject to approval of this motion

⁶ See Part 7.

⁷ Quarryvale was on occasion referred to as Palmerstown and West Park. The site is now known as Liffey Valley.

Palmerstown site will be included in the overall Dublin Draft Plan as a Retail development.

Tom Gilmartin/Owen O’Callaghan have in the past fortnight met with local elected representatives, community associations, planning officials and the city and county managers all of whom have expressed their support for the proposed retail development.

9.10 And:

The Bank’s priority is to ensure re-zoning of the site and re-negotiation of the outstanding contracts. Should this be achieved Harrington Bannon have valued the site at IR£20m and it would make it easier to attract the interest of a major developer/institution.

In noting the position to Group Credit Committee on 20th March 1991 it was recommended that consideration of a capital provision would be deferred until the outcome of the Dublin County Council vote on rezoning of the site which was expected to take place by the end of March 1991. As this vote has not yet taken place we now recommend a provision of IR£2m.

9.11 AIB memoranda, prepared in the period post February 1991, also documented the involvement of Riga with regard to Mr Gilmartin’s continuing efforts to secure outside investors and in relation to his then personal circumstances. Riga provided funds directly to Barkhill in this regard and indeed to Mr Gilmartin personally. On 28 February 1991, Riga provided US$45,850 to a potential investor (Anglo Securities) on Mr Gilmartin’s behalf. Mr Gilmartin testified that this potential investor transpired to have been ‘a complete scam’. On 28 February 1991, at Mr Gilmartin’s request, Mr Donagh effected the transfer of the said US$45,850 to a bank account of Anglo Securities as an ‘upfront fee’.

9.12 Records indicated that Riga was again instrumental in arranging a transfer (from its overdraft) of Stg£50,000 to Mr Gilmartin on 26 April 1991 which, Mr O’Callaghan explained, was connected to Mr Gilmartin’s ongoing refinancing endeavours. This payment was authorised by Mr Donagh. Riga had also paid out a sum of IR£58,407.50 from its resources in connection with the purchase of the Murray lands, as part of the Quarryvale site assembly, (the total purchase price of these lands was IR£116,815), in addition to IR£10,028 transferred to Mr Gilmartin on 5 March 1991. Both sums were subsequently reimbursed by Barkhill.

9.13 Mr Kay acknowledged that in the period February to May 1991 AIB assisted Riga in discharging this expenditure and that Riga had made funds available personally to Mr Gilmartin at a time when there was no legal arrangement in place for Riga to make such payments on behalf of Barkhill. Mr Kay maintained that whatever Riga did in the period February to May 1991 was done without the knowledge of AIB and that AIB had given no commitment that Barkhill would in due course accept responsibility for such payments. However, in this regard the Tribunal noted Mr O’Callaghan’s manuscript notation on the instruction given by him on 27 February 1991 to Mr Kay in relation to the US$45,850 which stated as follows: ‘Fees refundable’ and ‘All refundable when cash drawn down’. Such notation suggested to the Tribunal that, notwithstanding the absence of any legal or formal arrangement made between AIB/Barkhill and Riga in this regard, there was a clear expectation on the part of Riga that such expenditure would be recouped in some shape or form from Barkhill. Riga was subsequently reimbursed.

THE LEAD UP TO THE 16 MAY 1991 COUNTY COUNCIL VOTE

10.01 In a memorandum prepared on 29 April 1991, Mr Donagh referred to the following information, based on a telephone conversation he had had with Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane some three days earlier:

Owen O’Callaghan has spent the past few days meeting Councillors. He met with F.F., Sinn Fein and Worker Party Councillors who all expressed support for project. However he was told that Boland, the Chairman of the Council intended to vote against motion and this would split F.F. and would make the outcome of the vote uncertain. Accordingly he arranged to have motion deferred to the 16th May 1991. The reason Boland would vote against was that he supported Green project and turned the sod last year.

They has [sic] brought in Frank Dunlop former government press officer to advise on media Issues. A meeting has been arranged for next Thursday to discuss projects with F.G. and Labour Councillors.

10.02 This memorandum suggested two things: i) that Mr O’Callaghan was advising AIB of his ability and his intention to arrange for a motion to rezone the Quarryvale lands to be deferred to 16 May 1991 (the motion was in fact deferred), and ii) that this was the first occasion that AIB was informed of Mr Dunlop’s involvement, albeit in the somewhat understated role as an advisor on ‘media issues’. (AIB’s knowledge of payments made by Riga to Mr Dunlop via Shefran and to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd is considered in Part 5).

10.03 The memorandum also recorded Mr O’Callaghan as stating his belief that he would ‘need to undertake a lot of work to ensure rezoning’, given that Mr Gilmartin’s attention was taken up with his refinancing attempts and given his ‘over-reliance on what a few key councillors have stated they can deliver.’

10.04 Mr O’Callaghan took issue with Mr Donagh’s reference to him, Mr O’Callaghan, having advised that he had ‘arranged to have the Motion deferred to the 16th May 1991’, because, he told the Tribunal, he ‘was not capable of doing so.’

10.05 Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan both attended a meeting at AIB on 14 May 1991, two days prior to the scheduled Quarryvale rezoning meeting on 16 May 1991. The content of the bank memorandum relating to that meeting suggested that Mr O’Callaghan was very much the primary strategist (when compared to Mr Gilmartin). Mr Donagh recorded:

Owen O’Callaghan had meeting yesterday with a number of Councillors and it was agreed that it would be best to scale down request to 70 acres (from 110 acres). Tom Gilmartin has no difficulty with this and following discussion explaining that this would have greater support it was agreed that amendment would be put forward. Planners, Councillors, Mansfield and Green Properties will be happier with this also and it would diffuse city centre objections. We would be provided with a map on the revised rezoning.

10.06 Mr Donagh noted in his memorandum that both Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin appeared confident ‘that positive vote would emerge on Thursday.’

10.07 The memorandum noted that Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin confirmed that they were co-operating with each other to show a united approach to the County Council in advance of the 16 May 1991 meeting. Mr Gilmartin had sought additional funding (approximately IR£2.5m) in order to complete land purchases in Quarryvale. Mr Donagh noted in the memorandum as follows:

I indicated clearly the bank had not [an] agreement signed or in subsequent discussions agreed to provide funds to complete site assembly. Confirmed we would not be in a position to discuss funds for site assembly and other fees until the site was at least re-zoned. In summary we wished to know by the end of the week whether plans for retail development were on target or not. We would sit down early next week to formulate our views in light of the developments over the next few days and then revert to both Owen O’Callaghan and Tom Gilmartin to agree future policy. Tom Gilmartin was disappointed that we would not give commitment now subject to positive re-zoning vote.

10.08 The motion to rezone the lands at Quarryvale as a town centre was duly carried by a majority of councillors at the County Council meeting on 16 May 1991 and its effect was to move the existing town centre zoning from Neilstown to Quarryvale.

10.09 The successful vote followed an amendment made to Cllr McGrath's motion which had the effect of limiting the scale of the proposed town centre to that which had been provided for Neilstown in the 1983 Development Plan. Mr O'Callaghan claimed that he could not recall how exactly this amendment came about. However, it was noted by the Tribunal that in the course of his meeting (together with Mr Gilmartin) with AIB on 14 May 1991, Mr O'Callaghan was in a position to apprise AIB that he had met with a number of councillors on 13 May 1991 and that agreement had been reached to scale down the retail element of Quarryvale. The Tribunal was satisfied that by 14 May 1991 at the very least Mr O'Callaghan was aware of a meeting which took place on 13 May 1991 between Mr John Corcoran⁸ of Green Properties Plc and Cllr Boland, the Chairman of Dublin County Council, and others. The Tribunal was therefore satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan was aware, in advance of 16 May 1991, that the size of the retail element of the development of Quarryvale was a matter of concern amongst some councillors and would have to be dealt with.

THE HEADS OF AGREEMENT DATED 31 MAY 1991

11.01 A third Heads of Agreement was executed by 31 May 1991 and on this occasion involved AIB as a party thereto, as well as Mr Gilmartin and Mr O'Callaghan. Mr Gilmartin believed that he must have signed it on 14 May 1991, as he said that he would not have signed it after the success of the rezoning motion on 16 May 1991.

11.02 The recitals to the agreement noted that efforts to obtain new investors for Barkhill as had been envisaged in the February 1991 agreement had been unsuccessful and that the parties had agreed alternative arrangements for the future financing of the company which, it was agreed, would be binding on the parties and in due course would be incorporated into a more formal agreement or agreements. The agreement acknowledged that Barkhill had a further financial requirement of IR£4m, plus provision for an interest roll-up. It provided that AIB would lend IR£3m directly to Barkhill. The interest on both this and existing facilities would be accrued until May 1993 (or until the unpaid interest reached IR£2.5m, whichever was first). Riga would provide the balance of IR£1m, together with a bank guarantee of another IR£1m plus interest, in respect of all borrowings of Barkhill. Riga's loan of IR£1m to Barkhill and Mr Gilmartin's director's loan (being the money he had already invested in Barkhill up to this point) were to be subordinated to loans made by AIB.

11.03 The agreement provided that the Barkhill loan facility was not to be used in the absence of the unanimous consent of Mr and Mrs Gilmartin, Riga and AIB for any purpose other than the completion of the purchase of the remaining lands required for the proposed Quarryvale development. It was also part of the agreement that the loan facility would not be availed of until Riga's IR£1m loan to Barkhill had been fully drawn down and Riga's IR£1m bank guarantee was in place.

11.04 The agreement also provided for the revision of the shareholding structure in Barkhill as follows: Gilmartins $33\frac{1}{3}$, Riga $44\frac{4}{9}$ and a nominated subsidiary of AIB $22\frac{2}{9}$.

11.05 The agreement further provided the Gilmartins with an option to acquire AIB's shareholding of $22\frac{2}{9}$ for a sum of IR£2m. The option could be exercised at any time after 31 May 1993 or, if before that date, in the event of Riga and AIB so agreeing, or in the event of AIB deciding to sell its shareholding, with the Gilmartins having first refusal in relation thereto. It was further agreed that if the Gilmartins, having acquired the AIB interest, decided to sell any part of the acquired AIB shareholding, then Riga was entitled to acquire as much of that shareholding from the Gilmartins as would bring its shareholding to 50 per cent. It was stated that each party had the right to acquire the interest of the other in the event of the sale of their respective shareholdings. The board of directors of Barkhill was to comprise three members, with one representative each to be nominated by the Gilmartins, Riga and AIB. Riga was appointed project manager, although it was not entitled to charge a fee for this role. The agreement also provided that AIB were to be paid two-thirds of the sale proceeds of any lands sold by Barkhill and such funds were to be used in reduction of Barkhill's indebtedness to AIB. The remaining one-third of any such sale proceeds was to be applied by Barkhill to the Gilmartins, in reduction of the loans which they had made to Barkhill.

11.06 The Heads of Agreement of 31 May 1991 was concluded at a time when AIB had itself received a valuation (also dated 31 May 1991) on the Quarryvale lands from Harrington Bannon Auctioneers. In its valuation, Harrington Bannon advised that assuming full assembly of the Quarryvale site and in the event that the lands were rezoned, their value was IR£12m, and that in the event of planning permission being obtained for the lands, their open market value would rise to IR£20m. Mr Kay acknowledged that AIB took comfort from this valuation, and suggested that it was ‘a definite step forward’. However, Mr Gilmartin, in evidence, disagreed with the valuation, as he believed that once rezoning on the lands had become a reality on 16 May 1991, their value was a multiple of the figure suggested by Harrington Bannon.

11.07 While Mr Kay agreed that as of 31 May 1991 AIB had the comfort of the fact that the Quarryvale lands were valued at IR£20m, subject to planning, he maintained that AIB regarded the project as of May 1991 as still ‘a long way’ from planning permission. The Tribunal noted, however, that according to an AIB Credit Committee document of 31 May 1991 it was being suggested that within three months (of May 1991) a planning application would be made for circa 600,000 square feet of retail space. This mindset on the part of AIB in May 1991 appeared to suggest, contrary to Mr Kay’s evidence, that AIB did not believe that planning permission was a long way off.

11.08 In the period of a few months between December 1990 and the end of May 1991, the Gilmartins’ proposed shareholding⁹ in Barkhill had been reduced from a position of full ownership prior to 14 December 1990, to a 75 per cent interest post the December 1990 Heads of Agreement, to an ownership of two-thirds by 15 February 1991 and to a one-third ownership based on the agreement of 31 May 1991. At the same time, Riga’s proposed shareholding had improved from 25 per cent in December 1990 to 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent in February 1991 and 44 $\frac{4}{9}$ at the end of May 1991.

11.09 Records indicated that on 31 May 1991 Mr McGrath attended a meeting with William Fry, Solicitors, together with Mr Byrne (AIB’s internal legal advisor), at which the elements of the third Heads of Agreement were discussed. Mr McGrath told the Tribunal that he had no specific recollection of this meeting but accepted that he must have been in attendance. He acknowledged that a note taken by William Fry’s indicated that the proposed shareholding in Barkhill, on foot of the new Heads of Agreement, was on the basis that Mr Gilmartin would hold a one-third interest in Barkhill with Riga holding 44 $\frac{4}{9}$ and AIB 22 $\frac{2}{9}$. Mr McGrath stated that he did not recall it having been envisaged that Mr Gilmartin’s shareholding in Barkhill might be less than that of Riga’s. The Tribunal was satisfied, however, that Mr McGrath must have been privy to this decision. Ultimately Riga’s shareholding became 40 per cent. (See below)

11.10 In acquiring a 44 $\frac{4}{9}$ per cent interest (as provided for in the agreement), Riga was not required to invest any funds into Barkhill, but it was providing a loan to Barkhill and a guarantee to AIB for its loan to Barkhill, which created for

Riga a combined potential exposure of IR£2m. In addition, Mr O’Callaghan had agreed to forego the IR£1.35m debt due by Mr Gilmartin. Mr Kay testified that he regarded Mr O’Callaghan’s investment in Barkhill to be, in reality, in the order of IR£3.35m. Mr Kay regarded Mr Gilmartin’s investment in the project as of May 1991 (being in excess of IR£4.4m) as having been effectively wiped out.

AIB’S KNOWLEDGE OF MR GILMARTIN’S UK REVENUE DIFFICULTIES

12.01 At a meeting in the offices of William Fry (AIB’s solicitors) on 31 May 1991, when the salient elements of what became the third Heads of Agreement were discussed and outlined in detail, one of the issues which was noted in the course of the discussions which took place at that time between Mr McGrath, Mr Byrne and William Fry Solicitors was the possibility that Mr Gilmartin ‘could perhaps be made bankrupt in the UK’, an event which subsequently in fact occurred.

12.02 In 1991 the UK Revenue were pursuing Mr Gilmartin for substantial money.¹⁰ Mr Gilmartin’s difficulties with the UK Revenue were unrelated to his involvement in Quarryvale. Mr Gilmartin blamed AIB for disclosing information which he had provided them in relation to his tax problems and in the course of his evidence proceeded to blame a number of individuals (namely, Mr Dunlop, Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Lawlor and Mr Ambrose Kelly) for tipping off the media about his UK Revenue difficulties, with resulting publicity in both the UK and Ireland.

12.03 Mr Kay told the Tribunal that Mr Gilmartin had apprised him at that time of his bankruptcy concerns in the UK and that he was facing a demand from the UK Revenue for Stg£5/6m. Mr Kay said however that Mr Gilmartin had not mentioned to him, or made any complaint to him about reports of his UK Revenue difficulties which had appeared in newspapers.

THE APPLICATION TO AIB FOR THE ADDITIONAL LOAN FACILITY OF IR£3MILLION

13.01 On 31 May 1991, the date of the third Heads of Agreement, the Credit Committee of AIB met to consider an application being made by Barkhill (and brought to the committee by Mr Kay) for the provision of a further IR£3m (as provided for in that agreement) to enable Barkhill to complete the assembly of the Quarryvale site and to take the Quarryvale project to planning stage. A further IR£2.5m of interest roll-up was also sought, which would bring the total indebtedness of Barkhill to AIB to IR£14.5m. It was also requested that the credit rating on the loan, heretofore categorised as ‘bad’, be re-categorised as ‘vulnerable.’

13.02 The information provided to the bank’s Credit Committee largely reflected the terms of the Heads of Agreement of 31 May 1991. It adverted, inter alia, to Mr Gilmartin’s financial position then being ‘very precarious.’

13.03 In support of the application, the following reasons were given as to why the funds should be provided:

We consider that their [sic] have been a number of significant recent favourable developments in this case.

The decisive zoning vote by Dublin County Council.

The dominant role to be taken on by Owen O’ Callaghan, who is highly regarded as a retail property developer.

The significant cash/guarantee commitment which O’Callaghan is prepared to make.

The very positive professional comments which have been made about the site and its location.

The virtual abandonment by Green of their project.

We recognise that the economy may be moving towards recession but consider that their [sic] are reasonable prospects that this situation will have eased before the Palmerstown development is on stream. We also recognise that there is no certainty that planning will be obtained, but we believe the prospects are at this stage excellent.

We believe that the location is of such quality that it should be relatively unaffected by any downturn in the economy. In all the circumstances we consider that the proposed refinancing of Barkhill Limited affords the Bank best prospects of recovering of our debt in full with the strong possibility of generating substantial windfall gains of up to £2m in addition to complete recovery of our provision.

13.04 Among the matters noted by the Committee on that date was that ‘designation [for Quarryvale] has been reputedly proposed by Government sources but this remains to be seen.’

13.05 In the course of his evidence, Mr Gilmartin made the following observation on the Credit Committee’s document:

‘I find it amazing some of the stuff in that. If you notice there, the bank was taking over a chunk of the company. They wanted me to hand over control to them and O’Callaghan, 22% to them and [45]% to Owen O’Callaghan. But then they told me that my money had all evaporated. That the site wasn’t worth what they were owed. But at the same time, they wanted me to pay them 2 million to get the 20% stake back that they got for nothing.

Do you not see an irony in all of this? The day after they demanded 2 million off me to buy back what they had taken off me for nothing. On the basis that they would guarantee I would never collect a penny of my money. Otherwise I sign over to them.

Owen O'Callaghan had absolutely nothing in the site. He put up there £1m loan, which was drawn against my assets. If you done a forensic study of Barkhill's accounts you'll find that the 1 million to Owen O'Callaghan was put up against my assets against Barkhill. The so called loan. And all the other monies that was paid out through Dunlop and others. Don't you find it amazing this letter and the comments in it? Then they're referring to it's the best site in Ireland. That any economic downturn would have no effect on it. Which was their opinion from day one. That it was the best site in Ireland. Now, I'm supposed to read all this crap and then say nothing.'

THE PROVISION OF THE IR£1MILLION LOAN TO RIGA BY AIB AND RIGA'S PROVISION OF THIS MONEY TO BARKHILL

14.01 On 6 June 1991 AIB advised the Directors of Riga that it had sanctioned a facility of a loan of IR£1m to Riga for the purpose of Riga funding 'inter-company loan/equity in Barkhill Ltd'. Mr Kay acknowledged that when these funds were made available to Riga on 6 June 1991, AIB opened a separate account to enable Riga receive the payment and he confirmed that the first withdrawal Riga made from that account was in the sum of IR£660,000 to acquire the O'Rahilly lands. The terms of the Heads of Agreement provided that Barkhill was to avail of this IR£1m Riga loan prior to drawing down the IR£3m loan which AIB had agreed to provide to Barkhill under the terms of that agreement. A further term agreed that both loans were provided solely for the purposes of the cost of site acquisition and 'costs directly related to the development of Barkhill's lands.'

14.02 The next major transaction on this account was a debit of IR£230,000 on 19 June 1991, money which Riga paid by way of credit transfer to its own current account. The sum comprised the US$45,850 (IR£26,192.52) payment Riga had made to Anglo Securities, a sum of IR£10,028 advanced to Mr Gilmartin on 5 March 1991, the Stg£50,000 (IR£55,666.36) payment it had made on behalf of Mr Gilmartin on 28 April 1991, a sum of IR£58,407.50 it had paid for the Murray lands (as representing 50 per cent of the purchase price of these lands) and three payments made to Shefran totalling IR£80,000 paid to Shefran (Mr Dunlop's company) between 16 May 1991 and 7 June 1991. Mr Kay believed that this reference to Shefran was the first occasion on which he heard of Shefran.

14.03 Questioned about the proviso in the 31 May 1991 Heads of Agreement to the effect that the IR£1m loan Riga was giving to Barkhill was to be utilised for the same purposes as the IR£3m loan, Mr Kay stated that AIB took the view that this money could be drawn down without AIB necessarily monitoring all individual transactions but that Riga would in due course have to account for it to Barkhill, AIB and Mr Gilmartin. Mr Kay stated that ultimately AIB took the view that the IR£230,000 expenditure (duly outlined in January 1992 by Riga in its 'Westpark expenses' document) had been expended on legitimate expenses. As set out in Part 5 hereof, the IR£80,000 provided to Shefran by Mr O'Callaghan was for the purposes of disbursement to Councillors by Mr Dunlop, including during the Local Election campaign.

THE PERIOD BETWEEN JUNE AND SEPTEMBER 1991

15.01 In mid-1991 the ongoing opposition of Green Property Plc to the Quarryvale project and the ramification of that opposition, as manifest in the outcome of the June 1991 Local Election, exercised the minds of AIB personnel. In a report by Mr Benson of Frank L. Benson & Associates, Planning and Development Consultants, provided to Mr Donal Chambers (General Manager of Corporate and Commercial in AIB) on 31 July 1991, it was stated that:

The strength of reaction against the recommendation for rezoning of the Quarryvale site for Town Centre uses was under estimated and the political consequences of the decision were reflected in a number of surprise 'casualties' in the local elections in June of this year.

15.02 And:

Fianna Fail Party has been considerably weakened by the results of the local elections and it now only commands some 29% of the seats of the overall council. It should be noted that several of the Fianna Fail Councillors who supported the original Quarryvale motion lost their seats including the former chairman of the Council, Mr Tom Boland. In addition, Fianna Fail Councillors representing the Blanchardstown area where Green Properties have announced that the proposed town centre will not go ahead if the Quarryvale rezoning proposal is retained, have since given undertakings to the Blanchardstown Town Centre Action Group that they will support the rescinding of the May decision on Quarryvale.

Overall the prospects for the retention of the proposed rezoning of the Quarryvale site do not look promising. The developers will have to engage in a carefully planned lobbying campaign in an effort to maintain the proposed re-zoning of the site. This is a legitimate course of action to take and it has long been established planning policy that the area should have a Town Centre which the Quarryvale site can fulfil without detriment to the Blanchardstown town centre if the shopping centre floorspace is capped as proposed at 500,000 sq. ft. Such a campaign will have to be skilfully handled if the new Council is to give its required support.

15.04 A file note prepared by Mr McGrath on 16 August 1991 in relation to a meeting between himself and Mr Benson, referred to AIB's then belief that 'Blanchardstown will proceed with costs of the Political implications.'

15.05 Mr McGrath acknowledged that the file note indicated that he must have been aware in August 1991 that by then Green Property Plc was proceeding with the development of its Blanchardstown Town Centre, notwithstanding their announcement that if Quarryvale was rezoned in the May 1991 vote they would stop work on Blanchardstown. Mr McGrath accepted that he must have had some discussion with Mr Benson about the political implications of this for Quarryvale. Mr McGrath's file note recorded as follows:

In light of the above position it will make Quarryvale quite difficult. Benson's recommendation is that Quarryvale should be put forward as a substitution for Neilstown and it should be done on an incremental basis. An application should be produced for planning permission around November/December. Benson suggests it should be done with the Council Executive rather than through the politicians.

15.06 And:

Benson suggested that the developer might give consideration to offering some lands to the Council as a [site] for perhaps the National Stadium. He believes that this would be a very positive development and would sweeten receptiveness of the application.

15.07 By August 1991 the Share Subscription Agreement as envisaged in the 31 May 1991 Heads of Agreement had still not been formalised. On 2 August 1991, Mr Gilmartin met with Mr Kay and Mr Donagh in London. Mr Kay prepared a memorandum in relation to that meeting in which he stated:

We met him [Mr Gilmartin] in London at our request and to emphasise to him the seriousness of the current situation. We told him that we had a deadline on our part to make progress by 31st July 1991 and to report back to our people within that timeframe. Clearly we have made little or no headway in progressing the shareholder's agreement and the view internally in the bank is if he refuses to sign this agreement then we are in [an] entirely new situation and the probability is that the bank would be forced to take firm action and the matter would be taken out of our hands.

We also emphasised no reliance on his current refinancing proposals and at any rate in the very unlikely event of these materialising, they would require the agreement of all parties.

15.08 And:

Tom Gilmartin said that he fully recognised our position and regretted the bank had been placed in the current situation. However he indicated that he was not prepared to sign a detailed shareholder's agreement as per the draft Heads of Terms which he said was signed by him under duress. He strongly feels the arrangements are totally inequitable to him and if he cannot amend the terms he will dig in his heels irrespective of the consequences. As he sees it there is c. £5m plus of his money in the project whereas O'Callaghan has contributed nothing yet. He strongly resents O'Callaghan and Deane having a larger share than him in the project given their negative cash input and he feels that they have jumped on the bandwagon and profited from his misfortunes.

15.09 Mr Kay also noted the following:

We obviously disputed this and said that essentially when the deal was done with O'Callaghan, the Gilmartin equity was virtually gone at that stage. He completely refused to accept this and stated that while he agreed there might be difficulty in disposing of the site now for a value which would clear our debt and leave a surplus equal to his equity he had no doubt that the longer term value of the site existed. He confirmed that he would accept 50/50 shareholding with O'Callaghan and suggested the following:

40% O'Callaghan; 40% Gilmartin; 20% bank.

He also strongly resents the move taken by O'Callaghan in respect of the professional team and says that an architect has been appointed against his wishes. He is prepared to consider some joint arrangement between Ambrose Kelly and Taggarts but believes that Taggart should be involved as they have stood by him since the beginning of the project, had not demanded money and were due substantial sums.

15.10 At this time, Mr Gilmartin was still pursuing efforts to find an outside investor and advised Mr Kay that he expected to have ‘full information by the evening of Tuesday, 6th of August’. The information provided at this meeting by Mr Gilmartin in relation to those efforts was described by Mr Kay as ‘extremely vague’. His memorandum noted that ‘realistically it appears extremely unlikely that this will happen.’

15.11 The memorandum also noted that at the meeting of 2 August 1991 Mr Gilmartin gave ‘a categoric undertaking that in deference to the wishes of the bank he would sign’ the share subscription agreement (a copy of which was given to him on the day) by 9 August 1991, subject to ‘(a) having an equal percentage shareholding to O’Callaghan, (b) agreement with O’Callaghan re the professional team and (c) approval of the draft by his solicitor.’

15.12 The meeting on 2 August 1991 concluded on the following basis as noted by Mr Kay:

Finally we said that we would have to reflect on his views, what reliance could we place on his assurances, the repercussions of his non-cooperation and the reliance on the Heads of Terms Agreement. He maintains that the Heads of Terms would not stand up legally as they were signed under duress but he was at pains to point out that he had no dispute with the bank but he felt that he was being unfairly treated by O’Callaghan. He is conscious of the implications of a total breakdown and undertook to make every effort to resolve the situation.

15.13 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin confirmed that he had a significant problem with the proposed Share Subscription Agreement, which, it was noted, he conveyed to Mr Kay and Mr Donagh in the course of the meeting on 2 August 1991, namely that the proposed shareholding in Barkhill left Riga with a larger share than he, Mr Gilmartin, would have.

15.14 It was acknowledged that Mr Gilmartin was very hostile to the 31 May 1991 Heads of Agreement and that he had been equally unhappy with the earlier Heads of Agreements of 15 February 1991 and 14 December 1990.

15.15 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he advised Mr Kay at the 2 August 1991 meeting that he ‘would not accept’ a proposed 444/9 shareholding for Mr O’Callaghan/Riga. He acknowledged having told Mr Kay that he would accept a situation where both he and Riga had an equal shareholding in Barkhill. Mr Gilmartin had also suggested to AIB that Mr O’Callaghan should repay the IR£2.15m which Mr Gilmartin had paid him (for the option agreement) and that Mr O’Callaghan should then invest equity equal to that which had been provided by him. He maintained that, had this occurred, AIB's exposure would have been reduced to a minimum.

15.16 In any event, efforts continued in August 1991 to persuade Mr Gilmartin to sign a Share Subscription Agreement and to formalise the arrangements which had been agreed on 31 May 1991.

15.17 On 15 August 1991 a memorandum prepared by Mr Donagh following a meeting between himself, Mr Kay and Mr Byrne of AIB's legal department, stated: 'The percentage equity share of each party to be clarified i.e. 44:33:22 or 40:40:20 as recently requested by Tom Gilmartin.'

15.18 A further meeting took place on 29 August 1991 in the Airport Hotel at Heathrow between Mr Gilmartin, Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Deane, Mr Kay and Mr Donagh during which Mr Donagh produced a copy of a draft Share Subscription Agreement. A manuscript note on the cover page of a copy of the proposed draft (as discovered to the Tribunal by AIB) indicated the following: 'All parties happy with general content and it was agreed a formal signing to take place on Wednesday next'. No other note or memorandum relating to this meeting was provided to the Tribunal.

15.19 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin (although he appeared to have little memory of the meeting or of the circumstances in which the agreement was produced to him) stated that although still unhappy with the proposed agreement, he agreed to sign the Share Subscription Agreement on the basis that he had an equal 40 per cent shareholding with Mr O'Callaghan, with AIB holding the balance. His decision to conclude this agreement was, Mr Gilmartin said, prompted by his personal financial circumstances and his difficulty with the UK Revenue matter. Mr Gilmartin described the meeting on 29 August 1991 as 'heated'.

15.20 Some days later, Mr Deane furnished Mr Gilmartin with a draft of an agreement wherein it was proposed that Riga would purchase from Mr Gilmartin the loan of IR£5.25m which the Gilmartins had made to Barkhill, for an upfront payment of IR£100,000 to Mr and Mrs Gilmartin, with the remaining balance to be paid on a phased basis. The purpose of this proposed agreement was in effect to enable Riga to buy out the Gilmartins' interest in Barkhill.

THE LEAD UP TO THE SIGNING OF THE SHARE SUBSCRIPTION AGREEMENT IN SEPTEMBER 1991

16.01 On 4 September 1991, Mr Kay received a letter from Mr John Murphy of M. J. Horgan & Sons Solicitors, Cork which stated as follows:

Dear Mr Kay

We today received instructions from Mr Thomas Gilmartin in relation to a dispute which has arisen between him and your bank the resolution of which apparently involves a three-sided deal being done between Allied Irish Banks, Mr Noel [sic] O'Callaghan (property developer), and our client. You will appreciate that to enable us to advise our client, Mr Gilmartin, we shall need a reasonable opportunity of perusing the agreement, we assure that we shall deal with the matter as expeditiously as possible.

Hopefully we shall be in touch with you concerning the text of the document prior to the end of this week.

16.02 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he recalled at this time engaging the services of Mr Murphy, a Cork based Solicitor, at the suggestion of a third party. He spoke to Mr Murphy on the telephone and provided him with a broad outline of the events current at that time concerning Quarryvale. He appeared unsure, however, if he had in fact instructed Mr Murphy to write to AIB.

16.03 On 5 September 1991 formal letters were written by Mr Donagh to Mr Gilmartin, Mrs Gilmartin and Riga. These letters, which were identical in content, demanded that the Share Subscription Agreement, as envisaged by the Heads of Agreement of 31 May 1991, be executed by all parties on or before Friday 13 September 1991. If that did not occur, AIB would take such steps, as it deemed appropriate, to recover all sums due to it by Barkhill.

16.04 On 12 September 1991 Mr Murphy, Solicitor, wrote to Mr Kay on behalf of Mr Gilmartin formally requesting that AIB postpone taking further action until 18 September 1991, a date on which Mr Gilmartin expected to be in a position to provide satisfactory evidence that he had an alternative source of funding available to him to complete the Quarryvale development and which was sufficient to discharge liabilities due to AIB. Mr Kay refused to postpone the issue beyond 13 September 1991.

16.05 Notwithstanding the exchange of correspondence which took place between Mr Murphy and AIB, and its agents, with regard to Mr Gilmartin and the draft Share Subscription Agreement, Mr Gilmartin was not ultimately represented by, or accompanied by Mr Murphy when he attended AIB on 13 September 1991 to sign the agreement.

16.06 The meeting to sign the Share Subscription Agreement took place at AIB on 13 September 1991. Mr Gilmartin was represented by Mr Seamus Maguire, Solicitor, at this meeting. Mr Maguire told the Tribunal that he attended the meeting on 13 September 1991, late at night and after it had commenced. He attended as a solicitor representing Mrs Gilmartin.¹¹ He said that he found Mr Gilmartin in a very distressed state and that AIB were threatening to wind up Barkhill unless Mr Gilmartin signed the agreement.

16.07 Ultimately, the Share Subscription Agreement was signed by all parties on that night. Under its terms, Mr Gilmartin became a 40 per cent shareholder in Barkhill, Riga became a 40 per cent shareholder and AIB Capital Markets became a 20 per cent shareholder. Under the agreement, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Pitcher¹² were appointed to the Board of Directors of Barkhill. Mr Gilmartin, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane also signed the necessary documentation which enabled the transfer of the shareholding in Merrygrove Estates (with whom Dublin Corporation were contracted to sell the Neilstown lands) to Barkhill.

16.08 Mr Gilmartin’s main bone of contention on 13 September 1991 was the extent to which his own shareholding in Barkhill was diluted in the absence of any direct financial contribution by Mr O’Callaghan/Riga. This was the subject of discussion between Mr Gilmartin and Mr David McGrath.

16.09 Mr Gilmartin maintained that he had attended a meeting in the offices of William Fry, Solicitors on 13 September 1991 in the course of which it was made clear to him that unless he signed the agreement AIB would call in their loans and he would never collect a penny of his money. A memorandum prepared by Mr Neville O’Byrne (of William Fry Solicitors) made reference to a meeting attended by Mr Gilmartin, Mr Deane, Mr Kay and a Mr Murtagh (of AIB). Mr Gilmartin believed that Mr McGrath also attended and that he was the one who delivered the ultimatum to sign the agreement. Mr McGrath’s belief was that he was not at the meeting but he accepted that if he had been present, it was something he would have been likely to have said.

16.10 Mr McGrath recalled a meeting with Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan prior to the signing of the Share Subscription Agreement. Although he could not recall the date of this encounter, he believed it took place at some point between May 1991 and the date of the signing of the Agreement. He had no idea who set up this meeting, although it was quite possible that he had asked Mr Kay to arrange it. He acknowledged that there was no memorandum or correspondence in relation to the matter on the AIB file. He said it was one of those ‘heavy’ meetings with significant forthright discussion. Both he and Mr Gilmartin had used strong language. Mr Gilmartin had been told that his money was gone and that AIB had the option of putting in a Receiver but that in its judgement it would be better if he worked with Mr O’Callaghan to complete the site assembly, achieve zoning and planning permission, and find a development partner. He believed that the purpose of the meeting was to convey the necessity for Mr Gilmartin to sign the Share Subscription Agreement so that AIB could unlock the monies it had approved by way of further loan facility to Barkhill. Mr McGrath could not recall whether Mr Gilmartin had complained about the lack of parity between his and Mr O’Callaghan’s shareholding, nor could he recall if he was present for the signing of the Share Subscription Agreement on 13 September 1991 but he believed he was not present, as Mr Kay had signed the agreement on behalf of AIB. When asked what complaints Mr Gilmartin had conveyed when they met he stated that Mr Gilmartin said that ‘Corkmen’ were ‘robbers’ to which Mr McGrath had responded that Mr Gilmartin’s money was already gone. His meeting with Mr Gilmartin had lasted one or two hours.

¹¹ Mr Maguire had been appointed by Power of Attorney to represent the interests of Mrs Gilmartin.

THE GILMARTIN/RIGA LTD ‘SIDE’ AGREEMENT

17.01 By a Side Agreement¹³ made on 13 September 1991 between Riga and Mr and Mrs Gilmartin it was provided that the Gilmartin’s would transfer their shareholding in Barkhill to Riga for IR£1, in consideration of Riga procuring repayment of the Gilmartins’ loan of IR£5,250,000 to Barkhill. It was agreed that Riga would procure repayment of IR£100,000 of this loan on 15 September 1991 and would endeavour to procure the balance in three IR£1m instalments over a period of one year followed by an IR£2.15m to be paid at a time to be agreed. This agreement was subsequently varied on two occasions, on 28 September 1991 and again in January 1992¹⁴. The IR£100,000 payment was provided to the Gilmartins by Riga on 20 September 1991. This IR£100,000 was then added to the debt owed by Barkhill in Riga’s books at year end 30 April 1992. At that year end, the Riga /Barkhill inter-company loan balance showed an indebtedness of slightly in excess of IR1.2m. The Barkhill indebtedness to the Gilmartins was reduced by IR£100,000, and correspondingly its liability to Riga increased by the same amount.

¹³ A draft of which had been furnished to Mr Gilmartin some days previously.

¹⁴ Ultimately the agreement was not put into effect and the Gilmartins’ shareholding was duly bought out in 1996 in the course of the Grosvenor Properties Plc deal.

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S 'EXPENSES' PAYMENTS

18.01 On 3 December 1991, Mr O'Callaghan wrote to Mr Kay enclosing 'a list of payments made by Riga Limited on behalf of Barkhill and payments due to be paid by Barkhill.' The 'Payments made by Riga Ltd on behalf of Barkhill' were listed as follows:

	'Remarks
20/09/1991 – Tom Gilmartin - £100,000
23/09/1991 – Expenses - £10,000	I will explain on Friday
27/09/1991 – Frank Dunlop - £8,484.29	Brochures. Invoice available.
11/10/1991 – Expenses - £10,000	I will explain on Friday
11/11/1991 – Ambrose Kelly - £26,195	Architect, model etc. Invoice available'

18.02 The 'I will explain Friday' reference to the two 'expenses' sums was a reference to an intended meeting on the following Friday. The Tribunal was satisfied that such a meeting took place,¹⁵ and probably on 6 December 1991.

18.03 It was duly established, in the course of the public hearings, that the two 'expenses' amounts were payments which Mr O'Callaghan claimed were political contributions made to Mr Liam Lawlor and Cllr Colm McGrath in September 1991 and October 1991 respectively.¹⁶

18.04 Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that he advised Mr Kay what both payments represented. Mr O'Callaghan testified as follows:

'I explained to him what both of those payments were for. That is that the payment to the late Liam Lawlor and the payment to McGrath, that they were both election expenses paid for the June elections. And that I wanted them to be reimbursed because as far as I was concerned they were Barkhill expenses.'

Mr O'Callaghan maintained that Mr Kay had agreed that the two payments could be reimbursed to Riga out of the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account but that he had made it clear at the time that they would be the only political payments that Barkhill would refund to Riga.

18.05 In the course of his evidence Mr Kay accepted that he had received Mr O'Callaghan's letter of 3 December 1991 and that the meeting referred to by Mr

¹⁵ Mr O'Callaghan's name appeared in Mr Dunlop's diary for 6 December 1991, suggesting his presence in Dublin.

¹⁶ See Parts 7 and 9.

O'Callaghan had probably taken place, although Mr Kay had no record of such a meeting. He agreed that by virtue of the reference to 'I will explain on Friday' in the letter, Mr O'Callaghan must have discussed to whom or for what purpose, the two IR£10,000 payments had been made. Mr Kay said that he had no recollection of Mr O'Callaghan informing him that one of the IR£10,000 payments represented a political contribution to Cllr McGrath, and indeed denied that he had been told this.

18.06 Mr Kay contended that if that had been the case 'the alarm bells would certainly have rung in my head', as he would not have considered such a payment to have been appropriate, and he would not have approved it 'off my own bat'. Mr Kay believed that Mr O'Callaghan must have given him some more 'innocuous' explanation as to the purpose of the two IR£10,000 'expenses' payments.

18.07 Mr Kay was not questioned in the course of his sworn evidence to the Tribunal in relation to the September 1991 IR£10,000 payment to Mr Lawlor because at the time Mr Kay gave evidence, Mr O'Callaghan had not disclosed to the Tribunal that one of the IR£10,000 payments was in fact a payment to Mr Lawlor, claiming lack of recollection as to the beneficiary of the payment.¹⁷ Mr Kay was therefore questioned only in relation to the IR£10,000 payment to Cllr McGrath, and specifically, as to what information had been provided to him by Mr O'Callaghan in relation to that payment.

18.08 Mr Kay acknowledged that he had not recorded whatever explanation had been tendered by Mr O'Callaghan in relation to these two 'expenses' payments of IR£10,000 each.

18.09 In any event, whatever explanation had been tendered by Mr O'Callaghan at the meeting was sufficient for approval to have been given by AIB for Riga to be reimbursed from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account, in respect of both payments. (See below)

18.10 Mr O'Callaghan had made the payments to Mr Lawlor and Cllr. McGrath by way of personal cheque drawn on his own account and had been duly reimbursed by Riga. Neither the payment of IR£10,000 to Mr Lawlor on 23 September 1991 nor the amount of IR£10,000 paid to Cllr McGrath on 11 October 1991 were identified in Riga's cheque payments book as funding payments to these individuals, by way of political contribution or otherwise. Both payments were simply recorded as 'Quarryvale/West Park expenses'. Insofar as ¹⁷However in correspondence and in later sworn evidence he clarified that Mr Lawlor was the recipient of this payment IR£10,000.

Mr O’Callaghan’s personal records described the beneficiaries of the payments, it was to the extent that the cheque stub relating to the 11 October 1991 payment of IR£10,000 to Cllr McGrath stated ‘OOC cheque to OOC...C / McGrath...£10,000...In/out’. The cheque stub relating to the September 1991 payment to Mr Lawlor was not made available to the Tribunal.

18.11 Having reimbursed Mr O’Callaghan for the two sums of IR£10,000 in ‘Quarryvale / Westpark expenses’ paid by him on 23 September and 11 October 1991 respectively, Mr O’Callaghan, by his letter of 3 December 1991, approached AIB seeking to recoup these sums from Barkhill. The two sums of IR£10,000 were duly reimbursed to Riga from the Barkhill Number 2 loan account on 24 January 1992 and were included in the sum of IR£56,598.71¹⁸ repaid to Riga from the Barkhill Number 2 loan on that date.

18.12 Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Barry Pitcher (the AIB nominated Director of Barkhill) authorised the payment from the Barkhill Number 2 loan account. The payments were described as ‘sundry expenses – 20,000’. The text of the authorisation was in Mr Kay’s handwriting. The other payments for which Riga was reimbursed on 24 January 1992 included a payment of IR£26,195 which Riga had made on behalf of Barkhill to Mr Ambrose Kelly and two payments of IR£8,228.42¹⁹ and IR£8,484.29 made to Frank Dunlop and Associates Ltd.

18.13 Prior to Riga’s recouping of the two sums of IR£10,000 referred to in the letter of 3 December 1991, both were posted in January 1992 in Riga’s nominal ledger, as Quarryvale related expenses.

18.14 Ms Clare Cowhig, Riga’s auditor, told the Tribunal that when she queried the two payments of IR£10,000, she had been simply informed, most probably by Mr Deane, that they were Quarryvale ‘expenses’.

18.15 In contrast to the manner in which the two IR£10,000 ‘expenses’ payments were recorded in its books, Riga’s half year accounts to 31 October 1991 revealed that a IR£5,000 political contribution made by Riga to Mr Micheál Martin in June 1991 was identified exactly as that. The Tribunal also noted that a IR£5,000 ‘cash’ cheque of 18 November 1991 was similarly identified in the cheque payments book and nominal ledger for the year ended 30 April 1992 as a political contribution made to Mr Lawlor. This was the IR£5,000 which Mr

¹⁸ Riga had sought in total repayment of some IR£62,907.71 of which it received IR£56,598.71. The difference (IR£6,309) represented the amount by which the total reclaimed to that time exceeded the IR£1m loan sanctioned to Riga in May 1991 to be expended for the benefit of Barkhill.

O’Callaghan had originally claimed was a political contribution to Mr Lawlor, but in respect of which he subsequently said was a payment to himself personally to assist in the purchase of a pony.²⁰

18.16 Within the audit working papers of Barkhill for the period from incorporation to 30 April 1992, the two IR£10,000 payments were ultimately attributed as monies paid by Barkhill to Mr Gilmartin. As a consequence of Mr Gilmartin being deemed to have been the recipient of these monies in Barkhill’s books, Mr Gilmartin’s Directors Loan Account – the monies owed by Barkhill to Mr Gilmartin – was reduced by IR£20,000.

18.17 Both Mr O’Callaghan and, in effect, Mr Deane acknowledged that Mr Gilmartin had never been apprised of the IR£10,000 payments that had been made to Mr Lawlor and Cllr McGrath, and they agreed that the two IR£10,000 ‘Expenses’ should not have been attributed as payments made to Mr Gilmartin.

18.18 Neither Mr O’Callaghan nor Mr Deane could account to the Tribunal as to how, or why, the two IR£10,000 payments, claimed by Mr O’Callaghan as having been paid as ‘political contributions’ to Messrs Lawlor and McGrath in September and October 1991 respectively, were ultimately ascribed in Barkhill’s audited accounts as payments made to Mr Gilmartin. Mr Gilmartin stated that he knew nothing about these payments. The Tribunal was satisfied that this was the case.

18.19 Mr Leo Fleming of Deloitte & Touche (Barkhill’s auditors) was uncertain as to who had decided that the two payments of IR£10,000 be attributed as payments made to Mr Gilmartin. Mr Fleming initially suggested that the decision was based on information from either Mr Aidan Lucey (Riga’s Bookkeeper) or Mr Gilmartin. Later, however, Mr Fleming appeared to discount the possibility that he had discussed the matter with Mr Gilmartin and suggested that either he had discussed the matter with Mr Lucey, or had taken it upon himself to transfer the expenses to Mr Gilmartin’s loan account ‘as an interim measure subject to Mr Gilmartin’s review’. The Tribunal believed it unlikely that Mr Gilmartin would indeed have accepted that these payments were made in his name, unless he had done so by mistake.

18.20 In any event, the Tribunal accepted that Mr Fleming probably received information which identified Mr Gilmartin as the beneficiary of these funds and it appeared that although Mr Fleming sought specific information from Riga, correct information regarding these ‘Expenses’ payments was not provided to him.

²⁰ See Part 9.

18.21 As auditor of Barkhill's books, Mr Fleming sought supporting documentation for the payments and on 15 December 1992 he wrote to Mr Lucey of Riga. In a Schedule attached to that letter Mr Fleming sought documentation relating to:

Two amounts of £10,000 each described as 'Sundry' in the Riga reimbursement from AIB No 2 A/c on the 21/1/92 which were apparently paid to Tom Gilmartin.

18.22 Mr Fleming sent copies of this letter to Mr Gilmartin, Mr O'Callaghan and Ms Basquille of AIB. The reference to the two IR£10,000 sums having been paid to Mr Gilmartin was clearly incorrect, as Mr Gilmartin had never received them, nor had it been intended that he should have.

18.23 Notwithstanding that this correspondence was addressed to Mr Lucey, the information sought was not provided. On 8 February 1993, Mr Lucey wrote to Mr Fleming (with a copy of the letter sent to Mr Deane) stating that he did not have any further supporting documentation for these (and certain other) items and advising Mr Fleming to 'check with AIB as they paid out most of those items'. Following a telephone conversation they had on 30 April 1993 about unresolved matters, Mr Fleming wrote to Mr Deane on 3 May 1993, repeating his request for information. Mr Fleming's request was, inter alia, the subject of discussion at a Barkhill board meeting of 16 June 1993.²¹

18.24 Mr Pitcher, the AIB-appointed Director of Barkhill, attended this meeting of 16 June 1993 at which Mr Fleming's request for backup documentation for the two IR£10,000 'expenses' payments was discussed. He told the Tribunal that he could not 'shed light' on the two IR£10,000 payments, although he had certified their payment in January 1992. He emphasised to the Tribunal that he was simply a non-executive director and was not involved in the day-to-day management of the company. Specifically, Mr Pitcher said that he had no direct dealings with Messrs O'Callaghan and Deane. Mr O'Farrell who was also at that meeting maintained that he had no recollection of any discussion at that meeting in relation to the two IR£10,000 payments.

18.25 The Tribunal was satisfied that in December 1992 and again in May 1993, Mr Deane (and Mr O'Callaghan) had been provided with Mr Fleming's Schedule and were aware of the request for documentation relating to the two payments.

²¹ See also Part 5

18.26 Mr O’Callaghan acknowledged that he did not provide the information relating to the two IR£10,000 amounts to Mr Fleming. On Day 885, Tribunal Counsel questioned Mr O’Callaghan as to why had had not provided the information to Mr Fleming, thus:

‘Q. So the first port of call for any such payment particularly a figure of round sum of 10,000 pounds would have been the cheque payments book, isn't that right?’

A. Yes.

Q. And if you had gone to the cheque payments book –

A. I would never have gone there. That's the trouble.

Q. Asked Mr. Lucey –

A. Yeah.

Q. If you had said to Mr. Lucey for example, look Riga was repaid money in January will you find out what the breakdown was?’

A. Uh-huh.

Q. I suggest to you it wouldn't have taken Mr. Lucey very long to find two items of 10,000 pounds?’

A. No, I agree, yes.

Q. Isn't that right?’

A. Yes.

Q. But that step was never taken, isn't that right?’

A. That's right.

Q And no information was ever provided to Deloitte & Touche that in fact ... those two figures of 10,000 pounds that were written up to Mr. Gilmartin's loan account was a payment of 10,000 pounds to Mr. Lawlor and another payment to Mr. McGrath, isn't that right?’

A.Yes.

Q. Why could that be, Mr. O'Callaghan, when there was no necessity if those payments had been made and accounted for, what would have been the difficulty in disclosing to Deloitte & Touche that in fact what one had was not an item of unspecified expenses but a payment to a politician that could be properly recorded on and accounted?’

A. There was no reason except that there wasn't enough of attention paid to that paragraph to figure out what – it was my fault I presume. I never looked at it in detail. I didn't give myself enough of time to figure out what to figure out what it was all about is more, that's more than likely what happened.

Q. If we look now just looking back on it, Mr. O'Callaghan, and we see that from the very initiation of the two transactions of 10,000 pounds, other than your personal bank stub and the note that you made on the document of the 14th of November 1991, recording Mr. McGrath's name. There is nothing that links Mr. Liam Lawlor or Mr. McGrath to these two payments, isn't that right?

A. Uh-huh that's, right.

Q. And insofar as the auditor of Barkhill was concerned, that is Mr. Fleming of Deloitte & Touche, unless somebody came to him and said of their own knowledge look, this is in fact a political payment, a payment to Mr. Lawlor or McGrath, Mr. Fleming could never have known about it, isn't that right?

A. Yes.'

18.27 While Mr Deane acknowledged that he had been made aware of the payments to Mr Lawlor and Cllr McGrath shortly after the event, he did not, he said, 'link' these payments to the two 'expenses' payments in respect of which Mr Fleming was continuing to seek backup documentation. Mr Deane's Discovery to the Tribunal yielded a copy of Mr Fleming's schedule on which the word 'noted' in Mr Deane's handwriting appeared against the two IR£10,000 expenses items. Mr Deane accounted for this on the basis that the two payments had been noted by Mr Fleming '...as apparently made to Tom Gilmartin', and Mr Deane had taken this 'at face value.'

18.28 In the course of his evidence Mr Deane agreed that a degree of 'unusualness' pertained to the two IR£10,000 'expenses' payments made in September/October 1991 to Mr Lawlor and Cllr McGrath. These unusual features were as follows:

- Both were paid from Mr O'Callaghan's personal account to the individuals concerned.
- Both payments were described as expenses or sundry expenses in documentation created at or around the time of their payment.
- Although properly sanctioned by two Directors of Barkhill Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Pitcher (AIB's representative on the board), Mr Gilmartin was not asked to sanction the payments.
- Barkhill's auditors ultimately attributed the payments as having been made (presumably on instructions from the company) to Mr Gilmartin, yet

Mr Gilmartin derived no benefit therefrom nor had he any connection to the payments.

- No invoices or written acknowledgements were furnished by the recipients of the payments.
- The ultimate recipients of the two IR£10,000 payments made by Mr O’Callaghan, and in respect of which he had been reimbursed, were not identified in the records of Riga or Barkhill, save for the manuscript notations already referred to.
- Mr Donagh’s evidence (see below) was that he believed that he had been told by Mr Deane that the monies had been paid in connection with meetings Mr O’Callaghan had with councillors and local interest groups, including the hiring of venues for public meetings.
- Mr O’Callaghan’s letter of 3 December 1991 to Mr Kay of AIB seeking reimbursement to Riga from Barkhill for these expenses and other expenditure, while identifying the subject of the other expenditure, had not identified either the purpose of or the identity of the recipients of the two IR£10,000 payments, citing them only as ‘Expenses’ in respect of which Mr O’Callaghan would ‘explain on Friday’.

18.29 Mr Donagh, who agreed that it was he who had stamped and initialled Mr O’Callaghan’s 3 December 1991 letter, when asked if he had been present at the meeting between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Kay on, probably, Friday 6 December 1991, stated ‘The explanation in relation to those payments didn’t take place at one discussion, one telephone call, one meeting. I had a number of discussions during December and January with both Mr Gilmartin²² and Mr Deane. And I certainly have a recollection of also having a meeting, if not two, with Mr Deane in relation to the matter.’

18.30 On Day 851 Mr Donagh was questioned as follows:

Q. Irrespective of when the explanation was given, can you tell the Tribunal, Mr. Donagh, who received the two 10,000 pounds payments referred to in that letter?

A. Again, my recollection from discussions that I had with Mr. Deane, they were... I have no recollection of two payments of ten. But I certainly have a recollection of discussion of 10,000. It related to, as it says there, expenses. And I remember having discussions with Mr. Deane where he said there were a number of different meetings being held with local interest groups, councillors etc. to appraise them of the overall development etc. etc. and that they'd hired community halls, they had laid on sandwiches and tea ladies and things like that²³. And Owen had bought rounds of drinks and things like that afterwards for the people. And he hadn't got receipts for every little bit. And there were a number of those kind of ones. And that was the primary explanation that was given to me at the time. In terms of completing the reconciliation, just as matters evolved and with both Tom Gilmartin and John Deane, Owen O'Callaghan being happy and satisfied that the reconciliation was eventually agreed. I have to say I didn't dwell too much or didn't – there was lots of other issues in terms of, as I said, the Bruton closing etc. etc. So that's my only recollection of an explanation that was given at the time. But I certainly recall that discussion.

Q. It would appear that the stub of ... Mr. O'Callaghan's cheque book which relates to the payment on the 10th of October '91, contains the reference C/McGrath. Do you see that?

A. I do, yes.

Q. And I understand that it would be Mr. O'Callaghan's evidence that that payment was to Mr. Colm McGrath, Councillor.

A. Well that was not advised to me.

Q. At the time?

A. At the time, no. No, not advised to me, no.

Q. Did you know Councillor McGrath?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Mr. McGrath was the signatory in the February '91 motion. Did you know that?

A. I may have done so but it wouldn't have meant a lot to me.

Q. But can the Tribunal take it that you would have queried those two payments and that insofar as you were given an explanation it was that they were to reimburse Mr. O'Callaghan in respect of out-of-pocket expenses in connection [with] local meetings held in the Quarryvale area at this time?

A. Certainly I can certainly recall from – that that was the explanation given to me on one of them. Just from my recall I can't remember that there were two.

²³Mr Deane said that he doubted that he had ever identified '10,000 pounds being accosted to that'.

18.31 With reference to Mr Donagh's evidence of his understanding of the purpose of one of the payments, in fact there was no evidence before the Tribunal that Mr O'Callaghan was the instigator of a series of public meetings which undoubtedly took place in the period September to December 1991. A note of a meeting attended by Mr Kay, Mr Donagh, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Deane on 20 September 1991 made reference to Mr O'Callaghan's attendance at a Palmerstown residents meeting on the previous evening, and it recorded, inter alia, as follows:

From mid-October the other 5 Residence [sic] Associations will be holding meetings and Owen O'Callaghan will attend as guest to explain Quarryvale position.

18.32 Thus, notwithstanding Mr Donagh's evidence, whatever explanation was tendered to him by Mr O'Callaghan for an expenditure of IR£10,000 on 'Expenses', it was unlikely that Mr O'Callaghan could have been referring to hiring meeting venues in the period September to November 1991. Indeed, even when conveying his recollection of what he was told, Mr Donagh himself agreed that IR£10,000 was 'Absolutely' a large amount of money for anyone to have spent on hiring meeting venues.

18.33 Mr Kay's handwritten document which detailed the total repayment (IR£62,907.71) sought by Riga from the Barkhill no 2 loan account specifically identified three (the two payments to Mr Dunlop and the payment to Mr Kelly) of the four items which made up this total but it did not specify the recipient(s) of the two IR£10,000 'Expenses' payments. In similar fashion to Mr O'Callaghan's mode of description, Mr Kay noted them as follows 'Sundry expenses 20,000-00'. Mr Kay's note (in effect the bank's authorisation document following which the reimbursement was made to Riga) also included five further payments to Barkhill's creditors, which were to be paid to them directly by bank drafts from the Barkhill No. 2 loan account. In the case of each of these, the identity of the intended payees (Taggarts Architects, Deloitte & Touche, Mr Fintan Gunne and Mr Gilmartin) was clearly identified.

18.34 Mr Donagh did not recall whether in January 1992 he had sight of the authorisation document prepared by Mr Kay (and duly signed by Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Pitcher) consequent upon which the IR£56,598.71 was repaid to Riga. On 14 January at a meeting attended by Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Deane, Mr McGrath, Mr Kay and Mr Donagh, the reconciliation was the subject of discussion and the memorandum of that meeting (provided to the Tribunal in Mr Deane's discovery and probably written by him) noted that AIB agreed to the transfer of IR£62,907 following which Riga was duly reimbursed (IR£56,598.71). This memorandum noted that there were 'invoices available' in respect of the IR£62,907. When questioned as to whether invoices had indeed been available at the time, Mr Kay said that it was his assumption that if Mr Deane had said that there were ‘invoices available’, Mr Deane must have had ‘something available’. However, Mr Kay told the Tribunal that he had no recollection of seeing invoices relating to the two IR£10,000 payments.

18.35 Mr Donagh agreed that prior to AIB’s sanction in relation to the payments, Mr Gilmartin did not sign and had not been asked to sign an authorisation in order to facilitate Riga’s reimbursement for the two IR£10,000 ‘Expenses’ payments. Yet, at the time when Mr O’Callaghan’s letter of 3 December 1991 was being discussed, preparations were under way for Mr Gilmartin to sign a document prepared by AIB authorising a draw down from the Barkhill no 2 loan account to facilitate payment directly to a number of Barkhill’s creditors. This draw down, furnished to Mr Gilmartin on 19 December 1991, did not make reference to the two ‘Expenses’ payments of IR£10,000.

18.36 Mr Donagh sought to explain this anomaly in the following manner:

‘..Because the reconciliation of all of the payments hadn’t been concluded at that point in time. It was only concluded in January 1992. So at that stage a number of payments that were considered ‘urgent’ and both parties were in agreement with, were paid and signed off inverted commas, but not the reconciliation of every payment and the explanation thereof.’

18.37 The payments which Mr Gilmartin, as a Director of Barkhill, authorised were to Mr Seamus Maguire solicitor, Taggarts Architects, Mr Fintan Gunne, Deloitte & Touche and Mr Dunlop. These creditors were also listed²⁴ on the undated authorisation document which had been prepared by Mr Kay and which was signed by Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Pitcher on some date between 3 December 1991 and 24 January 1992.

18.38 Notwithstanding that the document which Mr Gilmartin duly signed on 19 December 1991²⁵ was prepared by Mr Kay, it did not make reference to any of the payments (including the two IR£10,000 ‘expenses’ payments), in respect of which Riga was reimbursed from the Barkhill no 2 loan account.

18.39 Mr Kay did not know why he had not sought Mr Gilmartin’s authorisation for the reimbursement but believed it likely, when requesting his authorisation, that he had concentrated on immediate payments to creditors out of the Barkhill no 2 loan account rather than historical payments for which Riga was seeking reimbursement. Mr Kay stated that at no stage had he deliberately withheld information from Mr Gilmartin.

²⁴ In fact some of those creditors were also referred to in Mr O’Callaghan’s letter of 3 December 1991 under the heading ‘payments to be made by Barkhill.’

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE 'EXPENSES' PAYMENTS

19.01 The Tribunal accepted Mr O'Callaghan's evidence that he informed Mr Kay of the identities of the recipients of the two IR£10,000 payments (and to that extent it rejected Mr Kay's evidence of his assumption that he had been given an innocuous explanation for that expenditure), and that Mr Kay had indicated to him a degree of displeasure that such payments had been made but that AIB would permit their reimbursement to Riga on that occasion as a 'once off.'

19.02 The Tribunal believed that decisions were made, firstly by Mr O'Callaghan not to identify the identities of the recipients of the two IR£10,000 payments in his correspondence to Mr Kay, and secondly by Mr Kay not to record the identities of those individuals in any internal AIB memoranda, in order to ensure that such information would not be documented. Thus, the Tribunal was satisfied that senior personnel within AIB knew (as of December 1991) that payments had been made to two named politicians (Mr Lawlor and Cllr McGrath) and that the payments had been treated by Mr O'Callaghan as Quarryvale related expenses for which Riga sought reimbursement, duly acceded to by AIB.

19.03 The repayment of the two IR£10,000 'Expenses' payments from the Barkhill No.2 loan account was permitted by AIB (albeit, as testified to by Mr O'Callaghan with a degree of concern on its part), despite the requirement (as per the IR£3m loan facility sanction dated 13 September 1991) that funds drawn down 'may only be used by the borrower towards, or for the purpose of the purchase of the properties set out in Appendix III hereto and to discharge costs directly related to the site...'

19.04 The Tribunal rejected the position advanced in evidence that the reason for not alerting Mr Gilmartin by 19 December 1991 to the two IR£10,000 'expenses' payments was that a decision might not have been taken as to whether reimbursement would be made. Even if that were the case, there was no reason for Mr Gilmartin not to have been advised that a request had been made to repay to Riga a sum of IR£20,000 out of the Barkhill No 2 loan account. In all the circumstances the Tribunal was led to the conclusion that there was a concerted effort in December 1991 to keep the fact of the two IR£10,000

‘expenses’ payments from Mr Gilmartin in order to avoid questions being raised by him as to their purpose.

19.05 The Tribunal rejected Mr O’Callaghan’s evidence that the only reason for not alerting Mr Fleming as to the true recipients of the money was that ‘not enough attention’ had been paid to Mr Fleming’s request for information on the issue. The Tribunal believed it far more likely that Mr O’Callaghan deliberately withheld information from Mr Fleming (and indeed from Mr Gilmartin), which would have correctly identified the recipients of these funds, in order to maintain secrecy as to their identities because they were politicians. It was noteworthy that other politicians who had been favoured with financial assistance had been clearly identified within Riga’s own accounts.

19.06 The Tribunal found it surprising that Mr Deane in 1993 had not seen fit to write to Mr O’Callaghan (a director of Barkhill) concerning the two IR£10,000 expenses payments, in circumstances where Mr Deane had been written to by Mr Fleming on 3 May 1993, and in circumstances where on receipt of that letter Mr Deane had taken it upon himself to write to a director of Barkhill (Mr Gilmartin) and indeed others (for example Mr Maguire, Solicitor) in an endeavour to obtain answers to Mr Fleming’s queries. Mr Deane’s failure to follow up this matter with Mr O’Callaghan in writing appeared all the more extraordinary given that he himself had written to Mr Fleming on 25 March 1993 requesting that he be updated on outstanding queries in relation to the Barkhill audit, and given that Mr Deane was recorded in the minutes of a Barkhill board meeting of 28 April 1993 as stating that he was pursuing the issue of the completion of the Barkhill audit and outstanding matters in relation thereto ‘...as a matter of urgency.’

19.07 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Fleming, when he sought information as to the purpose of the payments, was not provided with that information and was ultimately wrongly advised that the payments were connected with Mr Gilmartin, thus leading him to assign the payments in Barkhill’s accounts as benefits which had been made to Mr Gilmartin.

19.08 Ultimately, having regard to the manner in which the two ‘expenses’ payments were accounted for in Barkhill’s books, it transpired in the absence of authority from Mr Gilmartin (and his wife) for doing so, he funded the payments made by Mr O’Callaghan to Mr Lawlor and Cllr McGrath.

THE REDEPLOYMENT WITHIN AIB OF MR KAY IN THE AUTUMN OF 1992

MR KAY'S TRANSFER WITHIN AIB

20.01 As the senior manager of the property and construction team in AIB's Corporate Commercial Division from the mid 1980s, and as the AIB executive who dealt with Mr Gilmartin/Barkhill affairs, Mr Kay continued in charge of these affairs until approximately September 1992, when Mr O'Farrell took over that role. During this 1991/2 period, Mr Kay and Mr Gilmartin were regularly in contact and it was quite evident from the evidence given to the Tribunal from both men that they had a friendly working relationship and respected each other. Mr Gilmartin appeared to have trusted Mr Kay to a considerably greater extent than he did the other AIB officials with whom he had contact over a number of years. Mr Kay remarked that Mr Gilmartin spoke freely to him and, while they had many disagreements, they never fell out. Mr Kay said he thought Mr Gilmartin was a 'decent' man.

20.02 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that it was his belief and understanding that Mr Kay was taken off the Barkhill file in the Autumn of 1992, and was in effect demoted within AIB, because AIB took the view that Mr Kay and Mr Gilmartin were too close. This suggestion from Mr Gilmartin as to the reason for his redeployment within AIB was angrily rejected by Mr Kay, who was adamant that his then transfer to another position was in reality a promotion. Mr Gilmartin also alleged that Mr O'Callaghan had told him that AIB had replaced Mr Kay with an individual who was a friend of Mr O'Callaghan.

20.03 The suggestion that Mr Kay had been demoted or transferred to another position within AIB because of his friendly working relationship with Mr Gilmartin was not established, as a matter of probability, to have been the case and appeared to the Tribunal to have been unfounded, and was merely a suspicion on Mr Gilmartin's part.

20.04 In any event, with the exception of the occasion in December 1992 (see below) when he accompanied his colleague Mr McGrath to London to meet with Mr Gilmartin, Mr Kay had no further meetings with Mr Gilmartin (or with Barkhill regarding Quarryvale) subsequent to his internal redeployment in the autumn of 1992.

MR O'FARRELL TAKES OVER FROM MR KAY

20.05 Having taken over the management of the Barkhill file from Mr Kay, Mr O'Farrell was briefed by Mr O'Callaghan at a luncheon meeting on 28 August 1992 on the progress of the Quarryvale rezoning and the Neilstown Stadium project. By the time of Mr O'Farrell's introduction to the Quarryvale file, Mr

O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop’s campaign to secure the support of councillors in advance of the next Quarryvale vote was well under way. Mr O’Farrell’s note of the meeting recorded that Mr O’Callaghan ‘and a team of people are actively lobbying the [councillors]’ and were ‘optimistic’ that they could get a majority vote. However, the possibility of a negative outcome for the rezoning was also being adverted to at that time, as evidenced by a memorandum of 18 August 1992 following a meeting of the AIB Group Credit Committee in relation to Riga. It was noted as follows:

In July 1991 Riga, at our [AIB’s] instigation, acquired a 40% equity stake in Barkhill, effectively for £2.5m (cash of £1.5m, guarantee £1m), In addition, they waived an inter-company debt of £1.35m due by Barkhill. This company owns a 176 acre site at Palmerstown, which has been the subject of considerable publicity and on which there is currently gross AIB exposure of £14.5m). The zoning of the Palmerstown site was altered from Industrial/Residential to Retail by vote of Dublin County Council in mid-1991 but in the subsequent local election, 5 of the Councillors who had supported the rezoning lost their seats. As a result opposition to the retention of Retail zoning mounted and was assisted by the vocal objections of Green Property Plc., who stated that their long planned rival development at Blanchardstown will not proceed, unless the Barkhill site is dezoned. The matter will be decided as part of consideration of the draft Dublin Development Plan, which will be voted on next October. Due to the exceptional abilities and commitment of Owen O’Callaghan, who has worked tirelessly to secure the support of politicians, local interest groups and Council officials, it is possible that retail zoning will be retained following the October vote. Should this be the position, our professional advice is that the value of the site will be greatly enhanced and the prospects of full recovery of the Barkhill debt much improved. If the zoning is reversed, it will be a set back and we will have to re-assess the position.

20.06 Mr O’Farrell told the Tribunal that by September 1992, the approach adopted by AIB was to invest money into the Quarryvale site in the expectation that it would be rezoned. He stated that ‘we had no choice but to follow our money’. The Barkhill debt continued to be a non-performing one and the interest thereon was not being served. Thus, the only prospect for a successful outcome from AIB’s perspective was for Quarryvale to retain its May 1991 zoning. Mr O’Farrell at this time understood Mr O’Callaghan’s efforts to be focused on this issue. He acknowledged that AIB’s opinion of Mr O’Callaghan, as noted in the Credit Committee Report of 18 August 1992, was that Mr O’Callaghan ‘is probably the most respected and capable Shopping Centre developer in Ireland’, and also, ‘the involvement of Owen O’Callaghan in Barkhill is undoubtedly very helpful to us and through his efforts it is probable that the site value will be substantially enhanced, thereby protecting our exposure.'

20.07 Between March and December 1992, in advance of the second crucial Quarryvale vote, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop engaged in intensive lobbying of councillors. The extent of this lobbying is considered in Part 7. In tandem with his lobbying endeavours, Mr O'Callaghan remained in regular contact with AIB, for the most part to persuade them to make payments from the Barkhill No. 2 loan account to discharge expenditure on lobbying and other expenses then being incurred in connection with Quarryvale. Included in the requests for payment and reimbursement were payments made to Shefran and Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd. The manner in which such requests were dealt with by AIB in 1992 and the extent to which AIB were aware of the purpose of such payments is considered in Parts 5 and 6.

THE MEETING IN LONDON ON 17 DECEMBER 1992

21.01 Relations between Mr Gilmartin and Mr O'Callaghan and between Mr Gilmartin and AIB deteriorated progressively throughout 1992. This deterioration stemmed from a number of factors, including Mr Gilmartin's dissatisfaction with his reduced shareholding in Barkhill, the increasing prominence of Mr O'Callaghan as the person leading the project to zone Quarryvale as a Town Centre (and which had been provided for in the third Heads of Agreement), the effective sidelining of Mr Gilmartin, Mr Gilmartin's complaints from mid 1992 onwards about large round-figure payments made to Mr Dunlop/Shefran²⁶ in 1991 and 1992 and Mr Gilmartin's then difficult financial position.²⁷

21.02 In 1992, contact between Mr Gilmartin and AIB culminated in a meeting in London between Mr Gilmartin, Mr Kay and Mr McGrath, on 17 December 1992. Although Mr Kay was no longer involved with Barkhill /Quarryvale and had not been for the previous two or three months, because of his previous good relationship with Mr Gilmartin he was asked by AIB to accompany Mr McGrath to meet Mr Gilmartin in London on 17 December 1992. This was also the date when the vote was scheduled to take place at Dublin County Council relating to Quarryvale, and AIB had become concerned that its success might be undermined by Mr Gilmartin.

21.03 Some days prior to 17 December 1992 Ms Basquille had a telephone conversation with Mr Gilmartin in which he threatened to go to the press with complaints he had relating to the Quarryvale project. Strangely, Ms Basquille did not prepare a memorandum in relation to that telephone call. She gave as probable reasons for her failure to prepare a memorandum that she was busy at the time, or alternatively, having taken the telephone call, she had immediately gone with the information to her superior, Mr O'Farrell, and therefore did not need to prepare a memorandum. The Tribunal did not accept her evidence as credible, given the meticulous nature with which AIB usually documented contact, not only with Mr Gilmartin, but also with Mr Deane and Mr O'Callaghan.

²⁶ See Part 5.

21.04 Mr McGrath told the Tribunal that he had decided that he and Mr Kay should meet Mr Gilmartin in London, and had asked Mr Kay to accompany him for that purpose²⁸. Mr O'Farrell said that he had no recollection of Mr Kay or Mr McGrath reporting back to him after their meeting with Mr Gilmartin in London but suggested that the purpose of the visit was to advise Mr Gilmartin that it was in everyone's interest, including Mr Gilmartin's, that the Quarryvale rezoning vote scheduled for that day should make its way through the County Council, even on the basis of the retail element of Quarryvale being restricted to 250,000 square feet, a proposal to which Mr Gilmartin strongly objected.

21.05 Mr Kay told the Tribunal that Mr McGrath had explained to him in advance of the trip to London that the vote in relation to the rezoning of Quarryvale was imminent and that AIB had been in touch with Mr Gilmartin in relation to it. Mr Kay was led to believe that Ms Basquille had recently spoken to Mr Gilmartin about the upcoming vote and that Mr Gilmartin had told her that he had been made aware that Mr O'Callaghan would probably agree to a scaling back of the size of the retail element of the project. Mr Gilmartin was of the opinion that Mr O'Callaghan, in agreeing to scale back the project, was engaged in a deliberate ploy to diminish his, Mr Gilmartin's, equity in the project, and that in the longer term, the scale of the project would then be increased with Mr Gilmartin no longer part of the picture. According to Mr Kay, Mr Gilmartin had told Ms Basquille that he intended going to the press and that he 'was going to pour out all of his complaints and grievances about how he had been treated', and that he would 'wreck the whole project and bring it down'. Mr Kay said that the purpose of his and Mr McGrath's trip to meet Mr Gilmartin in London was to 'try and assuage his concerns and try and get him to change his mind.'

21.06 Mr Kay described how, when he and Mr McGrath arrived in London, there was no sign of Mr Gilmartin and that they were kept waiting for a couple of hours and were at the point of considering booking an early return flight to Dublin when Mr Gilmartin appeared. Mr Kay said that they discussed the situation with Mr Gilmartin but reached no definite conclusion. Mr Gilmartin told them that he would think about what they had said to him.

21.07 Mr Gilmartin described the 17 December 1992 meeting as a ‘stunt’ to keep him engaged until it was too late for him to contact the County Council offices in Dublin (to request that the Quarryvale motion be withdrawn). Mr Gilmartin described how he and Mr Kay met at the arranged time in the hotel but were kept waiting for a number of hours for Mr McGrath to arrive. Mr Gilmartin said that he ‘suddenly realised that the main reason for Mr McGrath being late, or that was my opinion, was to stall me until after the Council offices were shut, so, when I did try to get through the people answering the phone was John Deane, Frank Dunlop and John Gilbride’

21.08 Mr Kay rejected any suggestion that the visit to London and the delay in the meeting getting underway was all part of a strategy on the bank’s part to divert Mr Gilmartin from being in a position to make contact with ‘whoever his contact people in Dublin were.’

21.09 Mr Kay told the Tribunal that he and Mr McGrath tried to reassure Mr Gilmartin that the Quarryvale project appeared to be moving ahead and that it was not in his interest to torpedo it at that stage or to ‘bring the whole thing down’, as Mr Kay understood that Mr Gilmartin had indicated he was prepared to do, given his earlier discussions with Ms Basquille. When asked by Tribunal Counsel to indicate what he understood Mr Gilmartin’s complaints were at the time, Mr Kay stated:

‘Well only in a very broad outline I suppose. The complaints were mainly against Mr. O’Callaghan. That if he was going to I presume recount all that had happened in terms of the change of ownership of Quarryvale from being 100 per cent his to now being in a minority position and how it had come about. And I don’t think there was any suggestion at that stage that he was going to involve the bank as having been involved in any particular wrongdoing.’

Q. Was he making allegations of wrongdoing against Mr. O’Callaghan?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And was he making allegations of corruption against Mr. O’Callaghan?

A. No, I don’t think he was at that stage’.

21.10 Mr Kay said that the meeting in London took at least two hours. His initial recollection to the Tribunal was that he discussed the meeting and its outcome with Ms Basquille and, possibly, Mr O’Farrell on his return to Dublin, but later in his evidence to the Tribunal he doubted that he had done so, before finally concluding that it was ‘quite possible’ that he had done so.

21.11 Mr McGrath gave the Tribunal a broadly similar account of the 17 December 1992 meeting with Mr Gilmartin in London, as was given by Mr Kay, but added that Mr Gilmartin was two hours late for the meeting. Mr McGrath was concerned that Mr Gilmartin, as a shareholder, intended to talk to the press and he was concerned that if he did so, it would delay the Quarryvale project. Mr McGrath acknowledged that AIB was anxious to avoid adverse publicity relating to Quarryvale prior to the County Council vote.

21.12 He acknowledged that no note or memorandum was prepared in relation to the London meeting but denied that this was unusual for him, as he rarely prepared such documentation. He did accept, however, that the absence of any file note relating to the meeting was quite unusual. He was unable to recall any allegations made by Mr Gilmartin or what was discussed at the meeting. He did not recall if Mr Gilmartin had complained about the Shefran payments or of money being taken from Barkhill or of payments to politicians. Mr McGrath said that he could not recall if Mr Gilmartin made any allegation of collusion as against AIB, nor did he recall him making complaints of bribery and/or corruption. The Tribunal regarded the absence of any memorandum either prior to or subsequent to the meeting as strange and was led by it to the conclusion that, for one reason or another, AIB made the unusual decision to avoid noting details of the discussions with Mr Gilmartin in relation to the reasons for, or the outcome of, the meeting in London.

21.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin's complaints related not just to his opposition to the proposal to limit the retail element of Quarryvale but also related, inter alia, to Mr Dunlop and the Shefran payments totalling IR£150,000 which had been by then paid to Mr Dunlop and of which Mr Gilmartin was by then aware. For the reason set out in part 5 hereof, the Tribunal was satisfied that from June 1992 Mr Gilmartin was aware of the connection between Shefran and Mr Dunlop and that indeed by October 1992 he was aware that between May 1991 and June 1992 Shefran had been paid IR£150,000. The Tribunal had no doubt from the testimonies of Mr Gilmartin and, in particular, Mr Paul Sheeran that Mr Gilmartin's complaints in the lead up to December 1992 and indeed on 17 December 1992, concerned, inter alia, Mr Dunlop and the Shefran payments.

21.14 The Tribunal heard evidence of attempts by Mr Gilmartin to make contact with Cllrs McGrath and Gilbride on the evening of 17 December 1992. It was established, to the Tribunal's satisfaction, that his attempts were not successful largely because the telephones in the Fianna Fail rooms in Dublin County Council were, on the evening in question, being manned by Mr Deane, in order to control contact by Mr Gilmartin with Cllrs McGrath and Gilbride. This issue is also addressed in Part 7.

THE BARKHILL BOARD MEETINGS IN THE PERIOD 1993 TO 1996

22.01 The subsequent memorandum closest in time to the London meeting on 17 December 1992, prepared within AIB, was that prepared by Ms Basquille following a meeting between herself, Mr McGrath, Mr O’Farrell, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane on 20 January 1993. In that memorandum Mr McGrath made reference to a commitment having been given in December 1992 (presumably at the meeting in London) to Mr Gilmartin to hold a Barkhill shareholders’ meeting during the month of January. In her memorandum Ms Basquille referred to an inquiry being made by Mr McGrath as to whenever on 20 January 1993 there was ‘any strategy to bring him on side’ [Mr Gilmartin].

22.02 The majority (if not all) of Barkhill board meetings in the period 1993 to 1996 were held at AIB’s Bankcentre in Ballsbridge. In fact, from the time of Mr O’Callaghan’s involvement in Barkhill the financial affairs of the company were largely conducted at AIB Bankcentre in conjunction with Messrs O’Callaghan and Deane, while the main activity of lobbying councillors was largely managed out of Mr Dunlop’s offices.

22.03 Following on the commitment given to Mr Gilmartin at the December 1992 London meeting, Mr McGrath wrote to Mr Gilmartin on 2 February 1993 regarding a proposed Barkhill board meeting scheduled for 9 February 1993 and reference was made in the letter to Mr Gilmartin’s request (as previously communicated to Mr Kay) to discuss matters with AIB on a ‘one to one basis’. In the event, Mr Gilmartin did not attend the board meeting of 9 February 1993 although he had earlier indicated his willingness to do so. AIB had offered to fund his flight to Ireland to attend the meeting.

22.04 The next board meeting of Barkhill Ltd was held on 24 March 1993. Mr Gilmartin did not attend this meeting but made contact with AIB on 26 March 1993. A note prepared by Ms Basquille of AIB stated as follows:

Phone call from Tom 26th March 1993. Tom phoned essentially to find [out] about the contents of Wednesday’s board meeting—I was unable to give him any specific information and advised that no doubt Seamus Maguire as Company Secretary would be forwarding him minutes in due course.

Tom then launched into past grievances, complaining about blackmail and corrupt practices in relation to the putting in place of the shareholder’s agreement, referred to the fact that Barkhill was and still should be his deal, and expressed dissatisfaction at the fact that he is not being consulted [on] any decisions taken by the Company. I responded that these were matters better suited to discussion at a board meeting and that, in my view, his failure to attend scheduled meetings appeared to signal a lack of interest in the company's affairs to the other shareholders.

He indicated that he would be in a position to provide a solution to Barkhill's problems if the other shareholders could be got rid of, but failed to respond to a suggestion that any change in the present shareholding would require the submission of a buy-out proposal to the other shareholders.

He requested a confidential meeting with the bank for the following week—11am on Wednesday was subsequently agreed.

22.05 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that at the time of this telephone contact with Ms Basquille he was raising the issue of payments to Mr Dunlop and Shefran with AIB and was complaining of Mr Dunlop's involvement in the project. He said specifically that he was querying round-figure sums which had been paid to Shefran. Mr O'Farrell told the Tribunal that he had no recollection of such matters being raised by Mr Gilmartin at this time.

22.06 While Mr O'Farrell maintained that he had no recollection of complaints from Mr Gilmartin in relation to these matters, he was aware at this time that there was an issue of the absence of backup documentation for the 1991 Shefran payments amounting to IR£80,000. He would have been aware that invoices were still being sought in relation to these payments which had not been at that time provided to AIB or to Mr Fleming of Deloitte & Touche who had been seeking them from Mr Gilmartin, Mr O'Callaghan and AIB as far back as December 1992.²⁹ For those reasons, and the reasons set out in Part 5 the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Farrell was aware of an ongoing issue regarding the 1991 Shefran payments to Mr Dunlop.

22.07 Mr Gilmartin attended part of a board meeting of Barkhill on 28 April 1993. The minutes of that meeting did not document any complaints made by Mr Gilmartin. Mr O'Farrell said he had no recollection of Mr Gilmartin seeking details relating to the payments to Shefran, or its involvement with Barkhill, at that meeting. The minutes of that meeting documented, inter alia, that:

...serious concern was expressed on the question of the completion of the accounts and the filing of the returns in the Companies Office. John Deane reported that he had written twice to Leo Fleming for a list of outstanding items. He would continue to pursue this as a matter of urgency.

22.08 Mr O’Farrell stated that as was the case with all of the memoranda compiled by him following meetings he had over a number of years, he claimed to have no independent recollection of what transpired at meetings, save that he stood over the contents of his memoranda. Mr O’Farrell stated that he had ‘absolutely no recollection’ of Mr Gilmartin at the board meeting of 28 April 1993 seeking details relating to Shefran or its involvement with Barkhill. While there was no specific reference in the minutes of the meeting of 28 April 1993 to Mr Gilmartin having expressed concerns, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin did express his concerns, particularly in the light of his knowledge of Mr Dunlop’s association with Shefran, his distrust of Mr Dunlop and Mr Fleming’s ongoing pursuit of backup documentation with regard to, inter alia, the 1991 Shefran payments.

22.09 The Barkhill board meeting on 16 June 1993³⁰ was not attended by Mr Gilmartin. Minutes of this meeting indicated that amongst the items discussed at the meeting was a letter sent by Mr Fleming of Deloitte & Touche on 3 May 1993, by way of follow-up to his earlier December 1992 letter in which he sought backup documentation in relation to a number of payments including the three Shefran payments in 1991 amounting to IR£80,000 (and indeed the two IR£10,000 ‘Expenses’ payments, as already referred to).

THE IRISH TIMES ARTICLES IN JULY 1993

23.01 In July 1993, a series of articles appeared in The Irish Times which suggested that a number of rezoning decisions made by Dublin County Councillors in the period since April 1992 were questionable and may have involved corruption. An article written by Mr Frank McDonald on 12 July 1993 bore the title ‘Where it is possible to boost the value of parcels of land beyond the dreams of avarice on a role call vote’ and another article on the same date written by Mr Mark Brennock bore the title:

Minister: ‘Tell me this is money changing hands?’

Councillor: ‘Well, Minister, I couldn’t deny it

23.02 On 13 July 1993, Mr McDonald penned an article entitled ‘Gardaí to investigate rezoning claims’. A copy of this and the 12 July 1993 articles were enclosed in an AIB Barkhill file discovered to the Tribunal. The 13 July 1993 article also referred to comments made by the then Minister for the Environment, Mr Michael Smith and his expression of concern in relation to reports of corruption within the planning process. Mr Smith was said to have viewed the matter ‘with the utmost gravity.’

23.03 On Tuesday, 13 July 1993, The Irish Times reported on its front page that:

It is believed that the Minister for the Environment, Mr Smith, is prepared to direct the county council to change at least part of its draft development plan because of the scale of the rezonings involved. This Ministerial power under Section 22 of the 1963 Planning Act, has never been exercised before.

23.04 On 26 July 1993 Mr O’Farrell prepared a memorandum headed ‘re Barkhill’. Its content related specifically to the Irish Times article, as follows:

‘Some issues arising from the recent articles in the Irish Times on planning.

- What are the expected objections to the Barkhill zoning arising from the present public display of the Draft Development Plan?
- Minister Michael Smith is encouraging the County Council to review their rezoning decisions in light of the number of same. He has been critical of the County Council in this regard. What is O’Callaghan’s relationship with Michael Smith?
- Does O’Callaghan have any indication of Smith’s view of the proposed Barkhill zoning?
- The Irish Times of Tuesday 13th July, 1993 indicated—‘It is believed that the Minister for the Environment, Mr Smith is prepared to direct the County Council to change at least part of its Draft Development Plan because of the scale of the rezonings involved. This Ministerial power, under Section 22 of the 1963 Planning Act, has never been exercised before.’ Is there a possibility if the County Council refused to amend their decisions themselves. Could such a process cause delays?
- In the same context the Irish Times of Monday 12th July, 1993 indicated the following—‘In 1983, under the spotlight of the media as well as pressure from the public and from the then Taoiseach, Garrett Fitzgerald, who whipped Fine Gael Councillors into line, the County Council voted to rescind about 80% of its rezoning decisions. This may happen again, depending on the public’s response to the current exhibition of amendments to the Draft County Plan’.
- Quote Irish Times 13th July, 1993—‘Mr Smith said yesterday he was asking the Garda Commissioner, Mr Patrick Culligan, to investigate urgently the reports of money changing hands, with a view to the Director of Public Prosecution deciding whether criminal prosecutions should be instituted. He viewed the matter with the utmost gravity, he said. He went on to say that—it is vitally important for our Democratic system that the planning system operates, and is seen to operate, in an open and accountable fashion, and that the highest standards of personal integrity are observed by all those involved—landowners, developers, public representatives and officials. Recalling that he had unequivocally set out his position on the planning activities of Dublin County Council over the past two months, the Minister indicated clearly that he wanted some recent rezoning decisions reversed. I would again appeal to Dublin County Cllrs to act responsibly and in the wider public interest when the Plan comes before them in September he declared.'

Does any of the foregoing have implications for Barkhill?

- Plans are due to be submitted on the 30th July, 1993—where is O'Callaghan at vis-à-vis the planners and the County Manager? What kind of PR strategy is in place by O'Callaghan and what kind of PR impact do they expect their application to have?
- In view of Corcoran's recent resignation from Green's, are there any implications in this for Barkhill. What implications will their planning application have in this regard?
- How do we deal with the Tom Gilmartin factor?'

23.05 Mr O'Farrell maintained that the memorandum simply recorded his thoughts at that time and that it had not been compiled necessarily with a view to any upcoming meeting with Mr O'Callaghan. He stated that he was unsure as to why he had mused as to why Mr O'Callaghan's relationship with Mr Smith might be relevant to what Mr Smith had to say about zoning. Mr O'Farrell was asked specifically to explain his reference 'does any of the foregoing have implications for Barkhill?' contained in the memorandum, particularly in the context of the fact that at this time in excess of IR£100,000 had been paid to Frank Dunlop & Associates, in addition to a sum of IR£70,000 paid to Shefran Ltd in the period April/June 1992, (as well as the 1991 Shefran Ltd payments totalling IR£80,000). Mr O'Farrell acknowledged that at the time he read the Irish Times articles and subsequently prepared his memorandum in July 1993, he would have been aware of very substantial sums having been paid to Mr Dunlop, and commented '...but it's very easy in hindsight to join all of these sums together and add them...up'

23.06 Mr O'Farrell acknowledged to the Tribunal that the newspaper articles had led him to 'a series of questions 'in my head. These were '...are there implications for Barkhill? Could the ...whole planning development plan be thrown out, could it be overturned, could there be delays?'

23.07 He did not recollect discussing the issue with Mr O'Callaghan and believed that if he had done so and if he had been told that bribes were being paid, this would have stuck in his mind. Mr O'Farrell indicated to the Tribunal that any concerns that he had at the time he prepared the memorandum on 26 July 1993 related to potential delays that might arise because of possible moves by the Minister for the Environment, Mr Smith, to have previous rezoning decisions of Dublin County Council rescinded or set aside.

23.08 The Tribunal was quite satisfied that Mr O'Farrell was concerned about the articles and about Mr Gilmartin's possible response to them, particularly in the light of his knowledge, as of July 1993, of Mr Gilmartin's queries relating to and complaints about the large round figure payments totalling IR£150,000 which had been paid to Mr Dunlop via Shefran, and in light of the fact that in December 1992 Mr Gilmartin had threatened to go to the newspapers about his concerns. This information had impelled Mr O'Farrell to dispatch Mr Kay and Mr McGrath to meet Mr Gilmartin in London on 17 December 1992.

23.09 Mr O'Farrell testified that in the period following the publication of the Irish Times articles in the week of 12 July 1993 (referring to corrupt payments to councillors in relation to the rezoning process) he had not asked Mr O'Callaghan if he was involved in making payments to councillors, as it would have been inappropriate, in his opinion, to ask such a question of an upstanding customer of the bank.

23.10 In a memorandum relating to a meeting between Mr O'Callaghan and Mr McGrath and Mr Chambers (General Manager of Corporate and Commercial) on 28 July 1993 there was no reference to any of the issues raised in the Irish Times articles or indeed to any matter referred to by Mr O'Farrell in his memorandum of 26 July 1993. The Tribunal found this absence of any mention or reference to the content of the Irish Times articles in such a memorandum, so soon following their publication and Mr O'Farrell's memorandum relating to them, strange and it found extraordinary the suggestion as outlined in evidence that their content was not raised with Mr O'Callaghan, in the context of AIB's knowledge of the substantial round-figure payments to Mr Dunlop/Shefran and Mr Gilmartin's complaints in relation thereto.

23.11 Mr McGrath told the Tribunal that he had no recollection of discussing the articles with Mr O'Callaghan.

23.12 Mr O'Callaghan maintained that the issues referred to in Mr O'Farrell's memorandum concerning the media articles were not discussed with him, nor was there any discussion about an inquiry into corruption.

23.13 Mr O’Farrell was questioned in relation to his reference in his memorandum of 26 July 1993 to wit ‘how do we deal with the Gilmartin factor’. His response to this query was that he could not specifically recall why he had written this on 26 July 1993 but he felt that he had done so in a broader context that in the context of the articles which appeared in the Irish Times. Mr O’Farrell stated that he had no recollection of having a concern about any possible response by Mr Gilmartin to those articles.

23.14 With regard to his evidence on this issue, Mr O’Farrell was questioned about the contents of a memorandum compiled by Ms Basquille following a conversation she had with Mr Gilmartin on 16 August 1995 wherein she noted as follows:

Phone call from Tom Gilmartin 16th August, 1995 to advise that he had received an approach from a UK TV company seeking information in relation to Quarryvale/Owen O’Callaghan, which obviously stemmed from the recent publicity concerning the planning process and surveillance allegations.

He indicated that he had been offered IR£100,000 by the company (which were involved in the TV programme which sparked the Beef Tribunal) and that he had also received a similar offer of IR£50,000 from a Northern Ireland company.

I responded that the Bank would be alarmed that any director/shareholder/interested party in Barkhill would take any action which may jeopardise the successful outcome to the companies current development plans and negotiations with anchor tenants. However, he subsequently reverted to his old story of being cheated out of his company and indicated his belief that he will never see any return out of the Quarryvale development. He became irrational and resisted any attempt to recognise the reality of Barkhill’s position of a likely receivership prior to his entering into the shareholders agreement.

23.15 While Mr O’Farrell claimed that he had no specific recollection of this issue, the Tribunal noted the contents of a memorandum prepared by him on 23 August 1995, following Mr Gilmartin’s contact with Ms Basquille wherein Mr O’Farrell noted: ‘I raised the issue of the planning controversy vis a vis the Newry Solicitors etc. He [Mr O’Callaghan] indicated that this had absolutely nothing got to do with him or with Quarryvale.’

23.16 The reference to the Newry solicitors was a reference to a newspaper advertisement in 1995 placed by a firm of solicitors in Newry, Co. Down seeking information relating to planning corruption. Mr O’Farrell told the Tribunal that he had a vague recollection of the advertisement, although he had no recollection of raising the issue with Mr O'Callaghan.

23.17 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Farrell raised the July 1993 Irish Times articles with Mr O'Callaghan in 1993 and the Tribunal did not identify any reason why he would not have done so, having regard to the fact that he documented his discussion of matters of a similar ilk with Mr O'Callaghan in 1995. The Tribunal rejected Mr O'Farrell's contention that the Irish Times articles were not raised with Mr O'Callaghan, having regard to, in particular, Mr O'Farrell and Mr O'Callaghan's then knowledge of Mr Gilmartin's complaints concerning Mr Dunlop and Shefran. It was simply not credible that this matter was not raised with Mr O'Callaghan by Mr O'Farrell, if for no other reason than for Mr O'Farrell to satisfy himself that the Quarryvale project would not become embroiled in public controversy.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF MR PAUL SHEERAN ON BEHALF OF MR GILMARTIN IN BARKHILL AS OF OCTOBER 1994

24.01 On 3 October 1994 Mr Gilmartin advised AIB that he had nominated Mr Sheeran (his friend and Bank of Ireland Manager) to act as his agent in relation to Quarryvale and Barkhill. Mr O'Farrell and Mr Sheeran met on 11 October 1994, a meeting documented by Mr O'Farrell, as follows:

Following receipt of authorisation from Tom Gilmartin, I met Paul Sheeran in Bankcentre.

We discussed the background to the case in broad outline. His only desire in getting involved is to try and help Tom Gilmartin and try and bring some degree of rationality into his behaviour. Tom has made some wild acquisitions [sic] and to enable Paul deal with these he sought clarification of the following:

- 1. Clarify Riga's original involvement—cost/rationale/Neilstown site etc.;*
- 2. What is the background to the shareholders agreement?*
- 3. What was the level of zoning on Quarryvale when Riga became involved?*

I agreed to go back over our old files and to revert in relation to these points.

From our discussions, it is clear that Paul has no information other than that provided verbally by Tom Gilmartin. Accordingly, we agreed that it would be appropriate for him to get the following information:

- Copy of shareholders agreement;*
- Copy of planning permission;*
- Minutes of recent Board meeting;*
- Copy of accounts;*

- Schedule of expenses paid/funded.

Mary Basquille is to arrange to get Tom's confirmation that we can provide this information to Paul.

As regards Paul's role, he does not wish to become a Director of the company. He would see himself attending Board meetings and perhaps voting on behalf of Tom, but only with Tom's specific instructions in this regard. The issue of him becoming a shadow director was discussed briefly and I suggested that in view of the financial circumstances of Barkhill Limited, he should take independent legal advice in this regard. His solicitor is Seamus Maguire and he intends to discuss this matter with him. In the meantime, I agreed that we would review the shareholders agreement and ensure whatever legalities are required in relation to his role are attended to—Mary is following this up also.

We agreed that the most appropriate agreed next step is to have a further brief meeting to clarify the above points, before which we can send him the above mentioned documents. After this we should arrange for an early Board meeting when he can attend and meet John Deane and Owen O'Callaghan and receive a full update on progress.

Overall I indicated that we had been very frustrated by Tom Gilmartin's attitude and that we see Paul Sheeran's involvement as a very welcome step forward particularly at this point in time when significant decisions will have to be made by all parties in relation to the future direction of Barkhill Limited.

24.02 Mr Sheeran attended a meeting at Bankcentre on 9 November 1994 which was also attended by Mr O'Farrell, Ms Basquille, Mr Pitcher, Mr Deane and Mr Benson (AIB's planning consultant). He duly attended a further meeting on 14 March 1995. The minutes of these meetings documented that a number of matters were considered including matters pertaining to the Quarryvale site, the Quarryvale planning permission, proposed retail anchor tenants, investor interest, finance and company matters.

THE BARKHILL BOARD MEETING OF 23 MARCH 1995

25.01 From documentation discovered by Mr Deane to the Tribunal it appeared that a further board meeting of Barkhill took place on 23 March 1995. Mr Deane's Discovery included a document headed 'Barkhill Limited' which was stated to be an agenda for a board meeting to be held on 23 March 1995 at Bankcentre, Ballsbridge, Dublin. However, no minutes of such a meeting were discovered by any party to the Tribunal. AIB's discovery yielded a document in handwriting headed 'Re Quarryvale' which contained a few lines and which was dated 23 March 1995. The document suggested that present at a meeting on that date were Mr Gilmartin, Mr Maguire, Mr O'Farrell, Ms Basquille, Mr Deane and Mr O'Callaghan. Other than one sentence, nothing further was written on the handwritten document. It appeared therefore that a board meeting did take place on 23 March 1995 but that no minutes were maintained in respect thereof.

THE BARKHILL BOARD MEETING OF 24 MAY 1995

26.01 The minutes of a meeting of 24 May 1995 record that those in attendance were Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Pitcher, Mr Gilmartin, Mr Maguire, Mr O'Farrell, Ms Basquille, Mr Deane and Mr Sheeran. Among the issues discussed were matters relating to the Quarryvale site, the Quarryvale planning permission, anchor tenant interest in the proposed development and investor interest.

THE EVENTS IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING THE FORMAL BOARD MEETING

26.02 It was accepted that following the formal board meeting and after Mr Pitcher's departure, a number of issues were raised by Mr Gilmartin, which were variously documented by Mr Deane and Ms Basquille. Mr Deane's attendance note recorded as follows:

After Barry Pitcher left the meeting the following matters were discussed:

(a) Tom Gilmartin's personal position.

Tom Gilmartin gave a detailed statement of his dissatisfaction with matters in general incorporating the following

- lack of information*
- no communication*
- the whole saga was very unfair to his family*
- he complained at the treatment he had received from O'Callaghan Properties*
- he was the subject of a dirty tricks campaign*
- O'Callaghan Properties had walked away with £2m of his money*
- His credibility had been totally undermined*
- His telephone calls were not answered*
- The bank lost faith with him because his credibility was undermined*
- He had given certain personal information regarding his financial standing only to the bank and as this information subsequently appeared in the papers it must have been leaked by the Bank.*
- That if he had been left handle matters himself he could have done the entire deal himself without anybody's assistance*
- John Deane had made certain that he did not speak to people the night of the zoning meeting.*

• Generally he was subjected to political manoeuvrings, blackmailing and a campaign of dirty tricks such that he had now lost everything.

In response Michael O'Farrell indicated that insofar as the bank were concerned he totally rejected the suggestions made by Tom Gilmartin.

John Deane indicated that while responses to these items had been made at previous meetings he wanted to make three points.

1. There would be no involvement of O'Callaghan Properties in Quarryvale whatsoever if Tom Gilmartin had completed the Contract for Sale which he entered into for the acquisition of the Neilstown Site.

2. He totally rejected that information was not forthcoming. He had attended on a fortnightly basis at Bankcentre and had put all the information before the meeting.

3. As a result of a letter which Tom Gilmartin wrote to AIB indicating that Paul Sheerin [sic] was to represent his interests all the information and communication was then given or made with Paul Sheerin.'

26.03 In her memorandum of the meeting, Ms Basquille noted the following:

Tom Gilmartin raised a query in relation to changing his shareholding from the personal name of himself and his wife to the Gilmartin Trust, the entity which originally made the cash investment in Barkhill. However, before there was any opportunity to discuss this issue, he went off on a tangent about various points on which he feels he has been wronged in the past as follows:

- The leaking of information in relation to his bankruptcy hearing: the company's difficulty in getting the Quarryvale site rezoned, which he feels he could have avoided;
- The fact that he has no say in relation to Barkhill's business although a large amount of his cash is tied up in the company;
- Different rates of interest payable on shareholder loans to Gilmartin and to Riga;
- The fact John Deane acting in the Hammerson deal will ensure that Riga get more out of Barkhill than Tom Gilmartin will.

Eventually he became completely irrational and was unwilling to allow anyone respond to the allegations made. At this point, Paul Sheeran intervened and indicated his view that Tom's outburst was the result of his poor financial circumstances for some time now, which will only be improved when he is in a position to get some of his investment back out of Barkhill. He requested that John Deane and Owen O'Callaghan seriously consider whether they may be able to finance some expenses for Tom until such time as cash starts to flow on the Barkhill deal. The meeting concluded at this point.

26.04 Mr Sheeran told the Tribunal that his 'abiding memory' of the meeting was Mr Gilmartin making open allegations of fraud and collusion against Mr O'Callaghan and AIB. Mr Sheeran's evidence was that, insofar as the memoranda which recorded Mr Gilmartin's allegations were concerned, a number of matters had been omitted (including the references to fraud and collusion) from both Mr Deane's and Ms Basquille's record of the meeting. He also said Mr Gilmartin 'made it very clear as regards bribery and corruption to parties concerned' and defined the 'parties' as being 'both the other shareholders', Mr O'Callaghan and AIB. Mr O'Callaghan maintained to the Tribunal that nothing was said by Mr Gilmartin in relation to Shefran or payments to politicians. He said that Mr Gilmartin had made reference to Messrs George Redmond and Liam Lawlor. In the course of his evidence, Mr Maguire made the point that the board meeting minutes could not be relied on fully as a record of everything discussed at them.

26.05 Mr O'Farrell disagreed with Mr Sheeran's evidence. He was certain that had the word 'bribe' been used it would have remained in his memory. He accepted that in the course of this meeting Mr Gilmartin had aired a number of grievances and it was his belief that Mr Gilmartin had raised these issues after the formal board meeting had concluded and when Mr Pitcher had left the meeting. Mr O'Farrell's testimony appeared to confirm that some of the matters raised by Mr Gilmartin at the meeting had previously been raised by him, but Mr O'Farrell expressed his doubt that Mr Gilmartin had previously had a similar 'outburst' relating to these complaints. It remained Mr O'Farrell's position that it was his recollection that Mr Gilmartin had never complained about bribes or payments having been made to Mr Dunlop or Shefran without his consent.

The Tribunal rejected Mr O'Farrell's recollection in this regard, particularly in circumstances in which Mr O'Farrell professed to have had little independent recollection of anything, save his acceptance of the content of memoranda prepared by him.

26.06 Ms Basquille told the Tribunal that she had had many telephone conversations with Mr Gilmartin. He telephoned her on a 'very regular basis' throughout the four-year period in which she was involved with Barkhill/Quarryvale. She said that he frequently complained to her that his company had been (as he put it) 'taken from him'. She described Mr Gilmartin's discussions with her as 'extremely irrational' and she commented that Mr Gilmartin did not put forward any 'concise or clear complaint'. She said that Mr Gilmartin made allegations and complaints of being badly treated by AIB. She described Mr Gilmartin as speaking in 'a rant'. She said that she could not recall if he mentioned Mr Dunlop to her but he certainly had not done so in the context of money being paid to Mr Dunlop for onward transmission to politicians.

26.07 She had no recollection of any particular disagreement in relation to expenditure issues from Mr Gilmartin, and she had no recollection of Mr Gilmartin complaining of Mr Dunlop being paid large sums of money. She was certain that Mr Gilmartin had never made any allegation of bribery to her, although he frequently referred to Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane as ‘a pair of gangsters’, or had used similar language to describe them. Ms Basquille recalled occasional complaints from Mr Gilmartin that he was not being kept up to date with what was happening in Quarryvale. On those occasions, Ms Basquille advised him that he needed to attend more of the meetings in AIB in order to keep abreast of developments.

26.08 Ms Basquille stated that Mr Gilmartin’s complaints took the form of a ‘lengthy tirade about everything that had happened to him’. She stated that Mr Gilmartin had said ‘blackmail and corrupt practices had been at play’, but he never elaborated on those issues or permitted Ms Basquille to ask questions or to get clarification from him. Ms Basquille said that she appealed to Mr Gilmartin to put his complaints in writing, either himself or through his solicitor. She stated: I would also add that to the best of recollection, almost every conversation that I had with him along these lines would have ended with him acknowledging that at the time he entered into the shareholders agreement, his back was to the wall, he had no options. The money that he had put into a project was virtually gone because it hadn’t worked out the way he had thought. And that if he had stayed as the 100 percent owner of that company, it wouldn’t have brought any return of his investment. The fact that he had entered into the shareholders agreement and taken on a development partner had allowed the project to continue to the stage where value could be added to the site by the obtainment of zoning, planning permission and later on securing tenants and investors for the development.

26.09 Ms Basquille also stated: ‘In many of these conversations he would apologise at the end of them for having thrown all this at me and we would have ended our conversation very amicably only to have possibly the next day the same conversation again.’ Ms Basquille also maintained that to her knowledge Mr Gilmartin never asked to whom the Shefran payments were being made and added that she herself did not know at the time who Shefran really was.

26.10 Irrespective as to whether or not Ms Basquille knew who Shefran was, the Tribunal was satisfied that over the course of his attendance at meetings, and in telephone conversations, a constant theme of Mr Gilmartin’s complaints in the period 1992 to 1996 was the issue of Mr Dunlop's involvement with Quarryvale and the payments made to him. It was to the Tribunal inconceivable that Ms Basquille would not have been alert to this fact, given her regular contact with Mr Gilmartin and her attendance at board meetings.

26.11 The Tribunal accepted as accurate Mr Gilmartin's testimony that he had communicated in the strongest terms his unhappiness at the lack of information being provided to him by AIB in relation to the payments to Mr Dunlop and/or Shefran and that he did so in very specific and outspoken terms on 24 May 1994. The Tribunal was also satisfied that, as a matter of probability, Mr Gilmartin had, prior to that date, made complaints at AIB meetings in relation to, inter alia, corruption, payments to Mr Dunlop/Shefran and a failure to provide information to him.

26.12 The Tribunal was satisfied that on some occasions AIB's memoranda/minutes of meetings relating to Barkhill did not always accurately note or record, or indeed record at all, complaints and allegations made by Mr Gilmartin.

26.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that there was a tendency on the part of AIB personnel not to document at all or to minimise Mr Gilmartin's criticisms and complaints of what he perceived to have been AIB's unfair and unreasonable treatment of him as a substantial shareholder in Barkhill and as the creator of the Quarryvale project. It was also satisfied that there was equally a tendency on the part of AIB personnel to avoid the documenting of Mr Gilmartin's complaints (including those in relation to Mr Dunlop and the Shefran payments) and allegations of corruption, which undoubtedly were made by him to or in the presence of AIB personnel.

26.14 The likely reason for this deficiency on AIB's part in its otherwise detailed minuting of Barkhill board meetings probably stemmed from its desire to exclude from bank documentation references to corruption or other non commercial wrongdoing, in the event that such documentation might in the future be the subject of external scrutiny.

26.15 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin repeatedly complained to AIB personnel about what he perceived to have been in effect the bank's failure to keep him abreast of all developments in the Quarryvale project, and particularly information relating to payments of money to third parties (and especially Mr Dunlop) by or on behalf of Barkhill.

THE BARKHILL BOARD MEETINGS OF 28 JUNE AND 5 OCTOBER 1995

27.01 Mr Gilmartin attended a Barkhill board meeting on 28 June 1995 (as did Mr Sheeran). Documentation discovered by AIB to the Tribunal included a handwritten document which referred to ‘Tom Gilmartin’s points of contention 29/6/95’ and which, inter alia, recorded that Mr Gilmartin had complained that ‘he was effectively precluded from taking an active part’ in matters relating to Quarryvale because of lack of money and that no meaningful effort had been made by AIB or Riga Ltd to provide him with funds³¹ in order to enable him to participate meaningfully in those matters.

MR GILMARTIN’S EXIT FROM BARKHILL

27.02 By the autumn of 1995 the Duke of Westminster/Grosvenor Properties plc were expressing an interest in developing the Quarryvale site, an issue that was considered by a board meeting of Barkhill on 5 October 1995. Mr Gilmartin did not attend this meeting.

27.03 The two major issues which dominated discussions within Barkhill in the period October 1995 to May 1996 were the conclusion of a deal with Grosvenor and Mr Gilmartin’s exit from Quarryvale/ Barkhill. On 15 November 1995 Mr Maguire wrote to Mr Deane and to AIB stating that Mr Gilmartin was willing to sell his shareholding in Barkhill to the other shareholders. He was doing so because of personal financial difficulties. At a board meeting on 5 October 1995 (not attended by Mr Gilmartin) it had been decided that the Grosvenor offer would be accepted.

27.04 By mid-December 1995, Mr Gilmartin had entered negotiations with Riga for the latter’s buy out of the Gilmartin shareholding and Heads of Agreement had been negotiated in this regard. By January 1996 Mr Gilmartin had retained Mr Noel Smyth, Solicitor, to represent him, and the earlier Heads of Agreement entered into between Mr Gilmartin and Riga had been repudiated by Mr Gilmartin through his Solicitor Mr Smyth.

THE BARKHILL BOARD MEETING OF 8 FEBRUARY, 1996

28.01 This Board meeting was attended by Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Pitcher and Mr Gilmartin, in their capacity as Directors of Barkhill, The records also documented attendance by Mr O’Farrell, Ms Basquille, Mr Neville O’Byrne of William Fry Solicitors – AIB’s legal advisors, Mr Deane, Mr Maguire and Mr Smyth. At the end of the formal board meeting, Mr Smyth raised a number of issues which were recorded by both Mr Deane and Ms Basquille. Mr Deane's memorandum stated:

³¹ One of Mr Gilmartin’s complaints was a failure of the parties to adhere to an agreement made in 1994 to provide him with funds.

Noel Smyth indicated that he had been instructed to advise Tom Gilmartin. Tom Gilmartin had put in £4m to £5m upfront and the Grosvenor deal as envisaged would seek to have the Bank repaid in full before any of the shareholders received any funds due to them'.

As far as Noel Smyth was concerned his instructions made it clear that there was some misrepresentation and duress by the bank and that Tom Gilmartin was an oppressed shareholder. There are a number of matters around the time for the site assembly, those which are of grave cause for concern. Also the Shareholders Agreement leaves a lot to be desired. He had advised his client to initiate proceedings. He also had four or five Councillors who would be subpoenaed to give evidence.

Noel Smyth stated that it was not his intention to use the delicacy of the Grosvenor deal to 'blackmail' anybody but he felt equally that the bank should be cognisance [sic] of the fact that they were only entitled to be repaid funds on a pro rata basis as the Bankcentre held themselves to be partners in the deal. Consequently, as partners they shall only receive funds pro raturum to the other shareholders.

If the bank were not prepared to ensure that this happens, then he was prepared to go to Court to ask the Court to freeze funds until there is a culmination of the legal action.

28.02 Mr Deane also noted Mr Smyth as stating that:

...Tom could be described as naïve or stupid or maybe a combination of both but he was an honest man. He had been treated very badly, the situation regarding some of the matters was criminal. When challenged on use of this word he said he would withdraw the word but did not withdraw the implication contained by such a word that there had been grave and serious misconduct.

28.03 Ms Basquille's memorandum of Mr Smyth's intervention on behalf of Mr Gilmartin documented, inter alia, that Mr Smyth had stated that Mr Gilmartin considered himself 'an oppressed shareholder'. She noted that Mr Smyth was of the view that a review of the documentation 'left a lot to be desired' and that Mr Gilmartin 'was put under duress to sign the Shareholders Agreement'. She also noted Mr Smyth's remark that 'some documents had been signed by Tom without legal advice which he considered criminal but he withdrew this word subsequently.'

28.04 Mr O’Farrell acknowledged that on 8 February 1996 Mr Smyth had made a number of allegations but could not recall what they were. He could not recall a reference made by Mr Smyth to a threat to subpoena councillors. Mr O’Farrell confirmed that the bank’s legal advisor, Mr Neville O’Byrne, had rejected any allegation of misconduct or impropriety on the part of AIB and had rejected the allegation that AIB had been guilty of misrepresentation or duress in relation to Mr Gilmartin.

28.05 On 9 February 1996 Mr Smyth wrote to AIB’s solicitors and again reiterated Mr Gilmartin’s complaints in relation to the shareholders’ agreement which had been signed on 13 September 1991 and again alleged that Mr Gilmartin had been exposed to threats, duress and undue influence. AIB’s solicitors replied to Mr Smyth on 14 February 1996 rejecting his allegations and expressing the bank’s concern at ‘defamatory statements’ which had been made about AIB at the board meeting on 8 February 1996.

28.06 Mr O’Farrell’s evidence was that he viewed Mr Smyth’s attendance and intervention at the board meeting of 8 February 1996, as well as his subsequent correspondence, as part of a ‘negotiating tactic’ for the purposes of enhancing Mr Gilmartin’s position in relation to a buyout of his shareholding in Barkhill. Mr Deane expressed a similar opinion.

THE BARKHILL BOARD MEETING OF 23 FEBRUARY 1996

29.01 By 23 February 1996, the deal with Grosvenor was close to completion. The purpose of the 23 February 1996 board meeting, as documented by Ms Basquille in a memorandum compiled by her, was ‘to clarify the intentions of the Directors in relation to proceeding with the Grosvenor deal...’ At the meeting Mr O’Farrell outlined the extent of Barkhill’s indebtedness to AIB as of 23 February 1996 as being the ‘staggering’ sum of IR£24m and outlined that the Grosvenor deal was close to completion. Moreover, he was recorded as stating that AIB ‘had to face outrageous allegations which it intends to defend vigorously’. Ms Basquille also documented Mr O’Farrell as having outlined the consequences if the Grosvenor deal did not go through and his request that the Directors of Barkhill advise AIB of their position in relation to the proposed Grosvenor deal and in relation to repayment of the monies owed by Barkhill to the Bank.

29.02 The response of Mr Gilmartin to the issues raised at the meeting were recorded by Ms Basquille as follows:

Tom Gilmartin responded that as the bank/Michael O’Farrell had been running the company for a number of years he has no say in its affairs. Barry Pitcher disputed Tom Gilmartin’s comments which led to Gilmartin revisiting some of his previously stated views in relation to events in 1991 when the Shareholders Agreement was signed. He stated that he had been asked not to interfere in the Grosvenor deal and had not done so but advised that he can refund the deal if he gets his shares in the company back; he also disputed the amount that was owed to the Bank and indicated that it was his intention to get KPMG to carry out an audit of the interest charges.

29.03 The memorandum also recorded that Mr Gilmartin, having left the meeting for a period of time to talk to his advisor, returned and indicated his intention not to interfere with the proposed Grosvenor buyout deal. He was further recorded as stating that once the deal was completed he would then take action to protect his position. Ms Basquille also noted Mr O'Farrell as making the suggestion to Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin that they negotiate in relation to agreeing terms for a sale of shares, which they agreed to do.

29.04 By 14 March 1996 Mr Gilmartin and Mr O'Callaghan had reached agreement for the buy out of Mr Gilmartin's shareholding by way of staged payments. However, this agreement was in effect overtaken by the events of 21 March 1996 when the deal between Grosvenor and Barkhill was concluded.³² In turn, Riga paid IR£7.675m to Mr and Mrs Gilmartin for their shareholding in Barkhill

29.05 On 31 May 1996 Mr O'Farrell prepared a memorandum signed by himself and Ms Basquille entitled 'Barkhill Summary position paper' and headed 'private and confidential- not for circulation'. In this document, Mr O'Farrell outlined the history of the relationship between Barkhill and AIB from 1990. The document referred to AIB's 'continued support to enable O'Callaghan obtain zoning and planning', and it described Mr Gilmartin as 'difficult and irrational'. Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Deane were described as being 'unstinting in their efforts over the past five years and have been outstanding in their delivery'.

THE ALLEGATION

30.01 In the course of its inquiry, the Tribunal heard evidence relating to an alleged eavesdropping incident during a break in a meeting in AIB on a date unknown. Mr Gilmartin alleged that on that occasion Mr O'Callaghan eavesdropped on a conversation between himself and his then Solicitor, Mr

³² The Grosvenor agreement envisaged staged payments to the Gilmartins but ultimately the entire shareholding was bought out in May 1996. As of 30 May 1996 therefore the ownership of Barkhill was vested in Riga 40%, Grosvenor 40% and AIB 20%

Seamus Maguire, while in a bathroom at AIB. Mr O'Callaghan emphatically rejected the allegation.

30.02 Although somewhat peripheral to the matters considered in this Part of Chapter Two, the eavesdropping allegation became an issue of controversy in the course of the Tribunal's Inquiry, and on that basis was considered to be an appropriate issue for consideration in the Report.

MR GILMARTIN'S EVIDENCE

30.03 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin described the eavesdropping incident in the following terms: '...we had a break and went into the gents and Mr O'Callaghan had been outside the door talking to someone and he disappeared when we went out and he fell out of a broom cupboard. I literally – we heard this rattling and when I looked, here he opened the door of the broom cupboard and he fell out of it.'

30.04 Mr Gilmartin confirmed that the 'we' was a reference to himself and Mr Maguire. In the course of his taped interview, conducted with his then solicitor, Mr Noel Smyth in London in May 1998, Mr Gilmartin made a brief reference to Mr O'Callaghan having engaged in a 'stunt', which he described as follows: '...Just before there was a break up, you know, for tea or something and you'd go to the toilet, and he'd be out from front of you and he'd be in the broom cupboard in the toilet. He done that. I caught him out, deliberately caught him out.'

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S EVIDENCE

30.05 Mr O'Callaghan denied that an incident of the type described by Mr Gilmartin had ever occurred. Furthermore, when asked if in his recollection, anything had occurred which might have left Mr Gilmartin with the impression that Mr O'Callaghan had eavesdropped on him (albeit innocently), Mr O'Callaghan responded in the negative.

MR MAGUIRE'S EVIDENCE

30.06 In a letter to the Tribunal dated 6 July 2007, in response to a request from the Tribunal to provide it with information as to his recollection, if any, of the broom cupboard incident recounted by Mr Gilmartin, Mr Maguire stated:

I do recall a break during a meeting when I went to the bathroom with Mr. Gilmartin. I did not notice any broom cupboard in the bathroom. I did not see Owen O'Callaghan in the bathroom if he was there. I left the bathroom before Mr. Gilmartin and returned to the meeting room. Later on Mr. Gilmartin said to me that Mr. O'Callaghan had been 'ear wiggling' our conversation.

30.07 In his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Maguire confirmed that he recalled a complaint made by Mr Gilmartin to him, to the effect that Mr O'Callaghan had been 'ear wiggling', and that this complaint was made by Mr Gilmartin following upon his return from the bathroom during a break at a meeting in AIB.

30.08 On Day 810, Mr Maguire told the Tribunal:

'...my recollection is as follows, this can be checked in the geography of the bank. When we went in the door, the main door, the general meeting area was on the right-hand side, that's where the board meetings were held. On the left-hand side of the corridor there was a small room, that sometimes you went to for a private meeting. And the toilet or the bathroom was next door, further on. Now I might be wrong about this, this is my recollection of it. I remember going to the toilet with Tom and when we went back to the side room he said to me Owen O'Callaghan had been ear-wiggling. Now I didn't see Owen O'Callaghan. Now I will say that many times after that Tom Gilmartin returned to that topic and said that Owen O'Callaghan was ear-wiggling but I didn't see him.'

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE EAVESDROPPING ALLEGATION

i. The Tribunal was satisfied, particularly having regard to the evidence of Mr Maguire, that on a date unknown, Mr Gilmartin conveyed to Mr Maguire his belief that during a break from a meeting in AIB, Mr O'Callaghan had been eavesdropping on a conversation between himself and Mr Maguire while both attended the bathroom. Mr Maguire, while he confirmed that Mr O'Callaghan was present in AIB at the time, had not himself witnessed the alleged eavesdropping, nor had he seen the broom cupboard from which Mr Gilmartin alleged Mr O'Callaghan emerged.

ii. Although the Tribunal was unable to determine as a fact that an incident had occurred during a break at a meeting in AIB, as recounted by Mr Gilmartin, it was nevertheless satisfied, having regard, in particular, to Mr Maguire's evidence that Mr Gilmartin had genuinely believed that Mr O'Callaghan had eavesdropped on a conversation between himself and Mr Maguire and it was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin had commented thereon to Mr Maguire at the time and subsequently.

- iii. The Tribunal did not believe it to have been the case, having regard to the foregoing, that Mr Gilmartin concocted the incident, although it was possible that he embellished aspects of it (and in particular his belief that Mr O'Callaghan fell from a cupboard).

- iv. The Tribunal noted Mr O'Callaghan's strong denial that an incident of the nature described by Mr Gilmartin had occurred, and it accepted as true his absolute lack of recollection of any incident which could reasonably have left Mr Gilmartin with an impression that Mr O'Callaghan had eavesdropped on himself and Mr Maguire.

Meeting held at Bankcentre 2nd August 1990.

Present: Tom Gilmartin - Barkhill
Jim Donagh - Corporate

- Meeting held at my request to obtain up-date on the current position.
- He had hoped to have decision from L.E.T. this week but he has been told that due to annual leave of senior personnel L.E.T. decision will be a further week to ten days. I indicated that this was leaving things very tight to complete O'Rahilly/Murray sales on 15th August 1990 particularly if decision is negative.
- He is pursuing other options in the event of negative decision which include.
- Equity participation by Capital and County and a large French Institution - both would only proceed if planning were obtained.
- Sale of Retail Warehousing element c 36 acres to subsidiary of B. & Q. for IR£5/6m. U.K. bank has indicated they would provide IR£3.5m against this portion of the side. He is trying to get them to increase offer to £4.5m.
- O'Callaghan/Deane have indicated they would take equity stake in the project.
- H.O.K. have indicated the Val Haul land 30 acres which is surplus to requirements could be sold in two lots at IR£150,000 to IR£200,000 an acre.
- L.E.T. have changed their term over the past few weeks. Originally they were taking option to acquire 80% of development at 25% discount and provide IR£10m against first charge on property.

Re: Clondalkin Town Centre

Dear Tom,

As you know I am under severe internal pressures, mainly due to the fact that we have received full Planning Permission, which I could not avoid, and that Jim Mansfield has also received Planning Permission for his site. Mansfield is actively canvassing Dunnes Stores and Quinnsworth, who I know are talking to him, because they are not quite sure what I am going to do.

I am afraid, Tom, I have no choice at this critical stage but to proceed with my own site.

I have held off for 12 months sending you this letter, but at this stage I have absolutely no alternative.

Tom, I am sorry to be the bearer of such bad news but I have done everything possible to facilitate your situation, and I certainly do not relish writing this letter to you.

Yours sincerely,

Owen O'Callaghan

BARKHILL LIMITED

Discussions held on 28/11/90 between Donal Chambers, Aidan McKeon, Eddie Kay.

We discussed the present position regarding the Gilmartin situation and it was agreed that the following priorities should be dealt with.

- 1: Tom Gilmartin must attempt to deal with Bruton and arrange for a deferral of the Bruton contract. It was proposed that a meeting between Bruton's Solicitor, Tom Gilmartin, Neville O'Byrne and myself to see what could be achieved on that front.*
- 2. In relation to Derek Saunders it was agreed that if his £2m is available it should be used to complete the purchase of the Bruton land and to bring about reduction of a £1m in the AIB debt. Steps would also be taken to discuss with Owen O'Callaghan the possible deferral of his final payment of £1.3m. We also discussed the possible giving of security to Saunders for his £2m and a number of options were mentioned which included allowing him to take a first charge in the Bruton land with AIB taking a second charge or alternatively allowing to share pari passu with us a charge over the entire site in the ratio:-
Saunders £2m : AIB £9m*
- 3. It was also agreed that I would contact Owen O'Callaghan and arrange for a meeting with him which would be attended by Pat Fitzgerald and myself. We would attempt to persuade him to defer the acceptance of the final payment due to him while at the same time relinquishing his option on the Clondalkin site. It was suggested that we would propose to O'Callaghan that he would be given a significant on a no risk to him basis and that there might be some mechanism whereby he would receive his £1.3m down the line and subject to the site receiving planning.*

It was also agreed that Tom Gilmartin should be summoned to Bankcentre on 29th November and he would be met by Aidan McKeon and advised that his equity in the site is now totally eroded and that the Bank is stepping into the driving seat. He would be offered some small ongoing equity stake in the development subject to his co-operation.

Dear Mr Gilmartin,

Further to your comprehensive presentation in the Berkeley Court Hotel of your proposed 'Westpark' development of North Clondalkin, I am pleased to inform you that in the context of the review of the Dublin County Development Plan it is my intention to table an appropriate motion at the February review meeting which will effect the re-zoning of the site as required for the development.

I am confident that this motion will enjoy unanimous cross-party support particularly in view of your successful negotiations with the developer of the former Town Centre Site at Foxdene which is not now being proceeded with.

I will keep you informed of progress in this matter and in the meantime if I can be of any further assistance do not hesitate to contact me.

Wishing you a happy, peaceful and prosperous New Year.

Re: Barkhill Ltd

Dear Tom,

We refer to recent telephone conversations in relation to your Palmerstown site. As already advised your loan facility has expired since the end of August 1990 and we have sought your proposals to repay this loan which is in default. A number of proposed equity partnerships which incorporated clearance of our loan facility have failed to materialise after long protracted discussions - notably joint venture proposals with L.E.T. and with Derek Saunders.

Heads of Terms were signed by O'Callaghan Properties, AIB and Barkhill Limited on 14th December 1990 with a view to facilitating re-zoning of the Palmerstown site. The agreement included a clause terminating same by the repayment in full of outstanding amounts due to both the Bank and to O'Callaghan Properties by 10th January 1991. You sought and obtained an extension of time to the end of January 1991 as you were at an advanced stage in completing a full refinancing package. You will recall that the Bank requested you to furnish a proposal to cater for the non-completion of this proposed re-financing package by end January 1991. We have not received any such proposal from you and we have not received any payment to discharge your Loan Facility with us.

We understand the meeting to consider the rezoning of the Palmerstown site is rescheduled for tomorrow, 8th February 1991. We understand this meeting might be postponed until the 15th February 1991. It is accepted that rezoning of the site at this proposed meeting is critical to your overall shopping centre development plans. We know you must either discharge your obligations to O'Callaghan Properties in advance of this meeting or reach an acceptable arrangement which will facilitate this rezoning process. In view of the critical importance of rezoning to your overall plans we must again ask for your immediate proposals which should be agreed in advance with O'Callaghan Properties to deal with the situation should your proposed refinancing package not be in place prior to the rezoning meeting. In view of the critical importance of rezoning to your overall plans we confirm that we are no longer prepared to tolerate the situation where no proposal exists to cater for the non-availability of cash from your refinancing package prior to the rezoning meeting.

We understand that you have had considerable discussions in relation to the remaining portions of the site which have not yet been assembled and we would be obliged for an update on the current position in regard to the 'Bruton, O'Rahilly & Murray' lands.

We know you are confident that the proposed refinancing package will be in place shortly, however we must now ask you to seriously consider your fall-back proposals should money not be available prior to the rezoning meeting. We now require your proposals to deal with this situation by close of business tomorrow 8th February 1991.

MOTION

Re: Fonthill Road

"THAT DUBLIN COUNTY COUNCIL HEREBY RESOLVES THAT THE AREA OUTLINED IN BLACK ON THE ATTACHED MAP, LYING NORTH OF THE GRAND CANAL, DESIGNATED PREVIOUSLY FOR TOWN CENTRE, NOW BE CONSIDERED FOR ZONING E FOR INDUSTRIAL AND RELATED USES."

Strategic Plan re Westpark:

Present Position:

Merrygrove Limited, likely to receive planning permission in the near future which will complicate the resolving by formally endorsing the Town Centre Fonthill site.

Action required: Discussion with Ambrose Kelly to endeavour to ensure no decision is granted.

- Action - Owen O'Callaghan / Ambrose Kelly: -

Westpark motion submitted to put town centre and other uses on the 186 acre site. Motion likely to be considered 7/22 March. Motion to change Merrygrove to E (Industrial) not accepted by Planning Department due to arrival after closing time Friday 15 February; In order to attempt to resolve this situation it is very urgent that Owen O'Callaghan formally informs senior management i.e. John Prendergast County Manager; Kevin O'Sullivan Planning Manager, Gay McCarron/Willie Murray Senior Planning Officials; and Al Smith Principal Officer, of the formal position as follows:-

It is proposed by joint venture that Owen O'Callaghan will now pioneer the Westpark proposal and will negotiate a suitable arrangement with the Dublin Corporation to withdraw from pursuing the town centre proposal on the Fonthill site.

It is also important after these consultations to formally inform the County Council Chairman so that the elected members can fully understand the Westpark situation. At the moment community groups are actively lobbying for the Fonthill project and have objected to the board on the Paper Mills site. The situation at Westpark can be turned into a political football unless it is handled positively and in advance of the motion coming up for discussion in the Council to place town centres only on the Westpark lands.

Action required:

- a) Appoint Planning Team;
- b) Investment consultant;
- c) Agree media strategy;
- d) Agree time programme;

With such a contentious motion presently on the County agenda and local elections now scheduled for mid June, it is important decisive action is taken.

I will telephone you to discuss the above.

HEADS OF AGREEMENT

BETWEEN

1. Thomas Gilmartin of 22, Whitehill Avenue, Luton, Bedfordshire, LU1 3SP ("Mr. Gilmartin")
2. Mrs. Thomas Gilmartin of 22, Whitehill Avenue, Luton, Bedfordshire, LU1 3SP ("Mrs. Gilmartin") acting through her lawfully appointed attorney, Mr. Seamus Maguire.
3. Riga Limited having its registered office at 81, South Mall, Cork ("Riga"); and
4. Allied Irish Banks p.l.c., having its registered office at Bankcentre, Ballsbridge, Dublin 4. ("AIB")

WHEREAS:

- A. Mr. Gilmartin and Mrs. Gilmartin (the "Gilmartins") are the registered owners of the entire issued share capital of Barkhill Limited ("Barkhill").
- B. By an agreement made on the 16th February, 1991, between the Gilmartins, Riga and AIB, it was agreed that in certain circumstances where another Investor was obtained to provide IR£4,000,000 to Barkhill, the shareholding in Barkhill would be amended to provide that each of the Gilmartins, Riga and the new Investor would have a one third interest in Barkhill.
- C. Efforts to obtain such a new Investor having been unsuccessful, the parties have agreed alternative arrangements for the future financing of Barkhill. These agreements are set out in the following Heads of Terms. The parties accept that these Heads of Terms shall be binding on the parties and will, in due course, be incorporated into a more formal agreement or agreements.

NOW THEREFORE IT IS AGREED BETWEEN THE PARTIES AS FOLLOWS:-

1. Barkhill requires further financial assistance to the extent of IR£4,000,000, plus provision for an interest roll up on that and the existing AIB facilities of approx IR£10,000,000 for the period up to 31st May, 1993.
2. AIB agrees to provide an additional term loan of £3,000,000 and agrees that interest on this facility and the existing facilities of approx £10,000,000 shall be accrued and added to the facilities until 31st May 1993 or, if earlier, such time as the amount of interest so accrued but unpaid reached £2,500,000. Thereafter, all interest accruing due on the total facilities shall be paid in full on the due date.

The additional facility of £3,000,000 shall be available to Barkhill until 31st May, 1993. It may be used only for the purpose of discharging sums due by Barkhill in respect of the purchase of those lands known as the "Bruton Lands", the "O'Rahilly" land and such lands at a cost not exceeding £900,000 as may be purchased from Dublin County Council ("the County Council Lands") and costs directly related to the development of Barkhill's lands. The facility may not be used for any other purpose unless Gilmartins, Riga and AIB shall unanimously so agree. No part of the facility may be availed of until the loan from Riga Limited referred to in paragraph 4 shall have been fully drawn, and the guarantee referred to in that clause executed

3. Riga agrees to provide to Barkhill a loan in the amount of £1,000,000 for the same purpose and for the same period as the AIB loan. Riga further undertakes to provide a Guarantee (in such form as AIB may require) in the sum of £1,000,000 plus interest thereon to AIB in respect of all borrowings of Barkhill from AIB.

4. Riga's loan and the existing director's loan provided by Mr. Gilmartin will be subordinated to the loans made or to be made to Barkhill by AIB. They shall carry interest at similar rates to those being charged by AIB. Such interest shall accrue from the date or dates of the introduction of the relevant monies, but such interest shall not be paid to either Riga or Mr. Gilmartin unless all sums due to AIB have been repaid in full, and the option referred to in paragraph 8 shall have been exercised or AIB's Shareholding interest shall have been otherwise purchased from it.

5. Save as expressly otherwise provided herein, the terms of the AIB loan will be identical to the terms of the existing facility letter dated 19th February 1990 from AIB to Barkhill. Apart from the Letter of Guarantee to be provided from Riga as mentioned at point 3 above as additional security there shall also be provided to AIB an assignment of a term life policy in the amount of not less than IR£5,000,000 on the life of Mr. Owen O'Callaghan, which policy shall be for a period of not less than 2 years. AIB will document the new arrangement in a facility letter in such terms as AIB may decide, but which must incorporate in substance the appropriate provisions of this agreement. In particular, there will be included the following Events of Default :-

- a. Events of Default of the normal nature that would be included in an AIB DIBOR related term Loan, including a material adverse change clause.
- b. A specific clause which will stipulate as an Event of Default the failure to obtain final Planning Permission and Building Bye-Law approval for a retail shopping development of at least 500,000 sq feet of net lettable space within 2 years from the date hereof. If a refusal shall be made on appeal earlier than that, then such refusal shall constitute an event of default.

AIB shall be granted a first fixed charge over the Bruton Lands, the O'Rahilly Land and the County Council Lands.

Prior to any part of the IR£3,000,000 being availed of from AIB, AIB must be satisfied in its absolute discretion that the contracts in respect of the Bruton Lands will be completed in accordance with their terms.

3.

6. The parties agree that the shareholding structure in Barkhill will be varied by the issue of new shares to provide that each of the parties shall have the following percentage of the total shareholding:-

Gilmartins	33 1/3rd%
Riga	44 4/9th%
Nominated subsidiary of AIB ("AIBS")	22 2/9th%

The shares subscribed for shall be issued at par.

Gilmartins undertake to Riga and to AIB to procure issuance of sufficient shares to each of Riga and AIBS to achieve the above agreed percentages. They further undertake that such issuance shall be achieved as soon as possible and in any event by not later than 31st July, 1991.

7. AIB shall nominate to Gilmartins, the name of AIBS which is to be entitled to the shareholding referred to above.

8. The following provisions shall apply in respect of the AIB shareholding:-

a. AIB shall procure that Gilmartins shall be granted by AIBS the right to acquire the AIB Shareholding for the sum of £2,000,000. Such option may be exercised at any time after 31st May, 1993, but may not be exercised prior to that date unless:-

a. AIB and Riga both agree that they should be permitted to so exercise; or

b. AIBS decides to exercise the right granted to it pursuant to clause 9 below, and Gilmartins chooses to exercise the right granted to them pursuant to that clause.

9. Notwithstanding the provisions of Clause 8 above, at any time AIBS may choose to offer the AIB Shareholding to the other parties for the sum of £2,000,000. Should it wish to exercise this option, as between Riga and Gilmartins, AIB shall procure that Gilmartins shall have the first right to acquire the AIB Shareholding.

10. In the event of Gilmartins exercising their option pursuant to clauses 8 or 9 above, then they may do so by not less than 3 months notice in writing, the purchase monies to be paid not later than the expiry of the period of such notice.

11. Should Gilmartins exercise their right to acquire the AIB Shareholding, then Riga shall have the option to acquire from Gilmartins sufficient of their total shareholding to enable Riga's shareholding to be increased to 50%. PROVIDED HOWEVER, that the provisions of this clause shall only come into operation if Gilmartins wishes to sell any or all of their shareholding, whether at the time of the acquisition of the AIB Shareholding or at any later time. If

Riga shall decide to exercise the right contained herein within two years of the date hereof, the cost to Riga of the acquisition of the number of shares necessary to bring Riga's shareholding up to 50% shall be related to the price of £2,000,000 paid for the AIB Shareholding. At any time thereafter, the price to be paid by Riga shall be pro rata to the price being obtained by Gilmartins for their shareholding.

12. Gilmartins and Riga shall have the right to sell all but not part only of their shareholdings to other parties but only after first offering such shareholding to the other shareholders. In this regard standard pre-emption provisions shall be contained in the shareholders agreement/ Memorandum and Articles of Barkhill.

In the event that following the exercise of the pre-emption rights referred to above neither of the existing shareholders wishes to purchase the shareholding on offer, then Gilmartins or Riga, as the case may be, shall be free to offer to other outside shareholders, provided however that unless all sums due to AIB shall have been discharged and AIB's Shareholding shall have been purchased, no shares may be sold to an outside shareholder without the consent of the other shareholders, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld.

13. Riga shall be appointed as Project Manager by Barkhill for the purpose of the development of the lands at Palmerstown owned or to be acquired by Barkhill. Riga shall not be entitled to any fee for discharging this function.

14. The Board of Directors of Barkhill shall comprise one representative each nominated by Gilmartins, Riga and AIB

15. In the event that Barkhill shall wish to dispose of any of the lands at Palmerstown now acquired or to be acquired, and where such lands are not required for the purposes of the proposed Retail Shopping Centre Development, then for so long as any sums are due to AIB at foot of loan facilities, or AIBS shall remain as a shareholder, in the event that any such sales take place at a price of not less than £175,000 per acre, then the net proceeds of such sales, providing no event of default shall have occurred, will be used to repay facilities as follows:-

- a. 2/3rd thereof shall be applied to reduce amounts due to AIB;
and
- b. 1/3rd thereof in repayment of the loan made available by Gilmartins.

16. The above terms shall be incorporated into detailed legal documentation to be prepared by Messrs. William Fry, Solicitors, which documentation shall include a Shareholder's Agreement between the parties hereto providing for the relationship between the parties as shareholders which shall include such restrictions on actions by Barkhill as AIB may reasonably require.

Our Ref: GNJB/8462/2

5th September, 1991

Dear Mrs. Gilmartin,

BARKHILL LIMITED

We refer to the Heads of Terms signed by, inter alia, your Attorney, Mr. Seamus Maguire, on behalf of yourself on 31st day of May, 1991 in regard to the above Company.

As you are aware, it was part of the Heads of Terms that a Shareholders Agreement, incorporating the terms, would be signed by the parties. Notwithstanding that over 3 months have now elapsed, 2 drafts of the Shareholders Agreement have been produced, and certain changes requested by your husband on behalf of himself and yourself have been included in it, the document has still not been signed. You will be aware that under the provisions of clause 6 of the Heads of Terms, the necessary issuance of shares to conform with the provisions of that clause were to have been effected by not later than 31st July, 1991.

The Bank has been more than patient, and notwithstanding that demands made by it in respect of the existing sums due to it by the Company have not been met, and it has been at all times, and remains, entitled to enforce its security held from the Company, it has refrained from taking any action at foot of its security.

We must regretfully inform you that the Bank is not prepared to continue to exercise such restraint. Accordingly, unless the Shareholders Agreement to reflect the Heads of Terms, and to be in or substantially in the format of the draft dated 28th August, 1991, prepared by Messrs. William Fry and furnished to your Attorney, Mr. Maguire, is executed by all parties by not later than Friday, 13th September, 1991, the Bank will take such action as it may be advised is open to it to recover all sums due to it by Barkhill Limited.

We are also writing to the other parties to the Heads of Terms and also to Barkhill Limited, advising them of the above decision by the Bank.

Yours faithfully,
for Allied Irish Banks p.l.c.,

re: Westpark Expenses

Dear Jim,

The sum of £56,598.71 has been credited to the account of Riga Limited on the basis that the sum of £6,593.38 was necessary to bring the "Westpark facility" up to the sum of £1m.

I think this matter has been dealt with incorrectly. It was agreed that the Invoices totalling £63,192.09 were properly payable. As these had been paid out of the Riga general facility I think the reimbursement should have been made up as follows:

- a. The sum of £6,593.38 should have been debited to the Riga "Westpark facility" and credited to the Riga Current Account and
- b. The sum of £56,598.71 which has already been lodged to the account has been, I presume, debited to the main Barkhill account.

If you agree I will ask Aidan Lucey to Debit the Riga "Westpark facility" with the sum of £6,543.38 and credit the Riga General Account.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

JOHN W.T. DEANE

Dear Leo,

I refer to your letter of 15th December, 1992.

I confirm that the proposed journal numbers 49, 50 and 52 all of which relate to transactions with Riga Limited are correct.

As regards proposed journal numbers 46, 47, 48 and 51 I can only assume that these journals are correct as they are in respect of information submitted by A.I.B.

I do not have any further supporting documentation for items 1 - 10 and maybe you would check with A.I.B. as they paid out most of these items.

Dear John,

Re: BARKHILL LIMITED - FINANCIAL STATEMENTS
FOR THE 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ YEAR PERIOD ENDED 30 APRIL 1992

Further to your recent correspondence and our telephone discussion on Friday 30 April, I am setting out hereunder the unresolved matters that I am aware of, at this stage, in relation to the finalisation of the draft financial statements of Barkhill Limited. The comments noted had been mentioned extensively in correspondence to Tom Gilmartin, Owen O'Callaghan and AIB.

1.	TOM GILMARTIN'S LOAN ACCOUNT	IR£
	Advances (net) by Tom Gilmartin to Barkhill during the period to 30 April 1992	4,002,052
	Provisional interest figure to 30 April 1992	1,225,000
		5,227,052

The share subscription agreement allows for interest on Tom Gilmartin's advances. The above interest figure has been calculated by us at a rate of 12% per annum. In certain instances, it was necessary for us to estimate the date of introduction of funds by Tom Gilmartin to Barkhill.

Tom Gilmartin's agreement is required to the above summary. He has been furnished with full particulars showing the manner of preparation of his loan account to Barkhill.

Other shareholders and directors must also agree on the level of indebtedness of Barkhill to Tom Gilmartin as these matters directly impact on the financial statements.

2. OPTION AGREEMENT (DATED 31 JANUARY 1989)
BETWEEN O'CALLAGHAN PROPERTIES AND TOM GILMARTIN
RE CLONDALKIN LANDS

Tom Gilmartin has advised us that the following payments were made by him to O'Callaghan Properties to enhance the value of Barkhill's lands.

Date (estimated)	IR£
1 January 1989	800,000
1 January 1990	1,350,000
	2,150,000

We understand that these payments are dealt with in an option agreement. We have seen no documentary evidence on these payments. We are also advised by Tom Gilmartin that the total option cost regarding the Clondalkin lands was IR£3.5M. and that the difference of IR£1,350,000 has been fully abated by O'Callaghan Properties.

We require sight of this option agreement and confirmation from O'Callaghan Properties that no further sums are due in respect of this agreement. Mary Basquille at AIB has indicated that AIB do not have a copy of the agreement.

These payments are included in Tom Gilmartin's loan account to Barkhill.

3. MERRIGROVE

We understand that Merrigrove is a wholly owned subsidiary of Barkhill. It will be necessary to disclose this in the financial statements of Barkhill Limited. We have requested a copy of the most recent balance sheet of Merrigrove from Aidan Lucey. We also require to inspect the share certificates of Merrigrove which will confirm the ownership by Barkhill of Merrigrove.

We require a copy of the agreement that Merrigrove has entered into with Dublin Corporation.

4. PROPERTIES ACQUIRED

As you are aware, a number of the properties were acquired in Tom Gilmartin's own name. We understand from AIB that, as part of their security arrangements, all necessary declarations of trust were completed by William Fry and signed by Tom Gilmartin, confirming the transfer of ownership to Barkhill. I should be grateful if you could arrange for copies of the relevant declarations of trust to be forwarded to us. I am assuming that these are not bulky documents.

During the course of our examination of the various files at Seamus Maguire's office, we did note that there was certain correspondence relating to claims for interest arising from the late closings of certain properties. By far the most significant of these was an amount of IRE405,000 claimed by Dublin Corporation. Seamus Maguire has advised us that any further liabilities arising are remote as he has not had any further correspondence on these matters. Can you also confirm that this is also your understanding of the matter?

5. BARKHILL BANK ACCOUNT A BANK OF IRELAND, BLANCHARDSTOWN

An amount of IRE124,000 was lodged to this account in respect of a VAT refund received by Barkhill. Payments totalling IRE122,852 were made from this account. Tom Gilmartin has advised me that he has no recollection of payments amounting to IRE122,852 from the company's bank account and accordingly we have charged these amounts to his loan account.

We understand that the original VAT liability was funded by Tom Gilmartin.

6. VALUATION OF PROPERTIES

The accounting policy which we have adopted in relation to the costs incurred to date is to include all such costs, especially interest accruing, in the heading development properties in the draft financial statements. However, this policy has only got validity if the development progresses reasonably quickly and in accordance with plan. Otherwise, the ongoing costs and interest will result in a carrying value of development properties which could exceed their valuation. Accordingly we require copies of the most recent valuations to confirm that the carrying values of development properties in the draft financial statements do not exceed the valuations obtained from professional advisers.

We have in our possession copies of the following valuations:

VALUER	DATE OF VALUATION
Gunne	10 December 1991
Hamilton Osborne, King	19 February 1992
Lisney	1 December 1989

7. SECRETARIAL MATTERS

You will also be aware that the secretarial affairs of the company are very much out of date. There is an ongoing risk of the company being struck off by the Registrar and the directors do have an exposure to fines.

Whilst it may not impact directly on the presentation of the financial statements, there would appear to be some doubt on the precise ownership of Tom Gilmartin's shares, i.e. whether they are owned by a Trust or by himself in his personal capacity. I believe it will be necessary to liaise with the Trustees in the Isle of Man on this matter.

8. AIB

I believe it is also necessary to evaluate the position of AIB facilities in view of the apparent breach of conditions and covenants with AIB.

I did write to Aidan Lucey on 15 December 1992 setting out what I regarded as the unresolved matters of strict accounting nature. I am attaching to this letter a schedule of payments/transactions for which Deloitte & Touche received no supporting documentation. The transactions recorded on this schedule have been booked in the accounts of Barkhill on the basis of discussions and explanations received from Tom Gilmartin, Aidan Lucey, Seamus Maguire and AIB.

I look forward to the finalisation of the draft financial statements.

Yours sincerely,
DELOITTE & TOUCHE

13th September 1991.

Dear Sirs,

Further to our recent discussions we are pleased to inform you that the Board of Allied Irish Banks plc. ("the Bank") has sanctioned facilities for Barkhill Limited ("the Borrower") subject to the following terms and conditions:-

1. AMOUNT: (a) IR£3,000,000 (Three million Irish Pounds);
(b) Interest roll-up in respect of sums drawn hereunder and sums drawn pursuant to facility letter from the Bank dated 19th February 1990, and accepted by the Borrower on that day ("the 1990 Facility Letter"), up to a maximum of IR£2,500,000.
2. PURPOSE: To part-finance the site assembly of 176 acres at Palmerstown, Co. Dublin.
3. METHOD: Loan
4. REPAYMENT: Repayment in full to be effected by 31st May 1993 at latest.
5. INTEREST: An interest period, ("Interest Period"), shall be of one, three or six months duration at the option of the Borrower or such other duration as may be agreed between the Borrower and the Bank.

Where the Borrower does not notify the Bank of its option prior to 11 a.m. on the first day of an Interest Period, an Interest Period of three months will be deemed to have been selected, subject to availability of funds.

Interest shall be payable on the Loan at the rate of 3% per annum over the cost to the Bank of funds on the Dublin Interbank Market, plus reserve asset cost if applicable for the appropriate Interest Period.

Reserve Asset Cost shall be such additional percentage as the Bank shall conclusively determine to be necessary to compensate the Bank for the cost to the Bank (calculated by reference to circumstances existing on the first day of the Interest Period) of making or maintaining the Loan for such Interest Period by reason of the then current liquidity or other requirements of the Central Bank of Ireland and any other regulatory Authority.

6. SECURITY:

The Loan and all interest thereon and all other sums payable to the Bank in respect of the Loan will be secured in a manner satisfactory to the Bank as follows:-

- a) Mortgage Debenture incorporating a fixed charge over the Borrowers right, title and interest (held in fee simple free from encumbrances with good marketable title) in and to the properties as more particularly set out in Appendix i & ii hereto together with a first fixed charge over the contracts for sale set out in Appendix iii hereto;

- (a) if the Borrower shall make default in the payment of any installment of any advance repayable by installments;

RE: BARKHILL/RIGA

Meeting at Bankcentre 20th January 1993.

Present: Owen O'Callaghan.
John Deane.
Dave McGrath.
Michael O'Farrell.
Mary Basquille.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

Owen O'Callaghan advised that there are currently 42 families of itinerents on the Quarryvale site - 14 will be moving by the end of March and Owen is hopeful that the entire site will be cleared by end of April, although he is prepared to go for injunctions if necessary. Security on the Bruton House has cost £600 per week and Owen has recently put in place an alternative arrangement whereby a builder will move into the house rent free under a caretakers agreement.

When asked to clarify the site boundary, Owen confirmed that the only element of the original L shape site which has not yet been acquired are the County Council lands fronting on to the new motorway, and one cottage adjacent to the Sharp Lands on the Fonthill Road which is occupied by a large family of itinerents. It was indicated that Tom Gilmartin had failed to acquire this small portion of land several years ago, however Owen has resumed negotiations - while this small strip of land is not material to the development as it is adjacent to the new roundabout planned from the Fonthill^{foot} to the site, it was indicated that it was possible that the family may be moved on a temporary basis to the bungalow behind the Bruton House.

A revised development layout has been prepared in draft form following discussions with the planners. The new plan involves moving the retail element towards the Fonthill Road access, after the space earmarked for hotel and leisure facilities and the filling station, the McDonald Restaurant and the pub.

RETAIL PLAN

Some discussion is taking place as to the merits of an open centre compared with an enclosed centre, and a decision must be taken shortly, to enable the final plans be drawn up. An open layout for the mall areas could reduce mall building costs by c.40% and would also reduce service charges for tenants.

The current plan incorporates three anchor stores with capacity for a fourth store to be incorporated in the plans in early 1994 when the new local Councils takes effect. Owen O'Callaghan advised that he is aiming to have planning permission obtained by the end of December 1993 on the basis of the current cap of £250,000 sq.ft. of retail space, which he estimates will gross up to 350,000 sq.ft. Marks & Spencers, Dunnes, Rochés and Quinnsworth have all expressed interest to date and it was indicated that Marks & Spencers representatives will be meeting Owen O'Callaghan on 4th February next to progress discussions. Owen O'Callaghan is confident that the new Council will agree to a fourth anchor store next January subject to proving demand. They are currently working on submitting a detailed planning application by the end of March for all elements of the site - it was indicated that they are currently under pressure from the planners to speed up the application process. In view of the fact that the final plan submitted will have the support of the Council, it is expected that a decision would be made on the application by the end of June, or whenever the draft development plan is finalised. In this regard, target date for finalisation is the beginning of June, which could run to the end of July, at the latest, following which matters could be held up for a further 4/6 months on the basis some objections are expected. In view of the foregoing, Owen O'Callaghan is confident that work could start as early as January 1994, or by March/April 1994 at the latest. He stressed that as for all previous developments, his team will be working closely with the County Manager and the planners to ensure that any contentious issues are raised and agreed in advance.

With regard to a strategy for development, we were advised that the current priority is to ensure that planning is obtained as soon as possible. When the question of a development partner was raised, or selling-on some elements of the site, it was highlighted that selling the site without planning in the current climate would not give a decent return, whereas disposal of the hotel/leisure and pub elements of the site could generate up to £3.5m with planning. John Deane then indicated that they would be reluctant to actively seek an equity partner until planning had been finalised, while Owen suggested that this was something that could perhaps be followed quietly. In this regard, it was mentioned that an insurance company had expressed interest last year in becoming a development partner and some tentative approaches will now be made to see if they remain interested. It was indicated that Daly Hickey may be interested in a merger with Green and Barkhill, and while it was suggested by John Deane that they would make a suitable partner for the industrial land, this was not considered realistic as they already appear to be committed on their West 1 project. M.O'Farrell advised that it has recently come to our attention that sites for a major Science Park were sought, and appear to give a contract to Green over the next few days.

COMPETING DEVELOPMENTS - ADJACENT SITES

In relation to the Neilstown site, the Town Centre zoning has been retained (primarily to avoid legal action) however the Neilstown site is effectively land locked while Merrygrove retains an option on the site for which a Stadium has been proposed. In addition, the road infrastructure in this area would not be adequate for a major retail/town centre development and for this reason the Neilstown location is not considered a threat short term.

With regard to the Clondalkin Mills site, John Deane advised that Jim Mansfield has now received planning permission but will have to reassure the planners in relation to potential flooding problems on site.

Land adjacent to Barkhill site which has recently been re-zoned industrial for the IDA was discussed, and it was indicated that development of this site is unlikely to be a short term option. ~~that~~ Apparently Dublin Corporation who previously owned the land gave the land to the IDA some time ago, but the IDA have no funds for development.

TOM GILMARTIN

Dave McGrath highlighted that a commitment had been given to Tom Gilmartin last December that a joint meeting of the Barkhill shareholders would take place during January and enquired whether O'Callaghan/Deane had formulated any strategy to bring him on side. It was agreed that this was an important issue, but John Deane highlighted previous difficulties in getting Tom to attend meetings. It was suggested that Tom would be lined up for a meeting on 9th February 1993, by which time an outlined development plan would be prepared for discussion between all shareholders.

BARKHILL'S REQUIREMENTS FOR THE COMING YEAR

Basically O'Callaghan & Deane feel that the Barkhill debt will have to be carried for a further year which will involve a further rollup of interest. When pressed, it emerged that they would also be expecting AIB to fund fee outlay in relation to the planning application - Owen O'Callaghan advised that Ambrose Kelly had been requested to give an estimate of his fees on a cost basis, ~~for~~ conditional, ^{on} back end fee payable at a later stage of the development (generally architects fees prior to planning are in the region of 6% of total development costs).

Dave McGrath responded that while we would be recommending to our Board a further roll up of interest charges for the coming year, there would be no funding available from AIB for further fee ^{costs} charges. In this regard, it was highlighted that the last increase in facility sanctioned (from £9m to £14.5m) had incorporated c.£0.9m to acquire the County Council land which remains outstanding, despite the fact that this portion of the facility and more besides has been utilised for increased fee/land payments beyond the level anticipated. Owen O'Callaghan appeared somewhat taken aback at this and advised that Riga did not have the ability to pick these fees either. He then asked whether AIB were prepared to live with the consequences and requested clarification of our thinking/objectives in relation to Barkhill - Dave McGrath outlined that, in AIB's view, the priority is to obtain planning permission as soon as possible at the lowest cost; He indicated the view the development was too large for Riga to handle alone and that serious consideration should be given to disposing of part of the site at the earliest possible date. In addition, Barkhill/Riga should give ongoing attention to seeking a development partner for the project.

U.S. REFINANCING

John Deane outlined that following the recent meeting with the American Bankers Interstate Johnson Lane, it had emerged that the cheapest options for refinancing would only become available as soon as the anchor stores are tied up - in the meantime the existing borrowing could be refinanced at a low margin on the basis of a guaranteed take-out from AIB. Some discussion followed on the benefit, in cost terms, of proceeding along these lines, and ~~as~~ the dangers ~~of~~ incurring a substantial exchange loss if the debt had to be reconverted to Irish Pounds. It was indicated that AIB would be interested in pursuing this refinancing option provided the exchange risk could be adequately covered off.

OUTSTANDING FEES

Owen O'Callaghan advised that ^apayment of £64k was still due to Frank Dunlop in relation to zoning costs and requested payment of this invoice from Barkhill's loan facility. He was clearly disappointed when told that this would not be possible in view of the fact that the facility was drawn to the maximum amount permitted, and he highlighted that Riga would be covering all fees in relation to the Green takeover and the Stadium proposal (which has indirect benefit for Barkhill) and had also paid security costs in relation to the Bruton House. In relation to urgent fees, he also indicated that approximately £10k would be required after all itinerents were cleared from the site, to put up an earth mound around the site in order to avoid further itinerents moving in. At this point, it was highlighted that a budget for the coming year should be prepared as soon as architects/planning fees had been quantified.

BARKHILL AUDIT

Owen O'Callaghan gave us a copy of a letter from Deloitte & Touche stressing the need for an early meeting to finalise the audit, and highlighting the potential difficulties if Barkhill appears on the next companies office strike off notice. It was agreed that Owen would request Deloitte & Touche to forward a similar letter to Tom Gilmartin

RIGA

Owen O'Callaghan raised the subject of the increased overdraft facility previously sought and requested an update on this matter. Michael O'Farrell replied that we had been waiting for funds flow details from John Deane since early December, highlighting income from each development less associated costs, together with details of any outstanding creditors. Owen expressed dissatisfaction at the way this matter had been regularly deferred since it was first raised in early 1992. He confirmed that Riga's ability to improve its cash flow position through asset disposal was not a realistic option, apart perhaps from taking an investment partner in Douglas Shopping Centre where rents are generating a 10% return compared to a 13% funding cost for related borrowings. The aspects of most concern appear to be the £2.5m equity injection in Delview Ltd (Cumberland House) and funds invested in Barkhill, neither of which appear to be capable of generating any income in the short term. Owen requested John Deane to provide AIB with the required information at the earliest possible date to enable us progress discussions on this matter and suggested that it may be appropriate to meet on the morning of the 9th February to progress this matter, prior to the Barkhill meeting.

The interest rate on the Arthurs Quay Developments Ltd overdraft facility was queried by Owen O'Callaghan. Apparently the relevant rate is Prime +1.5% which averaged at over 20% in recent weeks. We highlighted that the AQD facility of £400k was overdue for review since the end of December last and, while we were aware that John Deane had already requested continuation of this facility for a further year, consideration of this request was something that could only be considered in the light of Riga's cash flow situation.

With regard to the North Main Street project, John Deane advised that the Dunnes contract had not yet been signed. He commented on past experience with Ben Dunne in relation to Merchants Quay Shopping Centre where Ben Dunne refused to sign a contract but provided monthly stage payments without any difficulties. While it was indicated that Frank Dunne is looking after the North Main store and that signing of documentation should not present difficulty, John Deane asked how we would react if Riga were unable to comply with the loan condition relating to signed contracts - he confirmed that Dunnes had already paid £670k in advance of the due date (re site acquisition). We replied that we would need to see a revised cash flow for this project highlighting peak borrowing requirements to enable us consider matters further.

Tom Gilmartin	-	Contact to arrange meeting for 9th February 1993.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 5 - THE FINANCIAL RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN MR O'CALLAGHAN AND MR DUNLOP, AND RELATED MATTERS

INTRODUCTION

1.01 As set out in Part 4, in the wake of the second Heads of Agreement of 15 February 1991 and following upon the lodging of the motion to rezone the Quarryvale lands, Mr O'Callaghan commenced the lobbying campaign and duly engaged Mr Frank Dunlop¹ of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd to assist in this endeavour.

1.02 In this Part, the Tribunal considered the payments made to Mr Dunlop by Mr O'Callaghan, Riga Ltd ('Riga') and Barkhill Ltd ('Barkhill') over the course of a ten year period commencing in 1991 and ending in 2001. During this period a total of IR£1,808,556.81 was paid to or for the benefit of Mr Dunlop by Mr O'Callaghan through Riga/Barkhill. Of this circa IR£1.8m, in excess of IR£1.6m, (IR£1,633,556.81) was paid to Mr Dunlop's company, Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd ('Frank Dunlop & Associates')² and the balance of IR£175,000 was paid to Mr Dunlop through his company, Shefran Ltd ('Shefran').

1.03 The sum of IR£1,633,556.81, paid to Frank Dunlop & Associates by Riga and Barkhill can be broken down as follows:

- 1991 - IR£16,712.71, paid by Barkhill.
- 1992 - IR£157,386.66, of which IR£87,386.66 was paid by Barkhill and IR£70,000 paid by Riga.
- 1993 - IR£110,238.38, of which IR£20,340.60 was paid by Barkhill and IR£89,897.78 paid by Riga.
- 1994 - IR£10,825, paid by Barkhill.
- 1995 - IR£14,148.76, paid by Barkhill.
- 1996 - IR£36,207.50, paid by Barkhill.
- 1997 - IR£203,348.83, of which IR£78,650 was paid by Barkhill and IR£124,698.83 paid by Riga.
- 1998 - IR£612,143.57, of which IR£72,600 was paid by Barkhill and IR£539,543.57 paid by Riga.
- 1999 - IR£143,959.19, of which IR£72,942.84 was paid by Barkhill and IR£71,016.35 paid by Riga.
- 2000 - IR£310,436.21, of which IR£36,300 was paid by Barkhill and IR£274,136.21 paid by Riga.
- 2001 - IR£18,150, paid by Riga.

¹For further details of the circumstances of Mr Dunlop's retention see Part 9

²Of this figure, the payments of IR£70,000 in November 1992 and IR£25,000 in September 1993, invoiced by Frank Dunlop & Associates, were made directly to Frank Dunlop. See Part 6.

1.04 For convenience, those payments are considered in this Part under five main headings, namely: (1) the Shefran Payments; (2) the Quarryvale Payments to Frank Dunlop & Associates; (3) the retainer payments to Frank Dunlop & Associates; (4) other Financial Compensation; and (4) the Legal Fees Payments to Frank Dunlop & Associates.

1.05 In order to understand these payments it is also necessary to have some understanding of Mr Dunlop and his modus operandi. Consequently, these matters are considered in the first section, including the circumstances in which Mr Dunlop became involved in Quarryvale.

MR DUNLOPS INVOLVEMENT

MR DUNLOP

2.01 Mr Dunlop was born in Kilkenny in 1947. Following a period as a journalist in RTE, he was appointed as Press Secretary to the Fianna Fail Party in 1974. In 1977, he was appointed Head of the Government Information Service. In 1978, Mr Dunlop was appointed Government Press Secretary, a position he held until the fall of the Fianna Fáil led Government in 1982.

2.02 A new Fine Gael led Coalition Government took office in 1982. Mr Dunlop was appointed an Assistant Secretary in the Department of Education on the recommendation of the Minister for Education, Mr John Boland. Subsequently, when Mr Boland was appointed Minister for the Environment, Mr Dunlop moved to the Department of the Environment as its Assistant Secretary, and was later appointed Assistant Secretary in the Department of Public Service.

2.03 Mr Dunlop left the public service in 1986 and became an Executive Director of a public relations company, Murrays Consultants. In late 1989, he established his own company, Dunlop and Associates Ltd (later Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd). He described the activity of that company as the provision of services of a dual nature, namely public relations and public affairs, which included lobbying. Shortly after Dunlop & Associates was established, two further companies were incorporated for Mr Dunlop, namely Sheafraan Ltd (later changed to Shefran) and Xerxes Consult (Jersey) Ltd (an offshore company).

THE WAR CHEST ACCOUNTS

3.01 Mr Dunlop as well as his companies operated a number of bank accounts. Of these, 5 were what he referred to as his “war chest”³ accounts, namely:

- (i) An account in the name of Shefran at AIB College Street (Account No. 48181083 opened 15 April 1992) (‘the Shefran AIB 083 account’);
- (ii) Bank of Ireland account at Westland Row in the name of Sheafran (Account No. 45735780 opened 1994) (‘the Shefran Bank of Ireland 780 account’);
- (iii) an account at Irish Nationwide Building Society (‘INBS 910 account’);
- (iv) an account at the Terenure branch of AIB (‘AIB 042 Rathfarnham account’); and
- (v) an offshore account in the name of his company Xerxes Consult (Jersey) Ltd at Midland Bank Trust, Jersey.

3.02 According to Mr Dunlop, the purpose of these accounts was to provide a repository for significant sums of money which he wanted to keep secret. For example, Mr Dunlop testified that he opened his AIB 042 Rathfarnham account in order to ‘...create a fund in which I would have ready cash.’

3.03 Between 1990 and 1993 and, in particular, in the period May/June 1991, and in November 1992, significant large round figure sums were both lodged to and withdrawn from these accounts. In tandem with Mr Dunlop’s operation of these accounts for the purposes of both lodging and withdrawing cash sums, he utilised his company Shefran to receive payments in connection with his retention as a lobbyist for the Quarryvale lands rezoning project.

MR DUNLOP’S ENGAGEMENT WITH QUARRYVALE

4.01 This section considers: the circumstances in which Mr Dunlop became engaged as a lobbyist for Quarryvale; the nature of the agreement between him and Mr O’Callaghan; Mr Gilmartin’s opposition to his engagement; and Mr Gilmartin’s and AIBs knowledge of his engagement.

CIRCUMSTANCES OF MR DUNLOP’S ENGAGEMENT

4.02 Mr O Callaghan engaged Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist for Quarryvale in the early months of 1991, although there is some dispute regarding the exact date of his engagement.

4.03 According to Mr O’Callaghan, when he decided to retain Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist, he did so in light of the imminence of the Quarryvale rezoning vote. Mr ³The Tribunal understood Mr Dunlop’s ‘war chest’ to be a fund he built up for, inter alia, the purpose of having ready funds available to him for disbursement to politicians.

O'Callaghan stated that in his discussions with Mr Gilmartin about the Quarryvale rezoning, Mr Gilmartin had focused on contacts he had with senior politicians who, as far as Mr O'Callaghan was concerned, were of no benefit to the Quarryvale project. Therefore, according to Mr O'Callaghan, the employment of Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist was predicated on the necessity to lobby councillors in Dublin County Council.

4.04 Mr O Callaghan acknowledged that in 1991 he was aware of Mr Dunlop's Fianna Fáil connections and that he was aware that the support of Fianna Fáil councillors, who held a majority on the County Council, would be required to ensure the success of the rezoning proposal. He told the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop was engaged: '... [to] introduce me to as many as he possibly could of the 78 County Councillors, let me make my case to them.'

THE AGREEMENT

4.05 Mr O'Callaghan explained the services which Mr Dunlop agreed to provide and in respect of which he was to be paid his fees, in the following terms:

The arrangement with Frank Dunlop because I was now using his office, using his staff, using his car, using his telephones, in fact using everything, plus himself more or less on a full-time basis, was that if the vote took place in April of '91 he would charge a fee, an all in fee, that was his own fee included his office expenses, his staff, his outlay, the whole lot of 80,000 pounds. If the vote went beyond April of '91 the fee could go to 100,000 pounds inclusive, including everything, expenses, outlay, office, staff, phones, everything.

4.06 Mr O'Callaghan did not tell Mr Gilmartin of his arrangement to pay either IR£80,000 or IR£100,000 to Mr Dunlop.

4.07 Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that he subsequently entered into a second 'fees' agreement with Mr Dunlop pursuant to which Mr Dunlop's professional fee was to be IR£75,000 plus IR£20,000 'arrears'. Mr O'Callaghan believed that this arrangement was agreed at some time between June and August 1991.

4.08 According to Mr O' Callaghan, at the same time he and Mr Dunlop agreed as to the manner of the payment of Mr Dunlop's fees, they had discussed what was to be involved in the lobbying of councillors. Mr Dunlop had informed him that:

'...I [Mr O'Callaghan] would have to be prepared to, as I said, spend most of the week in Dublin. Every week right up to the date of the vote and that I would have to go and meet, he would arrange it, but I would have to meet as many of the councillors as were prepared to meet us. Meet them on a one-to-one. Explain to them what our proposal was. And try and convince them the advantages of supporting Quarryvale as against Neilstown and at the same time to ensure that the Quarryvale site would go ahead as well as the Blanchardstown site would go ahead and that we would not really disrupt the retail hierarchy in the rest of West County Dublin. That is what the challenge was.'

4.09 Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that he and Mr Dunlop had discussed the then imminent Local Elections. Asked if Mr Dunlop discussed with him whether the payment of any political donations would be part of his duties as a lobbyist, Mr O'Callaghan stated:

I can't say that we specifically had that discussion but I'm pretty sure that I would know even then that as a political lobbyist that Frank Dunlop would be making political contributions to politicians.

4.10 Mr O'Callaghan maintained that during the course of his discussions with Mr Dunlop the subject of Mr Dunlop making political donations on Mr O'Callaghan's behalf 'did not come up.'

4.11 According to Mr Dunlop his original agreement with Mr O'Callaghan in 1991 in relation to the project was for a fee of IR£100,000 of which he claimed he had issued invoices for IR£80,000 in total and had been paid that amount. His belief was that he did not issue an invoice for the missing IR£20,000 and maintained that Mr O'Callaghan agreed with him that he would make up the shortfall in 1992.

4.12 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he did not believe that a meeting recorded by him in his diary for 26 April 1991 in Buswells Hotel with Mr O'Callaghan and noted 'Eoin (Buswell's Hotel)', was the meeting at which he discussed the manner in which he was to be paid by Mr O'Callaghan.⁴ The Tribunal was satisfied that their financial arrangement was probably made on that date.⁵

4.13 Mr Dunlop's diary for 26 April 1991, furnished to the Tribunal in October 2001, revealed a heavily attempted obliteration of an entry immediately above the entry in which Mr Dunlop had recorded the meeting with Mr O'Callaghan. Forensic analysis carried out for the Tribunal revealed that it was Mr Gilmartin's name that Mr Dunlop had attempted to obliterate. Mr Dunlop explained this attempted obliteration to the Tribunal as follows:

⁴Mr O'Callaghan disputed the date of this meeting as identified by Mr Dunlop.

⁵ See Part 9

'Presumably on the basis that I did not meet him. I did not have a meeting with Tom Gilmartin and Owen O'Callaghan in Buswells Hotel on the day following the meeting that I had with them and Liam Lawlor.'

4.14 The Tribunal believed that if Mr Dunlop's explanation was correct, he would most likely have drawn a simple line or lines through Mr Gilmartin's name rather than attempt to obliterate it completely. There are many instances in Mr Dunlop's diary where he used this commonly employed method to cross out a diary entry. However the Tribunal was unable to determine the real reason for Mr Dunlop's determined effort to conceal the reference to Mr Gilmartin.

4.15 There was some conflict between Mr O'Callaghan's and Mr Dunlop's evidence as to what had been agreed between them on the issue of the quantum of his fees and the manner in which Mr Dunlop was to be paid.

4.16 The thrust of Mr Dunlop's position was that he and Mr O'Callaghan had agreed a fee of IR£100,000 for Mr Dunlop, to be paid through Shefran and that it would be paid within a certain timeframe and that his outlay and expenses were to be invoiced through Frank Dunlop & Associates. Mr Dunlop made no mention of an agreed IR£80,000 'fee' inclusive of his outlay and expenses on the basis that the Quarryvale vote would be concluded by the end of April 1991 or, as Mr O'Callaghan contended, of an alternative fee arrangement of IR£100,000, inclusive of outlay and expenses, if the Quarryvale vote took place after April 1991. Mr Dunlop's evidence did not allude to any agreement having been reached in the period June to August 1991.

4.17 According to Mr Dunlop, at the time of his discussion with Mr O'Callaghan about payments to him, Mr Dunlop was conscious of the imminence of the 1991 Local Election and had appreciated (having regard to the fact that a rezoning Motion had been lodged with the County Council on 15 February 1991) that, 'If a strategy to get this matter dealt with prior to the Local Elections was to take place it had to be done before a certain date.'

4.18 Mr Dunlop acknowledged to the Tribunal that at the time of his discussions with Mr O'Callaghan regarding the manner in which he was to be paid his fees, he, Mr Dunlop knew that it was likely that payments of money to councillors would be involved in order to ensure successful outcomes to the Quarryvale rezoning proposal and in the course of his evidence he testified to making disbursements to councillors in the period May June 1991 from his 'confluence of funds', which included inter alia, monies provided by Mr O'Callaghan. Mr Dunlop also acknowledged that it was his intention to use

‘some’ of the funds as would be paid to Shefran by Mr O’Callaghan for the purpose of paying councillors.

4.19 Mr Dunlop however denied that in the course of the negotiation with Mr O’Callaghan of what, he claimed, was his professional fee, he had any discussion on the subject of payments to councillors. Nor, he stated, did he discuss such an issue with Mr O’Callaghan by reference to the suggestion ‘that the ways of the world’⁶ would have to apply.

MR GILMARTIN’S OPPOSITION

4.20 From the outset, Mr O’Callaghan was aware of Mr Gilmartin’s opposition to the retention of Mr Dunlop⁷ and initially kept his retention secret from him.

4.21 In the course of his sworn evidence on Day 882, Mr O’Callaghan gave the following reason for his desire to keep Mr Dunlop’s arrangement in relation to the project secret from Mr Gilmartin:

‘Because I was as I said again timing between then and the actual vote in the middle of May at that time we expected the middle of April was very, very short. And I was hoping that Tom Gilmartin might have had some few councillor contacts that would be on side. And (when) Tom Gilmartin discovered that I was using Frank Dunlop against his wishes, he might withdraw that council support from me, I felt he was that type of a person. So I didn’t want him to know that I was using Frank Dunlop in case I would lose the few Councillors that he might have had. I discovered afterwards that he only had two Councillors on side, that was McGrath and Gilbride, so it didn’t make any great difference.’

4.22 Also on Day 882, Mr O’Callaghan elaborated as follows;

‘The purpose of that exercise was to keep from Mr Gilmartin the fact that I was using Frank Dunlop and at the same time to protect the councillors, to prevent Tom Gilmartin from taking from me, supporting Quarryvale the councillors that I felt would have been on his side.’

4.23 In the course of his evidence Mr O’Callaghan maintained that once appraised of Mr Dunlop’s retention, Mr Gilmartin’s objection to Mr Dunlop diminished, although he never became ‘enamoured’ by him.

⁶ A phrase Mr Dunlop acknowledged he used in discussions with other landowners/developers when he was being retained as a lobbyist.

⁷ See Part 9 of this Chapter.

4.24 Mr O’Callaghan’s evidence in this regard was in contrast to the position advanced by him in his 3 May 2000 statement to the Tribunal, in which he stated, ‘...Tom Gilmartin totally rejected any involvement of Frank Dunlop’ in Quarryvale. In that statement Mr O’Callaghan also stated the following:-

‘In view of Tom Gilmartin’s opposition to using Frank Dunlop, I agreed with Frank Dunlop that he could invoice using his Company Shefran in order to keep Frank Dunlop’s involvement from Tom Gilmartin. However when I sought funds from AIB as Barkhill’s Bankers to discharge the invoices or to reimburse Riga, then Frank Dunlop’s position had to be disclosed. Some of the Invoices were VAT rated 0. I did not complain. However there would not be any loss of revenue as if the Invoices did contain a VAT element, then this would have been recoverable by Barkhill/Riga.’

4.25 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that the meeting(s) wherein he and Mr O’Callaghan agreed on the mechanisms by which he was to be paid for his work as a lobbyist promoting Quarryvale took place against a backdrop of opposition by Mr Gilmartin⁸ to Mr Dunlop’s role as lobbyist for Quarryvale.

4.26 Asked for the reasons for Mr Gilmartin’s objection to him, as advised to him by Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Dunlop said:

‘...He said that Gilmartin had obviously been talking to people or had spoken to various people, and that he was vehement in relation to me, that he didn’t want me involved.’

4.27 And:

‘Well, in fairness to Mr O’Callaghan, I didn’t pursue it any further with him in that particular context. But I mean, he just said that Gilmartin had said that he did not want Frank Dunlop involved. Now again Judge, hindsight is a wonderful thing, and we subsequently discover in relation to the evidence that Mr Gilmartin has given, that he suspected, or was told that I had a relationship with Liam Lawlor, and that arising out of the experience that he had already had with Mr Liam Lawlor, that he didn’t want me involved. But, there was – it was as simple as Mr O’Callaghan was having a difficulty with Mr Gilmartin because Gilmartin did not want me involved, but Mr O’Callaghan did. And AIB.’

⁸ Mr Gilmartin’s first meeting with Mr Dunlop is considered in Part 9 of this Chapter.

AIB'S KNOWLEDGE OF MR DUNLOP'S ENGAGEMENT

4.28 Mr Jim Donagh⁹ told the Tribunal that he became aware of Mr Dunlop's involvement in Quarryvale on 26 April 1991, which was approximately three weeks prior to the successful motion on 16 May 1991. It was his understanding that Mr Dunlop was 'assisting' Mr O'Callaghan in 'the advancement of the obtainment of zoning of the site.'

4.29 Mr Eddie Kay¹⁰ recalled seeing Mr Dunlop at the celebration function held by Mr O'Callaghan following the successful rezoning motion before Dublin County Council on 16 May 1991, in a hotel next door to Dublin County Council's offices. He recognised Mr Dunlop from newspaper articles. Mr Kay said that this was the first hint he had of any involvement by Mr Dunlop in Quarryvale.

4.30 Mr Kay said that AIB was not asked by Mr O'Callaghan to approve of Mr Dunlop's involvement. However, he suggested that if the bank had been asked, it would almost certainly have given its approval as he was well known in the public relations area. Mr Kay also said that AIB assumed that Mr O'Callaghan would have wanted to appoint his own people to the project and that AIB would have little reason to concern itself with who exactly was being engaged. The bank was given information on a general basis as to who Mr O'Callaghan had appointed or intended to appoint, but was prepared to let Mr O'Callaghan do his own thing, within reason.

4.31 AIB personnel at all times denied any knowledge at any time of corrupt payments made by Mr Dunlop to politicians, including councillors.

MR GILMARTIN'S KNOWLEDGE OF MR DUNLOP'S ENGAGEMENT

4.32 Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that shortly after he and Mr Dunlop entered their arrangement, Mr Gilmartin (and later AIB) became aware of Mr Dunlop's involvement. It is clear from the evidence of Mr Dunlop, Mr O'Callaghan, and Mr Gilmartin that Mr Gilmartin was made privy to Mr O'Callaghan's intention to retain Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist at a meeting on 25 April 1991. Moreover, by 2 May 1991, Mr Dunlop faxed to Mr Gilmartin certain information connected with the Quarryvale rezoning proposal thereby informing him directly of his involvement as a lobbyist for Quarryvale.

⁹ Mr Donagh held the position of Assistant Manager Corporate Banking Division in AIB, reporting to Mr Kay. His involvement in the Quarryvale was within the period 1990 to 1992.

¹⁰ In his capacity as the Senior Manager of Property and Construction in AIB's Corporate Commercial Division, Mr Kay was the bank executive who (with Mr Jim Donagh) dealt mostly with Mr Gilmartin/Barkhill between late 1989 and approximately September 1992 (including meeting Mr Gilmartin in London in December 1992).

THE SHEFRAN PAYMENTS

5.01 Between 16 May 1991 and 17 February 1993, Mr O Callaghan's company Riga and Barkhill made six individual payments to Shefran amounting to IR£175,000.

5.02 Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan both maintained that all the Shefran payments were preceded by invoices issued in the name of Shefran and addressed to Riga. None of the invoices discovered to the Tribunal made provision for VAT and each was unnumbered.

5.03 The majority of the cheque payments made to Shefran were cashed by Mr Dunlop. Insofar as Mr Dunlop made lodgements to bank accounts from the proceeds of the six Shefran payments he received from Riga/Barkhill in the period May 1991 to February 1993, such lodgements (save one to discharge a loan obtained by Mr Dunlop in February 1992) were made to 'war chest' accounts (see above) then being operated by him. None of the payments made to Mr Dunlop using the name Shefran were lodged to Frank Dunlop & Associates bank accounts.

SHEFRAN

5.04 SHEAFRAN was incorporated as a limited liability company on 6 March 1990. The name SHEAFRAN was changed to SHEFRAN on 3 October 1991. Mr Dunlop explained that this was done because the spelling of the company name at the date of incorporation was erroneous,¹¹ and that it had been his intention to incorporate the company as 'Shefran'. Shefran, Mr Dunlop claimed, was an amalgam/derivative of the spellings of Mr Dunlop and his wife's Christian names, (SHEila and FRAnk). In the following pages the company will be referred to as SHEFRAN, unless otherwise indicated.

5.05 In the years 1991 to 1994 Shefran's auditors, Coyle & Coyle, based on information provided by Mr Dunlop, recorded the company as a non-trading company, a position Mr Dunlop acknowledged to the Tribunal was incorrect. In fact, Shefran, in the years 1990 to 1994 was in receipt of income and had during that time opened at least two bank accounts.

5.06 Shefran did not maintain books or records for auditing or other purposes. Mr Dunlop described Shefran as a vehicle utilised by him to receive professional fees which he did not wish to appear in the books of his company, Frank Dunlop ¹¹For convenience, this Report will, in general, refer to the payments made to Mr Dunlop's said company, whether SHEAFRAN or SHEFRAN, as the SHEFRAN payments, unless the context otherwise requires. Equally, and on the same basis, references to Mr Dunlop's said company will be to SHEFRAN.

& Associates. Mr Dunlop also described Shefran as a source of 'ready cash', a vehicle for personal income, and as a means of evading tax.

REASONS FOR PAYMENTS TO SHEFRAN

6.01 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that, because of Mr Gilmartin's opposition to his involvement in Quarryvale, he had introduced the idea of using Shefran for invoicing purposes. It was therefore agreed that Mr Dunlop would invoice his fees through this entity. Mr Dunlop maintained that it was also agreed that he would recover costs and expenses incurred by him via Frank Dunlop & Associates.

6.02 According to Mr Dunlop, on Day 763, Mr Dunlop stated as follows:

A. In, on I think the second meeting I had with Mr Owen O'Callaghan, whom I had never met previously, and he outlined to me the difficulties that he was having with Mr Tom Gilmartin in relation to me, notwithstanding any other difficulties he was having with Mr Gilmartin, in relation to me.

That Mr Gilmartin had specifically made it clear that he did not want me involved. I told Mr O'Callaghan of this other company that I had, a company called Shefran, which as you quite rightly say had no bank account at that stage, and that I could invoice him through that company, to which Mr O'Callaghan agreed.

6.03 According to Mr Dunlop the agreement, whereby he was to receive fees through Shefran and outlays and expenses through Frank Dunlop & Associates was discussed solely between himself and Mr O Callaghan.

6.04 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that what was intended to be kept secret from Mr Gilmartin was the payment of his fees and not his involvement per se as a lobbyist for Quarryvale. Mr Dunlop said his proposed involvement would within a short time have become known to Mr Gilmartin because of his lobbying activities with councillors, some of whom were also in contact with Mr Gilmartin.

6.05 Mr Dunlop's testimony in this regard was at odds with pronouncements reported in the press in October 1998, as having been made by him at that time in relation to Shefran. Specifically, on 11 October 1998, during the course of contact between Mr Gilmartin and the Tribunal, and some five days following the Tribunal first contacting Mr Dunlop in relation to his involvement with Quarryvale, an article was published in the Sunday Independent Newspaper under the heading, 'Dunlop's PR fees paid through Channel Isles – linked company'.

6.06 The article reported, inter alia, that:

Last week in the company of his Solicitor and in an interview which he tape-recorded, Mr Dunlop said that Shefran was a company ‘under my indirect control.’¹²

And:

Yesterday, in a telephone interview, he added: ‘Tom Gilmartin did not want me under any circumstances – and I use that word advisedly – involved in the Quarryvale project. In order to avoid him being aware of my involvement, invoices for professional services issued were through Shefran.’

6.07 In the course of his evidence on Day 763, Mr Dunlop acknowledged that, as was evident from the newspaper report, by late 1998 he had publicly stated that the reason why he had decided to invoice Barkhill and Riga through Shefran, was namely, to conceal his (Mr Dunlop’s) involvement from Mr Gilmartin.

6.08 On that same day, the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Dunlop as to the purpose of using Shefran to receive payments from Mr O’Callaghan:

‘Q. ...what you were keeping from Mr Gilmartin in 1991 are the funds that are being paid to Shefran, is that correct?’

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Right?’

A. That is the purpose of my discussion with Mr O’Callaghan’

Q. So that yourself and Mr O’Callaghan agree that your keeping these funds a secret from Mr Gilmartin?’

A. Correct

Q. Fine. And that was the purpose of the Shefran payments, if I understand your evidence to date correctly, is that right?’

A. Arising out of the discussion, we’ll keep this money, you are going to pay me these professional fees which we have agreed, Gilmartin doesn’t want me involved, I am not going to work without being paid, I have this other company, you can pay them into that. Now, I could equally have said I don’t give a toss about Tom Gilmartin whether he knows or not, so all the invoices ...you are going to get from Frank Dunlop and Associates.’

6.09 On Day 763, it was put to Mr Dunlop by Tribunal Counsel that his evidence regarding the purpose of making payments through Shefran was untrue:

‘Q. I suggest to you, Mr Dunlop, that your story, that the Shefran payments were routed through Shefran to avoid Mr Gilmartin knowing about it are untrue, because on 16th May 1991, which is the date you first received a Shefran payment, was the same date that Mr Gilmartin, according to your statement, congratulated you on the work you had done in the rezoning of Quarryvale?’

A. I do not dispute any of the facts that you have outlined, but I do dispute, vehemently, and will continue to do so, is that the scenario that you paint as some sort of ineluctable scenario, is wrong. I don’t accept that, and I won’t accept it. I made the arrangement with Mr O’Callaghan on foot of the discussion that I had with Mr O’Callaghan, in the circumstances that I outlined. I have also said to you in my narrative statement the circumstances in which Mr Gilmartin, distasteful and all as it is now to recollect it, actually gave me a bear hug in the upper room in the Royal Dublin Hotel and congratulated me and said ‘we couldn’t have done it without you, Frank’. Yes that is indisputable.

Q. I am saying to you, Mr Dunlop, that that is inconsistent with setting in place a system of payments in order, you say, to prevent Mr Gilmartin, in 1991, knowing that you were involved in the transaction. And I am suggesting as an alternative reason that the separate Shefran system, is that you were putting in place, at a minimum, a mechanism whereby you were putting yourself in funds in order to bribe Councillors to secure the rezoning of Quarryvale?’

6.10 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that because of the dual system, agreed between himself and Mr O’Callaghan, for the payment of his professional fees through Shefran and the recovery of outlays and expenses through Frank Dunlop & Associates, it was probable that Mr Gilmartin would, in due course become aware of payments being made to Frank Dunlop & Associates. However, Mr Dunlop continued to maintain that, as far as he and Mr O’Callaghan were concerned, Mr Gilmartin’s opposition to his, Mr Dunlop’s, involvement in Quarryvale had been dealt with by the use of Shefran. Mr Dunlop stated:

‘...Mr Gilmartin and Mr O’Callaghan have obviously had a conversation, when, I don’t know, in relation to my involvement. Mr Gilmartin strongly demurs to the effect that the advice that Mr O’Callaghan is getting from others, and then I'm presuming here, including Mr Lawlor, that I should become involved causes a difficulty.

In that if Mr O'Callaghan is to pay me the amount of money that we have agreed through Frank Dunlop & Associates, that direct, that directly identifies my involvement. Mr O'Callaghan said that it was a difficulty we had with Mr Gilmartin about my involvement. I proffered Shefran. It is very convenient for me to proffer Shefran. After I proffered Shefran and Mr O'Callaghan agreed there is no need for any further discussion with Mr O'Callaghan in relation to these professional fees. He has agreed to do it and does do it. Thereby providing me with valuable cash.'

6.11 Asked why he continued the dual payments system in 1992, after Mr Gilmartin became aware of his engagement by Mr O Callaghan, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he had found it more 'convenient' to claim what he termed were his professional fees from Mr O'Callaghan, via Shefran, as opposed to billing for his services through Frank Dunlop & Associates.

6.12 Mr Dunlop maintained that it was he who, in 1992, made the decision to continue invoicing via Shefran, and that he had issued such invoices to Barkhill on the direction of Mr O'Callaghan. Mr Dunlop refuted Tribunal Counsel's suggestion that there was no element of convenience associated with his continued use of Shefran having regard to the fact that Mr Dunlop was by then also invoicing Mr O'Callaghan via Frank Dunlop & Associates. In fact, during 1992 Frank Dunlop & Associates issued invoices for a total of IR£157,386.66 including invoices totalling IR£63,603.35 directed to Barkhill.

6.13 Mr Dunlop also refuted any suggestion that his continued use of Shefran in 1992 was to facilitate cash payments to councillors or politicians. He maintained that his continued use of Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices with VAT and Shefran invoices without VAT was more than likely 'a clumsy way of doing business.'

6.14 Mr O'Callaghan stated that the initial decision that Mr Dunlop would use Shefran to claim and receive payments from Riga (and which, with the exception of the IR£25,000 payment on 17 February 1993, were duly reimbursed by Barkhill) was for the purposes of concealing Mr Dunlop's involvement in the Quarryvale project from Mr Gilmartin, and at the same time to prevent Mr Gilmartin:

'from taking from me, supporting Quarryvale, the Councillors that I felt would have been on his side'.

6.15 Mr O’Callaghan stated:

‘Shefran was a company that Frank Dunlop had and when I, when both of us in our discussion, when I suggested I was concerned that if Tom Gilmartin was aware that Frank Dunlop was involved in the lobbying with me, which as I said to you was a fallacy but that’s the way we discussed it at the time. Frank suggested that he could use another company, a company by the name of Shefran. And he used that to invoice me.’

6.16 Mr O’Callaghan did not agree with the suggestion that the use of Shefran was to keep secret from Mr Gilmartin the payments he had agreed to make to Mr Dunlop.

6.17 Asked why, given that Mr Gilmartin within a very short timeframe became aware of Mr Dunlop’s retention¹³, he had not told Mr Gilmartin of the fact of his decision to pay Mr Dunlop through Shefran, Mr O’Callaghan replied:

‘Because again, this was totally irrelevant. As far as I was concerned, Shefran meant absolutely nothing. Shefran and Frank Dunlop were one and the same entity’.

6.18 And in response to being asked why he had not advised Mr Gilmartin:

‘There wasn’t any, in my opinion, there wasn’t any need. I told him about Frank Dunlop. If he asked me about Shefran I would have told him. It just didn’t crop up. It could have been called anything, Shefran meant nothing to me, except it was the same thing as Frank Dunlop.’

6.19 Mr O’Callaghan elaborated:

‘...I told Mr Gilmartin that I was dealing with Frank Dunlop and I told Tom Gilmartin that I was paying Frank Dunlop and we were paying Frank Dunlop. I never used the word ‘Shefran’ to him because it didn’t make any difference. He could have called it West Cork Foods as far as I was concerned. Shefran meant nothing to me.’

And,

‘...Shefran was used to protect whatever councillors [who] would support Quarryvale, Tom Gilmartin’s Councillors that would support Quarryvale, protect them and make sure they stayed inside with me. That’s the reason the whole thing was set up.’

¹³In the course of his evidence Mr Dunlop acknowledged that on 2 May 1991 he faxed a press cutting relating to the Quarryvale lands to Mr Gilmartin in London and that by early May 1991, Mr Gilmartin must have known of his retention as a lobbyist.

6.20 Mr O’Callaghan was questioned as to why the payments to Mr Dunlop could not have been made to Frank Dunlop & Associates rather than to Shefran, Mr O’Callaghan replied:

‘Because Frank Dunlop used, had I think had a second- as I said, I didn’t worry about this. I didn’t mind this really. Quite a lot of our professional teams used separate companies to invoice us outside of their professional names. This is a normal procedure. You wouldn’t know what name a company would come up with, for all different reasons that they have. Frank was using Shefran and it was set up originally to avoid, to assist me in Tom Gilmartin not knowing that Frank Dunlop was involved, to protect the Councillors that we wanted to support us.

Secondly, and Frank was interested in this. And the reason why I think he probably kept this going was that he also had some arrangement, which he hasn’t said anywhere in his evidence. He had some arrangement with his own communication company, Murray Consultants, the company that he worked with before. That any new clients, any new clients that would come into his company, that he probably would have to give a percentage of that I think to Murray Consultants or some arrangement like that. I am not totally privy this. So it suited him as well to have a separate company for any new clients like ourselves.’

6.21 Mr O’Callaghan further stated:

I think the answer to that is that first of all Shefran, the Shefran payments were for Frank’s – the initial Shefran payments from March until the middle of May, let’s call it the first vote, were inclusive, they included total expenditure, outlay, they included everything actually. From August of ’91 on Frank split the system, his complete outlay expenses office etc. was Frank Dunlop & Associates and his fees was strictly Shefran. As to why he, I think the reason why he operated two systems both Shefran and FDA from May on was because I believed he discovered that there was a lot more involved in this whole lobbying system and it cost a lot more money that we expected and it was going to go on a lot longer than was expected. So he decided for his own reasons to keep his fees separate from his outlay and expenses. That he was his choice and I had no objection to that.’

6.22 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that by 1992 he and Mr Dunlop had agreed that Mr Dunlop would continue to invoice his professional fees through Shefran and that his expenses and outlay would be invoiced through Frank Dunlop & Associates.

6.23 Mr O’Callaghan also stated that the question of paying all bills through Frank Dunlop & Associates ‘didn’t suit’ Mr Dunlop, and that he ‘obviously preferred to use the other system’. Mr O’Callaghan maintained that this ‘dual’ payment practice was a system adopted by many of Mr O’Callaghan’s professional team.

6.24 Mr Gilmartin maintained that the explanation for the payments to Shefran was to conceal Mr Dunlop’s activities from him. On Day 740, the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Gilmartin regarding payments to Shefran:

‘Q.The, just to revert again, Mr Gilmartin to 7566, were you concerned that there was 150 thousand pounds VAT free paid in round sum figures to a company that you say you had no connection with or no knowledge of?’

A. That’s correct.

Q. And did you raise queries with anyone in relation to that?’

A. I did, at board meetings in the bank, I demanded to know what Shefran was and who they were and why they were getting these large sums of money, as well as why Dunlop was getting large sums of money. The bank made a statement to somebody that Shefran was there to hide the fact from me of Mr Dunlop’s involvement, but that was total nonsense because Dunlop was on the invoices and Dunlop was on the list of payments, and I couldn’t understand why the bank would have said this to somebody. Somebody queried on my behalf, for an explanation, and they said according to what I was told, that it was to hide the fact of Dunlop’s involvement.

Q. Who told you that, Mr Gilmartin?’

A. Mr Sheeran, because when I was bankrupt and when I was in trouble I had to appoint Mr Sheeran to, or I appointed Mr Sheeran to sit in on my behalf and I kicked up quite rough with the bank at one board meeting and Mr Sheeran tried to distance himself from what I was saying, and he demanded to know afterwards as to why they were refusing to tell me who Shefran was. And they told him Shefran was there to hide Dunlop’s involvement from me. Now I couldn’t figure that one out because here is Frank Dunlop getting a load of payments openly, and I came to the conclusion that they were hiding the fact of what Mr Dunlop was up to from me, that this is why it was set up.

Q. Well, may be they were keeping from you the level of payment that Mr Dunlop was receiving?’

A. Well, I don't know what the reason for it is or was, but that was their statement to Mr Sheeran.

Q. Well, Mr Sheeran –

A. Well, because I in discussion with Mr Sheeran, he relayed that to me, that the bank had said it was to hide Dunlop's involvement from me, so I said that's nonsense, sure Dunlop's name is on the thing.'

KNOWLEDGE OF THE CONNECTION BETWEEN MR DUNLOP AND SHEFRAN

AIB

6.25 According to Mr Kay he learned of Mr Dunlop's connection to Shefran in January 1992 when Mr O'Callaghan told him that Shefran was 'another arm' of Mr Dunlop. Mr O Callaghan suggested that he told Mr Kay of the connection between Shefran and Mr Dunlop sometime after April 1991

6.26 On 17 May 1991 Mr Donagh was telephoned by personnel in AIB, College Street seeking his sanction for clearance of a cheque payment for IR£25,000, payable to Shefran, and drawn on Riga's current account. Mr Donagh's evidence was that having been requested by someone in AIB, College Street to clear the cheque payable to Shefran, he had responded to that request by stating that the payee (Shefran) meant nothing to him. He said he was then told that Mr Dunlop was in the branch and had presented the cheque for payment, whereupon he advised AIB College Street that it was in order for the cheque to be paid. Thus, on 17 May 1991 Mr Donagh was privy to the fact that Mr Dunlop required IR£25,000 in cash for some purpose. The Tribunal viewed this as a check clearance procedure. It clearly did not constitute formal notification to AIB (or Mr Donagh) of the connection between Mr Dunlop and Shefran.

MR GILMARTIN

6.27 Although aware from perhaps as early as December 1991 of the fact of payments having been made to Shefran by Riga, Mr Gilmartin did not then know of Shefran's connection with Mr Dunlop. His evidence (which the Tribunal accepted as accurate) was that on being informed of a reference (in documentation which had been furnished by AIB) to payments to Shefran by Riga in connection with Quarryvale he assumed Shefran to be merely one of a number of companies employed by Riga in connection with the Quarryvale project.

6.28 Although he had, in January 1992, queried the purpose for which Shefran had been retained, Mr Gilmartin maintained that no one, including Mr

O’Callaghan or AIB personnel, apprised him of who, or what Shefran was, nor had he been apprised of the purpose of the payments.

6.29 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he was kept in the dark about a connection between Shefran and Mr Dunlop for about two years. Mr Gilmartin alleged that he was misled and ill informed as to this connection by AIB.

6.30 However, according to Mr Donagh of AIB, in the course of telephone contact with Mr Gilmartin in January 1992, he recalled Mr Gilmartin asking him who Shefran was and telling him that Shefran was Mr Dunlop. There was, however, no AIB memorandum of any such conversation.

6.31 According to Mr Kay, he told Mr Gilmartin about the connection between Mr Dunlop and Shefran on 5 June 1992. Mr Kay said that the disclosure came about as follows; in the course of a telephone call, Mr Kay apprised Mr Gilmartin of Mr O’Callaghan’s written request of 4 June 1992 seeking payment of IR£30,000 to Shefran from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account. Asked by Mr Gilmartin as to what it was all about, Mr Kay responded that Shefran was an ‘arm’ of Mr Dunlop. Mr Kay acknowledged that, until informed by him on 5 June 1992, Mr Gilmartin had not known who or what Shefran was and had not known of any connection between Shefran and Mr Dunlop.

6.32 There was a conflict of evidence as between Mr Gilmartin and Mr Kay as to the extent of the disclosure made by Mr Kay to Mr Gilmartin, regarding Shefran on 5 June 1992. Mr Gilmartin maintained that he was not told by Mr Kay on 5 June, despite asking, who Shefran in fact was.

6.33 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Kay did provide some information to Mr Gilmartin on 5 June 1992 which should have left him with knowledge of a link between Shefran and Mr Dunlop. This disclosure to Mr Gilmartin, such as it was, as to a link between Mr Dunlop and Shefran coincided with the commencement of an audit of Barkhill’s accounts.

6.34 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin, in early 1992, remained ignorant of Mr Dunlop’s connection to Shefran, and it accordingly rejected Mr Donagh’s belief that by January 1992, he had informed Mr Gilmartin of that connection.

6.35 Mr Gilmartin’s knowledge of the connection between Shefran and Mr Dunlop was probably imparted to Mr Fleming of Deloitte & Touche (Barkhill’s auditors) in the course of his and Mr Fleming’s discussions about the Barkhill audit for the period 25 November 1988 up to 30 April 1992, then being conducted by Mr Fleming. On a copy of the 'Westpark Expenses' document, furnished by Riga to Deloitte and Touche on 18 June 1992 (which listed, inter alia, the three 1991 Shefran payments made by Riga on behalf of Barkhill) Mr Fleming identified, by way of manuscript notation, the connection between Shefran and Mr Dunlop. Mr Fleming's evidence was that he did so, most probably in August 1993, based on information provided to him by Mr Gilmartin in the preceding months. Mr Fleming told the Tribunal that Mr Gilmartin had linked Mr Dunlop to Shefran, by saying to him 'that's Frank Dunlop's company'. Later in his testimony, Mr Fleming described Mr Gilmartin's imparting his knowledge regarding the connection between Shefran and Mr Dunlop in the following terms: 'My recollection of the discussion was and it is 16 years ago that's Frank Dunlop's company, is it.' The manner in which Mr Fleming described to the Tribunal Mr Gilmartin's comment suggested to the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop's association with Shefran had not at that time been confirmed definitively to Mr Gilmartin.

THE SHEFRAN PAYMENTS

7.01 Between 16 May 1991 and 17 February 1993, Mr O Callaghan's company, Riga, and Barkhill made six individual payments to Shefran amounting to IR£175,000. Three of these payments were made in 1991, two in 1992 and the third and final payment in 1993.

THE 1991 PAYMENTS

7.02 In 1991, a total of IR£80,000 was paid to 'Shefran' by Mr O'Callaghan's company, Riga. This total was comprised as follows:

- IR£25,000 paid 16 May 1991
- IR£40,000 paid 30 May 1991
- IR£15,000 paid 7 June 1991

7.03 The first Shefran payment of IR£25,000 was paid to Mr Dunlop on 16 May 1991, by cheque dated 16 May 1991, payable to SHEAFRAN, drawn on the Riga AIB 023 account, and co-signed by Mr O Callaghan and Mr Aidan Lucey, Riga's book keeper. This date was also the date of the Quarryvale rezoning vote, a fact which Mr O'Callaghan described as 'pure coincidence.'

7.04 In relation to the second payment of IR£40,000, both Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop, respectively, acknowledged the payment and receipt of the sum. No copy of the cheque was made available to the Tribunal. A debit of IR£40,000 appeared on Riga's current account on 5 June 1991 and the cheque payments book for the Riga AIB 023 account contained an entry for the payment of a cheque in the sum of IR£40,000 on 30 May 1991. The payee was noted as SHEAFRAN.

7.05 The third Shefran payment of IR£15,000 was made by Riga on 7 June 1991. It was not possible to decipher with certainty whether the payee on this cheque was SHEAFRAN, SHEFRAN or SHEFRON, but SHEAFRAN was the name recorded in Riga's cheque payments book as the payee of the cheque. It was likely, therefore, that the payee on the cheque was SHEAFRAN.

7.06 Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan each discovered to the Tribunal invoices dated 25 March 1991, 2 April 1991 and 1 May 1991 which, they maintained, were the invoices associated with the aforesaid payments made to 'Sheafran' within a four-week period between 16 May 1991 to 7 June 1991.

7.07 The said three invoices provided to the Tribunal were each headed 'Shefran Ltd', described as 'Public Affairs Consultants', and with an address at 25 Upper Mount Street, Dublin 2, the same address as Frank Dunlop & Associates. All three invoices were addressed to 'Accounts Payable, Riga Ltd, 21/24 Lavitts Quay, Cork' and described the work, which was the subject of each invoice, in the following terms: 'To the provision of professional strategic communications and educational services.'

7.08 Both Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan maintained, as they did in the case of all subsequent payments to Shefran (and indeed in relation to most payments made on foot of Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices) that the invoiced amounts were agreed in advance of the issue of each invoice. Yet, the dates on the individual Shefran invoices, claimed to have been furnished to Mr O'Callaghan in 1991, suggested that Mr Dunlop had provided Mr O'Callaghan with the three 1991 Shefran invoices prior to the receipt by him on 16 May 1991 of the first of the payments.

7.09 None of the three 1991 Shefran invoices was stamped either 'received' or 'paid' by Riga. Mr Aidan Lucey (Riga's book keeper) told the Tribunal that there was no 'hard and fast rule' of stamping invoices 'paid' within Riga. Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan also both agreed that no documentation passed between them in relation to any of the 1991 payments (save, they claimed, for the invoices themselves). These invoices are considered in more detail in the section dealing with the Audit, below.

THE TREATMENT OF THE 1991 SHEFRAN PAYMENTS IN RIGA'S BOOKS¹⁴

7.10 In Riga's cheque payments book, the three 1991 payments were recorded as having been made to SHEAFRAN, and were recorded as payments made by Riga on behalf of Barkhill. As with other Barkhill/Quarryvale related payments made by Riga the payments were given the attribution '5098', which indicated that the payments had been made on behalf of Barkhill.

7.11 In the half-yearly nominal ledger of Riga for the period to 31 October 1991, and in the nominal ledger of Riga for the year ended 30 April 1992, the total sum of IR£80,000 paid to Shefran in 1991 was posted by the auditors of Riga to Nominal Account 735, which was the Barkhill Loan account, as items paid out by Riga on behalf of Barkhill.

THE TREATMENT OF THE 1991 SHEFRAN PAYMENTS BY MR DUNLOP

7.12 Mr Dunlop received the first Shefran payment on 16 May 1991. The Tribunal was satisfied that this cheque was cashed by Mr Dunlop on 17 May 1991 at AIB College Street, in pursuance of an arrangement in existence between Mr Dunlop and Mr John Aherne, a Manager at AIB's College Street branch, to facilitate the encashment of cheques¹⁵. On the same day as he cashed the Shefran cheque, Mr Dunlop lodged IR£14,500 in cash to his INBS 910 account. Mr Dunlop maintained that this cash was sourced from the encashment of the Shefran cheque. Mr Dunlop retained the remaining cash of IR£10,500.

7.13 With regard to the second payment for IR£40,000, Mr Dunlop suggested that a sum of IR£80,000, which was credited on 5 June 1991 to the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account, may have included all or a portion of that payment.

7.14 The Tribunal established that on 5 June 1991 the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account was indeed credited to the extent of IR£80,000. Documentation furnished by AIB revealed that the said sum was received by the Rathfarnham/Terenure branch by way of credit transfer. That documentation did not assist the Tribunal as to the source of this IR£80,000 lodgement to the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account or whether the said IR£80,000 credit transfer included the encashed proceeds of the Shefran cheque or any part of same.

7.15 In the course of his evidence in this Module, Mr Dunlop conceded that a 'very likely scenario' regarding the IR£40,000 Shefran cheque received by him from Riga was that the proceeds of the encashment of same were retained by him in their entirety. The evidence of Mr John Aherne supported that of Mr Dunlop as to the probability that the IR£40,000 Shefran cheque was encashed

¹⁴ This issue is considered elsewhere in more detail.

¹⁵ See Chapter 15 for details of this arrangement by Mr Dunlop. Mr Aherne was unable to say what Mr Dunlop did with the IR£40,000 cash.

7.16 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop did in fact cash the 30 May 1991 Shefran cheque for IR£40,000 and that the IR£80,000 credited to the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account on 5 June 1991 did not include any part of that cash.

7.17 The third 1991 Shefran payment for IR£15,000 was negotiated by Mr Dunlop in AIB College Street on 7 June 1991, on foot of his arrangement with Mr Aherne of AIB. The reverse of the cheque bore two signatures 'P. Kennedy and P. O'Dualachain'. According to Mr Dunlop, the latter signature, looked like his handwriting and could well have been an attempt by him to sign the back of the cheque by using an Irish translation of his own name.¹⁶ Mr Aherne suggested that the 'P. Kennedy' endorsement could have been written by Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop claimed that he was unable to assist the Tribunal in relation to the author of the 'P. Kennedy' signature.

7.18 In correspondence with the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop attributed a cash lodgement of IR£15,000 made to the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account on 11 June 1991 as representing the proceeds of the third cheque payment. However, the Tribunal was satisfied that upon cashing the cheque, the entire proceeds were retained by Mr Dunlop in cash. Indeed, Mr Dunlop himself explained that cashing cheques in AIB College Street in pursuance of the arrangement he had with Mr Aherne was undertaken for the purposes of providing himself with cash funds and that he did not usually re-lodge such funds.

7.19 On the same day that Mr Dunlop cashed the IR£15,000 Shefran payment, according to his testimony, he also withdrew IR£25,000 from the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account and both were added to his confluence of funds from which he made distributions to councillors.

THE PURPOSE OF THE 1991 SHEFRAN PAYMENTS

7.20 Both Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan claimed that the total of IR£80,000 paid to him via Shefran over a three week period constituted his fee as agreed.

7.21 Mr Dunlop testified that out of the funds paid to him by Mr O'Callaghan through Shefran in 1991, and from other monies available to him at the time, he made payments to a number of councillors in the course of the May/June Local ¹⁶For other examples of the manner in which Mr Dunlop endorsed cheques see below and see Chapter 15.

Elections.¹⁷ He stated that he had anticipated and received requests for contributions for the forthcoming Local Elections from councillors whom he had lobbied to support the Quarryvale rezoning Motion on 16 May 1991. Mr Dunlop's sworn admission was that such payments were corrupt payments on his part.

7.22 Mr O Callaghan specifically denied that any part of the IR£80,000 paid to Mr Dunlop in 1991 was for the purpose of placing Mr Dunlop in funds in order to facilitate payments in the course of the Local Election, or for transmission onwards by Mr Dunlop to senior politicians. Mr O'Callaghan denied any knowledge of why Mr Dunlop cashed the Shefran cheques or of the purpose for which Mr Dunlop required cash of IR£40,000 on 7 June 1991. Mr O'Callaghan stated that he had no knowledge of cash withdrawals made by Mr Dunlop in the period May/June 1991. With regard to Mr Dunlop's testimony¹⁸ about what he did with cash from the Shefran payments over the course of May/June 1991, Mr O'Callaghan remarked, 'I can't understand why Mr Dunlop gave his fees away'. Further evidence regarding Mr O Callaghan's knowledge of the use of the three 1991 payments to pay councillors is discussed in the Audit Section of this Part.

7.23 Mr Dunlop also testified that from the IR£80,000 Shefran payments received from Mr O'Callaghan in May/June 1991, he paid IR£40,000 to Mr Lawlor.¹⁹

AIB'S KNOWLEDGE OF THE PAYMENTS

7.24 Following a meeting between Mr Donagh of AIB, Mr O Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin on 14 May 1991, Mr Donagh compiled a memorandum documenting Mr O' Callaghan's retention of Mr Dunlop to assist 'in the advancement of the obtainment of zoning of the site'. That memo did not suggest that Mr O'Callaghan told Mr Donagh that as of that date he was in possession (as he claimed) of three invoices from Shefran totalling IR£80,000 and that as a consequence Barkhill now carried this liability.²⁰ The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan had the IR£25,000 Shefran cheque in his possession on 14 May 1991 for transmission to Mr Dunlop.

7.25 Prior to the conclusion of the 1991 Share Subscription Agreement, and subsequent to a Heads of Terms Agreement which was signed by Mr and Mrs Gilmartin, Riga and AIB on 31 May 1991, an arrangement was put in place on 6 June 1991, as between AIB and Riga for the provision to Riga of a IR£1m loan, to be utilised in relation to Quarryvale/Barkhill (the Riga subordinated IR£1m

¹⁸ See Part 7 of this Chapter.

¹⁹ This issue is dealt with elsewhere in this Chapter.

²⁰ As of 14 May 1991 Mr Gilmartin with his wife were the sole legal and beneficial owners of Barkhill. loan'). Upon receipt of the IR£1m, Riga shortly thereafter debited a sum of IR£230,000 from the loan, and paid that sum into the Riga AIB 023 account, by way of reimbursement to Riga of expenditure theretofore incurred by it on behalf of Barkhill. The IR£230,000 sum included, inter alia, the IR£80,000 which Riga had by then paid to Shefran. This sum continued, throughout 1991 and 1992, to be carried in the books of Riga as part of the inter-company loan balance owed by Barkhill. These payments were undoubtedly substantial, even in the context of the expenses of the Quarryvale project, and would understandably have caught the attention of AIB, as in fact they did.

7.26 Consequently, the first indication of the extent of the 1991 cost of Mr Dunlop was made known to AIB when it was notified by Mr O'Callaghan of a number of payments totalling just over IR£230,000 made by Riga on behalf of Barkhill. On 2 January 1992, AIB was advised by O'Callaghan Properties (presumably on behalf of Riga) that it had expended a sum of IR£230,284.38, by way of 'Westpark Expenses', in the period February to June 1991. It was likely that AIB were provided with this information by way of explanation for the fact that upon the establishment of the Riga subordinated IR£1m loan facility, Riga had shortly thereafter debited IR£230,000 and had paid that sum into the Riga AIB 023 account. Included in the document, as furnished by Riga to AIB, and which set out Riga's claim to have expended IR£230,000 approximately on the Quarryvale project, were the three payments to Shefran between 16 May 1991 and the 7 June 1991, amounting to IR£80,000.

7.27 Mr Kay of AIB told the Tribunal that he first became aware of the 1991 Shefran payments in January 1992. He told the Tribunal that although it was never specifically stated to him, he 'deduced' that the Shefran monies were in fact Mr Dunlop's fees, and that the payments being made to Frank Dunlop & Associates represented expenses and outlays.

7.28 Mr Kay did not at that time believe that the large round-figure payments to Shefran were out of line with what he might have expected Mr Dunlop's fees to have been.

MR GILMARTIN'S KNOWLEDGE OF THE PAYMENTS

7.29 The Tribunal was satisfied that at the time Riga paid the three 1991 Shefran cheques to Mr Dunlop, Mr Gilmartin was not aware of such payments and the Tribunal was equally satisfied that Mr Gilmartin remained unaware of the Shefran payments when the Share Subscription Agreement (whereby the shareholding in Barkhill was formally vested in Mr Gilmartin and his wife, Riga and AIB) was signed on 13 September 1991.²¹

7.30 Although aware from perhaps as early as December 1991 of the fact of payments having been made to Shefran by Riga, as discussed above, Mr Gilmartin did not then know that Mr Dunlop was the recipient of the IR£80,000.

7.31 It appeared to the Tribunal, based on Mr Gilmartin's evidence, that he most likely became aware of the three 1991 Shefran payments when he received a copy of the 'Westpark Expenses' document from AIB in early 1992.

THE 1992 SHEFRAN PAYMENTS

7.32 Two payments were made to Shefran in 1992. They were:

- IR£40,000 paid 13 April 1992
- IR£30,000 paid 5 June 1992

7.33 In addition, over the course of 1992, a total of IR£157,386.66²² was paid to Frank Dunlop & Associates by Barkhill and Riga on foot of invoices generated by Frank Dunlop & Associates.

7.34 The first Shefran payment of IR£40,000 was made by way of a Barkhill bank draft paid to Shefran on 13 April 1992 and which showed that Mr O'Callaghan's authorisation for the bank draft was dated 10 April 1992. The draft was likely to have been handed over to Mr Dunlop by Mr O'Callaghan on 13 April 1992 when they met outside the Horse Show House public house in Ballsbridge, Dublin. It was noteworthy that on 13 April 1992, when Mr O'Callaghan handed the bank draft for IR£40,000 payable to Shefran to Mr Dunlop, it appeared that he also handed a draft for IR£954.55 payable to Frank Dunlop & Associates.

7.35 The second 1992 Shefran payment in the sum of IR£30,000 was made to Mr Dunlop on 5 June 1992, following the provision of a Shefran invoice on 30 April 1992 for that amount. It was made by bank draft and again debited to the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account at AIB. Similarly to the first payment, on that date, Frank Dunlop & Associates invoiced Riga for the sum of IR£10,253.27, which was discharged by Riga on 22 June 1992 and in respect of which Riga was reimbursed by Barkhill on 20 October 1992.

²¹ See Part 4 of this Chapter.

²² IR£87,386.66 paid by Barkhill and IR£70,000 paid by Riga.

7.36 Invoices were discovered to the Tribunal in respect of both of the 1992 Shefran payments, dated, respectively, 20 March 1992 and 30 April 1992. Both invoices were in the name of Shefran, and were addressed to ‘Accounts Payable, Riga Ltd’ and ‘Riga Ltd’ respectively, and contained the following narrative:

....provision of professional strategic communications and educational services.

They were not numbered and contained no VAT element.

7.37 Both invoices issued at a time which coincided with the reactivation of the Quarryvale rezoning issue within the County Council, from April 1992 onwards.

7.38 On 10 April 1992, Dublin County Council recommenced its consideration of the Review of the Development Plan i.e. the Council’s second stage review. Mr O’Callaghan agreed that on that date it was anticipated that the first formal County Council meeting pertaining to this stage of the review of the Plan would be held on 30 April 1992.

7.39 Both of the 1992 payments were paid directly by AIB from the Barkhill No 2 Loan Account at Mr O’Callaghan’s request. This was in contrast to the 1991 payments to Shefran which were: paid by Riga on behalf of Barkhill; paid before AIB was informed of their existence; and for which no invoices were provided to AIB.

7.40 The Tribunal was satisfied that the likely reason that Mr Dunlop, through Shefran, issued such invoices in 1992 was that it had been suggested to him (most probably by Mr O’Callaghan) that the funds he was to be paid in 1992 would be sourced from an account of Barkhill (the Barkhill No. 2 loan account) and not Riga. As Mr Dunlop in this instance was to be paid from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account, it was possible that AIB (who were administering the account) might not have permitted the withdrawal of such funds in the absence of invoices, or would in any event have sought supporting invoices for such payments.

MR DUNLOP’S TREATMENT OF THE PAYMENTS

7.41 Mr Dunlop cashed the bank draft for IR£40,000 at AIB, College Street, Dublin on 14 April 1992. Of the proceeds he used IR£20,652.63 to discharge a IR£20,000 loan that had been advanced to him by AIB on 4 February 1992, apparently by way of a IR£20,000 cash withdrawal.

7.42 After the repayment of the loan the balance of the IR£40,000 Shefran cash was utilised as follows:

- IR£6,847.37 was used by Mr Dunlop to open the account in the name of Shefran on 15 April 1992 at AIB,

- IR£4,000 was lodged to his INBS 910 account, on 16 April 1992,

And:

- IR£8,500 was probably taken by Mr Dunlop in cash.

7.43 Of the second 1992 payment to Shefran, IR£28,000 was lodged on 8 June 1992 to the Shefran AIB 083 account²³ and the balance was taken by Mr Dunlop in cash.

7.44 On 20 August 1992, Mr Dunlop withdrew IR£30,000 (by bank draft) from the Shefran AIB 083 account. He claimed that the withdrawal was used for the purchase of an option on lands on the Dublin to Naas Road. However, according to Mr Dunlop, he never concluded the purchase which resulted in the forfeiture of his IR£30,000 option payment.

THE PURPOSE OF THE 1992 PAYMENTS

7.45 According to both Mr Dunlop and Mr O Callaghan, the 1992 Shefran payments were in respect of professional fees.

7.46 Mr O’Callaghan, together with Mr Deane, met with AIB on 18 March 1992. The AIB memorandum which documented this meeting noted that the bank was advised that:

there are ongoing fees between now and the (zoning) vote of £150,000 and decision will have to be taken as to whether the Bank is willing to fund this amount, by implication he is not prepared to do so. This matter was left in (a) beyance.

7.47 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that he could not say how the IR£150,000 mentioned in that memorandum had been calculated but at the time he envisaged that it was going to be an expensive period because of expected invoices from Ambrose Kelly & Co.²⁴ and other anticipated expenses, associated with lobbying communities across West Dublin. Mr O’Callaghan also believed that his arrangement with Mr Dunlop regarding Mr Dunlop’s 1992 fees was probably encompassed in this IR£150,000 figure. The AIB record of this meeting did not make any specific reference to Mr Dunlop.²⁵

7.48 Mr O’Callaghan agreed that the memorandum recorded his belief that there was a 40% chance of there being a successful Quarryvale vote, but that he hoped to bring this to 50%. Asked if, in 1992, he had seen any connection between money he knew he would have to pay Mr Dunlop and his own projections about an increase in councillors' support, Mr O'Callaghan stated that he had not. However, in January 1992 a manuscript notation²⁶ in Mr O'Callaghan's hand on a document which was being considered at a meeting between Mr O'Callaghan and AIB on 14 January, 1992 had connected three matters; money paid by Riga to Mr Dunlop/Shefran in 1991, the June 1991 Local Election and councillors. Mr O'Callaghan agreed this was so. Mr O'Callaghan was questioned by Tribunal Counsel as follows:

²³ Opened on 15 April 1992

'..So when you are now in the bank on the 18th of March, 1992, and you are discussing the figure of 150,000 pounds and within that figure is the 70,000 pounds you are going to pay Mr Dunlop, did you have the same view in your head that you had when you made the doodle that Mr Dunlop might have had to layoff some money to the councillors?'

7.49 Mr O'Callaghan replied:

'If, of course that would be possible, yeah, in the sense that if there was an election, he would be asked again, like he was for the '91 election, to give this minimal support to the various councillors. At the time I didn't foresee any election coming up so I didn't assume there would be any need for this. The money that was paid to Frank Dunlop would have been strictly for his fees and for his support and the use of his office and his staff etc. and himself in bringing me around to meet the 78 councillors. And the more of them we met, the more I increased my chance of getting Quarryvale rezoned.'

7.50 And, in response to the suggestion, as put to him as follows:-

'Yes. So there is a connection then, Mr O'Callaghan, as you had already noted in the document in January 1992, between the money that you are paying to Mr Dunlop and the councillors, isn't that right?'

7.51 Mr O'Callaghan said:

'Sorry, no, no, no that it not correct again, no. That is not correct. The monies we are talking about now is the 70,000 pounds to Frank Dunlop, the Barkhill fees. That was to pay Frank Dunlop his fees to bring me and to make sure I spoke to and met, together with my various documents, literature etc. as many of the 78 councillors as could possibly meet, which I could not have met without Frank Dunlop. And to try and get them across the line to support Quarryvale rather than Blanchardstown. That's the connection!

7.52 The Tribunal was satisfied that the connection Mr O'Callaghan was promoting to AIB at the meeting on 18 March 1992 between a successful zoning and an unsuccessful zoning underpinned the requirement, on his part, to have available funds of IR£150,000 (including two Shefran payments for IR£70,000).

7.53 Mr Dunlop did not provide any explanation to the Tribunal as to the purpose for which he borrowed IR£20,000 on 4 February 1992 from AIB at a time when he had approximately IR£75,000 on deposit in his 'war chest' accounts comprised as follows:

- IR£12,528.51 in his INBS 910 account;
- IR£10,000.85 in his AIB 042 Rathfarnham account; and
- Stg£49,793.40 in his Xerxes account at Midland Bank Trust, Jersey.

7.54 The Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop's claimed failure of recollection as to the purpose of the IR£20,000 AIB loan having regard, in particular, to the fact that he gave evidence to the Tribunal of details of payments made by him to councillors involving sums of as little as IR£500 in the period 1991 - 1993.

7.55 On the date of the loan, 4 February 1992, Mr O'Callaghan was known (from Mr Dunlop's diary) to have been in Mr Dunlop's offices at 4pm. However, Mr O'Callaghan rejected any suggestion that Mr Dunlop's loan of IR£20,000 had been arranged to facilitate him, either directly by providing him with funds, or indirectly by facilitating the making of a payment to a third party on his behalf.

AIB'S KNOWLEDGE OF 1992 PAYMENTS

7.56 Mr Kay accepted that he saw the 1992 Shefran invoices but said that at the time he did not pay any heed to the fact that neither invoice made provision for VAT nor included a VAT number. Mr Kay told the Tribunal that he probably regarded the payment of IR£40,000 to Shefran to have been part of the ongoing fees of IR£150,000 which Mr O'Callaghan had advised, on 18 March 1992, were required between then and zoning. Its size did not seem out of line to Mr Kay when compared to other payments being made from the account. By June 1992 therefore, the Barkhill No 2 Loan Account had funded IR£70,000 to Mr Dunlop/Shefran from the IR£150,000 sum which had been projected by Mr O'Callaghan on 18 March 1992.

7.57 Mr Michael O’Farrell²⁷ (having succeeded Mr Kay as the senior official within AIB in charge of the Barkhill account from September 1992) conducted a general review of the Barkhill expenditure with Mr O’Callaghan on 16 September 1992. He said that he was unable to recollect what explanation had been tendered to him by Mr O’Callaghan in respect of the IR£80,000 total payments made to Shefran in 1991. Mr O’Farrell accepted that he was at that time aware of the link between Mr Dunlop and Shefran, but did not know, nor did he apparently question Mr O’Callaghan, as to why Mr Dunlop was using Shefran, as well as Frank Dunlop & Associates to receive payments from Mr O’Callaghan, or why the Shefran payments were all round-figure sums.

7.58 In a memorandum prepared by Mr O’Farrell on 8 September 1992, reference was made to the need ‘to review Deloitte and Touche queries in relation to the audited accounts’ and ‘in particular check fees paid and proposed fees which should be paid’ and ‘payments have been made from the Barkhill account which do not appear to have been properly authorised i.e. Owen O’Callaghan has signed but there has not been an authorised counter signature’ and ‘it would be preferable if Tom Gilmartin could authorise these and could authorise the current request for the fees from Owen O’Callaghan.’

7.59 In the course of this review, in relation to expenditure incurred and in respect of which Riga had sought reimbursement, Mr O’Callaghan ‘provided explanations where he could for the various items’. Mr O’Farrell was also unable to recall explanations provided by Mr O’Callaghan, if any, in respect of two IR£10,000 payments made by Riga to Messrs Lawlor and McGrath and repaid to it in January 1992 from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account. Mr O’Farrell was unable to account as to why the two IR£10,000 payments were ultimately allocated by Deloitte & Touche as payments made to Mr Gilmartin. In fact these payments of IR£10,000 had been made by Mr O’Callaghan to Mr Lawlor and Cllr McGrath.

7.60 By September 1992 Mr O’Farrell was aware that the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account had paid out two round-figure sums of IR£40,000 and IR£30,000 to Shefran in April and June 1992 respectively in addition to IR£80,000 in 1991 making a total of IR£150,000. By that time the IR£150,000 paid to Shefran ranked as one of the largest payments made to any consultant in relation to the Quarryvale account.

²⁷ In September 1992, Mr O’Farrell was appointed the Senior Manager of Property and Construction in AIB’s Corporate and Commercial Division, in succession to Mr Kay, who at that time was transferred to another position within AIB. Mr O’Farrell’s involvement with Barkhill continued from approximately September 1992 until 1996.

MR GILMARTINS KNOWLEDGE OF 1992 PAYMENTS

7.61 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin was unaware of the IR£40,000 payment to Shefran on 13 April 1992. The Tribunal was also satisfied that prior authorisation for the making of the said payment to Mr Dunlop/Shefran was not sought from Mr Gilmartin. Documents furnished to the Tribunal revealed that notwithstanding the provision in the AIB mandate for the requirement that two Directors²⁸ of Barkhill authorise draw-downs from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account, Mr O’Callaghan, on 10 April 1992, was the sole signatory for the drawdown of the IR£40,000 Shefran payment.

7.62 Ms Basquille’s evidence suggested that this authorisation was sought from Mr Gilmartin when Mr O’Farrell realised that Mr O’Callaghan’s was the sole signature on the drawdown authorisation and which had been signed prior to the Shefran payments being made. Mr Kay telephoned Mr Gilmartin on 5 June 1992 and sought verbal authorisation in relation to the IR£30,000 payment. Ms Basquille also suggested, as a possibility, that Mr Gilmartin had been requested to verbally authorise the drawdowns.

7.63 Mr Kay acknowledged that he sought and obtained Mr Gilmartin’s consent to the payment after it had been paid. He was ‘virtually’ certain that at the time he did so he informed Mr Gilmartin as to the connection between Mr Dunlop and Shefran – see above.

7.64 The IR£30,000 payment made to Shefran on 5 June 1992 was again made on foot of an authorisation signed solely by Mr O’Callaghan on 4 June 1992.

7.65 The Tribunal was satisfied that the fact that a Shefran invoice for IR£30,000, had been furnished to AIB by 5 June 1992, was the subject of a telephone discussion between Mr Gilmartin and Mr Kay on that date. Mr Gilmartin maintained that he was simply told that Shefran was a company engaged by Mr O’Callaghan and that he was not advised at this time of a connection between Mr Dunlop and Shefran.

7.66 On 10 June 1992, Mr Kay wrote to Mr Gilmartin seeking authorisation for the payment in the following terms:

²⁸ As of April 1992 Barkhill’s Directors were Mr Gilmartin, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Barry Pitcher.

RE: BARKHILL

Dear Tom, I refer to our telephone conversation on Friday and enclose a copy of an invoice for IR£30,000 payable to Shefran Ltd, which as agreed we have paid.

I should be grateful if you would confirm your authorisation for this payment to be made, to keep our records correct.

7.67 In respect of the two Shefran payments (IR£40,000 and IR£30,000) made to Mr Dunlop from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account in 1992, the Tribunal was satisfied that these payments were made, in the first instance, solely on the direction of Mr O'Callaghan and only authorised retrospectively by Mr Gilmartin in October 1992.

7.68 The Tribunal was satisfied that the copy invoice furnished to Mr Gilmartin with Mr Kay's letter was the first occasion on which Mr Gilmartin was provided with a Shefran invoice.

7.69 Mr Kay did not explain why he had not spoken to Mr Gilmartin in April 1992 about the larger payment of IR£40,000 to Shefran and he assumed, with regard to the second payment, that he may have been speaking with Mr Gilmartin when the IR£30,000 invoice arrived into the bank.

7.70 Mr Kay accepted that in the course of his 5 June 1992 contact with Mr Gilmartin he did not raise with him the existence of the three earlier 1991 Shefran payments totalling IR£80,000.²⁹ It was unclear to the Tribunal why Mr Kay failed at this time to advise Mr Gilmartin of the 1991 Shefran payments.

7.71 Mr Gilmartin maintained to the Tribunal that when the issue of the Barkhill draft accounts³⁰ had been raised by him with AIB, in the context of Barkhill's auditors Deloitte & Touche requesting backup documentation for, inter alia, the 1991 Shefran payments he, Mr Gilmartin, had raised with AIB the issue of Shefran and the purpose for which payments were being made to that company. Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he had done so in the context of Mr Leo Fleming of Deloitte & Touche having queried him as to why the Shefran payments were VAT free, and about the purpose of Shefran's retention in the Quarryvale project. He had duly referred Mr Fleming to Mr O'Callaghan and AIB for answers to these queries. Mr Gilmartin said he himself raised the matter at meetings with AIB.

²⁹ Mr Gilmartin would have been aware in a general way from a 'Westpark Expenses' document, furnished to him in January 1992, that an entity Shefran had been paid a total of IR£80,000 in 1991- see further below.

³⁰ An audit of Barkhill was then underway.

7.72 Mr Gilmartin testified that he was reasonably certain that his concern at the time of his raising the issue with AIB was that large round-figured VAT free payments were apparently being made to a company about which he had no knowledge.

7.73 It was likely that Mr Gilmartin's efforts to obtain answers to his queries regarding the payments to Shefran intensified in 1993, after he was provided with the documentation from AIB on 2 February 1993. By 2 February 1993 the sum owed by Barkhill to Riga was circa IR£1.3m, in respect of which Barkhill had repaid IR£56,598.71 on 24 January, 1992. In the letter to Mr Gilmartin from Mr McGrath and signed by Ms Basquille which accompanied the documents, reference was made to a forthcoming meeting with AIB for the purposes of a review of the Barkhill loan facility. Reference was also made in the letter to Mr Gilmartin's desire (which the Tribunal was satisfied had been previously communicated to AIB) to discuss some matters on a 'one to one' basis. Ms Basquille (who managed the Barkhill file from September 1992), denied that Mr Gilmartin either queried or complained about the Shefran payments, and she suggested that Mr Gilmartin's concern at that stage was the preference being afforded by AIB and Mr O'Callaghan to discharging payments due to certain professional individuals employed by Mr O'Callaghan, (including Mr Dunlop) to those who had been retained initially by Mr Gilmartin. She said that she had 'no particular knowledge' of who Shefran was. She said that she was aware of an issue concerning missing invoices for the 1991 Shefran payments, but understood this to have been a matter essentially as between Deloitte & Touche (Barkhill's auditor), and Riga, rather than a matter for AIB. Ms Basquille also stated that she would have checked the AIB files to assist with the Deloitte & Touche inquiry.

7.74 While Mr Gilmartin agreed that he was concerned at what he perceived was a preference in such payments, he said that his principal concern at the time were the large round figure payments to Shefran, and his failure to get an explanation as to their purpose.

7.75 Notwithstanding his concerns about the Shefran payments, on 27 January 1994 Mr Gilmartin, together with Mr O'Callaghan, duly signed the Barkhill's accounts for the period ended 30 April 1992 which had been prepared by its auditors Deloitte & Touche.

7.76 On Day 740, the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Gilmartin:

Q. In January 1994 did you know where the 150 thousand pounds shown in the books and records as having been paid to Shefran Ltd had gone?

A. I knew it had been paid to Shefran, but I don't know for what.

Q. Did you know who Shefran was?

A. Pardon?

Q. Did you know who Shefran was when you signed these books and records?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Did you know what services Shefran Ltd had provided to the company?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. When you signed those records?

A. No, I didn't and I was refused answers. And until Mr Dunlop cracked here, or — that was the first time I knew exactly what Shefran was used for. There was no amount of demands by me or anything, I had to assume that they were legitimate because the bank went along with it.

Q. If we look at 9539 please? Sorry, if I could have the full document? Did you know, or did you have answers to the queries raised in that document? And in particular, did you know and had you seen supporting documentation for the amounts paid to Shefran?

A. I had answers for the one where I was involved and I provided those answers. I had no answers whatsoever for Shefran, Dunlop or other monies.

Q. You were advising the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin, in 1998?

A. Yeah.

Q. To have a look at a company called Shefran. I think it's spelled C-E-F-R-A-N in one of the attendances on you, isn't that right?

A. Well, I can't remember the spelling of it

Q. Yes, but leaving aside the spelling of it?

A. I know there was a difference appeared in the spelling of it. S-H-E-F or S-H-E-A-F, I'm not quite sure, but there was a difference.

Q. Yes, it changed its name at one change from S-H-E-A-F-R-A-N to S-H-E-F-R-A-N?

A. Yeah.

Q. But what I am putting to you Mr Gilmartin is that you were able to tell the Tribunal legal team in 1998 of the existence of that company and the fact that monies were paid through that company, is that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. So it would be incorrect to say that it wasn't until Mr Dunlop, as you describe it, broke here, which would have been a reference I think to his evidence in April 2000 that you discovered?

A. That I really discovered why Shefran was being used.

Q. Were you ever at a board meeting, or did anyone connected with Barkhill, that is Mr Kay, Mr Donagh, Ms Basquile, Mr Deane, Mr O'Callaghan, Leo Fleming of Deloitte and Touche, were any of those people gave you an explanation for the amounts paid to Shefran?

A. Nobody. Last time I spoke to Mr Fleming he was still awaiting confirmation. The bank had passed him on to, to I don't know was it Aidan Lucey or someone connected with Owen O'Callaghan or to Riga, and he was awaiting answers from them. So following from me being made bankrupt I had no input or say whatsoever in anything and I wasn't particularly – I had enough to worry about.'

7.77 In the course of telephone conversations between Mr Gilmartin and Senior Counsel for the Tribunal, Mr Gilmartin was noted as having made, inter alia, the following references to Shefran:

- That he was suspicious of large round figure sums being paid to Shefran, and that Mr Dunlop was providing Mr O'Callaghan with invoices enabling him to recoup the payments from Barkhill.
- His suspicions were enhanced by Mr O'Callaghan's and AIB's failure to answer questions from him in relation to the identity of Shefran.
- That he was convinced that Shefran monies had been paid to politicians 'higher up' than councillors.
- That he had been lied to by AIB about the purpose of payments to Shefran.
- That the Shefran payments were in reality reimbursements to Mr O'Callaghan from Barkhill for payments made to senior politicians by Mr O'Callaghan.

7.78 Mr Gilmartin relayed the information summarised above to Counsel for the Tribunal in the course of telephone conversations in the period 1998 - 2002. The Tribunal was satisfied that the said information was indicative of Mr Gilmartin's strong and genuine belief, ongoing from late 1992, that the substantial payments made to Shefran were linked to illicit third party payments, and that the use of Shefran was to facilitate non-commercial activity associated with the Quarryvale project.

7.79 The Tribunal rejected Ms Basquille’s evidence that she had not heard Mr Gilmartin complain of payments to Shefran, and indeed doubted her claimed ignorance of Shefran and its association with Mr Dunlop.³¹

7.80 On 22 October 1998, Tribunal Counsel made a note of Mr Gilmartin informing the Tribunal (in the course of a telephone conversation), inter alia, that at an AIB meeting on 9 February 1993, he had called Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane ‘a pair of gangsters’, and that ‘he challenged the payment to Shefran and Dunlop and said these monies were for corrupt payments to politicians.’ Subsequently, when giving evidence to the Tribunal when it was pointed out to him that he had not attended the 9 February 1993 meeting. Mr Gilmartin stated that he was uncertain of the date of the meeting at which he made this remark.

7.81 While the Tribunal noted that the minutes of the AIB meeting on 9 February 1993 did not record Mr Gilmartin’s presence at that meeting, it was however satisfied that Mr Gilmartin did, on occasions at such meetings either directly or later via Mr Paul Sheeran, express his concerns regarding the payments that were made to Shefran, and it accepted the evidence from Mr Sheeran and Mr Maguire to the effect that Mr Gilmartin had expressed such concerns.

7.82 In her evidence, Ms Basquille accepted that Mr Gilmartin frequently referred to Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane as ‘corrupt’, and as a ‘pair of gangsters.’ She said ‘I think that he might frequently have referred to them in that way.’

7.83 Ms Basquille’s admission of the intemperate language used by Mr Gilmartin at meetings (irrespective of the veracity or otherwise of what Mr Gilmartin had said) suggested to the Tribunal that his concerns, as expressed at such meetings, were more wide ranging than merely the issue of the preferential payment of fees to professional individuals associated with Mr O’Callaghan.

7.84 In the course of his evidence, Mr Gilmartin’s friend and former Bank Manager Mr Sheeran essentially confirmed Mr Gilmartin’s evidence of his concern regarding the round figure payments being made to Shefran in 1991 and 1992, and for which no explanation had been tendered to Mr Gilmartin. Mr ³¹See Part 4 for a further consideration of Mr Gilmartin’s complaints to AIB in the period 1993 to 1996.

Sheeran described Mr Gilmartin as having ‘an awful lot of concern’, about the matter. When asked if Mr Gilmartin had mentioned Shefran at Board meetings, Mr Sheeran responded, thus:

‘I mean he made very widespread allegations of fraud and corruption and I just couldn’t conceive him not mentioning [to AIB] the company Shefran because it was, to use that word paranoid, he was paranoid about it. I mean it got between and a night’s sleep as to what Shefran was being used for’.

7.85 Mr Sheeran had by this time advised Mr Gilmartin that he had been told by Mr O’Callaghan at an AIB Board meeting³² that Shefran was a mechanism to facilitate payments to Mr Dunlop without Mr Gilmartin’s knowledge.

7.86 Mr Sheeran also testified that in the course of his attendance at a Barkhill Board meeting³³ (which was not attended by Mr Gilmartin) it was stated to him by Mr O’Callaghan (in the presence of Mr O’Farrell of AIB) that Shefran was being used to conceal from Mr Gilmartin certain payments being made to Mr Dunlop.

THE 1993 SHEFRAN PAYMENTS

7.87 Riga paid Shefran IR£25,000 by way of cheque on 17 February 1993. This payment was in discharge of a Shefran invoice for IR£25,000 to Riga, (discharged by Riga on 17 February 1993), and which had been furnished by Mr Dunlop on 18 December 1992.

7.88 The invoice contained the following work description:

‘To professional advice re.development in North Clondalkin.’³⁴

7.89 Mr Dunlop informed the Tribunal that the description on the invoice was for work carried out by him in respect of the Quarryvale rezoning which was confirmed on 17 December 1992, the day prior to the invoice date. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that it was likely that he had agreed the detail of the invoice with Mr O’Callaghan.

³²In October 1994 Mr Sheeran was given Power of Attorney by Mr Gilmartin to represent him at Board meetings

³³The purpose of Mr Sheeran’s attendance at such meetings was twofold; to arrange for financial assistance to be given to Mr Gilmartin, and to make enquiries regarding Shefran.

³⁴A schedule to Mr O’Callaghan’s 12 April 2000 statement described the services on foot of which Mr Dunlop was paid this IR£25,000 as ‘public relations services, political and community lobbying.’

THE TREATMENT OF THE 1993 SHEFRAN PAYMENT BY MR DUNLOP

7.90 Mr Dunlop cashed the Riga cheque for IR£25,000 on 18 February 1993 at AIB, College Street in Dublin. The cheque was endorsed in the names of ‘Hugh McGowan’ and ‘Kieran O’Byrne’, in Mr Dunlop’s handwriting.

7.91 Mr Dunlop claimed that a cash lodgement of IR£10,000 made to his INBS 910 account on 19 February, 1993 formed part of the proceeds of the encashed Shefran IR£25,000 cheque, although, as in other instances, it was accepted by him that it was simply the proximity of the relative dates of both transactions that influenced his suggestion in this regard, rather than any specific memory. Mr Dunlop claimed not to know what he did with the cash balance of IR£15,000 which was left, in the event that IR£10,000 of the IR£25,000 cheque was in fact lodged to the INBS account. His only explanation for retaining IR£15,000 in cash was: ‘...because I was dealing in cash to a considerable extent at that time.’³⁵

7.92 Some three days following the issuing of the Shefran invoice on 18 December 1992, Frank Dunlop & Associates invoiced Riga for IR£64,897.78. The narrative on that invoice claimed this sum for ‘...ongoing costs re Quarryvale.’³⁶

THE TREATMENT OF THE 1993 SHEFRAN PAYMENT IN RIGA’S BOOKS

7.93 The IR£25,000 Shefran cheque payment of 17 February 1993 was analysed within the Riga cheque payments book under ‘creditors’. The payment was classified as a Quarryvale expense in the working papers of Riga’s auditors for the year ended 30 April 1993, and in Riga’s audited accounts it was ultimately attributed to monies expended in relation to the Stadium project. The consequence of this attribution having been given to the Shefran payment within Riga’s books was that it never became part of the Riga/Barkhill inter-company loan balance.³⁷ The Shefran payment of IR£25,000 was one of a number of payments made by Riga on behalf of Barkhill in the accounting year ended 30 April 1993 which was posted to Riga’s ‘Work in progress -Stadium’³⁸ account within its books.

³⁵By the Spring of 1993 Mr Dunlop was involved in a number of rezoning projects as a lobbyist and indeed had himself an interest in one such project (See Chapter Nine).

³⁶This invoice and other Frank Dunlop & Associates ‘ongoing costs’ invoices are considered below.

³⁷Barber & Co.’s analysis contained in the audit working papers for the Riga audit under ‘Clondalkin Purchases’ posted the IR£25,000 from nominal ledger code 735 (Barkhill expenditure) to 270 (Professional Fees).

³⁸This account was Riga’s treatment of expenses associated with the Stadium project.

7.94 In those circumstances therefore, unlike the position which pertained in relation to the three 1991 Shefran payments totalling IR£80,000 made by Riga, no recoupment was ever sought by Riga from Barkhill in respect of the February 1993 Shefran payment of IR£25,000.

THE PURPOSE OF THE 1993 SHEFRAN PAYMENT

7.95 According to Mr Dunlop, the 1993 payment was part of his ‘fee structure’. He said that the payment was not a ‘success fee.’

MR GILMARTIN’S KNOWLEDGE

7.96 The Tribunal was satisfied that there was no evidence to suggest that Mr Gilmartin had any knowledge of this payment of IR£25,000 at the time that it was made having regard to the fact that Riga never made any attempt to recoup it from Barkhill.

THE BARKHILL AUDIT

8.01 In 1992, Deloitte & Touche were engaged to conduct an audit of the Barkhill accounts from the date of incorporation, 25 November 1988 to 30 April 1992. To enable it conduct this task, AIB provided Barkhill’s auditors with details of the two loan accounts of Barkhill and details of the utilisation by Riga of its IR£1m subordinated loan account.³⁹

8.02 From documentation provided by AIB, Deloitte & Touche gleaned that among the payments Riga claimed to have made on behalf of Barkhill from the IR£1m subordinated loan were the three 1991 payments to Shefran (described on the AIB document as ‘fees’) of IR£25,000, IR£40,000 and IR£15,000 paid on 16 May 1991, 30 May 1991 and 13 June 1991 respectively.

8.03 By mid-1992, AIB had provided to Deloitte & Touche the Shefran invoice dated 20 March 1992, on foot of which Barkhill made the payment of IR£40,000 on the 13 April 1992. It was likely that Deloitte & Touche received a copy of the Shefran invoice dated 30 April 1992 (which was the subject of the June 1992 IR£30,000 payment by Barkhill to Shefran) from AIB on 6 November 1992.

8.04 On 22 June 1992, Mr Fleming of Deloitte & Touche faxed to Mr Gilmartin, for his perusal, the draft accounts prepared for Barkhill to the period ended 30 April 1992. Among the schedules provided to Mr Gilmartin was a ‘Schedule 5’ entitled ‘Public Relations/Marketing Costs to 30 April 1992.’ The marketing costs referred to in this schedule included payments made to Frank Dunlop &

³⁹On foot of the third Heads of Agreement 31 May 1991, Riga committed to the provision of IR£1,000,000 for expenditure on Barkhill (a sum borrowed by Riga from AIB). See Part 4.

Associates and four payments listed as having been made to Shefran, in the sums of IR£40,000, IR£25,000, IR£40,000 and IR£15,000.

8.05 Shortly thereafter, on 24 June 1992, Mr Fleming wrote to Mr Gilmartin (a letter copied to Mr O’Callaghan (O’Callaghan Properties) and Mr Kay of AIB). In that letter, Mr Gilmartin was alerted to the fact that Barkhill ‘incurred significant amounts in professional fees under various headings in connection with site assembly and development’ and was requested by Mr Fleming to arrange for ‘third party confirmations at 30 April, 1992’ to be sent to Deloitte and Touche in respect of a number of companies. Among the parties listed by Mr Fleming in respect of which he was seeking backup documentation was Shefran and Mr Dunlop.

8.06 It was evident to the Tribunal that by June 1992, Deloitte & Touche had been alerted to a number of issues relating to Shefran namely:

- i) That the 20 March 1992 Shefran invoice, on foot of which Barkhill had made a IR£40,000 payment, did not include VAT; and
- ii) That no invoices had been provided to it in respect of the three round figure payments totalling IR£80,000 and paid by Riga to Shefran in 1991, and in respect of which Barkhill was indebted to Riga, on foot of the inter company loan balance.

8.07 Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he suggested to Mr Fleming that he seek information on these various issues from Mr O’Callaghan and from AIB.

8.08 Deloitte & Touche set about seeking the necessary information from Riga. Efforts made on the part of Deloitte & Touche in mid to late 1992 to obtain third party confirmation of the Shefran payments culminated in a letter sent by Mr Fleming to Mr Aidan Lucey of Riga on 15 December 1992. Prior to this, Riga’s auditors, Barber & Co Ltd, had by 27 August 1992 effectively confirmed to Deloitte & Touche that included in the balance of IR£1,227,756 owed to Riga by Barkhill to the period ended 30 April 1992 (i.e. the inter-company loan account) were the payments totalling IR£80,000 made to Shefran.

8.09 Mr Fleming’s letter of 15 December to Mr Lucey contained, inter alia, the following request:

At this point we have comprehensively examined all documentation received in support of the payments and transactions of Barkhill Ltd and we have noted that they are certain items for which no supporting documents have been received. A schedule of the relevant payments/transactions is also attached. I would be grateful if you could arrange to have your records checked and copies of any supporting documents sent to me as soon as possible.

8.10 Among the items in respect of which Mr Fleming sought supporting documentation were:⁴⁰

3 amounts paid to Sheafraan Ltd. from the Riga sub-ordinated loan on the following dates: 16/5/91 25,000, 30/5/91 40,000, 13/6/91 15,000

8.11 Mr Gilmartin, Mr O’Callaghan and Ms Mary Basquille (AIB) were provided with copies of this request.

8.12 Mr Lucey, on behalf of Riga, responded to Deloitte & Touches’ request on 8 February 1993 to the effect that Riga did not have the supporting documentation in question, and suggested that Deloitte & Touche contact AIB in relation to the issue. However, AIB had by that time confirmed to Deloitte & Touche that it had no supporting documentation in relation to the Shefran payments.

8.13 Mr Fleming continued in his efforts to obtain backup documentation for the unresolved audit matters, (including the three 1991 Shefran payments) and in particular, in a letter written to Mr Deane on 3 May 1993 in connection with the Barkhill audit, he advised as follows:

I did write to Aidan Lucey on 15th December 1992 setting out what I regarded as the unresolved matters of strict accounting nature. I am attaching to this letter a schedule of payments/transactions for which Deloitte & Touche received no supporting documentation. The transactions recorded on this schedule have been booked in the accounts of Barkhill on the basis of discussions and explanations received from Tom Gilmartin, Aidan Lucey, Seamus Maguire and AIB.

8.14 The schedule Mr Fleming attached to his 3 May letter to Mr Deane was the schedule he had earlier (in December 1992) sent to Mr Lucey, Mr Gilmartin, Mr O’Callaghan and AIB.

8.15 The minutes of a Barkhill Board meeting at AIB on 16 June 1993 and which was attended by Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Pitcher (AIB), Mr Michael O’Farrell (AIB) and Mr Seamus Maguire (Mr Gilmartin’s Solicitor) record, inter alia, that a discussion took place in relation to a number of matters set out in Mr Fleming’s letter of 3 May 1993. However the Board minutes did not record either any discussion on, or any proposed action to be undertaken in relation to either the penultimate paragraph of Mr Fleming's letter, which repeated his earlier request for supporting documentation, or the schedule which Mr Fleming had attached therewith. At the meeting, Mr Gilmartin's concern that he was not being kept informed of the affairs of Barkhill was expressed by Mr Seamus Maguire. Mr O'Callaghan was noted as rejecting any suggestion that he (Mr O'Callaghan) had not been forthcoming with information to Mr Gilmartin.

⁴⁰ Mr Fleming had also sought, inter alia, supporting documentation for two ‘Expenses’ payments of IR£10,000 – See Part 4

8.16 Notwithstanding the absence of any reference thereto in the Board minutes, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Fleming's schedule itemising 'payments/transactions for which Deloitte & Touche have received no supporting documentation' (including the three 1991 Shefran payments) was discussed in the course of the said Board meeting. A note compiled by Mr O'Farrell of AIB, on foot on his attendance at the meeting of 16 June 1993, included the following 'schedule of claims and transactions – noted', a notation, which the Tribunal was satisfied, related to Mr Fleming's queries. Mr O'Callaghan suggested that Mr Fleming's document (in which the 1991 Shefran payments were referred to) was 'considered' at the Board meeting of 16 June 1993.

8.17 Some action was taken with regard to certain items as listed on Mr Fleming's schedule, and it was noteworthy that on the 12 May 1993 Mr Deane wrote to Mr Maguire regarding item 7 on Mr Fleming's schedule, wherein Mr Maguire was requested to provide invoices in relation to certain land transactions. Mr Deane's request to Mr Maguire was directly referable to Mr Fleming's queries. Yet, as the Tribunal noted, Mr Deane appeared not to have been authorised or requested to follow up on item 6 of Mr Fleming's schedule (namely his request for documentation surrounding the three Shefran payments).

8.18 Notwithstanding Mr Deane's sworn testimony that he knew, from 1991, of Mr Dunlop's association with Shefran, there was no letter from Mr Deane to Riga requesting that it provide the Shefran invoices sought by Mr Fleming. The Tribunal regarded the absence of such a letter as significant.⁴¹

8.19 The accounts of Barkhill were eventually signed on 27 January 1994 by Mr Gilmartin and Mr O'Callaghan, in the absence of any invoices in relation to the 1991 Shefran payments having been produced to Barkhill's auditors.

8.20 Documents furnished to the Tribunal revealed that Mr O'Callaghan when he attended the meeting of 16 June 1993 had in his possession a copy of Mr Fleming's schedule, as provided with his letter of 3 May 1993 to Mr Deane.

⁴¹ See further Part 4

8.21 Of particular interest to the Tribunal were a number of manuscript notations, in Mr O’Callaghan’s handwriting, which appeared on the copy of Mr Fleming’s schedule which Mr O’Callaghan had in his possession at the Board meeting.

8.22 On Mr O’Callaghan’s copy of the document, to the left of typed references to the three payments of IR£25,000, IR£40,000 and IR£15,000 payments, Mr O’Callaghan wrote in manuscript the words *‘no invoice June elections.’*⁴²

8.23 Mr O’Callaghan informed the Tribunal that these notations were not made by him at the 16 June 1993 meeting but were in fact made by him when perusing the document in his own office in Cork, some two days or so following the AIB meeting.

8.24 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal, that:

‘... I was sitting on my own and described this as no more just than probably actually a doodle on this. I was looking at the extent of the payments. And I always felt that these payments were pretty extensive. We didn’t have any choice but to pay them, as I described the last time. What I am doing there is making it up to myself that okay these fees look quite expensive but in fairness, I do know that during the May 16th election, Sorry. The May 16th vote, that I do know that at that particular time that Frank Dunlop had been asked by quite a few Councillors for election expenses towards pamphlets, brochures etc. for the election, the forthcoming at the end of June. And that’s what’s written down there. That’s why the note was written down there’.

8.25 Asked what had led him to make the notation, Mr O’Callaghan maintained:

‘Well as I’ve said before, I would be, was always concerned in my mind that 25, 40, 15 that’s the 80,000 pounds was a bit on the high side. But as I said, likewise, nothing we could do about it actually because we were in a position where we had to pay those, as I considered, high fees, because we were completely using Dunlop’s office and staff an everything else at that time. So I always felt they were a bit high and that note I’ve made there, I was justifying in my own mind as to what he would have done for that or what would have happened for that or how could I justify in my own mind paying such high fees to him. And that’s why I’ve written down there opposite that 'during May 16th' that's the Quarryvale vote. At that particular time he would have been more than likely and this is just me now surmising and scribbling on my notes or scribbling on the paper really.

That he would have had actually at that time he would have had to contribute or he would have promised during the May 16th vote, that's the Quarryvale vote, that he would have promised at that vote with the election, the Local Elections which was due a few weeks away, I think about five weeks. And most people knew that that was on the way. That was coming. He would have made promises to help people of course at that particular time to help them in the Local Elections. That would be very normal if he asked somebody to support Quarryvale it's quite possible that the councillor would say back to him, yes I will and I am going to do it but I want you to look after me as well when the election comes up etc. etc.'

8.26 The following exchanges took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr O'Callaghan, on Days 884 and 906:

'Q. Whenever you made the notation, Mr O'Callaghan, what you have noted in relation to the 80,000 Shefran payments is not a reference to Mr Frank Dunlop and professional fees. It is a reference for the June election and that there is no invoices, isn't that right?

A. Yes. And can I explain that to you?

Q. Yes.

A. As I outlined. The are the reason for 'no invoice June election' is these invoices were raised in March, April, May and what I referred to there, there would not be an invoice or sorry there was not an invoice sorry for June 16 because there was an election in June, so there wasn't any lobbying work done in June so there would be no reason for Frank Dunlop to invoice us in June.

Q. I suggest to you, Mr O'Callaghan that after the event and looking at this document, you are cobbling together an excuse for what you have written there?

A. Absolutely not.'

8.27 And:

'Q. Are you saying, Mr O'Callaghan, that the words 'No invoice' and beneath that 'June election' means there was no invoice for June because of the election?

A. There was no invoice for made out for the month of June because there was no work done for the month of June because the local elections were on and we had no business lobbying anybody at that particular time.'

8.28 Mr O'Callaghan explained his handwritten notes on the document in the following terms:

'The notation there 'no invoice June election' was a doodle put on that by me because thankfully there was no invoice coming, an invoice would not have come to us and did not come to us for the month of June because Frank Dunlop was not working for us then because of an election on and there was no lobbying going on so I wouldn't be charged for that particular time. That is that particular notation'.

8.29 The Tribunal did not believe Mr O'Callaghan's explanation to be true. The Deloitte & Touche schedule on which Mr O'Callaghan hand wrote his comment 'no invoice June elections' was received by Mr O'Callaghan in May 1993. It was simply not credible, and highly unlikely, that nearly two years after the event (the 1991 Local Elections) Mr O'Callaghan had any reason to identify, consider, speculate or otherwise concern himself that he 'wouldn't be charged for that particular time', i.e. June 1991, by Mr Dunlop.

8.30 Furthermore, the Tribunal was satisfied that no factual basis existed in 1991 or 1993 for the explanation, as tendered by Mr O'Callaghan in evidence, for the 'doodle'. Documents furnished to the Tribunal revealed that on 6 August 1991 Mr Dunlop, through Frank Dunlop & Associates, had invoiced Riga in the sum of IR£8,484.29, for expenses incurred by him relating to the June 1991 Local Elections and which was discharged by Riga on 30 September 1991.

8.31 Mr O'Farrell was questioned on Day 848 in relation to the schedule of items provided by Mr Fleming, which included references to the three 1991 Shefran payments. He was questioned in particular in relation to Mr O'Callaghan's handwritten notes which appeared on a copy of the document in question and which stated in manuscript alongside the reference in the schedule to the payments of IR£25,000, IR£40,000 and IR£15,000 to Shefran in 1991, the words as follows: 'no invoice, for June election.'

8.32 When asked if he recalled any discussion about this issue at the meeting on 16 June 1993, and in particular whether he recalled being advised by Mr O'Callaghan that the payments to Shefran related to the 1991 June Election, Mr O'Farrell told the Tribunal that he had 'no recollection at all' of the issue of the Shefran payments and the June Election being discussed at the Board meeting on the 16 June 1993. He had merely noted ‘schedule of claims and transactions – noted’ in relation to Mr Fleming’s schedule of unresolved matters.

8.33 Mr O’Farrell denied that AIB had any knowledge that politicians were being bribed to support the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. He said that he was certain that had any such comment or suggestion relating to illicit or corrupt payments to politicians arisen, this would have ‘stuck in my mind.’

8.34 As discussed above, documents furnished to the Tribunal revealed that 16 June 1993 was not the first occasion on which Mr O’Callaghan, by way of manuscript note on a third party document, had noted a connection between the three 1991 Shefran payments totalling IR£80,000 and the June 1991 Local Elections.

8.35 Following the provision by Riga on 2 January 1992 to AIB of the list of ‘Westpark expenses’ paid by Riga on behalf of Barkhill (which included the three 1991 Shefran payments) Mr Deane, on 8 January 1992, requested Mr Donagh of AIB to prepare a projected balance of the AIB lending regarding Barkhill as of 31 March 1992. AIB duly did so and the document prepared by AIB in response to Mr Deane’s request was the subject of a further meeting which took place on 14 January 1992. In attendance at this meeting were Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Deane, Mr Kay, Mr Donagh and Mr David McGrath⁴³.

8.36 The document compiled by AIB was entitled ‘Barkhill Ltd’, a document which, the Tribunal was satisfied, was distributed to the attendees at the meeting (including Mr O’Callaghan) on 14 January 1992.

8.37 While Mr O’Callaghan was uncertain as to when exactly he received the document i.e. whether prior to or at the meeting, he accepted that it was most likely that it was produced at the meeting. When asked as to when he made a number of handwritten notes on the document, Mr O’Callaghan speculated that these were made subsequent to the meeting, and after he had taken it back to his office.

8.38 Mr O’Callaghan’s copy of this document, as discovered to the Tribunal included thereon a number of manuscript notes which he agreed had been written by him.

⁴³ In April 1991 Mr McGrath assumed responsibility for the management of AIB’s Corporate Business in the Retail, Indigenous Manufacturing, Motor and Property and Constructions Sectors.

8.39 In the portion of this AIB ‘Barkhill Ltd’ document headed ‘Utilisation of Riga subordinated £1m loan’ the three 1991 Shefran payments made by Riga were listed sequentially. Mr O’Callaghan’s handwritten note grouped the three payments together, and added the words.....

during May 16th for election funds in June

Election pamphlets etc.

8.40 These handwritten notations from Mr O’Callaghan clearly connected the Shefran payments, totalling IR£80,000, to the June 1991 Local Election and to expenditure incurred in relation to that Election.

8.41 The Tribunal was satisfied that, on the face of them, Mr O’Callaghan’s notations appeared to associate three specific matters, namely:

- the payments totalling IR£80,000 to Shefran,
- the date of the Quarryvale rezoning vote, and
- the Local Election campaign in May/June 1991.

8.42 Mr O’Callaghan conceded that, as appeared on the AIB document, an association had been made by him between the payment of IR£80,000 by Riga to Shefran in May/June 1991 and the 1991 May/June Election campaign. When asked to explain his handwritten notes on the AIB document, Mr O’Callaghan stated;

‘Well, what I think what I meant by that was that in that particular, I was making that note on it. That I must admit I always felt that the fees were pretty high but we had no choice but to pay them under the circumstances. As we asked Frank Dunlop to do so much work in short time and using his office etc. And I would have, I was quite conscious in making that note that during the election, sorry, during the vote coming up to May 16th, that Frank Dunlop would have of course have asked by quite a number of councillors for assistance in the forthcoming election, Local Election. And that he would have been asked to provide by them, he would asked to provide posters, pamphlets, etc.’

8.43 And, he stated:

‘.... what that note actually means is that because of all of the connections that Frank Dunlop would have made with various politicians etc. and in particular when there was a vote in on May 16th because he would have met and made contact with so many politicians. Like any normal business person with an election on hand he would have been asked of course for political contributions. And political type contribution that I assume there from that note that Frank Dunlop would have been asked for and these would have been brought to him probably in probably more importantly because of the May vote and all of the politicians he had met during that month of May, that he would have been asked on numerous occasion for small contributions, for pamphlets, for posters and little things like that. Small amounts of money. And that would be significant because he would be asked by 30,40,50 councillors for that. Which is a lot of money when he add it all up.'

8.44 Mr O'Callaghan also advised the Tribunal:

'That [Mr Dunlop] would have had actually at that time he would have had to contribute or he would have promised during the May 16th vote, that's the Quarryvale vote, that he would have promised at that vote with the election, the Local Elections which was due a few weeks away, I think about five weeks. And most people knew that that was on the way. That was coming. He would have made promises to help people of course at that particular time to help them in the Local Elections. That would be very normal if he asked somebody to support Quarryvale it's quite possible that the Councillor would say back to him yes I will, and I am going to do it, but I want you to look after me as well when the Election comes up etc, etc.'

8.45 On Day 891, the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr O'Callaghan:

'Q So your justification to yourself if I understand your reasoning correctly, Mr O'Callaghan, for the payment of 80,000 pounds to Shefran, was that it was connected to the 16th of May vote and for election expenses that you felt might have been expended by Mr Dunlop to the councillors in some way in connection with their support for Quarryvale, is that right?'

A. No, not for Quarryvale. Support generally at election time as I mentioned that when councillors, this is just me surmising now and it's a very, very normal thing to happen. That (SIC) when Frank Dunlop would have been asking the various councillors for support on May 16th vote for Quarryvale, that they would of course in turn would probably say to him well like that's fine don't forget me I will have my own election in the end of June. Very normal thing to happen, happens to somebody in business, especially somebody like Frank Dunlop who would be in touch with so many councillors. And that's just an assumption there and the follow on to that he didn't get 80,000 pounds to put into his pocket for such a short period of time for example, that you know, it wasn't all free. He would have had to probably give a little bit of support to some Councillors because he knew so many of them come the election on the 27th of June. As simple as that.

Q. Yes

A. This was easing my own mind really that's all. Kind of a silly note to be blunt about it really.

Q. On the other hand, Mr O'Callaghan, if I can put this to you: if one were to take the note at face value without the explanation you have given about your solitary musings in Cork, it is a note that records an attribution by the person who paid Mr Dunlop, that the money was paid during May 16th, which is the day of the Quarryvale vote, for election expenses in June, isn't that right? That's what the note records on its face.

A. You could read it like that I suppose.

Q. The benefit of your explanation in the witness box, Mr O'Callaghan, and one coldly considered what you had noted on the document when you were on your own and giving consideration to it, one would be left with the view or could well be left with the view that the sum of £80,000 was paid for the vote in Quarryvale on May 16th, isn't that right?

A. Well that would be very, very wrong. And to do that you would have to get to read my mind. I don't know who (SIC) you actually take that out of it.'

8.46 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan's notations were made on 14 January 1992 while attending a meeting in AIB and that they were made by him (whether or not articulated by him on that occasion) in the context of a discussion about, inter alia, the three 1991 Shefran payments. The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan, at the time, noted on the document that the money was paid in connection with the Local Election campaign and that at the time he did so that was his understanding of the purpose of the payments.

8.47 With regard to the notations on Mr Fleming's schedule, the Tribunal was satisfied that these notations were made in the context of a discussion likely to have taken place at the Board meeting on 16 June 1993 regarding Mr Fleming's request for documentation to support the 1991 Shefran payments. The Tribunal rejected Mr O'Callaghan's claim that the notations were 'doodles' or 'scribbles' made by him in his office in Cork.

8.48 The Tribunal was satisfied that, as part of that discussion, the 1991 Shefran payments totalling IR£80,000 would have been alluded to in the context of Mr Flemings request for the missing invoices.

8.49 The Tribunal was satisfied that any reasonable or logical reading of the two documents in question, and Mr O’Callaghan’s notations thereon, suggested that Mr O’Callaghan’s belief and understanding, as of 14 January 1992 and 16 June 1993 respectively, was that IR£80,000 had been paid by Riga to Mr Dunlop, through Shefran, for utilisation by him in the context of the Local Election campaign in 1991.

8.50 The Tribunal was also satisfied that in the course of the meeting of 16 June 1993 Mr O’Callaghan advised those present that invoices were unavailable in respect of the 1991 Shefran payments. One of the subject matters at this meeting was Mr Fleming’s request, inter alia, for the 1991 Shefran invoices and other invoices. It was established with certainty that no invoices were ever produced to Mr Fleming for the purpose of the Barkhill audit. Records showed that notwithstanding Mr Fleming’s letters of 15 of December 1992 and 3 May 1993, and notwithstanding consideration given to the matter at the Barkhill board meeting on 16 of June 1993, Mr Fleming’s working documents in the lead up period to the accounts being signed off continued to note the absence of invoices for the three 1991 payments.

MR O’CALLAGHAN’S EVIDENCE IN RELATION TO THE 1991 SHEFRAN INVOICES

8.51 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that he received, individually, the three Shefran invoices from Mr Dunlop in 1991, prior to discharging the sums claimed on each invoice and that on their receipt he kept them in his office in Cork and did not provide them to his book-keeper, Mr Lucey, prior to or at the time the three cheques were written. It was normal practice in Riga that invoices were received from third parties to whom payments were due, before Riga would issue cheques to such third parties. Mr Lucey testified that ‘in the normal course of events’ invoices for services would be stamped as paid, when paid but there were no hard and fast rules. Mr Lucey confirmed that Mr Dunlop’s business involved the provision of ‘services’.

8.52 The content of Mr Lucey’s letter to Mr Fleming of Deloitte & Touche dated 8 February 1993 suggested that Mr Lucey clearly did not, at that point in time (which was close to two years after the payments had been made) have possession of these invoices. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lucey did not, in fact, have the invoices at that time.

8.53 Mr O’Callaghan maintained that, notwithstanding the fact (as claimed by him) that the Shefran invoices were in his possession in 1991 and despite his awareness of Mr Fleming’s requirement for sight of such invoices, he had not provided them to Mr Fleming. Mr O’Callaghan’s stated reason for not so doing was that he was too busy to look for them in his office. Mr O’Callaghan said that he did not regard the invoices as being of any significance, as their cost had been refunded. He accepted that he did not provide them to Mr Lucey, Deloitte & Touche, AIB or Mr Gilmartin, and that he made them available for the first time when the Tribunal sought them.

8.54 Mr Lucey, in his evidence, could not recollect if, having been advised by Mr Fleming of the requirement for backup documentation, he had ever gone in search of such invoices.

8.55 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that he handed over the three invoices to Mr Lucey in late 1993 and that at some stage copies must have been made of them, as copies were discovered to the Tribunal in 2000.

8.56 In an Affidavit of Discovery sworn on 3 May 2000, Mr O’Callaghan averred, inter alia, to the existence within Riga of copies of the Shefran invoices, including the three 1991 invoices, which copies were duly produced to the Tribunal by Mr O’Callaghan.

8.57 Mr O’Callaghan claimed to have located the original Shefran invoices in a box marked ‘Quarryvale’ in his office in Cork, in approximately May 2008, while the public hearings into the QVII module were ongoing. Mr O’Callaghan duly furnished these originals to the Tribunal in July 2008.

8.58 No explanation was provided by Mr O’Callaghan as to why copies of the invoices had been made, or why, or how the originals of the invoices remained in his office until 2008.

8.59 Prior to Mr O’Callaghan making Discovery in May 2000 of copies of the three 1991 invoices, Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan met in Cork on 9 or 10 March 1999. According to both, Mr Dunlop travelled to Cork in order, inter alia, to obtain copies of the Shefran invoices from Mr O’Callaghan, as it had been Mr Dunlop’s practice not to keep copies of Shefran invoices, once issued.⁴⁴ Mr Dunlop required the copy invoices for the purposes of complying with an Order for Discovery made by the Tribunal.

⁴⁴Mr Dunlop claimed also not to have retained copies of two Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices issued to Riga in 1992 and 1993 in respect of amounts of IRE70,000 and IRE25,000 respectively.

8.60 As already set out, an examination by the Tribunal of the six Shefran invoices indicated that none included VAT, none were numbered (sequentially or otherwise) and none had a date of receipt stamped thereon. Five of the six invoices described the work, the subject of the invoice, as including the provision of ‘*professional strategic, communications and educational*⁴⁵ services’, although, as acknowledged by Mr Dunlop, no such services were provided by Mr Dunlop, either to Riga or Barkhill. All six invoices were in the name of Shefran, including the three 1991 invoices, although the 1991 payments were written up in the records of Riga as payments to S-h-e-a-f-r-a-n. As already indicated, in the case of two of the 1991 payments, where the cheques were made available to the Tribunal, the payee on one cheque was clearly ‘Sheafran’ (cheque for IR£25,000 dated 16 May 1991) and in respect of the other cheque (cheque for IR£15,000 dated 7 June 1991) the payee was less clear, although the Tribunal believed the cheque to have been made out to Sheafran, given the entry in Riga’s records.

8.61 Only two of the invoices, namely those of 20 March 1992 and 18 December 1992⁴⁶ are marked ‘paid’.

8.62 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that he always believed the name of Mr Dunlop’s company to be S-H-E-F-R-A-N, and never knew it as S-H-E-A-F-R-A-N. Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that it had always been his understanding that the name Shefran, was an amalgam of the names Sheila (Mr Dunlop’s wife’s first name) and Frank. He suggested that the misspelling in Riga’s books, and in the cheques, of Shefran to read Sheafran was due to human error, and that this erroneous spelling was merely replicated in the account books, and in the writing of cheques.

8.63 In fact, as set out above, Shefran did not exist as a legal entity until late 1991. In March 1990, the company was incorporated using the name S-H-E-A-F-R-A-N Ltd. Its change of name to S-H-E-F-R-A-N occurred on 19 November 1991. All three 1991 payments totalling IR£80,000 were made therefore at a time when the name of the company was Sheafran, and not Shefran.

8.64 The entire contemporaneous documentary trail examined by the Tribunal and which referred to or touched upon the issue of the three 1991 Shefran payments, on the face of them, indicated that invoices for the three 1991 Shefran payments of IR£25,000, IR£40,000 and IR£15,000 had not been ⁴⁵In his evidence in the Pennine/Baldoyle Module, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he deliberately used the word ‘educational’ in his invoices, because such services were not subject to VAT.

⁴⁶The 18 December 1992 invoice was never a subject of discussion within Barkhill as Riga never sought recoupment thereof.

issued in 1991. Indeed, as already referred to, Mr O’Callaghan’s handwritten notations on the AIB document of January 1992 and his handwritten notations on Mr Fleming’s schedule as re-copied by Mr Fleming to Riga on 3 May 1993, indicated, in the view of the Tribunal, that no invoices had issued in 1991.

8.65 Only Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop asserted that the three Shefran invoices dated 25 March 1991, 2 April 1991 and 1 May 1991 were extant in 1991. Of the other individuals likely, in the period 1991 to 1993, to have had sight of these invoices, if they existed, only Ms Cowhig, Riga’s auditor, merely assumed that she had seen them. Mr Lucey, the individual ‘at the coal face’ in terms of Riga’s internal bookkeeping procedures told the Tribunal that he had no recollection of ever seeing such invoices.

8.66 The Tribunal was of the view that if the invoices had been available to Mr O’Callaghan from 1991, then he would have provided them to Mr Lucey to be forwarded to Deloitte & Touche at the time when their production was requested. Moreover, the Tribunal did not see why, if copies of the original invoices were made in (or prior to) 2000, the originals were subsequently maintained in storage in Mr O’Callaghan’s personal office until furnished to the Tribunal in July 2008. The Tribunal believed that a likely explanation for the foregoing was that the invoices were not generated at all until many years after 1991.

8.67 The Tribunal was satisfied that:

- (i) Mr Dunlop did not provide Mr O’Callaghan with any invoices in the name of SHEFRAN in 1991.
- (ii) The copy 1991 Shefran invoices, discovered to the Tribunal in April 2000 by Mr Dunlop and May 2000 by Mr O’Callaghan, and the originals of which were discovered by Mr O’Callaghan in July 2008, were generated much later than 1991, probably at or close to the time of Mr Dunlop’s visit to Mr O’Callaghan’s office in Cork in March 1999. This visit was undertaken for the purpose, inter alia, of enabling Mr Dunlop to provide documentation to the Tribunal.

RIGA’S ACCOUNTING TREATMENT AND THE AUDIT TREATMENT OF THE 1991 SHEFRAN PAYMENTS

8.68 In Riga’s audited accounts for the year ended 30 April 1992⁴⁷ the figure stated as the sum owed by Barkhill to Riga (including the IR£80,000 paid in 1991 to Shefran) was IR£1,216,914.43. In Barkhill’s accounts for the period ended 30 April 1992⁴⁸ the sum owed by Barkhill to Riga for the said period was stated to be IR£1,227,756. The difference of IR£10,842 (to the nearest punt) was said to represent travel expenses paid by Riga.

⁴⁷The Auditor’s Report to the members of Riga was signed by its auditor, Barber & Co., on 23 October 1992

8.69 On foot of documentation furnished under cover of correspondence from Mr Lucey dated 28 October 1993, Barkhill's auditors were alerted to the fact that Riga's inter-company account working papers in relation to the inter-company loan then being prepared for the year ended 30 April 1993 did not reflect the IR£80,000 Shefran payments as a sum due and owing by Barkhill to Riga as at 30 April 1992. This was contrary to the position that had prevailed in the audited accounts of both companies as at 30 April 1992. Nor was such sum carried over in Riga's books as owing by Barkhill for the year ended 30 April 1993.

8.70 This revised position was to all intents and purposes confirmed to Mr Fleming (of Deloitte & Touche) by facsimile document entitled 'Barkhill Limited – Loan' forwarded by Ms Cowhig (of Barber & Co) on 8 December 1993. Ms Cowhig confirmed that the opening inter-company balance figure as of 1 May 1993 in the sum of IR£1,365,824.80, contained in this document, did not include the IR£80,000 Shefran payment.⁴⁹

8.71 On 25 January 1994, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Deane, as Directors of Riga, signed the Riga audited accounts for the year ended 30 April 1993. Omitted from the signed off accounts was a loan balance of IR£6,309.29 owed to Riga by Barkhill (being a shortfall left after a number of invoices had been repaid by Barkhill in January 1992) and the IR£80,000 Shefran payments, all of which had previously been carried in Riga's books as monies owed to Riga by Barkhill.

8.72 This total of IR£86,309.29 removed from the Riga/Barkhill inter-company loan balance was attributed within Riga's accounts for the year ended 30 April 1993 as expenditure connected with Riga's Stadium project. With the attribution to 'Work in progress – Stadium' therefore, the IR£86,309.29 expenditure was no longer open to scrutiny by the auditors of Barkhill, unlike the position which had pertained in relation to the year ending 30 April 1992.

8.73 On 11 May 1994, Mr Fleming, then in the process of auditing the accounts of Barkhill for the 18 month period ended 31 October 1993 and having identified the discrepancy in the inter-company loan balance, communicated with ⁴⁸The Report of the Auditor to the members of Barkhill was signed by its auditor, Deloitte & Touche, on 27 January 1994.

⁴⁹Although not actually confirmed by Ms. Cowhig in her evidence, the document faxed by her to Deloitte & Touche on 8 December 1993 also clearly indicated that the closing balance of IR£1,386,242.85 as of 31 October 1993 did not include the IR£80,000 Shefran payments.

Ms Mary Basquille⁵⁰ of AIB and advised that among the ‘Unresolved Audit Matters’ set out in the Appendix which accompanied his letter was the issue of the treatment in Riga’s books of the Shefran payments. By fax dated 17 May 1994, Mr Lucey forwarded to Ms Cowhig a copy of Mr Fleming’s letter to Ms Basquille. On the same date, Mr Deane wrote to Ms Cowhig in relation to Mr Fleming’s queries.

8.74 In essence, Mr Fleming sought clarification from Riga and its auditors as to why three items, two of which had previously been attributable to the inter-company loan balance within Riga were, as of 31 October 1993, omitted therefrom. The three items which had been identified by Mr Fleming were the 1991 Shefran payments totalling IR£80,000, the sum of IR£6,309 and a travel expenses figure of IR£10,842. No explanation was provided by Riga to Mr Fleming in 1994. Ms Cowhig speculated that she may have spoken to Mr Fleming by telephone in relation to the matter. However, Ms Cowhig agreed that the content of Mr Fleming’s letter to Ms Basquille in February 1995 suggested that this matter had not been addressed up to that time.

8.75 In a letter to AIB on 9 February 1995 and copied (as had Mr Fleming’s 11 May 1994 letter to Ms Basquille) to Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Deane, Mr Seamus Maguire, Mr Lucey, Mr Gilmartin and Mr Pitcher of AIB, Mr Fleming repeated his request for clarification. On 7 March 1995 Ms Cowhig responded to Mr Fleming’s letter of 9 February 1995 with confirmation that as at 30 April 1994 the IR£80,000 Shefran payment and the sum of IR£6,309 were once again included in the Riga/Barkhill inter-company loan balance in Riga’s books.⁵¹ Ms Cowhig’s letter neither explained the decision to omit such sums in the accounts for year ended 30 April 1993, nor why the sums had now been reinstated to the inter-company loan balance account.

8.76 Having been so reinstated, the Shefran IR£80,000 payment continued to be carried in the books of Riga as a debt due by Barkhill, and which was ultimately recouped by Riga in 1996.

8.77 Ms Cowhig told the Tribunal that at some stage after 30 April 1993, she was advised by Mr Deane, in discussions regarding Riga’s accounts for that year-end, that certain of the expenditure which had been incurred by Riga on behalf of Barkhill in the period 1991 to 30 April 1993 was believed, as of 30 April 1993, not to be readily recoverable from Barkhill. Some of this expenditure had already been accounted for in the inter-company loan balance for the year ended 30 April 1992, namely, the IR£80,000 Shefran payments and the IR£6,309.29 shortfall.

8.78 According to Ms Cowhig, the expenditure which had been incurred by Riga on behalf of Barkhill, and about which doubt was now being cast as to the likelihood of recovery, related to professional fees paid by Riga to a number of entities, including Shefran. On foot of Mr Deane's instructions, Ms Cowhig, in the course of her audit for year ended 30 April 1993, duly transferred the IR£80,000 Shefran balance, the IR£6,309.29 shortfall and a sum of IR£130,890.36 to Riga's 'Work in progress Stadium' account.

8.79 The sum of IR£130,890.36 transferred in such manner included payments by Riga to a number of other entities (as of the year ended 30 April 1993) including Frank Dunlop & Associates and Cllr Sean Gilbride.

8.80 The total sum thus attributed in Riga's books to 'Work in progress – Stadium', as opposed to being carried in the Riga/Barkhill inter-company loan balance, was IR£217,199.65.⁵²

8.81 Mr Deane explained the doubt that had arisen regarding the recovery by Riga of the afore-mentioned professional fees on the basis that it was believed AIB would not release the necessary funds, and that Mr Gilmartin would not be amenable to the discharge of such fees to Riga by Barkhill. Mr Deane claimed that his concern in this regard arose because of prior objection from both himself and Mr O'Callaghan to the discharge of sums due and owing to professionals originally retained by Mr Gilmartin in connection with the Quarryvale project. Mr Deane feared that Mr Gilmartin would reciprocate by refusing to agree to Barkhill's reimbursement of Riga for payments it had made to certain professionals on behalf of the Quarryvale project.

8.82 Counsel for the Tribunal asked Ms Cowhig to account for the decision, in 1995, to reattribute the IR£80,000 Shefran payments to the inter-company loan balance account for year ended 30 April 1994 (as per Ms Cowhig's letter to Mr Fleming of 7 March 1995 and as reflected in Riga's accounts for the year ended 30 April 1994). Ms Cowhig told the Tribunal that that reattribution was done on the direction of Mr Deane who she claimed had advised her in 1994 that, with zoning having been achieved for the Quarryvale site, Riga's prospects of recovering the IR£80,000 Shefran fees from Barkhill had improved considerably.

⁵² Of the sum of IR£217,199.65 written up to Work in progress – Stadium, only IR£86,309.29 of same was queried by Mr Fleming of Deloitte & Touche (Barkhill's auditors) in late 1993/1994 as only that sum had appeared in the Riga/Barkhill inter-company loan balance to year ended 30 April 1992 and not in Riga balance at 31 October 1993.

In her evidence to the Tribunal, Ms Cowhig stated that the sums were reinstated after she had discussed the matter with Mr Deane. It was done:

‘on the basis that there’s, once the zoning for Quarryvale came through that it should be easier to recover the expenses from Barkhill and that Tom Gilmartin, well I thought that Tom Gilmartin might now not object to those payments, therefore, that it should now – that they could not be recovered from Barkhill.’

8.83 In his evidence, Mr Deane told the Tribunal:

‘I believed at that time that zoning had gone through. The row with Tom Gilmartin over payment of his particular consultants had ameliorated somewhat because we had made arrangements with Connell Wilson, who had been in fairness owed a lot of money, but we didn’t have the money to pay them. And I felt at the very least we would get back the fees incorporated the our[sic] subordinate loan.’

8.84 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that he had not been consulted in relation to this issue, and was not involved in the decision to reattribute the IR£80,000 Shefran payments. Mr O’Callaghan also maintained that he had ‘probably never’ read letters from auditors concerning account-related queries.

8.85 Ms Cowhig, both in transferring the IR£80,000 Shefran payments from the inter-company loan balance for year ended 30 April 1993, and in subsequently reinstating them in March 1995, did so at the behest of Mr Deane. The Tribunal was satisfied that Ms Cowhig was given the reasons, as attributed by her to Mr Deane for doing so.

8.86 The Tribunal considered that the decision made by Mr Deane, most probably in mid to late 1993, to direct Ms Cowhig to remove the IR£80,000 Shefran payment from the Riga/Barkhill inter-company loan account for year ended 30 April 1993 was connected to questions being asked by Mr Gilmartin about the payments, from late 1992 onwards.

8.87 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Deane’s decision to remove the 1991 Shefran payments from the inter-company loan balance was attributable to the facts that: Mr Gilmartin in the latter half of 1992 and continuing into 1993 was actively seeking reasons as to why a sum of IR£150,000 had been paid to Shefran; and Barkhill’s auditors were requesting invoices, in 1992 and 1993, for the 1991 Shefran payments. As following that removal, Barkhill would be deemed no longer liable for the 1991 Shefran payments, Mr Gilmartin’s request for answers as to why Barkhill had incurred such a liability would become redundant.

8.88 The Tribunal considered that the above factors were likely to have been the prevailing factors in the mind of Mr Deane as the person who, the Tribunal was satisfied, made the decision. Thus, the Tribunal rejected Mr Deane's contention that he anticipated opposition, on the part of Mr Gilmartin, to Riga being reimbursed by Barkhill for the IR£80,000 as a quid pro quo for the prior opposition of Riga to the payment of certain of Mr Gilmartin's creditors/professionals. In rejecting Mr Deane's evidence in this regard, the Tribunal took cognisance of the fact that, while Mr Gilmartin had indeed taken issue with Riga's non-payment of certain of his professionals, he nonetheless, on a number of occasions, signed authorisations relating to payments made to many of the professionals retained by Riga.

8.89 Furthermore, the Tribunal believed it likely that the direction given by Mr Deane to Ms Cowhig to repost within Riga's books the IR£80,000 Shefran monies as a sum due and owing by Barkhill was triggered by Mr Fleming's requests, ongoing from May 1994, for clarification as to why the IR£80,000 had been removed from the inter-company loan balance.

THE TRIBUNAL'S OVERALL CONCLUSIONS AS TO THE ARRANGEMENT ENTERED INTO BY MR O'CALLAGHAN AND MR DUNLOP IN RELATION TO SHEFRAN

9.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that the arrangement arrived at between Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop, most probably on 26 April 1991, was that Mr Dunlop would be put in funds by Mr O'Callaghan for the purposes of making disbursements to councillors and that he would be facilitated in this regard by payments made to him otherwise than to his public relations company, Frank Dunlop & Associates. The Tribunal was satisfied that because of the imminent Local Election and the likelihood, as appreciated by Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan, that certain councillors would seek money from Mr Dunlop in the course of his lobbying, both knew and at the time appreciated that Mr Dunlop would need funds for this purpose. Moreover, the Tribunal was satisfied that by 26 April 1991, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop knew of a demand then being made by Mr Lawlor⁵³ (then a Councillor) for a substantial payment in connection with the assistance he had provided and was likely to render in the future to Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop, in connection with securing support for the Quarryvale rezoning.

9.02 As conceded by Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan, in 1991 there was discussion between them about the manner in which Mr Dunlop was to be funded for the purposes of his lobbying activities. It was likely that Mr Dunlop, from the outset, promoted a dual system whereby Frank Dunlop & Associates would invoice Riga in respect of outlay and expenses incurred in connection with Mr Dunlop's lobbying activities, and whereby Mr Dunlop would be put in funds by Riga through an entity other than Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, from which Mr Dunlop would have the facility to disburse money to councillors who were likely to be election candidates in the then imminent Local Election.

9.03 The Tribunal was satisfied that the entity which Mr Dunlop promoted as the payment vehicle in this regard was Shefran. The Tribunal was satisfied that the agreement reached between Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop for the latter to be put in funds through Shefran was for the purpose of keeping the scale of the payments to be made to Mr Dunlop by Mr O'Callaghan secret from Mr Gilmartin. The Tribunal was satisfied that the scale of the Shefran payments made to Mr Dunlop allowed Mr Dunlop, at all relevant times, to have sufficient funds for the purposes of complying with requests or demands which he anticipated would be made of him by councillors.

9.04 The Tribunal was satisfied that the use of Shefran was not promoted by Mr Dunlop or agreed to by Mr O'Callaghan to conceal Mr Dunlop's involvement as a lobbyist from Mr Gilmartin. Mr O'Callaghan himself acknowledged the 'fallacy' of this suggestion, having regard to the fact that from an early stage Mr Gilmartin was aware of Mr Dunlop's involvement.

9.05 The Tribunal was also satisfied that Shefran was nominated by Mr Dunlop to Mr O'Callaghan as the vehicle whereby Mr Dunlop was to receive large VAT free round figure payments from Mr O'Callaghan for utilisation in connection with the agreed purpose. The happenstance of Mr Dunlop having available to him such a company, coupled with the cheque cashing arrangement which Mr Dunlop had negotiated with Mr Aherne of AIB, College Green, provided Mr Dunlop with an effective mechanism to shield from the scrutiny of Mr Gilmartin the fact that he was the recipient of large round figure payments in connection with his Quarryvale lobbying endeavours.

9.06 It was patently clear from the evidence of Mr Dunlop, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin, that Mr Gilmartin, in the course of the meeting which took place between Mr Dunlop, Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Gilmartin and Mr Lawlor on 25 April 1991,⁵⁴ was made privy to Mr O'Callaghan's intention to retain Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist, something which, Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan agreed, Mr Gilmartin was objecting to from the outset. There was no dispute but that by 2 May 1991 Mr Dunlop's involvement as a lobbyist for Quarryvale was made known to Mr

⁵⁴ See Part 9.

Gilmartin in a direct fashion, when Mr Dunlop faxed to Mr Gilmartin certain information connected with the Quarryvale rezoning proposal. By 16 May, 1991 the day of the Quarryvale rezoning vote, and the day when Shefran received the first payment from Riga Ltd, Mr Dunlop's involvement in the lobbying campaign for Quarryvale was known to all concerned, including Mr Gilmartin. Thus the Tribunal gave no credence to Mr O'Callaghan's contention that the purpose of Shefran was:

'...to protect whatever councillors [who] would support Quarryvale, Tom Gilmartin's Councillors that would support Quarryvale, protect them and make sure that they stayed inside with me. That's the reason the whole thing was set up'.

9.07 The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop, insofar as they maintained that the IR£80,000 paid to Mr Dunlop in 1991 was for professional 'fees' as a lobbyist for Quarryvale. The Tribunal also rejected their evidence that the payments totalling IR£80,000 represented the substantial portion of a IR£100,000 professional fee for Mr Dunlop, claimed as having been negotiated between them. It was inconceivable to the Tribunal, if there been agreement for a sum of IR£100,000 by way of a professional fee in respect of his lobbying work up to the date of 16 May 1991 Quarryvale vote, that Mr Dunlop would not have sought and been paid the outstanding IR£20,000 balance.

9.08 The Tribunal was satisfied that the IR£80,000 paid to Mr Dunlop over the course of three weeks in 1991 was never intended to be Mr Dunlop's fee as understood in the ordinary sense of the word. The Tribunal was satisfied that the primary purpose of Mr Dunlop being funded to the extent of IR£80,000 over a three week period in May/June 1991 was to provide Mr Dunlop with the facility by which disbursements could easily be made to councillors in the course of the Local Election campaign. Given the purpose for which Mr Dunlop was retained, namely to lobby councillors in support of the Quarryvale rezoning proposal, the provision of such funds to Mr Dunlop was made for a corrupt purpose.

9.09 In arriving at its conclusion in this regard, the Tribunal took cognisance of Mr Dunlop's own admissions in the course of his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, that the encashed proceeds of the IR£80,000 Shefran payments he had received between 16 May 1991 and the 7 June 1991 (together with other cash funds available to him over the course of the Local Election campaign), were used by him to make payments/donations to a number of County Council candidates during the May/June 1991 Local Election campaign, and to make a payment of IR£40,000 in cash to Mr Lawlor.

9.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that in 1991, Riga was not invoiced by Mr Dunlop in respect of the three payments totalling IR£80,000.

9.11 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan shared the ambition that those councillors who supported Quarryvale on 16 May 1991 would be re-elected so that they would continue to provide support for the Quarryvale Town Centre proposal. Elsewhere in this Chapter the Tribunal has considered the scale of that opposition and which arose particularly in the aftermath of the 16 May 1991 vote, and which became intensive during the currency of the 1991 Local Election campaign. Indeed, opposition to Quarryvale was a constant feature in the lead up to the December 1992 Council vote, and beyond.

9.12 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O’Callaghan’s evidence to it as to the purpose and destiny of the IR£80,000 paid to Mr Dunlop over the space of three weeks in May/June 1991, through Shefran was untrue, having regard, in particular, to the Tribunal’s findings regarding Mr O’Callaghan’s hand written notes and the fact that no invoices were extant at the time of those payments.

9.13 The Tribunal was satisfied also that Mr Dunlop’s evidence as to the purpose of these payments, as personal income to himself, was untrue.

9.14 Mr Dunlop utilised the IR£40,000 Shefran payment received in April 1992 by:

- (i) settling (with IR£20,652.63) the loan of IR£20,000 drawn down by Mr Dunlop in cash from AIB on 4 February 1992,
- (ii) opening (with IR£6,847.37) the Shefran AIB 083 account (‘war chest’ account), and
- (iii) lodging IR£4,000 to his INBS 910 account (‘war chest’ account), and
- (iv) retaining IR£8,500 in cash.

9.15 Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan maintained that the April 1992 Shefran payment of IR£40,000 was part of the agreed professional fee for Mr Dunlop’s lobbying work, post May 1991. A portion of the IR£40,000 payment, once received by Mr Dunlop, was utilised by him to discharge his indebtedness to AIB. The Tribunal believed it likely that the February 1992 IR£20,000 AIB loan which was taken by Mr Dunlop in cash, and in respect of which Mr Dunlop maintained he was unable to provide an explanation as to its purpose and use, was in all probability used for some purpose connected with Mr Dunlop’s lobbying activities on behalf of Quarryvale. This loan was repaid with approximately half of the April 1992 Shefran payment from Barkhill. In arriving at its conclusion above, the Tribunal noted Mr Dunlop’s evidence that, in general, he utilised money paid to him through Shefran as one of the means by which payments to councillors were made.

9.16 According to Mr Dunlop, the belief within the Quarryvale team in March/April 1992 was that the next Quarryvale vote would take place in June and July 1992. Mr O’Callaghan confirmed to the Tribunal that initially he himself believed that Quarryvale would be dealt with under the Development Plan review by June 1992.

9.17 While Mr Dunlop made no claim or allegation of having expended any part of the IR£70,000 Shefran monies, received by him in 1992, on payments to councillors in relation to Quarryvale, and while noting what Mr Dunlop did with the June 1992 IR£30,000 Shefran payment, the Tribunal was nevertheless satisfied that the timing of the Shefran invoices (20 March 1992 and 30 April 1992) together with their prompt discharge by Mr O’Callaghan – the IR£40,000 was paid on 13 April 1992 and the IR£30,000 was paid on 5 June 1992 – was connected to events which were then occurring within Dublin County Council in mid 1992, namely the recommencement, post the first statutory public display, of the review of the Draft Development Plan.

9.18 In view of the manner (round figure payments with no VAT element through a non-trading company) in which such payments were made to Mr Dunlop, and having regard to Mr Dunlop’s admission that Shefran was used as a vehicle for ready cash, the Tribunal believed it likely, insofar as Mr Dunlop retained a portion of the IR£40,000 April 1992 payment in cash, that all or a portion of that cash was retained by him for the purposes of making corrupt cash disbursements in the course of his lobbying activities.

9.19 Equally, the Tribunal was satisfied that, insofar as Mr Dunlop retained at a minimum, IR£15,000 in cash from the encashment of the February 1993 Shefran cheque (for IR£25,000) it was likely that that money was used by Mr Dunlop for the purpose of corrupt disbursements to councillors.

9.20 The Tribunal was satisfied that the primary purpose for the use of Shefran by Mr Dunlop in connection with Quarryvale was to facilitate the receipt of substantial funds from Mr O’Callaghan from which corrupt payments could be made to councillors in connection with Quarryvale and to conceal, from Mr Gilmartin, both the fact that such funds were being provided to Mr Dunlop and their scale.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS ON THE LIKELY TIMEFRAME IN WHICH MR GILMARTIN BECAME AWARE OF THE ASSOCIATION BETWEEN SHEFRAN AND MR DUNLOP

9.21 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin's knowledge of a link between Shefran and Mr Dunlop was learned by him on an incremental basis. The probable timeframe regarding Mr Gilmartin's awareness of Shefran and its link to Mr Dunlop was as set out below:

9.22 In January 1992, Mr Gilmartin was made aware, through AIB, of three payments to Shefran totalling IR£80,000 in 1991. Mr Gilmartin assumed these to have been the discharge of monies claimed by professional experts employed by Mr O'Callaghan. It was probable that by January 1992, Mr Gilmartin also had knowledge of at least one of the Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices discharged by Riga and for which it was to be reimbursed by Barkhill.⁵⁵

9.23 On 5 June 1992, Mr Kay telephoned Mr Gilmartin to obtain his verbal authorisation for the payment of the 30 April 1992 Shefran invoice for IR£30,000 which was about to be paid from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account. By that time Mr Kay himself was aware of Mr Dunlop's connection to Shefran. It was probable, although disputed by Mr Gilmartin, that to some extent Mr Kay apprised Mr Gilmartin of a link between Mr Dunlop and Shefran.

9.24 It therefore appeared to be the case that following this telephone call, and following the receipt of Mr Kay's 10 June 1992 letter enclosing a copy of the 30 April 1992 Shefran invoice, Mr Gilmartin by then knew of payments to Shefran totalling IR£110,000, and of a link with Mr Dunlop.

9.25 Mr Gilmartin's awareness of these sums having been paid to Shefran coincided with the commencement (June 1992) of the Barkhill audit and Mr Fleming's request for supporting documentation for various items, including the three 1991 Shefran payments amounting to IR£80,000.

9.26 The evidence established that despite Mr Fleming's endeavours to obtain backup documentation from in or about mid-1992 until the Barkhill accounts were signed off by Mr Gilmartin and Mr O'Callaghan in January 1994, he had been singularly unsuccessful in obtaining invoices in respect of the 1991 Shefran payments.

⁵⁵On 19 December 1991 Mr Gilmartin signed an authorisation for a drawdown from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan account to discharge a number of payments to creditors, including a payment to Frank Dunlop & Associates.

9.27 Certainly by October 1992, Mr Gilmartin was aware of the 13 April 1992 IR£40,000 Shefran payment.

9.28 On 2 February 1993 the full extent of the payments made to Mr Dunlop through Shefran in 1991 and 1992 was made clear to Mr Gilmartin when he received correspondence from AIB. In January 1993, Mr Gilmartin had requested Ms Basquille to provide him with (1) an update on Barkhill's present debt, and (2), outstanding commitments.

9.29 The documentation pertaining to the Barkhill No.2 Loan Account furnished to Mr Gilmartin on 2 February, 1993 indicated that the fees, as opposed to land acquisition costs, which had been paid out of the Barkhill No.2 Loan Account, as of that date, totalled £909,383.87.

9.30 By the time Mr Gilmartin received this documentation Mr Dunlop's company Shefran had been paid a total of IR£150,000, IR£70,000 of which had been funded by the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account. Moreover, a sum of approximately IR£104,000⁵⁶, had by this time also been paid to Frank Dunlop & Associates.

9.31 The last documented drawdown on the Barkhill loan account signed by Mr Gilmartin was on 5 November 1992⁵⁷. All of the subsequent drawdowns for 1993 and 1994 were signed by Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Pitcher (the AIB nominated Barkhill Director). AIB witnesses suggested that the reason for this was that it was more convenient to have Mr Pitcher co-sign the necessary documentation. The Tribunal, however, was inclined to disregard this reason, and believed it more likely that Mr Pitcher was the signatory on occasions when Mr Gilmartin failed or refused to sign. The Tribunal noted with interest that among the documents furnished to Mr Gilmartin under cover of Ms Basquille's letter of 2 February 1993 was an undated authorisation for a drawdown on the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account for Mr Gilmartin's signature. This document listed, inter alia, a payment to Frank Dunlop & Associates. There was no evidence that he had signed the authorisation.

9.32 Although no written authorisation was sought from Mr Gilmartin prior to the payment to Shefran of IR£40,000 from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account on 13 April 1992 and the IR£30,000 paid on 5 June 1992, it was the case that on 9 October 1992 Mr Gilmartin faxed a document signed by him to AIB wherein he sanctioned the historical payment of the aforementioned payments and other sums (including payments to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd) from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account.

⁵⁷ See below Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices.

9.33 The Tribunal was satisfied that the document which Mr Gilmartin signed and dated 27 July 1992 was provided to him by AIB sometime after 15 July 1992, most probably in October 1992. Mr Gilmartin said that he did not know why AIB had requested him to backdate the sanction to 27 July 1992, but appeared to suggest it was connected to the fact that he had been adjudicated bankrupt in the UK on 7 October 1992. The document was faxed to Mr Gilmartin on 9 October, 1992, two days after he had been made bankrupt.

9.34 Mr Gilmartin's failure to obtain, at an early stage, answers to his queries relating to Shefran, and the phased manner in which he received information which prompted him to associate the Shefran payments with Mr Dunlop, coupled with Mr Gilmartin's inherent distrust of Mr Dunlop,⁵⁸ was probably the basis of Mr Gilmartin's suspicion that money paid to Shefran was questionable and/or inappropriate.

9.35 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin was to a very great extent denied knowledge of the reason why substantial payments were made to Shefran. The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr Gilmartin was not provided with full information either by Mr O'Callaghan or AIB, in relation to the five Shefran payments for which Barkhill incurred indebtedness and their association to Mr Dunlop.

AIB'S KNOWLEDGE OF THE PURPOSE AND NATURE OF MR DUNLOP'S USE OF THE FUNDS PAID TO SHEFRAN

9.36 The Tribunal was satisfied, as a matter of probability that senior executives in AIB were aware that:

- (a) Shefran was Mr Dunlop's company and at least became aware of the connection between the two by December 1991.
- (b) Substantial round figure sums were being paid to Shefran in 1991 and 1992 at Mr O'Callaghan's direction. However, AIB were unaware of the 1991 payments until some months after they were made.
- (c) There were no invoices available in 1991 in respect of the three payments to Shefran, amounting to IR£80,000.
- (d) IR£80,000 paid to Mr Dunlop over the course of a three to four week period in 1991 was paid to him for disbursement by him in the course of his lobbying activities in connection with the 1991 Local Election campaign. The Tribunal was satisfied, having regard to the handwritten notations made on the documents in the possession of Mr O'Callaghan at the meetings of 14 January 1992 and 16 June 1993 that, at a minimum, ⁵⁸Mr Dunlop himself, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Kay gave evidence of their knowledge of Mr Gilmartin's dislike and distrust of Mr Dunlop. See further, Part 9.

AIB personnel present at the meeting of 16 June 1993 learned from Mr O’Callaghan that the IR£80,000 which had been provided to Mr Dunlop, via Shefran, in three tranches in May/June 1991 was for purposes associated with the 1991 Local Election. The Tribunal so found having regard, in particular, to the fact that one of the purposes of that meeting was to discuss Mr Fleming’s schedule, as had been re-submitted by him in the context of his ongoing quest to obtain invoices for a number of payments (including the 1991 Shefran payments), for which Barkhill remained indebted, or in respect of which it had already reimbursed Riga.

- (e) The Tribunal was satisfied that AIB were probably unaware of individual⁵⁹ payments to councillors by Mr Dunlop or the identities of councillors to whom such contributions were made.

THE FRANK DUNLOP & ASSOCIATES PAYMENTS BETWEEN 1991 - 1993

10.01 Of the circa IR£1.8m paid to or for the benefit of Mr Dunlop by Mr O’Callaghan through Riga/Barkhill, in excess of IR£1.6m was paid to Mr Dunlop’s company, Frank Dunlop & Associates. Of this amount, some IR£189,337.75 was paid on foot of invoices issued by Frank Dunlop & Associates in varying amounts between August 1991 and December 1993. The invoices can be broadly broken down in to two types of payments, namely, itemised invoices and invoices for ‘on-going costs’ as well as an invoice of 25 August 1993.

10.02 The itemised invoices at issue were provided by Frank Dunlop & Associates to Riga between August 1991 and April 1992. There are six such invoices in all. The on-going costs invoices date from June 1992 and between then and November 1993, Frank Dunlop & Associates provided seven such invoices to Riga/Barkhill. However, six out of seven of these invoices issued between June and December 1992.

10.03 This section considers these invoices as well as AIB’s and Mr Gilmartin’s knowledge of those invoices and the purposes of the resulting payments.

ITEMISED INVOICES

11.01 As mentioned, between 6 August 1991 and 30 April 1992, Frank Dunlop & Associates issued six itemised invoices for payment by Riga. In total, these payments amounted to IR£41,940.31.

⁵⁹However, in December 1991 Mr Kay of AIB learned from Mr O’Callaghan that he had made a political contribution of IR£10,000 each to Mr Lawlor and Cllr McGrath in September and October 1991 respectively – see Part 4.

THE FIRST ITEMISED INVOICE

11.02 The first itemised invoice was issued on 6 August 1991 some two months after the Local Election campaign of that year. The invoice was for the sum of IR£8,484.29 and included VAT. It was discharged by Riga on 27 September 1991 and the cheque was lodged to the bank account of Frank Dunlop & Associates on 30 September 1991, as part of a composite lodgement of IR£10,652.29.

11.03 Riga analysed the payment of IR£8,484.29 in its cheque payment book under ‘Creditors’. In contrast, the 1991 Shefran payments to Mr Dunlop were listed in Riga’s books under ‘Sundry’. According to Mr O’Callaghan, Riga regarded the invoice as Barkhill/Quarryvale expenditure, although the Quarryvale attribution (5098) did not appear in Riga’s books with regard to it.

11.04 Mr Dunlop retained back-up documentation for the amounts claimed, which he duly discovered to the Tribunal.

11.05 This first invoice was issued primarily to recoup expenditure incurred by Mr Dunlop in funding the election expenses of councillors, incurred in the course of that campaign. It represented the cost of distributing leaflets, advertising in the local press and the design and printing of election leaflets. With regard to election literature which had been produced for a number of councillors, Frank Dunlop & Associates discharged invoices to Dublin Tribune, Newswest, O’Donoghue Print Services, Keyline Studios and Door to Door Distributors. Also included in the invoice was the cost of the production of a document entitled ‘Blanchardstown Town Centre, the Truth and the Facts’, bearing the Fianna Fáil logo, and which referred to Fianna Fail councillors, and which had also thereon, in small print, the words ‘issued by Fianna Fáil.’

11.06 Mr O’Callaghan agreed that he had given Mr Dunlop permission to assist in the preparation of posters, brochures and leaflets for certain councillors. He acknowledged that in June 1991 he must have agreed with Mr Dunlop that Mr Dunlop would, in the first instance, discharge such expenses on his behalf.

11.07 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal:

‘I can’t remember but obviously sometime around 1st of June when all of this started. This is a follow-up to Blanchardstown, to John Corcoran and Blanchardstown. Blanchardstown Councillors starting off this political battle to see who could get themselves elected in on the 27th of June. And we got dragged into it, of course, as well. It was a pretty heated battle between both sides of the Liffey at the time. Frank would have been very much involved in it because of all of his connection with the various Councillors. And he would have told me that we would have had to support the Councillors that supported us and this is how this developed. Support it at ground level by producing this kind of stuff.'

11.08 Counsel for the Tribunal posed the following question to Mr O'Callaghan:

'... Before we go to look now at this actual documentation that was generated to Mr Dunlop at that time by various people who provided services by way of printing. What was the nature of your agreement, Mr O'Callaghan, with Mr Dunlop about the reimbursement of the expenses in question?'

11.09 Mr O'Callaghan replied:

'Well I don't think I put a limit on it. I suppose I told him that we would have to do what had to be done.'

11.10 Mr O'Callaghan agreed that the 6 August 1991 invoice was effectively one which sought reimbursement for outlay and expenditure incurred by Mr Dunlop in relation to the June 1991 Local Elections and all of which was attributed by Mr Dunlop as having been incurred on behalf of Mr O'Callaghan. Mr O'Callaghan agreed that the invoice was, primarily, an accumulation of a number of third party invoices Mr Dunlop had discharged on behalf of a number of candidates.

11.11 Mr O'Callaghan agreed that Mr Dunlop's 6 August, 1991 invoice did not reflect any out of pocket expenses incurred by Mr Dunlop prior to the June 1991 Election campaign and he agreed that there was nothing in the books and records of Frank Dunlop & Associates up to June 1991 to suggest that Mr Dunlop had incurred any expenses on behalf of Mr O'Callaghan/Quarryvale up to that time. Mr O'Callaghan stated that sometime between 16 May 1991 and early June 1991 he and Mr Dunlop made the agreement whereby Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd could invoice Riga for out of pocket expenses incurred in the course of the 1991 Local Election campaign and whereby Frank Dunlop & Associates would recoup from Riga all the costs incurred with printers, leaflet distributors etc. pertaining to that campaign.

11.12 Over the course of September and October 1991, Mr Dunlop, together with Mr O'Callaghan, attended a number of public meetings relating to Quarryvale.

11.13 A copy of the document entitled 'Blanchardstown Town Centre, the Truth and the Facts' was provided by Mr Deane to Mr Jim Donagh (of AIB), on 20 June 1991, presumably as an example of the type of literature being distributed at that time by Mr O’Callaghan to aid the Quarryvale rezoning campaign.

THE SECOND AND THIRD ITEMISED INVOICES

11.14 The second Frank Dunlop & Associates invoice was issued to Riga on 21 October 1991 for a sum of IR£3,569.50 and this invoice was followed by a third invoice for IR£4,658.92, also issued to Riga, dated 19 November 1991. Both invoices were itemised and included VAT. They were discharged by Riga on 2 December 1991 – a total of IR£8,228.42.

11.15 The receipt of these two amounts was duly recorded in the cash receipts book of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd and this sum was lodged to the bank accounts of that company. As with the first Frank Dunlop & Associates invoice, Mr Dunlop had some back-up information pertaining to the invoices of 21 October and 19 November 1991, which Mr Dunlop provided to the Tribunal.

11.16 The invoices indicated that the sums claimed were for the production and distribution of literature designed to assist Mr Dunlop and Mr O’ Callaghan’s Quarryvale lobbying endeavours.

THE FOURTH, FIFTH AND SIXTH ITEMISED INVOICES

11.17 On 14 January, 1992, Frank Dunlop & Associates issued an invoice for IR£14,019.78 to Riga. As was the case with the three previous invoices, this invoice included VAT and recorded a detailed breakdown. It was discharged by Barkhill from the No. 2 Loan Account by way of bank draft on 12 February 1992 on foot of an authorisation signed by Mr O’Callaghan. Receipt of the money was again recorded in the cash receipts book of Frank Dunlop & Associates.

11.18 Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop agreed that among the items included in the invoice was a sum of money (IR£1,000) which had been paid by Mr Dunlop to councillor John O’Halloran, for transmission to a local school related fundraising endeavour.

11.19 On 23 March 1992 Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd issued an invoice for IR£954.55 (itemised and with a VAT element) which was discharged on 13 April 1992 by AIB draft from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account. This was in or about the same day as the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account issued the draft for IR£40,000 to Shefran on foot of a Shefran invoice which issued from Mr Dunlop on 20 March 1992.

11.20 Frank Dunlop & Associates duly recorded the receipt of the IR£954.55 in its cash receipts book, unlike the position which pertained to Mr Dunlop's treatment of the IR£40,000 Shefran payment, paid at the same time. This payment was included in the authorisation dated 27 July 1992 which Mr Gilmartin faxed to AIB in October 1992.⁶⁰

11.21 The next Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoice was issued by Mr Dunlop to Riga on 30 April 1992.⁶¹ This invoice was for a sum of IR£10,253.27. It included a breakdown of how the sum was calculated and, as with all of the previous Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices issued since August 1991, was a numbered invoice and included a VAT element. Riga discharged the IR£10,253.27 on 22 June 1992 from the Riga AIB 023 account.⁶²

11.22 The IR£10,253.27 Riga cheque was recorded by Mr Dunlop in the books and records of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd and the cheque was duly lodged to the Frank Dunlop & Associates AIB 067 account on 25 June 1992.

11.23 As part of the IR£10,253.27 claimed, Mr Dunlop sought reimbursement for a Word Processor provided to Mr John McCann (Secretary of the Quarryvale Residents Association) and sought reimbursement of IR£1,422.67 for his intended discharge of IR£1,000 for 'Secretarial Services' in respect of which Frank Dunlop & Associates had been invoiced by 'Tower Secretarial Service' (a company operated by Cllr Colm McGrath) in April 1992. Mr Dunlop accounted for the differential in the two figures on the basis that when invoicing Mr O'Callaghan/Riga for sums he had paid to third parties, he, Mr Dunlop, invariably increased the amounts to provide for this 'added value', as a profit element for himself.

11.24 Mr O'Callaghan said that he did not know of this practice prior to the establishment of the Tribunal.

THE ON-GOING COSTS INVOICES

12.01 Starting on 10 June 1992, Frank Dunlop and Associated issued a series of 'ongoing costs' invoices to Riga. These invoices contained no breakdown of the amount specified on the invoice. Each of these invoices either had no element of VAT or itemised VAT at 0%. All of the previous Frank Dunlop &

⁶⁰This authorisation also included the 14 January 1992 Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoice for IR£14,019.78 and the two Shefran payments made in April and June 1992 respectively.

⁶¹This was also the date Shefran invoiced Riga for IR£30,000, duly paid by way of bank draft from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account on 5 June 1992.

⁶²Riga duly received reimbursement of this Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoice from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account on 2 October 1992.

Associates invoices from August 1991 to April 1992 had a detailed narrative of the makeup of the amounts involved.

THE FIRST ON-GOING COSTS INVOICE

12.02 The first invoice was issued on 10 June 1992 in the sum of IR£13,530.04, which was duly paid by Riga on 28 August 1992. The sum claimed was for:

To ongoing costs and expenses in relation to Quarryvale.

12.03 Asked why no breakdown appeared on the invoice for IR£13,530.04, Mr Dunlop stated:

'I cannot give you a cogent reason as to why that was other than to say in general terms that it probably related to the level of activity that was going on, but you are correct that these invoices were issued in that format by me in contrast to the earlier invoices in relation to the recovery of costs and expenses. But these invoices to revert to an earlier point that I made, these invoices would be issued by me to Riga or to the entity nominated by Mr O'Callaghan, which was Riga, for costs by agreement. In other words, I would have a discussion with Mr O'Callaghan prior to the issuing of these invoices'

12.04 The 'ongoing costs' invoice of 10 June 1992 included a sum of IR£10,700 which Mr Dunlop had paid, at Mr O'Callaghan's behest, to William Fry Solicitors, on behalf of Cllr Colm McGrath, albeit without any specific reference thereto appearing on the invoice.⁶³

12.05 Mr O'Callaghan agreed that in May 1992, at his behest, Mr Dunlop discharged a sum of IR£10,700 to William Fry Solicitors, associated with legal proceedings in which clients of William Fry were pursuing against Cllr McGrath. On 26 May 1992 Mr O'Callaghan wrote to Mr Dunlop thanking him for facilitating him by making this payment and requesting Mr Dunlop to include the sum in his next invoice. Mr O'Callaghan agreed that the 10 June 1992 invoice did not make any specific reference, on the face of it, to Mr Dunlop's discharge of IR£10,700 on behalf of Cllr McGrath, although it was inclusive of it. Asked why he had accepted an invoice from Frank Dunlop & Associates in the absence of a detailed breakdown, Mr O'Callaghan replied, 'Because I must have known at the time what it was for, obviously. So I must have known when that invoice was written that it did include the £10,700.'

⁶³ This payment of IR£10,700 is considered in greater detail in Part 7 of this Chapter (Cllr McGrath).

THE SECOND ON-GOING COSTS INVOICE

12.06 Frank Dunlop & Associates issued its second ongoing costs invoice to Riga on 24 July 1992 for a sum of IR£6,314.76. As with the previous ongoing costs invoice, there was no breakdown and no VAT element. The IR£6,314.76 was discharged to Frank Dunlop & Associates on 2 October 1992 by way of bank draft from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account. The draft was duly lodged to the account of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd on 8 October 1992, as part of a composite lodgement of IR£10,678.63.

12.07 Insofar as Mr Dunlop had back up documentation (as provided to the Tribunal) for this invoice, it was only in respect of a ‘Keyline Studio and Typesetting’ 30 June 1992 invoice in the sum of IR£24.20.

12.08 Asked to identify the detail of the IR£6,314.76 expenditure (other than the aforementioned ‘Keyline’ expenditure), Mr Dunlop stated as follows:

‘...that I cannot tell you other than to say that the invoice would not have been drawn down or issued except in agreement with Mr O’Callaghan.’

12.09 Save for that Keyline invoice, Mr Dunlop did not provide any back up documentation to the Tribunal for second on-going costs invoice. However, this was a timeframe in which Mr Dunlop was incurring expenditure on behalf of Mr O’Callaghan by way of subscriptions and contributions relating, inter alia, to a number of events and organisations associated with West Dublin. This expenditure was evidenced from a schedule which Mr Dunlop issued to Riga on 21 December 1992 when Frank Dunlop & Associates issued an invoice for IR£64,897.78 (see below). Mr Dunlop did not seek to recoup any of these costs/expenditure in any of the ‘ongoing costs’ invoices issued prior to 21 December 1992.

12.10 Questioned about 24 July 1992 invoice, Mr O’Callaghan stated that he believed that he and Mr Dunlop were ‘getting careless’. He told the Tribunal that he and Mr Dunlop had agreed across the table that invoices could be issued, and that such invoices were being made out quickly. In fact, the invoice dated 24 July 1992 was not discharged until 2 October 1992 over two months later.

THE THIRD, FOURTH AND FIFTH ON-GOING COSTS INVOICES

12.11 The third ‘ongoing costs’ invoice was issued by Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd on 9 September 1992.⁶⁴ The invoice was for IR£11,490 and was addressed to Riga. It had no breakdown and quoted VAT at 0%. This invoice was discharged directly by way of bank draft from the Barkhill No.2 Loan Account on 2 November 1992.⁶⁵ While receipt of this draft was not recorded in the cash receipts book of Frank Dunlop & Associates the draft was duly lodged to the Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd AIB 067 account on 10 November 1992.

12.12 The fourth 'ongoing costs' invoice was issued on 1 October 1992 to Barkhill for a sum of IR£21,063.36. The invoice referred to VAT at 0% and as with all the previous 'ongoing costs' invoices no breakdown was given. The invoice was duly discharged out of the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account on 1 December 1992 and the AIB draft was lodged into the accounts of Frank Dunlop & Associates on 1 December 1992.

12.13 On the date (1 December 1992) that this invoice was discharged from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account, Mr Dunlop's diary recorded as follows: 'Owen to bank'. Mr Dunlop agreed that he had sought to redact this entry, prior to furnishing his diary to the Tribunal. It was put to Mr Dunlop: 'Isn't it likely that the reason that you were bringing Mr O'Callaghan to the bank was because you were going to get the payment yourself on that occasion?'

12.14 Mr Dunlop (while acknowledging that he may well have driven Mr O'Callaghan to the bank) replied:

'No, I never, I have never gone into the bank with Mr O'Callaghan to collect a payment, correct me if I'm wrong Ms Dillon, but there is a history to either this particular bank draft from AIB or another because there was only a few occasions on which I got paid in this manner by bank draft from AIB. No, obviously Mr O'Callaghan was going to the bank. He more than likely was collecting the draft, I don't know, I can't recollect. But certainly I did get paid by draft on that occasion.'

12.15 On 7 December 1992 Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd issued yet another (the fifth) on-going costs invoice in the sum of IR£9,760.90 which was duly discharged by AIB draft from the Barkhill No. 2 loan account on 14 December 1992, some three days before the Quarryvale rezoning vote. The narrative on this invoice stated: 'To costs associated with Quarryvale'.

THE SIXTH ON-GOING COSTS INVOICES

12.16 On 21 December 1992 (four days following the Quarryvale rezoning vote) Frank Dunlop & Associates issued an invoice for IR£64,897.78 to Riga described as 'ongoing costs re Quarryvale'. Unlike the previous five 'ongoing costs'

⁶⁵ The draft was posted to Mr Dunlop by AIB.

invoices, Mr Dunlop on this occasion attached a document to the invoice which provided some breakdown of the invoice total. This schedule included claims for expenses and outlay which Mr Dunlop had incurred as far back as June, July and August, 1992 (outlay/expenditure which apparently was not sought to be recovered by Mr Dunlop in prior 'ongoing costs' invoices.)

12.17 Immediately after the Quarryvale vote of 17 December 1992, Mr Dunlop also furnished Riga with his sixth Shefran invoice (dated 18 December 1992) for IR£25,000 which Riga discharged on 17 February 1993. As already set out, the evidence did not indicate that Mr O'Callaghan apprised AIB of this invoice, or of its payment, although both he and Mr Dunlop claimed it was a Quarryvale expense. It was treated as such for a period in Riga's books.

12.18 Ultimately, the IR£64,897.78 invoice (and the December 1992 Shefran invoice amount), were written off in Riga's books over the course of a couple of years as part of a total of approximately IR£345,000⁶⁶ written off by the company.

12.19 By the time the IR£64,897.78 invoice issued, a total of IR£62,159.06 had already been paid out of the Barkhill No.2 Loan Account by way of discharge of 'ongoing costs' invoices.

12.20 Mr O'Callaghan was questioned about the nature of the schedule which accompanied Mr Dunlop's invoice for IR£64,897.78. This document was headed 'Invoice 778 detail' and it was broken down into three headings, namely 'contributions', 'security' and 'other miscellaneous costs'.

12.21 It recorded 'contributions', totalling IR£11,860, including a contribution of IR£1,400 to a Fine Gael fundraising Golf Classic, with the balance of the 'contributions' accounted for by monies paid in respect of donations to a number of community events, organisations and charities in West Dublin, including a donation of IR£2,460 to Neilstown Golf Club, at the behest of Cllr John O'Halloran.

12.22 The 'security' costs discharged by Mr Dunlop totalled IR£17,330.01.

12.23 Under the heading 'other miscellaneous costs' (IR£35,707.77) Mr Dunlop requested reimbursement of IR£15,636.77, described as 'other costs including expenses and Christmas gifts.' Mr O'Callaghan agreed that this figure related to Christmas hampers which had been presented by Mr Dunlop to councillors.

⁶⁶Mr Deane acknowledged that approximately 50 per cent of this written off total related to Mr Dunlop. This 50 per cent also included the IR£70,000 Riga paid Mr Dunlop on 10 November 1992.

12.24 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that with regard to Mr Dunlop having invoiced Riga for Christmas Gifts/Hampers for councillors, this was done because of the belief that Blanchardstown/Green Property Plc. were providing similar gifts to councillors at that time.

12.25 Also included in the IR£35,707.77 figure which made up the ‘other miscellaneous costs’ was a ‘miscellaneous’ figure of IR£7,300. No breakdown was provided for this figure.

12.26 Mr Dunlop’s Discovery to the Tribunal yielded a number of invoices sent to Mr Dunlop from third parties around November 1992 which related to General Election leaflet costs discharged by Mr Dunlop for Cllr Therese Ridge, Mr Liam Lawlor and Cllr Marian McGennis. Mr Dunlop does not appear to have sought reimbursement of these costs from RIGA in any specific document, however he testified that he had been reimbursed by Mr O’Callaghan.

12.27 These third party invoices were put to Mr O’Callaghan in the course of his sworn evidence as follows:

‘Q. Now, the Tribunal from Mr Dunlop’s documentation has found a number of invoices, Mr O’Callaghan, which in fairness to you I’m going to put to you. 8971, is an invoice of the 25th of November ’92 in the sum of 421 pounds which relates to leaflets for Therese Ridge/ Liam Lawlor, isn’t that right?’

A. Yes.

Q. Invoice 8970 in the sum of 2,105.40 pounds dated the 25th of November ’92 in connection with Marion McGennis, isn’t that right?’

A. Yes.

Q. 8969 is a sum of 435.60 pounds dated the 25th of November ’92 in connection with Therese Ridge.

A. Yes.

Q. And then there is 8968, a sum of 780 pounds plus VAT dated the 25th of November ’92, also attributable to Therese Ridge, isn’t that right?’

A. Yes.

Q. And one of those, Mr O’Callaghan, is disputed by Councillor Ridge as having been received by her and I’m sorry that I can’t tell you which one it is but one of them was disputed by her.

A. Yes, okay.

Q. That appears to be the only back up documentation by way of invoices received by Mr Dunlop that might be referable to the list at 8976.

A. Yes, okay’.

12.28 By 21 December 1992 therefore, Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd had billed in total IR£127,056.44 for ‘ongoing costs’. No back up documentation had been provided to Mr O’Callaghan in respect of approximately 50% of this figure.

THE SEVENTH ON-GOING COSTS INVOICE

12.29 Mr Dunlop issued a seventh ‘ongoing costs’ invoice reciting ‘To costs associated with Quarryvale’ dated 26 November 1993 for IR£7,300 (and IR£500 in handwriting). It was discharged by Riga on 19 April 1994 and was attributed in its books as an expense of Quarryvale and was duly written up to the Barkhill Loan account.⁶⁷

12.30 The document which accompanied this invoice, entitled ‘Private and Confidential Outlay on behalf of QV and OOC’. This document listed a sum of IR£7,300 (from the total of IR£7,800), as being comprised thus:

‘Xmas 93 -	£4,500
Golf and Lunch (AD and NO) -	£500
Dublin West Race Night (JB) -	£200
Balgaddy Community Ass. (JOH) -	£500
C. Kearney Benefit Fund (TR) -	£250
St. Patrick’s Day Parade Fund (P) -	£100
Old Folks/Ladies Club (TR) -	£400
Miscellaneous -	£850
	£7,300’

12.31 Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop testified that the aforesaid sums related to donations made by Mr Dunlop in respect of events/organisations/charities following requests made by a number of councillors, and to a IR£4,500 provision made by Mr Dunlop for ‘Hampers, bottles of whiskey, wine, whatever’ as gifts to councillors for Christmas, 1993.

⁶⁷ It was ultimately removed from the intercompany loan balance in Riga’s books and accounted for in Riga’s ‘Work in Progress - Stadium’ account, and was ultimately written off.

EXPLANATIONS FOR THE ON-GOING COSTS INVOICES

13.01 On Day 811, the following excerpt of a statement by Mr Philip Connolly, Mr Dunlop's office employee was put to Mr Dunlop:

'In the early period, say during 1991, detailed third party invoices were sent to Riga Ltd. Subsequently, on Frank Dunlop's direction, the invoices became somewhat less specific; the amounts involved were usually round figures and details of third party charges were not included. The narrative for a number of the invoices simply referred to 'costs associated to Quarryvale project' and 'to ongoing costs re: Quarryvale'. The narratives, amount involved and addressee of the invoice would be given to me by Frank Dunlop'

13.02 Mr Dunlop agreed with Mr Connolly's reference to the invoices becoming less specific but disagreed that the amounts involved were usually round figures. He agreed that it was he, Mr Dunlop, who had provided the narrative amounts and the addressees on the invoices to Mr Connolly. Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well certainly I would have given a description that was put on the invoices but as I recollect matters, when invoices were required to be sent out, Mr Connolly came to see me or I told Mr Connolly that an invoice was due to be sent vis-à-vis Quarryvale and I either computed the costs in relation to it in consultation with him or together with him or I gave him a figure at an appropriate time.'

13.03 Mr Dunlop said that at no stage had Mr O'Callaghan queried the ongoing costs invoices. It was Mr Dunlop's evidence that he always discussed and agreed invoices with Mr O'Callaghan prior to their issue.

13.04 On Day 810, when questioned about the absence of a breakdown on the invoices, Mr Dunlop stated:

'I may well have in conversation with Mr O'Callaghan. I may well have given him a general overview of what the reason of what the costs were but certainly we did need or attach or send or give to Mr O'Callaghan a detailed breakdown in relation to the costs'.

13.05 With regard to the ongoing costs invoices which were discharged between June and December 1992, Mr Dunlop stated that no one queried him in relation to them.

13.06 It was Mr Dunlop's position that with the exception of what had been discovered to the Tribunal he had no record of the composition of the 'ongoing costs' invoices.

13.07 Questioned on Day 892, as to why there had been, in June 1992, a change in the manner in which Mr Dunlop issued invoices to Riga/Mr O'Callaghan, (i.e. the change from detailed invoices to the concept of 'ongoing costs' invoices, without any breakdown), Mr O'Callaghan replied as follows:

'I think the reason for that was that, when this developed we would have been very busy. You have seen his diary there on a few occasions, of what was happening in June/July/August. We assumed the vote could take place in September. And during the months of June/July we would have been very, very busy. It would have been difficult to contact Councillors in the month of August. We would have given very little timing to itemising these details. He would have shown me what was available, what invoices he had or what correspondence he had and they would be added up and put in an invoice. It was a time element I think basically.'

13.08 By 1 October 1992, Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd had issued four invoices for 'ongoing costs re Quarryvale', totalling IR£52,398.16,⁶⁸ with no breakdown. In relation to these invoices, the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr O'Callaghan:

'Q. Does it follow from that, that you authorised or agreed to pay Mr Dunlop between the 28th of August and the 1st December '92, 52,398.16 pounds without sight of any backup documentation from Mr Dunlop?

'A. I would have seen sight of the backup documentation when we agreed the actual, agreed the invoice amount.'

Q. What you have would you have seen, Mr O'Callaghan?

A. I can't tell you. Similar to what would have been on the other invoices various outlays and various expenses etc. They should have been attached to the invoices by Frank Dunlop but they were not.'

Q. Yes.

A. They should have been outlined in his invoice of course.'

Q. Mr Dunlop has told the Tribunal you never sought a breakdown of these invoices that he never provided a breakdown of these invoices save in a limited number of circumstances which I am going to come to.'

A. He produced them to me. They were always there. They were always available.'

Q. And indeed, Mr Dunlop hasn't produced any back up documentation in relation to these invoices and you aware of that?

A. No, I am not.'

⁶⁸ Incorrectly stated in the transcript of evidence as totalling circa IR£53,398.00.

13.09 Mr O’Callaghan did not direct his book-keeper, Mr Lucey, to seek a breakdown of the ‘ongoing costs’ invoices. Mr O’Callaghan accepted that the ‘ongoing costs’ invoices was a method of invoicing employed by Mr Dunlop in the lead up to the Quarryvale rezoning vote of 17 December 1992 and he accepted that the ‘ongoing costs’ invoices issued by Mr Dunlop between June and December 1992 were similar to the 1991/1992 Shefran invoices, in that neither provided a detailed breakdown.

13.10 Like Mr Dunlop, Mr O’Callaghan confirmed that he had not maintained any note or record of the nature of the expenditure, but continued to maintain that their detail was explained to him by Mr Dunlop at the time the invoices were being provided to him.

13.11 Mr O’Callaghan’s position in relation to these invoices was further illustrated in the following exchange as between Tribunal Counsel and Mr O’Callaghan on Day 901:

‘Q. And there are a series of these invoices culminating in December of 1992, isn’t that right?’

A. Yes

Q. And throughout that period when Mr Dunlop was putting in invoices that are described as to ongoing costs re Quarryvale, did you ever seek from Mr Dunlop a breakdown in relation of those invoices?’

A. Not for those particular ones, but the initial invoices had a detailed breakdown and some of the latter invoices had a detailed breakdown as well. All invoices were agreed across the table between Frank Dunlop and myself, on some occasions he issued invoices like that, having agreed it with me across the table. He should have detailed them more, but I think time was probably the reason, but they were all agreed in advance, some of them were not detailed as you have seen.

Q. Yes. Would you agree with me that the majority of the invoices generated by Mr Dunlop under the auspices of Frank Dunlop & Associates from June 1992 to December 1992 are described as ‘To ongoing costs re Quarryvale’?’

A. That’s right, from June on, that’s correct.

Q. To December?’

A. Yes

Q. So this is the mechanism employed by Mr Dunlop in the lead-in to the confirming vote in December 1992?’

A. Yes.

Q. And if I understand you correctly, you don't object to Mr Dunlop furnishing the invoices in this manner?

A. No because agreed them in advance sorry I would have preferred he would have itemised them of course, but I think it was probably a time issue with him, at the time he probably didn't give enough time. But we would have agreed all the figures, I would have preferred to see them itemised when the invoices come out but they didn't come that way.

Q. Certainly invoices up to this point in time had a been itemised insofar as they emanated from Frank Dunlop & Associates?

A. That's correct.

Q. The ones that have emanated from Shefran had not had any breakdown in it?

A. That's right.

Q. Although you have told the Tribunal in some of those invoices they did contain an element of expenses, isn't that right?

A. Yes.

Q. But they were not detailed or broken down on the Shefran invoices, isn't that the position?

A. That's correct, yes.'

13.12 When put to Mr O'Callaghan that it was Mr Dunlop's evidence that, save in limited circumstances, Mr O'Callaghan had never sought a breakdown of these invoices and Mr Dunlop never provided a breakdown nor had Mr Dunlop provided one, Mr O'Callaghan again stated: 'He produced them to me. They were always there. They were always available.'

13.13 Mr Deane stated that he had no particular awareness of such invoices but believed that Mr O'Callaghan would have known what 'ongoing costs' constituted.

13.14 Mr Deane agreed that the whole issue of fees was a very topical issue in discussions he and Mr O'Callaghan had with AIB in the months of September/October 1992. They had pressed for funds from the Barkhill No.2 loan account in order to pay invoices but Mr Deane's evidence was that AIB were resistant to this, as was indicated by the AIB memorandum of 22 October 1992. Mr Deane stated that AIB were requesting that Riga dip into its resources so that AIB, Mr Deane believed, could avoid those costs. He said that Riga could not ignore or terminate Mr Dunlop's request for the payment of invoices as this would be 'imprudent', given that Mr Dunlop was the person doing the lobbying. Mr Deane believed that a lot of the Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices concerned outlay in the form of commitments given to various groups in the community and to local people whom Mr Deane and Mr O'Callaghan felt should be financially supported.

13.15 Mr Deane was asked to explain why Mr Dunlop had not been requested to provide a breakdown of his 'ongoing costs' invoices, and why, for example, no breakdown had been given for an invoice dated 1 October 1992 in the sum of IR£21,063.36 (discharged on 1 December 1992). Mr Deane's response was that as far as he was concerned he was not aware of these invoices because he was not in daily contact with the accounts department of Riga.

THE 25 AUGUST 1993 INVOICE

14.01 On 25 August 1993 Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd furnished Riga with an invoice, inclusive of VAT, for IR£11,265.60. This invoice was stated to be for 'to professional services vis-à-vis media/communications in connection with planning application for Quarryvale project.' It was paid by Riga on 23 August 1993.⁶⁹

14.02 Mr O'Callaghan was asked by the Tribunal to provide a break-down of this figure. He stated:

'Yes. Well basically because we were making the planning application before the plan was ratified, this was August, '93, we decided that we would go and contact, the councillors and explain to them what we were doing, that we were making the planning application before, well before we could officially make it, because we couldn't make it until after the plan was ratified obviously, because of the pressure to get the thing going and to try and get planning permission we were putting it in as you know, as I have said we were putting it in a bit earlier than we were entitled to, but I got permission from the County Council to do that. What that was about, is that we decided [to] tell as many councillors as we could what we were doing so the Blanchardstown people could not start an argument about it when they saw the planning application.'

14.03 The documentary trail pertaining to this August 1993 invoice suggested that Riga had discharged a sum of IR£9,310.42 to Mr Dunlop prior to receiving an invoice. Mr O'Callaghan agreed that, essentially, Mr Dunlop was being paid this money for informing councillors that Barkhill intended to lodge a planning permission application relating to Quarryvale, prior to the final confirmation vote for the Quarryvale rezoning.

14.04 Yet by this time there was already in place a tacit agreement by the Manager of the County Council that a planning application for Quarryvale could be submitted, in advance of any final vote regarding Quarryvale zoning which was expected to take place in late 1993.

AIB AND THE FRANK DUNLOP & ASSOCIATES INVOICES

15.01 The three itemised invoices produced by Frank Dunlop & Associates in late 1991 were, inter alia, the subject of a letter written by Mr O’Callaghan to Mr Kay on 3 December 1991. In that letter, Mr O’Callaghan sought payment/reimbursement from the Riga Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account for these invoices as well as for other payments Riga had made on behalf of Barkhill, including: a IR£100,000 payment to Mr Gilmartin; a payment made to Mr Ambrose Kelly in the amount of IR£26,195; and two IR£10,000 ‘expenses’⁷⁰ payments made in October and November 1991 respectively.

15.02 The two payments of IR£8,484.29 and IR£8,228.42 together with Mr Kelly’s invoice of IR£26,195 and the two ‘expenses’ payments of IR£10,000, less IR£6,309, comprised the repayment of IR£56,598.71 to Riga which was made from the No. 2 Loan Account of Barkhill on 24 January 1992. The authorisation for this drawdown was signed by Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Pitcher of AIB.

15.03 With regard to the sanction given by AIB for such reimbursement, Mr Kay told the Tribunal that he could not be precise as to what information he had as of January 1992 but stated that it may well be the case that AIB had been shown, inter alia, the Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices. The Tribunal was satisfied that by 24 January 1992 AIB had such invoices.

15.04 By March 1992 Mr Kay was aware of the two methods of receiving payment being utilised by Mr Dunlop. He also agreed that as of January 1992 (from the contents of the ‘West Park expenses’ document) he knew that Mr Dunlop, via Shefran, had already received payments totalling IR£80,000. Mr Kay stated that he did not ask himself why Mr Dunlop was invoicing in two formats and he stated:

⁷⁰ For a consideration of the ‘expenses’ payments - see Parts 4, 7 and 9 of this Chapter.

'I assume that he, that he collected his fees and in some different manner to how he collected his outlay. But I didn't, I didn't really dwell on it to be honest. I just. I was told it was Shefran was Dunlop. I had no reason to think otherwise. And I didn't, as I said, I didn't spend much time thinking about it.'

15.05 Mr Kay acknowledged that he probably did not know a lot of creditors who operated separate companies to bill for outlay and for professional fees. He agreed that it probably would be 'unusual'. He stated that he took 'no steps' to ascertain the reason why this was being done by Mr Dunlop.

15.06 Mr Kay was questioned about the 'ongoing costs' invoices which issued from Mr Dunlop in June and July 1992. He expressed surprise that neither the invoice of 10 June 1992 nor the next ongoing costs invoice of 24 July 1992 included any breakdown. On Day 844, the following question was put to Mr Kay:

'It would appear, Mr Kay, and this was put and you will have seen that in your analysis of Mr Dunlop's transcripts. That when this issue arose with Mr Dunlop, Mr Dunlop was questioned as to why starting in mid-June, 1992 a series of invoices were put forward to Riga which contained only the words to 'ongoing costs re Quarryvale' culminating in late December, 1992 in an invoice for 63,000 (sic) pounds.

And Mr Dunlop – information to the Tribunal was that he had agreed the amount of these invoices with Mr O'Callaghan before he issued the invoices. And that they related to the costs and expenses that he had incurred as he was going along but that no breakdown was provided save for the invoice in late December, 1992. And I hope that I am not being unfair to Mr Dunlop in any way in that summary of his evidence. But it would appear to have commenced in early or mid-1992 and the invoices were put forward under the heading 'Ongoing Costs re Quarryvale'

15.07 Mr Kay responded as follows:

'I must admit I never noticed it at that time as I think when the original invoices came to the bank from Mr Dunlop, I can remember the first one. We requested a detailed breakdown of what it was all about. Subsequently, we probably didn't follow that up but I'm, I am surprised that they are just one liners.'

15.08 It was Mr Kay's testimony that he presumed that AIB had taken it for granted that Mr O'Callaghan knew what the invoices were for. He acknowledged that AIB had sight of the 'ongoing costs' invoices issued from mid to late 1992.

15.09 In the period after Mr Dunlop started issuing his ‘on-going costs’ invoices, Mr O Callaghan was requesting AIB’s permission to draw down funds from the Barkhill No 2 Loan Account in connection with the Quarryvale project.

DRAWDOWN OF IR£100,000

15.10 Mr O’Callaghan met with Mr O’Farrell on 16 September 1992. At this meeting, Mr O’Callaghan sought sanction from AIB for a number of payments including invoices from Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd for IR£6,314, IR£13,530 and IR£10,253. He also sought sanction for a fee of IR£10,000 due in relation to planning permission for the stadium project, and an invoice from Ambrose Kelly and Co, Architects for IR£19,064. Mr O’Farrell, in his memorandum relating to that meeting, noted Mr O’Callaghan as informing him, in relation to the Neilstown stadium project, that he was ‘strongly of the view that if they don’t have an alternative use set up for the Neilstown site, they will not get the required support at the zoning meeting.’

15.11 Mr O’Farrell noted a further sum of IR£30,000 as being due to Mr Kelly, IR£10,000 for Quarryvale ‘to bring to zoning’, and a further IR£50,000 ‘to bring to planning.’

15.12 In a position paper compiled by Mr O’Farrell on 22 September 1992 for discussion internally within AIB (and which followed upon the meeting between Mr O’Farrell and Mr O’Callaghan on 16 September 1992) Mr O’Farrell noted under the heading ‘Background Factors’ inter alia, as follows: ‘Fees projected in May ’91 appear very tight and would not have assumed the difficult and extensive lobbying required.’

15.13 The position paper also noted, ‘The vote re the zoning is due by end of October, but could be into November. At this stage, it looks positive although the campaign against has probably not yet started in earnest. Accordingly it would still have to be regarded as uncertain.’

15.14 Thus, it appeared that while Mr O’Farrell was aware by September 1992 (probably having been briefed by Mr O’Callaghan), that the forthcoming rezoning vote for Quarryvale ‘looks positive’ it was nonetheless appreciated by him in September 1992 that ‘the campaign against (Quarryvale) has probably not yet started in earnest’. This was a likely reference to the understanding that there was continued significant opposition to the rezoning of the lands as a Town Centre.

15.15 In his 22 September 1992 position paper, Mr O’Farrell listed therein fees, which required to be paid, ‘now/before zoning’, as follows:

‘Deloitte & Touche	8
F. Dunlop	30
A. Byrne	4
A. Kelly (re Stadium)	19
Planning Applic. (re Stadium)	10
Mis.	29

	100’

15.16 Under the heading ‘recommendation’, Mr O’Farrell, inter alia, set out the following:

Fees c. IR£100k, identified above require settlement. We have been stalling to date and need to recognise that genuine fees have been incurred by Owen O’Callaghan. Refusal to fund same at this particular time, with the decision on zoning so close, could be high risk. The fees relating to the Stadium are a new dimension, about which we were never formally consulted. Nevertheless the strategy in relation to same, in the context of the overall zoning issue, does appear to be sound.

Accordingly it is recommended that we will allow further drawdowns on the Barkhill loans up to IR£100k for this purpose – we will keep drawdowns to the minimum possible and will also seek Riga’s input towards same.

15.17 Mr O’ Callaghan’s request (and Mr O’Farrell’s position paper), was the subject of discussion between Mr O’Farrell and AIB officials, Mr Dave McGrath and Mr Donal Chambers on 25 September 1992. Mr McGrath, in evidence, recalled the decision made by AIB in September 1992 to allow a further IR£100,000 drawdown from the Barkhill No.2 Loan Account and he acknowledged that at the time, as per Mr O’Farrell’s document, the thinking within AIB was that a refusal to allow this drawdown so close to the rezoning vote could be ‘high risk.’

15.18 When questioned, Mr McGrath saw no connection between the fees being sought and the upcoming rezoning vote on the Quarryvale lands. However, he knew as of September 1992 how the IR£100,000 drawdown was to be utilised, namely to discharge three Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices (totalling approximately IR£30,000) and a number of other invoices, including those from Ms Auveen Byrne and Mr Ambrose Kelly and knew that provision was being sought for a planning permission application fee of IR£10,000 and for a miscellaneous sum of IR£29,000.

15.19 Mr McGrath appreciated that Mr Dunlop was working closely with Mr O’Callaghan at this time vis-à-vis lobbying councillors. In response to a question from the Chairman of the Tribunal, he stated that there might have been a concern at the time if Mr Dunlop’s ‘legitimate’ lobbying of councillors was to slow down because of fees due to him being unpaid.

15.20 Mr O’Farrell’s recommendation was duly agreed to by Mr McGrath and Mr Chambers of AIB on 25 September 1992. It was on foot of this recommendation that Barkhill paid or reimbursed Riga in respect of three Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices, two of which were the ‘ongoing costs’ invoices of 10 June 1992 and 24 July 1992.⁷¹

15.21 Under cover of a letter of 28 September 1992, Mr O’Callaghan furnished Mr O’Farrell with copies of three Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices (two of which were relating to ‘ongoing costs’). Included in this letter also were invoices from Ms Auveen Byrne (a Town Planner) in the sum of IR£4,235 and Mr Ambrose Kelly in the sum of IR£19,064.76. The invoices from Ms Byrne and Mr Kelly described the nature of the services being billed for. All five invoices were duly paid out of the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account on 2 October 1992.

15.22 Mr O’Farrell agreed that the AIB sanction, given in late September 1992, for a IR£100,000 drawdown from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account encompassed, inter alia, these three Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices.

DRAW DOWN OF IR£40,000

15.23 Mr O’Callaghan met with Mr O’Farrell and Mr McGrath on 22 October, 1992, and Mr O’Farrell’s memorandum of that meeting referred to Mr O’Callaghan having:

‘brought us up to date in relation to the lobbying situation – they are still confident. The vote is definitely set for two of the days 3rd/4th/5th December. This will ensure that it is heard on two dates which are back to back.’

15.24 At that meeting Mr O’Callaghan provided yet another invoice from Mr Dunlop. This invoice was not identified in Mr O’Farrell’s memorandum but Mr O’Callaghan believed that the invoice produced at the meeting was probably the third Frank Dunlop & Associates ‘ongoing costs’ invoice dated 9 September 1992 and which claimed a sum of IR£11,490. Mr O’Farrell’s memorandum, also documented Mr O’Callaghan as having: ‘...indicated that there will be further invoices which he said would total £40,000 including the one provided today. This would bring the matter up to zoning.'

15.25 The memorandum recorded Mr O'Farrell's surprise at the IR£40,000 figure then being suggested by Mr O'Callaghan. He recorded as follows:

I indicated that I was clearly under the impression that only IR£10,000 would be required, in addition to what had already been paid. This is the basis I have brought forward the matter for consideration when the last invoices had been provided. He (Mr O'Callaghan) indicated that he had stated that the time further fees of IR£40,000 would be required. He indicated that a further invoice of £15,000 would require settlement shortly.

15.26 Mr O'Callaghan's request for funds met with some opposition from AIB. A memorandum prepared by Mr O'Farrell stated the following:

He indicated that he, and ourselves, have little choice but to continue on the existing route and that will require further cash to pay further fees. There are a lot of other fees outstanding which, following zoning, will also become a major issue. He indicated that he is not giving these any thought at this stage – his main priority is to get zoning. We left them clearly in the knowledge that paying further fees would not be on by the bank – however we agreed to revert to him in relation to the fees issue and specifically in relation to the invoice provided to us dated 9th September, 1992.

15.27 Asked on Day 902, to explain what was meant by the 'existing route', Mr O'Callaghan stated:

'I presume the way we were going, that what we had to keep paying fees for the design of the Stadium, keep the Stadium project going. We had to keep our lobbying going, we had to keep the full emphasis on lobbying which we were doing at that particular time, which as I said to you it was extremely difficult then because of the Blanchardstown involvement. That's the position we were in.'

15.28 Mr O'Callaghan's priority as of October 1992 was to have funds for his lobbying activity. He stated to the Tribunal:

'It was vital to keep the lobbying campaign going because at the time it was extremely intense because of the opposition from Blanchardstown.'

15.29 The funds of IR£40,000, which Mr O'Callaghan apprised AIB on 22 October 1992 were required for lobbying, included Mr Dunlop's 9 September 1992 invoice. As with the previous two 'ongoing costs' invoices, it contained no breakdown. Yet, Mr Ambrose Kelly's invoice for IR£19,064.76, which had also been submitted by Mr O'Callaghan to Mr O'Farrell in September 1992, had thereon a breakdown of the sum sought.

15.30 Mr McGrath acknowledged that as of 22 October 1992 when he met with Mr O'Callaghan together with Mr O'Farrell, Mr O'Callaghan was indicating his confidence vis-à-vis a successful zoning vote for Quarryvale, but was requesting that further funds be made available from the Barkhill account.

15.31 Mr McGrath was questioned as to his understanding of what Mr O'Callaghan intended to convey, when on 22 October 1992 Mr O'Callaghan was noted as stating that:

'...he and ourselves had little choice but to continue on the existing route and this will require further cash to pay further fees.'

15.32 Mr McGrath's belief was that Mr O'Callaghan was advising AIB that it would cost more money to complete the 'development'. It was put to Mr McGrath that Mr O'Callaghan's reference to the 'existing route', in the context of the meeting, was a reference to the lobbying of Councillors. Mr McGrath however told the Tribunal that he could not draw that inference. However, as set out above, Mr O'Callaghan himself accepted that the 'existing route' related to lobbying.

15.33 While acknowledging that it was possible that the primary purpose of the meeting concerned the costs connected with zoning/lobbying in the lead up to the December 1992 vote, Mr McGrath, however, professed no recollection of what transpired at the meeting. He had no recollection of seeing the Frank Dunlop & Associates invoice, dated 9 September 1992, re 'ongoing costs' (although he acknowledged it was produced at the meeting), and claimed to have little knowledge of the details relating to Quarryvale/Barkhill which, he maintained, had been dealt with by Mr Kay and later by Mr O'Farrell.

15.34 By early November 1992, AIB had sanctioned an additional IR£30,000 drawdown from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account. The Tribunal was satisfied that this sanction was, in effect, the balance of the IR£40,000 sum Mr O'Callaghan had requested at the meeting on 22 October 1992 (AIB also authorised payment of the invoice for IR£11,490).

15.35 Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Deane met with Mr O'Farrell and Ms Basquille on 5 November 1992.⁷² Ms Basquille noted Mr O'Callaghan, on that date, as stating that ‘the Council vote on zoning should take place within the first ten days of December and substantial additional costs are likely to arise before then.’

15.36 It was evident from Ms Basquille’s memorandum that AIB’s reluctance to advance further funding was communicated to Mr O’Callaghan. Ms Basquille noted the following:

It was indicated that AIB could have difficulty advancing more funds as we were already drawn in excess of agreed limits. Owen then asked if we were prepared for the consequences of the vote not going through due to stopping the campaign now.

15.37 Ms Basquille further noted that AIB agreed to consider the implications of what Mr O’Callaghan had said and to revert to him within a day or two. It was also noted that Mr O’Callaghan had stated that if AIB could provide funds, O’Callaghan Properties would be prepared to cover some of the outlay from its own resources.⁷³

15.38 Following the meeting with Mr O’Callaghan on 5 November 1992, Mr O’Farrell telephoned him on 8/9 November 1992 in the course of which he was advised that a drawdown of IR£30,000 from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account would be permitted.⁷⁴

15.39 On 20 November 1992, Mr O’Farrell recorded Mr O’Callaghan as having advised, during the course of a telephone conversation, as follows:

He has not been in Dublin since the election⁷⁵ was called – today is his first day back on the lobbying route. I confirmed that the £30,000 drawdown that I indicated would be available from the Barkhill account was still available towards fees. He will send in an invoice next week. He confirmed that they had, at least, matched this amount themselves towards fees. He is still optimistic regarding the vote – however nothing is certain. The date for the vote will not be set until the 26th November when the party Whips meet. There is no certainty it will be on in the first week in December.

15.40 On 23 November 1992, some three days following this telephone conversation, Mr O’Callaghan wrote to Mr O’Farrell seeking payment for the fourth ‘ongoing costs’ invoice, in the sum of IR£21,063.36. Mr O’Callaghan’s letter stated, inter alia:

⁷³ Riga in fact did contribute outlay from its own resources on 10 November 1992 when IR£70,000 was transferred to Mr Dunlop’s AIB 042 Rathfarnham account- See Part 6 of this Chapter.

⁷⁵ A reference to the November 1992 General Election called on 5 November 1992.

I enclose an invoice on behalf of Frank Dunlop. I am anxious to get our own 'Election' going again next Friday/Monday. Hopefully the Councillors will be settled down by then.

As I mentioned to you, we have provided as much support as we could afford over the past few weeks. I will inform you of this when we meet.

I would like to collect a cheque for this invoice from you on Monday/Friday next. I will ring you to arrange a suitable time.

15.41 This letter was written to Mr O'Farrell after Riga's inter-bank transfer of IR£70,000 from an account in Bank of Ireland to Mr Dunlop's AIB 042 Rathfarnham account on 10 November 1992, a fact which would not of itself have been known to Mr O'Farrell or others within AIB dealing with Barkhill affairs.

15.42 On 1 December 1992 Mr O'Farrell met Mr O'Callaghan at Bankcentre in Ballsbridge where, inter alia, they discussed the forthcoming Quarryvale vote. The following was noted; - 'he [Mr O'Callaghan] is confident a decision will be made one way or the other on that date. It is very tight.....His lobbying continues and he indicated that he had injected IR£85,000 into the situation from O'Callaghan Properties'. The 'date' referred to in this extract was the expected date of the meeting in Dublin County Council for the crucial second vote in connection with Quarryvale.

15.43 Notwithstanding the clear inference in Mr O'Callaghan's 23 November 1992 letter that financial support had been given to politicians, there was no suggestion that in November 1992 AIB personnel took issue with Mr O'Callaghan's modus operandi. Nor did Mr O'Farrell's 1 December 1992 file note record any concern on the part of the bank that Mr O'Callaghan had 'injected' some IR£85,000 'into the situation', a note which on the face of it appeared to suggest that Mr O'Farrell had been made aware that a sum of IR£85,000 had been expended in relation to the lobbying of councillors.

15.44 Mr O'Farrell confirmed to the Tribunal that he understood that the reference to IR£85,000 having been 'injected' into the 'situation' was a reference to the cost of lobbying activities associated with the rezoning of Quarryvale. Mr O'Farrell stated, however, that he had no recollection of asking Mr O'Callaghan for details as to the composition of this IR£85,000 expenditure. Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that the IR£85,000 included IR£70,000 fast-tracked by Riga to Mr Dunlop's AIB 042 Rathfarnham account on 10 November 1992, (from which Mr Dunlop immediately withdrew IR£55,000 in cash), IR£10,000 paid to Mr Batt O'Keeffe TD, and IR£5,000 paid to Cllr G. V. Wright.

15.45 Both the 23 November 1992 letter and the bank's memorandum of 1 December 1992 appeared to indicate a degree of knowledge on AIB's part that Mr O'Callaghan had at that time expended considerable sums on payments to councillors, in the course of the 1992 General Election.

15.46 Mr Dunlop's fourth 'ongoing costs' invoice was paid from the Barkhill no 2 loan account, by draft, on 1 December 1992, and was in all probability collected by Mr O'Callaghan on that date during the course of his meeting with Mr O'Farrell.

RELEASE OF IR£64,897.78

15.47 At meetings with AIB on 20 January 1993 and 16 June 1993 Mr O'Callaghan requested that AIB discharge the Frank Dunlop & Associates sixth on-going costs invoice for IR£64,897.78. AIB refused to do so, although, as testified to by Mr Deane, it represented a genuine Barkhill/Quarryvale expense.

MR GILMARTIN AND THE FRANK DUNLOP & ASSOCIATES INVOICES

16.01 Documentation discovered by AIB suggested that on 19 December 1991 Mr Gilmartin had signed an authorisation for a drawdown on the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account. Included in this authorisation was a payment to Mr Dunlop of IR£9,036.16.⁷⁶ Mr Kay agreed that on the authorisation, as signed by Mr Gilmartin, two question marks appeared and he acknowledged that such marks could have been made by Mr Gilmartin, as he knew Mr Gilmartin disapproved of Mr Dunlop and that it was probably the case that Mr Gilmartin was asking for the reason for the payment to Mr Dunlop. Mr Kay stated that on each occasion Mr Kay mentioned Mr Dunlop to Mr Gilmartin, Mr Gilmartin raised an objection. He stated that Mr Gilmartin raised objections to virtually all payments made out of the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account, save for these payments being made in relation to land purchase.

16.02 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin was aware by at least 19 December 1991 of payments being made to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd. With regard to the authorisation signed by him on 19 December 1991, Mr Gilmartin agreed that it was possible, that it was he who had placed the question marks beside the figure of IR£9,036.16 pertaining to Mr Dunlop, and which appeared on the document which had been faxed to him for the purposes of obtaining his signature. Mr Gilmartin said that he would have queried this figure as he never wanted to have Mr Dunlop involved in his project. It was likely, he stated, that he queried it with Mr Kay and that he was told that Mr Dunlop was a PR consultant, and was absolutely necessary for the project.

⁷⁶ No sum of IR£9,036.16 was in fact paid to Frank Dunlop & Associates, that firm having been paid by Riga on 2 December 1991 and Riga having been reimbursed by Barkhill on 24 January 1992.

16.03 Mr Gilmartin sanctioned this payment to Mr Dunlop although, according to Mr Gilmartin's own testimony, by December 1991 he was privy to a conversation, overheard by him, between Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop, wherein it was stated that Mr Dunlop had given IR£40,000 to Mr Lawlor⁷⁷ in April 1991. Asked why he would in those circumstances have sanctioned payments to Frank Dunlop and Associates, particularly in view of his claimed distrust of Mr Dunlop, Mr Gilmartin's response was that he had felt that he had no option but to do so. He said that when he queried the payment to Mr Dunlop, he was merely told that Mr Dunlop was 'a P.R. man.'

16.04 Mr Gilmartin did not authorise the drawdown on the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account which ultimately resulted in the reimbursement of IR£56,598.71 to Riga on 24 January 1992, although, as set out, he had been requested to and he did authorise a payment out of the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account on 19 December 1991 (which included a payment to Frank Dunlop & Associates). Nor did it appear that Mr Gilmartin was ever requested to authorise the January 1992 reimbursement to Riga.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS ON THE ISSUE OF THE FRANK DUNLOP & ASSOCIATES INVOICES ISSUED BETWEEN AUGUST 1991 - NOVEMBER 1993

17.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that the sums claimed by Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd on foot of the invoices issued between August 1991 and November 1993 were associated with his lobbying endeavours in connection with the zoning of the Quarryvale lands.

17.02 With the exception of the first 'ongoing costs' invoice of 10 June 1992, Riga did not itself discharge any of the subsequent such invoices which issued between that date and 7 December 1992, rather Mr O'Callaghan authorised their payment and presented them for payment to AIB and they were discharged from the Barkhill No. 2 Account. Mr O'Callaghan also presented the first such invoice (Riga having discharged same) to AIB in order to seek reimbursement to Riga from Barkhill.

17.03 As between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan there was a dispute as to whether or not Mr Dunlop provided Mr O'Callaghan, at the time he produced the relevant invoices, with backup documentation indicating how the sums were calculated.

⁷⁷ See Part 9 of this Chapter.

17.04 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop did not provide such backup documentation to Mr O’Callaghan. It was likely, as suggested by Mr Dunlop, that no such backup documentation was requested by Mr O’Callaghan. It appeared to the Tribunal that, had such backup documentation been in existence at the time the invoices were discussed between himself and Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Dunlop would have retained, and, most probably, would have furnished such details to the Tribunal, as he did in relation to invoices issued in the name of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd between 6 August 1991 and 30 April 1992.

17.05 Of the five ‘ongoing costs’ invoices issued between 10 June 1992 and 7 December 1992, the only specific explanation provided by Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan, in evidence for the raising of such invoices was given in relation to the first of such invoices – namely the reimbursement of Mr Dunlop for his having assisted Cllr Colm McGrath, at Mr O’Callaghan’s request. Thus, with regard to the balance of the invoices, other than one item for IR£24.20, the Tribunal was left in the position whereby it was unable to identify, either from the testimony of any witness or from a documentary trail, what costs or expenditure had been incurred by Mr Dunlop between 24 July and 7 December 1992 to merit payments slightly less than IR£50,000.

17.06 Thus, it appears to have been the case that both Mr O’Callaghan and AIB were presented with ‘one liner’ invoices by Mr Dunlop, over a six month period.

17.07 The production of the ‘one liner’, ‘ongoing costs’ invoices coincided with an intensive lobbying campaign conducted by Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan between June and December 1992.

17.08 The Tribunal found it significant that Mr Dunlop appeared to have commenced his ‘ongoing costs’ system of invoicing when he sought reimbursement from Mr O’Callaghan in respect of the IR£10,700 payment he made to William Fry Solicitors, at Mr O’Callaghan’s request, to discharge a debt on behalf of Cllr McGrath. The first ‘ongoing costs’ invoice thus had a ‘political’ element. It was the view of the Tribunal that this fact in turn raised the question, did the subsequent ‘ongoing costs’ invoices issued between 24 July 1992 and 7 December 1992 also include a ‘political element.’

17.09 The Tribunal also noted that both the sixth and seventh ‘ongoing costs’ invoices dated 21 December 1992 and 26 November 1993 respectively contained, inter alia, a request by Mr Dunlop for reimbursement to him for gifts (Christmas Hampers) provided to councillors.

17.10 The Tribunal did not accept that the ‘ongoing costs’ invoices issued between 24 July 1992 and 7 December 1992 merely related to uncontroversial matters such as the procuring and distribution of literature to aid lobbying or financial assistance rendered to community/charity organisations and events. If that was the case, it was more likely that Mr Dunlop, as he had done prior to June 1992, and as he had done on 21 December 1992 (with regard to the invoice for IR£64,897.78) would have itemised such expenditure and, moreover, provided some backup documentation, or alternatively a written explanation of the sums claimed.

17.11 The Tribunal was satisfied that at least some of the payments made by Mr Dunlop on the part of Mr O’Callaghan to or for the benefit of councillors through the mechanism of Frank Dunlop & Associates generated invoices were motivated by an attempt to influence those councillors in the performance of their public duties and were therefore corrupt. The Tribunal is also satisfied that Mr O’Callaghan was aware that some of the payments which he made to Mr Dunlop were being used for this corrupt purpose.

17.12 Insofar as AIB were privy to the purpose for which drawdowns connected to Mr Dunlop were made on the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account between January 1992 and April 1992, it was clear that when it sanctioned such drawdowns on 24 January 1992, 12 February 1992 and 13 April 1992, the five Frank Dunlop and Associates invoices, the subject matter, inter alia, of these drawdowns were available to personnel within AIB for their perusal. From the descriptions on the five invoices, the nature of the expenditure incurred by Mr Dunlop was readily obvious. This also held true for the invoice for IR£10,253.27 of 30 April 1992 which was discharged out of the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account on 2 October 1992, by way of reimbursement to Riga.

17.13 It appeared that the mere words ‘to ongoing costs Re’, or ‘to ongoing costs associated’ with Quarryvale without further explanation, as appeared on the Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoices produced to AIB between the months of September 1992 to December 1992, did not exercise the minds of anyone within AIB, as all such invoices were duly discharged from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account, apparently without question. The Tribunal noted that this was done at a time when there was severe pressure on the Barkhill No. 2 loan facility and indeed at a time when that facility was stretched beyond the original sanction. An analysis of memoranda compiled by Mr O’Farrell during this period reflected the status of the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account at that time.

17.14 It was clear from an analysis of payments, other than land acquisition related payments, made from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account in the latter half of 1992, that Mr Dunlop was the principal beneficiary of such payments. Barkhill paid IR£72,412.33 between 2 October 1992 and 14 December 1992 on foot of Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices, all of which, save one (the 30 April 1992 invoice) were ‘ongoing costs’ invoices.

17.15 An analysis of the memoranda compiled by Mr O’Farrell in the period September to December 1992 also revealed that it was being urged upon AIB by Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane that ongoing funds were required to bring the Quarryvale lands to ‘zoning’.

17.16 Equally, it appeared to the Tribunal that AIB acceded to pressure from Mr O’Callaghan (noted in Mr O’Farrell’s memorandum of 22 October 1992) to pay further sums from the already overdrawn Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account. The 22 October 1992 memorandum noted Mr O’Callaghan as stating that fees of IR£40,000 would be required. From that document, it was obvious that the sum claimed included Mr O’Callaghan’s provision for Mr Dunlop’s third ‘ongoing costs’ invoice of 9 September 1992 for IR£11,490. Mr O’Farrell’s memorandum recorded that AIB agreed ‘to revert to him in relation to the fees issue and specifically in relation to the invoice provided to us dated 9th September, 1992.’

17.17 It was evident to the Tribunal that by November 1992 AIB had taken on board Mr O’Callaghan’s pronouncement that he and AIB should ‘continue on the existing route’ in funding Mr Dunlop’s lobbying of councillors. On 2 November 1992, as already stated, AIB sent a draft for IR£11,490 to Frank Dunlop & Associates. It was also clear to the Tribunal that the balance of the IR£40,000 sum, which Mr O’Callaghan had indicated would be required, was also provided from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account. Mr O’Farrell’s memorandum of 20 November 1992 indicated that he told Mr O’Callaghan that a further IR£30,000 drawdown on the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account had been sanctioned, and it was this IR£30,000 that duly funded Mr Dunlop’s fourth ‘ongoing costs’ invoice in the sum of IR£21,063.36 (paid to Mr O’Callaghan by way of draft on 1 December 1992) and Mr Dunlop’s fifth such invoice in the sum of IR£9,760.90 paid by AIB draft from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account on 14 December 1992.

17.18 A consideration of the operation of the Barkhill No.2 Loan Account between December 1991 and December 1992 showed that, apart from land purchase costs, a substantial portion of the professional fees from that account went to Frank Dunlop & Associates and Shefran. Between those dates Frank

Dunlop & Associates alone received payments totalling IR£104,099.37⁷⁸, all of which was funded by the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account - either by the reimbursement of Riga for Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices it had discharged or by paying Frank Dunlop & Associates directly from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account.

THE RETAINER PAYMENTS

18.01 Between 30 September 1993 and 2 April 2001 Mr Dunlop (through Frank Dunlop & Associates) issued retainer fee invoices to either Riga or Barkhill to the value of IR£371,470 (inclusive of VAT). These invoices were duly paid by Riga or Barkhill.

18.02 The retainer invoices, may be broken down as follows:

- | | | |
|------|---|------------|
| i. | Four invoices to Riga between 30 September 1993 and 5 January 1994 in the amount of IR£3,025 each (inclusive of VAT). | IR£12,100 |
| ii. | Five invoices to Riga between 2 January 1995 and 28 April 1995, in the amount of IR£1,210 each (inclusive of VAT). | IR£6,050 |
| iii. | Eleven invoices to Riga between 31 May 1995 and 29 March 1996, in the amount of IR£2,420 each (inclusive of VAT). | IR£26,620 |
| iv. | Five invoices to Barkhill between 30 April 1996 and 30 September 1996, in the amount of IR£2,420 each (inclusive of VAT). | IR£12,100 |
| v. | Forty three invoices to Barkhill between 31 October 1996 and 28 April 2000, in the sum of IR£6,050 each (inclusive of VAT). | IR£260,150 |
| vi. | Nine invoices to Riga between 31 July 2000 and 2 April 2001 in the sum of IR£6,050 each (inclusive of VAT). | IR£54,450 |

⁷⁸This figure excludes the total IR£70,000 which Shefran was paid in April 1992 (IR£40,000) and June 1992 (IR£30,000). Moreover, as set out elsewhere, Shefran was paid IR£80,000 over a three week period in May/June 1991, although this sum was not recouped from the Barkhill No. 2 Loan Account nor any Barkhill loan account from the period 1991 to 1993. It was recouped in 1996.

18.03 According to Mr Dunlop, prior to September 1993, he operated a dual payment system whereby his professional fees were paid through Shefran and his expenses were paid via Frank Dunlop & Associates. However, in August 1993, he entered into a more formal arrangement with Mr O Callaghan whereby he was to be paid on a retainer basis. Its purpose was to provide for Mr Dunlop's services to be available to Mr O'Callaghan on an ongoing basis with regard to Quarryvale, including the use of Mr Dunlop's office facilities.

18.04 Mr Dunlop's diary for 25 August 1993 indicated that there was on that date an agreement in place between himself and Mr O'Callaghan which provided for the payment of IR£2,500 per month from then until the end of December, a total of IR£10,000. In contrast, Mr O'Callaghan, in the course of his evidence, sought to maintain that as and from September 1993 it had been agreed with Mr Dunlop that Frank Dunlop & Associates was to be the recipient of monthly retainer fees of IR£5,000 per month. This is discussed further below.

18.05 The Tribunal was satisfied that the cessation of the operation of this practice by Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan was related to the progress of the Quarryvale rezoning in 1993. Mr Dunlop himself acknowledged that by September 1993 he and Mr O'Callaghan anticipated that the Quarryvale C and E zoning, achieved in December 1992, would be confirmed as part of the 1993 Development Plan, an objective which was achieved on 19 October 1993.

18.06 As is clear from the above, Mr Dunlop was paid retainer fees between 1993 and 2001 for every year with the exception of 1994.⁷⁹ The exact amount of the fees paid was varied on occasion by agreement over the course of that period.

18.07 All retainer fees received by Mr Dunlop, whether from Riga or Barkhill, were lodged into the accounts of Frank Dunlop & Associates. Mr Dunlop's treatment of his retainer fees was, the Tribunal noted, in marked contrast to the manner in which he treated the eight round figure payments made to him by Mr O'Callaghan in the years 1991 to 1993 amounting to IR£270,000.

THE 1993 RETAINER PAYMENTS

18.08 On 17 December 1993 Riga paid IR£9,075 to Frank Dunlop & Associates on foot of three invoices for IR£3,025 each (inclusive of VAT) stated to be for the provision of 'public relation consultancy services'. These invoices issued to Riga respectively on 30 September, 29 October and 30 November 1993.

⁷⁹ A retainer payable for September 1993 was the subject of an invoice dated 5 January 1994 (in the sum of IR£3,025), paid by Riga and lodged into an account of a Frank Dunlop & Associates on 14 February 1994.

THE 1995 RETAINER PAYMENTS

18.09 Mr Dunlop's diary for 9 January 1995 recorded a retainer fee arrangement being agreed with Mr O'Callaghan as follows:

Agreed 1k per month for Jan/Feb/March/Apr. New arrangement as from 1st May.

18.10 Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd issued invoices for IR£1,210 each (inclusive of VAT) between January and April 1995 totalling IR£6,050. These invoices were paid by Riga to Frank Dunlop & Associates.

18.11 On 1 May 1995, Mr Dunlop's diary noted the following:

Review arrangement with OOC. Refer back to meet on the 9/1/95 (see diary) → Spoke to OO'C re retainer. Agreed to review again on 1st June. Retainer will be increased & will not be less than £2000.00 from that date.

18.12 His diary on 1 June 1995 recorded a reference to a discussion which took place between the two men on that topic as follows: 'OO'C Retainer to be increased from today. Not less than 2k.'

18.13 Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd commenced issuing retainer invoices in the sum of IR£2,420 (inclusive of VAT) from 31 May 1995, a monthly sum discharged by Riga until mid-1996. By year end 1995, a total of IR£13,310 had been received by way of retainer fees, paid by Riga, and duly reimbursed by Barkhill in May 1996.

THE 1996 RETAINER PAYMENTS

18.14 For the year 1996, Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd were paid a total of IR£31,460 retainer fees by Riga and Barkhill, with Barkhill duly reimbursing Riga for its outlay in this regard.

18.15 On 31 October 1996 Frank Dunlop & Associates began to issue invoices in the sum of IR£6,050 (inclusive of VAT) and continued to issue until they ceased in April 2001.

18.16 The Tribunal was satisfied that the increase in the retainer amount to IR£5,000 per month was agreed between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan on 13/14 June 1996, as noted in Mr Dunlop's diary, inter alia, as follows: 'Met OOC at FDA & he undertook to arrange new retainer for FDA.'⁸⁰

⁸⁰For a further consideration of this diary entry see below.

18.17 By and large, the retainer fee arrangements, as noted by Mr Dunlop in his diaries on various dates in 1995 and 1996, coincided with invoices actually issued by Frank Dunlop & Associates and payments made by Riga /Barkhill.

THE 1997 – 2000 RETAINER PAYMENTS

18.18 In 1997 Barkhill paid a total of IR£78,650 in discharge of thirteen retainer invoices for IR£6,050 issued by Frank Dunlop & Associates, and in 1998 it made a further twelve such payments, totalling IR£72,600. Payments by Barkhill to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd in 1999 by way of retainer fees totalled IR£72,600 on foot of 12 invoices.

18.19 In 2000, such payments amounted to IR£72,600, on foot of twelve invoices, the first six invoices being discharged by Barkhill, with the remainder discharged by Riga.

18.20 Retainer fee invoices directed to Barkhill ceased at the end of April 2000, a timeframe which coincided with the revelations and admissions made by Mr Dunlop at his public appearances before the Tribunal in that same month. Thereafter, the retainer invoices were addressed to Riga until the final invoice on 2 April 2001.

THE RETAINER AGREEMENT

18.21 As set out above, in contrast to, and notwithstanding the references in Mr Dunlop's diaries to the agreements made with Mr O'Callaghan regarding retainer fees over the years 1993-1996, Mr O'Callaghan, in the course of his evidence, sought to maintain that as and from September 1993 it had been agreed with Mr Dunlop that Frank Dunlop & Associates was to be the recipient of monthly retainer fees of IR£5,000 per month. Mr O'Callaghan claimed that, on occasions, Riga/Barkhill were unable to make such payments and that a substantial arrears shortfall in retainer fees was duly settled as between Riga and Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd by the payment by Riga of IR£100,000 plus VAT on 4 June 1998. The Tribunal was not satisfied to accept Mr O'Callaghan's evidence in this regard.⁸¹

18.22 In the course of his evidence, Mr Dunlop did not suggest that the retainer fees, as had been agreed and noted by him in his diaries over the period of 1993 to 1996, were unpaid or that a lesser sum than that agreed had been paid to him by Riga or that there were periods in the years 1993 – 2001 in respect of which there were unpaid retainer fees.

⁸¹ The payment of the IR£100,000 in June of 1998 and the purpose of such payment is considered elsewhere.

18.23 The Tribunal was satisfied, notwithstanding that Frank Dunlop & Associates was paid different retainer fees at different times and that there were periods when no retainer fees were paid at all, that such payments as were actually made by Riga/Barkhill were the actual sums due and owing on foot of the retainer fee arrangements which were, in all probability, correctly noted by Mr Dunlop in his 1993, 1995 and 1996 diaries.

MR DUNLOP'S FINANCIAL RECOMPENSE BETWEEN 1995 TO 1998

19.01 The Tribunal believed that over the course of two and a half years from 1995 to May 1998 the provision of a substantial payment to Mr Dunlop by Mr O'Callaghan was the subject of a number of discussions and negotiations between the two men. The Tribunal was satisfied that the context in which such discussions and negotiations took place was that Mr Dunlop no longer expecting to achieve an involvement (as a 25% shareholder) in Leisure Ireland/Leisure West Ltd.⁸²

19.02 It appeared to the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop, by 1995 (and indeed probably from December 1994), had come to the realisation that his anticipated 25% ownership of the Neilstown and other lands was not going to become a reality, given the demise of the Stadium project. It was satisfied that Mr Dunlop then began to concentrate his efforts on securing financial recompense/a success fee from Mr O'Callaghan for his contribution to the successful Quarryvale rezoning, and indeed for his work on the by then defunct Stadium project. In effect, the Tribunal believed that Mr Dunlop turned his mind to obtaining a payment from Mr O'Callaghan in lieu of 'Big One.'⁸³

19.03 In this respect, Mr Dunlop appeared to have made some progress by September 1995, as he recorded in his diary for 1 September 1995 the words 'OOC to deliver'. Mr O'Callaghan agreed that this notation was a record of a financial arrangement having been agreed between them, but he could not identify the financial arrangement in question. Mr Dunlop, for his part, said that he did not know what Mr O'Callaghan was 'to deliver' on that date.

19.04 On 15 September 1995 Mr Dunlop recorded the following in his diary:

Spoke by phone to OOC. He reiterated his commitments to fulfilling his obligations absolutely, no problem.

⁸²Leisure Ireland/Leisure West Ltd was the company which had been envisaged by Messrs O'Callaghan, Dunlop, Lawlor and Kelly as being the vehicle by which they would acquire Merrygrove's Option to purchase the Neilstown and other lands from Dublin Corporation, and the entity that was to be the promoter/developer of the proposed 'All Purpose National Stadium' project. See Part 6 of this Chapter.

⁸³ For a consideration of 'Big One' see Part 6.

In relation to this entry, Mr Dunlop accepted (albeit somewhat reluctantly) that this diary note was a reference to a success fee.

19.05 The Tribunal was satisfied that this entry (as was the case with the entry recorded two weeks earlier) related to a discussion in which Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan agreed a substantial financial matter.

19.06 Prior to furnishing his unredacted diaries to the Tribunal in 2001, Mr Dunlop sought to obliterate the first mentioned diary entry ‘OOC to deliver’ in its entirety, and also attempted to obliterate the majority of the second entry of 15 September 1995, save for the words ‘Spoke by phone to OOC.’

19.07 Following the forensic analysis of Mr Dunlop’s diaries, the Tribunal was provided with an insight into the matters which Mr Dunlop had sought to conceal in his diaries. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop’s attempted obliteration of his diary entries was a deliberate act on his part to ensure that certain negotiations which took place between himself and Mr O’Callaghan (together with other information) were concealed from the Tribunal.

19.08 While the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop, by September 1995, anticipated a payment of a substantial sum from Mr O’Callaghan, no such payment, it appeared, materialised during that year, or indeed by June of 1996 having regard to what Mr Dunlop recorded in his diary for 13/14 June 1996. This entry, as previously referred to, recorded as follows:

Met OO’C at FDA.

& he undertook to (a) arrange new retainer for FDA

(b) agree to pay success to FD (all in 10 to 14 days)

19.09 While a new retainer arrangement was put in place by 31 October 1996, there was no evidence to suggest that in 1996 Mr Dunlop received a ‘success’ fee.

19.10 Similarly to the way in which Mr Dunlop sought to conceal the 15 September 1995 diary entry referred to above, prior to furnishing his 1996 diary to the Tribunal, he attempted to conceal a portion of the entry in his diary for 13/14 June 1996 relating to his discussions with Mr O’Callaghan. Unfortunately, the portion of the entry that was obliterated by Mr Dunlop defied forensic analysis. Both Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan essentially acknowledged that the obliterated entry, in all probability, related to a financial matter which had been discussed and/or agreed between them on 13/14 June 1996. Their evidence did not assist the Tribunal in determining what Mr Dunlop had concealed from the Tribunal.

THE IR£1 MILLION

20.01 By October 1996 Mr Dunlop continued to anticipate payment of substantial financial recompense from Mr O’Callaghan for his Quarryvale endeavours. On 3 October 1996 Mr Dunlop’s Bank Manager Mr Aherne noted Mr Dunlop as stating that his expected recompense for his Quarryvale work was on the following basis:

IR£1m as owing to Frank Dunlop with IR£500k relating to back-up contract support and payable as follows:

IR£200k October 1996

IR£400k October 1997 (IR£300k contract support)

IR£400k October 1998 (IR£200k contract support)

20.02 Mr Dunlop insisted that there was never any agreement to pay a sum of IR£1m in relation to Quarryvale. He told the Tribunal that the information he provided to his bank manager was, in essence, designed to impress the bank in relation to his, Mr Dunlop’s, financial outlook.

20.03 Mr Dunlop did however maintain that there had been a discussion between himself and Mr O’Callaghan ‘on a number of occasions’ in relation to the ‘possibility’ of a payment of IR£1m. Mr Dunlop was questioned as to the circumstances in which the issue of a IR£1m payment arose with Mr O’Callaghan. His recollection was that the matter arose following a discussion between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Ambrose Kelly. Mr Dunlop stated:

‘Mr O’Callaghan came to me on a specific – I can’t give you the exact date. On a specific morning and said that he had a discussion the previous evening with Ambrose Kelly and that he spoke in general terms about people being looked after for all of the work that they had done. And this included Mr Liam Lawlor.’

And:

‘...As I recollect matters, the first occasion on which this, an issue of a million pounds arose, arose out of Mr O’Callaghan coming to me or being with me and telling me that he had a conversation the previous evening with Ambrose Kelly in which matters in relation to rewarding or looking after people who had been helpful above and beyond the cause of duty as it were in relation to Quarryvale and that they should be recompensed in some way and that a figure of a million was mentioned.’

20.04 Mr Dunlop said that he understood that the discussion about IR£1m took place between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Kelly in the context of a payment of IR£250,000 to those who had been particularly helpful in relation to the Quarryvale project. Mr Dunlop identified those individuals as himself, Mr Ambrose Kelly and Mr Liam Lawlor. Mr Dunlop said he thought that it had probably been his understanding that the discussion about the payment of IR£1m was in the context of such a sum being paid to him and that he would then distribute it as appropriate.

20.05 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that on a number of occasions, following Mr Kelly’s approach to Mr O’Callaghan, on the prompting of Mr Lawlor, Mr Dunlop had himself raised the issue of a IR£1m composite payment for himself, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor with Mr O’Callaghan but, he stated, Mr O’Callaghan had been ‘negative’ to such an idea.

20.06 Mr Kelly did not dispute that he had approached Mr O’Callaghan seeking a bonus payment for the ‘lads’. He claimed that he went to Mr O’Callaghan, on the instigation of Mr Lawlor, seeking a bonus arrangement⁸⁴ for Messrs Lawlor’s and Dunlop’s work in relation to the Stadium. He told the Tribunal:

‘Mr Lawlor, I think had felt he brought a lot to the project because if I correctly could say to you from memory that original idea of this project didn’t emanate from Mr O’Callaghan or Mr Deane or Mr Lawlor. The original idea of this project emanated from Mr Lawlor. That’s from my recollection. The idea of actually using a Stadium on this land – origins of this idea, my recollection was Mr Lawlor’s idea. So he felt probably, he felt that he, for having come up with what would seem to be the idea of the century, that there was an entitlement to remuneration in relation to it. That’s, you know, if there’s files and documents to say different but that’s my reasonable recollection is that it was actually Mr Lawlor that came up with the original concept. Like who thought why would we put a Stadium in this land from day one. It certainly wasn’t me I can tell you came up with the idea. I most certainly would believe it wasn’t Frank or Mr Dunlop because he wasn’t orientated towards sports at all. A Kilkenny man that doesn’t support Kilkenny certainly isn’t involved in supporting football.

Mr O’Callaghan was more into show jumping and football was very outside his scope and sphere. I loved football but I know I didn’t come up with the idea. So I think Mr Lawlor was the conclusion or the person who came up with the idea. Any success fee that we would have been looking for would relate to, look, I came up with the idea, I brought people to the table, I put people together...'

⁸⁴Mr Kelly was uncertain whether the bonus arrangement was to be money paid to Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor, or a write off of what he claimed was their required investment funds into the Stadium project. (IR£250,000 each) – see ‘Big One’ (Part 6 of this Chapter).

20.07 Mr Kelly also stated:

'This wouldn't have been a formal discussion, I would have said the lads are looking for 250,000 for a success and you know Liam and so on. I wouldn't have sat down and made this a minuted meeting. It wouldn't have been a nice subject to be discussing either if I may say to you. It wouldn't have been a job you would like to be elected to do every day,'

20.08 Mr Kelly maintained that while he was the emissary sent to Mr O'Callaghan, he himself had not been seeking such a payment.

20.09 The Tribunal believed it likely, insofar as Mr Kelly had approached Mr O'Callaghan in this regard that he did so on behalf of himself, Mr Lawlor and Mr Dunlop.

20.10 It appeared unlikely to the Tribunal that Mr Kelly would have been chosen to approach Mr O'Callaghan seeking bonus payments for Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor, in circumstances where both (or either) were well capable of approaching Mr O'Callaghan themselves, other than in circumstances where Mr Kelly was himself to benefit.

20.11 Mr O'Callaghan denied any suggestion that Mr Dunlop had raised the issue of a IR£1m fee entitlement or that Mr Dunlop might have raised such a payment with him in the aftermath of the collapse of the 'All Purpose National Stadium' project.

20.12 On 12 April 2007, the Tribunal wrote to Mr O'Callaghan's Solicitors, Ronan Daly Jermyn, in relation to information provided to it by Mr Dunlop in private interview, namely, that Mr Dunlop had been advised by Mr O'Callaghan that Mr Kelly had approached Mr O'Callaghan seeking IR£250,000 each for himself, Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor.

20.13 In response, Mr O'Callaghan provided a written statement to the effect that insofar as IR£250,000 had been mentioned, he, Mr O'Callaghan, had indicated that such a sum would need to be invested by Mr Kelly, Mr Lawlor and Mr Dunlop if they were to receive an interest in the Stadium.⁸⁵

⁸⁵The Tribunal has found that in return for their proposed interest in the Stadium project there was no requirement on Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor to invest IR£250,000 each - see Part 6 of this Chapter.

20.14 With regard to his own quest for payment of IR£1m for the work he had carried out for Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Dunlop stated, on Day 806, that:

‘There was ongoing discussion with Mr O’Callaghan in relation to payments to me. I am specifically about me now. In relation to payments to me that I was anxious to get from Mr O’Callaghan. Yes, there were a number of discussions with Mr O’Callaghan about the million pounds that allegedly, that arose from the conversation with Mr Kelly. There was no, as I recollect it, there was no agreement with Mr O’Callaghan to pay me a million pounds’.

20.15 Mr Dunlop’s best surmise was that his anticipated success fee was to be in the region of IR£0.5m.

20.16 Notwithstanding Mr Dunlop’s denials about any agreement for or discussion about Mr Dunlop being paid IR£1m from Mr O’Callaghan, the Tribunal was satisfied that by 1996 Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan were engaged in discussions about Mr Dunlop then receiving a substantial sum of money from Mr O’Callaghan.

THE HORGANS QUAY IR£100,000

21.01 In January 1997, Riga paid Mr Dunlop a sum of IR£121,000 (inclusive of VAT). In that year in total, Frank Dunlop & Associates received IR£203,348.83, including IR£78,650 by way of the monthly retainer fees, discharged by Barkhill. Riga made the balance of the 1997 payments. A sum of IR£3,698.83 was lodged (with other funds) to the Frank Dunlop & Associates AIB 067 account on 12 August 1997 (by way of reimbursement of expenses).

21.02 The payment of IR£121,000 arose in the following circumstances. On 9 January 1997 Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoiced Riga in the sum of IR£121,000, for ‘professional services rendered’, a sum paid by Riga in or around 23 January 1997. Riga’s books accounted for the payment as ‘advertising’. On receipt, it was lodged to two separate Frank Dunlop & Associates bank accounts. The VAT element, IR£21,000, was lodged to the Frank Dunlop & Associates AIB 067 account, and the IR£100,000 was lodged to Frank Dunlop & Associates Allied Irish Finance account, to facilitate the eventual purchase of shares.

21.03 Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan maintained that the payment of IR£121,000 was in respect of public relations work carried out by Mr Dunlop for Mr O’Callaghan in relation to what was termed by both as the ‘Horgans Quay’ controversy, in which Mr O’Callaghan found himself embroiled in the Summer of 1995 in relation to a property in Cork. According to Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Dunlop was requested, in August 1995, to return from his holidays to deal with media issues relating to the matter and Mr Dunlop worked on these issues for a period of 18 months. When the controversy ended, Mr O’Callaghan maintained that Mr Dunlop nominated a fee of IR£100,000 for his work, which he agreed to pay.

21.04 At the time that this payment of IR£121,000 was made, Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd was on retainer by Barkhill at a monthly fee of IR£5,000, plus VAT.

21.05 Evidence given by Mr Dunlop suggested that he had discussed this £100,000 (plus VAT) payment with Mr Lawlor who, according to Mr Dunlop, immediately demanded half of it. This demand by Mr Lawlor was ultimately settled as between the two men in March 1997 when Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd paid Mr Lawlor £25,000.⁸⁶

21.06 Forensic analysis of an obliterated entry in Mr Dunlop’s diary for 13 November 1997 revealed the words ‘OOC D Day’. Mr Dunlop claimed that he was unable to explain the meaning of the entry. He acknowledged that the import of the words suggested an arrangement for the payment of money from Mr O’Callaghan. While he agreed that he had forcefully attempted to obliterate the entry, Mr Dunlop did not believe that the entry made by him on 13 November 1997 bore any connection to the fact that the Tribunal had been established earlier that month. For his part, Mr O’Callaghan was not in a position to explain the reference in Mr Dunlop’s diary, but speculated that it might have related to a success fee – although he said none had been agreed.

THE 1998 PAYMENTS OF IR£100,000 AND IR£300,000

22.01 In the course of 1998, Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd received a total of IR£612,143.57 from Riga/Barkhill, broken down as follows:

- IR£72,600 in total paid by Barkhill by way of discharge of monthly retainer fees of IR£5,000, plus VAT per month;
- payment by Riga of IR£121,000 (IR£100,000 plus VAT) on 4 June 1998, on foot of an invoice dated 22 May 1998;
- payment by Riga of IR£363,000 (IR£300,000 plus VAT) on 9 October 1998, on foot of an invoice dated 5 October 1998;
- payment by Riga of IR£55,543.57⁸⁷ on 19 November 1998, based on an invoice dated 13 November 1998.

⁸⁶Mr Lawlor used an invoice on a Ganley International Ltd letterhead, with a London and an Albanian address, dated 11 March 1997, to generate this payment. See Part 9 of this Chapter.

⁸⁷ See Section below on legal fees.

22.02 Mr Dunlop maintained that the sums of IR£100,000 and IR£300,000^{88/89} paid to him by Riga in June and October 1998 respectively were in discharge of a success fee due to him. He claimed that he and Mr O’Callaghan had reached agreement in principle on that fee possibly as far back as 1992 and its payment was contingent upon the retail cap which had been imposed on the Quarryvale site in December 1992 being removed.

22.03 Mr O’Callaghan concurred with the evidence given by Mr Dunlop regarding a long-standing agreement between them for payment of a success fee to Mr Dunlop. However, Mr O’Callaghan, while agreeing that the IR£300,000 payment made in October 1998 was a success fee, disputed Mr Dunlop’s contention that the IR£100,000 paid on 4 June 1998 represented such a fee. As set out above, he maintained that this sum had been paid to Frank Dunlop & Associates by way of a balancing payment due to Mr Dunlop, because of a shortfall that had arisen in relation to the monthly retainer fees paid to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd from 1993 to 1998.

22.04 Mr Dunlop did not advance any such reason for his having invoiced for the IR£100,000 plus VAT in May of 1998 (and which was paid on 4 June 1998). He claimed that this payment represented his success fee. The Tribunal rejected Mr O’Callaghan’s evidence that the IR£100,000 payment made to Frank Dunlop & Associates on 4 June 1998 was a balancing payment in respect of arrears of retainer fees.

22.05 According to both Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan, it had been agreed between them, possibly in December 1992/January 1993, that in the event that success was achieved in having the Quarryvale retail cap of 250,000 sq. ft. removed, a success fee would then be payable to Mr Dunlop. While, according to Mr Dunlop no specific amount had been agreed, he anticipated a sum in the region of IR£500,000 as a success fee.

22.06 On 24 September 1998, in the course of the making of the Development Plan for South Dublin County Council and following an attempt, by way of Motion to reinstate the retail cap on Quarryvale, the Manager recommended its removal, a recommendation duly agreed to by South Dublin County Council.

⁸⁸Respectively IR£121,000 and IR£363,000 inclusive of VAT.

⁸⁹ On Day 734 (15 June 2007), Mr Gilmartin told the Tribunal that he had been informed by an unidentified third party that ‘...£300,000 was paid to Dunlop to.....to buy his silence or for him to sing the right song to the Tribunal.’

22.07 Mr Dunlop attributed the payments of IR£100,000 and IR£300,000 which he received in 1998 to the success fee due to him following the removal of the Quarryvale retail cap. In contrast, Mr O’Callaghan only attributed the October 1998 IR£300,000 payment, as made to Mr Dunlop, to that event, a payment which, according to Mr O’Callaghan, was requested by Mr Dunlop in particular circumstances in October of 1998.

22.08 In the course of his evidence, Mr Dunlop effectively conceded that he had had no direct involvement in the campaign to remove the Quarryvale retail cap. Mr O’Callaghan agreed that Mr Dunlop had done little in relation to this matter. The Tribunal was satisfied that whatever the circumstances under which either the IR£100,000 or the IR£300,000 were paid to Mr Dunlop in 1998, such were not predicated on or prompted by the removal of the retail cap on Quarryvale.

22.09 The Tribunal sought to establish the true circumstances under which Mr Dunlop came to receive these sums of IR£100,000 and IR£300,000 in 1998.

THE JUNE 1998 PAYMENT OF IR£100,000

22.10 On 22 May 1998 Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd issued an invoice to Riga for IR£100,000 plus VAT for ‘professional services rendered’ which was discharged by Riga on 4 June 1998, a fact duly noted by Mr Dunlop in his diary on that date.

22.11 On the very day that the Frank Dunlop & Associates invoice issued, Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan met at CityWest. This meeting was noted by Mr Dunlop in his diary.⁹⁰

22.12 The Tribunal was satisfied, based on a forensic analysis of an entry in Mr Dunlop’s diary for 22 May 1998, that Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan in the course of that meeting negotiated a financial arrangement whereby Mr Dunlop was to be immediately paid IR£100,000 by Mr O’Callaghan.

22.13 Mr Dunlop was initially questioned in relation to the 22 May 1998 diary entry in the course of his evidence to the Tribunal on Day 784 (6 November 2007).

22.14 A consideration of Mr Dunlop’s 1998 diary for 22 May 1998 (prior to its forensic analysis) revealed that in addition to his having recorded the 22 May 1998 meeting with Mr O’Callaghan (noted as follows – ‘9.00 00’C @ City

⁹⁰Mr Dunlop’s diary also indicated a meeting with the then Taoiseach, Mr Ahern, on the date in question.

West'), Mr Dunlop had on the same date noted a scheduled meeting with Mr Eamon Duignan.⁹¹ The diary entry relating to Mr Duignan read as follows:

*E. Dig. In office today to finalise matters as agreed on Wednesday.
No. Jack to deal with it.*

22.15 Two asterisks appeared on either side of the notation. From the asterisk to the left, an arrow pointed downwards to a further entry which read:

*3.30 Received chq. (client Acc.) of 10k from Jack R. On behalf of E. Dig.
This leaves 4k on his return from hols in July.'*

22.16 From the aforesaid left asterisk another arrow was drawn by Mr Dunlop across the top of the entry, which pointed towards the diary space for 23 May 1998. This portion of the diary was heavily obliterated.

22.17 Mr Dunlop claimed that the diary reference related to the financial transaction involving Mr Duignan, as noted in his diary, and that it did not relate to his meeting with Mr O'Callaghan at 9am on the same date at Citywest.

22.18 On Day 784 the following exchange took place between Mr Dunlop and Counsel for the Tribunal:

'Q. Yes. So what you have recorded there is an entire financial transaction involving Mr Duignan and Mr Duignan's solicitor, isn't that right?

A. Yes. Correct.

Q. And you are also noting there in the entry the receipt of £10,000 from Mr Duignan and that there is an outstanding balance of four, isn't that right?

A. Correct, yes.

Q. And now if you go back to the top of the page and look at the other arrow that goes across. You see that, into the 23rd?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what was that matter about, can you remember, Mr Dunlop, that's overwritten?

A. Well, it obviously relates to the substantive item in relation to Eamonn Duignan. I cannot say to you, I cannot tell you. It obviously has some relationship to the reference to 'Eamonn Duignan in office today re to finalise matters as agreed on Wednesday. No Jack to deal with it.'

Q. Or is it possible that what's being overwritten relates to the first entry '9 o'clock OOC at City West'?

A. No, because I think the arrow is specifically, the asterisk is between the two arrow starting points, and one refers to the cheque from 10 grand from Jack Roundtree, and the other goes across to something either that was discussed with Eamonn Duignan, or something in relation to the same matter.

⁹¹Mr Duignan and Mr Dunlop had business dealings in 1998.

Q. So you don't believe that that's an entry that relates to Mr O'Callaghan at all?

A. Well, it doesn't appear to me as I look at it now. I mean I am quite prepared to look at in the original diary but as of now it looks to me,

Q. May, '98 please (Mr Dunlop was looking at the original diary).

A. That it goes straight across from the contained matters between the asterisks and it overrides or overshoots the reference to Owen O'Callaghan, sorry. Yes, it is absolutely clear from the original here that the item in a box relating to Eamonn Duignan is the subject of two subsequent entries in the diary. One at the very bottom of the page relating to the cheque, and the other going straight across to the 23rd overshooting the note relating to Owen O'Callaghan at City West.

Q. And you say that that has nothing whatsoever to do with the entry in relation to Mr O'Callaghan?

A. From the diary as it, as it is, appears to me in its original format here I certainly don't believe it was so, no.'

22.19 In relation to the attempted obliterations and/or alterations and/or overwriting made to Mr Dunlop's diary, Mr Dunlop stated that it was 'possible' that he had made the obliteration attempts after his diaries had been requested by the Tribunal in 1999. Prior to 2001, Mr Dunlop was required to furnish, in the course of making Discovery to the Tribunal, redacted portions of his diaries. Redactions were to be undertaken on the basis that entries relating to Quarryvale or Mr O'Callaghan were to be disclosed to the Tribunal. In purported compliance with Tribunal Orders for Discovery Mr Dunlop had provided his 'redacted' diaries for specific years (for the period 1 January 1990 to 30 December 1993).

22.20 In the course of his evidence, Mr Dunlop conceded that a number of matters recorded in his diaries and relevant to meetings relating to Quarryvale had been concealed by him, on occasion by the use of 'post it' type stickers, when he made his initial Discovery to the Tribunal. These became apparent to the Tribunal when, subsequently, Mr Dunlop's entire unredacted diaries were furnished to it. When these diaries were provided to the Tribunal in 2001, it was noted that they contained many heavily obliterated entries. The Tribunal also noted other diary references which had been wrongfully redacted by Mr Dunlop when he had previously provided his redacted diaries to the Tribunal.⁹² The Tribunal was satisfied that some (if not all) of these heavy obliterations were made by Mr Dunlop prior to his furnishing the diaries to the Tribunal in 2001, ⁹²'Obliterated entries' are a reference to diary entries which were heavily overwritten or scribbled out in what appeared to be a deliberate effort to ensure that their content was impossible to decipher. 'Redacted entries' are a reference to diary entries which Mr Dunlop concealed from the Tribunal, purportedly in compliance with the Tribunal's discovery requirements.

with some obliterations made prior to his having sworn his first Affidavit of Discovery. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's objective in this regard was to conceal certain matters from the Tribunal, particularly financial matters, and including financial matters concerning himself and Mr O'Callaghan and concerning Mr Lawlor. References to meetings with politicians and others had also been concealed by Mr Dunlop.

22.21 While the forensic analysis of the obliterated entry in Mr Dunlop's diary referable to the events of 22 May 1998 did not reveal in its entirety the original entry, the Tribunal nonetheless was satisfied, following that analysis and having regard to other factors (set out below), which assisted the Tribunal in its analysis of the original text, that on 22 May 1998 Mr Dunlop had recorded the following relating to his discussion with Mr O'Callaghan: 'Cheque for £100,000 to issue at once, remainder to be discussed on 1/9/'98. £300,000 remaining.'

22.22 The Tribunal noted that while the forensic analysis suggested that the first six figure sum could give rise to an interpretation that it was either IR£100,000 or IR£600,000 (Mr Dunlop believed it to have likely been IR£100,000), it believed it probable that the figure in question was IR£100,000, having regard to the fact that Mr Dunlop furnished an invoice for this sum to Riga on the same day. While there was a question mark as to whether the second six figure sum read '£300,000 remaining' or '£300,000 on planning' (or even, as mused by Mr Dunlop, whether it referred to '£300,000 on plumbing'), the Tribunal was satisfied that the entry was in fact a note to the effect that IR£300,000 remained due to Mr Dunlop.

22.23 The belief that Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan's agreement/arrangement made on 22 May 1998 was to the effect that Mr Dunlop was to receive IR£100,000 'at once', was supported by the fact that on the date the arrangement was recorded in Mr Dunlop's diary, Frank Dunlop & Associates issued an invoice for IR£100,000 and VAT to Riga. Moreover, Mr Dunlop's diary for 1 September 1998 contained a reminder to himself to contact Mr O'Callaghan, noted as follows: 'Ring OOC Re discussion of Fri. 22/5/98 re remainder.'

22.24 The Tribunal was satisfied that the cheque for IR£121,000 issued by Riga on 4 June 1998 was issued on foot of the arrangement arrived at by Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan on 22 May 1998.

22.25 The Tribunal was satisfied that the aforesaid diary entry obliteration was intended by Mr Dunlop to conceal information from the Tribunal,⁹³ and that Mr Dunlop's evidence on Day 784 on this issue was false.

22.26 The Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop's and Mr O'Callaghan's claimed lack of recollection as to what had been discussed between them on 22 May 1998 regarding 'The October 1998 payment of IR£300,000.'

22.27 On 5 October 1998, Frank Dunlop & Associates furnished an invoice in the sum of IR£363,000 (IR£300,000 plus VAT) to Riga claiming the said sum as:

part payment of success fee in relation to extension of Liffey Valley development

RIGA PAID THE SAID SUM ON 9 OCTOBER 1998

22.28 Prior to Mr Dunlop's furnishing the said invoice on 5 October 1998, a meeting took place between himself and Mr O'Callaghan on 1 October 1998 which was recorded in Mr Dunlop's diary thus: 'OO'C all day.'

22.29 Both Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan claimed that possibly in the course of this meeting, the issue of Mr Dunlop's success fee was raised by Mr Dunlop. On Mr O'Callaghan's account of events, Riga's payment of the IR£300,000 plus VAT on 9 October 1998 was in discharge of Riga's obligations vis-à-vis Mr Dunlop's success fee entitlement.

22.30 However on Mr Dunlop's account of events, the money paid to Frank Dunlop & Associates on 9 October 1998 was the second tranche⁹⁴ of the success fee arrangement which he claimed was agreed with Mr O'Callaghan.

22.31 According to Mr Dunlop, when he met Mr O'Callaghan possibly on 1 October 1998, he had advised him that he required payment of his success fee as he, Mr Dunlop, 'had a tax issue.'

22.32 Mr O'Callaghan testified that in October 1998 Mr Dunlop approached him and advised him that he owed a substantial amount of money to the Revenue Commissioners and that as a consequence he was seeking payment of his success fee. Mr Dunlop had advised him that IR£300,000 was the figure necessary to settle his Revenue obligations. Following payment of the

⁹³ On Day 802, when it was put to Mr Dunlop by Tribunal Counsel that his (Mr Dunlop's) purpose for obliterating the diary entry was to conceal information from the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop responded 'that is likely.'

⁹⁴ Mr Dunlop claimed that the first tranche was the IR£100,000 paid in June 1998.

IR£300,000 on 9 October 1998, Mr O’Callaghan considered the success fee due to Mr Dunlop to have been discharged, notwithstanding Mr Dunlop’s reference in his invoice to the sum of IR£300,000 as being on account and ‘part payment’ of a success fee.

22.33 On 30 September 1998, (the day prior to his meeting with Mr O’Callaghan) Mr Dunlop had advised his accountant Mr Hugh McGowan of his, Mr Dunlop’s, failure to that point in time to make disclosure to the Revenue in respect of certain monies Mr Dunlop had received through Shefran over a period of years. Mr McGowan’s record of what Mr Dunlop told him is contained in a note dated 20 October 1998 as follows:

Rang Tom Tuite, Chief Inspector’s Office – 2nd October 1998.

Spoke to Tom Tuite on the basis that I understood from T.A.L.C that he might be willing to give some guidance on a no names basis of possible revenue approach in the case of voluntary disclosure.

Explained to him that client has brought something to my attention within the past 48 hours which required disclosure to revenue. Explained family circumstances of client and the fact that he wishes to make disclosure now before anything becomes public. He asked if it was likely to come into the public arena and I explained I did not know and gave him some detail of circumstance and an idea of amount involved and the fact that there was a previous audit which appeared to have ‘withered on the vine.

22.34 The Tribunal was satisfied that what precipitated Mr Dunlop’s visit to his accountant was, in all probability, the content of a number of newspaper articles published between 20 and 28 September 1998 relating to Quarryvale and which identified, amongst others, Mr Gilmartin and Mr Lawlor. In the course of an article in the Sunday Independent of 20 September 1998, the following was stated:

Meanwhile, the Sunday Independent has also learned that a brother of the former Taoiseach, Mr Haughey, informed Gardai of serious allegations made by businessman Tom Gilmartin in relation to a number of his building projects in Dublin in the 1980s.

Sean Haughey, former senior Dublin Corporation Official, was later interviewed by gardai in 1989 in relation to those allegations. Former City Manager Frank Feely also sat in on the interview.

Mr Haughey passed the allegations on to the Gardaí on foot of a complaint made directly to him and other council officials by Mr Gilmartin.

According to a reliable garda source, among the more serious allegations was that a named Fianna Fail TD arranged a meeting between Mr

Gilmartin and four Dublin councillors, who each demanded £100,000 in return for a favourable rezoning decision.

22.35 The Tribunal was satisfied that it was abundantly clear to Mr Dunlop from the contents of those newspaper articles as well as Mr Dunlop's general knowledge regarding Mr Gilmartin's meetings with the Tribunal at that point in time, that one of the topics likely to be the subject of discussion between Mr Gilmartin and the Tribunal would be Mr Dunlop and Shefran and, in particular, Mr Gilmartin's allegations concerning the utilisation of monies paid by Riga /Barkhill to Shefran.

22.36 Mr Gilmartin's first contact with the Tribunal was in early 1998. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he became aware of Mr Gilmartin's involvement with the Tribunal either through 'the media or through Liam Lawlor'.⁹⁵ Mr Dunlop conceded that, knowing Mr Gilmartin's view of him, he had a concern about the fact that Mr Gilmartin was in contact with the Tribunal, although he could not say 'how big or small that (concern) was.'

22.37 The Tribunal was satisfied that the principal topic of discussion between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan on 1 October 1998 was the expected imminent contact by the Tribunal with Mr Dunlop and with Mr O'Callaghan. Mr Dunlop acknowledged that he was in contact with Mr O'Callaghan following the publication of the September 1998 newspaper articles.

22.38 The Tribunal rejected as not credible Mr O'Callaghan's evidence on Day 913 when he stated that he and Mr Dunlop did not on 1 October 1998 discuss the matters likely to be the subject of inquiries by the Tribunal of Mr Dunlop. Having already found as a fact that Mr O'Callaghan was aware of the purpose for which the Shefran monies were paid to Mr Dunlop and indeed how Mr Dunlop applied other monies paid to him by Riga (the IR£70,000 paid in November 1992⁹⁶) the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan knew that the Tribunal was likely to question Mr Dunlop on the topic of payments to councillors/politicians in the context of any inquiry into the Quarryvale rezoning.

22.39 The Tribunal believed that Mr Dunlop had not, as claimed by him simply, 'called in' his 'success' fee on 1 October 1998. Rather, the Tribunal believed it likely that Mr Dunlop approached Mr O'Callaghan on that occasion and requested payment of the sum which then remained outstanding, as part of the arrangement entered into on 22 May 1998, namely the ‘£300,000 remaining’, as noted in Mr Dunlop’s diary for that date. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop requested payment of this money in the context of the inquiries he anticipated the Tribunal would make of him. It was further satisfied that Mr Dunlop’s disclosures to the Revenue in October 1998 were precipitated by his anticipation that his activities as a Quarryvale lobbyist, especially his use of Shefran, would be a matter that was likely to be focused on by the Tribunal and the ensuing publicity, as in fact occurred.

⁹⁵On Day 475 Mr Lawlor made reference to having being told by Mr Noel Smyth (Mr Gilmartin's solicitor in 1998) 'about the content' of the taped interview between Mr Gilmartin and Mr Smyth which took place in London on 20 May 1998. On Day 785 Mr Smyth, in the course of his evidence, denied that he had ever discussed the contents of Mr Gilmartin's statement with Mr Lawlor or with anyone, or that he provided him or others with a transcript of that statement.

⁹⁶ See Part 6 of this Chapter.

22.40 Moreover, the Tribunal was satisfied that by late 1998 notwithstanding what had been noted as agreed by Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan on 22 May 1998 (a total payment of IR£400,000) events were in place by October 1998 (in particular the publication of the newspaper articles, and Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan’s belief that the Tribunal’s inquiries were likely to involve both of them) such as, impelled Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan to discuss the additional payment of money to Mr Dunlop. Thus, the Tribunal was satisfied that this is what prompted Mr Dunlop to describe the IR£300,000 payment, for which he invoiced Riga on 5 of October 1998, as ‘part payment⁹⁷ of success fee’.

PAYMENT OF LEGAL FEES

23.01 Between November 1998 and July 2000, Mr Dunlop (through Frank Dunlop & Associates) invoiced and received a total of approximately IR£364,400 (inclusive of VAT) from Riga (marginally in excess of IR£301,000 Net). This sum was paid on foot of fifteen invoices which issued during that timeframe from Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd to Riga, claiming payment for ‘legal fees’ or ‘legal costs’.

23.02 The relevant invoice dates and payments were as follows:

13 November 1998	IR£55,543.57
7 December 1998	IR£16,247.49
5 February 1999	IR£21,650.63
27 April 1999	IR£6,129.47
10 May 1999	IR£2,876.90
9 June 1999	IR£6,303.24
13 July 1999	IR£3,545.12
13 August 1999	IR£14,263.50
11 November 1999	IR£19,552.18
11 January 2000	IR£6,709.34
1 February 2000	IR£45,635.15

⁹⁷ Tribunal’s emphasis

15 March 2000	IR£3,666.28
29 April 2000	IR£9,074.25
18 May 2000	IR£135,416.48
11 July 2000	IR£17,782.66

23.03 Both Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan claimed that these payments were made against the backdrop of the Tribunal’s private inquiry into the rezoning of Quarryvale, and in respect of which Mr Dunlop had first been contacted by the Tribunal by letter dated 6 October 1998, and Mr O’Callaghan/Barkhill by letter dated 15 October 1998.

23.04 Between 6 October 1998 (the date of the Tribunal’s first letter to Mr Dunlop) and the date of the issuing of the first ‘legal fees’ invoice on 13 November 1998, Mr Dunlop, via Frank Dunlop & Associates, had been paid the IR£363,000 (IR£300,000+VAT) for which he invoiced Riga on 5 October 1998, a payment, the discharge of which, the Tribunal was satisfied, had been the subject of the meeting between Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan on 1 October 1998. As set out elsewhere in this Report, the Tribunal was satisfied, notwithstanding that the payment of the IR£300,000 to Mr Dunlop in October 1998 had been outstanding since 22 May 1998, that the trigger for the discharge of that payment nearly five months later was media reports, circulating in September 1998 which referred to Mr Gilmartin’s contacts with the Tribunal.

23.05 The Tribunal was satisfied that, from the commencement of the Tribunal’s interest in their respective affairs, in the context of Quarryvale, Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan were in regular contact. Specifically, Mr O’Callaghan’s name coupled with a question mark appeared in Mr Dunlop’s diary for 30 October 1998. While Mr Dunlop’s diary for the month of November 1998 did not record any scheduled meeting between him and Mr O’Callaghan, a diary entry for 9 November 1998 suggested that on that date Mr Dunlop had a meeting with legal representatives retained by him in relation to Tribunal inquiries. A diary entry on the following date, 10 November 1998, proclaimed: Lawyer fees!

23.06 Some days later, on 13 November 1998, Mr Dunlop, via Frank Dunlop & Associates, issued an invoice for IR£55,543.57 to Riga for ‘legal fees’. This invoice was discharged by Riga on 19 November 1998.

23.07 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he believed that Mr O’Callaghan’s agreement to discharge his then anticipated legal fees, on foot of his dealings with the Tribunal, was given in the course of a telephone call between the two men. Mr Dunlop claimed that he initiated such contact, most probably following his meeting with his legal advisors on 9 November 1998. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal:

'I had a discussion on a date unknown, unspecified I should say but in or around this time with Mr O'Callaghan in relation to legal fees. And when it became evident to me the extent of the amounts that would be required. And in the course of the conversation with Mr O'Callaghan I cannot say that I asked and I cannot say that he offered but it was mutually agreed that he would discharge by legal fees. I more than likely said something to the effect that I don't envisage myself having the amount of money necessary to fulfil this if it goes on for any length of time. But certainly there was a discussion between Mr O'Callaghan and myself in relation to legal fees. The result of which was Mr O'Callaghan agreed that he would meet the legal costs in my regard'.

23.08 And:

'... I raised the matter with Mr O'Callaghan as I recall it by telephone and in which I said that I namely Frank Dunlop, in the corporate sense Frank Dunlop & Associates, didn't see a scenario where the fees that were being envisaged could be met on an ongoing basis. As I say it, Mr O'Callaghan said something to the effect and I will not credit him with the actual words. Mr O'Callaghan can give evidence in his own regard in this matter. But as I recollect matters, Mr O'Callaghan undertook to discharge the legal fees by something or use of the phrase I will look after that'.

23.09 In response to the question:

'Well how did that discussion, first of all what did you say to Mr O'Callaghan? Did you ask him to pay the legal fees?'

23.10 Mr Dunlop replied as follows:

'No, I probably said to him that I've had a discussion with my lawyers or I had received a bill, I can't – I had received a fee note. I can't specifically say whether it was as a result of either. But certainly it was a discussion in the context of a realisation on my part of the amounts of money that would be required in relation to discharging legal fees. And I raised that matter with Mr O'Callaghan in a conversation. Mr O'Callaghan didn't raise it with me, I raised it with him. And in the course of the conversation Mr O'Callaghan said something to the effect that I will look after that'.

23.11 Questioned as to what he had said to Mr O'Callaghan to prompt Mr O'Callaghan to agree to discharge his legal fees, Mr Dunlop stated:

'I probably said, I can't say definitively the exact words I used but I think the likelihood is that when I realised not having been in a litigious circumstances prior to that, and I realised what was, this was going to entail, I probably said something to the effect I don't have that type of money'.

23.12 When asked whether he had requested Mr O’Callaghan to discharge the legal fees because same would be incurred on foot of Mr Dunlop’s involvement with Quarryvale, Mr Dunlop responded:

‘...I don’t recollect that I ever said to Mr O’Callaghan... I don’t recollect saying to Mr O’Callaghan listen, I am involved in this, I am sorry I ever met you or knew you, I am sorry I ever heard of Quarryvale, none of this would have happened if it wasn’t for Quarryvale or for you. I don’t recollect any such conversation other than to say that yes, I did have a conversation from Mr O’Callaghan straight forwardly, undeniably, hopefully he will say the same thing, in which legal fees were discussed and in which I said that I didn’t see an ability on my part to fund this on an ongoing basis and probably and I don’t want to leave this in any way as attempting to drive people up cul-de-sacs. I may well have taken the view at this stage that because of the level of interest that was being shown publically at Quarryvale and because my name had appeared in the newspaper that this would adversely impact on my business. And that on an ongoing basis I would not be able to discharge such fees. I can’t say that this was a predominant issue in my mind, other than to say that I said to Mr O’Callaghan, without giving the exact phrase, that I don’t see how I’m going to be able to meet this on an ongoing basis and he said I will look after it.’

23.13 Later in his evidence, in response to the suggestion, as appeared from the contents of Mr O’Callaghan’s statement of 4 November 2005, that he had raised the issue of payment of legal fees with Mr Callaghan in the context of the Tribunal’s contact with him in relation to Quarryvale, Mr Dunlop responded:

‘Well, well, I think one would need an IQ of more than one to know that the discussion with Mr O’Callaghan in relation to legal fees specifically related to Quarryvale. That was generated by contact by the Tribunal to me, regardless of any contact Mr O’Callaghan had, to me by the Tribunal and that I raised this matter. I cannot specifically say this to you but there is no other way that it could have occurred but I raised the matter with Mr O’Callaghan.’

23.14 When questioned as to whether Mr O’Callaghan had told him of the reason for his agreement to fund his legal costs, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that, ‘probably’ Mr O’Callaghan had provided the reason, but he was unable to ‘credit him’ (Mr O’Callaghan) with the ‘exact words’ used by Mr O’Callaghan. Mr Dunlop suggested that all that was of importance to him was Mr O’Callaghan’s agreement to discharge his legal fees. He confirmed that he did not have to persuade Mr O’Callaghan to assist him in this way.

23.15 Mr Dunlop also advised the Tribunal thus:

‘...I think the general tone and the general orientation of the conversation was such that these were circumstances that had evolved. They weren’t very pleasant. I found myself in the cross hairs of the rifle in the context of receiving documentation from the Tribunal, we didn’t know how long it was going to last. We had an indication, I cannot say specifically what it was now but I am sure it is something that can be checked. That I was obviously in receipt of information as to the extent the amount and extent. And that that conversation the general orientation of that conversation was something of the order of well we’re in this together or this happened because of. I can’t say what Mr O’Callaghan said but I certainly I didn’t say to Mr O’Callaghan listen here, you know, I am involved in this because of you or because I couldn’t possibly have said anything of that nature to Mr O’Callaghan in the context of anything that I was doing with individual councillors and that there was no such discussion with Mr O’Callaghan in those terms. It was a conversation in relation to fees. And Mr O’Callaghan said sure look I’ll look after that. ‘

23.16 Mr Dunlop testified that although in receipt of his legal fees from Mr O’Callaghan from November 1998 he chose nevertheless not to fully cooperate with the Tribunal until 19 April 2000.⁹⁸

23.17 At the time of his claimed conversation with Mr O’Callaghan in November 1998 Mr Dunlop was not short of money, and had in or about IR£400,000 in the current account of his company Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd.

23.18 Mr Dunlop maintained that Riga’s payment of his legal fees was a stand alone arrangement as between himself and Mr O’Callaghan and denied that such payments, as were made for that purpose, constituted, either in part or in whole, a further payment of a ‘success’ fee to him in relation to Quarryvale.

23.19 Mr O’Callaghan testified that Mr Dunlop had advised him that he had to have legal representation in his dealings with the Tribunal, and that same would be expensive. Mr Dunlop had asked him if he would be prepared to pay the legal fees. He had thought about it for a very short time and agreed. No limit had been put on the amount of money that might be paid by Mr O’Callaghan for this purpose because, according to Mr O’Callaghan, ‘we hadn’t a notion what it would cost.’

⁹⁸ The Tribunal has not made a determination on Mr Dunlop’s cooperation.

23.20 Asked by Tribunal Counsel why he had agreed to fund legal costs likely to be incurred by Mr Dunlop in connection with his dealings with the Tribunal, Mr O’Callaghan stated: ‘Because he asked me number one. Number two, because I felt that these were false allegations made by Gilmartin against Frank Dunlop.’

23.21 Mr O’Callaghan also stated:

‘Because as I said they were false allegations by Mr Gilmartin, number one, number two, Frank Dunlop was working for us; or number three rather, like any of our consultants if they had difficulties or got into problems like structural engineers or whatever, we would always come in to assist and this is exactly why we did it. I also believe that eventually because I believed they were false allegations that this money would eventually be refunded.’

23.22 Mr O’Callaghan further stated that Mr Dunlop had told him that he could not afford the legal fees. Mr O’Callaghan said he was unaware that Mr Dunlop had funds available to him at the time.

23.23 In response to the question:

‘...When you were concerned about the falsity of the allegations being made by Mr Gilmartin, did you ask Mr Dunlop whether there was any truth in the allegation that he was involved in making payments to councillors?’,

Mr O’Callaghan replied:

‘I don’t think I did, because I didn’t have to. There it (sic) would have been a superfluous question for me to ask’.

23.24 Prior to his sworn testimony to the Tribunal on the issue of the payment of Mr Dunlop’s legal fees, Mr O’Callaghan furnished a written statement on 4 November 2005 wherein he, inter alia, stated:

Around November, 1998 Mr Dunlop found it necessary to engage a firm of solicitors and counsel in relation to the allegations surrounding the Quarryvale project and incurred legal expenses associated with such representation as a direct consequence, as I then understood, of his involvement in Quarryvale.

At this stage, and up to Mr Dunlop’s direct evidence in 2000, neither Riga, Barkhill nor myself were aware of Mr Dunlop’s so-called ‘war chest’. Whilst I was aware that he, naturally, had other clients who were developers, I was not aware of any details of this involvement. There was no mention in either the media or by the Tribunal of any investigation into any other development by the Tribunal involving Mr Dunlop other than Quarryvale.

On the basis that (i), the allegations made, it then appeared, by Mr Gilmartin were spurious and of no substance in respect of the alleged payments by Mr Dunlop and; (ii), I was not aware that any alleged payments had been made to members of Dublin County Council other than those political donations notified by Mr Dunlop to me, it was agreed that we would consider refunding Mr Dunlop in respect of legal costs incurred arising out of the inquiries of the Tribunal. It must be reiterated and stressed that this was in the belief that Mr Dunlop's involvement with the Tribunal flowed only from allegations penned against his professional conduct in relation to the Quarryvale development. Assurances regarding this were given by Mr Dunlop throughout that period and given the nature of our professional relationship and the fact that neither I, Riga nor Barkhill were involved in any such payments to elected members in return for any planning favours there was no reason for me to doubt that Mr Dunlop was telling the absolute truth.

23.25 In the course of that statement Mr O'Callaghan also stated:

The legal fees paid by Riga on production of relevant invoices from Mr Dunlop related, as far as I was concerned and honestly believed, solely to the involvement of Mr Dunlop with the Tribunal to assist them in their private enquiries in relation to false allegations of certain improper payments concerning the Quarryvale development only. In order to expedite the work of the Tribunal and remove any such allegations from the media and general public I believed that by assisting Mr Dunlop in this way it would resolve the matter quickly.

23.26 Although Mr O'Callaghan initially appeared to accept that Mr Dunlop must have told him that the queries being made of Mr Dunlop by the Tribunal related to whether Mr Dunlop had made payments to politicians/councillors regarding Quarryvale, he later told the Tribunal that that issue had not been the subject of a discussion between them.

23.27 When questioned about the 'assurances', claimed by Mr O'Callaghan in his November 2005 statement to have been given by Mr Dunlop, Mr Dunlop stated:

'No, I don't recollect Mr O'Callaghan ever seeking an assurance from me. I think the progress of any discussion with Mr O'Callaghan was on the basis that, from his point of view, of what had occurred in Quarryvale and the involvement that he had had in Quarryvale himself personally and with me. Yes, Mr O'Callaghan and I did discuss the payment of monies to a particular politicians, in particular cases in particular instances, most of those were generated by Mr O'Callaghan'.

23.28 Mr Dunlop also stated, in the same context:

‘...But all I recollect in conversations with Mr O’Callaghan related to the issue of my being, my becoming involved with the Tribunal. The associated legal costs and the conversations that I’ve told you about. I don’t recollect Mr O’Callaghan ever asking me for an assurance about what I had or had not done...’

23.29 In effect, Mr Dunlop rejected the suggestion (inherent in Mr O’Callaghan’s statement) that Mr O’Callaghan had sought an assurance from him, to wit, that Mr Dunlop had not made payments to politicians while retained as a Quarryvale lobbyist, other than payments already known to Mr O’Callaghan.

23.30 With regard to the detail of his discussion with Mr O’Callaghan Mr Dunlop stated:

‘I don’t recollect. I don’t recollect any such specific conversation. All I recollect, Ms Dillon, is a conversation. Let’s not specify it as a conversation because there were a number of conversations. But all I recollect in conversations with Mr O’Callaghan related to the issue of my being, my becoming involved with the Tribunal. The associated legal costs and the conversations that I’ve told you about. I don’t recollect Mr O’Callaghan ever asking me for an assurance about what I had or had not done. I don’t doubt the nature of the relationship with Mr O’Callaghan would not have led to any such conversation because it was quite a close relationship’ and ‘...I don’t recollect Mr O’Callaghan ever asking me specifically Frank, did you ever do anything untoward or did you ever give money to people that I don’t know anything about’.

23.31 Mr Dunlop claimed that Mr O’Callaghan never raised with him any question as to whether or not Mr Dunlop had ever done ‘anything untoward’. Nor, according to Mr Dunlop, had he volunteered to Mr O’Callaghan that he had done so.

23.32 Mr Deane maintained that the decision in November 1998 to fund Mr Dunlop’s legal costs was on the basis of the belief that Mr Dunlop would, in due course, recover them from the Tribunal, and thus reimburse Riga.

23.33 Ms Cowhig (Riga’s auditor) testified that she had been informed by Mr Deane that Riga would be reimbursed the legal costs paid for Mr Dunlop, and so recorded same in Riga’s books.

23.34 There was ongoing contact between the Tribunal and Mr Dunlop between November 1998 and April 2000 which related to, inter alia, requests to Mr

Dunlop for written statements and Discovery. Similarly, during the same period inquiries were being made by the Tribunal of Mr O'Callaghan and companies associated with him, in relation to Quarryvale.

23.35 Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan both acknowledged that during the timeframe in question, and indeed thereafter, they had ongoing contact, including telephone contact on a weekly basis. In March 1999, Mr Dunlop travelled to Riga's offices in Cork in search of, according to Mr Dunlop, copies of six Shefran invoices, and copies of at least two Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices in order to satisfy the Tribunal's requirements in relation to Discovery.

23.36 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop had a meeting with Mr O'Callaghan on 13 April 1999, and possibly also on 15 April 1999, based on an entry in Mr Dunlop's diary.

23.37 Mr Dunlop's diary suggested that meetings took place between himself and Mr O'Callaghan on 6 and 20 May 1999. The diary recorded, '9.30 OOC at FDA' (for 6 May 1999) and 'OOO in town'(for 20 May 1999).

23.38 On 20 May 1999, Mr Dunlop made a second payment to the Revenue Commissioners, on this occasion for IR£228,544, from the current account of Frank Dunlop & Associates.

23.39 Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan met on 2 July 1999, most probably following upon the Tribunal's letter of 30 June 1999 to Mr Dunlop calling on him, in clear and unequivocal terms, to make Discovery no later than 2 July 1999.

23.40 With regard to Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan's contact in 1999, it was apparent to the Tribunal, that, as of mid-1999 there was continuing discussion between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan concerning a substantial sum of money which Mr Dunlop believed was still due to him. This was notwithstanding: Mr Dunlop's evidence that he had received a 'success' fee of IR£400,000 (in two tranches, IR£100,000 in June 1998 and IR£300,000 in October 1998); Mr O'Callaghan's evidence that Mr Dunlop's 'success' fee had been honoured by the October 1998 IR£300,000 payment: and the open-ended legal fees arrangement entered into between the two in November 1998.

23.41 A forensic examination of yet another attempted obliteration in Mr Dunlop's diary for 30 July 1999⁹⁹ revealed the following detail: 'Spoke at length ⁹⁹ This date entry had been heavily obliterated by Mr Dunlop prior to his furnishing, in 2001, his unredacted diaries to the Tribunal.

with OOC’, ‘re fees 300’, ‘contribution’, ‘asked to talk after 16/9/99’, ‘payment’ and ‘outstanding.’¹⁰⁰

23.42 That forensic analysis of this attempted obliteration failed to yield a comprehensive picture of the original diary entry, which had probably been written by Mr Dunlop following his discussion with Mr O’Callaghan. However, Mr Dunlop agreed with Tribunal Counsel’s suggestion, that the import of the words, as revealed by the forensic analysis, suggested that he and Mr O’Callaghan had discussions about a IR£300,000 payment, Mr Dunlop nonetheless maintained to the Tribunal that no such arrangement had in fact been concluded between himself and Mr O’Callaghan.

23.43 Mr O’Callaghan, while claiming that he had no recollection of any such discussion in July 1999 with Mr Dunlop which could have led to an agreement whereby IR£300,000 remained outstanding to Mr Dunlop, acknowledged to the Tribunal the possibility that he and Mr Dunlop did have a discussion concerning the payment of a IR£300,000 ‘fee’ contribution. Mr O’Callaghan stated:

‘I would say that he (Mr Dunlop) was never happy. I don’t think he has accepted to this day that the success fee has been paid in full.’

23.44 Mr O’Callaghan refuted any suggestion that such discussion, as may have taken place between himself and Mr Dunlop in July 1999 about money, had taken place in the context of Mr Dunlop’s increasing contact with the Tribunal. However he acknowledged that Mr Dunlop may have apprised him that he was coming under financial pressure arising from his ongoing dealings with the Tribunal. Mr O’Callaghan also acknowledged the possibility that such discussion, as noted in Mr Dunlop’s diary on 30 July 1999, may have been associated with a view which was possibly held by Mr Dunlop to the effect that, in total, he believed himself entitled to IR£1m success fee for his Quarryvale endeavours. Mr O’Callaghan however maintained that he had never been requested specifically by Mr Dunlop to pay any such sum.

23.45 By the autumn of 1999 there was continued media reports of issues which concerned, inter alia, Mr O’Callaghan. On 8 August 1999, newspaper articles written by the journalists Mr Frank Connolly and Mr Jody Corcoran referred to an alleged contribution made by Mr O’Callaghan to Fianna Fail in 1994, and an alleged dinner party in Cork,¹⁰¹ when money was donated to Fianna Fail. Mr Corcoran’s Sunday Independent article made reference to Cllr Colm McGrath having been paid IR£30,000 by Mr O’Callaghan.

¹⁰⁰Mr Dunlop agreed that the last word in the diary entry was probably ‘outstanding’. He remarked however, that there was at that time nothing outstanding from Mr O’Callaghan.

¹⁰¹See Part 8 of this Chapter.

23.46 Mr Dunlop met with Mr O’Callaghan on 5 October 1999 in the ‘Deadman’s Inn’ public house near Lucan, in the course of which, as conceded by Mr Dunlop, ongoing issues relating to the Tribunal were ‘definitely raised.’ Mr Dunlop’s diary suggested that a further meeting occurred with Mr O’Callaghan on 13 January 2000.¹⁰²

23.47 Mr Dunlop first gave sworn testimony to the Tribunal on 11 April 2000 (Day 145). His evidence continued into 18 and 19 April 2000 (Days 146 and 147) and on 9 May 2000 (Day 148).

23.48 On Day 145,¹⁰³ Mr Dunlop brought with him to the Tribunal a document which had been prepared by an agent of Riga/Barkhill on his behalf and which Mr Dunlop claimed was a schedule of the payments made by Riga/Barkhill to Frank Dunlop & Associates and to Shefran between 1991 and year end 31 December 1998. Mr Dunlop acknowledged that in so far as the document he had produced to the Tribunal on Day 145 purported to be a schedule of all payments made by Riga/Barkhill to year end 31 December 1998 to him, via Frank Dunlop & Associates or otherwise it omitted the payment of IR£55,543.57 made by Riga by way of discharge of a legal fees invoice on 13 November 1998.¹⁰⁴ Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he did not believe that reference to the legal fees payment had been deliberately omitted from the schedule.

23.49 Mr Dunlop suggested to the Tribunal that the purpose of the schedule, as prepared for him, was to indicate the payments which he, via Frank Dunlop & Associates/Shefran, had received for services rendered over a period of years for Quarryvale. Thus, Mr Dunlop suggested to the Tribunal that he would not have expected the schedule to include legal fees paid by Riga as he did not consider them to be payments made by Barkhill/Riga to himself or to Shefran, in connection ‘with the Quarryvale development and other matters.’

23.50 The Tribunal did not accept the logic of Mr Dunlop’s reasoning for his omission of the legal fees payments, because the schedule included details of a IR£121,000 (IR£100,000 plus VAT) payment made in January 1997 by Riga to Frank Dunlop & Associates for Public Relations work relating to the ‘Horgan’s Quay’ controversy.

¹⁰²Mr Dunlop did not connect this meeting per se to the Tribunal.

¹⁰³Incorrectly stated in evidence on Day 809, to have been Day 146.

¹⁰⁴The schedule save for this omission was substantially accurate. This legal fees invoice was the only legal fees invoice paid prior to 31 December 1998.

23.51 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that the reason he had provided the schedule to the Tribunal in the first place was because he anticipated that in the course of his attendance for questioning by the Tribunal in April 2000, he was likely to be questioned, inter alia, about his dealings with Mr O’Callaghan/Riga/Barkhill, and as to whether he had made any payments to elected representatives. Mr Dunlop was so questioned in April and May 2000.

23.52 On 11 April 2000 (Day 145), Mr Dunlop informed the Tribunal that Cllr Tom Hand (then deceased) was the only councillor who had sought money from him in relation to Quarryvale. On Day 146, Mr Dunlop provided to the Tribunal a list (the ‘Preliminary List’) of elected representatives who he claimed had sought political donations/money from him. Mr Dunlop did not however on Day 146 make allegations of impropriety against the listed elected representatives (with the exception of Cllr Hand).

23.53 On Days 147 (19 April 2000) and 148 (9 May 2000), Mr Dunlop provided the Tribunal with additional lists of names of councillors and developers to whom he paid money, and from whom he received money respectively, including such information relevant to Quarryvale.¹⁰⁵

23.54 By the date of his Tribunal admissions on 19 April 2000, Frank Dunlop and Associates had issued twelve ‘legal fees’ or ‘legal costs’ invoices to Riga, and had been paid a total of circa IR£200,000 in relation thereto.

23.55 In his November 2005 statement, Mr O’Callaghan advised the Tribunal as follows:

In April 2000 Mr Dunlop gave evidence at the Tribunal and his revelations came as a total surprise to me. Having thought about these revelations it became apparent to me that Mr Dunlop’s involvement in the Tribunal was not one which related solely to his link with the Quarryvale development. I decided to cease any assistance given to Mr Dunlop in his involvement with the Tribunal as it would appear that (i) he was taking monies paid to him or Shefran Ltd for professional work done and advices given to me and my connected companies in respect of the Quarryvale development and putting them, or a part of them, into a ‘war chest’ which he in turn utilised for payments to certain elected members; and (ii) he was involved with other developments and developers who in turn were the subject matter of the private investigations of the Tribunal and their fees, or a part of them were also being transferred into this ‘war chest’. Therefore, his involvement with the Tribunal was not Ltd solely to the allegations made by Mr Gilmartin and those reported in the media.

23.56 In the course of his evidence on Day 913 (16 October 2008), Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that Riga ceased paying Mr Dunlop’s legal fees for the reasons set out in his November 2005 statement. Moreover, Mr O’Callaghan acknowledged that when the decision to cease the payments was made in 2000, he had by then accepted and believed Mr Dunlop’s disclosures in relation to payments to elected representatives (as was provided by Mr Dunlop to the Tribunal in April 2000).

23.57 However, on Day 913 (16 October 2008) Mr O’Callaghan testified that sometime between 4 November 2005 (when he furnished his statement to the Tribunal) and Day 913, he, Mr O’Callaghan, had come to disbelieve Mr Dunlop’s assertions that he had made corrupt/improper payments to elected representatives.

23.58 Notwithstanding Mr Dunlop’s re affirmation, in the course of evidence he gave in the Quarryvale module (and indeed as testified to by him in other modules) that he had made corrupt/improper payments, Mr O’Callaghan was not ‘certain anymore’ whether Mr Dunlop’s assertions were credible.

23.59 It was Mr Dunlop’s evidence that following his public appearance at the Tribunal in April/May 2000, Mr Dunlop met with Mr O’Callaghan. Mr Dunlop claimed that the result of such meeting was that Mr O’Callaghan advised him that Riga were ceasing the payment of his legal costs. Mr Dunlop’s diary revealed a meeting with Mr O’Callaghan on 25 May 2000, two days after Mr Dunlop was privately interviewed by the Tribunal. Mr Dunlop claimed he was unable to recall what was discussed on that occasion but told the Tribunal that ‘at some stage’ after his public appearances at the Tribunal, Mr O’Callaghan ‘began to express concern’ about Mr Dunlop having made improper payments to councillors, an activity, which Mr Dunlop maintained, was hitherto unknown to Mr O’Callaghan.

23.60 Mr O’Callaghan’s evidence on this issue was that following a meeting with Mr Dunlop in or about May/June 2000, Mr Dunlop had assured him, in response to a question posed by Mr O’Callaghan, that Mr Dunlop had never made payments to politicians/councillors on Mr O’Callaghan’s behalf. Moreover, Mr

O'Callaghan maintained that Mr Dunlop had dealt with his queries in a dismissive manner, commenting that his dealings with the Tribunal did not involve Mr O'Callaghan.

23.61 Mr O'Callaghan confirmed that he had earlier met Mr Dunlop, after his (Mr Dunlop's) April 2000 attendance at the Tribunal and that he and Mr Dunlop, who he said was in bad form, had a 'very, very brief discussion'. He said he had no 'official discussion' with Mr Dunlop on that occasion.

23.62 Mr O'Callaghan said he met Mr Dunlop approximately one month later, and that on this occasion he advised Mr Dunlop that he would not be paid further retainer fees, or reimbursement of his legal fees (other than fees already incurred).

23.63 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that in the period post 19 April 2000 Mr O'Callaghan made a 'number of telephone calls' to him, which he believed were motivated by humanitarian concern, rather than any other reason. Mr Dunlop stated that he and Mr O'Callaghan did not discuss, 'in detail', those matters which were then ongoing between Mr Dunlop and the Tribunal.

23.64 Notwithstanding the meetings and telephone contact which took place between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan in the post 19 April 2000 period, Mr O'Callaghan chose to write a letter to Mr Dunlop on 14 July 2000 in which he asked Mr Dunlop to assist in establishing if he, Mr O'Callaghan, had paid 'some monies' to a solicitor on behalf of Cllr McGrath in 1992. (This was a reference to a payment of IR£10,700 paid to settle a debt due by Cllr McGrath. Mr O'Callaghan also paid Cllr McGrath IR£10,000 in October 1991 and IR£20,000 in November 1993). The penultimate paragraph of this letter was, in the Tribunal's view noteworthy, in that it stated, somewhat out of context having regard to the letter's content, the following: 'I know you have confirmed to me that you never paid politicians on my behalf.'

23.65 Indeed, somewhat in conflict with that statement, the said IR£10,700 payment had in fact been paid by Mr Dunlop to a third party on Cllr McGrath's behalf, at the behest of Mr O'Callaghan.

23.66 Mr Dunlop, in his evidence, denied that post his April/May 2000 Tribunal revelations, that he had ever been asked by Mr O'Callaghan for confirmation that he had not made payments to politicians on his behalf.

23.67 Both Mr Deane and Mr O’Callaghan acknowledged to the Tribunal that invoices dated between 29 April 2000 and 11 July 2000 were discharged by Riga. In fact, of the total of circa IR£364,000 (gross) legal fees, as invoiced and received between 13 November 1998 and 11 July 2000, IR£162,273 (gross) of this figure was discharged by Riga between 29 April 2000 and 11 July 2000. Three payments in all were made in discharge of Mr Dunlop’s legal fees post his evidence on Days 146 and 147.

23.68 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that the post 19 April 2000 legal fees invoices were paid because they concerned fees due prior to that date, and in paying them, he was merely honouring his earlier agreement with Mr Dunlop. This was not withstanding his assertion, and that of Mr Deane, that the cessation of payment of Mr Dunlop’s legal fees was linked to their having become aware, in April 2000, (for the first time according to Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane), that Mr Dunlop had in fact made corrupt/improper payments to councillors, including payments in connection with the rezoning of Quarryvale). IR£9,074.25 on foot of an invoice dated 29 April 2000;

- IR£135,416.48 on foot of an invoice dated 18 May 2000 (an invoice issued nine days after Mr Dunlop’s Day 148 evidence to the Tribunal);
- IR£17,782.66 on foot of an invoice dated 11 July 2000.

23.69 The post 19 April 2000 payments equalled approximately 45% of the total paid by Riga to Frank Dunlop & Associates for legal fees. Moreover, these post 19 April 2000 payments were made by Riga in the knowledge of Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane that, under oath, Mr Dunlop had admitted to making payments to elected representatives in relation to rezoning issues, including Quarryvale.

23.70 The legal fees invoice dated 18 May 2000 from Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd to Riga included a handwritten note stating ‘per letter and reply OOC’, but no such correspondence was provided to the Tribunal. Mr Dunlop was unable to recall its content. Mr O’Callaghan was not questioned in relation to this matter.

THE TRIBUNAL’S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH MR DUNLOP’S LEGAL FEES WERE PAID BY MR O’CALLAGHAN

24.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that neither Mr Dunlop nor Mr O’Callaghan, in their evidence, apprised the Tribunal of the likely subject matter of their discussions, both prior to Riga embarking on paying legal fees at the behest of Mr Dunlop in November 1998, and post Mr Dunlop’s April 2000 revelations to the Tribunal.

24.02 It was to the Tribunal quite inconceivable, in the course of their contact over the course of October and November 1998, that Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan did not discuss the circumstances and the purpose for which Mr Dunlop was retained by Mr O'Callaghan in 1991. Moreover, the Tribunal found it inconceivable that Messrs O'Callaghan and Dunlop would not have discussed the likely inquiries that would be made by the Tribunal when the Tribunal (as it did) received details of a number of round figure VAT – free payments made to Mr Dunlop via Shefran and Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd in the period May 1991 to September 1993 (the duration of the Quarryvale rezoning campaign). By October/November 1998, both Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan must have anticipated that such payments would be probed by the Tribunal, in particular, the Shefran payments, having regard to newspaper reports of allegations then being made to the Tribunal by Mr Gilmartin.

24.03 Having found elsewhere in the Report, that Mr O'Callaghan was at all relevant times aware that a substantial portion if not all of the IR£80,000 paid to Mr Dunlop via Shefran in 1991 was disbursed to councillors by Mr Dunlop, and equally that Mr O'Callaghan was privy to the purpose for which Mr Dunlop was paid IR£70,000 in November 1992, the Tribunal considered it inconceivable that the likely interest of the Tribunal in such payments (when the details of same would become known to the Tribunal), would not have been a topic of discussion as between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan.

24.04 As a consequence the Tribunal rejected as not credible Mr Dunlop's vague account of the discussions that ensued between himself and Mr O'Callaghan prior to 13 November 1998. Nor can the Tribunal accept Mr Dunlop's vague evidence as to what he and Mr O'Callaghan discussed in the immediate aftermath of Mr Dunlop's April 2000 revelations to the Tribunal.

24.05 There was no logic either to Mr O'Callaghan's evidence that, prior to November 1998, it was Mr Dunlop's Quarryvale involvement of itself that led him to agree to an open-ended discharge of Mr Dunlop's legal fees. Logic dictated that among the issues discussed by Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop had to have been the manner in which certain payments made by Riga to Mr Dunlop between 16 May 1991 and 17 September 1993 were effected and the purpose for which some or all of these payments had been made to Mr Dunlop.

24.06 The Tribunal was satisfied that in light of his anticipated Tribunal interest in his affairs, Mr Dunlop approached Mr O'Callaghan in order to follow up on the agreement that had been made between them as of 22 May 1998 to secure the sum of IR£300,000 'remaining' to be paid to Mr Dunlop (the money which funded Mr Dunlop's payment to the Revenue Commissioners). The Tribunal was equally satisfied that at some point prior to 13 November 1998 Mr Dunlop prevailed upon Mr O’Callaghan to part with substantial additional money in respect of Mr Dunlop’s anticipated legal costs.

24.07 The Tribunal was satisfied that, in seeking (and obtaining) agreement for the payment of his legal costs, Mr Dunlop was in fact ‘calling in’ money which he believed was due to him for his Quarryvale endeavours. It was noteworthy that in October 1998 Mr Dunlop himself believed that the 9 October 1998 IR£300,000 ‘success’ fee obtained by him was a payment ‘on account’ (as referred to on Mr Dunlop’s invoice). The Tribunal was satisfied that this belief indeed proved to be the case, in that between 13 November 1998 and 11 July 2000 Riga paid ‘legal fees’ or ‘legal costs’, amounting to circa IR£301,000.

24.08 The Tribunal was satisfied that as and from November 1998, Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan had an agreement whereby Mr Dunlop would be paid a sum of money, (probably in the region of IR£300,000, having regard to the content of Mr Dunlop’s forensically restored diary entry of 30 July 1999), in the guise of legal fees.

24.09 Had it been the case, as Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane would have the Tribunal believe, that from November 1998 they simply embarked (at Mr Dunlop’s request) on the payment of Mr Dunlop’s legal fees because they believed that Mr Gilmartin’s allegations (about Mr Dunlop etc) would be proved to be false, it followed that, as soon as Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Deane learned of Mr Dunlop’s own admissions to the Tribunal in April 2000, their payment of his legal fees would have ceased immediately. However, such did not happen, indeed close to half the £301,000 was paid after Mr Dunlop’s revelation to the Tribunal. The Tribunal therefore concluded that in October/November 1998, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop had discussions about lump sum payments to be paid to Mr Dunlop, including, probably, a lump sum payment of IR£300,000 which was to be paid to him incrementally in discharge of his legal costs.

24.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that the question of Mr O’Callaghan’s undertaking to discharge Mr Dunlop’s legal fees could not have been predicated on Mr O’Callaghan’s belief that Mr Dunlop had not engaged in making payments to councillors/politicians, given that the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop had engaged in making a series of payments to election candidates in 1991 and 1992 respectively, with the imprimatur of Mr O’Callaghan, and had been funded by Mr O’Callaghan to enable him do so. Moreover, as found by the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop paid Mr Lawlor IR£40,000 in or about May/June 1991, with Mr O’Callaghan’s knowledge.

24.11 Of the circa IR£1.8m paid to Mr Dunlop on Mr O’Callaghan’s instructions between May 1991 and July 2001, and excluding the monthly retainer payments made to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd in the period 1998 to 2001, Mr Dunlop (through Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd) was paid in excess of IR£700,000 (net of VAT), directly or indirectly, between June 1998 and July 2000.

THE TRIBUNAL’S GENERAL CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO PAYMENTS TO COUNCILLORS BY MR. O’CALLAGHAN AND MR. DUNLOP.

24.12 These findings are made by way of a summation of findings made in this Part, and elsewhere in Chapter Two, in relation to the expenditure of certain funds by Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop.

- (i) Mr O’Callaghan was aware of, and actively engaged in facilitating the corrupt disbursement of substantial sums of money to politicians by Mr Dunlop, in the period 1991 to 1993 for the purposes of ensuring councillors support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands.
- (ii) The Tribunal rejected as untrue the often repeated evidence of Mr. O’Callaghan, that he was unaware of Mr Dunlop’s corrupt activity in paying councillors to support the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands in the period 1991 to 1993, prior to Mr Dunlop’s disclosure to the Tribunal of such activity in April 2000.
- (iii) The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O’Callaghan personally made corrupt payments (or otherwise authorised such payments through his company), to certain politicians for the purposes of ensuring their continued support and assistance for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands.
- (iv) The Tribunal was satisfied that the process of paying councillors to ensure and copper fasten support for the project to rezone the Quarryvale lands, during the course of the Review of the County Dublin Development Plan (in the period 1991 to 1993), was strategic. This strategy was planned, promoted and organised by Mr O’Callaghan and was, almost certainly, a strategy devised in the first instance by Mr Dunlop and Mr Liam Lawlor.
- (vi) The Tribunal recognised the possibility that Mr O’Callaghan may have been initially, a reluctant participant in the corrupt activity in which both himself and Mr Dunlop engaged. However, the Tribunal was satisfied that in such the case, Mr O’Callaghan nevertheless embraced and adopted the strategy of corruptly engaging with councillors, as espoused by Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor.

BARKHILL LTD

Meeting with Owen O'Callaghan and John Deane on the 18/3/92.

The meeting, the first to be held for some weeks with Messrs. O'Callaghan and Deane was to bring us up to date and they indicated that DCC now seems to be out of the picture in respect of Green as they were not in the position to bring John Corcoran on side.

It appears also that Jim Flavin of DCC now considers that one centre only would work in Dublin West. John Mulcahy has spoken to Michael Buckley and while initially positive he has now backed off, presumably following some prompting from John Corcoran.

O' Callaghan and Deane are now working on the premise that if a Green deal is not possible, how do they progress matters? They intend actively canvassing the councillors over the next number of weeks and are also speaking to the IDA in relation to industrial use of c. 50% of the site. Owen O'Callaghan's intention is to meet all 78 of the councillors over the next month. As of now he anticipates that he has now 28 lined up.

In relation to the alternative site of Clondalkin, they are progressing the concept of a stadium and have produced a model. They believe that the stadium could be viable at a total cost of £32m and would be funded by £10m from the State, £10m from the sale of 10 year tickets and perhaps another £10m from private promoters. This would be 40,000 seating capacity.

When asked about the prospects of the success of disowning ^{the zoning} as of now, Owen O'Callaghan considered that it is about 40% likely but he would hope to bring that to better than 50% over the next 4 to 6 weeks. He indicated that there are ongoing fees between now and disowning vote of £150,000 and decision will have to be taken as to whether the Bank is willing to fund this amount, by implication he is not prepared to do so, This matter was left in obedience.

Overall, O'Callaghan seemed very cautious about the prospects about bring a Green deal to fruition or indeed managing to keep the zoning in place.

RE:BARKHILL

Meeting with Owen O'Callaghan at Bankcentre. I took the opportunity to get Owen to take me through the background to the zoning situation in Quarryvale.

BACKGROUND

- May 1991 - first vote - Fianna Fail had majority - vote was 33/12. This effectively transferred the Town Centre zoning which applied to the Neilstown site over to Quarryvale. Following this the zoning had to be put into the draft development plan. Accordingly at this stage the land at Quarryvale is zoned 70 acres for retail with the remainder of 116 acres industrial. Accordingly a formal rescinding motion will be needed to change the zoning - this has to come from an affected Councillor ie a Councillor in Blanchardstown. There are seven Councillors in Blanchardstown - three of them are for Quarryvale - one will not put forward the motion - the remaining three could put forward such a motion (two from Labour and one from P.Ds).
- Draft Development Plan. There are twenty eight maps in the whole plan. Initially it had been intended that all of the plans would be dealt with before the 30th June 1992 - this had been in the Minister for the Environment's stipulation to the previous chairman, Stanley Lang. However the matter drifted and an extension was applied for from the Minister - December 1992 was agreed as the final date for agreement. O'Callaghan had been gearing his operations towards a June vote at the latest but the extension of time has obviously thrown the timing back. They are working back through the plans - at this stage they have dealt with maps 28, 27 and 26. One of these related to the Phil Monahan Cherrywood site and took a long time to resolve. At this stage there is a further meeting in September, 3 for October, 3 for November and 2/3 for December. The Council was on holidays for July and August and a number of members of Council are now away on a ten day trip to Israel. Owen does not envisage any difficulties with the forthcoming maps 25 down to 21. Map 20 could well take 2 meetings in that there are a number of issues involved in it and a site visit may also be required - this would obviously cause delays. Barkhill is map number 17. They had been hoping for early October but they are very confident that it will be during October at the latest.

- There are 78 members on the Council - a straight majority is required (any further Section 4 motions from material contraventions will require 75% following the completion of this draft development plan). Owen O'Callaghan is confident that their lobbying will result in a positive vote.
- This scheme was originally launched in October 1990 by Tom Gilmartin the Berkley Court. At that stage he spoke about a 1.5m sq.ft. development. This has now been scaled to 500,000 sq.ft. - the zoning permission actually caps the retail space at 500k sq.ft. Opposition to the zoning has included claims that once the zoning is approved in the development plan, the developers will develop 1.5m sq.ft. - this is based on the fact that with the 70 acres zone retail, it could hold this amount of retail space. By comparison, Blanchardstown is 1m sq.ft. on 40 acres - however plans there are to build 350/450k sq.ft.
- A negative factor is that the change in zoning has effectively moved the Town Centre from the original site to the Quarryvale site which is .8 miles in distance.
- Efforts to link up with Green earlier in the year had taken some months of their time in an effort to resolve the situation vis a vis Blanchardstown. Having failed with this, they sought an alternative use for the Neilstown site - hence the proposals for a National Stadium.

PRESENT POSITION

- Green's planning permission in Blanchardstown is for 350/400k sq.ft. Dunnes are totally committed to Blanchardstown as are Quinnsworth. Both are getting frustrated because Green won't sign. Dunnes have sought another site and they will be submitting planning application on same within the next 2/3 weeks in an effort to move Greens towards signing.

John Corcoran has been lobbying the Councillors himself. Pat Keating (ex Graylings) is more or less full time with Corcoran.

(3)

If is obtained at the end of October, Barkhill are ready to go in for full planning permission immediately. They would anticipate that 3 months with the local authority followed by an appeal to an Bord Pleanna. Under Government directive, Bord Pleanna can take no longer than 4 months to complete their investigations and issue a decision. Accordingly Owen O'Callaghan would be confident that planning would still be in place by summer 1993. Following receipt of zoning they would have to seek a development partner.

Roches Stores have told him officially that they will go into Quarryvale as have Dunnes. Marks & Spencers are nearly certain. Owen O'Callaghan makes the point that given the anchors lined up in Blanchardstown and in Quarryvale, there is an obvious case for justifying both Centres which has been O'Callaghan's line all along.

Owen O'Callaghan is confident that Tom Gilmartin knows the position regarding the imminent zoning.

Sports Centre -: Following their failure to link up with Green, they set about seeking an alternative use for the Neilstown site. Opposition to Quarryvale had always argued that they had no objection to a shopping centre in Clondalkin but that it should take place on the original site which had been designated the Town Centre. From this comment came the concept of the Sports Stadium.

FEES

I gave Owen O'Callaghan a copy of the attached pages outlining the break-down of the loans and a break-down of the fees paid and the fees outstanding. We went through the various fees that have been paid and he provided explanations where he could for the various items - see attached.

He made the point that VAT is repayable/refundable on a number of the bills paid. Aidan Lucey and his office is handling that matter. He feels the amount involved is IR£30/40k. We agreed that we would contact Aidan directly in this matter to find out the timing and the amount of same - Mary please follow up - Owen O'Callaghan confirmed that these funds will all be due to reduce the loan of Barkhill with AIB.

- We went through the various fees outstanding as of today's date and an estimate of the fees to go before planning is obtained - see attached schedule.
- There is a further IR£60k due by Riga to AIB Corporate Finance in relation to the Green takeover - Riga recognise this is for their account.
- I made the point to Owen O'Callaghan that AIB were already drawn way beyond our original sanction. An element of this overrun related to fees, even before we paid any further fees. In these circumstances it would be very difficult to pay out more money from the loan to cover further fees, particularly as zoning is not yet in place. He recognises this and consequently has pushed out a lot of the fees. In essence, he is identifying possibly IR£40,000 which needs to be paid now in relation to the general Quarryvale zoning issue with a further IR£19,000 due to Ambrose Kelly in relation to the design/plans for the Sports Stadium.
- On the latter point I indicated that we had never been consulted about the Sports Stadium plans either as bankers or as directors/shareholders - neither had Tom Gilmartin, as far as we were aware. In these circumstances I indicated that we would have difficulty in paying in relation to same. He argued strongly that the Sports Centre plans are an integral part of obtaining the zoning - he is strongly of the view that if they don't have an alternative use set up for the Neilstown site, they will not get the required support at the zoning meeting. Accordingly he is arguing that the fees related to the stadium which total IR£58k with a further IR£30k to go, will have to be paid by Barkhill Ltd.
- I agreed to revert to him as soon as possible on this matter of fees.

GENERAL

- Companies office returns - I indicated that we would have to get the audited accounts completed to make these returns. John Deane/Aidan Lucey should, he thinks, be working on outstanding issues.
- Derelict sites act - He has a copy of the letter of the 16th July 1992 with enclosures, received from Seamus Maguire. He is dealing with the issue - no action is required.

(5)

- He has not seen the letter of 3rd September 1992 from Seamus Maguire - see attached - I am to send him a copy of same and he will pick up the issue in relation to the caravans/mobile homes on the land at Quarryvale.
- He agreed that Riga are funding IR£200k in relation to the Bruton Lands - he asked me to contact John Deane in relation to this - Owen does not know the details.
- I indicated that security in relation to the Bruton House was going to become an issue on the 30th September on vacation. This house will be knocked if the development goes ahead - however it is likely it will be occupied in the meantime by squatters. He will follow up this issue.
- I raised the issue of life cover with Owen both in relation to Barkhill and in relation to Riga - he indicated that he had been anticipating my question - he undertook to put the necessary life cover in place following receipt of zoning next month. He asked that I leave the matter in abeyance until then because his time is committed in relation to the zoning issue.

POINTS FOR FOLLOW UP

1. VAT issue.
2. Bruton monies.
3. Security @n Bruton House - follow up with Owen O'Callaghan in about a week.

RE: BARKHILL

Meeting in Bankcentre.

Present: Owen O'Callaghan - Barkhill
Dave McGrath - AIB, Corporate Banking.
Michael O'Farrell - AIB Corporate Banking.

- Owen O'Callaghan brought us up to date in relation to the lobbying situation - they are still confident. The vote is definitely set for 2 of the days 3rd/4th/5th December. This will ensure that it is heard on two dates which are back to back.
- He has arranged permanent security on the Bruton House, at least pending the zoning vote.
- Derelict Sites Act - He is dealing with this and will ensure that it is dealt with before the pending court hearing in mid November.
- He produces a further invoice in relation to fees. He indicated that there will be further invoices which he said would total IRE40,000 including the one provided today. This would bring the matter up to zoning. I indicated that I was clearly under the impression that only IRE10,000 would be required, in addition to what had already been paid. This is the basis I have brought forward the matter for consideration when the last invoices had been provided. He indicated that he had stated at that time that further fees of IRE40,000 would be required. He indicated that a further invoice of IRE15,000 would require settlement shortly.

We indicated that there was no way the bank was going to continue to allow drawdown on the loan account in respect of further fees. Between land purchases and fees, together with interest roll-up, we were already way over where we had anticipated at this stage and these circumstances could not allow further drawdowns. He indicated that he, and ourselves, have little choice but to continue on the existing route and that this will require further cash to pay further fees. There are a lot of other fees outstanding which, following zoning, will also become a major issue. He indicated that he is not given these any thought at this stage - his main priority is to get zoning. We left them clearly in the knowledge that paying further fees would not be on by the bank - however we agreed to revert to him in relation to the fees issue and specifically in relation to the invoice provided to us dated 9th September, 1992.

RE: BARKHILL/RIGA

Meeting at Bankcentre with Owen O'Callaghan.

- Date for the Quarryvale vote has been set for 17th and 18th December. He is confident a decision will be made one way or the other on that date. It is very tight. In response to my query, he confirmed that the officials are thinking in terms of a compromise at this stage which will involve the Jim Mansfield Clondalkin Centre and a smaller centre for Quarryvale of approximately 250,000 sq ft. The position will obviously be clear in about two weeks. His lobbying continues and he indicated that he had injected IR£85,000 into the situation from O'Callaghan properties.
 - North Main Street - He queried the margin ~~on~~ which had been quoted of 2.5%. He indicated that his memory of the meeting with Eddie Kay at the end of August was that the margin being discussed was 2% with an arrangement fee. I indicated that Eddie had indicated on that date that the margin perhaps could be 2 1/4% with the arrangement fee of £20,000 but that any further reduction to 2% would have to be compensated by an arrangement fee. I indicated that my present view was that we should stick with a margin of 2 1.4% with the arrangement fee. This was agreed.
 - They have received an approach from Porter in relation to a 1,000 sq ft unit in North Main Street. IR£200,000 is being discussed - we ~~here~~ are seeking £250,000.
 - Corporation contract is signed - Dunnes contract is ready for signing.
 - Cumberland House - they have made a lot of progress over the last few weeks in relation to rent reviews - they have been increased to £11 per sq ft and they anticipate an additional income of IR£300,000 per annum - 50% of this would be due to Riga.
 - I discussed their recent request for an additional IR£500,000. I indicated that we had received the cashflow projections and were trying to tie them back to the figures of rent schedules which we had received previously. We agreed that Mary Basquille would visit Cork and meet with John Deane and Aidan Lucy to go through the figures in detail. Following this we can have a more meaningful strategic type meeting.
- Overall I indicated that the position is very tight - he acknowledged this but is quite happy that interest is being covered. He recognises that a negative Barkhill decision will ~~have~~ cashflow implications in terms of interest cover but he feels that they can cover this from the additional rent from the North Main Street units and from additional rent from Cumberland house. He also indicated that the residual North Main Street Shops could be used to secure the additional IR£500,000. I responded to the effect that I regarded the income/value of these units as covering the existing debt.
- He indicated that they are at an advanced stage with the Smiths in relation to the Crumlin development beside the Submarine Bar. They see themselves getting cash out of this development and work is progressing at pace. They are trying to pre-sell units to Quinnsworth and Dunnes Stores. We did not get into a detailed discussion on this - Graham McDermott may have further information.

AIBQ.13 - 289

In relation to the mentioned of his involvement, together with Michael Tiernan, in the Temple Bar development, he indicated that they had discussions with Temple Bar Properties which had been very preliminary. They were requested, as one of six, to make a further proposal in relation to the development. Tiernan and Ambrose Kelly are working on same. He does not see them getting involved with this although he asked that we would not convey this view to Michael Tiernan at this stage.

ACTION

- Mary Basquille to arrange to visit Jone Deane/Aidan Lucy and to view the shopping centres in Cork following which we need to arrange a meeting with Owen O'Callaghan and John Deane in relation to the bigger picture.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 6: SECTION A - THE NEILSTOWN STADIUM AND RELATED MATTERS

INTRODUCTION

1.01 Between 1991 and 1998, the concept of the development of a sports stadium on the Neilstown/ Ballygaddy lands in Clondalkin in north Co. Dublin was actively considered and planned by Mr O’Callaghan and others. That concept was contemplated in three distinct and separate formats at different times within this eight-year period. These were, in approximate terms:

- 1991–2: a national football stadium
- 1992–4: an all-purpose national stadium
- 1997–8: a football stadium linked to Wimbledon Football Club

1.02 The option to purchase the Neilstown lands during the years 1991 to 1996 was held by a) Barkhill Ltd, whose shareholders were Mr Gilmartin and his wife (40 per cent), b) Riga Ltd (40 per cent) and c) AIB (20 per cent). However, there was no evidence to suggest that during this period Mr Gilmartin involved himself or was invited to involve himself in any shape or form with the stadium project.

1.03 Mr Gilmartin himself testified that he had no interest in the Neilstown lands beyond his endeavour in 1989 to acquire from Mr O’Callaghan/O’Callaghan Properties the option held by Merrygrove Ltd¹ to purchase the lands from Dublin Corporation, so as to ensure control of the Neilstown site while he progressed his plans for a town centre on Quarryvale. Mr O’Callaghan acknowledged that he had not involved Mr Gilmartin in his stadium plans although he agreed that, given the proposals he was formulating, via Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd, for these lands between 1992 and 1994 in particular, he would have had to engage in due course with Mr Gilmartin and AIB, having regard to their respective 40 per cent and 20 per cent ownership of the Merrygrove Ltd option. Mr O’Callaghan maintained, however, that Mr Gilmartin was on occasion provided with some information in relation to the stadium project.

¹ On 31 January 1989, Mr Gilmartin had acquired from Mr O’Callaghan’s company O’Callaghan (Properties) Limited, the Merrygrove option on the Neilstown lands from Dublin Corporation. Mr Gilmartin’s purpose in doing so was to leave the way clear for the progress of his Quarryvale Town Centre project. Merrygrove Ltd applied for planning permission to develop a town centre on the Neilstown lands in December 1989. Mr O’Callaghan, in evidence, maintained, that the validity of Merrygrove Ltd’s option agreement with Dublin Corporation required that such a planning permission application be lodged.

1.04 No stadium was in fact ever developed on the Neilstown site.

1.05 Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that the idea of building a stadium on the Neilstown lands came from Mr Lawlor. Mr O'Callaghan believed that Mr Lawlor in turn got the idea from a Government White Paper on the subject of the development of a national stadium in the Dublin region.²

1.06 Following the success of the 16 May 1991 motion to rezone the Quarryvale lands for a town centre, Mr O'Callaghan was anxious to identify an alternative use for the Neilstown lands (other than retail), in order to ensure confirmation, in due course, of the Quarryvale rezoning by countering opposition (both within and outside Dublin County Council) to the fact that the town centre zoning had been moved from Neilstown to Quarryvale. The success or otherwise of the 'moving' of the town centre zoning from Neilstown to Quarryvale depended on a suitable alternative use being promoted for the Neilstown lands.³ Mr O'Callaghan was anxious to ensure that the knowledge of a stadium project as a replacement development for the Neilstown site was known to elected councillors by mid 1992, when the Quarryvale rezoning confirmation vote was expected to arise for consideration from within Dublin County Council. Mr Dunlop acknowledged that, after the 16 May 1991 successful Quarryvale vote, there was concern that some councillors would continue to lobby for Neilstown (which had been rezoned to E (industrial) on 16 May 1991) to have its town centre zoning reinstated.⁴

1.07 In December 1989, Mr O'Callaghan, via Merrygrove Ltd, applied for planning permission to develop the Neilstown lands as a town centre, a permission which issued in September 1990. Certain aspects of this planning permission were appealed by Merrygrove Ltd to An Bord Pleanála on 13 November 1990, and the oral hearing of that appeal was scheduled to be heard by An Bord Pleanála on 21 May 1991. On 20 May 1991 Ambrose Kelly Group Architects, on behalf of Mr O'Callaghan/Merrygrove, wrote to An Bord Pleanála,

² From late 1987/8 there was discussion at Cabinet level about the development of a national sports centre. At a certain point in time a site at the Custom House docks had been identified as suitable, but a decision was made ultimately not to proceed for financial reasons and the disposal of the site at the Custom House docks was duly done. This decision had been made by early 1992.

³ There was considerable political controversy in West Dublin following the rezoning of Quarryvale as a town centre on 16 May 1991 particularly from John Corcoran of Green Property Plc who was in the process of constructing the Blanchardstown Town Centre. Mr Corcoran was lobbying hard for the reversal of the 16 May vote. Moreover, there was a serious risk that there would be political unrest among the population of Ronanstown/Neilstown and local politicians were concerned that they would have to explain why the town centre zoning for Neilstown, in place since 1983, had been moved.

withdrawing Merrygrove Ltd's application for planning permission for a town centre on the Neilstown lands.

1.08 With the withdrawal of the planning permission application by Mr O'Callaghan/Merrygrove Ltd by letter of 20 May 1991, the way was left open for the progression of the plan to build a town centre on the newly rezoned Quarryvale lands and for Mr O'Callaghan to put into place an action plan for an alternative development (to retail development) on the Neilstown lands.

THE NATIONAL FOOTBALL STADIUM PROPOSAL

1.09 According to Mr Dunlop, at a meeting between himself, Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor shortly after the 16 May 1991 vote, Mr Lawlor put forward the proposal to build a football stadium on the Neilstown lands.

1.10 The first documented evidence of the existence of this project was a letter of 29 May 1991, written by Cllr Colm McGrath to Mr Frank Fahey, Minister of State for Sport. The concept of a national football stadium required liaison with the Football Association of Ireland (FAI). Mr O'Callaghan's correspondence with the FAI commenced in 1991. By October 1991, a presentation had been made to Mr Fahey in relation to the 'National Soccer Stadium' proposal for North Clondalkin, and was followed by Mr O'Callaghan's letter to Mr Fahey of 4 November 1991. There was correspondence between Mr O'Callaghan and the FAI in November 1991, and it appeared that Mr O'Callaghan's proposals at this time involved a joint venture agreement to be entered into between the FAI and O'Callaghan Properties Ltd with regard to the development of a 'National Sports Stadium'. At all relevant times the concept of a national football stadium envisaged Government support, direct or indirect, in order for it to be viable.

1.11 On 3 December 1991, the Ambrose Kelly Group, on behalf of O'Callaghan Properties Ltd, lodged a submission (in the course of the first statutory public display of the Draft Development Plan 1991) with Dublin County Council, proposing the development of a National Soccer Stadium on the Neilstown/Ballygaddy lands.⁵ This submission was made in addition to the submission to maintain the D (town centre) zoning for the Quarryvale lands which had been achieved in May 1991.

1.12 In the course of his evidence, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that at the outset he regarded the stadium proposal as a mechanism merely to ensure that the Quarryvale lands would remain zoned town centre, but that over time the idea of a stadium for the Neilstown lands gained momentum and that as a result there was a succession of meetings between Mr O'Callaghan and the Minister for Sport and the FAI. Mr Dunlop likewise described the initial progress of the stadium idea as a 'ruse' to aid the progression of the Quarryvale Town Centre zoning.

1.13 The Tribunal was satisfied, as a matter of probability, that at its inception the stadium proposal was regarded as merely a mechanism to ensure that the town centre zoning on the Quarryvale lands would remain intact. That this was the original thinking was evidenced to some extent by a letter written by Mr John Deane (Mr O'Callaghan's solicitor and business partner) to Mr Michael O'Farrell of AIB on 10 February 1993 wherein it was stated:

£250,000.00 has been spent in connection with the Stadium project for the old Neilstown site.

By way of background to the expenditure you will recall that the Neilstown site was the original site zoned for the town centre. Part of the Quarryvale problem was to obtain the moving of the zoning from Neilstown to Quarryvale. The City Manager made it clear that he expected an alternative use to be found for the Neilstown site and that the site was not simply to be dumped and left there. With this in mind the Stadium project was conceived.

However to make the project seem a real project and not just a mythical scheme, it was necessary to prepare detailed and substantial drawings to such a standard that would lead to a detailed Planning application. Furthermore, a working model with a sliding roof and moving floor was also prepared. International consultants in the leisure field were retained to vet the project and Deloitte & Touche Accountants were also retained to give a feasibility report for the entire project for the American financiers who were interested in providing the finance.

The introduction to the financiers was made by the Taoiseach Albert Reynolds to Owen when the financiers were in Dublin to meet the Taoiseach who was then Minister for Finance. In order to establish credibility for the stadium project, it was necessary for the project to be seen as a viable workable project which would have the support of the Government, the FAI and other sporting organisations who may use the project. Considerable work was done in this regard and consultants employed to ensure that the project was presented in the best possible light as a credible project for the site.

1.14 Interestingly, the letter went on to explain, inter alia, that the lodgement of a planning application for a stadium on the site would in effect freeze or delay any other use for the site, or development in its immediate area. In the letter Mr Deane remarked: 'The consequence . . . is that the old Neilstown site is locked up for a number of years which will allow Quarryvale to progress without threat from the Neilstown site.'

1.15 However, the Tribunal was satisfied that, while the concept of a stadium for the Neilstown lands might not initially have been viewed as a definite or realistic project by Mr O'Callaghan, his thinking in this regard appeared to have changed by early 1992.

1.16 On 13 February 1992, Mr O'Callaghan wrote to Mr Louis Kilcoyne of the FAI concerning the proposed 'Football Stadium' and inter alia he advised Mr Kilcoyne that 'the present Political situation may be even more favourable to our proposal than the past'. The Tribunal was satisfied that this was a reference to Mr Reynolds' election as Taoiseach.

1.17 It was clear to the Tribunal that Mr O'Callaghan's intention, in or about February 1992, with regard to the development (with the FAI) of a football stadium was that it would be developed with Government grant support. In the course of an oral submission made to Dublin County Council on 6 March 1992, a manuscript notation on a document provided by Mr O'Callaghan to a Council official referred to the likely cost of the proposed football stadium as IR£35 million, with a provision of IR£15 million from the Government.⁶ Mr O'Callaghan agreed that it was probable that he had provided this information to the County Council on 6 March 1992. In the course of that submission Mr O'Callaghan advised:

'We are at an advanced stage in negotiations with the FAI, the relevant Government Departments and other interested parties in formulating a proposal to fund and provide a 40,000 all-seater National Football Stadium on the Ronanstown site.'

1.18 A memorandum compiled by AIB on 18 March 1992, following a meeting with Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Deane, noted that:

In relation to the alternative site of Clondalkin, they are progressing the concept of a stadium and have produced a model. They believe that the stadium could be viable at a total cost of £32m and would be funded by £10m from the State, £10m from the sale of 10 year tickets and perhaps another £10m from private promoters. This would be 40,000 seating capacity.

⁶ The notation indicated that the balance of the funds was to be provided by the developer and the FAI.

1.19 On 18 March 1992, Mr Dunlop wrote to the Minister for Sport, Mr Liam Aylward, seeking to arrange a meeting between Mr O’Callaghan and the Minister. It was not clear if in fact such a meeting took place, but there was evidence of contact between the Minister’s office and Mr Dunlop’s office in relating to setting up a meeting.

1.20 The Tribunal considered it probable (and Mr O’Callaghan did not dispute) that by February/March 1992, Mr O’Callaghan had discussed the idea of a football stadium for the Neilstown lands with Mr Reynolds, including the requirement for Government financial support for the project.⁷

1.21 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that, while in the course of discussions he had with Mr Reynolds in February/March 1992, he had received no assurances from Mr Reynolds on the subject of state funding for a stadium, he recalled that there had nevertheless been a lot of goodwill towards the project from Mr Reynolds. Consequently, Mr O’Callaghan believed, in March 1992 that his proposal for a national football stadium would receive Government support.

THE ‘ALL-PURPOSE NATIONAL STADIUM’ PROPOSAL

1.22 The Tribunal was satisfied that by late spring 1992, the concept of developing a national football stadium on the Neilstown lands had moved to a proposal for an ‘All-Purpose National Stadium’. It would appear that by spring 1992, Mr O’Callaghan’s negotiations with the FAI had come to naught.⁸ Mr O’Callaghan claimed that the national football stadium project ‘didn’t stack up financially’, as the FAI did not have the funds available for investment in the project.

1.23 The idea of an ‘All-Purpose National Stadium’ came about following contact between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Bill O’Connor of Chilton & O’Connor, a Los Angeles based company which provided a finance facilitating service for major infrastructural and development projects.⁹

1.24 Mr O’Callaghan believed that his introduction to Chilton & O’Connor had come through either Mr Reynolds or Mr Lawlor, as he was advised by Mr O’Connor that Mr Reynolds was instrumental in effecting that introduction. At some stage in the early 1990s, Mr Lawlor’s son, Mr Niall Lawlor became an employee of Chilton & O’Connor in Los Angeles. Mr Lawlor advised the Tribunal

⁷ Mr Reynolds was elected Taoiseach on 11 February 1992.

⁸ Participation by the FAI continued to be envisaged in the stadium’s second inception.

⁹ Chilton & O’Connor was a US firm with expertise in creating municipal bonds which would then be sold on the market.

that 'Bill O'Connor spear headed and coordinated the putting together at my request the financing proposal for the proposed National Soccer Stadium at Neilstown.'

1.25 Evidence to the Tribunal established that the entity through which Mr O'Callaghan intended ultimately to progress his stadium proposal was Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd, whose shareholding was to be held by Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly, but with Mr Lawlor's interest to be held in trust.¹⁰

1.26 Government support for a stadium at Neilstown was clearly considered to have been a vital ingredient in the overall plan to construct an 'All-Purpose National Stadium' on the Neilstown site. The Tribunal was satisfied that significant effort was invested, particularly by Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan, in cultivating contacts with Government Ministers in order to ensure that such support was forthcoming. The evidence indicated that, from early to mid 1992 onwards, Mr O'Callaghan was confident of Government support for the project and did on occasions indicate to interested parties that such support was assured.

1.27 The Tribunal was satisfied that as the year 1992 progressed, Mr O'Callaghan maintained high level Government contact in relation to the stadium issue, as did Mr Dunlop. Documentation available to the Tribunal indicated that Mr Dunlop was instrumental in arranging meetings (which he sometimes also attended) for Mr O'Callaghan¹¹ with senior political figures, including the Taoiseach Mr Reynolds, in relation to the proposed stadium project. Mr O'Callaghan, together with Mr Dunlop, met Mr Reynolds on 8 or 29 April 1992 in relation to the project. On 29 April 1992, prior to his meeting with the Taoiseach, Mr O'Callaghan apparently met with Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor¹² in Mr Dunlop's office.

1.28 Mr Dunlop's diary for 10 April 1992 recorded a meeting with Mr Ahern, then Minister for Finance, but Mr Dunlop did not believe that the meeting concerned the stadium proposal. Other individuals with whom meetings were arranged, and to whom information presentations were made, included Mr Liam Aylward, Minister for Sport, Mr Michael Smith, Minister for the Environment and Mr John Fitzgerald, Dublin City and County Manager. Mr Dunlop's office telephone contact records and his diary for the period, in particular, between March and December 1992, indicated significant contact between senior Government figures (or their representatives) and Mr Dunlop (or his office), although not necessarily relating to the stadium project. In March 1992, Mr Dunlop's office telephone records noted telephone contact with Mr Aylward's office. In April 1992, Mr Dunlop's office telephone records indicated one telephone call from Mr Ahern's office (7 April), one telephone call from the Taoiseach's office (8 April) while his diary referred to two meetings with the Taoiseach (8 and 29 April), one meeting with Mr Ahern (10 April) and a reference to telephoning Mr Smith's private secretary, Mr Gerry Rice (28 April). Mr Dunlop's office records for May 1992 suggested telephone contact from the Taoiseach's office (four instances), Mr Ahern's office and Mr Aylward. In addition, Mr Dunlop's diary for May 1992 noted two meetings with the Taoiseach's office, and one meeting each with Mr Smith, Mr Aylward and Mr Ahern.

¹⁰ See elsewhere in the Report for the Tribunal's consideration of the proposed interest of these individuals in the stadium project.

¹¹ In his evidence Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that, given his friendship with Mr Reynolds, he did not need Mr Dunlop to arrange contact with Mr Reynolds.

1.29 In July 1992, and again in August 1992, Mr Ahern's office contacted Mr Dunlop's office. In September 1992, Mr Dunlop's diary recorded meetings with Mr Ahern and the Taoiseach, Mr Reynolds and Mr Aylward, the Minister for Sport. Mr Dunlop also met Mr Ahern on 10 September. Telephone calls to Mr Dunlop's office in September 1992 were noted from Mr Rice, Mr Aylward and two from the Taoiseach's office. In November 1992, Mr Dunlop's office telephone records indicated that Mr Ahern telephoned on one occasion, while the Taoiseach's office sought to contact Mr Dunlop on one occasion. In December 1992, Mr Ahern again sought to make telephone contact with Mr Dunlop.

1.30 Mr O'Callaghan met Mr Smith, the Minister for the Environment, on 7 May 1992, a meeting at which the necessity for capital grants for the improvement of the road structure in the Neilstown area was likely to have been discussed. Mr O'Callaghan commented that he would not have been doing his job if he had not raised this topic with the Minister, but that this was not the purpose of the meeting.

1.31 The Tribunal was satisfied (and Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged in his evidence) that from about spring 1992, Mr O'Callaghan received assurances of political support from Mr Reynolds for the stadium project generally.

1.32 Mr Dunlop's diary for 30 April 1992 recorded a meeting between himself and Mr O'Connor of Chilton & O'Connor. In a fax message on 6 May 1992, compiled by Mr Barry Flannery of Trivo AG¹³ for the attention of Mr Neal

¹³ Trivo AG's proposed role in the stadium project was to finance it through the issuing of bonds.

Gunn of 'Houston Sports Association Inc',¹⁴ reference was made to a meeting with Mr Reynolds. Mr Flannery's memo contained the following:

The present status of the project is that we had a meeting last week with Owen O'Callaghan of O'Callaghan Properties Ltd who is the owner of the Stadium site. He and Frank Dunlop had just come from a meeting with the Prime Minister Albert Reynolds where the support of the National Lottery for such a project was assured.

The most important next step is to start on a feasibility study. I gave Owen O'Callaghan a copy of the submission by the Deloitte people. He is going to provide us with a copy of his own study—done by the local office but on the basis of a single-purpose Stadium i.e. solely for soccer. A lot of the demographic data etc. out of this report must be available, so it should only be a question of extrapolating this data to cover all the other aspects of a multi-purpose-Stadium. Your input on this matter would be appreciated and hence the desire on behalf of Frank Dunlop and Owen O'Callaghan to meet up with you.

One of the main purposes of conducting the feasibility study is to be in a position, to present the officials at the Ministry of Sport with a number of alternatives, e.g. multi-purpose as opposed to single purpose, 40,000, 50,000, 70,000 seater and associated costs etc. As a rule of thumb one is using the figure of £1,000 construction cost per seat, would cost £40 million. The Holzmann people, however, indicated that the costs rise exponentially per seat once one gets above the 50,000 seat-level. Some input would be appreciated on this aspect.

1.33 In his memorandum Mr Flannery also stated:

In conclusion I would say that the ball lies very much in O'Callaghan's court at the moment and it is up to him to make the next move. Political support at the projects seems to be there and according to Tom Keane and Bill O'Connor the project is readily advanceable once the support of the National Lottery is assured.

1.34 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Flannery's belief as to the fact of support with National Lottery funds arose as a result of discussions he had with Mr Dunlop, or Mr O'Callaghan, or both.

1.35 On 4/5 May 1992, Mr Dunlop's office records indicated direct telephone contact from the offices of Mr Reynolds, Mr Ahern, the Minister for Finance, and Mr Lawlor. Mr Dunlop's diary suggested that there was probably a meeting with Mr Reynolds on 14 May 1992. If the meeting occurred, Mr O'Callaghan probably attended.

1.36 As of 14 May 1992, Mr Gunn of Houston Sports Association Inc was of the view that there was political support for Mr O'Callaghan's stadium proposal, as he recorded, inter alia, in a memorandum of 14 May 1992: 'It seems to be good news that the support of the National Lottery is there. I guess we have to see if it becomes a reality.' References in Mr Dunlop's office telephone records for mid May 1992 suggested the presence in Dublin of representatives of Chilton & O'Connor. On 21 May 1992 Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan met with Mr Aylward, Minister for Sport. Mr Dunlop's diary recorded a meeting with Mr Reynolds on 27 May 1992, but Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that his meeting related to 'Citywest'.¹⁵

1.37 In the course of his evidence Mr O'Callaghan maintained that the financial support he believed he was likely to receive, and which, he claimed, was indicated to him by Mr Reynolds (subject, according to Mr O'Callaghan, to the consent of the then Minister for Finance, Mr Ahern) was funding from the National Lottery. A memorandum compiled by Mr Reid, of the Ambrose Kelly Group, on 18 June 1992 stated:

It was confirmed that the financing package for the proposed development of the National Stadium was by means of municipal bonds raised by Chiltern O'Connor Incorporated. Under the terms of this agreement Houston Sports Association Incorporated would be engaged to manage the facility and the Government would underwrite the shortfall in the day to day running of the facility on a per annum basis and this funding would come from lottery sources.

1.38 In the course of his evidence, Mr O'Callaghan denied that he sought designated area tax status for the stadium project at any stage in his discussions with Mr Reynolds or senior Government Ministers. The Tribunal noted, however, that Mr Frank Bowen of Deloitte & Touche (who were commissioned to compile a feasibility study in relation to the stadium project) wrote as follows in a letter of 23 June 1992 to Mr O'Callaghan:

My colleague, Kieran Mulcahy and I were pleased to meet with you to discuss your proposals for the development of a multi purpose stadium in Clondalkin. I understand that your proposals have advanced to the point where you now wish to commission a preliminary market and financial feasibility study for the proposed stadium project. I further understand that you wish this study to be conducted without publicity and that we are to limit our contacts to certain key individuals whose input to the stadium could be significant. The full market study will now be conducted as Phase II of the assignment.

This engagement letter sets out our understanding of the project, our approach for the financial study, together with our proposed study team, timetable and fees.

Background

O'Callaghan Properties have been examining the feasibility of developing a major sports stadium in Clondalkin for some time. During the course of the evaluation, discussions have taken place with L.M.I Inc., who have been identified as potential managers of the proposed stadium, and with Chilton O'Connor Inc., investment bankers who are considering the viability of a US bond issue to fund the proposed stadium.

The Company's architect, Ambrose Kelly & Associates, have prepared preliminary designs for a stadium with a capacity for 40,000 seated spectators. The design proposals includes a retractable roof and floor which will add significantly to the number and range of events which the stadium is capable of holding.

The company has had discussions with the Department of Education who have indicated that a State Guarantee could be forthcoming to secure borrowing for the project, together with possible designated area tax status similar to the tax status granted to Tallaght to encourage investment. It is understood that to secure these incentives, any proposal would have to provide for the range of sports which it was intended would be catered for in the Department's National Indoor Sports Arena proposal, excluding the swimming pool. The stadium should also return to State ownership at some time in the future.

1.39 Deloitte & Touche reported the estimated cost of the project as IR£47.5 m.

1.40 The thrust of Mr O'Callaghan's evidence in relation to the issue of references to tax designation in the Deloitte & Touche documentation, was that such references were erroneous, and he denied having advised Mr Bowen at any stage that tax designation status might be forthcoming to the project. The Tribunal rejected Mr O'Callaghan's evidence in this regard, particularly in light of the fact that the error (on Mr Bowen's part) was not rectified by Mr O'Callaghan in his letter to Mr Bowen of 26 June 1992, nor indeed at any point thereafter when Deloitte & Touche made reference to the issue of tax designation. In August 1992, Deloitte & Touche issued their preliminary feasibility report with regard to the stadium project. The report made reference to possible state support being made available by 'a direct payment' from 'the National Lottery' and went on to state that 'An alternative approach would be for the Government to grant Designated Area Tax Status to the proposed Stadium site on a similar basis to the Temple Bar area.’

1.41 The Tribunal was satisfied (as is evident from matters set out elsewhere in this chapter) that at all relevant times while the ‘All-Purpose National Stadium’ project was being promoted at Governmental level, Mr O’Callaghan made the case for Designated Area tax status for the project. On 25 September 1992, Deloitte & Touche were certainly of this view when, under the heading ‘Clondalkin Stadium proposals’, they wrote to Mr O’Callaghan as follows:

From our discussion, I understand that the present position regarding Government support for the project may be summarised as follows:

- A grant of £3 to £4 million per annum for 10 years from the National Lottery towards the cost of developing the Stadium.
- A State guarantee will not be forthcoming to secure the balance of the funding required to develop the Stadium.
- During previous discussions with the Government, it was indicated that Designated Area tax status would be granted to the proposed Stadium site. While this was not discussed specifically at your recent meeting, you believe that this is still the position.
- The level of National Lottery and Government support indicates that the Stadium is not to be transferred to State ownership at some time in the future.

1.42 Similarly to Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Dunlop professed not to have any recollection of the issue of tax designation for the stadium proposal having been discussed.

1.43 However, Mr Deane’s evidence to the Tribunal suggested that tax designation status for the stadium project was pursued and discussed. Mr Deane told the Tribunal that at the time it was felt that tax designation status would be difficult to obtain. The Tribunal also noted the contents of a statement provided by Mr Reynolds (who did not give evidence to the Tribunal on the issue¹⁶) wherein, although professing to have no specific recollection of receiving representations from Mr O’Callaghan, he suggested that any representation that he might have received would have been, most likely, about tax designation.

¹⁶ On 30 July 2008, Mr Reynolds was determined by the Tribunal to be medically unfit to give evidence. Prior to that date, on Days 478 and 633, Mr Reynolds had given evidence, and was due to be recalled as a witness.

1.44 Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor met on 28 May 1992, following which Mr O’Callaghan wrote to Mr Dunlop under the heading ‘Action to be taken on Stadium after our meeting on 28th last.’¹⁷

1.45 Mr O’Callaghan directed as follows:

1. AFK to proceed with outline permission and to be in a position to lodge by mid July.
2. FD to get as much information as possible from Minister.
3. We meet Kieran Mulcahy at 10:30am in Mount Street on Thursday 4th June to progress Feasibility.
4. While Feasibility is being undertaken, we arrange to meet Flannery—Neal, etc., and update them with a view to using their names when the Project is officially announced and to get a feel from them as to what involvement they see themselves having in the project and where we come in.
5. When Feasibility is completed we meet again with Neal, etc., and tell them what involvement we require in the project.
6. Our involvement to include the group of four who met and discussed this at 6:30pm on Thursday 28th May.
7. To ensure that the opposition does not get an opportunity to play down the Project we must do the following:
 - (a) FAI – FD – AFK and OO’C meet Connolly on 10th June. AFK to ensure that this meeting takes place.
 - (b) FD at the appropriate time to brief Minister and Government Press Office.
 - (c) FD to have ‘suitable’ press release with Houston Sports and Leisure Management etc., to the fore and O’CP somewhere in the background.
 - (d) Inform in advance selected Councillors.
8. AFK and FD to meet DS regarding additional land.
P.S. Quarryvale
We meet as many Councillors as we can on Wednesday and Thursday afternoon.
We must ensure at all costs that our zoning decision does not come up until September.
c.c. AFK

1.46 With regard to item 6 ‘Our involvement to include the group of four who met and discussed this at 6:30pm on Thursday 28th May’, the evidence established that this referred to the proposal which, the Tribunal was satisfied,

¹⁷ This document came to the Tribunal from discovery by Mr Lawlor—it was not discovered by either Mr O’Callaghan or Mr Dunlop.

was being mooted by mid 1992, whereby Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly intended, via the corporate entity Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd, would acquire the Neilstown lands on which the ‘All-Purpose National Stadium’ was to be built, with a view to these lands passing into their ownership prior to any agreement being entered into at national level regarding the stadium.

1.47 Mr Dunlop’s diary for 3 June 1992, recorded a meeting with Mr Kelly, Mr Lawlor and Mr O’Callaghan, at which the proposed involvement of Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor in the stadium project was likely to have been discussed.

1.48 Prior to furnishing his un-redacted diaries to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop attempted to conceal the reference to Mr Lawlor’s attendance at this meeting.¹⁸ When Mr Dunlop furnished his redacted diaries to the Tribunal in July 1999 and April 2000, in purported compliance with the Tribunal’s request that he disclose all diary entries relevant to Quarryvale relative to specific periods of time, he also failed to disclose diary entries in relation to his meetings in the period 1991 to 1993 with politicians, including Mr Reynolds, Mr Ahern and Mr Flynn. Mr Dunlop’s initial discovery to the Tribunal of his redacted diaries likewise failed (save in one instance) to disclose diary entries relating to meetings he had with Mr Lawlor, either alone or with others. Mr Dunlop did discover diary entries relating to the stadium project generally, including meetings he had with Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Kelly. Subsequently, when his un-redacted diaries were furnished to the Tribunal in 2001, the extent of his contact with senior political figures became evident.

1.49 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop’s failure, in July 1999 and April 2000, to disclose diary entries relating to such meetings with senior political figures which concerned, in part at least, the stadium project was a deliberate act on his part to conceal this information from the Tribunal.

1.50 Mr Dunlop’s diary for 15 June 1992 suggested that Mr Bill O’Connor was in Ireland at that time in connection with the stadium project.

1.51 On 3 July 1992, Mr O’Callaghan wrote to Mr Flannery (and faxed a copy to Mr Lawlor) with regard to the stadium project advising him, inter alia, that ‘The Minister for Sport and the Taoiseach himself are both anxious that we proceed with haste, and indeed we find ourselves under some pressure to perform.’

¹⁸ See the Chapter Fifteen entitled ‘Frank Dunlop’ in relation to Mr Dunlop’s deliberate obliteration of information recorded in his diaries.

1.52 In his letter, Mr O'Callaghan noted Mr Flannery and Mr Gunn's concern for a meeting with him, Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor in mid July 1992. Mr O'Callaghan also advised that he had appointed Mr Dunlop as coordinator for the stadium project. In his evidence, Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged having met with Mr Reynolds prior to sending this letter to Mr Flannery, but denied that he had come under any pressure from Mr Reynolds to progress the project.

1.53 The meeting with Mr Flannery and others, anticipated in Mr O'Callaghan's 3 July 1992 letter, duly took place on 21 July 1992. In advance of that meeting Mr Kelly prepared an agenda with the following items for discussion:

- (a) Owners of Site
 - (b) Stadium Management Agreements
 - (c) Design Technology and Architects
 - (d) Board of Management
 - (e) Legal Stadium Owners.
- Other business.*

1.54 The Tribunal had sight of the minutes of the meeting of 21 July 1992 from Mr Lawlor's discovery.¹⁹ Attendees at the meeting included Mr Dunlop (described as Chairman), Mr Owen O'Callaghan (MD, O'Callaghan Properties Ltd), Mr Flannery, Mr Kelly and members of his staff, Mr Lawlor, Mr Bowen of Deloitte & Touche and other members of that firm, Mr Gunn, and other individuals involved in the proposals to finance the project. The minutes recorded that the purpose of the meeting was 'a) to identify with one another; b) to establish the necessary synergies for the speedy implementation of the project.'

1.55 Mr O'Callaghan was recorded in the minutes as apprising those present that:

Meetings had already taken place on the matter at the highest levels of Government and there was now an urgent requirement for progress. Top level secret discussions have also taken place with the national soccer authority (FAI) and potential end-users such as entertainment organisers. Discreet contacts have also been established with the planning authorities.

To underline his commitment to the project Mr O'Callaghan told the meeting that it was his intention to lodge for planning permission for a Stadium on the North Clondalkin site in early September '92.

¹⁹ Neither Mr Dunlop nor Mr O'Callaghan made discovery of this document.

1.56 Mr Kelly updated the meeting on the design plans for the stadium and copies of a Deloitte & Touche document were distributed. Mr Lawlor was recorded as giving 'an overview of the West Dublin area from a socio-economic and planning viewpoint.' He was also recorded as giving:

...a presentation of the infrastructural developments in the West Dublin area over the past 4/5 years with specific reference to the road network and the proposed rail link for North Clondalkin. He also indicated that the present Government was enthusiastic about the provision of a Stadium and this was indicated by the feasibility study undertaken two years ago for a location in the Custom House Docks area of the City. This location proved unviable and the requirement for an alternative site remains. He stated that in his view the North Clondalkin site was ideal and would receive the approval of both Government and Local Authority.

1.57 The 'Preliminary Feasibility Report', prepared by Deloitte & Touche, appeared to have been issued to Mr O'Callaghan in August 1992. It provided under the heading 'TAXATION INCENTIVES AND NATIONAL LOTTERY FUNDING' inter alia, as follows:

Based on the preliminary market and financial feasibility study, the proposed National Stadium could generate an operating surplus of approximately £.255m per annum before debt service costs.

If the development costs of IR£50m.were 100% debt financed through a 30 year commercial mortgage at 9%, the annual repayment would be £4.867m. The annual cash deficit, net of the operating surplus required to meet the annual mortgage payment, would be IR£4.612m.

The Developer would need a contribution from the State of IR£4.612m. per annum over the term of the mortgage to undertake the development of the Stadium. This contribution could be made by a direct payment of this amount from the National Lottery.

An alternative approach would be for the Government to grant Designated Area Tax Status to the proposed Stadium site on a similar basis to the Temple Bar area. This would allow the Developer to seek an investor to utilise the taxation allowance and reduce the amount of the development cost to be funded on a long term mortgage. The Developer would still require a contribution from the National Lottery to meet the annual mortgage payment.

For the purposes of illustration, if the Developer was able to secure an investor for the capital allowance with a 40% Corporation Tax rate, the allowances would have a value of IR£20m.

An investor would discount the value of IR£20m. in allowances to a lesser figure to allow for interest until it was in a position to utilise the allowances and a return on its investment. For the purposes of this illustration, we have assumed that an investor would be prepared to pay IR£17m. This would have the effect of reducing the net investment to be funded by long term mortgage to IR£33m.

A mortgage for £33m. over 30 years at 9% would be IR£3.212m per annum. On the basis of an operating surplus of £255m before interest costs, the annual subsidy required from the Lottery to meet the annual mortgage payment would be reduced to IR£2.957m.

It is the Developer's intention that in return for the requested level of Government assistance, the proposed National Stadium would return to State ownership at an agreed future date.

1.58 A meeting appeared to have taken place on 13 August 1992 between Mr Dunlop, Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor. It was likely to have concentrated, in part, on the stadium plans and the proposed involvement of all four in that project.

1.59 Following what the Tribunal believed was an intensive lobbying campaign at senior Government level, the proposal to build an 'All-Purpose National Stadium' was launched in public on 10 September 1992. An Irish Times article made reference to the Taoiseach, Mr Reynolds, as being reportedly 'very positive' about the project. A letter written by Mr Dunlop to the Secretary of the Department of the Taoiseach on 11 September 1992, suggested that on 9 September 1992, Mr Reynolds was briefed on the stadium project at Government Buildings by Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan. Mr Dunlop believed that the question of state funding for the stadium was discussed, although he did not believe that the issue of tax designation formed part of that discussion. Mr Dunlop acknowledged, however, that the stadium project would not have been launched in September 1992, in the absence of encouragement from senior figures at Government level that state financial support for the scheme was forthcoming. Mr Dunlop met Mr Ahern on 10 September 1992²⁰. Mr Ahern told the Tribunal that this meeting was concerned with National Toll Roads, and he acknowledged the possibility that Mr Dunlop may have mentioned the stadium project.

1.60 On 14 October 1992, Mr Dunlop, Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Lawlor, Mr Kelly and Mr Deane met and probably discussed the stadium project and the proposed beneficial interest of Messrs Dunlop, Lawlor and Kelly in the venture.

1.61 Application for planning permission for the stadium project was made to Dublin County Council on 19 October 1992 by Merrygrove Ltd. On 17

²⁰ Mr Ahern's diary for 4 September 1992 also recorded a meeting with Mr Dunlop.

November 1992 (in the course of the general election campaign), Mr O'Callaghan, under cover of a letter to Mr Reynolds, made an election contribution of IR£5,000 to Fianna Fáil.²¹

1.62 Following the General Election of 25 November 1992, the Fianna Fáil/Labour Programme for Government included a capital project to 'support the building of an indoor National Sports Stadium', although no particular location for the stadium was identified.

1.63 The Tribunal was satisfied that the progress of the 'All-Purpose National Stadium' proposal by December 1992 was such, that one of its initial objectives (i.e. to have in place a viable alternative use (to retail development) for the Neilstown lands, by the time the second Quarryvale vote arose for consideration by the County Council on 17 December 1992) had been achieved. The Tribunal was further satisfied that the existence of a stadium proposal in all probability played a part in persuading councillors (who might otherwise not have supported Quarryvale) to support the confirmation of a town centre type zoning on the Quarryvale lands, albeit scaled back to a permitted retail use of 250,000 square feet.

1.64 Contact regarding the stadium project at senior political level by Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan continued throughout 1993. Mr O'Callaghan wrote to Mr Reynolds on 28 January 1993 as follows:

Dear Taoiseach,

Hope you are keeping well.

Frank Dunlop told me you were enquiring about the National Stadium and asked me to contact you.

We have run into some difficulties, short-term I hope, with the Roads Department of Dublin County Council. The Traffic Engineers are concerned with the road network leading to the Stadium site.

When we discussed the Stadium with them originally they did not see any problem. However, when we made a detailed Planning Application, this concern arose.

I am in contact with them daily and, in fairness to them, they are trying to solve the problem. Both themselves and the Planners are very enthusiastic about the project. I should know where I stand in the next 3 weeks, and will then explain the situation to you, if you can spare me 15 or 20 minutes. I will ring your secretary to make an appointment.

²¹ This letter is considered in greater detail elsewhere in the Report.

1.65 By 12 February 1993, Mr O'Callaghan was in a position to advise Mr Bowen of Deloitte & Touche as follows:

The Taoiseach has now got himself directly involved in this and at the opening of the national Basketball Stadium recently, announced that the Stadium would commence in the near future, and publicly asked the County Manager to speed up the Planning Process. This of course has caused all kinds of problems resulting in me having to meet the County Manager on Wednesday 24th of February and report back to the Taoiseach thereafter. The Minister for the Environment has also been asked by the Taoiseach to report to him on the project.

I have also spoken to the Taoiseach in the past few days and he has repeated to me his support for the project.

1.66 In the same communication Mr O'Callaghan stated that:

Overall I am reasonably confident that the project will proceed. There is a very strong will and commitment for it to proceed, and as you know, it is in the Government's 'Programme for Government' a fact that the Taoiseach has mentioned to me on a number of occasions.

1.67 Mr Reynolds' diary for 5 March 1993, recorded a meeting with Mr Dunlop, and it was likely that Mr Dunlop used the occasion to raise the stadium project with Mr Reynolds.

1.68 It was apparent to the Tribunal that, by mid 1993, the issue of how the 'All-Purpose National Stadium' would be funded continued to be a matter of discussion as between Mr O'Callaghan and his advisors, Deloitte & Touche. On 17 June 1993, in response to a request from Mr O'Callaghan concerning the level of funding which would be required from the Government in order to proceed with the sports stadium, as well as the manner in which the Government could make such funding available, Deloitte & Touche informed Mr O'Callaghan, inter alia, that the possible sources of Government funding would be EC Structural Fund grants, National Lottery grants and Designated Area tax status.

1.69 The decision to grant planning permission for the stadium was made on 23 August 1993, and the permission was granted on 7 October 1993.

1.70 In a letter written by Mr Dunlop to his solicitors, Arthur Cox²² on 6 September 1993 Mr Dunlop referred to 'strong backing' from the Government for the stadium project.

²² See Chapter 2, Part 6, Section B, 'Big One'

On 10 September 1993, a memorandum prepared by Mr Dunlop's solicitors recorded that the project had a Government commitment of IR£5m for ten years with funding to come, it appeared, from the National Lottery. While Mr Dunlop disputed the accuracy of that record, the Tribunal was satisfied that it indeed accurately recorded what Mr Dunlop had advised his solicitors Arthur Cox, at the time.

1.71 On 7 September 1993, Mr Kevin Burke, Senior Vice President of Chilton & O'Connor Inc wrote to a potential investor in the stadium project as follows:

The Stadium was permitted and the site approved by the Dublin Council on August 24. We have been formally retained by the developer to senior manager this transaction. The Taoiseach (Prime Minister) Mr Reynolds, was recently in our offices here in Los Angeles and we are very confident that the level of support which the Republic of Ireland has committed will create a very attractive security.

1.72 Detail made available to the Tribunal regarding the timing of Mr Reynolds' visit to Chilton & O'Connor indicated that it took place in March 1993. Mr Dunlop stated in evidence that he knew that Mr Reynolds had met with Mr Bill O'Connor in the US. On 4 March 1993, Mr Niall Lawlor, at the behest of Chilton & O'Connor, had communicated with the Irish Consulate in Los Angeles for the purpose of adding Mr O'Connor's name to the guest list for a reception to be hosted for Mr Reynolds.

1.73 A memorandum compiled by Mr O'Farrell of AIB on 16 September 1993 made reference, inter alia, to Mr Deane having 'indicated that Owen has been in discussions with the Taoiseach and the Minister for Finance in relation to same' (the national stadium). Mr O'Farrell also noted Mr Deane relaying the following:

It could be that the State would be willing to inject a IR£5 million annual subvention to the project on a running cost basis. Based on projections, they believe that the final debt excluding the above subvention, could be around IR£12m. There (sic) strategy remains not to get directly involved in same but if something is going to happen to ensure that they can get some kind of a project manager fee or a finders fee out of same.

1.74 In the course of his evidence, Mr Deane disputed the accuracy of Mr O'Farrell's note insofar as it recorded that Mr Deane had advised AIB that Mr O'Callaghan had been talking to Mr Ahern in 1993 about the stadium project.

1.75 The Tribunal was satisfied that for the most part, throughout the period 1992 to 1994, Mr O’Callaghan concentrated on lobbying Mr Reynolds to support the stadium project, while Mr Dunlop concentrated on lobbying Mr Ahern. A memorandum compiled by Arthur Cox, Mr Dunlop’s solicitors, dated 6 October 1993, referred to envisaged contact with Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern. It read:

I confirm that I spoke with Frank Dunlop on the phone on a number of occasions over the last couple of weeks. A meeting was scheduled to take place yesterday 5th October 1993 with Albert Reynolds in relation to the project but I understand that the meeting was cancelled. A meeting has now been scheduled for 8th October 1993 with Bertie Aherne and further meetings are planned with Albert Reynolds, and the Minister for Sport later next week. Frank Dunlop said he will contact me late next week for the purposes of updating us on how matters are progressing.

1.76 No meeting apparently took place with Mr Ahern at that time. Mr Ahern maintained to the Tribunal that his knowledge of Mr O’Callaghan’s stadium proposal as of October 1993 was limited to what was in the public domain, save that he conceded that the matter could have been mentioned at Cabinet.

1.77 On 28 October 1993, Mr Dunlop met with Mr Ahern. The meeting was recorded thus in Mr Dunlop’s diary: ‘Call to see BA’. Mr Dunlop accepted that the stadium project was possibly discussed by him at that meeting. Mr Dunlop’s diary for November/December 1993 recorded at least two further meetings with Mr Ahern and an attendance by Mr Dunlop on 15 December 1993 at ‘Bertie’s reception.’

1.78 It appeared that Mr Dunlop had lobbied Mr Ahern about the issue from the content of his letter to Mr Ahern of 1 December 1993, which was in the following terms:

Dear Minister,

You will recall that I spoke to you recently with regard to the proposed National All-Purpose Stadium at Neilstown, Clondalkin, Dublin 22.

To avoid adding to the pressures on your schedule by seeking to arrange a meeting with Owen O’Callaghan and myself I have collated the relevant material on the matter for your personal perusal.

Included in the documentation is a Deloitte & Touche ‘Market & Financial Feasibility Study’ commissioned by Owen O’Callaghan with regard to Stadium support options. The relevant sections are at page 1 to 4 inclusive.

Obviously, when your time permits Owen O’Callaghan and myself would greatly appreciate a meeting to discuss the matter in greater detail.

Meanwhile if there is any further information you require in this matter please don't hesitate to call me.

1.79 Commenting on this reference to Mr Dunlop having spoken to him 'recently' with regard to the stadium, Mr Ahern told the Tribunal:

'I'd say all that was when he was in on other things he might have mentioned he was going to send in this feasibility study, but in fact the feasibility study went into the department during December 1993, and the note that was done in the department, the one I referred to earlier, which was dated by Mr O'Sullivan, who was the relevant official, was the 23rd December 1993.'

1.80 However, the Tribunal was satisfied that in the period immediately prior to 1 December 1993, Mr Dunlop and Mr Ahern discussed the stadium project.

1.81 Asked why he had not made reference in his statements to the Tribunal to contact with, or from Mr Dunlop in relation to the stadium issue in 1993, Mr Ahern stated:

'My diary shows I had no meeting with Mr Dunlop on that issue in 1993, despite what that letter says, and based on the Department of Finance. It also shows while he was offering a meeting with Mr O'Callaghan about the stadium at that time I didn't take up that meeting, I didn't have the meeting. And the document that was sent in, like thousands of other documents, would have went to the officials of the department and they did a note on the document, so I mean I wouldn't—if you are asking when I was doing my first issue, that I remember every document that was put in, I remember the issues where it was recorded in my diaries where I had meetings with Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop and that meeting was a meeting that took place in October 1994.'

1.82 The enclosure with Mr Dunlop's 1 December 1993 letter to Mr Ahern, was probably a document compiled for Mr O'Callaghan by Deloitte & Touche in September 1993, entitled 'Private & Confidential National Sports Stadium Options for Government Financial Support.'

1.83 The state support, as envisaged by Deloitte & Touche, included the assumption that 'The Stadium site will be granted Designated Area Status on a basis similar to Tallaght.' The document also referred to the feasibility of the project being:

. . . dependant on receiving sufficient Government support to reduce the level of borrowing required for the project to the point where it can service and repay the outstanding borrowing over a period of time from operating profits.

The structure and timing of the Government support package are critical factors affecting the total level of support required to reduce borrowing to a level which can be sustained and repaid from the operating revenues generated by the Stadium.

Based on the assumption of a capital cost of IR£60m, net operating profits of IR£1.5m annually and an interest rate of 9.5% per annum, Government support would need to be sufficient to reduce the level of borrowing on the project to approximately IR£12m to enable the outstanding debt to be serviced and repaid over 15 years.

1.84 On the same day as Mr Dunlop wrote to Mr Ahern, Mr O’Callaghan wrote in similar terms to Mr Reynolds, enclosing the same portion of the Deloitte & Touche study, as provided by Mr Dunlop to Mr Ahern. Mr O’Callaghan’s letter stated:

Dear Taoiseach,

I am very much aware of the tremendous pressures under which you are working currently. I had asked Frank Dunlop some weeks ago to try and arrange a meeting with you so that we could brief you personally on our proposed National All-Purpose Stadium. I fully understand that time is a precious commodity for you at the best of times but even more so at the moment. Therefore, to avoid adding further burdens to the heavy schedule you are already working to Frank and myself have decided to send you the attached material under confidential cover with a view to discussing the matter with you when time allows.

Central to the documentation is the Market and Financial Feasibility Study prepared for me by Deloitte & Touche. This Study outlines the options for supporting the proposed Stadium. The relevant detail is provided at pages 1 to 4 inclusive of this Study which is attached for your perusal.

Taoiseach, I am convinced that this is not only a viable project but one which will also benefit the country enormously and provide us with a facility which will be second to none internationally. Likewise, this Stadium will be seen publicly as the fulfilment of the undertaking in the Programme for Partnership Government, 1993–1997 to support the building of a national sports stadium.

With every good wish in your endeavours to achieve a peaceful solution to the national problem.

Yours sincerely

Owen O’Callaghan

1.85 On 30 November 1993, Mr O’Callaghan also wrote to the then Minister for the Environment, Mr Smith, enclosing documentation relating to the ‘National All-Purpose Stadium’ being proposed for the Neilstown lands.

1.86 The meeting requested by Mr O’Callaghan apparently took place on 13 December 1993. The evidence given by Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop was that Mr Reynolds was supportive of their stadium proposal.²³

1.87 There was apparently no note or memorandum of this meeting, or indeed of other meetings which took place between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Reynolds. According to Mr O’Callaghan, for the most part such meetings took place in the absence of any civil servant or other public official. Mr Dunlop likewise testified that no note or memorandum existed with regard to meetings he had with Mr Ahern, or indeed with other senior political figures. Mr Dunlop indicated to the Tribunal that it was a conscious decision on his part not to make a note of such meetings.

1.88 Mr Ahern’s response, when it was suggested to him that it was probable that he had considered the documentation furnished with Mr Dunlop’s letter of 1 December 1993, was that there was not a ‘chance in hell’ that he had considered the document sent to him by Mr Dunlop, and he maintained that as Minister for Finance he would, in any event, have received hundreds of documents and submissions on an ongoing basis.

1.89 Having regard to the fact that Mr O’Callaghan wrote to Mr Reynolds and Mr Dunlop wrote to Mr Ahern on 1 December 1993, and having regard to the contents of Mr Dunlop’s letter to Mr Ahern, the Tribunal believed it likely that in December 1993, Mr Ahern would have considered the document provided by Mr Dunlop, to some extent at least. It appeared to be the case that the document was passed on to the Department of Finance.

1.90 Notwithstanding Mr Dunlop having sought a meeting with Mr Ahern on Mr O’Callaghan’s behalf in his 1 December 1993 letter, and notwithstanding the reference in Mr O’Farrell’s memorandum of 14 December 1993, which suggested that Mr O’Callaghan was meeting Mr Ahern at that time, Mr Ahern maintained that he had no such meeting with Mr O’Callaghan, evidence with which Mr O’Callaghan agreed. Mr Ahern told the Tribunal he had no recollection of Mr Reynolds speaking to him about the matter in December 1993.

²³ Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop’s meeting with Mr Reynolds was followed shortly afterwards by a meeting between Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor, as evidenced by Mr Dunlop’s diary. See Chapter 2, Part 6, Section B, ‘Big One’. Mr O’Callaghan maintained, however, that this meeting was unconnected to the 13 December 1993 meeting referred to above.

1.91 A memo dated 14 December 1993 compiled by Mr O’Farrell of AIB, following discussion with Mr O’Callaghan, noted as follows:

He [Mr O’Callaghan] went on to indicate that he is meeting Albert Reynolds and Bertie Aherne later today in connection with the Sports Stadium. I expressed surprise at this. He indicated that he has no real option but to continue his discussions in relation to the Stadium in that there is enormous political interest in same. He will not be moving forward unless there is significant state subsidies—he mentioned IR£5m per annum. He mentioned that the project could work but obviously it is at fairly early stages.²⁴

1.92 Overall, the contemporaneous documentary trail available to the Tribunal suggested that there was a significant level of ongoing contact between Mr O’Callaghan and senior Government personnel throughout 1993 as part of an effort to secure state support and funding for the All-Purpose National Stadium project. Much of the contemporaneous documentation available to the Tribunal suggested that Mr O’Callaghan firmly believed that he had support at senior political level for his stadium project and a promise of state funding for the project.

1.93 Although there was inconclusive evidence that Mr O’Callaghan met with Mr Ahern in 1993 in relation to the stadium project (although the Tribunal noted Mr O’Farrell’s note of 14 December 1993 where reference was made to Mr O’Callaghan meeting Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern ‘later today’—a record disputed by Mr Deane), the Tribunal was satisfied that in 1992, and throughout 1993, Mr Ahern was briefed in meetings with Mr Dunlop in relation to the project to build an ‘All-Purpose National Stadium’ on the Neilstown lands, and the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Ahern’s support for such a project was being actively sought by Mr Dunlop.

1.94 Mr Ahern told the Tribunal that he did not recall meetings or discussions with Mr Dunlop regarding the stadium project in 1992 or 1993, but acknowledged that from 1992 onwards he was likely to have been aware that Mr O’Callaghan was actively seeking a commitment for state funding for his project, Mr Ahern asserted that he had not been spoken to Mr O’Callaghan about the matter until 1994. Mr Ahern professed himself unaware of any assurances having been given to Mr O’Callaghan by Mr Reynolds with regard to National Lottery funding. When questioned about a meeting with Mr Ahern on 7 May 1993, Mr Dunlop stated that while he could not recall the purpose of that meeting, the likelihood was that he did use that occasion to mention the Stadium to Mr Ahern, as on the occasions that he met Mr Ahern he would have taken the opportunity to raise the issue of the stadium proposal with him, even though a particular meeting might not have been arranged for that purpose. Having regard to the vested interest²⁵ Mr Dunlop had in the project, the Tribunal was satisfied that the stadium issue was discussed at meetings between the two men. The Tribunal noted that Mr Ahern conceded the possibility that Mr Dunlop had mentioned the matter of the stadium to him prior to 1994.

1.95 As a matter of probability the Tribunal believed that between December 1993 and March 1994, Mr O'Callaghan was endeavouring to meet with Mr Ahern as a matter of urgency. A note compiled by Mr O'Farrell of AIB and dated 4 January 1994 records, inter alia, Mr O'Callaghan advising him that:

As regards the stadium, he had a meeting with Albert Reynolds recently who was very keen. They had been seeking £5m per annum subvention and he is meeting Bertie Ahern on this issue in the next two weeks. If such subvention comes through, he believes the product is viable – however it will all hinge on his discussions with Bertie Ahern. He feels that he has no choice but to keep this project alive in view of his previous commitments in relation to same and to retain his credibility with the politicians and in the local area etc.

1.96 On Day 895 Mr Ahern was questioned as follows:

Q. 238 'Now, can you say therefore what your knowledge of the project, that is the Neilstown stadium project would have been at the beginning and in the first months of 1994? Did you have sufficient information in relation to it, for example to know what its financial imposition on the State would be in the event that the State wanted to become involved in the project, which was claimed to be a national project?'

A. 'Well, I have no recollection of it and I don't think it was discussed, and insofar as I can, I have gone back into the detail at the beginning of 1994, or the end of 1993 and at that stage I was working on the stadium project and put in a lot of time on the stadium project, but it was to give the first tranche of money to Croke Park which I did, and caused hell and high water of course by all the nay sayers who now think it's a brilliant idea. So that was the stadium I was dealing with in January of 1994, and in the budget of 1994, at the end of January 1994, I did give the money to Croke Park.'

1.97 Mr O'Callaghan duly met with Mr Ahern on 24 March 1994.

²⁵ See 'Big One' (Chapter 2, Part 6, Section B) which deals with Mr Dunlop's proposed beneficial interest in the stadium project.

1.98 Prior to this meeting, however, Mr Ahern had probably been apprised of the ‘All-Purpose National Stadium’ proposal by Chilton & O’Connor. This encounter between Mr Ahern and principals of Chilton & O’Connor took place on 11 March 1994 in Los Angeles, in the course of a visit to the US by Mr Ahern relating to the festivities of St Patrick’s Day.

1.99 Mr Ahern maintained that this US meeting had arisen after Mr Burke of Chilton & O’Connor contacted the Irish Consulate in Los Angeles and asked if Mr Ahern would meet them. Mr Ahern agreed, and he duly met with representatives of Chilton & O’Connor. Mr Ahern explained the purpose and the circumstances of the Los Angeles meeting the following terms:

‘But this wasn’t a meeting about the national stadium, Mr O’Neill,²⁶ this was the Irish consulate being contacted by a company which the IDA had been involved in, and about opening up a licence for the financial services centre and where, to the best of my knowledge, the only reference that was made about the national stadium was that they were working on a submission, I don’t think there was any other discussion. In fact my recollection of the meeting, insofar as I have a recollection of it, because it was a hurried meeting in the airport, arranged by the consulate, IDA in attendance, it was probably more likely to be about the IFSC, which was my business, because I worked on the IFSC issues. Now, they did mention, they did mention that they were engaged in preparing a proposal on the stadium, but that’s—and they also raised the issue about them funding projects and my department officials were there, the IDA were there, it was arranged by the consulate and what the Secretary General, not the secretary, the ambassador in New York stated the reason I was meeting them at all was they met Mr Reynolds the previous year and they knew who they were.’

1.100 Mr Ahern took the view that his meeting with Chilton & O’Connor concerned the IFSC, and the issue of a licence to Chilton & O’Connor in relation to the centre. However, the Tribunal was satisfied that a specific purpose of Mr Ahern’s meeting with principals of Chilton & O’Connor in Los Angeles on 11 March 1994 related to the ‘All-Purpose National Stadium’ project being promoted by Mr O’Callaghan.

1.101 The documentary trail available to the Tribunal suggested the following chain of events. Prior to Mr Ahern’s visit to the USA on 3 March 1994, Mr Burke of Chilton & O’Connor Inc wrote to the Consulate General of Ireland in San Francisco regarding the ‘forthcoming visit of Minister Mr Bertie Ahern’ as follows:

²⁶ Counsel for the Tribunal.

I would greatly appreciate the opportunity to discuss the possibility of organizing a meeting with Minister Ahern. Chilton & O'Connor, Ltd which is a member of the International Financial Services Center in Dublin is currently evaluating various financing options for the Irish National All-Purpose Stadium.

As you are aware, An Taoiseach, Mr Albert Reynolds visited our offices during his last visit to California to discuss the many benefits of various financing structures. Chilton & O'Connor, Inc. has underwritten over $3 billion in local government / municipal financings since its inception in 1983. I am aware Minister Ahern will be on a tight schedule, however, I will accommodate any changes convenient to Minister Ahern.

1.102 Mr Burke's request for a meeting with Mr Ahern was communicated to Mr Ahern's private secretary in Dublin by fax on 4 March 1994, attaching Mr Burke's letter. The handwritten note from the Irish Consulate, as faxed to Mr Ahern's private secretary, included the following information: 'Deputy Liam Lawlor's son who lives in LA (he will be at the reception for the Minister) is involved with this company in some way.'

1.103 Mr Ahern stated that, given that his Department had received this communication on 4 March 1994, and that there was a reference in it to Mr Reynolds having been in the offices of Chilton & O'Connor in March 1993, it was likely that contact was made by his officials with officials in the Department of An Taoiseach.

1.104 On 9 March 1994, Chilton & O'Connor sent a letter to Mr Dunlop headed 'March 11th meeting with Minister Bertie Ahern in Los Angeles' and addressed to 'Mr Frank Dunlop, Leisure West Limited.' The letter stated as follows:

Dear Frank,

As you are probably aware the above meeting has been arranged for this coming Friday. Obviously I will need to talk with you, Mr Ambrose Kelly or Mr O'Callaghan prior to meeting with Minister Ahern. It would also be imperative to hear the result of the pending meeting this Thursday 10th with Minister Aylward.

I will need an update with reference to any recent discussions with the FAI and Deloitte & Touche. Currently being forwarded to me are the recently published National Lottery Annual Report and Finance Ministry documentation. Also it would be most useful going into this meeting with Minister Ahern to have some indication of the role the board of Leisure West Ltd anticipates for Chilton & O'Connor Limited.

I look forward to discussing all of the above and hopefully ironing out the funding details for this important project sometime soon in Dublin.

1.105 The letter indicated that copies of it were to be sent to Mr Ambrose Kelly and Mr O'Callaghan.

1.106 Curiously, on the evening of 8 March 1994, Chilton & O'Connor may have faxed to Mr Dunlop an almost identical version of the afore-mentioned letter. The document faxed on 8 March 1994, was again dated 9 March 1994 and was addressed to Mr Dunlop, Leisure West Ltd. It had the same heading as the above letter and, save for one addition, the same contents as the letter faxed on 9 March 1994.

1.107 While the second paragraph of the document addressed to Mr Dunlop on 9 March 1994 commenced with the sentence 'I will need an update with reference to any recent discussions with the FAI and Deloitte & Touche', the first sentence of the second paragraph of the letter faxed on 8 March 1994, to Mr Dunlop read as follows: *'I will need an update with reference to any recent discussions with the FAI, Deloitte & Touche and the proposed Phoenix Park development.'*²⁷

1.108 It appeared to the Tribunal that for some reason Chilton & O'Connor made a decision to forward to Mr Dunlop, and to whomever else the letter was faxed, a second version of their 9 March letter, omitting the reference to 'the proposed Phoenix Park development'.

1.109 When it was suggested to Mr Ahern by Tribunal Counsel that the contents of the letter of 9 March 1994 indicated that one of the intended items of discussion between himself and Chilton & O'Connor was the 'All-Purpose National Stadium', Mr Ahern responded:

'Well, I don't know if it's right or not. All I can tell you is I was asked by the Irish consulate to have a meeting because the schedule was tight we could only meet at the airport and to the best of my recollection I think it's true some of my officials were still around, we were late, Mr Gallagher of IDA accompanied us, we had a brief meeting, I think it is recorded that we were talking about the licence, which obviously you confirmed why that would have been, because they hadn't taken up the licence.

They did state that they were going to provide a detailed statement on the stadium or assessment on the stadium, and they did raise the issue that they were investing in various countries, of money to help local authority and State projects. So that—that's as far as the record goes with me.'

And

'My memory it was a short—they only asked for the meeting, they only asked for the meeting in writing, it's recorded in the consulate, this came up last year in one of the newspapers. It was checked by my civil servants and it was recorded, the request was recorded, who attended the meeting was recorded, it was known by the main embassy in Washington and the senior officials from the IDA who is the number one IDA official in America attended the meeting, which seemed to me was on IFSC business, because he wouldn't be attending anything else.'

1.110 Mr Ahern told the Tribunal that he did not recall the plans for the development of the Phoenix Park racecourse as having been a matter of discussion at his meeting with Chilton & O'Connor on 11 March 1994.

1.111 While Mr O'Callaghan accepted that a meeting took place between Mr O'Connor and Mr Ahern in Los Angeles on 11 March 1994, (Mr O'Callaghan having previously stated his belief that no such meeting had taken place) he said he could not assist the Tribunal as to the likely import of Mr Ahern's discussions with Mr O'Connor. On Day 894 Mr O'Callaghan stated:

'Yes, I was aware that when the Minister for Finance was going to the States he was going to meet Chilton O'Connor. That's why we've got the correspondence then there and we briefed Mr O'Connor the best we could about this. But nothing ever happened. We heard no more about it actually. And I cannot recollect us asking Chilton & O'Connor what the result of the meeting was. I'm surprised if there was anything positive about it we would have been told within 24 hours. We got nothing back about it actually.'

1.112 The thrust of Mr O'Callaghan's evidence vis-à-vis Mr Ahern's meeting with Chilton & O'Connor was that he had been left in the dark about it and had received no follow-up information from that meeting, from any source.

1.113 Mr Dunlop claimed in his evidence not to know how Mr Ahern came to meet Mr O'Connor on 11 March 1994 other than suggesting that it was possibly Mr O'Callaghan or Mr Lawlor who had arranged for the meeting to take place. Mr Dunlop stated that while he did not believe it to have been the case, he could have set up the meeting. He said that he was probably aware that the meeting was taking place. Mr Dunlop believed that he could have received a verbal report of the visit from Mr Lawlor, or his son Mr Niall Lawlor.

1.114 Mr Ahern testified that he did not know in March 1994 that Mr Niall Lawlor worked for Chilton & O'Connor. He stated that Mr Niall Lawlor was not at the meeting he had with Mr O'Connor on 11 March 1994. Mr Ahern acknowledged that he may have met Mr Niall Lawlor at a reception in Beverly Hills some days later, but had no specific recollection of so doing.

1.115 Mr Ahern stated that he had had no meeting with Mr Liam Lawlor about his visit to Chilton & O'Connor either prior to, or subsequent to, that visit, save that he may have mentioned to Mr Lawlor at some point that he had met his son. Mr Ahern said that he was 'totally totally' surprised to learn, via the Tribunal, of Mr Lawlor's possible beneficial interest in the 'All-Purpose National Stadium' in respect of which Government financial support had been sought in and prior to 1994. Mr Ahern stated that this was something he would not have approved of had he known of it.

1.116 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Niall Lawlor was involved to some extent in arranging the meeting between Mr Ahern and Mr O'Connor. The Tribunal's conclusion in this regard was reinforced by a briefing note which, it appeared, was sent by Mr Lawlor to Mr Niall Lawlor on 10 March 1994, updating his son on a number of aspects regarding the proposed national stadium. Mr Lawlor advised his son as follows:

- 1. Attached is an article from today's Irish Times, re Bond Issues.*
- 2. Brief note re meeting with Bertie Ahern regarding the National Stadium.*

Government reaction to submission is awaited.

The promoters, O'Callaghan Properties, have submitted comprehensive proposal and they are pursuing negotiations with the Minister for Sport, Mr Liam Aylward.

Full planning permission has been granted, complete with environmental impact study, etc.

Construction could commence if agreement between Government and promoter is forthcoming.

1.117 Mr Ahern acknowledged that the import of Mr Lawlor's briefing note to his son suggested that the purpose of Chilton & O'Connor's forthcoming meeting with himself was to seek a decision from the Government on the financing proposals regarding the stadium. Mr Ahern emphasised however, that it was his belief that the meeting related to IDA business, and not the Neilstown stadium proposal. He stated also that any such meeting to discuss the stadium proposal would have been premature because 'the comprehensive proposal was only submitted through Mr Dunlop in August of 1994.'

1.118 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Ahern was probably aware, prior to his trip to Los Angeles on 11 March 1994, of Mr Niall Lawlor's association with Chilton & O'Connor, having regard to the specific reference to that connection in the documents faxed from the Irish Consulate in Los Angeles to Mr Ahern's private secretary on 4 March 1994. The Tribunal believed it most unlikely that Mr Ahern would not have been fully advised on the content of the Consulate's memorandum of 4 March 1994, including the specific reference to Mr Lawlor's son, and his expected attendance at the planned reception for Mr Ahern.

1.119 The Tribunal also rejected Mr Ahern's evidence that the 'All-Purpose National Stadium' project had not been a principal topic of discussion between himself and Mr O'Connor on 11 March 1994. Mr Ahern sought to maintain this position, notwithstanding the clear and unambiguous terms of Mr Burke's letter of 3 March 1994 to the Irish Consulate. On Day 896 Mr Ahern stated as follows:

'Well, that isn't how I would interpret it even looking at it now. What it's saying they are a member of the International Financial Services Centre, that was my department and the IDA that looked after that. They are currently, the second point is they are currently evaluating various financial options and I stated yesterday my view of that is that they told me they were. Thirdly, they make the point, which is really the main point why Albert Reynolds met them in the second paragraph to discuss the many benefits of various financing structure that they are involved and the fact that they had underwritten 3 billion of public/municipal finances so. They are the three points that come out in the letter very clearly.'

1.120 The Tribunal also rejected Mr Ahern's evidence in this regard having regard to the content of a letter written by Mr Kevin Burke of Chilton & O'Connor on 21 March 1994 to Mr Jim Lacey, then Chief Executive of National Irish Bank. That letter specifically referred to Mr Ahern's visit to Los Angeles, and his meeting with representatives of Chilton & O'Connor, and more particularly to their discussion with Mr Ahern of two 'specific projects', namely the 'Irish National Stadium' and the 'Liffey Tunnel'. It read:

Dear Mr Lacy

It has been recommended to Chilton & O'Connor that we contact you with regard to discussing a number of projects which we are currently pursuing in Ireland. Chilton & O'Connor Ltd is a member of the International Financial Services Centre in Dublin. We are very interested in local government finance in Ireland and have considerable expertise in this area. In California, Chilton & O'Connor, Inc. has underwritten over $3 billion in local government/municipal financings since its inception in 1983.

Bill O'Connor, our President, and I recently met with the Minister for Finance, Mr Bertie Ahern on his recent visit to Los Angeles. We discussed two specific projects which we are currently evaluating, namely the Irish National Stadium and the proposed Liffey Tunnel. We also discussed with Minister Ahern various funding mechanisms to leverage matching fund grants from the EC for planned infrastructure projects.²⁸

We would like to take an opportunity to meet with you to discuss potential mutual areas of interest. Bill O'Connor will be in Dublin during the first week of May and would be appreciative if you could facilitate a meeting during this time. I look forward to discussing these matters further with you.

1.121 When asked about the content of this letter, Mr Ahern appeared to challenge the clear reference therein to a discussion with him about the stadium project having taken place. The Tribunal considered it unlikely that such a reference would have been made by Mr Burke if, as appeared to have been suggested by Mr Ahern, the stadium project had only been briefly referred to, if at all.

1.122 While the reference in Mr Burke's letter to the 'Irish National Stadium' was non-specific, the Tribunal was satisfied, having regard to Chilton & O'Connor's involvement with Mr O'Callaghan, that the reference related to Mr O'Callaghan's 'All-Purpose National Stadium' project and that the stadium project was specifically discussed between Mr Ahern and principals of Chilton & O'Connor on 11 March 1994. While Mr Ahern doubted that he had provided Mr Lacey's name to Chilton & O'Connor, he nevertheless acknowledged that he may possibly have recommended Mr Lacey to Chilton & O'Connor, in the event that they were seeking contact with an 'aggressive bank.'

1.123 The Tribunal rejected as not credible Mr O'Callaghan's evidence that, although probably aware of the fact that Mr Ahern was meeting Chilton & O'Connor on 11 March 1994, in Los Angeles, he remained unaware of the outcome of such a meeting. The Tribunal was satisfied that in all probability Mr O'Callaghan was briefed on this meeting by either Chilton & O'Connor or by Mr Lawlor, and perhaps by Mr Ahern himself on 24 March 1994.

²⁸ It would appear that this letter was written to Mr Lacey with a view to Chilton & O'Connor meeting with him in early May 1994 to discuss mutual areas of interest.

1.124 On the day Mr Ahern met with Chilton & O'Connor in Los Angeles, Mr O'Callaghan met with Mr Reynolds at a private fundraising dinner for Fianna Fáil in Cork, an event which Mr O'Callaghan together with others was instrumental in organising.²⁹

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S MEETING WITH MR AHERN ON 24 MARCH 1994

1.125 On 24 March 1994, some thirteen days following Mr Ahern's meeting with Mr O'Connor in Los Angeles, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Ahern met, a meeting which was probably organised by Mr Dunlop. While he acknowledged that, by reference to a reference in his diary for 24 March 1994, he met with Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Ahern could not recall what was discussed at the meeting.

1.126 Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that the primary reason for his meeting with Mr Ahern in March 1994 was his concern that the Blanchardstown Town Centre project might be awarded tax designation status. Mr O'Callaghan stated that his concern was heightened by the fact that Mr Ray McSharry had been appointed to the board of Green Property Plc. Mr O'Callaghan maintained that he told Mr Ahern in the course of his meeting with him that although neither Blanchardstown nor Quarryvale required tax designation status, and both developments could 'stand on their own two feet', if it was the intention of the Government that Blanchardstown was to get tax designation status then a similar tax status should apply to the Quarryvale development. Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that during the course of the meeting he may have mentioned the stadium project, and his plans for it, in passing to Mr Ahern and he stated that they had also discussed the political situation in Cork. Mr O'Callaghan put it thus:

'The main reason for meeting him was that around about that time Ray MacSharry had been appointed to the board of Green Properties and I was concerned because of that, that Green would possibly, that Green Properties would possibly get tax designation. And I decided I better go and see the Minister for Finance about it. And the appointment was made for me.

And I met him and discussed it with him and my attitude was that quite simply, was and maybe a bit cheeky in my part. But my attitude was that I felt that Blanchardstown or Quarryvale did not need tax designation, that there was no need for it, both developments could stand on their own two feet and that the local authorities needed whatever money was available to develop the new counties that were now in possession since the 1st of March or the 1st of January '94.

²⁹ See 'the Cork private dinner'.

And I suggested that if he intended to give—if the minister intended to give tax designation to Blanchardstown that I felt that Quarryvale should have got the same thing. He told me very quickly that neither Blanchardstown or Quarryvale were getting tax designation. The second point was, I mentioned to him how we were developing a stadium and putting it together and what we were doing and what our proposals were. I outlined it to him in about five minutes without any plans or drawings but verbally. He listened to me and said okay. I think the third subject he asked me about the political situations in Cork, and that was it.'

1.127 On 2 March 1994, following a telephone conversation with Mr O'Callaghan, Mr O'Farrell of AIB noted as follows:

I raised the matter of designation with him (Mr O'Callaghan). He indicated that he is aware that Blanchardstown had been seeking designation. He has indicated in political circles, that he is not seeking designation for Quarryvale on the basis that same is not forthcoming for Blanchardstown either. He believes that he is well ahead of Blanchardstown in terms of anchor interest and the introduction of designation to both sides would level the playing pitch and he would lose his advantage. He is happy that designation for Blanchardstown is not on the agenda. A further factor in this regard would be the financial pressure that the various Councils are under—designation would of course reduce revenues available to the Councils over the next 10 years because of rates remission.

The content of the above memorandum suggested that the issue of tax designation for Blanchardstown and/or Quarryvale was discussed by Mr O'Callaghan in 'political circle' prior to Mr O'Callaghan's meeting with Mr Ahern on the 24 March, 1994.

1.128 In his evidence, Mr Ahern professed to have no recollection of what had been discussed at the meeting of 24 March 1994 but accepted that, in relation to the tax designation issue, he may well have confirmed to Mr O'Callaghan that neither Blanchardstown nor Quarryvale was going to receive tax designation status, by way of restating Government policy on the matter. Mr Ahern told the Tribunal that he could neither recall nor confirm what was said at the meeting.

1.129 Mr Ahern acknowledged that on the basis of the account given in evidence by Mr O'Callaghan, on 24 March 1994 he, as Minister for Finance, met with an individual who was raising an issue about the tax designation of someone else's property, namely Green Property Plc. Mr Ahern stated:

'if what Mr O'Callaghan states is that he came in and asked what is the policy on these areas, because what he is saying is that Ray MacSharry was appointed to the board of Green and he thought that that would change the policy, I would have restated the government policy, which is what he is saying. I would have restated and said we are not designating anything other than what we had already done, which was Tallaght and we were not going to designate Blanchardstown, we were not going to designate Clondalkin'.

1.130 The following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Ahern:

Q. 91 'Do you agree or is it a matter that you dispute, but that the concern which Mr O'Callaghan is expressing in relation to the tax designation arose from the fact that Mr Ray MacSharry, who was formally a government Minister, formerly a member of cabinet, formerly an EU Commissioner now in his departure from public life in that sense, was in a position where he was on the board of Green Properties, a rival company to Mr O'Callaghan's and it was that appointment of Mr MacSharry to that position which was causing him concern in the context of tax designation, would you accept that that is a fair summation?'

A. 'I would accept that. I can understand maybe he thought that we would change our mind or a former colleague might change our mind, but I have to quickly add, I don't think Ray MacSharry, in anyway, I am quite certain, never contacted me about any of these issues or about changing the position.'

Q. 92 'Certainly one—can one assume that the concern of Mr O'Callaghan's, expressed here is that there was now an uneven playing pitch as regards the Green Properties position and the Quarryvale position, in that he was suggesting that because of Mr MacSharry's involvement things might go a bit more the way of Blanchardstown rather than that?'

A. 'Yes.'

Q. 93 'And it was that concern he sought to address with you?'

A. 'Yes.'

1.131 Mr Ahern told the Tribunal that he did not think that the stadium project featured as part of his discussions with Mr O'Callaghan on 24 March 1994.

1.132 In his statement to the Tribunal of the 10 December 2003, under the heading 'Mr Owen O'Callaghan and Mr John Corcoran', Mr Ahern had advised, inter alia, as follows:

My diary confirms that I met Mr Corcoran on 13 July 1993. My recollection of this meeting is that he briefed me about Green Property's plans for future investment in the country. From my diary records I can confirm that I met Mr O'Callaghan on 24 March 1994, although I do not recall what was discussed. While I know there have been some references in the media to tax designations relating to shopping centres being developed at Quarryvale and Blanchardstown, I have no specific recollection of discussing this topic with either Mr O'Callaghan or Mr Corcoran. In any case, neither project was designated.

1.133 In a later statement provided to the Tribunal and dated 4 November 2004, Mr Ahern said, as follows:

So far as I am concerned, I did not at any time discuss designation for Blanchardstown with Mr O'Callaghan.

And

In relation to the proposed National Stadium at Neilstown the position is as follows. In correspondence dated 18th November 2003, the Tribunal requested that I provide a narrative statement that dealt with, inter alia, 'all dealings, meetings, written or telephonic communications' I had with Mr Owen O'Callaghan between the years 1988 to 1997. In my response dated 10th December 2003 I informed the Tribunal that on two occasions in this period (on 10th November 1994 and again in early 1996) Mr O'Callaghan updated me on his stadium proposal in West Dublin.

I also recollect that Mr O'Callaghan called to my constituency office in May 1998. My recollection is that on this occasion Mr O'Callaghan was accompanied by Mr Frank Dunlop. Mr O'Callaghan wished to brief me on his latest plans regarding his stadium. I told Mr O'Callaghan that it was my plan to build a National Stadium elsewhere that would remain totally under the control of the State and be available to all sectors of the community. Hence I was not in support of his proposal.

1.134 The Tribunal was satisfied that the topics discussed at the meeting of 24 March 1994, were Mr O'Callaghan's concerns regarding the Blanchardstown tax designation issue and his plans for the 'All-Purpose National Stadium'. The Tribunal was satisfied that in all probability Mr O'Callaghan lobbied Mr Ahern for Government support and funding for the stadium project. It was inconceivable that such discussion would not have taken place, having regard to Mr Dunlop's letter of 1 December 1993 to Mr Ahern wherein a meeting was sought for Mr O'Callaghan with Mr Ahern regarding the stadium, and having regard to the fact that, as of 1 December 1993, Mr Ahern was in possession of documentation relating to the stadium project which had been enclosed by Mr Dunlop in correspondence with him. Moreover, it appeared to the Tribunal extremely unlikely that the issue of the stadium project and its funding would not have been discussed between Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Ahern, having regard to the fact that Mr Ahern had met with Chilton & O'Connor on 11 March 1994.

1.135 Mr O'Callaghan maintained that on 24 March 1994 neither he nor Mr Ahern had alluded to the fact that Mr Ahern had met with Chilton & O'Connor in Los Angeles some thirteen days earlier. Mr O'Callaghan agreed with the suggestion of Tribunal Counsel that Mr Ahern's failure (as claimed by Mr O'Callaghan) on 24 March 1994 to mention his meeting with Mr O'Connor on 11 March 1994 was rendered all the more surprising given that on 29 March 1994, in response to a Dáil question from the Opposition, Mr Ahern was in a position to state that he had met with Chilton & O'Connor while in Los Angeles. The Tribunal was satisfied, however, as a matter of probability, that in the course of Mr O'Callaghan's discussions with Mr Ahern on 24 March 1994 Mr Ahern's meeting with Chilton & O'Connor some thirteen days earlier was a topic of discussion between them.

1.136 The Tribunal was also satisfied, as a matter of probability, that in the course of Mr O'Callaghan's lobbying of Mr Ahern on 24 March 1994 with regard to the proposed 'All-Purpose National Stadium' Mr O'Callaghan sought to urge the merits of his stadium project over that of the then rival project being promoted by Ogden Developments. Mr O'Callaghan, in evidence, acknowledged having spoken to Mr Lawlor and Mr Dunlop about the Ogden proposal for a stadium development at the Phoenix Park racecourse and having relayed his concerns about that proposal to Mr Dunlop. In those circumstances it appeared inconceivable to the Tribunal that Mr O'Callaghan would not have urged upon Mr Ahern the merits of his proposal over that of a potential rival. That the possibility of a rival Stadium being developed was (and remained) a concern of Mr O'Callaghan's was documented in a note made by Mr Dunlop's solicitors Arthur Cox on 29 September 1994 wherein Mr Dunlop was recorded as having apprised his legal advisors of the rival Phoenix Park proposal, a proposal which, it was recorded, 'has frightened O'Callaghan'.

1.137 By the time Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Ahern met face to face on 24 March 1994 Mr Ahern had been sent, via Mr Dunlop on 1 December 1993, a portion of the market financial feasibility study commissioned by Mr O'Callaghan which contained detailed proposals as to the level and manner of state funding being sought by Mr O'Callaghan for the stadium project.³⁰

³⁰ The Taoiseach, Mr Reynolds, was also sent this material on 1 December 1993 under cover of a letter from Mr O'Callaghan.

1.138 By the time of the 24 March 1994 meeting at which Mr O’Callaghan discussed the Blanchardstown tax designation issue with Mr Ahern, and also lobbied him for Government support for the stadium project, Mr O’Callaghan had had several meetings with the then Taoiseach Mr Reynolds, and Mr Dunlop had had meetings with Mr Ahern at which he raised the stadium project, and, in September 1993 Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern had written to Mr O’Callaghan, seeking a substantial donation to the Fianna Fáil Party.³¹

1.139 Moreover, following that September 1993 letter to Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Ray MacSharry had approached Mr O’Callaghan to follow up the Reynolds/Ahern request for a substantial donation. According to the evidence of Mr MacSharry and Mr O’Callaghan, in or around Christmas 1993 Mr O’Callaghan committed to paying a sum of IR£100,000 to the Fianna Fáil Party.

1.140 Mr Ahern was questioned by Tribunal Counsel on the state of affairs regarding the stadium as of 24 March 1994, in the following terms:

‘I am looking at this in the context at the moment, Mr Ahern, of the positions of yourself and Mr O’Callaghan, when it came to this meeting in the 24th of March 1994. On the one hand Mr O’Callaghan is a person who is seeking State finance to the extent of about 3 to 5 million pounds, depending on the feasibility study and its stages, at various stages throughout this process, from the government, and on the other hand the Fianna Fáil party is looking to him for 100,000 pounds to finance its debt, isn’t that so?’

Mr Ahern agreed that this was the factual situation as of 24 March 1994.

1.141 Following his 24 March 1994 meeting with Mr Ahern, Mr O’Callaghan’s pursuit of state support and subvention for the stadium project continued. Mr O’Callaghan and Mr O’Connor met with Mr Reynolds on 6 May 1994 following which, on 11 May 1994, Mr O’Connor wrote to Mr Reynolds as follows:

Taoiseach

I would sincerely like to thank you for allocating so much of your valuable time to schedule a meeting with Owen O’Callaghan, of Leisure West (Ireland) Ltd and myself on Friday the 6th. We are making vigorous efforts to finalize the financing of the National All-Purpose Stadium project as outlined to you. To briefly recap, Leisure West Ltd has given very specific commitments to this project by:

(a) Contracting with Dublin Corporation for the necessary land;

³¹ This matter is considered in more detail elsewhere in the Report.

(b) Appointing a National and International design team for this project that has already been granted full building approval by Dublin County Council;

(c) Chilton & O'Connor Inc. will act as senior investment banker to arrange the financing requirements on behalf of the issuing entity. Deloitte & Touche will act as financial / feasibility advisor to put forward a detailed and thoroughly researched financial package.

We are conscious of the need to extend the repayment scheme over the longest possible period at competitive interest rates. Therefore, the raising of funding of long term bond issuance is the most competitive approach for this major National Sports Facility.

Following our meeting with you Owen O'Callaghan and I discussed the entire matter and he has undertaken to provide me with the comprehensive financial/feasibility data which Deloitte & Touche carried out on behalf of Leisure West Ltd. You will appreciate, as does Owen O'Callaghan, that a proper modeling exercise with a view to funding the stadium cannot be completed without this data.

On completion of the funding analysis I will make contact with your office to arrange a further meeting at your convenience to outline the completed scenarios. Once again my sincere appreciation for meeting with us on such short notice.

1.142 It appeared that Mr O'Connor's direct communication with Mr Reynolds did not find favour with Mr O'Callaghan, having regard to the contents of his 17 May 1994 letter to Mr O'Connor, wherein he took issue with Mr O'Connor for having corresponded with Mr Reynolds without having first checked with him. In the same letter Mr O'Callaghan made reference to, and agreed with, Mr O'Connor that there was a need for the matter to be progressed 'as urgently as possible' for 'political and creditability reasons.'

1.143 Mr Dunlop met again with Mr Ahern on 11 May 1994. Mr Dunlop's diary referred to the meeting as 'BA breakfast in Burlington'. Mr Ahern's diary also referred to this meeting.

1.144 Mr Dunlop's diary for the first week of May 1994 recorded meetings with Mr O'Connor on 3 and 4 May 1994. Mr Dunlop's diary also noted a meeting on 5 May 1994 when Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Connor met with Mr Lacey at the Berkeley Court Hotel. On 6 May 1994, Mr Reynolds' diary recorded a meeting with Mr O'Callaghan and Mr O'Connor. Mr Dunlop said he had no recollection of any involvement on Mr Lacey's part with the stadium project, Mr O'Callaghan speculated that if the meeting with Mr Lacey had been related to the stadium project, he would have been involved, and he was not.

1.145 By 2 June 1994 Chilton & O'Connor were in possession of the further Deloitte & Touche financial feasibility study commissioned in relation to the stadium project. On that date Mr Kevin Burke wrote to Deloitte & Touche seeking additional detail with regard to the financing plan, and he advised them that 'An Taoiseach, Albert Reynolds has asked us to prepare a financing plan for the Irish National Stadium.'

1.146 On 8 June 1994 Chilton & O'Connor contacted Mr Ambrose Kelly by letter advising him that it had 'completed a financing analysis' for the stadium project and directed to him a series of questions for which they required clarification, one of which (question xi) was 'Will the Authority pay property or other taxes, if so how much (As a percent of value of facility, concessions, merchandising, payroll etc).'

1.147 On 10 June 1994 Mr O'Callaghan furnished Mr Kelly with his responses to certain of the questions posed by Chilton & O'Connor, for transmission to them. Mr O'Callaghan's reply to question xi was 'The Authority (Leisure Ireland) will not pay property taxes as we expect to have the site tax designated.'

1.148 The substantial financial contribution to the Fianna Fáil Party sought by Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern from Mr O'Callaghan in September 1993 in respect of which he had agreed to pay IR£100,000, was duly paid. On 21 June 1994, Mr O'Callaghan paid Fianna Fáil the sum of IR£80,000, having discounted from the agreed sum of IR£100,000 a sum of IR£10,000 paid by him to Fianna Fáil on 11 March 1994 at the Cork private dinner and a political contribution of IR£10,000 paid in May 1994 to the European election campaign of Mr Brian Crowley. Mr O'Callaghan received both verbal and written acknowledgment of his IR£80,000 cheque from Mr Ahern in July 1994.

1.149 In the course of their respective testimonies Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Ahern denied that during their telephone discussion in July 1994 there had been any reference to the issue of tax designation (the issue which Mr O'Callaghan claimed was the main topic of discussion at his 24 March 1994 meeting with Mr Ahern) or that any reference was made to the stadium project.

1.150 By 30 June 1994 Mr Dunlop was in possession of an 'Executive Summary', prepared by Chilton & O'Connor, in contemplation of an expected meeting with Mr Reynolds. In a draft congratulatory letter intended, it appeared, to be sent to Mr O'Connor on 30 June 1994, Mr Dunlop made reference to the 'Executive Summary' as an 'enormously impressive piece of work'. Mr Dunlop advised that he felt 'tremendously confident that the Taoiseach, given his already stated commitment to this project, will react in similar fashion and push it over the line to finalisation'. Mr Dunlop duly advised Mr O'Connor as follows: 'I met with Owen O'Callaghan at my office yesterday (29th June) and he is gung-ho about the project and equally complimentary of the work carried out by you and your team.'

1.151 In his letter to Mr O'Connor Mr Dunlop requested that Mr O'Connor provide him with dates on which he would be in Dublin over the following two months so that he could proceed to arrange a series of meetings with a number of organisations and individuals, including the Taoiseach.

1.152 On 30 June 1994 Mr Dunlop also wrote to his solicitor, Mr John Walsh of Arthur Cox, with regard to the progressing of his shareholding in Leisure Ireland Ltd.³²

1.153 On 11 July 1994 Mr Dunlop wrote to Mr Reynolds in the following terms:

You will recall meeting with Bill O'Connor and Owen O'Callaghan some time ago in connection with the proposed All-Purpose National Stadium in North Clondalkin. As a result of the meeting Bill O'Connor undertook to carry out a detailed financial feasibility report. This is now virtually complete and Bill intends coming to Ireland again in the latter part of this month.

Owen and he have asked me if it would be possible to arrange a meeting with you on a date and a time convenient for your diary beginning Monday, July 18th onwards. Bill is quite flexible with regard to dates but he and Owen would very much like to submit the financial report to you personally.'

1.154 Some ten days later, on 21 July 1994, Mr O'Callaghan, in the company of Mr Niall Welch,³³ met Mr Reynolds.

1.155 Mr O'Connor's promise to make further contact with Mr Reynolds was made good on 28 July 1994 during the Galway Racing Festival when Mr O'Callaghan, accompanied by Mr Kevin Burke of Chilton & O'Connor (Mr O'Connor being ill) met with Mr Reynolds at the Connemara Coast Hotel. References to this meeting were recorded in both Mr Reynolds' and Mr Dunlop's diaries. At the meeting Mr Reynolds was presented with the Chilton & O'Connor document, which was accompanied by a letter dated 28 July 1994, signed by Mr O'Connor and Mr Burke, which read as follows:

An Taoiseach:

In response to your invitation during our May 7th, 1994 meeting, Chilton & O'Connor is pleased to present our plan for financing the Irish National All-Purpose Stadium in conjunction with the Leisure Ireland Ltd/Owen O'Callaghan Properties development plan. We have proposed a plan which most efficiently finances and constructs a first class stadium for the Irish people and creates a sound public Authority to care for this facility into future generations.

We are proud to announce that our team includes Bankers Trust International Plc, thus providing you with substantial capital, trading and banking capabilities in Dublin, Los Angeles, New York and London. The professionals assigned to this financing have personally financed billions of dollars of projects for states and other governments including California, New York, Michigan, Tennessee, Republic of France and the United States.

We believe our two year research into this proposed financing structure has uncovered every conceivable alternative to produce the best possible plan. The financing includes 7.8 million for surrounding infrastructure improvements by County Dublin. The executive summary and term sheet succinctly describe the financing program. The remaining sections of the presentation are much more detailed and directed toward legal and finance professionals. We are honored to have been invited to propose a financing plan and look forward to working with you.

On the same date, 28 July 1994, Mr Dunlop's office telephone records indicated that Mr Niall Lawlor (Mr Lawlor's son) telephoned Mr Dunlop's office seeking information as to the outcome of the Connemara Coast Hotel meeting.

1.156 Chilton & O'Connor's' vision for the stadium project was encompassed in its 'Executive Summary' furnished to Mr Reynolds. It read:

Chilton & O'Connor recommends the establishment of a public entity, e.g. ('National Stadium Authority') with board members who oversee the activity of the parties involved in the creation of the Irish National Stadium. The proposed Authority will lease the stadium and grounds from the National Lottery Company and operate the facility for twenty years. The stadium will be deeded to the Republic of Ireland when the lease expires.

The stadium can be constructed in 30 months for an estimated cost of approximately £59.5 million. This can be financed over 20 years at an initial annual cost of 6.3 million, declining thereafter, to the surplus of the National Lottery Company. (See section 5). The financing will be denominated in Punts. The National Lottery Company will be partially reimbursed from various stadium operations including ticket sales, concessions, advertising, parking, hospitality, suite rentals and merchandising. The stadium is projected to produce a surplus from operations which grows from approximately £877,000 to over £1 million annually during its first five years of operation. (See section 5). The financing should produce interest rates, including all fees and costs, about .65% above the relevant outstanding Irish Gilt securities. The proposed financing will only have recourse to the stadium revenue and the National Lottery Company and will not be an obligation of the Republic of Ireland and all documentation and representation will expressly deny any such implication.

Chilton & O'Connor has produced five long-term financing scenarios for funding the project. In each scenario, the debt is retired in the 20th or 25th year and the stadium is then deeded to the Republic of Ireland. The first four scenarios have fixed interest rates providing simple budgeting for the project. The fifth scenario is a LIBOR (30 day) floating rate financing which has a final maturity of 20 years.

1.157 It was clear from this document that what was being sought was National Lottery funding on an annual basis over either a 20- or 25-year period, or over a 20-year 'LIBOR floater'.

1.158 The following alternatives were suggested:

- Over a 20-year period the 'Average Lottery Requirement' was estimated at approximately IR£4.4m, this figure amended to IR£2.7m approximately, in the event that tax designation status was to be given to the project.
- Over a 25-year period the requirement was for circa IR£3.9m, this figure amended to almost IR£2.4m in the event of tax designation being obtained.
- On foot of the 20-year 'LIBOR floater' the 'Average Lottery Requirement' funding was pitched at almost IR£2.8m.

1.159 On 2 August 1994, five days after Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Dunlop and Mr Burke's meeting with Mr Reynolds in Connemara, Mr Dunlop wrote a letter to Mr Ahern marked 'Strictly Private & Confidential', in the following terms:

Bertie,

At a meeting with the Taoiseach in Galway on Thursday last (28th July) Owen O'Callaghan, Kevin Burke, Senior Vice President of Chilton & O'Connor, Investment Bankers, Los Angeles (whom I think you met when you were in the USA earlier this year) and myself presented him with the attached Proposal to finance the National All-Purpose Stadium. He specifically asked me to give you a copy. I know you are away on a well-deserved break so I am giving the proposal to Mick Moran in your office for safekeeping until your return. I wouldn't mind sitting down with you for ten minutes to discuss the matter before it progresses further.

1.160 A manuscript notation on Mr Dunlop's 2 August 1994 letter to Mr Ahern suggested (as acknowledged by Mr Ahern) that by 30 August 1994 Mr Ahern was in possession of the financial feasibility proposal for the stadium and that he had requested personnel within the Department of Finance to prepare a report on it for him.

1.161 By 7 September 1994 the Department of Finance had carried out the review requested and the Department's 'Note on National All-Purpose Stadium' set out the following:

1. The proposal may be summarised as follows:

(a) A 40,000 seat stadium, with retractable roof and floor to provide all-weather facilities, will be provided at a cost of £59.5m including £7.58m to Dublin County Council for surrounding infrastructural works, at Neilstown, Clondalkin.

(b) The funding will be raised by way of a 20 year loan at an interest rate estimated at 0.65% above the Irish Gilt rate and will be subject to an investment banking fee of £1.4m, bond insurance of £1.7m and insurance costs of £0.5. These additional costs raise the effective margin over the Gilt rate from 0.65% to 1.32%.

(c) The debt will be amortized over 20 years and the annual debt service – estimated at £6.34m – will be paid from National Lottery funds; the cost to the National Lottery will be offset by operating surpluses from the Stadium estimated ('conservatively') at £1.4m in 1997 arising to £2.8m by 2014.

(d) A National Stadium Authority (effectively a State-sponsored body) will be set up to oversee the development of the stadium and operate it for 20 years at which stage it would be 'deeded' to the State (if the debt is fully paid off).

(e) The Authority will enter into an agreement with the Developer, Leisure Ireland Ltd / O'Callaghan Properties Ltd, to build the facility including site acquisition, design, construction etc and the Developer will be compensated for such activity.

1.162 The Department of Finance's note commented on the stadium proposal as summarised at paragraphs (a) to (e) above. The Department personnel's view of the proposal was palpably negative. The Department's conclusions, inter alia, stated:

In summary the advice of this Department is that there are other more pressing needs to be met from Lottery funds in the sports area and elsewhere than earmarking potentially £120m over 20 years to provide a new National Stadium.

1.162 The Department also noted that:

It may also be useful to know that there is another proposal on the cards for a national stadium—in the Phoenix Park racecourse. According to the attached press cutting the promoters of that project also expect substantial public funding in the form of EU Structural Funds.

1.164 The review undertaken by the officials of the Department of Finance resulted in their recommending a rejection of all of the financing proposals proposed for the 'All-Purpose National Stadium'. A note on the Department's Report made a reference to Deloitte & Touche assisting with the revenue projections.

1.165 The Department took issue in particular with the proposed stadium's projected revenue, the negative effect on the National Lottery's funding of sporting and other causes if it was required to fund the new stadium to the extent of IR£6.3m per annum for 20 years, and the need for a national sports stadium in the first instance. The memorandum also noted media reports of a proposal to develop a national stadium in the Phoenix Park Racecourse, and its promoter's expectation of public funding.

1.166 Mr Ahern told the Tribunal that he recalled discussing the issue with his officials, within a month or so (from 5 September 1994), and he assumed that he was aware of the contents of the Department's memorandum.

1.167 Asked to state the reason why the contact between himself and Mr Dunlop and others in 1993 and 1994, which was clearly established by the documentary trail made available to the Tribunal, had not been alluded to by him in his prior statements to the Tribunal, Mr Ahern stated:

'I think there are three issues in that. I have no recollection of Mr Dunlop raising this issue with me in the meetings and I don't think I met him in 1994 at all according to my diary. So when we would have checked these things—he was hardly pressing me with meetings about them, there might have been one meeting about toll roads. I do not have any recollection, I don't believe he had a meeting with him, so he couldn't have been pushing with me.

The second one is that report in September of 1993, that report was not considered to be a proper report in the department and whether Mr Dunlop sent it in or not I do not think it would have been one brought to my attention and from the department records I am not even sure that December note was looked at, but in fairness I would imagine when we were discussing what I was pressing at that stage, the commencement of the development that is now the new Croke Park, I put in the money and gave the resources in January '94, I ensure I am sure the department would have brought to my attention that proposal stage.

So the only one that I really remember was the discussions near the end of this issue, and there was three proposals, well there was four proposals; FAI had a proposal, there was this Neilstown proposal, there was the Phoenix Development and there was the Croke Park development, the only one of the those I supported was the Croke Park development, that's the one I brought to government.'

1.168 On Day 895 Mr Ahern agreed that the contents of the statements furnished by him indicated to the reader thereof that his involvement with Mr O'Callaghan's stadium project was 'peripheral.'

1.169 On Day 895 Mr Ahern was questioned as follows:

Q. 49 'If you read those statements would you agree with me that the proper inference to have drawn from them was that whilst you had two meetings, one in 1994, at which you are apprised of the project, one in 1996 and you were updated as leader of the opposition. It wasn't until 1998 that there is any indication of you having rejected whatever proposals were advanced to you by either Mr O'Callaghan or the gentleman with him, Mr O'Connor in the first instance and Mr Dunlop in the second, isn't that so?'

A. 'Well I can't, I mean I don't to be frank remember too much about the meeting in 1994, or the 10th November 1994. But the fact the department didn't give the go ahead, I mean the stadium was to be built in '95/'96 I think I now know the stadium was to be built in 18 months, I don't think that ever would have happened quite frankly, but there was no support in the Department of Finance for the Chilton O'Connor proposal. There was no support in the department from their later proposal either, so that's the fact.'

1.170 Discovery by Mr Liam Lawlor to the Tribunal revealed that Mr Niall Lawlor faxed a draft letter to Mr Lawlor dated 5 October 1994 which was intended, it appeared, to be sent to Mr Gerry Hickey, Mr Ahern's then programme manager in the Department of Finance. The draft letter was to be signed by Mr

O'Connor. It was seeking a 'dialogue' with Mr Hickey, in advance of a forthcoming meeting between Mr O'Connor and Mr Ahern.

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S MEETING WITH MR AHERN ON
10 NOVEMBER 1994

1.171 Mr O'Callaghan, in the company of Mr O'Connor, duly met with Mr Ahern on 10 November 1994, a meeting which may have been arranged by Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop's office telephone records for September 1994 recorded an enquiry being made on 15 September by Mr O'Callaghan—'did FD arrange any meeting with Bertie Ahern for next week'—a query which was probably made in the context of Mr Ahern having been furnished with documents on 2 August 1994 by Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop and Mr Ahern subsequently met on 26 October 1994, albeit in relation to a different matter.

1.172 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal about the 10 November 1994 meeting Mr O'Callaghan was questioned as follows:

Q. 538 'And that meeting had to be in connection with the stadium, isn't that right?'

A. 'Completely, yes.'

Q. 539 'Now, what happened at that meeting?'

A. 'That was the meeting the lasted probably oh, I said ten [. . .]. Probably less than ten minutes in total. Bill O'Connor and myself went along to meet the Minister for Finance at 11:00 in his offices and we brought our presentation with us and I initially outlined what we intended to do and Bill O'Connor very briefly confirmed that he was in a position to raise funding for it, etc. And before we had time to finish really what we were saying we were told by the Minister for Finance that the government were not going to support the stadium proposition at all and that there was no lottery funding available to do what we were suggesting that it would do. And that basically there was no support for it and we were wasting our time. I asked him why that was and he said that for start our location was on the wrong side of the Liffey. And that no business discussing it any further, it was not going to be supported by government and that was it.'

Q. 540 'Who was at that meeting, Mr O'Callaghan?'

A. 'Three people.'

Q. 541 'Pardon?'

A. 'Three people. The Minister for Finance, Bill O'Connor and myself.'

Q. 542 'Did you keep a note at all or a record of that meeting?'

A. 'No, it was so brief I didn't have to. And I will never forget it.'

Q. 543 'Yes?'

A. 'We left the meeting within, I have said ten minutes. That's a slight exaggeration.'

1.173 Mr O'Callaghan's evidence was to the effect that at this meeting (as suggested to him by Tribunal Counsel based on his understanding of Mr O'Callaghan's evidence) he received 'short shrift' from Mr Ahern and that the latter had made it clear to him that he did not support a stadium project at Neilstown. Mr O'Callaghan stated that he was surprised at Mr Ahern's dismissive attitude.

1.174 Mr O'Callaghan maintained that at the meeting with Mr Ahern he had been left with the impression that Mr Ahern and Mr O'Connor were unknown to one another prior to that meeting. The Tribunal rejected Mr O'Callaghan's impression in this regard as not credible, having regard to Mr Ahern's previous contact with Mr O'Connor.

1.175 Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that by the time of his 10 November 1994 meeting with Mr Ahern he had delivered on his agreement to donate IR£100,000 to Fianna Fáil, (which he had done with his 11 March 1994 IR£10,000 donation to Fianna Fáil, the IR£10,000 donation made in May 1994 for Mr Crowley's campaign and the IR£80,000 donated on 21 June 1994). Mr O'Callaghan stated that on 10 November 1994 he had not expected any decision that might be made by Mr Ahern in relation to state subvention for the stadium project to be based on his IR£100,000 contribution to Fianna Fáil. Mr O'Callaghan maintained that 'that contribution was made to Fianna Fáil to reduce the party debt not for any favours.'

1.176 Mr Dunlop claimed that following Mr O'Callaghan and Mr O'Connor's meeting with Mr Ahern he had been informed by Mr O'Callaghan that Mr Ahern was not supporting the stadium project. Mr Dunlop described Mr O'Callaghan as being annoyed at this turn of events, and by the manner in which Mr Ahern had dismissed the proposal. Mr Dunlop said that he was told 'two things' by Mr O'Callaghan 'One that [Mr Ahern] had been dismissive and that Mr O'Connor was highly offended at the treatment that he had received.' Similarly Mr Deane, in evidence, told the Tribunal that he had been advised by Mr O'Callaghan, following the meeting with Mr Ahern, that Mr Ahern was not supportive of the stadium project.

1.177 It was therefore the view of both Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop that Mr Ahern's lack of support for the stadium project, as communicated to Mr O'Callaghan and Mr O'Connor on 10 November 1994, effectively put paid to the proposal for an 'All-Purpose National Stadium' at Neilstown.

1.178 In his December 2003 statement to the Tribunal Mr Ahern stated:

'My diary confirms that I met Mr O'Callaghan on 10 November 1994 at the Department of Finance. I recall that Mr O'Callaghan was accompanied by a gentleman from an American financial company who I believe was called Mr William O'Connor. In the light of the request in your letter to refer to discussions in respect of certain lands in West Dublin, I wish to state that at this meeting Mr O'Callaghan apprised me of his plans to build a stadium in Clondalkin for which he was hoping to obtain government support.'

1.179 Mr Ahern's position in relation to the 10 November meeting, as stated to the Tribunal in evidence, was that while he could not recollect the meeting, it was his belief that he would have conveyed to Mr O'Callaghan and Mr O'Connor at that meeting his Department's view that the stadium proposal should not be afforded State support. When asked to comment on Mr O'Connor's letter to him eighteen days after the meeting, (and which conveyed an impression that the stadium project had not, just over two weeks earlier, been completely rejected by Mr Ahern), Mr Ahern said, 'Well, he clearly would have known what my view and the department's view [was].'

1.180 In the course of his evidence Mr O'Callaghan rejected any suggestion inherent in Mr Ahern's 4 November 2004 statement and in his evidence that he rejected Mr O'Callaghan's stadium proposals at a much later date than 1994 (1998). Mr O'Callaghan suggested again that Mr Ahern had rejected the stadium project on 10 November 1994 and he stated: 'He got this mixed up actually. It's easy for me to talk, he had a lot of things on his mind. He told me in November 1994 that the All-Purpose stadium idea was out. He got it slightly mixed up with the Wimbledon thing.'

1.181 The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop that on 10 November 1994 Mr O'Callaghan's stadium proposal was dismissed or rejected by Mr Ahern in the manner they described. The Tribunal rejected their evidence notwithstanding the fact of the Department of Finance's negative appraisal having been given to the stadium proposal on 7 September 1994.

1.182 In arriving at this determination, the Tribunal took particular note of the contemporaneous documentation relating to the meeting of 10 November 1994 which was made available to the Tribunal, and which suggested that, subsequent to his 10 November meeting with Mr Ahern, Mr O'Callaghan had spoken of the project as if it were clearly still live.

1.183 A memorandum by Mr O'Farrell of AIB of a meeting between himself and Mr O'Callaghan on 24 November 1994, some two weeks following Mr O'Callaghan and Mr O'Connor's meeting with Mr Ahern, recorded a discussion Mr O'Callaghan and Mr O'Farrell had on the 'Stadium' as follows:

We discussed this briefly. He indicated that he has had meetings with various politicians who are keen on the concept—although there may be an issue in relation to the location. He has had American financiers over to meet the relevant minister and he agreed that he would give me a copy of the submission made to them. He believes the FAI and the I.R.F.U. will commit to the Neilstown site. He is convinced that the proposed Phoenix Park site will not proceed in view of the difficulties in getting a casino licence.

1.184 There was no hint or suggestion in Mr O'Farrell's memorandum that he had been advised by Mr O'Callaghan that 'the relevant Minister' (the Tribunal was satisfied this referred to Mr Ahern) had dismissed or rejected Mr O'Callaghan's stadium proposals. Mr O'Callaghan said that he believed that the information he gave to AIB was a 'bit darker' than that recorded in Mr O'Farrell's memorandum. He said that he did not convey the full picture (namely, Mr Ahern's outright dismissal of the project) to the bank, because that would have been news that AIB wanted to hear.

1.185 Moreover, on 28 November 1994, Mr O'Connor, in a letter addressed to 'Mr Bertie Ahern T.D. Tánaiste & Minister for Finance, Merrion Street, Dublin 2, Ireland', stated as follows:

Dear Tánaiste,

I would like to congratulate you on your recent unanimous election as Leader of Fianna Fail. Also, thank you for allocating the time to meet with Mr's. Owen O'Callaghan, Frank Dunlop and myself on the financing plan for the National All-Purpose Stadium.

We wish you every success on the crucial talks you are embarking upon and we hope to be in contact in the near future to progress the project.

1.186 Mr O'Connor was unlikely to have written a letter in those terms to Mr Ahern if, in truth, Mr Ahern had rejected the stadium concept at the 10 November 1994. Mr Ahern professed to have no recollection of receiving Mr O'Connor's letter. The evidence established, however, that Mr O'Connor's letter was acknowledged on 30 November 1994. The acknowledgment (which Mr Ahern said was sent by his Department with a 'poor forgery' of his signature) read as follows:

Dear Bill,

I am writing to thank you for your message of good wishes on my selection as leader of Fianna Fail. I very much appreciate your doing so.

It is indeed a great honour and privilege to be chosen as the sixth leader of the Party. I am mindful of the great responsibility and challenges which lie ahead, and it is very heartening to know that I have good wishes of people like yourself in facing into that future.

1.187 Mr Ahern accepted that the correspondence between Mr O'Connor and himself in the month of November 1994 was extraordinary if, as maintained by Mr O'Callaghan to the Tribunal, Mr O'Connor had left the November 1994 meeting in an aggrieved and disappointed state of mind because Mr Ahern had dismissed the stadium project.³⁴ Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that Mr O'Connor had told him that he wrote the letter to Mr Ahern, because it suited him to do so. Mr O'Callaghan suggested that the content of Mr O'Connor's letter was not 'truthful.'

1.188 The Tribunal was satisfied that, as of 10 November 1994, contrary to evidence given by Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop, (and, also, notwithstanding Mr Ahern's evidence) there remained on the part of Mr O'Callaghan and Mr O'Connor, and indeed of Mr Dunlop, every expectation that they would further progress their stadium proposals in subsequent contact with Mr Ahern.

1.189 It was common case that Fianna Fáil left Government in late 1994/early 1995, following the failure of Mr Ahern's negotiations with the Labour Party to form a new coalition Government.

MR DUNLOP'S TRIP TO NEW YORK

1.190 Some six days prior to Mr O'Callaghan and Mr O'Connor's meeting of 10 November 1994 with Mr Ahern, Mr Dunlop met with Mr O'Connor in New York. Mr Dunlop's diary entries suggested that he travelled to New York on 3 November and that he returned to Ireland on 6 November 1994. His diary also indicated only one scheduled appointment in New York, namely a meeting between himself and Mr O'Connor on 4 November 1994. The diary indicated no other purpose for the trip. Prior to his departure for New York, Mr Dunlop's office

³⁴ Mr Ahern accepted that, following Mr Reynolds's resignation on 17 November 1994 as leader of Fianna Fáil, and having regard to the negotiations that were then ongoing between Fianna Fáil and the Labour Party, he expected that, following Mr Reynolds vacating the office, he would become Taoiseach, an expectation Mr Ahern held until 5 December 1994. Likewise, Mr Ahern accepted that anyone at the political epicentre in November 1994 would have known that, if the political negotiations with the Labour Party were successful, he would become Taoiseach. Mr Reynolds resigned as leader of Fianna Fáil on 17 November 1994, and acted as 'caretaker' Taoiseach until 15 December 1994.

recorded contact from both Mr Ahern (24 October 1994) and Mr Ahern's office (28 October 1994). On 26 October 1994 Mr Dunlop met with Mr Ahern, a meeting noted in Mr Dunlop's diary as follows: 'IHBA meeting breakfast with Bertie/Davenport.' This meeting was also noted in Mr Ahern's diary as follows: 'F. Dunlop 8.30 Breakfast Davenport.'

1.191 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop claimed that he could not recollect the content or purpose of his meeting with Mr O'Connor on 4 November 1994 in New York. Mr Dunlop suggested that his primary purpose in visiting New York may have been to attend a Fianna Fáil fundraising event there. He provided no further details of this event, or of what fundraising activities he might have been engaged in while in New York. Nor could he say whether or not Mr O'Connor might have attended whatever fundraising event Mr Dunlop believed he had attended in New York. Mr Dunlop suggested to the Tribunal that his scheduled meeting with Mr O'Connor may have arisen simply because he happened to be in New York for another purpose. Mr Dunlop stated that it was likely that he and Mr O'Connor discussed the stadium project.

1.192 Mr O'Callaghan initially maintained to the Tribunal that, in November 1994, he was unaware of Mr Dunlop's New York visit but later accepted that such a visit did take place. However, he professed himself unable to identify or explain the purpose of Mr Dunlop's meeting with Mr O'Connor. Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that Mr Dunlop's trip to New York took place at a time when he and Mr Dunlop were preparing to make a presentation (together with Mr O'Connor) to Mr Ahern as Minister for Finance (the 10 November meeting), and he accepted that Mr Dunlop must have discussed the purpose of the trip with him prior to departure. He ventured to suggest that Mr Dunlop may have simply paid a courtesy call on Mr O'Connor. Mr O'Callaghan expressed the view that if it was intended that a discussion take place in relation to the stadium project with Mr O'Connor, that discussion would have had to involve himself, Mr O'Callaghan.

1.193 On Day 899, Mr O'Callaghan appeared to suggest to the Tribunal that he recollected Mr Dunlop having mentioned travelling to New York for a Fianna Fáil fundraising event, and he appeared to suggest that he had not been told in advance of Mr Dunlop's trip, nor, upon Mr Dunlop's return, had he been told of Mr Dunlop's meeting with Mr O'Connor. Mr O'Callaghan appeared to suggest that he had been left in the dark as to the purpose of Mr Dunlop's visit to New York, both by his lobbyist and indeed putative partner in the Stadium Project, Mr Dunlop, and by his banker, Mr O'Connor.

1.194 The Tribunal did not accept as credible the evidence of either Mr Dunlop or Mr O'Callaghan on the issue of Mr Dunlop's trip to New York. The Tribunal was satisfied that the New York visit by Mr Dunlop was, as a matter of probability, primarily related to the stadium project and that both Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan at the time of the visit knew of and agreed its purpose. Equally, the Tribunal was satisfied that at the time of their evidence to the Tribunal both Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan had knowledge of the purpose of Mr Dunlop's visit to Mr O'Connor on 4 November 1994, and consequently it did not accept the vague and imprecise recollection on the part of both Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop in relation to this matter to have been genuine.

1.195 With regard to Mr Dunlop's meeting with Mr O'Connor in New York on 4 November 1994, the Tribunal was led to the conclusion that some aspect of the progressing of the 'All-Purpose National Stadium' project was of such importance as to oblige Mr Dunlop to make a whirlwind visit to New York to meet Mr O'Connor. Curiously, within four days of Mr Dunlop's New York meeting with Mr O'Connor, Mr O'Connor himself was back in Ireland, presumably to accompany Mr O'Callaghan to the scheduled meeting with Mr Ahern on 10 November 1994. Mr Dunlop's diary recorded that Mr Dunlop met with Mr O'Connor on 8 November 1994 at the Berkeley Court Hotel in Dublin.

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S STADIUM PROJECT DEALINGS IN THE YEARS 1995 TO 1997

1.196 Mr O'Callaghan advised the Tribunal that during the currency of the Fine Gael/Labour/Democratic Left ('Rainbow') Coalition between 1994 and June 1997, no approach was made by him to the Government in relation to the stadium proposal. Mr O'Callaghan recalled, however, a 'minimal' approach being made to him at Government level inquiring whether he intended to proceed with the project and Mr O'Callaghan had advised that he did not.

1.197 Mr O'Callaghan said that he called to see Mr Ahern in 1996, when he gave him an update on what was happening politically in Cork. Mr O'Callaghan described Mr Ahern's description of that meeting as set out in his November 2003 statement as incorrect, as Mr O'Callaghan's 'All-Purpose National Stadium' project was 'dead in the water' at that stage. Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Ahern both stated that they next met in November 1996, during Mr Ahern's tour of the West Dublin constituency, on the occasion when Mr Ahern called in to the Quarryvale site.

THE 1997–8 WIMBLEDON FOOTBALL STADIUM PROPOSAL

1.198 The third proposal to build a stadium on the Neilstown lands — the Wimbledon Football Stadium — was promoted by Mr O’Callaghan and others between 1997 and 1998. Mr O’Callaghan envisaged a type of joint venture with Wimbledon Football Club (then a participant in the English Premier Division) with that club relocating to Dublin and a football stadium being built to accommodate the needs of that club, while at the same time the stadium would serve as a national football stadium. Mr O’Callaghan retained the services of the broadcaster and journalist Mr Eamon Dunphy³⁵ to assist him in negotiating with the FAI regarding the Wimbledon proposal.

1.199 Mr O’Callaghan’s proposed partners in this venture were the Hamman brothers, one of whom was then Chairman of Wimbledon Football Club. Mr O’Callaghan plan’s required the agreement/cooperation of the FAI. It appeared that in 1997 Mr O’Callaghan was not receiving the cooperation from that body necessary to progress the Wimbledon proposal. Mr O’Callaghan also needed to circumvent or otherwise deal with specific EU legal difficulties affecting his proposal (the ‘Bosman Ruling’). To this end, in mid 1997 Mr O’Callaghan invoked the assistance of Mr Brian Crowley MEP in arranging a meeting with the then EU Commissioner, Mr Pádraig Flynn in Brussels. On 24 October, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Hamman duly met Commissioner Flynn in Brussels. A letter written by Mr O’Callaghan to Commissioner Flynn on 29 October 1997, following that meeting, suggested that Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Hamman had been advised not to pursue a ‘legal route’ to circumvent the problems apparent to them at that time.

1.200 The Wimbledon proposal envisaged a national football stadium being provided in the absence of state funding or state subvention of any kind.

1.201 On 25 May 1998, while endeavouring to progress the Wimbledon proposal, Mr O’Callaghan met with the then Taoiseach, Mr Ahern.³⁶ The next day, Mr O’Callaghan followed up this meeting with a letter to Mr Ahern in the following terms:

Dear Taoiseach,

Thank you for giving me time out of your busy schedule on Monday last.

Briefly—Wimbledon are prepared to provide to the following, if allowed:

1. A National Football Stadium—cost IR£55 m.

³⁵ Mr Dunphy’s evidence to the Tribunal is considered in part 10 of this Chapter.

³⁶ Mr Ahern had been elected Taoiseach some months previously.

2. £10 million stg. –£5m stg. to be provided equally between National League Clubs the 22 National League Clubs and £5m. stg. to be divided between Schools of Excellence and the Schoolboys Leagues.

3. The FAI can use the Stadium, free of charge, for all their international games.

4. The FAI and the National League need have no fear that Wimbledon will usurp their authority in this country.

The English Premiership and the F.A. are in favour of Wimbledon locating in Dublin.

To the best of my knowledge, only Shels, Pats and U.C.D. are against this proposal. The other 19 clubs are in favour. The Gardaí have absolutely no difficulty.

All we are asking for is that the FAI and National League sit down with us and have a constructive meeting, and that both of us discuss our problems and fears, and hopefully resolve them to each other's mutual benefit.

The FAI need a Stadium in the interest of Ireland's future in international football. We will provide it for them.

If anybody can get us together, you can.

Kind regards

Yours sincerely

Owen O'Callaghan

1.202 Mr Ahern's account of his May 1998 meeting with Mr O'Callaghan was initially provided by him to the Tribunal in the course of his 4 November 2004 statement where he set out as follows:

I also recollect that Mr O'Callaghan called to my constituency office in May 1998. My recollection is that on this occasion Mr O'Callaghan was accompanied by Mr Frank Dunlop. Mr O'Callaghan wished to brief me on his latest plans regarding his stadium. I told Mr O'Callaghan that it was my plan to build a National Stadium elsewhere that would remain totally under the control of the State and would be available to all sectors of the community. Hence I was not in support of his proposal.

1.203 In his later evidence, Mr Ahern confirmed to the Tribunal that the approach taken by him to Mr O'Callaghan in 1998 was as indicated in his statement.

1.204 On Day 899, Mr O'Callaghan was asked if Mr Ahern's account of his 25 May 1998 meeting with him and Mr Dunlop accorded with his own recollection of the meeting which had taken place in St Luke's, Mr Ahern's constituency office.

Mr O'Callaghan stated that it was his belief that Mr Ahern had conflated this 1998 meeting with their earlier meeting on 10 November 1994. It was his belief that the May 1998 meeting was about Wimbledon FC relocating to Dublin, and not about the stadium project, per se. Mr O'Callaghan stated:

'Yes, he told me about, as I said to you, the very same thing I said before I seen this. He did agree, did he tell us that he was interested in providing the stadium, but he also said that he would like to see Wimbledon coming to Dublin because he understood how the whole Premiership thing worked, but they would have to have their own Stadium etc. Which at that stage he knew we would be providing for them. It wouldn't affect the Government or him in any way and he felt it was a good idea to see an English Premiership team playing in Dublin and based in Dublin, he had no problem with that. That's exactly what he told me.'

1.205 Earlier in his evidence, on Day 899, Mr O'Callaghan stated that the whole purpose of his going to Mr Ahern was to ascertain if he would speak to the FAI. Mr O'Callaghan said:

'That was the whole purpose, to speak to the FAI. It was nothing to do with the stadium at this stage because the stadium could have been developed and built itself if we had Wimbledon coming into Dublin, what I wanted him to do was, if he could and it was a very, very long shot, was to speak to the FAI to see if they would accept Wimbledon coming in, basically.'

1.206 With regard to the issue of funding for the proposed stadium, Mr O'Callaghan stated that no Government finance or funding was required in relation to the Wimbledon stadium proposal. Mr O'Callaghan stated: 'We'd have built it ourselves privately. We wouldn't need any government support or government grants or lottery or anything at all.'

1.207 Mr O'Callaghan was questioned as follows on Day 899:

Q. 584 'But you needed a change, effectively in the European legislation, and you needed an acceptance by the FAI in order to get, that Wimbledon would be permitted to transfer to Dublin, is that right?'

A. 'What we really needed was, if we got the permission of the FAI we would have been okay, because we had received the permission of the English FA from the 19th Chairman of the English Premiership had accepted a move to Dublin, and if the FAI had accepted as well, UEFA the governing body would have accepted the whole thing. But because the FAI were not on side and didn't want us in, didn't want Wimbledon in, in case it would affect two or three clubs here in Dublin, we had to try and go through the European Parliament and use what's known as the

'Bosman Ruling'. This is where Minister Flynn and Commissioner Van Miert came into it.'

1.208 According to Mr O'Callaghan, he had engaged Mr Dunphy to assist in seeking to overcome the resistance of the FAI to the Wimbledon proposal, but his retention did not achieve this end and it was then decided to approach the then Taoiseach, Mr Ahern, because of Mr Ahern's enthusiasm for sport.

1.209 Also according to Mr O'Callaghan, it was his belief, notwithstanding Mr Ahern's November 2004 statement, that Mr Ahern had not rejected or dismissed his Wimbledon stadium plans. Mr O'Callaghan stated that Mr Ahern

'...did favour Wimbledon coming to Dublin, that was in 1998, provided we would not interfere with or what he was intending to do himself. We were not doing that because the stadium for Wimbledon would have been a completely separate, private stadium, funded by the whole Wimbledon operation.'

1.210 In response to the question

'You say when you met with him in May of 1998, while he told you he was going to build his own stadium, which I think subsequently became known as the 'Bertie Bowl' he was nonetheless in support of a transfer of the Wimbledon Football Club to Dublin?' Mr O'Callaghan said 'Provided we did not interfere with his own plans, that's correct.'

1.211 It was noteworthy that Mr O'Callaghan's letter of 26 May 1998 to Mr Ahern following his meeting did not suggest that Mr Ahern had dismissed his Wimbledon proposal, given that in his letter Mr O'Callaghan provided Mr Ahern with details of the proposal.

1.212 Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that following his letter to Mr Ahern on 26 May 1998, he believed that Mr Ahern had spoken to at least two Dublin football clubs but their response had been negative and, according to Mr O'Callaghan, 'the opposition from two or three of the League of Ireland clubs in Dublin was too strong and they were completely against the whole Wimbledon idea. They were afraid that Wimbledon would become too dominant in the Irish scene and take over football in Ireland.'

1.213 In June 1998, Mr O'Callaghan met with the then Tánaiste Mary Harney and subsequently wrote to her in similar terms as he had to Mr Ahern.

1.214 Ultimately, as confirmed by Mr O’Callaghan in evidence, the Wimbledon stadium project failed in 1998. Mr O’Callaghan agreed that he and Mr Deane, via Merrygrove Ltd, were then left with some 61 acres of lands.

1.215 Mr O’Callaghan agreed that in 2002 these total lands at Neilstown were disposed of by Merrygrove Estates Ltd, generating a profit of some IR£12m.

THE PAYMENT BY MR O’CALLAGHAN OF IR£80,000 TO FIANNA FÁIL IN 1994

1.216 The September 1993 letter to Mr O’Callaghan from the office of the National Treasurers of Fianna Fáil, signed by Mr Reynolds, as Taoiseach and President of Fianna Fáil, and by Mr Ahern, as Minister for Finance and Chairman of the National Finance Committee, read as follows:

Dear Owen,

For over seventy years now Fianna Fáil has through its political involvement played a major role in Irish life. Across the entire spectrum of the national community Fianna Fáil has given practical expression to the dreams, ideals and priorities of our people by innovation, by consensus and by effective Government. It is a proud tradition of practical patriotism which has changed the face of Ireland in education, health, agriculture, industrial development, social caring, involvement in the EC as well as constant support and encouragement for our cultural and national identity.

The costs of administering to the needs of the biggest political party in Ireland have escalated sharply over recent years. These costs, accumulated with the enormous expenses of major election campaigns, have left us with a Party debt that demands urgent redress.

When we have put a national recovery plan in place to tackle the Party’s debt. This involves substantial cost reductions and a co-ordinated fund raising campaign. We must pursue this programme rigorously to contain and reduce a total Party debt of IR£3,150,000, comprising bank loans of IR£2,350,000 and creditors of IR£800,000. It is a formidable challenge that can only be met by single-minded resolution and generous response. We ask you to assist us at this critical time by making a significant financial contribution. It is an exceptional situation and we ask you to consider this request favourably in the context of these straitened circumstances. A senior representative of the National Treasurers Committee will be in touch with you personally in this regard in the near future. Thank you for your valuable support in the past which was of great assistance to the Party.

1.217 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Ahern agreed that in the period commencing approximately March/April 1993, he was instrumental in the establishment of the 'Office of the National Treasurers' which from mid 1993, operated out of room 317 in the Berkeley Court Hotel. This office was headed by Mr Des Richardson who had the title of Chief Fundraiser. Its function was to target the electorate and party supporters with the aim of reducing the substantial Fianna Fáil debt. A number of strategies was adopted, including one of seeking contributions of IR£100,000 each from approximately ten high net worth individuals. In 1993, following his return from the post of European Commissioner in Brussels, Mr Ray MacSharry was enlisted to assist with this task. Mr O'Callaghan was one of the ten high net worth individuals identified by Fianna Fáil to be approached with a request to make a donation of IR£100,000.

1.218 The evidence established that, on a date between the issuing of the September 1993 letter to Mr O'Callaghan and December 1993, Mr MacSharry contacted and met with Mr O'Callaghan at a Dublin hotel. Both Mr MacSharry and Mr O'Callaghan testified that at their meeting Mr MacSharry requested a donation of IR£100,000 from Mr O'Callaghan and it was the evidence of both that Mr O'Callaghan indicated to Mr MacSharry that he was favourably disposed to make the requested donation. However, Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that while he gave such an indication to Mr MacSharry he had required time to consider the matter fully. Mr O'Callaghan said that by Christmas 1993, he had agreed to pay the IR£100,000.

1.219 In advance of his meeting with Mr O'Callaghan, Mr MacSharry was provided with a copy of the September 1993 letter which had issued from the office of the National Treasurers to Mr O'Callaghan and which had been signed by Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern. In the course of his evidence, Mr MacSharry denied that when he met with either Mr Ahern or Mr Reynolds, in advance of approaching the high net worth individuals, the names of such individuals had been discussed.

1.220 On 21 June 1994, Mr O'Callaghan wrote a cheque payable to the Fianna Fáil Party for IR£80,000 which was drawn on the bank account of Riga Ltd. Mr O'Callaghan's cheque was probably provided to Mr Richardson. A receipt for the Riga cheque was duly issued by Fianna Fáil on 23 June 1994. Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that he had probably not paid the IR£100,000 requested of him in December 1993, or within the weeks thereafter, because his firm might not have been 'all that flush at the time'. Explaining why, in June 1994, he had provided a cheque for IR£80,000, as opposed to the IR£100,000 donation which had been requested and agreed, Mr O'Callaghan stated that in the period between December 1993 (when he had met Mr MacSharry) and the provision in June 1994 of the IR£80,000 cheque to Mr Richardson, he had made a contribution of IR£10,000 to Fianna Fáil at the ‘Cork private dinner’³⁷ on 11 March 1994, and on 13 May 1994 he had made a contribution of IR£10,000 to Mr Brian Crowley’s European election campaign.

1.221 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that he had been approached by Mr Flor Crowley,³⁸ father of Mr Brian Crowley, whom he knew well, seeking a donation for his son’s election campaign. Mr O’Callaghan said that Mr Flor Crowley had confirmed to him that it was in order that the contribution of IR£10,000 to Mr Brian Crowley’s campaign could be credited against the promised IR£100,000 donation to the Fianna Fáil Party. Mr O’Callaghan also stated that having made a IR£10,000 payment to Mr Richardson at the Cork private dinner on 11 March 1994, he had asked Mr Richardson if it might be credited against his promised IR£100,000 donation, and Mr Richardson agreed.

1.222 Mr O’Callaghan’s IR£80,000 cheque was drawn on Riga Ltd’s Bank of Ireland account at South Mall, Cork and was made payable to ‘Fianna Fáil’. Mr O’Callaghan acknowledged that the financial constraints which had prevented him in December 1993 from making good his promise to make a substantial contribution to Fianna Fáil continued as of 21 June 1994. An analysis of Riga Ltd’s current account established that when Mr O’Callaghan promised the IR£100,000 to Mr MacSharry in December 1993, the account was in credit to the tune of IR£30,000 rising to IR£51,000 in January 1994. However, immediately prior to the drawing of the IR£80,000 cheque to Fianna Fáil the account was overdrawn by almost IR£18,000. The debiting of the IR£80,000 cheque pushed the overdraft to in excess of IR£97,000.

1.223 Asked to explain why he had made the IR£80,000 payment at a time when Riga’s financial position was apparently in a much more precarious position than it had been some months earlier, Mr O’Callaghan stated that he paid it

‘... because I had got a reminder. I had been reminded about it actually, I promised it at Christmas. First of all, when I was asked about this payment in late ’93 I suggested that I would think about it. At Christmas time I confirmed I would do it. I didn’t say when, and I didn’t do it until I was asked, reminded again. So I just wasn’t throwing money around until I was asked a second time for it, then I decided to pay it, if I was left alone for another three or four months, I wouldn’t have paid either, I just would have dragged it out for the rest of the year. I made the payment when I was put under pressure to me, I was put under pressure to honour my commitment, it had nothing to do with the bank statement, or bank accounts or current position.'

1.224 By the time Mr O'Callaghan paid over the IR£80,000 he had already provided IR£10,000 to the Cork private dinner fund and IR£10,000 to Mr Crowley's election campaign – substantial donations by any standard. Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that it had not occurred to him in June 1994 to apprise either Mr Richardson or Mr MacSharry of Riga's precarious financial situation. Mr O'Callaghan stated that he believed that, having been chosen as one of ten people to be requested to make a substantial contribution, he felt he should play his part and pay the money.

1.225 Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged the enormity of the IR£100,000 donation in total which he had provided to Fianna Fáil by 21 June 1994. The donation was five times greater than the then net salary of a TD, or the equivalent of the cost of two to three houses that Mr O'Callaghan, as a developer, was building at that time.

1.226 Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that in 1994, sums of IR£5,000 and IR£10,000 would be regarded as substantial donations, and agreed that in 1994 a sum of IR£100,000 was a 'fortune'. Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that this donation was the biggest political donation he had ever made and was thus a significant event in his life. He said that the payment of the money had caused him some heart searching, and that he had delayed making the donation until 'compelled' to do so in June 1994.

1.227 Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that what was a 'momentous' event for him had had the effect of substantially increasing Riga's overdraft from almost IR£18,000 to almost IR£100,000.

1.228 In the course of his evidence on Day 898, it was suggested to Mr O'Callaghan that a person making such a large payment to a political party might have expected to be looked upon with favour by that party. Mr O'Callaghan responded as follows:

'Could you say that. You could say that, yes. You could say that but that's not what I was looking for, believe you me. Basically the party that I support and the party that I wanted to stay in power had serious financial difficulties and they asked ten people, approximately ten people and, between people and companies, to help them reduce their debt. I felt that's something I should do. It was a very large amount of money and that's why it took me so long to get around to paying it. But I felt that I had to do it and I was—I suppose in no small way probably slightly honoured I was even asked to do it.'

1.229 Mr O'Callaghan's contribution was acknowledged on 30 June 1994 by Mr MacSharry in the following terms:

Dear Owen,

I have been informed by Des Richardson of your most generous and positive response to Albert and Bertie's request for support.

I very much appreciate your delivery of the undertaking which you gave to me at our recent meeting.

The assistance you have given will go a long way in helping us in the difficult task ahead of rectifying Party finances. Your support is greatly appreciated and I am pleased that you felt the efforts of the Party in Government were important and warranted such a generous response . .

1.230 This acknowledgement was followed by a letter to Mr O'Callaghan from Mr Ahern dated July 1994, which read as follows:

Dear Owen,

Further to our conversation this morning I wish to express my sincere thanks for your most generous and positive response to our request for support.

Your support is greatly appreciated and I am pleased that you felt our cause was an important one which warranted such a generous response.

May I take this opportunity to convey to you my best wishes and kindest regards.

1.231 The letter was signed 'Bertie' and was written on the notepaper of the office of the National Treasurers headed 'Bertie Ahern T.D. Minister for Finance (Chairman National Finance Committee).'

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S PRIOR DONATIONS TO FIANNA FÁIL

1.232 The political donations to political parties, including Fianna Fáil, made by Riga Ltd and O'Callaghan Properties Ltd, as recorded in the books of those companies, suggested that, for 1989, the two companies expended a total of just IR£1,400³⁹ on five donations, including the sum of IR£1,000 paid towards a secondary school project, and referable to Mr Micheál Martin TD. (The figure for 1988 was only IR£200).

³⁹ While this figure, IR£1,400 was put to Mr O'Callaghan as the political donation figure for 1989, the correct figure, based on documentation discovered to the Tribunal, was IR£1,500.

1.233 In November 1990, Riga Ltd recorded a political donation of IR£10,000 to Fianna Fáil (in relation to the late Mr Brian Lenihan's Presidential Election campaign) and two further donations on 3 and 18 December 1990 of IR£100 and IR£200 respectively. On 21 June 1991, Riga Ltd made a political contribution of IR£5,000 to Mr Micheál Martin's Local Election campaign. While the company's books also recorded a payment of IR£5,000 made on 18 November 1991 which, according to a schedule of payments prepared by Mr O'Callaghan for the Tribunal, was a political donation to Mr Liam Lawlor, the Tribunal was satisfied that this IR£5,000 was wrongly attributed to Mr Lawlor in Riga's books. However, Mr Lawlor was the recipient of an IR£10,000 payment from Mr O'Callaghan in October 1991

1.234 The records of O'Callaghan Properties Ltd documented a total expenditure of IR£7,600 in 1992 by way of political contributions, including a cheque for IR£5,000 sent to Mr Reynolds, then Taoiseach, on 17 November 1992.

1.235 In July 1993, O'Callaghan Properties Ltd made a payment of IR£5,000 to the Atlantic Pond Fund, a charitable purpose, at the request of Mr Micheál Martin.

1.236 Riga Ltd's books and accounts for the years 1992 and 1993 documented a number of payments made to individual politicians at senior and local level.⁴⁰

1.237 Although he was a strong supporter of the Fianna Fáil Party Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that he could not recollect, prior to January 1989, making any single donation greater than IR£100 to any politician or to any political party.

1.238 Mr O'Callaghan suggested that it was possible that he had made undocumented political donations of between IR£1,000 and IR£5,000 to Fianna Fáil, through some other company. The Tribunal believed, however, that this was unlikely because, in its view, had such donations been made, they would almost certainly have been documented or recorded by such companies given that Riga Ltd and O'Callaghan Properties Ltd had gone to the trouble in 1988 and 1989 of recording donations for as little as IR£100 or IR£200.

⁴⁰ These payments are considered elsewhere in this Chapter.

MR AHERN'S EVIDENCE ON THE REQUEST MADE TO MR O'CALLAGHAN FOR IR£100,000

1.239 Mr Ahern was questioned as to his knowledge of the circumstances in which a decision had been made within Fianna Fáil to approach Mr O'Callaghan and seek a substantial donation for the Party.

1.240 Mr Ahern told the Tribunal that, although he was instrumental in 1993 in setting up the office of the National Treasurer which was charged with the task of reducing Fianna Fáil's debt of IR£3m, he was unaware that Mr O'Callaghan was one of the ten high net worth individuals identified by that office for the purposes of being approached for a payment of IR£100,000.

1.241 He acknowledged that it was Fianna Fáil's strategy at the time to target wealthy individuals for IR£100,000 donations, and that Mr MacSharry had been recruited to assist in this task. It was Mr Ahern's belief that in 1993, Mr O'Callaghan was identified as a potential donor by a member of the Finance Committee of Fianna Fáil, although Mr Ahern could not identify the individual/s who might have suggested that Mr O'Callaghan be approached. Mr Ahern stated:

'There was usually about twenty people on the financial committee, that would be on a regional spread. Who would actually pick who, I don't know. Just to—I understand conspiracy theories, but just to make it absolutely clear, Mr O'Neill, there is not a relationship between the Taoiseach, Minister for Finance and Cabinet Ministers around the table, that you list out people that you then check with for financial contributions for the party. That just does not happen. There is as good as ever Chinese walls between what happens in Cabinet decisions of every nature, and what the party political system. The way Fianna Fáil works, while there is national treasurers that have responsibilities to the Ard Fheis to report accounts, the National Finance Committee, who are usually high profile people, they make the decisions, in those days, of who to contact. Now it's a different system because of the guidelines, it's mainly smaller fundraisers now. And the National Finance Committee would ask certain individuals will they participate in having a dinner, that would still happen they would still try to organise dinners.'

1.242 Mr Ahern also told the Tribunal that he was unaware, at the time, that Mr O'Callaghan had paid IR£10,000 to Fianna Fáil at the Cork private dinner, although he acknowledged that he knew then of the event itself. Mr Ahern stated that he was not, at that time, aware that Mr O'Callaghan had agreed with Mr Richardson that this IR£10,000 sum could be set off against the promised IR£100,000 to Fianna Fáil.

1.243 Mr Ahern acknowledged that his meeting with Mr O’Callaghan on 24 March 1994 took place against the backdrop of Mr O’Callaghan’s endeavours to progress his ‘All-Purpose National Stadium’ project and at a time when Mr O’Callaghan was actively seeking state subvention of between IR£3m and IR£5m per annum for the project. He acknowledged also that the meeting took place against the backdrop of the Fianna Fáil Party’s request to Mr O’Callaghan for a contribution of IR£100,000 towards reduction of its debt.

1.244 Moreover, Mr Ahern acknowledged that, even on Mr O’Callaghan’s account of his meeting with him on 24 March 1994, Mr O’Callaghan’s entreaty to him concerning Blanchardstown and tax designation had been made against a backdrop whereby Mr O’Callaghan had effectively committed himself to paying over IR£100,000 to Fianna Fáil, a commitment which, by 24 March 1994 he had commenced to make good, with the provision of a cheque for IR£10,000 to Mr Richardson during or after the Cork private dinner held on 11 March 1994.

1.245 As already set out, although he professed to have no particular recollection of the meeting, Mr Ahern neither confirmed nor disputed Mr O’Callaghan’s evidence that the tax designation or non tax designation of the Green Property plc site at Blanchardstown was a subject he and Mr O’Callaghan had discussed on 24 March 1994, and in respect of which Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal he was told ‘very quickly’ by Mr Ahern that neither Blanchardstown nor Quarryvale would receive tax designation status.

1.246 The Tribunal found⁴¹ that the issues for discussion between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Ahern on 24 March 1994 were Mr O’Callaghan’s stadium project, and his request for state funding for the project (by way of National Lottery funding and/or tax designation) as well as Mr O’Callaghan’s concern that the Blanchardstown Town Centre site might be favoured with tax designation status.

1.247 Mr Ahern accepted that his telephone call to Mr O’Callaghan in July 1994, during which he thanked him for his generous contribution to Fianna Fáil, could only have been in the context of his knowledge of Mr O’Callaghan’s significant contribution of IR£80,000 to Fianna Fáil, although he claimed not to have a recollection of that telephone conversation with Mr O’Callaghan. Mr Ahern could not recollect whether or not Mr O’Callaghan had made reference, during the course of that telephone conversation, to his stadium project which had been the subject of discussions Mr O’Callaghan had had with the then Taoiseach, Mr Reynolds, some weeks beforehand.⁴²

⁴² On 6 May, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr O’Connor met with Mr Reynolds, following which, also on 6 May, Mr O’Connor wrote directly to Mr Reynolds.

1.248 Mr Ahern was asked on Day 896 whether there was:

'...any question of this payment of £80,000 or indeed £100,000 by Mr O'Callaghan being conditional upon continued support being given to him by either yourself or Mr Reynolds in connection with the ongoing project of Neilstown, which was the subject of the conversations and meetings between them, to your knowledge?'

He responded:

'No, Mr O'Neill, either to my knowledge or without my knowledge. You know, that implies—we had this this morning again, but that implies that when somebody makes a contribution to a political party, in this case the political party I was honoured to be President and Leader and Vice President and Treasurer and probably nearly every other position over 35 years, that there is some fix that you get help or assistance that if you contribute to that party. I mean, that is not the way democratic politics has worked in my long experience, I have been in ten Dáils at cabinet tables for over 25 years, that's not the way it works.

It's not a list going around by the leader of the party or senior ministers or office holders in the party saying we'll help Joe Bloggs or Mary Bloggs because they have given us money and we'll help them even more if they give us more money, that does not happen, didn't happen, never saw anything like it, nothing connected with it. And I know your job is to ask the questions and my job is to answer them, if you are trying to put forward a conspiracy, that Ministers and Government that work under the constitution of this country play that kind of game. No they don't.'

1.249 Mr Ahern was further questioned as follows:

Q. 'As far as you are concerned it never happened at any time?'

A. 'In my life.'

Q. 'In your life. I am not talking only about you, but you have made a general statement about politics and the fact that politics has always been clean and that no politician has ever taken money in ministerial roles where it was inappropriate to do so, that's your evidence here today?'

A. 'That's my evidence. I never saw it linked up and other people have been in trouble over other things, but it has never been linked back. We have had previous Tribunals it has not been linked back to favours and in this case I have never seen a Government decision predicated on the fact that somebody was squirreling money into their party or into their own pocket either for that matter.'

A COMPARISON BETWEEN THE CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH MR O'CALLAGHAN PAID IR£80,000 TO FIANNA FáIL IN 1994 AND THE CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH MR GILMARTIN GAVE IR£50,000 TO MR PADRAIG FLYNN (INTENDED FOR FIANNA FáIL) IN 1989

1.250 The similar features were as follows:

In both instances:

- The sums of money in question were substantial.
- Senior party members made/promoted the request for a substantial donation.
- Recent, and/or current contact with one or more senior Government Ministers had taken place with the donors in relation to their business interests.
- The donors were involved in promoting their respective business interests and were seeking Government support in relation thereto.
- There was an element of perceived or actual pressure on both donors to make substantial donations, albeit for different reasons and to varying degrees.

1.251 The distinguishing features were as follows:

- Mr O'Callaghan was a known supporter of, and financial donor to, the Fianna Fáil Party prior to the 1994 IR£80,000 donation, albeit of significantly smaller amounts than IR£80,000⁴³ whereas prior to June 1989, Mr Gilmartin was not a contributor to the Fianna Fáil Party, nor was he known to be a supporter of the Party.
- Mr O'Callaghan had no difficulty in principle with a request from the Fianna Fáil Party for a donation, nor with complying with that request, save that at the time he perceived the substantial nature of the amount to be a strain on his company's finances whereas Mr Gilmartin, as the Tribunal found, made his donation of IR£50,000 to Fianna Fáil in particular circumstances. The Tribunal was satisfied⁴⁴ that Mr Gilmartin acceded to a request from Mr Flynn for a 'substantial contribution' for the Fianna Fáil Party in circumstances where Mr Flynn had suggested to him that the making of such a donation 'might help curb' certain activities then being complained of by Mr Gilmartin to Mr Flynn and others. The Tribunal found, as a matter of fact, that the activities in respect of which Mr Gilmartin was being advised might be curbed by such a donation, were corrupt demands for money made of him by three individuals in the early months of 1989, two of whom were members of Fianna Fáil.⁴⁵ Mr Gilmartin made his payment reluctantly and with a degree of desperation.

⁴³ See elsewhere in the Report for details of earlier FF contributions

- Mr O’Callaghan’s donation of IR£80,000 was paid into the Fianna Fáil bank accounts used for political purposes whereas Mr Gilmartin’s IR£50,000, although intended by him for the Fianna Fáil Party, was in fact kept by Mr Flynn and used by him (for the most part, at least) for personal/family purposes.⁴⁶

THE TRIBUNAL’S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE REQUEST MADE OF MR O’CALLAGHAN TO PAY A SUBSTANTIAL DONATION TO THE FIANNA FAIL PARTY

- i. The Tribunal was satisfied that at the time Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern wrote their September 1993 letter to Mr O’Callaghan seeking a substantial donation to the Fianna Fáil Party, it was against the backdrop of consistent lobbying by Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop at Government level for State subvention for the ‘All-Purpose Stadium’ project.
- ii. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O’Callaghan felt himself compelled to make this substantial payment to the Fianna Fail Party in circumstances where his company was obliged to use borrowed funds in order to do so, because of his concern, (be that perceived or real), that a failure on his part to so contribute would impact negatively on his efforts to secure Government support and financial assistance for the Stadium project.
- iii. Having regard to the evidence heard by it, the Tribunal did not deem it appropriate in the circumstances to determine that this payment to the Fianna Fail Party, and in particular the request made to Mr O’Callaghan by Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern for a substantial payment, was corrupt. The Tribunal nevertheless considered that the concept whereby senior Ministers, together with a former Government Minister and EU Commissioner closely associated with that party, would actively engage in (what amounted to in reality) pressurising a businessman, then involved in lobbying the Government to support a commercial project, to pay a substantial sum of money to that political party, was entirely inappropriate and an abuse of political power and Government authority.

⁴⁵ See elsewhere in the Report.

- iv. The similarity noted by the Tribunal to have existed in many important aspects as between, on the one hand, the request made of Mr Gilmartin by Mr Flynn, then a Government Minister, for a substantial donation to the Fianna Fail Party in 1989; and on the other hand, the request made of Mr O'Callaghan by Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern (then Taoiseach and Minister for Finance respectively) in 1993 were, the Tribunal believed, remarkable. In both instances, individuals who were engaged quite legitimately in promoting their interests with members of Government were subjected to requests for substantial financial donations to the political party with whom those Ministers were affiliated, and in circumstances where those individuals felt themselves to have had little choice but to comply (albeit for different reasons and in markedly different circumstances) with such requests.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 6 - SECTION B : 'BIG ONE'

2.01 Between January 1993 and June 1994, a number of entries in Mr Dunlop's diaries made reference to 'Big One'. The dates and relevant entries in the diary were as follows:

- 27 January 1993. '4.00 OO'C re big one'.
- 16 March 1993. 'OO'C to revert re big one'.
- 29 July 1993. 'Spoke to OO'C re Big One AGAIN!! Yes Yes'.
- 3 August 1993. 'Spoke to OO'C re Big One AGAIN!! Yes Yes'.
- 30 September 1993. 'OO'C report re Big One'.
- 13 December 1993. '5.00 OO'C & LL -> Discussion re Big One. When? If deal comes thru. 'Private' deal. When? Leave it to FD.'
- 1 June 1994. 'OO'C in FDA's. Spoke re Big One. OO'C said he hoped to have whole situation fixed up by end of month.'

2.02 Mr Dunlop swore his first Affidavit of Discovery on 7 July 1999, in response to a Tribunal Order made in February 1999, and which required him to discover, inter alia, all records relating to any business dealings or transactions as between himself and Mr O'Callaghan. This Order clearly included diary entries which included any such references or information for the period 1 September 1991 to 1 September 1993. A second Order for Discovery made in March 2000, required Mr Dunlop to make similar discovery for the period 1 January 1990 to 1 September 1991, and also from 1 September 1993 to 30 December 1993.

2.03 The first four 'big one' entries in Mr Dunlop's 1993 diary were required to be discovered by him on foot of the February 1999 Discovery Order, and the latter two 1993 entries were covered by the March 2000 Discovery Order.

2.04 However, in neither of the Affidavits sworn by Mr Dunlop on foot of the aforesaid Orders, was there any reference to any such diary entries.

2.05 The Tribunal first became aware of concealed 'big one' entries, when in 2001, Mr Dunlop furnished his entire unredacted diaries, following a request from the Tribunal to do so.

2.06 Mr Dunlop admitted that prior to furnishing to the Tribunal the copies of his diaries in 1999 and 2000, in their redacted version, he concealed the 'big one' entries, as well as other information in the diaries.

2.07 In the course of his evidence, Mr Dunlop agreed that he went to considerable lengths to keep the ‘big one’ entries which related to, as admitted by him, discussions of certain financial dealings/transactions as between himself and Mr O’Callaghan, concealed from the Tribunal. Mr Dunlop claimed that he could not recollect why he had concealed the diary entries in question. The Tribunal was, however, satisfied that in concealing these diary entries Mr Dunlop’s purpose, inter alia, was to keep from the Tribunal the existence of a significant financial matter which in 1993 and 1994, was the subject of negotiation, or had been agreed between himself and Mr O’Callaghan, and that he had not forgotten this reason when questioned by the Tribunal.

2.08 The Tribunal sought to establish, if, as contended by Mr Dunlop, ‘big one’ was a reference to an agreement whereby Mr Dunlop was to be paid a success fee in relation to Quarryvale, contingent upon the happening of a certain event (namely the lifting of the retail cap on Quarryvale) was correct, or whether in fact the designation ‘big one’ related to some other arrangement, either then under negotiation, or already agreed, between Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan.

2.09 Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan both acknowledged that in the period 1992 to 1994, there was an agreement in principle whereby Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly, together with Mr O’Callaghan, would, in some shape or form, have an interest in the ‘All Purpose National Stadium’, the project which was being promoted by Mr O’Callaghan at local and national level, as an alternative use for the Neilstown/Clondalkin lands.

2.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that such agreement, in principle, was probably being discussed in May 1992, when a document entitled ‘Action to be taken on Stadium after our meeting on 28th last’, was furnished by Mr O’Callaghan to Mr Dunlop. This document, inter alia, made reference to ‘Our involvement to include the group of four who met and discussed this at 6:30pm on Thursday 28th May’. Mr Dunlop’s diary also noted a meeting between Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Kelly, Mr Lawlor and himself on 29 April 1992.

2.11 Mr Dunlop, Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Kelly and Mr Deane all agreed that by approximately mid 1992, it was being proposed that Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly would become shareholders in an entity, Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd and that it had been agreed that each would have a 25% shareholding in the company, with Mr Lawlor’s shareholding to be held in trust for him by Mr Dunlop. There was probably a general view by most, if not all, of those involved in the project at the time that it was not in the interest of the project to have Mr Lawlor's involvement disclosed.¹

2.12 Mr O'Callaghan accepted that what had been proposed and/or agreed was that Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd would acquire the Neilstown lands, (in respect of which Merrygrove Ltd had an option to purchase), and that it would also acquire a further 28 acres of adjoining lands, (in respect of which, from 1993 onwards Merrygrove Ltd was negotiating with Dublin Corporation).

2.13 Mr Kelly agreed that there was a proposal whereby he was to become a shareholder in a company involved with the Stadium project and which 'Frank was taking charge of'. Mr Kelly maintained, however, that his proposed participation involved 'putting up capital' which he did not then have, and hence, he did not actually become involved. Mr Kelly professed not to know whether the company had ever been established, as Mr Dunlop 'never came back to me on it' and had 'never produced any documentation' to him.

2.14 Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Kelly and Mr Deane maintained that Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor's participation in this venture, through Leisure Ireland Ltd /Leisure West Ltd required a financial input, on the part of each, of £250,000.

2.15 When asked, on Day 816, to identify what he was 'bringing to the table in terms of getting 25 per cent interest of the Stadium company' Mr Dunlop explained:

'Well I wasn't giving anything in the context. I was a participant with the other three in the generation of the idea, notwithstanding the fact that I have already told you that the genesis of the idea, as far as I recollect it from the outset, came from Mr. Liam Lawlor. And that this was regarded, if it succeeded, would have been regarded as a very, very successful, desirable project and that it would could possibly be extremely profitable.'

2.16 An analysis of Mr Dunlop's 'big one' diary entries revealed that, to a significant degree, the entries mirrored certain actions, (in 1993 and 1994), on the part of Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan and others, connected to the aforementioned Stadium project.

2.17 Notwithstanding this apparent coincidence in time between Mr Dunlop recording in his diary his expectations with regard to 'big one', and events which were taking place with regard to the progressing of the proposed involvement of Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly in the proposed Stadium project, Mr Dunlop continued to maintain, for the most part, that his 'big one' diary entries referred to his putative Quarryvale 'success' fee, and not his anticipated participation as an owner/profit sharer in the proposed 'All Purpose National Stadium.'

¹ Mr O'Callaghan recognised a potential negative effect for Quarryvale if it became publicly known that Mr Lawlor was associated with it. Mr Dunlop had a similar view.

2.18 Both Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan maintained that the only significant financial matter discussed between them in 1993, related to their discussions about the payment of a future success fee to Mr Dunlop regarding Quarryvale, contingent upon the removal of the retail cap which had been put in place in December 1992 (and which was confirmed in the 1993 Development Plan).

2.19 Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that he did not know what the reference 'big one' referred to. He stated that it 'probably' referred to a success fee, but also accepted that it could have been a reference to a shareholding in the Stadium project.

2.20 Contrary to Mr Dunlop's assertion that the 1993/1994 'big one' entries related to a success fee for Mr Dunlop, as then unquantified, and payable at a future date contingent on the lifting of the Quarryvale retail cap, the Tribunal was satisfied that no such agreement was concluded between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan by January 1993. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop, in the period 1992 to 1994, anticipated his reward and/or his success fee for his Quarryvale and Stadium endeavours by way of his expected participation, together with Messrs O'Callaghan, Kelly and Lawlor, in the 'All Purpose National Stadium' project.

2.21 The Tribunal noted in particular two 'big one' entries which appeared in the diaries in mid 1993. On 29 July 1993 Mr Dunlop noted the following:

'Spoke to OO'C re 'Big One' AGAIN!! Yes, Yes'

This notation was followed, on 3 August 1993 with:

'Spoke to OOC re Big One AGAIN!! Yes, Yes'

2.22 The Tribunal believed that these diary entries reflected discussions then underway between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan about the former's involvement, on an ownership basis, in the Stadium project.

2.23 The Tribunal was satisfied that, the manner in which the results of Mr Dunlop's and Mr O'Callaghan's discussions were being recorded by Mr Dunlop, was indicative of the fact that in his negotiations with Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Dunlop believed that considerable progress was being made with regard to whatever interest Mr Dunlop was to receive.

2.24 On 31 August 1993,² having collected Mr O’Callaghan from the airport, Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan, in the company of Mr Lawlor, met at Mr Dunlop’s Co. Meath home that afternoon. Mr Dunlop maintained that this meeting was likely to have been a ‘strategy’ meeting relating to Quarryvale, and the general Stadium project. A reference to this meeting was noted in Mr Dunlop’s diary, (‘3:00 meet LL/OO’C at home’). However, this particular entry was deliberately concealed from the copy of the diary extract originally provided by Mr Dunlop to the Tribunal. When questioned as to why the said reference to Mr Lawlor and Mr O’Callaghan attending a meeting together had been concealed by Mr Dunlop in this way, Mr Dunlop was unable to give any cogent reason. Mr Dunlop accepted the likelihood that the respective shareholdings in Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd were agreed at this meeting.

2.25 The Tribunal believed it was likely that one of the topics of discussion at this meeting was Mr Dunlop’s, Mr Lawlor’s and Mr Kelly’s proposed shareholding/interest in the Stadium project, and that this discussion prompted Mr Dunlop’s letter to Mr James O’ Dwyer of Arthur Cox, Solicitors on 2 September 1993, in which he referred to himself being a 25% shareholder, and of holding another 25% shareholding ‘in trust’ in Leisure Ireland Limited. His letter read as follows:

Dear James,

I mentioned the proposed National Stadium to you during our telephone conversation on Tuesday last. I act professionally for the promoter of the Stadium, Owen O’Callaghan of O’Callaghan Properties Limited, Cork. I am also a 25% shareholder, and I hold another 25% in trust, in the company which will promote and project manage both the funding and construction of this facility. The name of this company is Leisure Ireland Limited.

I would like Arthur Cox to advise Leisure Ireland Limited on all the legal aspects and requirements of this project and would be grateful if you would nominate the appropriate person with whom I can liaise.

2.26 Questioned as to the reason why Mr Lawlor’s share was to be held in trust, Mr Dunlop stated:

‘Because Mr. Lawlor, two things. One Mr. Lawlor apparently wanted it that way. And secondly, I think the other participants Mr. O’Callaghan myself and Mr. O’Callaghan, Mr. Kelly and myself viewed it as easier, an easier matter to deal with without having Liam Lawlor’s name attached.’

² Mr Dunlop’s diary for 30 August 1993, recorded a meeting between himself, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor at the Berkley Court Hotel, at 7:30am. Mr Kelly expressed surprise that he would have attended any meeting at such an early hour, but did not deny that it could have taken place.

2.27 When asked whether Mr Lawlor's participation in the project would have affected applications then being made for assistance from the Government, Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well I don't know how it would have had effect from assistance from the government because that would be a matter of the representatives of the government to make a decision appropriate. But I can answer your question by saying sadly. I believe that it would have had a negative effect in that people's perception of the matter might have been skewed by virtue of the fact that Liam Lawlor was attached.'

2.28 Mr Dunlop proceeded to advise his solicitors on 6 September 1993 that the Stadium project had '...planning permission together with strong backing from the Government.....' Mr Dunlop was asked to explain the basis on which he had made this assertion to his Solicitor. He stated:

'I base the assertion on the stated and repeated support given by Albert Reynolds as Taoiseach to both Mr. O'Callaghan and myself in relation to the ...to the... to the project. The fact that a National Stadium was now a national objective as it were and had been listed as such by the government and representatives of the government. And to all intents and purposes it was an issue in relation to the possibility of government funding that just had to be tied down.' Mr. Dunlop also said '...the impression persisted that from the moment that the idea of a National Stadium was presented to the government as a possibility, and a request for funding in whatever format it would be given, was made, that the attitude was positive.'

2.29 Mr Dunlop met with Arthur Cox, Solicitors, on 10 September 1993. On that occasion, as variously noted by the three solicitors with whom he spoke, Mr Dunlop advised them that he, together with Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Kelly, as 33.3% shareholders in a company Leisure Ireland Ltd wished to enter into an agreement with Merrygrove Ltd³ to acquire 33 acres of land held by Merrygrove Ltd near Quarryvale, with the object of developing a Stadium on the lands. Mr Dunlop was in a position to report to his legal advisors that planning permission had been obtained for these lands⁴, and that Deloitte & Touche had undertaken a Feasibility Study on the project. Moreover, Mr Dunlop advised his solicitors that there was a Government commitment to a grant of £5 million per annum for the project for a period of 10 years, commencing in 1996.

³ By this time Merrygrove Ltd was a wholly owned subsidiary of Barkhill Ltd.

⁴ A decision to grant Planning Permission was made on 23 August 1993. The Planning Permission was granted on 7 October 1993.

2.30 Notwithstanding Mr Dunlop's denial, the Tribunal was satisfied that on 10 September 1993, Mr Dunlop advised his solicitors that the project had received a Government commitment for State funding, and that Mr Dunlop, on the date in question, was instructing Arthur Cox to put matters in train so as to give effect to the proposal to transfer the Neilstown lands to Leisure Ireland Ltd.

2.31 The instructions given by Mr Dunlop on that date were encapsulated in a letter written by Mr Dunlop to Mr O' Dwyer, of Arthur Cox, Solicitors, on the 15 September 1993, wherein Mr Dunlop stated, under the heading 'Leisure West Limited Re National Stadium' as follows:

Dear James,

We met at your office on Friday, 10th inst. in relation to the above. I thank you for your valuable advice in the matter and for the expeditious manner in which the meeting was organised.

You asked me to write to you with my recommendations regarding the ownership of the lands on which the Stadium is to be built and the transfer of same to Leisure West Limited.

Put simply, legal effect is now required for the transfer of the 33 acres of land in the ownership of Merrygrove Limited., at Cappagh, Neilstown, Clondalkin, Dublin 22 and similarly for the transfer of the option which Merrygrove Limited. holds on the adjoining 28 acres to Leisure West Limited.

Agreement in principle has been reached regarding such a transfer between the owners of Merrygrove Limited, chief of whom is Mr. Owen O'Callaghan, and the shareholders and directors of Leisure West Limited, represented by myself.

Regarding the financial aspect it is agreed that the costs associated with this transfer will be the exact original purchase price paid for the 33 acres, together with the accumulated costs to date, duly receipted.

I hope this gives you an idea of what is involved. I know it appears simple but no doubt I've forgotten important points. Perhaps we could meet again to discuss. I am under some pressure from Chilton & O'Connor, Investment Bankers (1901 Avenue of the Stars, Suite 300, Los Angeles, CA 90067) to appoint them, on a no foal/no fee basis as funding facilitators for the project. I would be grateful for your guidance in this regard also.

2.32 Mr Dunlop agreed that there was no ambiguity about the contents of that letter. He acknowledged that, had the transfer of the option on the lands taken place, as envisaged in his letter, then Leisure West Ltd would have become the owner of the option, an event which, for Leisure West Ltd would have been, in effect, a multi million pound transaction.

2.33 Notwithstanding this acknowledgment, Mr Dunlop continued to maintain to the Tribunal that his 'orientation' in terms of the interest he was to receive in the project, had always been an interest in the operational aspect of the proposed Stadium rather than in the lands on which it was to be built. Mr Dunlop explained his 15 September 1992 letter as having been written to galvanise Mr O'Callaghan into action, on foot of the verbal agreement which had been reached with Mr O'Callaghan. Mr Dunlop stated:

'I think perhaps and I am not saying this definitively, but perhaps it was to push Mr. O'Callaghan into an agreement in relation to the setting up of Leisure West and a division of the 25 per cent each in relation to the operation of the Stadium. I never, to this day, even reviewing that document in the brief or otherwise, to this day I have never believed and there was never any agreement with Mr. O'Callaghan for the transfer of any lands to Leisure West.'

2.34 Mr Dunlop maintained that he wrote the letter 'Because, Mr. Lawlor and myself are pushing the solicitors to get on to John Deane who is the solicitor to Mr. O'Callaghan, to effect an arrangement to effect an agreement of some sort in relation to the Stadium'. Asked to explain the agreement which he claimed had been entered into with Mr O'Callaghan by 15 September 1993, Mr Dunlop stated the following:

'My understanding has always been that Mr. O'Callaghan and I with Ambrose Kelly and Liam Lawlor agreed that in relation to the Stadium in general, that there would be a 25 per cent interest held by each of us and one of us would hold the 25 per cent for Mr. Lawlor and it was related to the Stadium. Notwithstanding any technicalities in relation to the land that the Stadium was built on, to this day I would have said that it was absolutely futile for anybody to suggest to Mr. O'Callaghan that he would transfer his interest in the land at Merrygrove – held by Merrygrove to a new company called Leisure West. I don't think that was ever in the offing.'

2.35 Mr Dunlop agreed that in his dealings with Arthur Cox, he was, in effect, representing himself, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor, and possibly Mr O'Callaghan.

2.36 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that the contents of his letter suggested an awareness on his part of the fact that Mr O'Callaghan was not the sole owner of Merrygrove Ltd. Mr Dunlop was aware of Mr Gilmartin's interest in Merrygrove.⁵

2.37 On 21 September 1993, Arthur Cox, Solicitors, contacted Mr John Deane, Merrygrove's solicitor, following Mr Dunlop's instructions. Mr Walsh of that firm wrote as follows:

SUBJECT TO CONTRACT

I refer to our telephone conversation and understand that agreement in principle has been reached regarding an option in favour of Leisure West Limited to purchase 33 acres of land held by your client coupled with a transfer of an option over an adjoining 28 acres. I also understand that the proposed purchase price if the option is exercised will equal the original purchase price paid for the 33 acres with accumulated costs to date duly vouched.

I look forward to hearing from you as soon as possible with copies of your client's title and the option over the adjoining lands together with details of the costs to date in relation to the 33 acres.

2.38 Mr Deane, on behalf of Merrygrove Limited responded to Arthur Cox, Solicitors, on 27 September 1993, in the following terms:

Dear John

Thank you for your fax of the 21st September. Perhaps you could also confirm to me your understanding as to the shareholding in Leisure West Limited. Once I hear from you on this point I shall have a consultation with my client and revert to you.

2.39 There was no suggestion in Mr Deane's letter that the underlying premise of Arthur Cox, Solicitors' 21 September 1993 letter to Mr Deane, namely that an agreement had been reached in principle between Leisure West Ltd and Merrygrove Ltd for the transfer of the Option on the Neilstown lands to Leisure West Ltd, was being queried or refuted. On 27 September 1993⁶, Arthur Cox, Solicitors, wrote again to Mr Deane clarifying their understanding that the three shareholders in Leisure West Ltd would each hold a one third share⁷.

⁵ Mr Gilmartin's interest in Merrygrove was through his shareholding in Barkhill.

⁶ On the 30 September 1993, (three days after this letter was written) Mr Dunlop's diary included the following information 'OO'C Report re Big One'.

⁷ Arthur Cox, Solicitors were never advised of Mr Lawlor's proposed secret shareholding.

2.40 On 6 October 1993, Mr Walsh of Arthur Cox, Solicitors wrote to Mr Dunlop urging him to request Mr O'Callaghan to give the necessary instructions to Mr Deane, so that the Merrygrove Limited's Option 'can be put to bed before any major benefit accrues to the site arising from your forthcoming discussions.'⁸

2.41 Between September and December 1993, there were ongoing discussions between Arthur Cox, Solicitors, and Mr Deane, Solicitor, representing Merrygrove Ltd in relation to Leisure Ireland Ltd. These discussions, in all probability, culminated in a letter from Mr Deane to Arthur Cox, Solicitors, on 7 December 1993⁹, which set out the background to Merrygrove Estates Ltd. becoming the owner of the Option to purchase 33 acres of lands, and of the fact that Merrygrove Estates Ltd was, in 1993, negotiating to acquire an additional 28 acres of land from Dublin Corporation. Mr Deane advised Mr Walsh as follows:

'As you will see from the foregoing, the legal frame work to secure the site may be a little indefinite. There is no doubt that there is very substantial goodwill on the part of Dublin Corporation to see the stadium project proceed and on this basis, Owen does not see any difficulty with Dublin Corporation in relation to this entire site.

Owen is happy to grant the option referred to in your letter. In the event of the option being exercised, then not only must the expenses referred to in your letter be reimbursed, but also the deposit of £300,000 paid by Merrygrove. In relation to the sum mentioned in your letter for expenses, this is a figure which Owen has agreed and is not to be subject to alteration or the production of vouchers and other verification.

The shareholding as set out in your recent correspondence is agreed.

It was also agreed that our firm would act for the new company in connection with the stadium project as we have been involved in the project since the inception of the stadium concept.'

2.42 Notwithstanding the clear and unambiguous terms in which Mr Deane's letter was formulated, Mr Dunlop, on Day 817, continued to maintain that his 'abiding recollection' was that he was to receive 25% of the Stadium, and not the land itself.

⁸ A likely reference to contact then anticipated to be made by Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop with the Taoiseach, Mr Reynolds. By August 1993, Deloitte & Touche had produced their financial feasibility study for the Stadium. A decision to grant planning permission had been made on 23 August 1993. See Chapter Two, Part 6, Section A, 'The Neilstown Stadium and Related Matters.'

⁹ Mr Deane's letter to Arthur Cox, Solicitors was written some six days after Mr Dunlop wrote to the Minister for Finance Mr Ahern and Mr O'Callaghan wrote to the Taoiseach, Mr Albert Reynolds – see Chapter Two, Part 6, Section A, 'The Neilstown Stadium and Related Matters.'

2.43 However, the Tribunal was satisfied that by December 1993, Mr O'Callaghan¹⁰ had reached some level of agreement with Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly and Mr Liam Lawlor to the effect that all four were to be participants in Leisure Ireland/Leisure West, and that one of the first steps to be taken by that entity was to put in place a process to acquire from Merrygrove Ltd the lands on which the proposed Stadium was to be built.

2.44 On 13 December 1993, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop met the Taoiseach, Mr Reynolds. Mr O'Callaghan, believed that this meeting concerned the Stadium project, and that it was his impression from the meeting that Mr Reynolds was supportive of it.¹¹

2.45 The Tribunal was satisfied that, a meeting which Mr Dunlop had on 13 December 1993, with Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Lawlor, shortly after the meeting with Mr Reynolds, was probably for the purposes of discussing the progression of their and Mr Kelly's involvement as shareholders in Leisure Ireland/Leisure West, the entity which was to be the beneficiary of the commitment then being given at national level for the Stadium project.

2.46 Mr Dunlop noted in his diary on 13 December 1993, the discussion with Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Lawlor in the following terms:

'5.00 OOC & LL → Discussion re Big One. When? If deal comes thru. 'Private' deal. When? Leave it to FD.'

2.47 Mr Dunlop claimed that he was unable to explain the reference to 'private deal' in this diary entry but stated that the reference to 'big one' was associated with the success fee. When pressed by Tribunal Counsel to explain the reference 'private deal' in his diary entry for 13 December 1993, Mr Dunlop suggested that it might have related to a potential success fee, and was not related to the Stadium.

2.48 On Day 784, the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Dunlop:

'Q. Isn't it much more likely, Mr. Dunlop, that the deal you were discussing in December of 1993 related to the National Stadium and the apparent agreement that existed between Mr. O'Callaghan, Mr. Lawlor, Mr. Ambrose Kelly and yourself for a 25 percent share each in the stadium?'

¹¹ Mr O'Callaghan maintained that, as far as he was aware, Mr Reynolds had always been supportive and committed to the Stadium project.

- A. I am loathe to say that that is the case, Ms. Dillon. There certainly was discussion between Mr. O'Callaghan, Mr. Lawlor, myself and Ambrose Kelly in relation to a shareholding, a 25 percent shareholding each in relation to the stadium. I cannot absolutely say that that is the reference to it now and the reason I cannot say that is because of the opening sentence relating to 'big one.'
- Q. Yes. But if you were wrong about 'big one,' Mr. Dunlop, and if in fact 'big one' never related to a success fee at all, and always related while you were recording it in your diary to a share that you might get in the National Stadium, then this entry would make sense, isn't that right?
- A. Well, in the way that you've just outlined it now, yes, it would make sense. But I have to point out to you that there was a separate discussion between Owen O'Callaghan, Liam Lawlor, Ambrose Kelly and myself in relation to a shareholding in the stadium. And in fact, well, as the Tribunal knows, things were put in place to establish an entity in which that shareholding would be held and that the shareholding of Mr. Lawlor would be held on a nominee basis by one of the other partners.
- Q. This note that you have made on the 13th of December 1993 notes 'if the deal comes through.'
- A. Yes.
- Q. 'Then private deal.' So there was no final agreement in relation to whatever that deal was by the 13th of December 1993, isn't that correct?
- A. That's correct.
- Q. Right. So whatever you had been discussing in, on the 13th of December had not crystallised, it hadn't taken place, isn't that right?
- A. It would appear so, yes.
- Q. Because your note records that if the deal comes through then there'll be a private deal and it's to be left to you, isn't that right?
- A. Correct, yes.
- Q. That does not suggest or smack of a fixed agreement in relation to a success fee about lifting the cap in Quarryvale, Mr. Dunlop?
- A. Yes, I agree, as you put it doesn't smack of that. But I have to say again I repeat what I said to you earlier, that any discussion that took place between Owen O'Callaghan, Liam Lawlor and myself in this particular instance although Ambrose Kelly was participant in other discussions he's not mentioned here, was related to the shareholding in the stadium. But I cannot say that that discussion refers to the stadium. I cannot absolutely say that it refers to the stadium.'

2.49 On Day 817, Mr Dunlop was further questioned as follows:

- 'Q. And at 10548, Mr. Dunlop, the entry in your diary for the 13th relates to T re Stadium?

- A. Yes.
- Q. Isn't that right?
- A. Correct.
- Q. And at the bottom of that page, Mr. Dunlop, do you see the entry OOC and LL?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And do you see discussion re 'big one'?
- A. Yes.
- Q. When?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. If deal comes through private deal when leave it to FD?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. Now in December 1993, you will remember that on the 7th of December '93, that Mr. Deane had replied to Mr. Walsh's correspondence in relation to the option or proposed option over the Neilstown lands, isn't that right?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Now, is this, Mr. Dunlop, a reference to that agreement?
- A. No I don't believe it is. I can absolutely assure you that it's not.
- Q. Will you just explain precisely what it means?
- A. Well I think it's. I've had a discussion with not with -- with Owen O'Callaghan in relation to the success fee and I'm -- I cannot specifically tell you what the reference is to private is or when. It is relating to the success fee and always has related to the success fee.
- Q. Well if we just sort of break it down a little bit, Mr. Dunlop. It says discussion re 'big one'?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. Then it says when?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. And they were it says if deal comes through?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. So what deal were you talking about, Mr. Dunlop? What deal was in the pipeline in December 1993?
- A. Well there was no deal in the pipeline in December 1993 because there was no deal in relation to anything else that I was concerned of with Mr. O'Callaghan at that time and that was the success fee.
- Q. No, you are incorrect, Mr. Dunlop?
- A. Uh-huh.
- Q. Because there was a deal in progress which was the correspondence evidenced between the two solicitors which was current and which had not been -- if you just wait -- responded to on the 7th of December 1993 isn't that right?
- A. Did not relate to this.

- Q. And it is clear, Mr. Dunlop, from the correspondence and Mr. Deane's reply that Mr. Deane is suggesting that there was agreement in principle, isn't that right but matters had to be worked out?
- A. Yeah.
- Q. Isn't that right. And I am suggesting to you Mr. Dunlop that that correspondence more accurately fits what you have recorded in your diary, isn't that right?
- A. No, I don't agree and I have never so regarded it as such. I have always regarded 'big one' as being relating to the success fee.
- Q. Yes, but the only deal that was current Mr. Dunlop in December 1993 was nothing about a success fee. The only deal that was going on or negotiation between yourself and Mr. O'Callaghan related to the Stadium, isn't that right?
- A. There was the discussion and correspondence that you have outlined yes were taking place in or around this time but I can tell you that it did not relate to that.
- Q. And Mr. Lawlor had no interest in discussing any success fee with you Mr. Dunlop because that was a totally private matter between yourself and Mr. O'Callaghan, isn't that right?
- A. Correct, yes.
- Q. But Mr. Lawlor was a silent 25 per cent proposed partner in the Stadium enterprise, isn't that right?
- A. Correct.
- Q. And would have had, I suggest to you, a very great interest in any discussion passing between yourself and Mr. O'Callaghan about the Stadium isn't that right?
- A. And did so participate on many occasions.
- Q. And I would suggest to you that according to the note that you say is contemporaneous and that you made and that Mr. Lawlor and Mr. O'Callaghan are present or in some way connected to the note that you have made isn't that right?
- A. Yes, I have never discussed any success fee other than with Mr. O'Callaghan.
- Q. You didn't listen to my question. I am suggesting to you that from the entry that's recorded in your diary that Mr. Lawlor was present with Mr. O'Callaghan when you were having your discussion with Mr. O'Callaghan about the 'big one', because the arrow comes from both Mr. Lawlor and Mr. O'Callaghan in your diary to the discussion about the 'big one', isn't that right?
- A. I hear what you are saying and I see what you are suggesting and what I am saying to you is that I never had a discussion with Mr. O'Callaghan and Liam Lawlor in relation to a success fee.

- Q. And I am suggesting to you Mr. Dunlop that for reasons that you haven't disclosed to the Tribunal, that the entries in your diary in relation to 'big one' do not relate to a success fee. That they relate instead to some agreement that you thought you had in connection with the Stadium?
- A. No, I disagree.'

2.50 Mr O'Callaghan said he did not know what was meant by Mr Dunlop's diary entry, but he acknowledged that his discussion with Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor, as noted by Mr Dunlop on 13 December 1993, could have related to the Stadium project. He also suggested that the 'big one' reference could have referred to Mr Dunlop's success fee, but added that Mr Lawlor would not have been present if that matter was the subject of the discussion.

2.51 The Tribunal was satisfied that the reference to 'private deal' and 'Leave it to FD' were references to the fact that Mr Dunlop was to be the person, via his solicitors, who was to spearhead the process of ensuring that Leisure Ireland Limited/Leisure West Ltd would acquire the Neilstown Option and adjoining lands, thus placing Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd in prime position to enter the type of arrangement that might be concluded between it and the proposed 'National Stadium Authority', as envisaged by the Feasibility Study prepared by Chilton & O'Connor.

2.52 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that the Merrygrove Estates Ltd option over the Neilstown lands was, in reality, a very valuable asset, and although demurring that the reference to 'big one' related to this subject, acknowledged that such a valuable asset was worthy of the appellation 'big one'.

2.53 It appeared to the Tribunal that, in terms of correspondence at least, a hiatus of sorts occurred in the early months of 1994, in the efforts to progress Messrs Dunlop, Lawlor and Kelly's participation in the Stadium project. However, the Tribunal believed it likely that Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan spoke about the issue on 1 June 1994. On that date, Mr Dunlop noted the following in his diary:

OO'C in FDA's. Spoke re Big One. OO'C said he hoped to have whole situation fixed up by end of month.

2.54 Both men met again on 29 June 1994, and the Tribunal was satisfied that whatever information was imparted by Mr O'Callaghan to Mr Dunlop on that occasion, it was sufficient to prompt Mr Dunlop to write to his solicitors on 30 June 1994, in the following terms:

I met with Owen O'Callaghan at my office yesterday. He reaffirmed our earlier agreement that the ownership of the lands at Neilstown, North Clondalkin, Dublin 22 (specifically the lands on which the proposed All Purpose National Stadium is to be built) comprising some 55 acres, is to be vested in Owen O'Callaghan 33 ⅓%, Ambrose Kelly 33 ⅓%, Frank Dunlop 33 ⅓%, these three being the shareholders in Leisure Ireland Ltd.

I would greatly appreciate it if you could expedite this matter as soon as possible with Mr. O'Callaghan's, solicitor, Mr. John Deane, as the matter of the stadium is now progressing speedily¹²

Mr O'Callaghan, when questioned about the content of this letter, stated that the letter did not represent the full extent of the agreement in question. It was silent, for example, on the requirement that the proposed shareholders provide capital, and that necessary guarantees be put in place.

2.55 On 12 July 1994, Mr Dunlop again requested his solicitors to expedite matters.

2.56 Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that the agreement whereby himself, Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor were to become shareholders in Leisure Ireland Ltd and whereby that company was to acquire ownership of the Neilstown and adjoining lands was reaffirmed on 29 June 1994. He acknowledged that there was no reference in the letter of 30 June 1994 (to Arthur Cox, Solicitors), to Mr Dunlop's shareholding in Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd being predicated/conditional on a financial input on his part, or a financial input from the other parties. Mr O'Callaghan agreed that the reference in Mr Dunlop's letter to Mr Walsh of Arthur Cox, Solicitors, of Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly and himself holding, respectively, the 33.3% shareholding in the company included, within each respective shareholding, a provision for the shareholding of Mr Lawlor. Mr O'Callaghan however continued to maintain that each of the three, Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly, were required to provide a cash injection of £250,000, in return for their proposed participation in the Stadium project.

2.57 Insofar as Mr O'Callaghan had an overall opinion on the provenance of the 'big one' entries in Mr Dunlop's diaries, he stated 'it can only be the success fee'. Mr O'Callaghan could not understand why Mr Dunlop referred to the 'big one' so often in his diary. He maintained that while they had discussed a success fee on possibly two or three occasions, its amount was never agreed.

2.58 The Tribunal believed that the urgency expressed by Mr Dunlop in his letters of 30 June and 12 July 1994, in all probability, arose because by mid 1994, Chilton & O'Connor had completed a further Financial Feasibility Study in relation to the Stadium project, and Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop anticipated presenting this Study to Mr Reynolds in person, as evidenced by the contents of a letter sent by Mr Dunlop to Mr Reynolds on 11 July 1994. That document was furnished to Mr Reynolds when Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Dunlop and Mr Reynolds met in the Connemara Coast Hotel in late July 1994.

2.59 By 12 July 1994, Mr O'Callaghan was in a position to write and advise Mr Dunlop that the 'Stadium proposal really seemed to be getting off the ground at last', although, according to Mr O'Callaghan, the legal status of Leisure Ireland Ltd remained in 'limbo' and hence his advice to Mr Dunlop to arrange contact between Leisure Ireland's solicitors and his solicitor, Mr Deane.

2.60 While Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that there was no reference or suggestion in any of the contemporaneous documentation of the proposed shareholding of Messrs Dunlop, Kelly and Lawlor being conditional upon cash injection being made by each, he maintained that he had made this clear in his verbal discussions with Mr Dunlop and 'to John Deane as well.'

2.61 On 19 July 1994, Arthur Cox, Solicitors, wrote to Mr Dunlop and enclosed for his attention a draft agreement for the transfer of the Merrygrove Ltd option to Leisure West Ltd.

2.62 Mr Dunlop replied to Mr O'Callaghan's 12 July letter on 25 July 1994 in the following terms:

Dear Owen,

Thank you for your letter of the 12th inst. in the above matter which I received this morning on my return. The content is not exactly as I foresaw. Having reviewed the correspondence between John Deane and John Walsh of Arthur Cox, together with copies of the contracts between Merrygrove Ltd., Merrygrove Estates Ltd., and Dublin Corporation I would like to outline what I now believe is necessary on foot of the original agreement between us, reiterated during our meeting at my office on Wednesday 29th June, 1994 and confirmed in your follow up letter of the 12th July 1994: (a) a letter from you specifying the agreement viz that you (Owen O' Callaghan) Ambrose Kelly and Frank Dunlop are shareholders in Leisure Ireland Ltd. with the following holdings: Owen O'Callaghan 25%, Ambrose Kelly 25%, Frank Dunlop 50% (b) John Deane and John Walsh to give effect to the necessary contractual documentation in this matter between Merrygrove Ltd. or Merrygrove Estates Ltd. and Leisure Ireland Ltd.

These two matters are of urgency because the National Stadium Authority will have to be given a legally acceptable contract by Leisure Ireland to allow the stadium project to proceed.

I have forwarded a copy of your letter of 12th inst. and this letter to both John Walsh and John Deane. To expedite this matter I suggest a meeting between John Deane, John Walsh and myself soonest.

2.63 On 28 July 1994, a meeting took place between Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Dunlop, Mr Kevin Burke of Chilton & O'Connor and the Taoiseach, Mr Reynolds, at the Connemara Coast Hotel in County Galway.

2.64 Included in the Feasibility Study presented to Mr Reynolds in the course of this meeting, was a proposal to the Government for the establishment of a 'National Stadium Authority', and for the funding of the said Authority to come from National Lottery Funds. Throughout 1994, this was the proposal that was being promoted, inter alia, by Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Connor to the Taoiseach, Mr Reynolds, and to Mr Ahern, Minister for Finance, and to others.

2.65 It appeared that on 29 September 1994, Mr Dunlop (as noted by his Solicitor), was in a position to advise Arthur Cox, Solicitors, that the Financial Feasibility Study carried out by Chilton & O'Connor in the summer of 1994, had been given to Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern, and that the 'Taoiseach' was in favour of the project. The solicitor's note also recorded Mr Dunlop's awareness that Mr O'Callaghan's expenditure to date would have to be reimbursed. Internal correspondence between solicitors within Arthur Cox indicated as of 11 October 1994, that the firm continued to work on a draft Shareholders Agreement, for review by Mr Dunlop and the other proposed shareholders. Mr O' Dwyer's memorandum to his colleague read, as follows:

I recently had a meeting with Frank Dunlop to discuss a shareholders agreement in relation to the above mentioned company. At John's request I raised the issue of the proposed solicitors to Leisure Ireland Limited. Frank Dunlop assured me that it had been agreed with Owen O'Callaghan and Ambrose Kelly that Arthur Cox would act as independent solicitors for Leisure Ireland Limited. Apparently John Deane (Owen O'Callaghan's solicitor) was the preferred choice of Owen O'Callaghan but Frank assured me that he has prevailed on Owen O'Callaghan and Ambrose Kelly on his particular matter.

I am currently preparing a draft shareholders agreement for review by Frank Dunlop and the other shareholders. I will keep you advised of developments.

2.66 On 24 November 1994, Arthur Cox, Solicitors, wrote to Mr Dunlop, and enclosed a draft Subscription and Shareholders Agreement relating to Leisure Ireland Limited, for Mr Dunlop's perusal.

2.67 The contemporaneous correspondence and documentation, as considered by the Tribunal, suggested that, for the summer period of 1994, the emphasis, on the part of Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan, was on putting Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd into a position where it could legally become the owner of the lands on which the 'All Purpose National Stadium' was to be built. That entity, as the promoter of the Stadium development, would then enter into a contract with the proposed 'National Stadium Authority', in the event of the creation of such Authority, and in the event that the provision of adequate funding therefor being given the green light by the Government. It was certainly the case, that both Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop expected, in 1994, that the Government would proceed in this direction.

2.68 Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop, in the course of their respective testimonies, maintained that, although the Stadium project was still live by mid 1994, the proposal whereby Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly were to have a 25% shareholding each in Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd was no longer a reality. According to Mr O'Callaghan, both Mr Dunlop and Mr Kelly had themselves chosen not to become personally involved because of the requirement to invest IR£250,000 each into the project. Mr Lawlor had not accepted this requirement, and had, according to Mr O'Callaghan, continued to push for participation in the project. Mr O'Callaghan maintained that Mr Dunlop's 1994 correspondence relating to the proposed participation of himself, Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly in the project was engineered by Mr Dunlop to ensure that Mr Lawlor believed that the project was moving towards fruition.

2.69 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that his 1994 correspondence with Arthur Cox was generated for the benefit of having Mr Lawlor believe that the proposal, whereby Mr Lawlor, Mr Dunlop and Mr Kelly were to become shareholders, was still a viable proposal. Curiously, Mr Dunlop, in the course of his evidence, made no reference to his proposed shareholding in Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd being conditional on a cash injection of £250,000, nor did he suggest that he had ever been requested for this sum, or had ever communicated to Mr O'Callaghan his inability to provide such funding.

2.70 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop continued to instruct his Solicitors to progress the proposed acquisition by Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd of the Merrygrove Ltd Option on the Neilstown lands. Mr Dunlop's dealings with his Solicitors in this regard belied his evidence that his 1994 correspondence was merely a ruse to give comfort to Mr Lawlor. Moreover, Mr Deane's correspondence with Arthur Cox similarly belied Mr O'Callaghan's contention that, by mid 1994 the proposed involvement of Mr Dunlop and the others in the Stadium project had been abandoned.

2.71 The Tribunal was satisfied that, at all relevant times, throughout 1993 and 1994, the progression of 'Big One' ran parallel to the progression of the 'All Purpose National Stadium' project, a project which was being promoted at Government level by Mr O'Callaghan, with assistance from both his international and local advisors, (including Mr Dunlop).

2.72 An analysis of the contemporaneous documentation dealing with the proposed participation of Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly in the Stadium venture did not reveal that a financial contribution (as claimed by Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Kelly and Mr Deane, in evidence), was ever actually sought from Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor or Mr Kelly. It was however clear, from Mr Dunlop's instructions to his solicitors, that he had understood that Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd, in the event that it was to acquire the Merrygrove Ltd option, would incur financial obligations, i.e. the discharge of Merrygrove Ltd's costs in acquiring the option in the first place, and any associated costs incurred by that company.

2.73 The Tribunal was satisfied that it was in the contemplation of all concerned that Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd would have to incur financial obligations in order to pursue its objective. However, the Tribunal was also satisfied that the requirement for a cash injection of £250,000 each by Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor was never a pre-condition of their proposed participation in the Stadium project. As a matter of probability, their proposed shareholding in Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd was, being acquired, as instructed by Mr Dunlop to his solicitors on the 10 September 1993, 'on value based on services being brought by each to the company'.

2.74 The Tribunal therefore rejected the evidence of Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Deane and Mr Kelly to the effect that the proposed interest of Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and Mr Kelly in the Stadium project was ever conditional on an investment by each of £250,000 and it rejected the contention that their proposed participation in the Stadium project ceased because of a failure on the part of those individuals to provide the £250,000 contributions.

2.75 The Tribunal also rejected Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop's evidence that the correspondence which passed between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan, and between Mr Dunlop and Arthur Cox, and between Arthur Cox and Mr Deane, in 1994 was intended as a ruse to give comfort to Mr Lawlor to the effect that his participation in the Stadium project was still a reality.

2.76 The Tribunal was satisfied that the proposed participation on the part of Mr Dunlop and his colleagues only ceased to be a live proposal when the Stadium project itself, as promoted by Mr O'Callaghan to the Government, came to an end. As a matter of probability the 'All Purpose National Stadium' project terminated in early December 1994, following the inability of Fianna Fail and the Labour Party to reach agreement on forming a new Government.

2.77 The Tribunal was satisfied that the 'big one' was in fact a reference to Mr Dunlop's proposed 25% shareholding in Leisure Ireland Ltd/Leisure West Ltd. The last reference to the 'big one' was found in an entry in Mr Dunlop's diaries on 1 June 1994.

2.78 The Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop's evidence to the effect that references to 'Big One' in his diaries were references to a success fee payable to him when the retail cap on the Quarryvale development was lifted.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 6: SECTION C - THE STADIUM PAYMENTS MADE BY RIGA LTD

INTRODUCTION

3.01 In November 1992 and September 1993, Mr O’Callaghan paid a total of IR£95,000 to Mr Dunlop, on foot of two invoices which purported to be in respect of fees payable to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd in relation to the project to develop a Stadium on the Neilstown lands.

THE IR£70,000 PAYMENT ON 10 NOVEMBER 1992

3.02 On 10 November 1992, Mr Dunlop’s AIB 042 ‘warchest’ account was credited with the sum of IR£70,000 by a same-day value credit transfer from Riga Ltd’s Bank of Ireland account at 83 South Mall, Cork. On the previous day, 9 November 1992, a Riga Ltd cheque for IR£70,000, drawn on the same account, had been presented at the branch and a giro credit transfer to Mr Dunlop’s 042 account had been initiated as was evidenced by a debit of a cheque for IR£70,000 to Riga’s account. However, because this payment process could not be completed within the day, the giro transfer was reversed on 10 November 1992, and the IR£70,000 was transferred by a same-day value credit transfer.

3.03 Evidence given by Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Aidan Lucey (Riga Ltd’s Company Secretary and cheque signatory) satisfied the Tribunal that the likely sequence of events leading to the credit transfer was as follows:

- On 9 November 1992, Mr O’Callaghan travelled to Dublin but forgot to bring with him a Riga Ltd cheque dated 9 November 1992, which had been signed by him and by Mr Lucey and made payable to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd.
- On the same day, Mr Lucey, on the instructions of Mr O’Callaghan, instructed another Riga employee to present the Riga Ltd cheque to Bank of Ireland at 32 South Mall, Cork, for transfer by giro credit to Mr Dunlop’s account.
- On 10 November 1992, the money not having reached Mr Dunlop’s account and, in all probability, in the realisation that a number of days might elapse before it would do so, Mr Lucey was directed to transfer IR£70,000 from Riga Ltd’s account to Mr Dunlop’s account on a same-day value basis. This transfer was duly effected when Mr Lucey instructed Bank of Ireland to stop the transmission of the Riga cheque and replace it with the same-day value credit transfer.

3.04 On 10 November 1992, the day the IR£70,000 was transferred, Mr Dunlop withdrew IR£55,000 in cash at AIB College Street, Dublin. Also on that day, Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd received IR£11,490 by bank draft, drawn on the Barkhill No 2 Loan Account, in discharge of an ‘ongoing costs’ invoice dated 9 September 1992.

THE INVOICE FOR IR£70,000

3.05 Both Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop discovered to the Tribunal copies¹ of an invoice in the name of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd to Riga Ltd, dated 20 July 1992, for IR£70,000, and stated to be ‘payment on account’. The invoice stipulated: ‘Re. All Purpose National Stadium. To professional services including media relations, presentation, interview preparation, consultations with design team and US advisors and investors: payment on account.’

3.06 Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan maintained to the Tribunal that they had agreed a fee for Mr Dunlop for his work on the stadium project. Mr Dunlop acknowledged that there was no written record of this claimed agreement and that there was no note of such an agreement in his diary. According to Mr O’Callaghan the fee was to be IR£100,000; Mr Dunlop was uncertain as to the amount, variously referring to it in his evidence as IR£100,000, IR£150,000, IR£200,000 and ‘in the order of’ IR£100,000.

3.07 Mr Dunlop gave evidence, that having agreed his stadium fee with Mr O’Callaghan, he issued the invoice of 20 July 1992, ‘on account’. This invoice was not numbered and made no reference to VAT (nor did the Shefran invoices). It was one of only two² Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoices discovered to the Tribunal by Mr Dunlop which were not numbered.

3.08 Mr Dunlop dismissed any suggestion that the 20 July 1992 stadium invoice was issued subsequent to that date. Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that he believed that he received the invoice prior to its payment.

3.09 Questioned on Day 781 as to what work he had carried out on the stadium project to merit the issuing of an invoice for IR£70,000 on account Mr Dunlop replied:

‘In general terms, I cannot account now for absolute dates but certainly there had been quite a significant amount of discussion in relation to the possibility of building a stadium on the Neilstown site. There were various things produced, brochures, there was various contacts made, there were meetings. Again, subject to correction I cannot absolutely say that all of these took place before the 20th of July 1992. But certainly there were extensive meetings with international representatives of various bodies, all of which took place in my offices, there were discussions with the representatives of Deloitte and Touche in relation to the provision of financing for the stadium. And it was agreed by Mr Callaghan and myself that in the context of the provision of a stadium on the Neilstown site, apart altogether from any other agreement that we had in relation to a shareholding, that I would be paid a fee and this fee, this invoice was issued on the basis of a payment on account.'

¹ Mr Dunlop’s copy was initially provided to him by Mr O’Callaghan after the Tribunal had commenced its inquiries, as he had not retained a copy himself.

² The other was a Frank Dunlop & Associates invoice of 10 June 1993 for IR£25,000. See below.

3.10 Mr Dunlop stated that a payment of IR£25,000 made by Riga Ltd in September 1993, was also a part payment of his agreed stadium fee. Thus, on the basis that his agreement with Mr O'Callaghan was for IR£100,000, Mr Dunlop's evidence suggested that he had been paid in total IR£95,000 (IR£70,000 plus IR£25,000), leaving a shortfall of IR£5,000.

3.11 On Day 781, the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Dunlop:

Q. 'So when you issued the invoice you are looking for £70,000 out of a bigger sum?'

A. 'Right.'

Q. 'What was the bigger sum?'

A. 'As I recollect matters now I cannot absolutely say to you that it was 100 or 150,000 or 200,000 but certainly it was a payment on account.'

Q. 'Okay. Is it your position, now, Mr Dunlop, that you can't tell the Tribunal looking at that now what figure you had agreed with Mr O'Callaghan as your professional fee in relation to the stadium?'

A. 'Yes. Because parallel to the work that I was conducting was the possibility of an arrangement whereby there would be four shareholders in any such stadium that arose.'

Q. 'The parallel agreement in relation to the shareholding, Mr Dunlop, was a separate matter to this payment, isn't that right?'

A. 'Yes, it was, yes.'

Q. 'So any suggestion that that lack of clarity in relation to any shareholding in Leisure West or the stadium is irrelevant to the claim that you are making against Mr O'Callaghan's company Riga for your professional fees in relation to the stadium?'

A. 'There are two issues relating to the one project.'

Q. 'So therefore when you issued this invoice on the 20th of July 1992 as a payment on account that you were seeking £70,000 was a portion of a separate but bigger figure that you had agreed with Mr O'Callaghan, isn't that right?'

A. 'That's correct, yes.'

Q 'So what was the figure?'

A. 'That I cannot say to you definitively now as I sit here today.'

3.12 With regard to the services described on the 20 July 1992 invoice for IR£70,000, Mr Dunlop acknowledged that, as of that date, he had not undertaken any presentations or interview preparation, and apart from one meeting with Chilton O'Connor (a firm of international advisors retained for the stadium project), on 15 June 1992, he had had no face to face contact with the US investors. There had been no 'media relations', as the stadium project had not, by July 1992, been launched publicly. Mr Dunlop testified that his work on the stadium comprised a series of meetings with Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Lawlor and Mr Ambrose Kelly. Mr Dunlop said he also arranged meetings for Mr O'Callaghan with the Taoiseach, Mr Albert Reynolds, and, possibly, Mr Liam Aylward (a former Government Minister), in relation to the stadium project.

EXPLANATIONS OF MR DUNLOP'S NEED FOR FUNDS IN NOVEMBER 1992

3.13 The Tribunal inquired of both Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop the reasons why the IR£70,000 payment was made on 10 November 1992, and why it was made in such a hurried manner, enabling Mr Dunlop to access the funds on that date.

3.14 Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan separately maintained that what led Mr Dunlop to seek payment of the IR£70,000 invoice was the calling of the General Election on 5 November 1992.³

3.15 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal of his contact with Mr O'Callaghan in relation to the payment of the IR£70,000 as follows:

'I rang Mr O'Callaghan and drew his attention to the invoice. I had my own reason for ringing Mr O'Callaghan. I will deal with that in a moment. I rang Mr O'Callaghan, spoke to him in relation to the invoice and I think I used the language, something to the effect that I need it now.'

3.16 When asked why he had said 'I need it now' Mr Dunlop responded:

'Well I, from my point of view I needed it now because I knew what was going to happen in the context of a General Election. That there were, I think I've used the phrase before in this forum, that the telephone would walk off the desk with telephone calls from politicians looking for finance . . . the 70,000 was called in because I saw an opportunity to get the payment of 70,000 from Mr O'Callaghan at that stage and I gave him the details as to where to lodge it or where to transfer it to.'

3.17 Although Mr Dunlop gave evidence that in November 1992, he had told Mr O'Callaghan of the urgent need to have the July 1992 invoice discharged, he was unable to say if he had advised Mr O'Callaghan at that time that he needed the money for the General Election per se, although it was his belief that Mr O'Callaghan may have understood the urgency. Mr Dunlop put it thus:

'I cannot say definitively that I said because it's a General Election. I may well have used the phrase that you know the circumstances or whatever. I don't recollect having any detailed conversation with him. I would say I would put it from a realistic point of view that Mr O'Callaghan was living in the real world and if there was an outstanding invoice for £70,000 and I was ringing suddenly looking for payment of the £70,000 in the context of a General Election Mr O'Callaghan may well have put two and two together.'

3.18 Mr Dunlop stated that it was he who requested Mr O'Callaghan to have the money transferred by inter bank transfer. Asked why he could not have waited for the Riga Ltd cheque of 9 November 1992 to come into his account, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he 'needed the money in my hand at that stage'.

3.19 Immediately prior to Mr Dunlop's AIB 042 account receiving the IR£70,000 from Riga Ltd, on 10 November 1992, the credit balance on the account stood at IR£7,500.85.

3.20 Mr Dunlop maintained that he withdrew the IR£55,000 in cash on 10 November 1992, immediately following the transfer of the IR£70,000 into his account, 'in the context of the political situation that had developed.'

3.21 Although he could not say definitively that he had a 'specific' requirement for the IR£55,000, Mr Dunlop acknowledged that he withdrew the money in order to meet what he termed 'requirements'. On Day 810 Mr Dunlop stated:

' . . . all I can say to you is I had a requirement. Obviously had some requirement in my head, I was dealing with—I wasn't only dealing with councillors at that particular time, even though he had been a previous councillor. For example I was dealing with Mr Liam Lawlor and that I had a requirement at that time for the use of some those funds yes.'

3.22 In response to the suggestion put to him by Tribunal Counsel that his need for the same-day value transfer of IR£70,000 meant that he had a specific requirement for the IR£70,000, and the withdrawal of IR£55,000 from it, Mr Dunlop said:

'Yeah, well no. There is no outstanding explanation, let me assure you of that, other than I had this invoice dated July. We have an election called. I see this as a facility which is available to me and I ring Mr O'Callaghan. He makes the arrangement and I do, as you have just outlined in relation to the transfer of the money and in relation to the withdrawal. Specifically other than saying I had in my mind a fairly predictable, what was going to happen, fairly predictably but specifically I do not recollect, I cannot now say that I had a specific intention in relation to the IR£55,000.'

3.23 Mr Dunlop rejected any suggestion that he withdrew the IR£55,000 to provide either the whole sum, or a substantial portion of it, to any single individual. He maintained that the amount withdrawn was based on his belief as to his requirements having regard to the election campaign. Although Mr Dunlop acknowledged that he met senior politicians during the campaign, he denied making a substantial donation to any senior politician (save Mr Lawlor), or to the Fianna Fáil Party at that time (save for IR£1,000 provided to that party on 17 November 1992, by cheque drawn on the account of F & S Dunlop).

3.24 On 9 November 1992, Mr Dunlop encashed a cheque for IR£11,000 paid to him by Mr Christopher Jones Snr,⁴ and retained IR£8,500 in cash. On 11 November 1992, Mr Dunlop was also in possession of a further IR£10,000 from Davy Hickey Properties⁵, cashed by him some days later.

3.25 It therefore appeared likely to the Tribunal that, by mid November 1992, Mr Dunlop had at his disposal a minimum of IR£73,500 in cash.

CASH PAYMENTS MADE BY MR DUNLOP

3.26 In his evidence in this, and in other modules, Mr Dunlop claimed to have disbursed almost IR£50,000 from the minimum IR£73,500 cash he had available over the course of the 1992 General Election campaign. The thrust of Mr Dunlop's evidence was that, other than the individual disbursements he referred to in the course of his evidence, he could not recollect making any further cash disbursements from the cash fund available to him at that time. He claimed not to be able to account for the balance of the minimum IR£73,500 available to him, and he further stated that he was unable to confirm if some of that balance was paid to politicians subsequently, and outside of the context of the General Election.

3.27 Mr Dunlop maintained that he retained the balance of his cash funds in his home and/or in his office, to use in the event that a 'need would arise.'

3.28 On Day 810, the following exchange took place between Mr Dunlop and the Chairman of the Tribunal, in the context of it being suggested that it was likely that he had disbursed the balance of the IR£73,500 to other politicians:

Q. 'But we can take it that the balance almost certainly went to other politicians whose names we don't have?'

A. 'I cannot say that to you. I cannot say that I gave any other monies to any politicians during the course of the 1992 Election other than the monies that I have identified. I cannot say what I did specifically with the remainder of the money. I may well have used some of the money personally. I cannot say that to you specifically but certainly I would have retained the money in cash in the manner that I have outlined to Ms. Dillon but I cannot say other than contributions that I would have made to other politicians which would have been made by cheque.'

The Tribunal concluded that having put himself to the trouble of amassing at least IR£73,500 in cash in November 1992, Mr Dunlop proceeded to disburse most, if not all, of the entire of this fund to politicians within the period of the 1992 General Election.

3.29 The Tribunal's conclusions in relation to specific disbursements to named individuals made by Mr Dunlop during the course of the 1992 General Election campaign and otherwise are dealt with elsewhere in this Chapter, and in other Chapters of the Report.

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S ACCOUNT OF THE CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH
RIGA LTD PAID THE STADIUM INVOICE OF IR£70,000
ON 10 NOVEMBER 1992

3.30 Mr O'Callaghan maintained that in late 1991 or early 1992, he made an agreement with Mr Dunlop to pay him a fee of IR£100,000 in connection with the stadium project. He described Mr Dunlop as the 'project coordinator'. According to Mr O'Callaghan, sometime prior to July 1992, he and Mr Dunlop discussed Mr Dunlop's work on the stadium project, as a result of which Mr Dunlop had, in Mr O'Callaghan's words, 'banged in' an invoice for IR£70,000, seeking a payment 'on account.'

3.31 Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop's IR£100,000 Stadium fee included reimbursement of his out of pocket expenses. Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged, however, that no documentation had been furnished to him by Mr Dunlop with regard to any such expenses.⁶

3.32 Mr O'Callaghan explained the arrangement he made with Mr Dunlop for the stadium project fee as follows:

'Well Mr Dunlop—my arrangement with paying him was that Mr Dunlop was the project coordinator for the stadium. Mr Dunlop was involved in the stadium from the first stadium from May '91 onwards. And at this stage when the second stadium was at a very advanced stage he was the project coordinator. He ran the whole operation really for me here in Dublin, the design team if you like and there was quite a large design team. It consisted of well over 20 people actually on from different parts of the States and Europe. And the coordinator of that was Frank Dunlop and that was his position. And I agreed with him probably around early '92 I'd say, I'm not sure of the date now, that he would be paid approximately £100,000 for his effort and his work. Which was not just lobbying or anything like that. It was actually coordinating the whole Stadium project for me.'

3.33 Mr O'Callaghan explained, in similar terms to Mr Dunlop, that the IR£25,000 paid to Mr Dunlop on 14 September 1993, represented the balance (less IR£5,000) of the IR£100,000 fee agreement with Mr Dunlop for his role as the stadium 'project coordinator.'

3.34 With regard to the timing of the payment of the IR£70,000 on 10 November 1992, Mr O'Callaghan stated that his understanding at that time was that Mr Dunlop had a pressing need for the payment in November 1992. He explained to the Tribunal his understanding of that need in the following terms:

'That pressing need as I said and I repeat it again, would be that I would have expected that Frank Dunlop in particular because of the all of the politicians that he knew, when there was a General Election called that he was going to be inundated for requests for political contributions.'

3.35 In the course of his later sworn evidence, Mr O'Callaghan agreed to a suggestion put to him by Counsel for the Tribunal that 'the motivating factor' in his decision to organise a same-day inter-bank transfer of IR£70,000 to Mr Dunlop on 10 November 1992, was an 'appreciation' on his part that Mr Dunlop was 'going to have to pay national politicians.'

⁶ Mr Dunlop's evidence regarding his stadium fee did not allude to reimbursement for expenses.

3.36 Questioned as to why Riga Ltd clearly went to such elaborate lengths on 9 and 10 November to transfer IR£70,000 to Mr Dunlop, and why he had ensured a same-day value transfer of funds to Mr Dunlop, as opposed to allowing the giro transfer procedure initiated on 9 November 1992 to run its course, Mr O'Callaghan explained his decision as follows:

'Mr Dunlop asked, invoiced this cheque to Riga in July of '92 I had promised him the cheque on quite a few occasions. I was not in a position to pay it to him. I arrived in Dublin on the morning of the 9th of the 11th I think, and I did not have the cheque with me. I rang our office in Cork. Frank asked me where the cheque was and I was very upset because I didn't have the promised cheque for him. I told him it was in the post, which is what I intended to do actually. Because of his upset and he wasn't very happy because of all the work he had put into the stadium and again, I repeat that he was the Project Coordinator for the stadium. And he put a lot of work into this whole project. And I hadn't got the cheque with me. And I asked him, or he asked me what I was going to do about it. So I contacted our office and I asked Aidan Lucey to go to the bank and get the cheque for £70,000 posted up. That was not satisfactory to Frank. So I rang back again, cancelled that cheque and we got this second cheque for £70,000 posted up to him or sent up to him on the same day or allowed it to be cashed on the same day. The reason why Frank was so upset about this I think there was an election call at this time. And like anybody else Frank Dunlop, as I outlined in the Local Elections would be the very same as anybody else with General Elections of course, he was going to be asked for personal political contributions just like I would or anybody else would be in business. I'm sure he felt that pressure was coming on him and I hadn't paid him his fees.'

3.37 Notwithstanding his awareness that Mr Dunlop was likely to make political contributions, Mr O'Callaghan professed himself not to have 'an idea' as to what compelled Mr Dunlop to withdraw IR£55,000 in cash immediately following the transfer of the IR£70,000 to Mr Dunlop's 042 account. Mr O'Callaghan claimed not to know that Mr Dunlop had made such a withdrawal or for what purpose Mr Dunlop might have used the money, stating 'there is no way that Frank Dunlop would have told me.'

3.38 On Day 892, Mr O'Callaghan was questioned as follows:

- Q. 'And did Mr Dunlop explain to you when he was pressurising you for the IR£70,000 that he needed the money for the election?'
- A. 'No, he didn't explain it to me. There was an election call and I would have known of course that Frank Dunlop is going to come under political pressure for personal contributions for various politicians of course.'

- Q. 'And the election was called I think suddenly on the 5th of November 1992, isn't that right?'
- A. 'I think so, yeah.'
- Q. 'And I think that Mr Dunlop, it was one of those elections where Mr Dunlop I think, went in to work in Mount Street did you know that?'
- A. 'Oh, I know that, yeah.'
- Q. 'And I think that the election itself was the 25th of November?'
- A. 'Yes.'
- Q. 'Would you agree with that?'
- A. 'I'm not sure yes, yes, yes.'
- Q. 'Is it your appreciation or understanding of why Mr Dunlop urgently required a same day value transfer on the 10th of November 1992, was because he urgently required that money and it was your opinion he needed it in connection with the election?'
- A. 'No, the reason for this was that I had promised him the cheque for weeks before that and I had failed him again. He was getting a bit fed up with it actually. And I don't blame him for that. This cheque was months overdue.'
- Q. 'You misunderstand me, Mr O'Callaghan. Was the urgency expressed by Mr Dunlop or the payment connected in your mind with the fact that the election had been called and that Mr Dunlop would have to make payments or donations in the context of the election?'
- A. 'Oh, yes he'd have had to make political contributions oh, yes of course, yes.'

3.39 On Day 903, Mr O'Callaghan elaborated as follows:

'When the election was called, prior to this Frank Dunlop had reminded me on a few occasions about that £70,000, and I delayed payment as much as I possibly could. When the election was called he looked for his cheque and demanded it because obviously it was very obvious to me without him spelling it out to me, that a person like him who is up front and meeting so many politicians on a daily basis was going to be asked for a lot of contributions for the election, and I am pretty sure he was asked for a lot of contributions to the election. £1,000, £2,000 and all this stuff, and he would have to—any fees that were due to him I was sure he was looking for them at that stage to have them there so he could make his contributions. If politicians who he knew well asked for a political contribution of £1,000 or £2,000 he had no choice I think but to give it. So I was aware of that, and that's one of the reasons why when he panicked a bit about this I understood his situation.'

THE TREATMENT WITHIN RIGA LTD OF THE IR£70,000
PAYMENT TO MR DUNLOP

3.40 An analysis of Riga's records indicated that the IR£70,000 payment to Mr Dunlop was allocated in Riga's books to 'sundries' as a payment made on behalf of Barkhill Ltd. It was given the code '5098' indicating expenses incurred that were to be allocated to Barkhill Ltd. While the words 'Stadium fee' appeared in Riga's Bank of Ireland cheque payments book, alongside the entry for the IR£70,000, it appeared to the Tribunal that that entry was made at a later stage than 9 November 1992, most likely at a time when Riga Ltd's Auditors were advised to attribute the IR£70,000 as a stadium payment in the books of account.

3.41 Mr Dunlop's IR£70,000 was one of three payments recorded in Riga's Bank of Ireland cheque payments book in November 1992, as having been made in furtherance of the Barkhill/Quarryvale project. The other payments coded 5098 were a payment of IR£10,000 to Mr O'Callaghan to reimburse him for a political donation of IR£10,000 he had made to Mr Batt O'Keeffe TD, and a payment by Mr O'Callaghan of IR£5,000 to Cllr G. V. Wright,⁷ (which was also claimed by Mr O'Callaghan to be a political donation). This latter cheque was paid to Cllr Wright on or about 11/12 November 1992, when Mr O'Callaghan, in the company of Mr Dunlop, went to Councillor Wright's constituency office.

3.42 As was the case within Riga's books, all three of these payments coded 5098 were initially treated by the Auditors as Quarryvale/Westpark expenses.

3.43 As these payments had been entered in Riga Ltd's books initially as Barkhill Ltd/Quarryvale expenses, the Tribunal concluded that they would normally then have been posted to the Riga Ltd/Barkhill Ltd inter-company loan (an internal account within Riga which recorded all monies owed to it by Barkhill).

3.44 However, Ms Cowhig, Riga's Auditor, told the Tribunal that she had been informed by Mr Deane, that these payments properly belonged in the Riga stadium account, and on that basis she posted certain payments, which had been made by Riga Ltd on behalf of Barkhill Ltd, to Riga's 'Work in progress—Stadium' account. Thus, in Riga Ltd's accounts, as audited for the year ending 30 April 1993, the IR£70,000 paid to Mr Dunlop was ultimately attributed as a stadium-related payment. The payments to Mr O'Keeffe and Cllr Wright were posted in the books under 'advertising and subscriptions.'

3.45 The payments posted to Riga's 'Work in progress–Stadium' account, included, together with other professional fees associated with the stadium project, the following:

- the IR£70,000 paid to Mr Dunlop on 10 November 1992,
- IR£64,897⁸ paid on 21 January 1993 on foot of a Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoice,
- IR£25,000 paid to Mr Dunlop, via Shefran, on 17 February 1993,
- payments totalling IR£15,500, made on diverse dates in the above accounting period to Cllr Seán Gilbride.

3.46 In the same accounting period ending 30 April 1993, Barkhill Ltd had already reimbursed Riga Ltd for a number of payments it had made to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, including IR£10,253.27 paid on 22 June 1992, and IR£13,530.04, paid on 18 August 1992

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE IR£70,000 PAYMENT TO MR DUNLOP

3.47 The Tribunal did not accept that a 'Stadium' invoice was furnished to Riga Ltd by Mr Dunlop in July 1992. The Tribunal believed it probable that this invoice was provided to Mr O'Callaghan in November 1992, in and around the time the money was transferred to Mr Dunlop's 042 'warchest' account. The Tribunal was satisfied that such an invoice was probably extant within Riga Ltd by early 1994 when Riga's Auditors were preparing accounts for the year ending 30 April 1993. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop back-dated this invoice.

3.48 The Tribunal was satisfied that, had the invoice been furnished as claimed in July 1992, and had there been an agreement for Mr Dunlop to receive a stadium fee of IR£100,000, the existence of this invoice and the reality of Mr Dunlop either being owed IR£100,000, or having invoiced for IR£70,000 'on account', would have featured in the discussions of the latter half of 1992 between AIB and Messrs O'Callaghan and Deane, when the latter were seeking funds from the Barkhill Ltd No 2 Loan Account to pay professional fees, both in relation to Quarryvale and the stadium. This issue did not appear to have featured in the discussions.

3.49 The Tribunal noted that Mr Michael O'Farrell recorded, in a memorandum of a discussion he had with Mr O'Callaghan on 16 September 1992, that Mr O'Callaghan, in making his case for additional funding for the Quarryvale project, 'argued strongly that the Sports Centre [stadium] plans are an integral part of obtaining the zoning' (for Quarryvale). Mr O'Callaghan was also noted as having argued that 'the fees related to the stadium which total IR£58k with a further IR£30k to go will have to be paid by Barkhill Ltd.'

3.50 The 'IR£58k' referred to stadium fees which were, as of 16 September 1992, largely outstanding to professionals engaged in the project. They included IR£19,064 due to Mr Ambrose Kelly, IR£29,000 due to Deloitte & Touche for its stadium feasibility study, and IR£10,000 due for payment in December 1992, for a planning application. There was no reference in this memorandum to a Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoice for IR£70,000, (or any debt of IR£70,000) although Mr O'Callaghan claimed to have received that invoice in July 1992, some two months earlier.

3.51 In a memorandum prepared by Mr O'Farrell of a further conversation between himself and Mr O'Callaghan on 28 September 1992, reference was made to an agreement they had reached for payment of Mr Kelly's stadium fee of IR£19,064 as well as a number of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoices relating to Quarryvale. Again, however, there was no reference to any outstanding Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd stadium invoice for IR£70,000.

3.52 The Tribunal believed it likely that, if Mr Dunlop had billed Riga Ltd through Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd for professional services in connection with the stadium project in July 1992, the issue of such a substantial fee being outstanding would almost certainly have been raised by Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Deane with AIB in the period September to December 1992, in the same way as fees due to Mr Kelly and to Deloitte & Touche had been raised. The Tribunal did not accept Mr O'Callaghan's evidence that he did not raise the issue with Mr O'Farrell, or provide a copy of the IR£70,000 July 1992 invoice, prior to November 1992, because he expected a negative reaction by Mr O'Farrell to the request for such funds to be paid out of the Barkhill No 2 Loan Account. Mr O'Farrell had no recollection of ever seeing the July 1992 invoice, and no such invoice was amongst documentation discovered to the Tribunal by AIB.

3.53 Between June and October 1992, Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd had issued the following four invoices addressed to Riga Ltd (excluding the 'Stadium' invoice of 20 July 1992) namely, IR£13,530.04, IR£6,314.76, IR£11,490 and IRR£21,063.36 which totalled IR£52,398.16. The first invoice for IR£13,530.04 was paid directly by Riga for which it was subsequently reimbursed from the Barkhill No 2 Loan Account. The remaining three invoices were paid directly from the Barkhill No 2 Loan Account. This suggested to the Tribunal that AIB was quite prepared to discharge invoices from Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, although Mr O'Callaghan variously remarked that AIB did so 'always after a massive struggle', 'after a struggle....an embarrassing struggle.'

3.54 Furthermore, it appeared unlikely to the Tribunal that by late 1992, Mr Dunlop would receive a fee from Mr O'Callaghan, whether 'on account' or otherwise, for work on the stadium project, given that less than one year subsequent to the receipt of the IR£70,000, Mr Dunlop instructed his solicitors that his shareholding in the stadium project was being acquired on foot of 'services' provided to the project. The Tribunal considered it unlikely that Mr Dunlop would have made such an assertion to his solicitors in September 1993, if in fact he had already received the IR£70,000 as fees for his stadium work. Moreover, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's recompense for his stadium work was to be by the acquisition of a beneficial interest in the stadium project.

3.55 As to the purpose of Mr Dunlop being put in funds to the tune of IR£70,000 on 10 November 1992, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop advised Mr O'Callaghan that the immediate transfer of IR£70,000 on 10 November 1992, was necessary to facilitate him to make payments to politicians in the course of the November 1992 General Election.

3.56 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan was aware, based on information provided to him by Mr Dunlop, coupled with his own knowledge and experience of paying money to councillors⁹ and other politicians, that Mr Dunlop intended to expend a large portion of the IR£70,000 in substantial payments to councillors to secure and consolidate their support for the then imminent Quarryvale vote in Dublin County Council.

3.57 The Tribunal was satisfied that, while the IR£70,000 paid to Mr Dunlop may have included an element of fees, its primary purpose and the greater percentage of it, was for payments to politicians associated with the Quarryvale project. Insofar as Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop intended that the IR£70,000 would fund Councillors who were likely to be candidates in the November 1992 General Election and the related Seanad Election, the Tribunal was satisfied that they were involved in an endeavour, the purpose of which was to compromise the required disinterested performance by Councillors of their duties in the making of a Development Plan, and as such the Tribunal was satisfied that the activities of Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop with regard to the IR£70,000 payment were corrupt.

⁹ In the period close to 10 November 1992, Mr O'Callaghan himself disbursed substantial sums to councillors in Dublin County Council including IR£5,000 to Cllr G. V. Wright on 11/12 November 1992. By 10 November 1992, he had paid IR£3,500 to Cllr Sean Gilbride in two monthly payments. In September 1991, Mr O'Callaghan paid IR£10,000 to Mr Lawlor and in October 1991 he paid IR£10,000 to Cllr McGrath.

3.58 The Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop's claim that he was unable to recollect the amounts of the payments and the identities of all those to whom he disbursed funds from the IR£55,000 withdrawn from his 042 bank account on 10 November 1992, and/or from the additional cash available to him at that time from other sources. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop withheld the identities of some of those whom he paid. The Tribunal believed it likely that those not identified by Mr Dunlop were public representatives.

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S REFERENCE TO HAVING 'INJECTED' IR£85,000 INTO THE QUARRYVALE REZONING PROJECT

3.59 On 23 November 1992, Mr O'Callaghan wrote to Mr O'Farrell enclosing a Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd 'ongoing costs' invoice for IR£21,063.36. This had been the subject, inter alia, of a telephone conversation between them on 20 November 1992. Mr O'Callaghan's letter was as follows:

Dear Michael

Following Friday's telephone conversation, I enclose invoice on behalf of Frank Dunlop.

I am anxious to get our own 'Election' going again next Friday/Monday. Hopefully the councillors will be settled down by then.

As I mentioned to you, we have provided as much support as we could afford over the past few weeks. I will inform you of this when we meet.

I would like to collect a cheque for this invoice from you on Monday/Friday next. I will ring you to arrange a suitable time.

3.60 The date on which Mr O'Farrell and Mr O'Callaghan met, 1 December 1992, was some 20 days after Mr O'Callaghan made the IR£70,000 available to Mr Dunlop for his immediate use, and some sixteen days prior to the Quarryvale rezoning confirmation vote.

3.61 In his memorandum of the meeting on 1 December 1992, Mr O'Farrell noted a figure of IR£85,000 advised to him by Mr O'Callaghan. Mr O'Farrell noted the following:-

Date for the Quarryvale vote has been set for 17th and 18th December. He is confident a decision will be made one way or the other on that date. It is very tight. In response to my query, he confirms that the officials are thinking in terms of a compromise at this stage which will involve the Jim Mansfield Clondalkin Centre and a smaller centre for Quarryvale of approximately 250,000 sq. ft. The position will obviously will be clear in about two weeks. His lobbying continues and he indicated that he had injected IR£85,000 into the situation from O'Callaghan Properties.

3.62 Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that the figure of IR£85,000 (referred to in the above memorandum), comprised the IR£70,000 paid to Mr Dunlop on 10 November 1992, the IR£10,000 paid to Mr Batt O'Keeffe and the IR£5,000 paid to Cllr G. V. Wright.

3.63 The following exchange took place between Mr O'Callaghan and Tribunal Counsel:

- Q. 'Right. Those three transactions total £85,000, isn't that right?'
- A. 'Yes.'
- Q. 'Did you subsequently tell the bank that you had injected £85,000 into the lobbying of Dublin County Council in relation to your Quarryvale projects?'
- A. 'I said to the bank that we had paid a sum of £85,000, I think that we contributed that during the past couple of days or couple of weeks, couple of days I think actually, and that would have included those figures yes. And one of those figures which is probably the most, by far the largest figure, was a figure that we had to pay for the stadium which was fees due for over five months, that's where that £70,000, that statement from the bank came from.'

3.64 Mr O'Farrell told the Tribunal that he had no recollection of the 1 December 1992 meeting with Mr O'Callaghan. He accepted, however, that Mr O'Callaghan's reference to having 'injected' IR£85,000 into the 'situation' appeared to refer to the project to rezone Quarryvale. Mr O'Farrell said that he had no recollection of any explanation provided to him as to the composition of the IR£85,000 figure.

3.65 Mr O'Callaghan agreed in evidence that the sentence in his letter to Mr O'Farrell of 23 November 1992, to wit, 'we have provided as much support as we could afford over the past few weeks', referred to political donations he had made in relation to the General Election campaign, then ongoing. Mr O'Callaghan was himself uncertain as to what he told Mr O'Farrell at the 1 December 1992 meeting in relation to his expenditure on politicians.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE IR£85,000 REFERRED TO IN THE AIB MEMORANDUM OF 1 DECEMBER 1992

3.66 The Tribunal was satisfied that the IR£85,000 referred to in the AIB memorandum of 1 December 1992, was comprised of the IR£70,000 hurriedly paid to Mr Dunlop on 10 November 1992, in addition to the IR£10,000 paid to Mr Batt O'Keeffe on 7 November 1992, and IR£5,000 paid to Cllr G. V. Wright in Malahide on 11/12 November 1992, when Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop visited Cllr Wright.

3.67 The Tribunal was satisfied that the ‘situation’ referred to in the AIB memorandum was the imminent Quarryvale vote in Dublin County Council, and the lobbying process underway in relation to that motion.

3.68 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O’Callaghan’s understanding, as of the date of his meeting with Mr O’Farrell (1 December, 1992), was that IR£70,000 (or at least most of it) had been paid to Mr Dunlop to fund payments to councillors (rather than merely facilitating Mr Dunlop doing so from his own earned fees), and, as already set out, the Tribunal was satisfied that the bulk of the IR£70,000 was not provided as fees to Mr Dunlop for his stadium work.

MR O’CALLAGHAN’S LETTER OF 17 NOVEMBER 1992 TO
THE TAOISEACH, MR ALBERT REYNOLDS¹⁰

3.69 On 17 November 1992, prior to his meeting with Mr O’Farrell on 1 December 1992, Mr O’Callaghan wrote to the then Taoiseach, Mr Albert Reynolds, enclosing a cheque for IR£5,000 as a political donation for the Fianna Fáil Party in relation to the General Election then underway. A copy of this letter was discovered to the Tribunal by Fianna Fáil. Mr O’Callaghan’s discovery to the Tribunal did not include the letter. The letter read as follows:

Dear Taoiseach,

Thank you for your recent letter.

It has always been my policy over the years to support individual candidates and in particular this time, both in Dublin and Cork.

As you know, I have very close contact with candidates in both these areas and hope I have done the right thing in supporting candidates individually to gain those vital few seats.

The total support is in excess of six figures but it is vital for the Country that we have a Fianna Fáil controlled Government.

In acknowledgment of your own letter, I enclose a cheque for IR£5,000.

I know the overall situation is not looking great at the moment, but as I write to you, there is already an upturn, and I am convinced it will all come right on the day.

The very best on 25th, it means a lot to me as well...

3.70 The Tribunal questioned Mr O’Callaghan on his reference to ‘total support . . . in excess of six figures’, and it particularly sought to establish if this figure was likely to have included the IR£70,000 he had paid to Mr Dunlop on 10 November 1992, one week earlier.

¹⁰ See also Part 9 of this Chapter.

3.71 Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that the words ‘total support . . . in excess of six figures’, was a reference to the approximate total sum paid by him in political donations to the Fianna Fáil Party over a substantial number of years. Mr O’Callaghan was adamant that the reference in the letter could not be reasonably interpreted, and did not in fact mean that he had expended in excess of IR£100,000 in political donations in the context of the 1992 General Election then underway, although he acknowledged that he could have made the position clearer in his letter to Mr Reynolds.

3.72 On 22 February 2008, Mr O’Callaghan provided the Tribunal with a written statement to clarify what he intended to convey in his letter. It included the following:

By the time this letter (dated 17th of November 1992) was written, I had made, or committed to, payments to politicians in the sum of £72,200.00 since 1989. These are outlined in my statements and include the monthly payments to Sean Gilbride of £10,500.00 which were started in September 1992 and the £5,000.00 paid to Fianna Fáil under cover of the letter to the Taoiseach. In addition, I would have made political contributions, the extent of which I am unsure in the period since I started business in 1969. When I stated in my letter to the Taoiseach that I had provided support of in excess of a six figure sum, I did not sit down and calculate exactly how much I had paid. My impression at the time was that payments made by me had been made in or about that order over the years.

3.73 In arriving at his total of IR£72,200 Mr O’Callaghan included IR£10,500 of ‘monthly payments to Seán Gilbride which were started in September 1992’. In fact, these payments to Cllr Gilbride over the course of 1992/3 amounted to IR£15,500. By 17 November 1992 however, (the date of the letter to Mr Reynolds), Mr O’Callaghan had paid Cllr Gilbride only IR£3,500 of this total, (or IR£5,250 if IR£1,750, which Mr Dunlop said he paid Cllr Gilbride in September 1992, and later recouped from Mr O’Callaghan, is included).

3.74 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr O’Callaghan rejected absolutely any suggestion that the six figure sum indicated in his letter of 17 November 1992 to Mr Reynolds, included the IR£70,000 which was paid to Mr Dunlop on 10 November 1992.

3.75 A document prepared by the Fianna Fáil Party, prior to a written request to Mr O’Callaghan in September 1993 for a donation of IR£100,000, listed two contributions made by Mr O'Callaghan to the Party by that time: IR£5,000 in 1992¹¹ and IR£10,000 in 1990.¹²

3.76 The document included the following comment: 'I have also been informed that Owen made a number of significant contributions directly to candidates in the November Election.' This reference was understood to be to the November 1992 General Election.

OTHER REFERENCES TO EXPENDITURE ON THE QUARRYVALE PROJECT

3.77 On 10 February 1993, Mr Deane wrote to Mr O'Farrell as follows:

*... Riga Ltd has also incurred additional expense in the sum of £400,000 approximately in order to secure the Quarryvale zoning. This has been spent in two ways as follows: (a) £150,000 has been paid on various 'expenses' directly related to the Quarryvale project and for which invoices have not been produced to the bank nor has the bank been requested to make any payment out of the Barkhill account.
(b) £250,000 has been spent in connection with the stadium project for the old Neilstown site.*

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO MR O'CALLAGHAN'S LETTER OF 17 NOVEMBER 1992 TO MR REYNOLDS

3.78 The Tribunal was satisfied that, contrary to what Mr O'Callaghan maintained, the reference in his letter of 17 November 1992, to 'support in excess of six figures' was to a sum in excess of IR£100,000, and it included the IR£70,000 paid to Mr Dunlop on 10 November 1992, which was money used by Mr Dunlop, together with other funds available to him, to make disbursements to politicians in the course of the 1992 General Election campaign, and otherwise.

3.79 The Tribunal was satisfied that, the sum 'in excess of six figures' referred to by Mr O'Callaghan included the IR£10,000 paid to Mr Batt O'Keefe on 7 November 1992, and the IR£5,000 paid to Cllr Wright on 11/12 November 1992. The figure also probably included IR£3,500 paid to Cllr Gilbride¹³ and IR£10,700 paid on behalf of Cllr Colm McGrath in May 1992. The figure also included the IR£5,000 sent under cover of Mr O'Callaghan's letter to Mr Reynolds.

¹² A donation made by Mr O'Callaghan to Fianna Fáil for the Presidential Election of 1990.

¹³ In his evidence, Mr O'Callaghan acknowledged that monthly payments to Cllr Gilbride were included in the 'in excess of IR£100,000' referred to in his letter to Mr Reynolds, and suggested that by 17 November, those payments had totalled IR£10,500. In fact, their total as of that date was less than IR£10,500. (By that time, Mr O'Callaghan had paid Cllr Gilbride IR£3,500, and Mr Dunlop had paid Cllr Gilbride IR£1,750, and maintained that he recouped this outlay from Mr O'Callaghan). In total, Mr O'Callaghan (directly or indirectly) paid Cllr Gilbride IR£17,250.

THE IR£25,000 PAYMENT TO MR DUNLOP IN SEPTEMBER 1993

3.80 In September 1993, Mr Dunlop received a cheque for IR£25,000 from Mr O'Callaghan drawn on the account of Riga Ltd at AIB Bank, in Cork. The cheque was dated 14 September 1993, and was encashed by Mr Dunlop on 17 September 1993. In Riga Ltd's cheque payments book indicated that the payment was made on behalf of Barkhill Ltd (through the allocation of the code '5098'), and was analysed under 'sundries'.

3.81 Both Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan maintained that this was a part payment of Mr Dunlop's fee of IR£100,000 for stadium project work, of which, they claimed, IR£70,000 had already been paid on 10 November 1992.

3.82 The Tribunal has found that there was no agreement for a IR£100,000 fee for stadium work. The Tribunal also found that the IR£70,000 was essentially paid to Mr Dunlop to put him in funds for the purpose of making payments to politicians, particularly councillors, in order to ensure support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands.

3.83 Both Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop maintained that an invoice dated 10 June 1993, to Riga Ltd from Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, gave rise to the September 1993 payment of IR£25,000. This invoice, like the IR£70,000 invoice dated 20 July 1992 was not numbered and, like it and the Shefran invoices, did not provide for VAT. Mr Dunlop maintained that it issued following a discussion between himself and Mr O'Callaghan. Both Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan rejected any suggestion that the 10 June 1993 invoice had not been generated in June 1993.

3.84 The invoice stated that the IR£25,000 was for 'professional services including ongoing media relations and liaison with Heuston Sports & Leisure and also Chilton & O'Connor, Investment Brokers, USA.'

3.85 Mr Dunlop could not assist the Tribunal as to what conversations he had had with Mr O'Callaghan in 1993 which had led him, as he claimed, to have issued an invoice in the name of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd on 10 June 1993. Mr Dunlop stated:

'The invoice dated the 10th of June, the payment is the 14th of September. So all I can say to you is that one, on the issuing of the invoice would have been discussed with Mr O'Callaghan. And two, it would be probable that I had a discussion with Mr O'Callaghan about the payment in relation to when it was going to be paid and you know why it wasn't being paid. That's all I can say.'

3.86 The Tribunal sought to establish the likely purpose for which Mr Dunlop received the IR£25,000. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that his work on the stadium had, by June 1993, essentially involved speaking to Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern about the stadium project, overseeing the public launch of the project in September 1992, informing councillors that the project was genuine and discussing stadium related matters with Mr O'Callaghan and others.

3.87 Asked to identify what other work he had done Mr Dunlop responded:
'Not very much I have to say, other than in the constant discussion that took place between Mr O'Callaghan and others in relation to the stadium and organising any meeting that was required if they were so required. But just the normal part of what I would have considered a lobbying exercise in relation to a project.'

THE TREATMENT OF THE IR£25,000 PAYMENT BY MR DUNLOP

3.88 Although Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan claimed that the Riga cheque for IR£25,000 was issued in discharge of a Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd's invoice of 10 June 1993, the cheque was made out to Mr Dunlop personally, and not to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd. Mr Dunlop encashed the cheque on 17 September 1993, at AIB (College Street branch) pursuant to his cheque cashing arrangement with Mr Ahern, the Branch Manager.

3.89 Receipt of the cheque was not recorded in the books of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, nor were the encashed proceeds or any portion of them lodged to any account.

MR DUNLOP'S ACTIVITIES ON 17 SEPTEMBER 1993

3.90 Mr Dunlop's diary for 17 September 1993 recorded, inter alia, the following entry '5:30 Powers Hotel'. Mr Dunlop claimed to be unable to assist the Tribunal as to the individual/s he met in Powers Hotel on 17 September 1993. He conceded, however, that it was likely that he had with him the cash proceeds of the Riga Ltd cheque for IR£25,000. Asked if it was likely that he paid the cash to the person/s he met in Powers Hotel Mr Dunlop stated:

'No, I would say definitively not. What I cannot say to you is, I cannot recall what the purpose of my meeting in Powers Hotel, who I met in Powers Hotel or whether or not I gave money to anybody in Powers Hotel.'

I have absolutely no recollection of ever doing so . . . At this stage I cannot recall who I met. There is no name it just says Powers Hotel, which I would say to you quite frankly is slightly odd if I was meeting somebody in Powers Hotel, the normal practice would be to identify who the person was. I mean, my diary, my diaries are replete with the names or the initials with people that I was meeting in various locations.'

3.91 In an attempt to ascertain why he might have needed cash funds of IR£25,000 on 17 September 1993, Mr Dunlop was questioned as follows:

Q. 'So what occasion arose after the 17th of September that required a disbursement out of that IR£25,000?'

A. 'I cannot say that to you. It could have been anything. It could have been personal, otherwise I cannot say.'

Q. 'Well you didn't buy a car with it because we've seen that you dealt by way of a bank draft for the dealing with the garage, isn't that right?'

A. 'That's correct, yes.'

Q. 'Did you buy paintings with it?'

A. 'Well, I have bought paintings in my time but I don't believe I did.'

Q. 'Did you buy shares with it?'

A. 'I don't believe I did.'

Q. 'Did you invest it in stocks?'

A. 'No, I don't believe I did.'

Q. 'Did you put a deposit on an apartment?'

A. 'No, I don't believe I did. I have bought apartments but I don't believe I did ever use cash in relation to the purchase of an apartment.'

Q. 'Did you pay any outgoings in respect of your office out of it?'

A. 'No, I don't believe I did.'

3.92 Mr Dunlop maintained that his presence in Powers Hotel on the day in question was relatively unusual for him, although he volunteered the information that the hotel was regularly used by politicians, given its proximity to Leinster House.

3.93 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that, as of September 1993, his endeavours in relation to Quarryvale were focused on the upcoming County Council votes relating to the rezoning issue. He and Mr O'Callaghan expected that there would be renewed opposition by way of motions opposing Quarryvale being confirmed as a district/town centre under the Dublin County Development Plan; nevertheless, Mr Dunlop maintained that they were both confident of success. Mr Dunlop also acknowledged that as of September 1993, he was engaged in activities to progress the stadium project.

3.94 Apart from acknowledging that he encashed the IR£25,000 cheque on 17 September 1993, Mr Dunlop claimed not to have any further recollection in relation to the matter and described as a ‘mystery’ what had happened to the cash. He stated:

‘It is a mystery in the sense if you define the word ‘mystery’. It’s a mystery in the sense that I cannot explain exactly what I did with the £25,000. Obviously, as I have said previously, I used the money at some stage for purposes which I cannot now tell you. But certainly I don’t have any specific recollection of using that money for any defined purposes in relation to what the Tribunal is investigating.’

3.95 Mr Dunlop denied that he had elected not to tell the Tribunal what he had done with the IR£25,000 cash.

3.96 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that in September 1993 (prior to receipt of the IR£25,000 cheque), he himself was not without cash resources. Evidence to the Tribunal in relation to Mr Dunlop’s INBS ‘warchest’ account revealed that he had sums of between IR£30,000 and IR£45,000 on deposit in the months of August and September 1993. Given that he had received the IR£25,000 free of VAT, and that he had encashed the cheque, Mr Dunlop agreed that ‘in my own mind yes’ he must have had a requirement for this cash.

MR O’CALLAGHAN’S POSITION IN RELATION TO THE SEPTEMBER 1993 PAYMENT OF IR£25,000

3.97 Mr O’Callaghan denied any connection between this payment of IR£25,000 to Mr Dunlop in September 1993, and payments made by Riga Ltd on 9 November 1993, of IR£20,000 and IR£5,000 respectively to Cllrs Colm McGrath and John O’Halloran.

3.98 It was suggested to Mr O’Callaghan that the September 1993 payment to Mr Dunlop, and the November 1993 payments to Cllrs McGrath and O’Halloran, had a number of features in common: they were all round-figure payments, they were (initially at least) attributed within Riga Ltd as made on behalf of Barkhill Ltd, and recoupment of them was never sought by Riga Ltd from Barkhill Ltd, notwithstanding the Barkhill Ltd attribution in Riga Ltd’s books. Mr O’Callaghan responded:

‘Well the IR£25,000 stadium one, even though in Barkhill was a stadium invoice and the banks would not pay that, I was well aware of that, even though it was in Barkhill there, it should not have been in Barkhill it should have been in the stadium, the invoice was clearly marked national all purpose stadium, the banks would not have paid it, no choice. IR£20,000 was a loan more or less to McGrath, which I did myself, and the IR£5,000 to O'Halloran was a contribution to help him get himself set up as an independent politician.'

3.99 Mr O'Callaghan's evidence, therefore, was that all three payments had been wrongly attributed for the year end 30 April 1994 within the books of Riga Ltd as Barkhill Ltd expenses.

3.100 Mr O'Callaghan professed to have no knowledge as to how Mr Dunlop dealt with the IR£25,000 paid to him by Riga in September 1993. Mr O'Callaghan stated that he did not know why Mr Dunlop had a need for IR£25,000 in cash at this time. He denied the suggestion that Mr Dunlop had received the money to pay someone on Mr O'Callaghan's behalf and he denied, notwithstanding, the similarities¹⁴ the payment bore to the payments made to Cllrs McGrath and O'Halloran some weeks later, that the IR£25,000 cheque had been given to Mr Dunlop as a 'political payment'. Mr Dunlop's telephone records indicated that having met with Mr O'Callaghan on 15 and 16 September 1993, when the IR£25,000 cheque was likely to have been handed to him, Mr O'Callaghan again made contact by telephone on 17 September 1993 and requested Mr Dunlop to 'call him in Cork'.

THE TREATMENT OF THE IR£25,000 PAYMENT IN RIGA LTD'S BOOKS AND ACCOUNTS

3.101 Notwithstanding the assertions by Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop that the IR£25,000 payment was a 'stadium' payment, it was noteworthy that in Riga Ltd's books, the payment was attributed to the Quarryvale/Barkhill project. Moreover, in the audit of Riga Ltd's accounts for the year ended 30 April 1994, the IR£25,000 payment to Mr Dunlop was treated as a Barkhill Ltd expense.

3.102 The IR£25,000 payment was one of a number of payments to Mr Dunlop recorded in the intercompany loan balance for the year ended 30 April 1994 as Barkhill/Quarryvale expenditure, the others which totalled IR£25,756.70 being payments from Riga to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd. These sums were ultimately recouped from Barkhill, but no such application was made for recovery of this sum of IR£25,000 and by year end 30 April 1995, had been posted to the Directors Loan Account within Riga. Mr O'Callaghan explained this decision by stating that it was an expense associated with the stadium project, but was unable to explain why the payment was not therefore attributed to the work in progress stadium in Riga's accounts.

¹⁴ Including the manner in which the payments were treated in Riga's books. (Mr O'Callaghan believed that to have been a coincidence).

3.103 Other payments in addition to this IR£25,000 payment to Mr Dunlop, were recorded in the intercompany Loan Account for the year ended 30 April 1994, as Barkhill/Quarryvale expenditure but were transferred to the 'Directors Loan Account' for the year end 1995 included;

- IR£10,000 (by way of reimbursement for general expenses) to Mr O'Callaghan on 24 September 1993
- IR£20,000 to Cllr Colm McGrath on 9 November 1993
- IR£5,000 to Cllr John O'Halloran on 9 November 1993.

3.104 Mr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal, that the Cllr McGrath payment of IR£20,000 was not claimed from the Barkhill Ltd Loan Account because he, Mr O'Callaghan, regarded it as 'a loan more or less', while the Cllr O'Halloran payment of IR£5,000 was not claimed because it was paid 'to help him get himself set up as an Independent politician'. The Tribunal's analysis of these payments is considered elsewhere in this Chapter.

3.105 In all, reimbursement was not pursued for IR£60,000 recorded in the inter-company Loan Account for year end 1994, as Barkhill/Quarryvale expenditure and was transferred to the Directors Loan Account for year end 1995.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE IR£25,000 PAYMENT TO MR DUNLOP IN SEPTEMBER 1993

3.106 The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan that the IR£25,000 was a payment to Mr Dunlop for his work on the stadium project.

3.107 The Tribunal found that as of 1993, it was intended that Mr Dunlop would be remunerated for his stadium work by way of a beneficial interest in the stadium project.

3.108 The Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop's claimed lack of recollection in relation to his requirement in September 1993 for IR£25,000 cash. Neither did it accept Mr Dunlop's claimed lack of recollection about the identity of the person or persons he met (for the purposes of disbursing money), in Powers Hotel on 17 September 1993. The Tribunal did not accept as credible, that Mr Dunlop could have forgotten the use to which he applied such a substantial cash sum, in circumstances where, shortly after receiving the cheque, he proceeded to encash it. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop chose not to disclose either the purpose for which a sum of IR£25,000 from Mr O'Callaghan which he effectively treated as cash, or the name(s) of the individual or individuals he probably paid money to on 17 September 1993 in Powers Hotel, a premises close to Leinster House.

3.109 The Tribunal believed it probable that Mr Dunlop disbursed either the entire, or a significant portion of, the IR£25,000 cash to whomsoever he met in Powers Hotel on the 17th September 1993, and that, almost certainly, the beneficiaries were one or more politicians.

3.110 Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan, in effect, acknowledged that the September 1993 cheque for IR£25,000 from Riga Ltd, was the final large round-figure payment, without VAT, paid to Mr Dunlop by Riga Ltd/Barkhill Ltd, be it through Shefran/Sheafran or Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd.

3.111 The Tribunal noted that the payments of these large round-figure, effectively 'cash' sums, to Mr Dunlop ceased at around the same time as the zoning of the Quarryvale lands was confirmed by Dublin County Council. The Tribunal also noted that Mr Dunlop was paid the IR£25,000 in September 1993, the same general timeframe in which Cllrs McGrath and O'Halloran (9 November 1993) were paid IR£20,000 and IR£5,000 respectively, by Mr O'Callaghan. The Tribunal also noted that this cash payment of IR£25,000, in effect, was paid to Mr Dunlop at a time when he was actively lobbying in support of the All Purpose National Stadium project.

3.112 During the Quarryvale rezoning campaign (May 1991 to October 1993) therefore, Mr Dunlop received large round-figure sums from Mr O'Callaghan totalling IR£270,000. None of these payments provided for VAT, and none were accounted for in Mr Dunlop's books.

3.113 On Day 815 the following question was put to Mr Dunlop:

'Why was it, Mr Dunlop, that you had entered into an arrangement that for the duration of the zoning campaign in Quarryvale you required to be paid in large round figure sums in most circumstances in which you cashed the money and had the money available to you in cash?'

Mr Dunlop answered:

'It's because that was the arrangement that I arrived at with Mr O'Callaghan when I first met him in the context of Quarryvale and the in circumstances that I outlined to you vis-a-vis the concerns expressed to me by Mr O'Callaghan about Mr Gilmartin. That subsisted. That continued. The payments out of Frank Dunlop—to Frank Dunlop & Associates related to costs but at this time in or around this time it is obvious that a new relationship was evolved between us. I can't *specifically say who generated it, why it was generated, whether Mr O'Callaghan said to me, you know, we have to develop a new relationship or whether I said we have to put this on a different footing. I cannot say that to you other than that it occurred.'*¹⁵

3.114 Mr Dunlop was asked why, in September 1993, he ceased operating what had been up to then, on his account of events, (and indeed as found by the Tribunal), effectively a cash payment system agreed by himself and Mr O'Callaghan. Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well I don't want to continually repeat myself. But certainly a new arrangement was arrived at between Mr O'Callaghan and myself. I cannot say which of us generated it. Obviously it was mutually agreed in the context of what was occurring at the time in relation to Quarryvale. The [October 1993] vote hadn't taken place, it was about to take place. As you quite rightly say, we were confident we would win the confirmation vote and thereafter to all intents and purposes other than outstanding issues in relation to the stadium the [Quarryvale rezoning] matter was concluded.'

3.115 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan's necessity for a cash payment system for Councillors ceased in September 1993, because to all intents and purposes the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands, the objective for which Mr Dunlop had been retained as a lobbyist in the context of the Development Plan review, had effectively been achieved.

RIGA LTD'S AUDIT ADJUSTMENT

3.116 It was common case that Riga Ltd made an audit adjustment within its books for the year ended 30 April 1995, whereby the Riga Ltd/Barkhill Ltd inter-company loan balance was credited with the sum of IR£60,000 and a corresponding sum of IR£60,000 was debited as Directors' drawings to the Directors Loan Account within Riga Ltd.

3.117 The IR£60,000 figure treated thus in Riga's books comprised the IR£25,000 paid to Mr Dunlop in September 1993, the IR£20,000 paid to Cllr McGrath in November 1993, the IR£5,000 paid to Mr O'Halloran in November 1993, and the repayment of IR£10,000 (for general expenses) by Riga Ltd to Mr O'Callaghan in September 1993.

3.118 On 29 January 1996, Riga's Auditors, Barber & Co, advised Barkhill's Auditor, Mr Fleming of Deloitte & Touche, that the inter-company loan balance as of 31 March 1995, should be amended to £2,262,923. This figure was some IR£60,000 less than the figure he had been given as the inter-company loan balance in August 1995. No explanation for this adjustment appeared to have been given to Mr Fleming. It was not indicated specifically to Mr Fleming that IR£60,000 was being credited to the Riga Ltd/Barkhill Ltd inter-company loan balance.

3.119 By 2 February 1996, however, Mr Fleming was alert to the difference between the figure given in August 1995, and the figure advised in January 1996, and an explanation was sought. On 9 February 1996 Mr Fleming received the following explanation from Riga Ltd's Auditors:

'We refer to your letter of 2nd February, 1996 in relation to the inter company account between Barkhill and Riga. The difference of £60,000 arises from a cost originally taken as Barkhill's, but was subsequently discussed and decided to be a Riga cost, hence the revised balance of monies owing from Barkhill to Riga of £2,262,923 at 31st March 1995.'

3.120 Ms Cowhig, Riga's Auditor, explained Riga's decision to remove the payments totalling IR£60,000 which had been made to Mr Dunlop, Cllr McGrath, Cllr O'Halloran and Mr O'Callaghan from the inter-company loan balance, on the basis that they were deemed not to be recoverable from Barkhill Ltd. Ms Cowhig believed she had advised Mr Deane of the potential for difficulty with these entries in or about January 1996, when she was advised by him of the possibility of outside investors being brought into Barkhill Ltd.

3.121 According to Ms Cowhig, her discussion with Mr Deane had initially focused on a query about two payments, of IR£10,000 and IR£20,000, which had been made to Mr Lawlor in the accounting year ending 30 April 1995. These payments had initially been attributed in Riga Ltd's books as Barkhill/Quarryvale expenses. Ms Cowhig told the Tribunal that, as there were no invoices to support such payments, it was decided not to write them up to the Riga Ltd/Barkhill Ltd inter-company loan balance for the year ending 30 April 1995, but to attribute them to the Directors Loan Account within Riga Ltd. Ms Cowhig stated that in the circumstances the Directors Loan Account was the correct destination for these items without invoices.

3.122 Ms Cowhig told the Tribunal that because of a similar absence of invoices in relation to the payments which had been made in November 1993, to Cllr McGrath (IR£20,000) and to Cllr O'Halloran (IR£5,000) and in September 1993, to Mr O'Callaghan (IR£10,000), it had been decided, in December 1995 or January 1996, that these payments, together with the IR£25,000 paid to Mr Dunlop in September 1993, would be taken from the Riga Ltd/Barkhill Ltd inter-company loan balance and attributed, like Mr Lawlor's payments, to Riga's Directors Loan Account in the accounts for the year ended 30 April 1995.

3.123 According to Ms Cowhig, while Mr Dunlop's September 1993 payment had been made on foot of a Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoice, it was decided to remove this payment from the inter-company Loan Account because it had been made in relation to the stadium project, and not Quarryvale. However, on its face, this appeared to the Tribunal to conflict with the fact that in the accounting year ended 30 April 1994, the September 1993 payment to Mr Dunlop had been written up in both Riga Ltd's books of prime entry and its audited accounts as a Barkhill Ltd/Quarryvale expenditure.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS RELATING TO RIGA LTD'S AUDIT ADJUSTMENT

3.124 The Tribunal was satisfied that by January 1996, Riga Ltd, possibly Mr O'Callaghan and certainly Mr Deane, were aware that, if a number of round-figure payments (including the IR£25,000 to Mr Dunlop in September 1993), for which there were no invoices, and on which VAT had not been charged or paid, were to be included in the Riga Ltd/Barkhill Ltd inter-company loan balance, such inclusion was likely to present difficulties in the course of any due diligence process embarked upon by potential investors in Barkhill Ltd.¹⁶

¹⁶ From 1995/6 Barkhill Ltd was actively seeking outside investors in its bid to develop the Quarryvale lands as a district/town centre.

RE: Proposed All Purpose National Stadium

Dear Pdraigh,

As you are aware, Owen O'Callaghan and myself gave a briefing to An Taoiseach regarding the proposed All-Purpose National Stadium on Wednesday last, September 9th, 1992.

It is important that you appreciate that the reason for the briefing was to ensure that An Taoiseach had knowledge of the proposal before it was publicly announced.

We retained Deloitte & Touche to prepare a preliminary feasibility study, relative to the sporting uses that could be catered for at the All-Purpose Stadium. That was the specific remit given to the consultants.

The first phase of the feasibility report is based on a capital cost of £50/55 million.

Now that the technical team have completed their design which details the commercial uses, the next financial planning stage is being undertaken to capitalise on the commercial and franchising funding inflows, so that the project can be funded to the maximum.

This information is only now available for submission to enable our financial consultants to carry out Phase 2 of the financial study. The financial servicing of the project, based on our consultation to-date with all purpose stadium users in Europe and the United States, highlights the commercial potential of advertising, television rights and franchising for all year uses in food and beverage, licensing and entertaining. In our view these commercial uses will minimise any operating deficit.

As we outlined to An Taoiseach, it is possible that there will be a deficit - on a reducing scale - over a maximum of 8 years only, which may require Lottery Funding consideration.

We emphasise that the preliminary feasibility report was commissioned to establish the funding and total deficit, but excluding the commercial inflows which at the time were not available to the consultants.

We are now proceeding to the final feasibility study which will embrace a maximum of the commerciality of the project to minimise the operating deficit.

When this final financial information is completed we will be very happy to submit it to you.

The preliminary financial report is not a basis for final judgement as to the overall financing of the project. It was inadvertently provided to An Taoiseach and it represents an initial feasibility of the sporting uses only.

We appreciate your interest in this matter which mirrors that of An Taoiseach when we met him.

Yours sincerely,

Frank J. Dunlop
Managing Director

1st. December, 1993.

Dear Minister,

You will recall that I spoke to you recently with regard to the proposed National All-Purpose Stadium at Neilstown, Clondalkin, Dublin 22.

To avoid adding to the pressures on your schedule by seeking to arrange a meeting with Owen O'Callaghan and myself I have collated the relevant material on the matter for your personal perusal.

Included in the documentation is a Deloitte & Touche "Market and Financial Feasibility Study" commissioned by Owen O'Callaghan with regard to Stadium support options. The relevant sections are at page 1 to 4 inclusive.

Obviously, when your time permits Owen O'Callaghan and myself would greatly appreciate a meeting to discuss the matter in greater detail. Meanwhile if there is any further information you require in this matter please don't hesitate to call me.

With kind regards,

Frank Dunlop

Dublin 2.

1st. December, 1993.

Dear Taoiseach,

I am very much aware of the tremendous pressures under which you are working currently. I had asked Frank Dunlop some weeks ago to try and arrange a meeting with you so that we could brief you personally on our proposed National All-Purpose Stadium. I fully understand that time is a precious commodity for you at the best of times but even more so at the moment. Therefore, to avoid adding further burdens to the heavy schedule you are already working to Frank and myself have decided to send you the attached material under confidential cover with a view to discussing the matter with you when time allows.

Central to the documentation is the Market and Financial Feasibility Study prepared for me by Deloitte & Touche. This Study outlines the options for supporting the proposed Stadium. The relevant detail is provided at pages 1 to 4 inclusive of this Study which is attached for your perusal.

Taoiseach, I am convinced that this is not only a viable project but one which will also benefit the country enormously and provide us with a facility which will be second to none internationally. Likewise, this Stadium will be seen publicly as the fulfilment of the undertaking in the Programme for Partnership Government, 1993-1997 to support the building of a national sports stadium.

With every good wish in your endeavours to achieve a peaceful solution to the national problem.

Yours sincerely,

Owen O'Callaghan

BARKHILL

14th December 1993

Owen O'Callaghan phoned - he confirmed that the draft development plan for Dublin has been made and the Barkhill zoning is now confirmed. Any issues arising in relation to the square footage (i.e. net or gross) would arise as part of the planning process. They have been in discussions with the planners and it will be late January before any planning permission issues. He is not overly concerned with this process and less concerned about An Bord Pleanala process.

Ongoing discussions are taking place with Marks & Spencers, Quinnsworth and Penneys and he indicated that Roger Aldridge from Marks & Spencers now wants to meet the Quinnsworth and Penney people on the 3rd of February 1994 to discuss their mutual interests in Quarryvale.

The people involved in Quinnsworth and Penneys are Don Tidey and Arthur Ryan.

He went on to indicate that he is meeting Albert Reynolds and Bertie Aherne later today in connection with the Sports Stadium. I expressed surprise at this. He indicated that he has no real option but to continue his discussions in relation to this Stadium in that there is enormous political interest in same. He will not be moving anything forward unless there is significant state subsidies - he mentioned IR£5m per annum. He mentioned that the ~~Patriot~~ ^{major} could work but obviously it is at fairly early stages.

Re: March 11th meeting with Minister Bertie Ahern in Los Angeles

Dear Frank,

As you are probably aware the above meeting has been arranged for this coming Friday. Obviously I will need to talk with you, Mr. Ambrose Kelly or Mr. O'Callaghan prior to meeting with Minister Ahern. It would also be imperative to hear the result of the pending meeting this Thursday 10th with Minister Aylward.

I will need an update with reference to any recent discussions with the F.A.I., and Deloitte & Touche. Currently being forwarded to me are the recently published National Lottery Annual Report and Finance Ministry documentation. Also it would be most useful going into this meeting with Minister Ahern to have some indication of the role the board of Leisure West Ltd. anticipates for Chilton & O'Connor Limited.

I look forward to discussing all of the above and hopefully ironing out the funding details for this important project sometime soon in Dublin. I remain,

Very truly yours,

MOF/DP/DFN27/66-67

24th November 1994

Meeting with Owen O'Callaghan at Bankcentre.

- He met recently with Frank Dunne - he has requested £100 per sq.ft. Dunne/Irving Drucker are at £50/60 per sq.ft. His target is £85 per sq.ft. He indicated that he saw the agreement between Dunnes and Green which indicates that Dunnes are paying £48.50 per sq.ft. He is having a further meeting later today with Dunnes.
- He confirmed his meeting with Paul Cauwood last week together with John Deane - they have the full information pack at this stage to go back to British Land and Hammersons with.
- He confirmed the position viz a viz Ronson and would expect a proposal from them in 7/10 days. Charles Lee who is Chairman of Erdman Lewis, chartered surveyors and his no. 2 in that company - Mike Fowler are involved with Ronson - they are acting as professional advisors but O'Callaghan also believes that they will have an equity stake.

I agreed that we would try and check out Ronsons current status - (Mary, can you please follow this up please).

- C&A have responded to the HOK flyer indicating that they are very interested in either the second or third anchor spot in Quarryvale comprising 30,000 sq.ft.
- He had a meeting with Vincent O'Doherty in relation to Superquinn getting involved - they are interested in Anchor 3 - 35,000 sq.ft. - and he indicated a price of £100 per sq.ft. to them. He is also pushing HOK to go after Sainsburys.
- In relation to Penneys and Quinns worth he indicated that McMillan is not unhappy with £100 per sq.ft.
- Tenant interest in response to the HOK flyer has been very positive.
- Land Securities - Alf Strange is the name of the person involved - they will be sending them the pack next week without the financial figures.
- He also mentioned a Jim Kelly who is a UK developer who was introduced to them by HOK. He was formally an estates director of Sainsburys. He is interested in getting involved with property development and they are sending him the information pack also.
- They have no word back from IKEA yet but Owen continues to believe that it will be positive in the longer term.

Funding

This was the main reason for our discussions. They need cash to pay various bills, in particular Ambrose Kelly IR£75,000; Connell Wilson IR£25,000; HOK IR£20,000; Fire Cert IR£10,000; and IR£20,000 contingency. This would bring them up to the end of January 1995. In response to our earlier discussions in relation to the Carlow proceeds, he indicated that they would like IR£150,000 from the projected Carlow proceeds to be used to inject to Barkhill to fund these expenses. As the funds will not come through from Carlow until early next year, they would like bridging of this facility in Riga Limited. I indicated that we would be positive towards this - the implication of this is that the Riga Facility can only be reduced by IR£850,000 when the funds come through from Carlow. He went on further to indicate that he wanted to put us on notice that if they had not made tangible progress by the end of January they may be seeking further release from this IR£850,000 to fund ongoing Barkhill expenditure.

AIBQ 27.2 - 57

There was no debate in relation to themselves putting in these funds - they appear to have accepted our position that we are not funding any further spend in Quarryvale.

We agreed to liaise with John Deane in relation to the mechanics of drawdown and also to highlight to John Deane his need to ensure that this injection of funds into Barkhill Limited is reflected properly in relation to other shareholders.

Stadium

We discussed this briefly. He indicated that he has had meetings with various politicians who are keen on the concept - although there maybe an issue in relation to the location. He has had American financiers over to meet the relevant minister and he agreed that he would give me a copy of the submission made to them. He believes the FAI and the IRFU will commit to the Neilstown site. He is convinced that the proposed Pheonix Park site will not proceed in view of the difficulties in getting a casino licence.

Dear Owen

For over seventy years now Fianna Fail has through its political involvement played a major role in Irish life. Across the entire spectrum of the national community Fianna Fail has given practical expression to the dreams, ideals and priorities of our people by innovation, by consensus and by effective government. It is a proud tradition of practical patriotism which has changed the face of Ireland in education, health, agriculture, industrial development, social caring, involvement in the EC as well as constant support and encouragement for our cultural and national identity.

The costs of administering to the needs of the biggest political party in Ireland have escalated sharply over recent years. These costs, accumulated with the enormous expenses of major election campaigns, have left us with a Party debt that demands urgent redress.

We have put a national recovery plan in place to tackle the Party's debt. This involves substantial cost reductions and a co-ordinated fund raising campaign. We must pursue this programme rigorously to contain and reduce a total Party debt of £3,150,000, comprising bank loans of £2,350,000 and creditors of £800,000. It is a formidable challenge that can only be met by single-minded resolution and generous response.

We ask you to assist us at this critical time by making a significant financial contribution. It is an exceptional situation and we ask you to consider this request favourably in the context of these straitened circumstances. A senior representative of the National Treasurers Committee will be in touch with you personally in this regard in the near future. Thank you for your valuable support in the past which was of great assistance to the Party.

With every good wish,

We remain,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Taoiseach,

Thank you for your recent letter.

It has always been my policy over the years to support individual candidates and in particular this time, both in Dublin and Cork.

As you know, I have very close contact with candidates in both these areas and hope I have done the right thing in supporting candidates individually to gain those vital few seats.

The total support is in excess of six figures but it is vital for the country that we have a Fianna Fail-controlled Government.

In acknowledgement of your own letter, I enclose a cheque for £5,000.

re: Riga Limited

Dear Michael,

Further to our meeting I wish to give you the additional information which you require. I attach a revised Cash Flow Statement from 1st January 1993 to the 31st December, 1993 together with audited accounts.

By way of background to the Cumberland House purchase, this was undertaken at a time when Riga Limited was in the middle of its transaction with Tom Gilmartin. Tom Gilmartin had agreed to pay Riga £3.5m for their interest in the Neilstown site. As part of the Agreement the £300,000.00 deposit which Riga paid on the site was to be refunded to Riga. Tom Gilmartin paid approximately £2.1m of this money to Riga and it was clearly envisaged that having paid a substantial amount such as this the balance then due of £1.7m would be paid.

On the basis of this forthcoming payment Riga Limited invested £2.5m by way of equity in the acquisition of the Cumberland House property. The balance of equity of £2.5m being put in by Consolidated Land and the remaining £8m required to complete the purchase was financed through AIB. So with a current borrowing level of £7.2m if the transaction had proceeded Riga as planned would also have a cash surplus of £1.7m which would be available for other projects or to reduce the loan of £7.2m.

-2-

At the time Cumberland House was purchased its average rent was approximately £7.75 per sq.ft. This rental was obtained in Cumberland House at a time when the top market rents which were being paid in Earlsfort Terrace were £9.20 per sq. ft. Consequently the discount at which Cumberland House was rented under the prime market rent at the time was in the order of 20%. At the time of purchase of Cumberland House, the quoting rents for new buildings were £14.00 per sq.ft. then passing to £16.00 per sq.ft. and ultimately rents being quoted for the new Ryde Development at Ballsbridge were in the order of £20/£22 per sq.ft.

Against this background it was envisaged that if rents went to £16 per sq.ft. and allowing for the same 20% discount, the rents in Cumberland House should rise to £13 per sq.ft. This would, on similar yields to the purchase price, increase the value of Cumberland House by approximately 70% to a value of £20m with the resulting profit per partner being approximately £3.5m on an investment of £2.5m. It was envisaged between the partners that Cumberland House be sold once the rent reviews had been undertaken.

In light of the current circumstances Riga's proposals for de-gearing are as follows:

- a. The Units at North Main Street would be sold in preference to being rented to Purchasers interested in purchasing the Units. As explained to you a purchase package is being put together with a financial institution to assist Purchasers in buying the Units.
- b. Notwithstanding the intention of the Partners to sell Cumberland House following the rent reviews, Riga has already initiated the process of endeavouring to dispose of its interest in the property. Two agents have been given instructions to seek a Purchaser for the building. Riga Limited has also been encouraging its partner Consolidated Land with a view to selling its interest to Consolidated Land. It is envisaged that the sale of the building will be easier to undertake once the rent reviews have crystallised which should be later in the year.

In addition to the foregoing Riga Limited has also incurred additional expense in the sum of £400,000.00 approximately in order to secure the Quarryvale zoning. This has been spent in two ways as follows:

- a. £150,000.00 has been paid on various "expenses" directly related to the Quarryvale project and for which Invoices have not been produced to the Bank nor has the Bank been requested to make any payment out of the Barkhill account.
- b. £250,000.00 has been spent in connection with the Stadium project for the old Neilstown site.

By way of background to the expenditure you will recall that the Neilstown site was the original site zoned for the town centre. Part of the Quarryvale problem was to obtain the moving of the zoning from Neilstown to Quarryvale. The City Manager made it clear that he expected an alternative use to be found for the Neilstown site and that the site was not simply to be dumped and left there. With this in mind the Stadium project was conceived.

cont/.

-3-

However to make the project seem a real project and not just a mythical scheme, it was necessary to prepare detailed and substantial drawings to such a standard that would lead to a detailed Planning application. Furthermore a working model with a sliding roof and moving floor was also prepared. International consultants in the leisure field were retained to vet the project and Deloitte and Touche, Accountants, were also retained to give a feasibility report for the entire project for the American financiers who were interested in providing the finance.

The introduction to the financiers was made by the Taoiseach Albert Reynolds to Owen when the financiers were in Dublin to meet the Taoiseach who was then Minister for Finance. In order to establish creditability for the stadium project it was necessary for the project to be seen as a viable workable project which would have the support of the Government, the F.A.I. and other sporting organisations who may use the project. Considerable work was done in this regard and consultants employed to ensure that the project was presented in the best possible light as a credible project for the site.

As you are aware a full Planning Application has been lodged for the stadium project prior to the zoning decision on Quarryvale. The standard of the drawings and work and effort put in connection with the Planning Application was such that it was viewed as a very real project by the Planners, Local Authority officials and indeed members of the Council. The fact that a viable project was being put in for the old Neilstown site was a material factor for a number of Councillors deciding to vote in favour of the retail zoning for Quarryvale. The stadium project also had a number of other advantages:

- (a) It provided a new use for the existing site which was very important for the goodwill of the Local Authority and Councillors
- (b) By lodging the Planning application, the Planning for the stadium obtained priority in relation to any other application for that particular area
- (c) The Local Authority would not have any interest in disposing of the site to any other user until such time as the stadium project had run its course
- (d) In the event Sharkey endeavoured to lodge a Planning Application for a retail scheme on the lands behind the stadium. It would be clear to any retailer that this land was not economically viable, particularly in view of the large stadium being built in front of it and effectively all that Sharkey was proposing to develop was a site at the rear of the stadium.

cont/.

-4-

- (e) Perhaps the most material factor was that the stadium would carry such large volumes of traffic that it requires the whole road network to be upgraded at a cost of approximately £36m. Consequently any other scheme for the adjoining lands including lands still zoned for a town centre will have to wait behind the stadium project and cannot be advanced until the road problems which must be solved in order to progress the stadium have in fact been resolved.
- (f) The consequence of the foregoing is that the old Neilstown site is locked up for a number of years which will allow Quarryvale to progress without threat from the Neilstown site.

I trust the foregoing will be of some assistance to you. If you have any further queries please do not hesitate to contact me.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

JOHN W.T. DEANE

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 7 – INTRODUCTION

THE INVOLVEMENT OF COUNCILLORS IN QUARRYVALE

1.01 Securing majority support amongst elected members of Dublin County Council was the key to the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands for commercial purposes. This was done through the practice of lobbying, in itself a perfectly legitimate activity.

1.02 In addition to lobbying councillors directly, the promoters of the Quarryvale project also recognised the importance of lobbying local residents and residents associations, both to obtain their support for the development, and in the hope that they would, in turn, encourage their local councillors to support the project. A campaign to lobby such local interest groups was particularly evident from the Autumn of 1991, and an example of it is considered in this part, under the heading ‘The men in dark glasses.’

1.03 While the lobbying of elected councillors to support the rezoning of Quarryvale commenced in late 1989 or early 1990, it began in earnest in 1991. It was undertaken by Mr Gilmartin (to a limited extent), by Mr O’Callaghan and more particularly by Mr Dunlop whose services as a lobbyist were retained by Mr O’Callaghan in early 1991. A small number of councillors themselves lobbied fellow councillors for their support for the rezoning of these lands.

1.04 On 14 May 1991 Mr O’Callaghan was recorded by AIB as expressing confidence that the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands would be achieved, having suggested only two weeks earlier that this project was ‘very high risk’, and only had ‘a 50/50 chance of success.’ It appeared that Mr Lawlor was at that time advising Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan that there was sufficient councillor support for the proposals to rezone the lands, but that the concerns of Mr Corcoran of Green Property Plc would have to be allayed. Mr Corcoran was concerned (as were many others), that the development of a large scale town centre at Quarryvale would adversely affect the proposed Green Property Town Centre development at Blanchardstown.

1.05 The Quarryvale lands were rezoned to D (major town centre), and E (industrial), by a majority vote of the councillors at a Special Meeting of the Council on 16 May 1991. This was the zoning shown on the 1991 Draft Development Plan, which went on public display.¹

1.06 Following on from this vote, the development of the Quarryvale lands and its potential or perceived threat to the development of a town centre in Blanchardstown became a central feature in the Local Election campaign in West County Dublin in May/June 1991. Mr O’Callaghan, and his agent, Mr Dunlop, had a vested interest in ensuring that the councillors who were supportive of the Quarryvale project would retain their seats in the Local Election.

1.07 The requirement on the part of Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop for the councillors’ ongoing support for the Quarryvale project, while it commenced essentially in 1991, continued into 1992 and 1993. At a Special Meeting of the Council held on 17 December 1992 to review the objections and representations received on the 1991 Draft Development Plan, the Quarryvale zoning was revised to C (town/district centre) and E (industrial), and subjected to a 250,000 square feet retail space ‘cap.’ The rezoning of the Quarryvale lands was confirmed by the County Council in 1993.²

1.08 Following the division of Dublin County Council on 1 January 1994, the Quarryvale lands fell within the functional area of South Dublin County Council. During the review of the 1993 Dublin County Development Plan by South Dublin County Council, Mr O’Callaghan campaigned to abolish the cap on retail space at Quarryvale.³

1.09 In this part of Chapter Two, the Tribunal considered the involvement of thirty one elected councillors⁴ in the rezoning of Quarryvale. Most of these councillors supported the Quarryvale project. Many of these councillors also feature in other modules, the common denominator in most instances being their association with Mr Dunlop.

THE MODUS OPERANDI

1.10 While Mr Dunlop did not invent the system of corruptly paying councillors in return for their support for land rezoning, he undoubtedly embraced it to a very considerable extent in relation to Quarryvale and other land rezonings in County Dublin. In relation to Quarryvale, Mr Dunlop corruptly paid tens of thousands of pounds to councillors to garner and maintain their voting support for the rezoning of the lands from funds made available to him by Mr O’Callaghan in the period 1991 to 1993.

² See Part 1 of this Chapter.

³ See Part 1 of this Chapter.

⁴ Mr Lawlor’s involvement in Quarryvale and payments made to him relevant to Quarryvale are considered separately in Part 9 of this Chapter. Mr Lawlor was an elected councillor in Dublin County Council (representing the Lucan Ward) between 1979 and 1991, and was one of a large number of councillors who lost their seats in the June 1991 Local Elections.

1.11 In particular, the Local Elections in June 1991, the General Election in November 1992, and the Seanad Election in early 1993 provided Mr Dunlop (and Mr O’Callaghan) with an opportunity to generously disburse money to councillors as so called ‘political donations.’

1.12 Many councillors solicited money from Mr Dunlop and/or Mr O’Callaghan, while others simply received money in the absence of any such request. Undoubtedly, while some councillors expressly solicited money in return for their support for Quarryvale, others did so on that implied basis. Some councillors accepted payments without giving any consideration as to their intended purpose. In almost every instance, however, the councillors who accepted money from Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop (whether or not solicited) did so in the knowledge that the donor had an interest (as an owner or an owner’s agent) in lands which they, as elected councillors, were considering for rezoning in the course of the review of the County Dublin Development Plan. In only a couple of instances were payments made or tendered by Mr Dunlop declined or returned.

THE FUNDS AVAILABLE FOR DISBURSEMENT TO COUNCILLORS

1.13 In 1991 to 1993, the crucial period for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands, funds amounting to IR£275,000 were made available in large round figure sums to Mr Dunlop by Mr O’Callaghan, a substantial portion of which was quickly turned into cash for disbursement to councillors. Mr Dunlop was also at the time in receipt of substantial sums from other landowners or developers, some of whom had a similar purpose in mind.

1.14 In addition to participating indirectly in this corrupt activity by providing funds to Mr Dunlop, the Tribunal has found that Mr O’Callaghan also directly made corrupt payments to some councillors and politicians in relation to Quarryvale, amounting to at least IR£109,250.

1.15 In the period from April to June 1991 alone, Mr Dunlop had at least IR£165,000 in cash at his disposal, including at least IR£65,000 from Mr O’Callaghan (from IR£80,000 paid in cheques to Shefran). The balance of this IR£165,000 sum was made up of IR£80,001 (withdrawn from Mr Dunlop’s 042 ‘war chest’ account as follows: IR£16,001 on 18 April 1991; IR£1,000 on 25 May 1991; IR£3,000 on 31 May 1991; IR£25,000 on 7 June 1991 and IR£35,000 on 11 June 1991), and of the encashed proceeds of an IR£20,000 Shefran cheque paid to him on 6 June 1991 by Newlands Industrial Park Ltd.⁵

⁵ See Chapter 9 (Baldoyle/Pennine).

1.16 In the period leading up to the November 1992 General Election and in advance of the second Quarryvale rezoning vote, Mr Dunlop had available to him at a minimum IR£73,500 in cash, most of which was sourced to the IR£70,000 which had been transferred by Mr O’Callaghan/Riga to his 042 ‘war chest’ account on 10 November 1992.⁶

1.17 Most of these funds were used to make payments to councillors to ensure their support for the Quarryvale rezoning. The Tribunal considered that such payments were always corrupt from the perspective of Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan, and were often (although not always), corrupt from the perspective of the recipients. The Tribunal did not label such payments as corrupt on the part of the recipients unless satisfied on the balance of the strongest probability that they had been received (whether solicited or not), with a full appreciation on their part that the payment was made on the understanding and undoubted basis that they were agreeable (expressly or by implication) to support the Quarryvale rezoning at County Council meetings. The Tribunal accepted that this level of conscious awareness by councillors in receipt of payments was not always present. Furthermore, the Tribunal did not consider any less corrupt payments to councillors who claimed, truthfully or otherwise, that their support for Quarryvale was certain irrespective of their receipt of money.

1.18 The comments in the immediately preceding paragraph are also relevant to the other modules of inquiry undertaken by the Tribunal. In most of them the Tribunal was satisfied that identified (and in some instances unidentified) councillors received corrupt payments. In some modules, the Tribunal found that identified landowners/developers directly made corrupt payments to councillors or funded Mr Dunlop (or others) to do so on their behalf, in the knowledge that such corrupt payments would be made.

1.19 In relation to, in particular, the disbursements made by Mr Dunlop in May/June 1991 to candidates in the 1991 Local Elections, the Tribunal was satisfied that these were made corruptly because they were made for the purposes of persuading and influencing councillors to support rezoning projects being (or to be) promoted by Mr Dunlop, including Quarryvale. The Tribunal was also satisfied that the payments totalling IR£80,000 made to Shefran by Mr O’Callaghan in 1991 were corruptly made in order to facilitate Mr Dunlop in making the aforesaid disbursements. (See part 5 of this Chapter).

1.20 Notwithstanding the corrupt nature of such payments from Mr Dunlop's and Mr O'Callaghan's perspective, the Tribunal did not, in all instances where it established that such payments had been made, deem it appropriate to categorise the receipt (whether or not solicited) of such payments to have been corrupt. The following factors were considered by the Tribunal when making determinations in relation to such payments: the size of the payment, the circumstances in which it was solicited and/or paid, the relationship existing at that time between the donor, Mr Dunlop, and the recipient and the extent to which the recipient appreciated or understood the nature and/or intent of the payment. Furthermore, the Tribunal took into account, in general, the fact that there was no evidence that Mr Dunlop had previously made payments to any of the councillors in question.

1.21 In those instances, where the Tribunal established that Mr Dunlop or Mr O'Callaghan had made payments to councillors at the time of the 1991 Local Election, and where it did not deem it appropriate to categorise such payments as corrupt (from the recipients' perspective), it nevertheless endeavoured, where the evidence so permitted, to otherwise categorise such payments (e.g. by the use of the term 'improper' or 'inappropriate' etc), having regard to the evidence heard by it.

1.22 A small number of councillors, who were the subject of inquiry in this module (and indeed in other modules) were deceased at the time of the establishment of the Tribunal or died before having the opportunity to give sworn evidence to the Tribunal. Some of these councillors had limited contact with the Tribunal in its private inquiry stage and where, in those instances, any of them denied the receipt of money relating to their involvement in Quarryvale, the Tribunal has reiterated that denial in this Report.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 7 - CLLR SEAN ARDAGH (FF)

2.01 Cllr Ardagh was a Fianna Fáil councillor in Dublin County Council from 1985 to January 1994 and of South Dublin County Council from January 1994 until 1999. Cllr Ardagh represented the Terenure Ward. He was a TD from 1997.

CLLR ARDAGH'S INVOLVEMENT IN THE QUARRYVALE REZONING

2.02 In response to queries posed by the Tribunal in December 1999 relating to his involvement with Quarryvale, Cllr Ardagh advised the Tribunal on 25 January 2000 that he:

- did not attend any public meetings in connection with the rezoning of Quarryvale;
- did not attend any private meetings in connection with the rezoning of Quarryvale;
- had not been requested to provide any assistance in connection with the proposal to rezone Quarryvale;
- had no recollection of being lobbied in connection with the rezoning of Quarryvale;
- was not requested to nor did he solicit the support of any other member of Dublin County Council in favour of the said zoning.

2.03 However, in his evidence to the Tribunal, Cllr Ardagh accepted that he probably had been lobbied to support Quarryvale by Mr Dunlop, as maintained by Mr Dunlop.

2.04 Mr Dunlop's diary for 9 September 1992 noted a meeting with Cllr Ardagh. Cllr Ardagh said he recalled a meeting, which he accepted might have taken place in September 1992, with Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop concerning the proposal to build a stadium on the Neilstown lands. Cllr Ardagh recalled being lobbied in relation to this matter but said he had no recollection of being lobbied in regard to the Quarryvale rezoning.

2.05 Cllr Ardagh was not recorded in the County Council minutes as having voted in relation to Quarryvale on 16 May 1991.

2.06 Voting 'scenarios' prepared by Mr Dunlop in the lead up to 17 December 1992 Quarryvale vote listed Cllr Ardagh's support for Quarryvale as 'definite.' Cllr Ardagh, in acknowledging that he could have been lobbied by Mr Dunlop in relation to Quarryvale (and other developments), stated as follows:

'Well I accept he (Mr Dunlop) could have done that. We would have met like ships in the night and comments would be made, one would forget.'

2.07 Cllr Ardagh's voting pattern on 17 December was supportive of Quarryvale. He voted against the motion to rezone the lands back to 'E' industrial, voted against the motion to zone the lands 'C1' at a 100,000 square feet retail 'cap', and voted in favour of reinstating Town Centre status on the Neilstown lands with a special objective to encourage the development of specialised commercial, recreational, industrial and residential uses in this area. He also voted in favour of the amendment tabled before the County Council on 17 December 1992 in the names of Cllrs McGrath, Devitt, Tyndall and O'Halloran, to restrict retail development on Quarryvale to 250,000 square feet.

2.08 Mr Dunlop's diary for 1993 records further contact with Cllr Ardagh. Mr Dunlop and Cllr Ardagh apparently met on 25 January 1993, a meeting which followed telephone contact by Cllr Ardagh to Mr Dunlop's office on 18 January. Cllr Ardagh believed that the meeting with Mr Dunlop (who Cllr Ardagh described as close to the Fianna Fáil leadership), on 25 January 1993 may have related to Cllr Ardagh's quest for political advancement by seeking a Taoiseach's nomination to the Seanad.¹ Mr Dunlop and Cllr Ardagh met again on 8 March 1993.

2.09 On 18 October 1993 Mr Dunlop's office record of telephone contacts indicated a telephone call from Cllr Ardagh requesting Mr Dunlop to call him and, on 19 October 1993 Mr Dunlop's office noted a further telephone call from Cllr Ardagh, stating:

'Sean Ardagh – OOC spoke to him'

2.10 While Cllr Ardagh stated that he had no recollection of these telephone calls, the Tribunal was nevertheless satisfied that such calls were made and that such contact as did occur between Mr Dunlop, Mr O'Callaghan and Cllr Ardagh in October 1993 concerned the Quarryvale rezoning confirmation Special Meeting, scheduled for 19 October 1993 and most probably concerned Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan seeking to ensure, in the face of motions opposing Quarryvale having been lodged, that Cllr Ardagh's hitherto support for Quarryvale remained firm.

¹ Cllr Ardagh was not a Taoiseach's nominee in January/February 1993

2.11 Cllr Ardagh continued to be lobbied by Mr O’Callaghan (as did other councillors on South Dublin County Council) in October 1997 and September 1998, at a time when Mr O’Callaghan was requesting councillors to support the lifting of the retail ‘cap’ on Quarryvale.

2.12 On 28 March 1999 Cllr Ardagh provided the following documentation to the Tribunal, relating to payments to him by Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan:

1. A booking form headed ‘Sean Ardagh Fianna Fáil General Election Campaign Lunch’ bearing, inter alia, the statement ‘Sorry I cannot make it to the lunch, I enclose £250 towards the campaign’ and bearing the signature of Mr O’Callaghan;
2. A ‘with compliments’ slip dated 19 April 1996 in the name of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd;
3. A copy cheque in the sum of IR£250 from Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd payable to ‘Friends of Sean Ardagh, T.D. Committee.’

2.13 Cllr Ardagh told the Tribunal that in the years 1996, 1997 and 1998 both Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop were invited to attend fundraising lunches organised by his Election Campaign Committee. He said that Mr O’Callaghan had responded to the 1997 invitation by providing a cheque for IR£250. Cllr Ardagh stated that he did not know how Mr O’Callaghan had come to be on his invitation list, but suggested that it may have been the case that Mr Dunlop asked Mr O’Callaghan to contribute. The IR£250 contribution from Mr O’Callaghan was paid to Cllr Ardagh’s Committee by a Riga Ltd cheque dated 10 February 1997. This payment was analysed in Riga’s cheque payments book under ‘sundries’ with a note stating ‘1997 election committee.’

2.14 Cllr Ardagh stated that Mr Dunlop responded to fundraising lunch invitations in the years 1996 and 1998 and that on each occasion a IR£250 cheque was received from him. Cllr Ardagh told the Tribunal that he had not retained a copy of the 1996 cheque, keeping in his possession only Mr Dunlop’s ‘compliment slip’, but he had retained a copy of the 1998 cheque.

2.15 The Tribunal was satisfied:

- i. That Cllr Ardagh was considered by Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan as an important and valued supporter of the Quarryvale project from 1992 onwards. While Cllr Ardagh received relatively modest political contributions from Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop in the period 1996 to 1998, it was nevertheless the case that he invited them to contribute to fundraisers in the knowledge that both were associated with the Quarryvale rezoning project, and he did so at times when he was aware that Quarryvale would be subject to further consideration by South Dublin County Council. As such, Cllr Ardagh's entreaties to Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop were inappropriate.

ii. That Cllr Ardagh, when responding to the Tribunal's request for information relevant to Quarryvale on 25 January 2000 was less than frank with the Tribunal as to the extent of his contact with Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan in relation to the Quarryvale project.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 7 - CLLR MICK BILLANE (DL)

3.01 Cllr Billane was one of six Worker’s Party councillors¹ elected to the County Council in June 1991. He was elected for the Tallaght/Rathcoole Ward. By the time of Cllr Billane’s election Quarryvale had been rezoned ‘D’ (major town centre), and ‘E’ (industrial), following the 16 May 1991 vote in Dublin County Council.

3.02 On 17 December 1992 Cllr Billane voted against a proposal that the Quarryvale zoning revert to ‘E’ (industrial) and, following the defeat of that proposal, voted against a motion which sought a ‘C1’ (neighbourhood/local centre) zoning for Quarryvale with a retail cap of 100,000 square feet.

3.03 On the same date Cllr Billane voted in favour of the motion to limit retail development in Quarryvale to 250,000 square feet. This motion was brought in the names of Cllrs McGrath/Devitt/Tyndall/O’Halloran as an amendment to the 9 December 1992 motion which proposed the adoption of the County Manager’s recommendation in his report of 2 December 1992, that Quarryvale should be zoned ‘C’ (town/district centre) and ‘E’ (industrial)².

3.04 In general therefore, Cllr Billane’s voting pattern on 17 December 1992 was supportive of what was then being promulgated by those supporting the Quarryvale project.

3.05 Cllr Billane told the Tribunal that his decision to support Quarryvale with a retail cap of 250,000 square feet arose in the context of his belief, in 1992, that Clondalkin required infrastructure and shopping centres. Cllr Billane did not recall having been lobbied by anyone connected with Quarryvale in the lead up to the December 1992 vote. He stated that he did not have discussions with Mr O’Callaghan at that time. While accepting that the proposal to rezone Quarryvale would likely have been discussed by his party as a group, Cllr Billane did not recall the details of any such discussion.³

² This was not the Manager’s primary recommendation – merely a fallback position if the councillors were not to accept his principal recommendation that Quarryvale revert to its 1983 zoning – mainly ‘E’ Industrial, but also ‘A1’ (Residential) and ‘F’ (open space / recreational amenities).

3.06 Notwithstanding Cllr Billane’s lack of recollection of being lobbied prior to the December 1992 vote, the Tribunal was satisfied, as a matter of probability, that at some stage he met with and was lobbied by Mr Dunlop and/or Mr O’Callaghan. The Tribunal had access to documentation prepared by Mr Dunlop in 1992 wherein he mused on the likely voting patterns of councillors, and in portion of this documentation Cllr Billane’s support for Quarryvale was listed as ‘definite’.⁴ At a minimum therefore, regardless of the validity or otherwise of Mr Dunlop’s assumption of Cllr Billane’s support for Quarryvale, this suggested that some level of contact had in fact been made with him prior to December 1992.⁵

3.07 Furthermore in a letter dated 12 October 1992 written by Mr O’Callaghan to Mr John Fitzgerald, a Council Manager, Mr O’Callaghan claimed that he had met all 26 councillors in the South Dublin area – Cllr Billane was one such councillor. Mr O’Callaghan’s recollection was that, in contrast with the position of the Worker’s Party, Cllr Billane was supportive of Quarryvale.

3.08 In October 1993 Cllr Billane was a signatory (together with Cllrs Tipping, Breathnach, O’Callaghan and Gilmore) to three motions which were lodged with Dublin County Council, in advance of the Special Meeting of 19 October 1993.

3.09 Notwithstanding that, on their face, the three motions sought to have the zoning of Quarryvale revert to the zoning which had been proposed in the 1991 Draft Development Plan and thus were seeking a ‘D’ (major town centre) zoning with approximately 500,000 square feet of retail development for portion of the Quarryvale lands with two other portions of the lands zoned ‘E’ (industrial), the Tribunal was satisfied that the intention of the five councillors who signed these motions in October 1993 was in fact to undo the zoning achieved on 17 December 1992 and instead have the lands zoned as in the 1983 Development Plan – in effect mainly ‘E’ (Industrial), but also partly ‘A1’ (Residential) and partly ‘F’ (open space/recreational amenities).

3.10 In his evidence Cllr Billane confirmed that the intended objective in lodging the motions in October 1993 was to reverse the County Council decision of 17 December 1992. The motions did not proceed to a vote in the County Council.

3.11 Cllr Billane was asked by Tribunal Counsel as to why, in October 1993 he had put his name to the motions in question when, in December 1992, he had supported the zoning of Quarryvale with a 250,000 square feet retail development. Cllr Billane was unable to recall why he had had a change of mind in this regard, some months later.

⁴ In two such scenarios Mr Dunlop predicted Cllr Billane as voting for Quarryvale while in his ‘worst’ scenario he was listed as voting against Quarryvale.

⁵ This contact arose most probably sometime after June 1992 as Mr Dunlop’s ‘contact report’ indicated that as of 17 June 1992 Cllr Billane had not been contacted.

3.12 Following the break-up of Dublin County Council in January 1994 into three separate Councils, Quarryvale remained within the remit of Cllr Billane, in his capacity as a member of the newly established South Dublin County Council.

3.13 In the course of the making of the 1998 South Dublin County Council Development Plan (1997 to 1998) Mr O’Callaghan made submissions to that body urging the removal of the retail ‘cap’ (of 250,000 square feet) which had been applied to Quarryvale in the 1993 Development Plan and also lobbied the councillors on that basis.

3.14 On 13 August 1998 the then Manager of South Dublin County Council circulated a report to councillors, wherein he recommended the removal of the retail ‘cap’ on Quarryvale. Indeed, on the Draft Development Plan, as published by County Council officials on 9 February 1997, the Quarryvale lands were identified as zoned partly ‘DC’ (district centre) and partly ‘E’ (industrial) without reference to any retail cap.

3.15 On 1 September 1998 a motion in the names of Cllrs O’Connell and Muldoon was lodged with South Dublin County Council, which, in effect, opposed the Manager’s proposal to remove the retail ‘cap’, and sought the reinstatement of the 250,000 square feet retail ‘cap’ on Quarryvale, as had been provided for at paragraph 5.4.9 of the 1993 Written Statement.

3.16 The O’Connell/Muldoon motion was put to a vote at a Special Meeting of South Dublin County Council on 24 September 1998, a meeting chaired by Cllr Billane in his then capacity a Cathaoirleach of South Dublin County Council. At that Special Meeting the Deputy Manager (Mr Doherty) recommended that the retail ‘cap’ not be reinstated. The O’Connell/Muldoon motion was lost by a margin of 14 votes, with Cllr Billane being one of 18 councillors voting against the proposal to reinstate the retail ‘cap’ on Quarryvale.

3.17 In the course of his evidence Cllr Billane told the Tribunal that while he may have met Mr O’Callaghan in the period 1997 to 1998, Mr O’Callaghan at no time discussed with him the removal of the retail ‘cap’ on Quarryvale. The Tribunal believed it more likely however that in the probable event that they met during this period, the issue of the retail ‘cap’ would have been discussed, particularly in the light of the submissions Mr O’Callaghan was making formally and informally to officials of South Dublin County Council at that time, and in light of the fact that the 1997 Draft Plan for South Dublin County Council would inevitably have to come before the councillors for consideration.

3.18 The Tribunal noted that by 10 October 1997 Mr O’Callaghan had written to the Manager of South Dublin County Council and advised him that he had met with some 13 of the 26 members of the County Council and that all of the councillors whom Mr O’Callaghan had met had raised with him the issue as to whether the Manager was prepared to lift the retail ‘cap’ on Quarryvale. All the councillors approached supported the removal of the cap (including Cllr Billane), according to Mr O’Callaghan.

3.19 The Tribunal was satisfied that one of those councillors, whom Mr O’Callaghan had met by 10 October 1997 was Cllr Billane. The fact of their having met by that date was evidenced by a letter written by Mr O’Callaghan to Mr John Keogh on 10 June 1997. Mr Keogh was the co-ordinator of ‘Citywise’, a registered charity which provided services to City Centre youth.

3.20 Cllr Billane himself accepted that a meeting had taken place between himself, Mr Keogh and Mr O’Callaghan following which Mr O’Callaghan provided ‘Citywise’ with a charitable donation of IR£10,000. Cllr Billane told the Tribunal however that he had no recollection of the meeting and only ‘vaguely’ recalled his involvement in securing the IR£10,000 charitable donation from Mr O’Callaghan. Cllr Billane informed the Tribunal that he had a vague recollection of writing to Mr O’Callaghan seeking such a donation but agreed that it was more likely that he and Mr Keogh had met Mr O’Callaghan and raised with him the issue of a donation. Mr O’Callaghan told the Tribunal that he made the charitable donation at Cllr Billane’s behest.

3.21 While Mr O’Callaghan discovered a copy of his letter of 10 June 1997 to Mr Keogh to the Tribunal, no letter from Cllr Billane to Mr O’Callaghan was discovered.

3.22 The Tribunal believed Cllr Billane’s inability to recall the circumstances which led Mr O’Callaghan to make a IR£10,000 charitable donation to Citywise was not credible, particularly having regard to Cllr Billane’s acknowledgment that he had never previously succeeded in getting such a substantial sum of money for a charitable cause, from any other individual.

3.23 The Tribunal believed as a matter of probability, that Cllr Billane’s request to Mr O’Callaghan for a subscription to Citywise was made when Mr O’Callaghan made contact with him for the purposes of discussing the removal of the retail cap. To have made such a request, albeit for a charitable purpose, in such circumstances was inappropriate.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 7 - CLLR CATHAL BOLAND (FG)

4.01 Cllr Cathal Boland was co-opted to Dublin County Council to represent the Swords area in 1983. He was subsequently elected to the Council in 1985 and 1991. He transferred to the newly established Fingal County Council in 1994 and was re-elected to that council in 1999.

4.02 Cllr Boland told the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop provided him with a contribution of IR£4,000 in cash in the course of his election campaign in November 1992, in which he was a Fine Gael candidate. On Day 670 (Cherrywood Module/Chapter Three), Cllr Boland testified that within a couple of days following the calling of the General Election, he met Mr Dunlop in the County Council Chamber and Mr Dunlop enquired of him if he intended to stand as a candidate in that Election. Cllr Boland told Mr Dunlop that he was not going to be a candidate, to which Mr Dunlop had replied that if he was to be a candidate he would organise some funds for him. Subsequently Cllr Boland was selected as a candidate following which he was contacted by Mr Dunlop who asked to meet him. Cllr Boland and Mr Dunlop arranged to meet in the Fine Gael room of Dublin County Council. After some small talk about the Election, Mr Dunlop handed Cllr Boland a sealed envelope stating that it contained an Election contribution for him, and that it had come from some four or five individuals who, according to Mr Dunlop did not wish to be identified. Mr Dunlop had said that he was not one of the contributors. Until that point in time, given that Mr Dunlop had previously raised the issue of a contribution, Cllr Boland had assumed that it was going to be funded by Mr Dunlop.

4.03 Judging from the size of the envelope handed to him by Mr Dunlop, Cllr Boland knew that he was not receiving a cheque from Mr Dunlop. He testified that when he opened the envelope approximately two hours later, his was 'quite surprised' at the amount involved.

4.04 Cllr Boland told the Tribunal that he had been a candidate in the 1985 and 1991 Local Elections, and in the 1987 Seanad Election, but he had never in those campaigns received such a donation – the largest sum he had ever previously received was in the region of IR£500.

4.05 Cllr Boland accepted that, having regard to the entry in Mr Dunlop's diary for 11 November 1992, that date was most probably the occasion on which he had met with Mr Dunlop at Dublin County Council, and received the money.

4.06 In the course of his testimony on Day 670 Cllr Boland stated that he had no concerns about taking money from Mr Dunlop in November 1992 even though he knew him to be a lobbyist around Dublin County Council. Mr Dunlop was well known to him from the early 1980s from Mr Dunlop's time as Assistant Secretary in the Department of Education and particularly during the period when Mr Dunlop was press secretary to his brother Mr John Boland (deceased) who served as a Government minister in the late 1980s. Cllr Boland stated that he had always found Mr Dunlop to be upright and considered him a 'pillar of society.'

4.07 While he acknowledged that Mr Dunlop was a 'feature' in the lobbying of Dublin County Council during the course of the Development Plan Review, and was a lobbyist for a number of individuals, Cllr Boland maintained that Mr Dunlop never had detailed discussions with him about rezoning projects. Instead, Mr Dunlop's approaches to him on rezoning issues had been in the manner of 'see what he can do about that one.' According to Cllr Boland, Mr Dunlop's approaches to him 'couldn't be treated in any fashion as a serious attempt to lobby for something.' As a matter of probability the Tribunal believed that Cllr Boland was lobbied by Mr Dunlop.

4.08 In the course of his testimony on Day 653 (in the Cherrywood Module/Chapter Three), Mr Dunlop refuted Cllr Boland's contention of having been paid a IR£4,000 cash donation by him in November 1992. Mr Dunlop maintained that the only contribution he had made to Cllr Boland was in the region of IR£250 towards a political fundraiser. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal:

'I have said I have no recollection of ever giving 4,000 pounds to Mr Cathal Boland. Mr Cathal Boland is in the unique position that he is the only Councillor to my knowledge that has ever stated publicly that he got money from me in cash. I did give contributions to Cathal Boland, small contributions to Cathal Boland on a number of occasions. I have no recollection of meeting Cathal Boland, either on the day or for the purpose of giving him money.'

4.09 On Day 653 Mr Dunlop also stated:

'... I did not make that contribution to him. And secondly, the background is why would I make such a contribution to Cathal Boland? Cathal Boland never appeared on the radar screen, as far as I'm concerned, in relation to matters we are dealing with in this Tribunal. In fairness to him, he never asked for and I never gave him any money in relation to anything relating to the Development Plan in Dublin County Council.'

4.10 On Day 668 it was put to Mr Dunlop by Tribunal Counsel that Cllr Boland attributed an IR£3,300 lodgement to his bank account on 13 November 1992 as being part of the cash donation received from Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop replied as follows:

‘Well, simply. I don’t know. I don’t know. I’m not making any allegation to the contrary, other than to say that I have no recollection of giving Cathal Boland that substantial amount of money ever. And he never asked me for anything of that nature’.

4.11 In his later evidence in the Quarryvale Module Mr Dunlop remained adamant that he had not provided an IR£4,000 cash donation to Cllr Boland in November 1992.

4.12 In the course of his testimony on Day 846 Cllr Boland reiterated his claim that he received IR£4,000 in cash by way of an Election contribution on 11 November 1992.

4.13 In a number of voting scenarios (four out of five) prepared by Mr Dunlop, most probably in the run up to the 17 December 1992 Quarryvale vote, Mr Dunlop had listed Cllr Boland as a councillor likely to abstain on the Quarryvale vote. Mr Dunlop’s ‘worse scenario’ had listed Cllr Boland as voting against Quarryvale. Cllr Boland refuted any suggestion to the effect that his non-attendance at the Special Meeting of 17 December 1992 had been at the behest of Mr Dunlop. Cllr Boland said that he had no recollection of ever having spoken to Mr Dunlop about Quarryvale. It was his belief that he had never met Mr O’Callaghan. Mr Dunlop testified that he did not ask Cllr Boland to abstain from voting at that meeting.

4.14 Cllr Boland was not present for Quarryvale related votes on 17 December 1992. He explained to the Tribunal that his non-attendance stemmed from the fact that he had been offered IR£500 by a third party, to oppose Quarryvale at that meeting and while he rejected that offer, he nonetheless believed himself to have been compromised.

4.15 Prior to his sworn testimony on Day 846 (6 February 2008) Cllr Boland had furnished a statement to the Tribunal in which, inter alia, he advised that on 16 May 2000 he had written to the Tribunal to say that he took issue with certain elements of a report due to be submitted to the Tribunal on behalf of the Fine Gael Party who had conducted its own enquiry in May 2000 into the conduct of certain Fine Gael councillors, following allegations made by Mr Dunlop to the Tribunal in April/May 2000. In this correspondence Cllr Boland advised that in or around the time of the November 1992 General Election campaign he was informed by a third party that it was intended that Cllr Boland would be the recipient of a political contribution of IR£500 to assist him with his Election expenses. Later, that third party approached him and in the course of discussions had made a connection between the intended IR£500 political donation and a desire expressed by that third party that Cllr Boland might oppose the rezoning of Quarryvale. Cllr Boland told the Tribunal that as a result of these approaches he had felt ‘compromised’ and that he had no option but to abstain/ stay away from voting on Quarryvale in December 1992. Cllr Boland advised the Tribunal that he had not taken up the offer of the IR£500 political contribution proffered in 1992 because of the connection which had been made with it to Quarryvale. In his statement to the Tribunal of 16 May 2000 Cllr Boland said that he did not view the financial assistance offered by the third party in November 1992 as a bribe.

4.16 The Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop’s denial of having paid a sum of IR£4,000 cash to Cllr Boland on 11 November 1992. The Tribunal was satisfied that he did so on the date in question, in the vicinity of the Fine Gael room in Dublin County Council. The Tribunal did not only have Cllr Boland’s testimony in this regard but had also the benefit of Mr Dunlop’s own diary record for 11 November 1992 which stated ‘CB at DCC.’ The Tribunal was satisfied that that entry referred to one of a number of scheduled meetings which Mr Dunlop had diaried with councillors on the 10/11 November 1992, most of whom were candidates in the November 1992 General Election. In the course of his evidence on Day 358 Mr Dunlop testified that: ‘At one o’clock I met a Councillor at Dublin County Council who ran in the election and to whom I made a payment.’ The councillor listed in Mr Dunlop’s diary for that time was Cllr Boland. While the Tribunal noted that on Day 813 Mr Dunlop resiled from the evidence as given by him on Day 358, the Tribunal was nonetheless satisfied that Mr Dunlop’s testimony in the course of the Cherrywood and Quarryvale Modules to the effect that he did not give a IR£4,000 cash donation to Cllr Boland was at best mistaken and at worst an attempt on his part, for whatever reason, to distance himself from the fact that he paid such a generous donation to Cllr Boland.

4.17 Cllr Boland identified a lodgement of IR£3,300 made to his bank account on 13 November 1992 as referable to the funds given by Mr Dunlop. Having regard to the amount of the lodgement in question and the proximity in time to Cllr Boland’s meeting with Mr Dunlop, the Tribunal was satisfied to accept that the funds lodged on 13 November 1992 represented a portion of the monies given to him by Mr Dunlop.

4.18 It was a matter of record that Cllr Boland did not vote on the Quarryvale related Motions on 17 December 1992 and was not recorded as being present to vote on that day. The Tribunal accepted Cllr Boland's evidence that he absented himself because of his concern that he may have been compromised when he was offered an IR£500 contribution by a third party in circumstances where he was advised of a link between the offer of the money and the Quarryvale rezoning.

4.19 The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Boland had not absented himself from the Quarryvale vote because of a payment of money from Mr Dunlop and or any other third party.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 7 - CLLR PETER BRADY (FG)

5.01 Cllr Brady was a Lucan based Fine Gael councillor, first elected to Dublin County Council in June 1991.

5.02 Mr Dunlop's 17 June 1992 'Contact Report' indicated that by that time contact had been made by Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop with Cllr Brady, presumably to lobby him for his support for Quarryvale. In any event it appeared that, as of June 1992 Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop understood Cllr Brady's position to be one of opposition to a Town Centre zoning (with a permitted retail development of 500,000 sq ft.) for Quarryvale.

5.03 Given his position as a councillor representing an area in close proximity to the Quarryvale lands, Cllr Brady's opposition to Quarryvale was understandably a matter of concern to Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop's evidence, which was not disputed, was that it was Cllr Brady's Fine Gael colleague, Cllr Ridge, who recommended to Mr Dunlop that he speak to Mr Gerry Leahy, with a view to enlisting his assistance in lobbying Cllr Brady to support Quarryvale.

5.04 In 1992 Mr Leahy was employed by Gunnes Estate Agents at its Lucan office, having joined the firm as Managing Director of its Dublin West operation on 1 October 1989. Mr Leahy testified that in 1989 both he and Mr Fintan Gunne recognised the potential which the zoning of the Quarryvale lands would have in terms of property sales and lettings in the area. Mr Leahy was a known political supporter of the Fine Gael Party, and particularly, of Cllr Brady.

5.05 On 25 June 1992 a meeting took place between Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Dunlop and Mr Leahy at Mr Leahy's Lucan office. Mr Dunlop explained to the Tribunal the purpose of the meeting in the following terms:

'...the object of the exercise was to go to Mr Leahy on foot of a recommendation by Councillor Therese Ridge, who had said that Mr Leahy had a close relationship with Mr Peter Brady and he may well be of assistance to us in persuading Mr Brady, or affording Mr Brady the wider view of what he should or should not do in relation to the Quarryvale project. I drove Mr O'Callaghan to Mr Leahy's office, after the normal introductions, the three of us sat down and there was a long discussion about various industrial projects that both men were involved in or knew of, and updating one another as to a variety of issues relating to the property market. The issue about Peter Brady was raised, I cannot specifically say that it was raised by me or by Mr O'Callaghan. But certainly it was raised. And as I said to you yesterday, both Mr

O'Callaghan and I left that meeting in, from Mr Leahy, on the understanding that Mr Leahy and I hesitated to use the word 'guarantee'. Certainly it would be wrong to say that Mr Leahy guaranteed. But certainly Mr Leahy left Mr O'Callaghan and myself in little doubt that he would be able to influence Mr Peter Brady in the view that he took in relation to Quarryvale.'

5.06 The Tribunal was satisfied that a portion of a document entitled 'Note Of Meeting With O. O'Callaghan & F. Dunlop On 25th June 1992 – 6.00pm', contributed to by Mr Leahy in 1994 as a briefing note for Mr Fintan Gunne, in relation to legal proceedings then being contemplated by Mr Gunne against Mr O'Callaghan and O'Callaghan Properties Ltd¹ reflected reasonably accurately the nature of the discussion that took place on 25 June 1992 between the three men relating to the then status of political support for the Quarryvale rezoning proposal, including the position being adopted at that time by Cllr Brady.

5.07 The document recorded, inter alia, the following:

Following a general discussion of the previous local elections we discussed the number of councillors who might support the proposal. Owen said that they were absolutely confident of success as Fianna Fáil, Fine Gael, Progressive Democrats and most Independents were okay. I indicated that, that was not what I had heard and Frank more or less agreed that it was not all plain sailing. Owen said that G.V. Wright, B. Coffey and C. McGrath were in agreement and that Frank was organising the rest of Fianna Fáil. The Progressive Democrats were being co-ordinated by G. Tyndall who was handling the insurance. Frank admitted that the F.G.'s were all over the place. Tom Morrissey was very wound up and Owen and Frank were working hard on him. Frank and Owen had recently met Austin Curry. Frank knew him from his time in the North and while he had no vote he was important and had listened to them. Therese Ridge was very strong in support. Owen however, was very worried about Peter Brady especially following recent lobbying of him from the traders in Lucan.

It was agreed that Peter was crucial. I said that I could talk with Tommy and Peter and that I would do my best. Owen emphasised the importance of Peter Brady not voting against and that while his support would be invaluable his vote against would be a killer blow.

¹ Mr Gunne sued Mr O'Callaghan claiming that Mr O'Callaghan had breached an agreement to engage Mr Gunne's company in relation to the Liffey Valley (Quarryvale) development. The litigation did not proceed.

5.08 With the exception of the reference to ‘G. Tyndall’ ‘handling the insurance’, Mr Dunlop, in the course of his evidence, largely agreed that the matters documented in the above quoted extract constituted an accurate reflection of the discussion which had taken place in Mr Leahy’s office on 25 June 1992.

5.09 Mr Leahy told the Tribunal that he did not recollect Cllrs Wright, Coffey and McGrath having been specifically referred to in the course of the meeting. Mr Leahy also denied that there was a reference made that ‘Frank was organising the rest of Fianna Fáil.’ However, Mr Leahy expressed his view that Mr Dunlop so doing ‘wouldn’t have been an unreasonable assumption’ as ‘Frank was a Fianna Fáil man’ and thus it ‘wouldn’t be earth shattering news to anyone’ (that Mr Dunlop was organizing Fianna Fáil).

5.10 It appeared likely to the Tribunal in any event, that in the context of the discussions that were taking place on 25 June 1992 in relation to political support for Quarryvale, specific references were probably made to Cllrs McGrath, Wright and Coffey, and to Mr Dunlop: ‘organising the rest of Fianna Fáil’.

5.11 As to other individuals named in the document, Mr Leahy told the Tribunal that the document more or less reflected accurately what had been discussed, save that he did not recall any reference by Mr O’Callaghan to Mr Tyndall or specifically to Mr Tyndall: ‘handling the insurance.’ Nor did he recall Mr O’Callaghan referring to Cllr Brady’s voting against Quarryvale would be a ‘killer blow.’

5.12 The Tribunal was entirely satisfied that the context of Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop’s discussions with Mr Leahy on the date in question was the level of councillor support for Quarryvale, and, in particular, the concern on the part of Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop in relation to Cllr Brady’s support which, as documented by, apparently, Mr Gunne, was perceived as ‘crucial.’

5.13 It was common case that at the 25 June 1992 meeting, not only did the discussion between Messrs O’Callaghan, Dunlop and Leahy centre on the level of councillor support for Quarryvale, and on how Mr Leahy might assist in eliciting the support of Cllr Brady for Quarryvale, but it also concerned a discussion between the three men about the future involvement of Gunne Estate Agents as selling/letting agents for the Quarryvale development when completed.

5.14 In the course of their evidence in this module, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop denied that any arrangement/agreement had been concluded on 25 June 1992, whereby Gunne Estate Agents were appointed as either selling or letting agents for the Quarryvale development.

5.15 Both Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop testified that what was discussed at the meeting on that issue was that, once the Quarryvale development got off the ground, consideration would then be given by Mr O’Callaghan to involving Gunne Estate Agents with the ‘residential side’ of Quarryvale.

5.16 Mr Leahy, likewise, told the Tribunal that no firm commitment in that regard had been given to him by Mr O’Callaghan or Mr Dunlop on 25 June 1992.

5.17 In contrast with Mr Leahy’s stated position in his evidence to the Tribunal, he acknowledged to the Tribunal that the ‘note’ of the meeting to which he contributed in 1994 for Mr Gunne, as an aide memoire for contemplated legal proceedings, suggested that a firm commitment had been given by Mr O’Callaghan. The document recorded as follows:

I told Owen that Gunnes would be very keen to be appointed as selling agents and asked who would be the selling agents for the development when it went ahead. Owen recalled that he had known your father and knew you to talk to; in the past he had used Jones Lang Wooten or H.O.K. but that they had done nothing for him in this project and that if I could help him out there, there would be no problem. Frank said ‘you can take it, Gerry, that you will be doing the business.’

I responded ‘that’s ok Frank, but when I get a tip I like it to come from the owner and not the jockey.’

Owen interjected and said that Frank had his full authority and that what he said would be delivered. I then asked Owen directly what the position would be if the zoning went through. He said, ‘Gerry, if this goes through you will be the agents, you have my word on that.’

5.18 Mr Leahy described the discussion at the meeting as having been ‘glossed’ up by Mr Gunne in order to strengthen the legal proceedings then being contemplated against Mr O’Callaghan. Mr Leahy said that having regard to the content of this, and other documents (in 1994), he advised Mr Gunne that he was not prepared to swear to the account of the agreement reached between Mr Leahy and Mr O’Callaghan, as recorded in that document.

5.19 Mr Leahy agreed that in the months of October and November 1994 (at the time of the dispute between Gunnes and Mr O’Callaghan) numerous contacts were made by Mr Leahy with Mr Dunlop for the purposes of securing from Mr Dunlop the latter’s account of what had been discussed on 25 June 1992 in relation to Gunne’s future involvement as selling/letting agents for Quarryvale.

5.20 To this end, Mr Leahy and Mr Dunlop met on 13 October 1994, and followed up by telephone contact between Mr Leahy and Mr Dunlop’s office on 24, 25 and 26 October 1994, and on the 1, 2, 16, 17 and 21 November 1994, and, ultimately with another meeting between Mr Leahy and Mr Dunlop on 22 November 1994. At that meeting the following ‘without prejudice’ letter was provided to Mr Leahy by Mr Dunlop.

Dear Gerry,

You asked me to recollect the details of a conversation between Owen O’Callaghan, yourself and myself at your office in Lucan, Co. Dublin in or about 24th June, 1992. Specifically, you asked me to recollect the details of what you describe as a ‘firm undertaking’ by Owen O’Callaghan to appoint yourself, as a representative of Gunne Estate Agents, as agent for the proposed development at Quarryvale, Clondalkin, Dublin 22.

Firstly, a meeting between Owen O’Callaghan, yourself and myself did take place at your office in or about the date aforementioned.

Secondly, you undertook to liaise on Owen O’Callaghan’s behalf with a particular individual whose support was generally agreed to be crucial,.

Thirdly, to the best of my recollection a discussion took place specifically between Owen O’Callaghan and yourself regarding a quid pro quo which in essence left me with the impression that should the lands at Quarryvale be appropriately zoned, with the support of the individual concerned, that discussions would take place with Gunne Estate Agents, in the person of yourself, with a view to arriving at a decision regarding the letting agents for Quarryvale.

Fourthly, you have informed me that Owen O’Callaghan wrote to you shortly after our meeting confirming that he would keep his ‘end of the deal’. I have to say that until you apprised me of this letter I was not aware of its existence...

5.21 Mr Leahy agreed that the reference in Mr Dunlop’s letter to him, in June 1992, undertaking ‘to liaise on Owen O’Callaghan’s behalf with a particular individual whose support was generally agreed to be crucial’ was a reference to Mr Leahy having agreed to lobby Cllr Peter Brady.

5.22 Mr Leahy told the Tribunal that in October 1994 he had advised Mr Fintan Gunne that he was not prepared to stand over the contents of a draft letter which had been prepared in October 1994 by Gunne’s legal representative to be sent to Mr O’Callaghan by Mr Leahy. That draft letter, inter alia, contained the following:

On the 25th of June, 1992 I met with yourself and Frank Dunlop, when the Quarryvale Project was discussed in detail. In particular, all aspects surround the proposal to seek a Material Contravention Order in respect of the lands were discussed in considerable detail. During our meeting, it emerged that there were difficulties with a number of Councillors and at your behest I undertook to deal with those Councillors on the explicit understanding that Gunne & Company would be appointed Sole Agents in respect of the entire Project. The appointment of Gunne & Company as Sole Agents was confirmed by you in the presence of Frank Dunlop.

I am enclosing a copy of your letter to me of the 26th of June, 1992 and I quote: ‘IF WE ARE SUCCESSFUL, I WILL KEEP MY END OF THE DEAL.’

5.23 The Tribunal was satisfied that, insofar as Mr Leahy stated that he had told Mr Fintan Gunne that he was not prepared to stand behind the draft letter, Mr Leahy’s resistance applied especially to what was contained in the draft letter on the issue of whether or not Mr O’Callaghan had given a firm commitment to appoint Gunnes as sole property agents for Quarryvale.

5.24 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Leahy did not have any reason to resist the reference in the draft letter to Mr Leahy agreeing to deal with, or lobby, councillors as, as Mr Leahy himself admitted to the Tribunal, such a matter had been discussed in some substance on 25 June 1992.

5.25 In his testimony, Mr O’Callaghan acknowledged that following his meeting with Mr Leahy on 25 June 1992 he had written him a courtesy letter, in which he indicated that Gunnes would be considered for appointment as property agents in relation to Quarryvale.

5.26 Legal proceedings against Mr O’Callaghan and O’Callaghan Properties were commenced by Gunnes. The Statement of Claim delivered on 5 February 1996 in the course of those legal proceedings made reference to the ‘consideration’ being provided by Gunnes in return for their appointment by Mr O’Callaghan as sole selling agent for Quarryvale. There was no specific mention in the Statement of Claim to Mr Leahy, as agent of Gunnes, having undertaken to lobby councillors, including Cllr Brady, to support Quarryvale.

5.27 Irrespective of how the legal proceedings were formulated and irrespective of whether a binding agreement had in fact been concluded between Gunnes and Mr O'Callaghan on 25 June 1992 or indeed whether it was merely the case that in return for certain assistance to be provided by Mr Leahy, Mr O'Callaghan would give consideration to a future role for Gunnes in Quarryvale, the Tribunal was satisfied that at the core of Mr O'Callaghan's, Mr Dunlop's and Mr Leahy's meeting on 25 June 1992 was the issue of Cllr Brady's support for the Quarryvale project.

5.28 Having acknowledged that he had written a letter which Mr Leahy received on 26 June 1992, Mr O'Callaghan was asked on Day 911 to explain the 'deal' that had been agreed on the occasion of his meeting with Mr Leahy. Mr O'Callaghan stated:

'My end of the deal was that I would be prepared to discuss the actual residential sales in Quarryvale when and if we would have them, with Gerard Leahy and I think that probably must have meant Gunne Estates because Gerry Leahy was working for Gunne at the time. That was the conversation we had at the time. I told him that in fact to this day even if we build, or if and when we do build residential units in Liffey Valley, we'll speak to the same Gerry Leahy because he is probably the best agent in the locality, best local agent from a residential point of view. The conversation we had that particular day, of course I went to see him to ask would he help to get Peter Brady on side, that was part of our discussion, but I wouldn't say one was subject to the other by any means.'

5.29 The following exchange then took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr O'Callaghan:

'Q. ...you don't agree with the third paragraph of Mr Dunlop's letter, where he says that a discussion took place specifically between Owen O'Callaghan and Mr Leahy regarding a quid pro quo which in essence left me with the impression that should the lands at Quarryvale be appropriately zoned with the support of the individual concerned that discussions would take place about appointing Mr Leahy?

A. No, that is not correct.

Q. That is not correct. You don't agree with that as being an accurate statement of what happened at the time, is that correct?

A. No, that's not completely accurate.

Q. You do however agree, that at the meeting that took place at which you discussed the issue of appointing Mr Gunne or Gunne's or indeed Mr Leahy, to look after the residential aspect of it that that conversation took place in the context of securing Mr Brady's support for the Quarryvale rezoning, is that fair?

A. It was in that context yes, but not conditional by any means.'

5.30 Mr O'Callaghan response to the question 'what was Mr Leahy to get for you to ensure you would step in and keep your end of the deal?' was as follows:

'My end of the deal was that I expected him to go and speak to Peter Brady if he could, I wasn't quite sure, nobody was sure what way Peter Brady would vote, Peter Brady was Lucan based. But my end of the deal with Gerry Leahy, I had been working with Gerry Leahy before this, Gerry Leahy had been assisting me in relocating some of the travellers from Quarryvale.'

5.31 Mr O'Callaghan also maintained:

'I told Mr Leahy that we would certainly consider using Gunne's office and in particular himself in the sales or letting of the residential element of Quarryvale' and in return Mr Leahy 'was to speak to Peter Brady.'

5.32 As a matter of probability, the Tribunal was satisfied that insofar as Mr O'Callaghan gave a commitment to Mr Leahy that, either Gunnes were to be appointed his letting agents for Quarryvale or, that Mr O'Callaghan was to consider giving Gunnes some such role, such commitment was given entirely on the basis that Mr Leahy would proceed to lobby the support of Cllr Brady for the Quarryvale rezoning.

5.33 There was however no suggestion made to the Tribunal that Cllr Brady was either offered or sought financial inducement (or any other inducement), directly or otherwise, for his support for the Quarryvale rezoning vote of 17 December 1992.

CLLR BRADY'S INVOLVEMENT IN THE ZONING OF QUARRYVALE

5.34 Cllr Brady gave evidence that he attended public meetings concerning the Quarryvale issue and that he met Mr O'Callaghan at one such meeting in the Spa Hotel in Lucan, and at which Mr Leahy was also in attendance. Cllr Brady's recollection was that he had a ten minute discussion with Mr O'Callaghan at that time – a time when Cllr Brady was still opposed to the size of the proposed development in Quarryvale. Cllr Brady also gave evidence of meeting Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop in and around the offices of Dublin County Council. It was likely that from the Spa Hotel meeting, and possibly other meetings with Cllr Brady, that Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop became aware of his opposition to Quarryvale – opposition which prompted them to seek the intervention of Mr Leahy in June 1992.

5.35 Cllr Brady acknowledged that Mr Leahy lobbied him in support of the Quarryvale development. He also agreed that in his first communication to the Tribunal in February 2000, in response to queries posed in relation to Quarryvale, he did not avert to this fact. In a September 2004 communication with the Tribunal, after the Tribunal had written to him requesting him to outline any dealings he may have had regarding Quarryvale with a number of individuals, including Mr Leahy, Cllr Brady confirmed that he had been lobbied by Mr Leahy. In his written communications with the Tribunal, Cllr Brady did not disclose that Mr Leahy was a political supporter of his, and of Fine Gael, in 1992.

5.36 Cllr Brady told the Tribunal that he was not aware that a meeting took place between Mr Leahy, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop on 25 June 1992, and he said that he had no knowledge of what might have been discussed at that meeting regarding his support (or otherwise), for Quarryvale. Cllr Brady stated:

‘Every one’s vote was crucial. With a number of councillors not supporting any development probably 30 percent of them. Every vote that was there had to be canvassed and tried to ensure that they would vote for the, that’s what they wanted to get it through. I didn’t play any major role. And I had no knowledge of what anyone was planning for my part in the vote. I had no, outside, Gerry would have canvassed me and the others would have canvassed but I made up my own mind. I was in no one’s pocket and would not be led.’

5.37 Mr Dunlop’s diary for 24 September 1992 noted a meeting with Cllr Brady at Wynn’s Hotel, Dublin. In the course of his evidence Cllr Brady stated that he did not believe that he had met Mr Dunlop prior to December 1992, but later acknowledged that he would not contradict the note of such a meeting written in Mr Dunlop’s diary.

5.38 The Tribunal was satisfied that this meeting took place, and that it did so in the aftermath of Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop speaking to Mr Leahy, and in all probability following an approach made by Mr Leahy to Cllr Brady. Cllr Brady acknowledged having been lobbied by Mr Leahy regarding Quarryvale.

5.39 Documentation prepared by Mr Dunlop in the lead in period to the December 1992 vote (i.e. Mr Dunlop’s voting ‘scenarios’), listed Cllr Brady as voting in support of Quarryvale in two such ‘scenarios’, while in a third ‘scenario’ entitled ‘Likely Outcome’ Cllr Brady’s name had moved from a position of from voting ‘for’ to the ‘abstain/missing’ column. In yet another document created in manuscript by Mr Dunlop, Cllr Brady’s name, while appearing under the ‘support definite’ column had a question mark and an asterix attached, an indicator, in respect of which Mr Dunlop, in evidence acknowledged meant that Cllr Brady was ‘to be contacted.’

5.40 Mr Dunlop's diary indicated that he and Cllr Brady met again on 9 December 1992, (the day on which Mr Dunlop also met with three of the four signatories to the 9 December 1992 motion). Cllr Brady told the Tribunal that he had no recollection of speaking with Mr Dunlop on 9 December 1992, but agreed that Mr Dunlop's diary entry suggested that he had done so, and that any such meeting would have been about 'Quarryvale II or some other development.' He agreed that his voting pattern on 17 December 1992 was largely supportive of Quarryvale. He voted against a proposal to reverse the Quarryvale zoning back to 'E' (industrial) and against a proposal to zone Quarryvale 'C1' with a 100,000 square foot retail cap. He voted in favour of the proposal to restore the Town Centre status of the Neilstown lands and in favour of the amendment put forward by Cllrs McGrath, Devitt, O'Halloran and Tyndall, in order to amend the original 9 December 1992 motion, to limit retail development on Quarryvale to 250,000 square feet.

5.41 Cllr Brady told the Tribunal that from the outset, his objection to the Quarryvale zoning was the proposed scale of the development, and that once it was proposed to reduce the scale of retail development on the site he was happy to support the zoning proposed on 17 December 1992. In doing so, Cllr Brady explained that he had taken into account the need for development in the Quarryvale area, having regard to the high unemployment levels that then existed in that area.

5.42 Cllr Brady vehemently denied Mr Dunlop's claim that on 17 December 1992, immediately prior to his voting on the Quarryvale issue Cllr Ridge had said to Cllr Brady (urging him to vote in support of Quarryvale), 'for Peter for.' He also rejected Mr Dunlop's claim that Mr Dunlop and Cllr Ridge could have 'orchestrated' that Cllr Ridge sit beside Cllr Brady in the Council chamber on the day of the vote, and stated that there was no way any Council official would have let that happen.

5.43 Having voted for the rezoning of Quarryvale on 17 December 1992, on the basis of a reduced retail capacity, Cllr Brady acknowledged that in June 1993, he went on to support a proposal to revise the Draft Written Statement which had the consequence of making the 250,000 square feet retail 'cap' on Quarryvale, (imposed some six months previously), less restrictive.

5.44 Cllr Brady met Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Dunlop and Mr Leahy on 8 September 1993 in Wynn's Hotel, Dublin, a meeting which was noted in Mr Dunlop's diary. Cllr Brady initially testified that it was his belief that he had simply been brought along to that meeting by Mr Leahy to make up the numbers and that he recalled Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Leahy having a discussion on that occasion out of earshot of himself and Mr Dunlop. Later in his testimony however, following sight of notes prepared by Mr Leahy in 1994, Cllr Brady acknowledged that he had had discussions with Mr O’Callaghan on that occasion regarding the possible provision of lands by Mr O’Callaghan to Palmerstown Football Club.²

5.45 Cllr Brady denied that there had been any discussion on 8 September 1993 in relation to his support for Quarryvale, as he maintained that by that time he was known to be a supporter.

5.46 The Tribunal was satisfied however that some discussion did take place in relation to Quarryvale on that occasion and that it probably took place in the teeth of the then forthcoming Quarryvale confirmation Special Meeting due to be scheduled in October 1993, an occasion which, in all probability, Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop anticipated would be used by opponents of Quarryvale to seek to reverse the zoning achieved on 17 December 1992.³

5.47 It was also probable that Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop received from Cllr Brady his permission to include, in a publication then being launched by Mr Dunlop, the ‘Quarryvale Town Centre News,’ a quotation from him in support of Quarryvale. Cllr Brady was one of seven councillors quoted in the publication.⁴

5.48 An analysis of the minutes of the Special Meeting of 19 October 1993 indicated that it was Cllr Brady who proposed (seconded by Cllr Colm McGrath) the adoption of the Manager’s Report which recommended that Quarryvale be zoned ‘C’ and ‘E’. Cllr Brady told the Tribunal that he had done so at the behest of Mr O’Callaghan. The Tribunal believed it likely that Mr O’Callaghan made this request at the meeting of 8 September, 1993.

5.49 Cllr Brady reiterated to the Tribunal that he had never personally received or sought money from Mr O’Callaghan or Mr Dunlop. He acknowledged seeking charitable sponsorship from Mr Dunlop in the sum of IR£250 in 1995 for the Lucan St. Patrick’s Day Parade (money which Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd duly recouped from Riga Ltd),⁵ and he acknowledged that Mr O’Callaghan had made a IR£100 donation to his local Fine Gael organisation in 1996.

² The Club did not get these lands, as Cllr Brady explained it made other arrangements subsequently.

³ Such motions to reverse this zoning were duly lodged before the Council in October 1993 but did not proceed.

⁴ Not all comments were in favour of Quarryvale. Cllr Guss O’Connell, an opponent of Quarryvale was quoted also.

MR ALAN DUKES, NEWSPAPER ARTICLES IN 1995, AND HIS DISCUSSION WITH CLLR BRADY

5.50 Mr Alan Dukes was a Fine Gael TD between 1981 and 2002, and a Government Minister between 1981 and 1987. He was the Leader of the Fine Gael Party between 1987 and 1990.

5.51 In 1995 two newspaper articles carried reports of concerns on the part of Mr Dukes relating to corruption in the planning process. On 13 August 1995, in an article entitled 'Bribes paid says Dukes in plan row,' the Sunday Independent Newspaper reported, inter alia as follows:

The former Fine Gael leader, Mr. Alan Dukes, has acknowledged that builders and developers have been forced to pay bribes to public officials to get planning permissions.... Mr. Dukes told the Sunday Independent last night he had 'specific knowledge' of cases involved 'four figure sums'. These involved cash being paid to secure the provision of water, sewage or similar services to a development.

5.52 The article in question quoted Mr Dukes as stating 'people were told that if you want to get something done, this is the way to go about it' and it reported Mr Dukes as saying that there was a 'kind of systematic operation' in place.

5.53 On 14 August 1995 the Irish Times newspaper, in an article entitled 'Dukes calls for planning safeguards to eliminate bribery', reported as follows:

Mr. Alan Dukes, the former leader of Fine Gael, has called for 'reasonable safeguards' in the planning process to stop people taking bribes. Legislation providing immunity to prosecution for witnesses would not of itself be sufficient he said.

Complaints had been made to him about abuses within the system by people who were not prepared to go to the Garda, Mr. Dukes continued. Even if they had, convictions might not have been secured because it would have been one person's word against another's.

He instanced the following cases:

- 1. Strict planning conditions were attached to a development and the developer was advised by an official to go to a certain place and to pay X amount of money and he would get results. He did and the conditions were varied.*
- 2. There was an involuntary hand-out by a developer to a county councillor operating in conjunction with a senior local authority official.*

3. In two instances substantial but unspecified offers of money were made to politicians by a developer in relation to a rezoning application. The offers were not accepted, but Mr. Duke's informant believed that other politicians had taken the money.

The complaints were made to him about three years ago, Mr. Duke's said. He had also heard rumours about planning decisions in other parts of the country, but they were generally linked to large centres of population...

5.54 Mr Dukes gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal on Day 737. In the course of that evidence he acknowledged that, in general, the newspaper articles in question accurately reflected concerns he expressed in August 1995 about matters which had been brought to his attention by Fine Gael councillors over a period of time, up to 13 August 1995. While the Sunday Independent article had reported that Mr Dukes' concerns in 1995 related to money being demanded by Council officials, Mr Dukes told the Tribunal that the Irish Times article of 14 August 1995 more accurately reflected the nature of his concerns of the time, namely that it had been reported to him, largely by Fine Gael councillors, that allegations of corruption in the planning process involved both Council officials and elected representatives.

5.55 Asked to repeat examples of possible instances of corruption about which he had instanced to the Irish Times journalist, as reported on 14 August 1995, Mr Dukes advised that on one specific occasion a developer had come to him with a complaint that he had been obliged to pay over money to secure services for a development that he was then undertaking. Mr Dukes confirmed what he had previously, in a private interview with the Tribunal on 30 March 1998, told the Tribunal of this event. Based on a note taken by Tribunal Counsel on that occasion, Mr Dukes:

...said that his recollection was that the development concerned related to an apartment block in Chapelizod. It was an apartment block consisting of ten or twelve apartments. He was informed by an Official as to what the contributions would be in respect of each Department for servicing the lands. He thought the figure mentioned was high and was told by the official concerned that if he put £10,000 into an envelope and left it with a firm of solicitors in Drumcondra – the name of which firm Mr.Dukes could not recall – that the amount of contributions would be reduced.

Mr. Dukes said that the amounts of contribution was subsequently reduced resulting in a saving of about £2,000 per apartment to the developer.

Deputy Dukes said that he believed all this happened in or about the period 1988 or 1989. He promised to look through his records to see if he could locate the name of the developer...

5.56 Questioned about the report in the Irish Times newspaper that there had been ‘an involuntary hand-out by a developer to a county councillor operating in conjunction with a senior local authority official’ Mr Dukes believed that this issue, insofar as he had been informed of it, was linked to a Chapelizod development, although Mr Dukes was unable to identify the individuals concerned.

5.57 In relation to a third instance of a demand for money, the Irish Times article stated as follows:

In two instances substantial but unspecified offers of money were made to politicians by a developer in relation to a rezoning application. The offers were not accepted but Mr. Duke’s informant believed that other politicians had taken the money.

5.58 Mr Dukes confirmed that the newspaper article accurately recorded what he had told the Irish Times journalist in August 1995. He told the Tribunal that his informant was a councillor, and not a developer, although he was not in a position to identify the councillor, other than that he assumed it had been a councillor from the Fine Gael Party.

5.59 Mr Dukes confirmed to the Tribunal that the councillor who had provided him with the information about offers of money being made in relation to a rezoning application had done so approximately three years prior to the publication of the Irish Times article. Mr Dukes agreed therefore that insofar as he had been apprised by (he assumed), a Fine Gael councillor of two instances where offers of money were made to politicians by a developer in relation to a zoning application, same had occurred during the currency of the review of the 1983 Development Plan.

5.60 Mr Dukes acknowledged that between 1992 and 1995 he did not take any steps arising from what he had been told by this councillor. It was his belief that he did not have any basis on which to take any step, as all he had was information of the nature referred to in media articles.

INFORMATION PROVIDED BY MR DUKES TO THE TRIBUNAL IN THE COURSE
OF PRIVATE INTERVIEW ON 30 MARCH 1998

5.61 Tribunal Counsel's note of the interview with Mr Dukes on 30 March 1998 recorded, inter alia, the following:

He informed us that the only other specific allegation he was aware of was an allegation made to Mr. Dukes by Peter Brady, a [Fine] Gael County Councillor from the Lucan area who alleged that Brian Fleming⁶, who was also a [Fine] Gael Councillor in the Lucan area, had been offered £100,000 if he (Fleming) could 'deliver' the [Fine] Gael vote to secure the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands.

Mr. Dukes said he did not know the person by whom the offer had been made and asked that he should not be identified as the source of this information.

5.62 Mr Dukes confirmed that Counsel's note was an accurate record of what he had told the Tribunal on 30 March 1998.

5.63 Asked to outline the circumstances in which Cllr Brady had relayed the aforementioned information to him, Mr Dukes replied:

'I can't recall at this stage the exact occasion on which Mr. Brady said this to me. I have been trying to recollect – that is a conversation that we had in 1998. I have been trying to recollect on which occasions I was in contact with Mr. Brady.

Now, I knew Peter Brady quite well. And I had canvassed and had been involved in other constituency activity with him at various times from 1982 on. I can't remember on which occasion he said this to me. It was clearly sometime between 1995 and 1998. And so I would – I would guess and it's only a guess, that it could have happened during the course of an election campaign, when Peter and I would have spent time together canvassing. Because from time to time during elections I canvassed outside my own constituency. But I can't be more specific about it than that.'

5.64 Mr Dukes acknowledged that Cllr Brady had made a serious allegation to him, namely that he had been told that another Fine Gael councillor (Cllr Fleming) had been offered IR£100,000 if he could 'deliver' the Quarryvale vote.

⁶ Cllr Fleming was a Fine Gael Councillor until June 1991.

5.65 Mr Dukes told the Tribunal that notwithstanding what he had learned from Cllr Brady, he had not contacted Cllr Fleming. Mr Dukes said that he 'didn't believe for a moment that Brian Fleming would have done anything of the kind.'

5.66 Mr Dukes also acknowledged that insofar as Cllr Brady had relayed what he had to Mr Dukes, Cllr Brady had not stated or suggested to him that Mr Fleming had taken the money, and he acknowledged that therefore, there could have been no difficulty or problem from Cllr Fleming's point of view if someone had offered him money and he had refused the offer.

5.67 On Day 737, it was suggested to Mr Dukes by Tribunal Counsel that:
'they are circumstances are they not, Mr. Dukes, in which if you had gone to Mr. Fleming and he had confirmed the story, one could have gone to the Gardai with that information, isn't that right.'

5.68 To which, Mr Dukes replied:
'No. I mean, it seems to me at the time that this was yet another one of a welter of rumours, many of which were absolutely without foundation, that were flying around at the time. As I say, I didn't believe for a moment that that was the kind of thing that Brian Fleming would have done or would even have dreamed of doing. And the only reason it came to mind was that the Tribunal team asked me if there was anything else I could recollect.'

THE RESPONSE OF CLLR BRADY AND CLLR FLEMING TO MR DUKES' DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION TO THE TRIBUNAL

5.69 On 4 April 2007 the Tribunal wrote to Cllr Brady's Solicitors, inter alia, as follows:

The Tribunal understands that your client may be in receipt of information regarding former Councillor Brian Fleming having been offered the sum of £100,000 if Mr. Fleming could arrange the Fine Gael vote to ensure the successful rezoning of the Quarryvale lands.

5.70 On 18 April, 2007 Cllr Brady's solicitors responded as follows:

I have spoken to my client as regards the allegation put to him in your letter regarding former councillor Fleming in which you ask that our client would comment as to the veracity or otherwise of such claim.

Mr. Brady has asked us to convey his shock at such an allegation. He has no information whatsoever in that regard and cannot add any information or recollection whatsoever to substantiate same. In fact, our client had nothing but the highest of regard for councillor Fleming and is aware of no information whatsoever to corroborate the allegation which you have asked that our client would give a view.

Consequently, our client has asked that we would write to you on his behalf which we trust is in order and that a statement from him in the circumstances would not be required.

5.71 In his evidence Cllr Brady stated, 'I can say clearly that I did not discuss with Alan Dukes anything about Brian Fleming and I certainly can't be responsible for a statement that Alan Dukes makes.'

5.72 As he had stated in his correspondence with the Tribunal, Cllr Brady strongly refuted that he had recited to Mr Dukes what Mr Dukes was quoted as having told the Tribunal in March 1998, and what Mr Dukes confirmed, in the course of his testimony, as having been said to him by Cllr Brady.

5.73 Cllr Brady acknowledged that Mr Dukes was an individual held in high regard by himself and by others. He also acknowledged that Mr Dukes was not a fanciful man or a 'Walter Mitty' type character. However he could not speculate as to why Mr Dukes had said what he said, save that he surmised that it was a case of mistaken identity on the part of Mr Dukes.

5.74 Cllr Fleming gave evidence on Day 815. In respect of the issue to which Mr Dukes testified, the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Cllr Fleming:

'Q. Now first of all can I ask you insofar as you are concerned, Mr. Fleming, did you ever tell Mr. Brady or indeed anybody else of any such approach to you?

A. I told nobody of any such approach because there was no such approach. I didn't meet Peter Brady between 1989 and this date except on the street one day and I asked him how he was. I had no discussion with him whatsoever about Quarryvale or anything else.

Q. So if Mr Brady told Mr Dukes of this conversation he is mistaken in having the conversation with you?

A. Oh, he's telling lies, yeah.

Q. So in other words is it possible, what I am suggesting to you, if you are correct Mr. Fleming and you had no such conversation with Mr. Brady, is it possible that Mr. Brady might have mixed you up with somebody else?

A. I suppose it is. I don't know where he got this story but it certainly didn't involve me.

Q. Yes, I would suggest to you that Mr. Dukes is unlikely to have fabricated a story, isn't that right?

A. Well one of them fabricated it. So your guess is as good as mine after that.

Q. Mr. Brady has told the Tribunal that he never made any such allegation to Mr. Dukes and he never recounted any such allegation to Mr. Dukes. That's Mr. Brady's position and he has so told the Tribunal?

A. Okay.'

5.75 Thus, as far as Cllr Brady was concerned, there had been no discussion with Mr Dukes of the type described by Mr Dukes, and the position of Cllr Fleming was that he had had no conversation with Cllr Brady as such would have prompted Cllr Brady to convey to Mr Dukes any such information. In particular, it was Cllr Fleming's position that no offer of IR£100,000 to deliver the Fine Gael vote on Quarryvale had ever been made to him.

5.76 Cllr Fleming was a Fine Gael councillor up to June 1991, when he retired from politics. Although present in the Council chamber on 16 May 1991, he was not recorded as having cast his vote in relation to the issue of Quarryvale on that occasion. He testified that up to the time he retired from politics he had little involvement with the Quarryvale rezoning issue save that he recalled a telephone call in 1988 or 1989 from someone who introduced themselves as 'Tom Gilmartin' and who had requested a meeting to discuss the issue of Quarryvale. Mr Gilmartin however had never followed up on his telephone call. Cllr Fleming also testified that he received a telephone call from a Fine Gael TD in late 1990 or early 1991 who recommended Mr O'Callaghan as a developer. Cllr Fleming understood that this call was made to him in the context of Mr O'Callaghan's involvement in Quarryvale. This TD however did not canvass him to support Quarryvale, Cllr Fleming told the Tribunal that in the course of this telephone conversation he advised the TD of his decision to retire from politics, and would not therefore be concerned in the future with the rezoning of Quarryvale. Cllr Fleming reiterated to the Tribunal that insofar as he had discussions about Quarryvale, such discussions had been with Mr Gilmartin and the Fine Gael TD and that he had had no discussions with Cllr Brady or with Mr Dukes on the subject.

5.77 Cllr Fleming stated:

‘Nobody offered me anything, good, bad or indifferent money, benefit in kind, anything, bottle of whiskey, nothing in relation to Quarryvale.’

5.78 Cllr Fleming also stated that he had never been approached by Mr Dukes in relation to any issue concerning Quarryvale.

5.79 On the issue of conflict as between Mr Dukes and Cllr Brady, the Tribunal preferred Mr Dukes’ evidence to that of Cllr Brady and was thus satisfied that Cllr Brady did relay to Mr Dukes, sometime between 1995 and 1998, that Cllr Fleming had been offered IR£100,000 to deliver the Fine Gael vote in support of Quarryvale.

5.80 The evidence given by Mr Dukes did not suggest, as a matter of probability or otherwise, that Cllr Brady was relaying something which itself had been relayed to Cllr Brady by Cllr Fleming. In any event, Cllr Fleming denied ever having been approached with such an offer and denied that he ever had a conversation with Cllr Brady about the subject matter described by Mr Dukes. Thus the Tribunal was left with evidence that on a date between 1995 and 1998, Cllr Brady relayed certain information to Mr Dukes, howsoever that information came into Cllr Brady’s possession.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 7 - CLLR LIAM T. COSGRAVE (FG)

6.01 Cllr Liam Cosgrave was first elected to Dublin County Council in the Local Elections in 1985. On 1 January 1994, he became a member of Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Council. Cllr Cosgrave was first elected to the Dáil in June 1981 and lost his seat in 1987 and ran again unsuccessfully in a number of subsequent Dáil elections. In 1993 Cllr Cosgrave was first elected to the Seanad. He also held a number of positions in the Seanad and was Cathaoirleach from November 1996 until he resigned in November 1997.

MR DUNLOP'S ALLEGATION THAT HE PAID IR£2,000 TO CLLR COSGRAVE

6.02 In his October 2000 statement Mr Dunlop stated as follows:

I gave Mr. Liam Cosgrave £2,000 in cash at the time of the 1991 local elections. I made this payment to Mr. Cosgrave specifically in respect of his support for Quarryvale...

6.03 In his December 2003 statement Mr Dunlop advised the Tribunal that:

The payment of £2,000 in cash to Mr. Cosgrave was made in the Royal Dublin Hotel shortly after the vote of Dublin County Council on 16th May 1991. There is no entry for a meeting with Cllr Cosgrave in my 1991 diary within the timeframe of the vote on the 16th May (may) and Polling Day, 27th June. However, I met him at that location by arrangement and paid him the sum stated...

6.04 In his evidence, Mr Dunlop claimed that he lobbied Cllr Cosgrave to support Quarryvale prior to, and subsequent to, the vote of 16 May 1991. Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop met Cllr Cosgrave prior to that vote. Mr Dunlop said that in a discussion with Cllr Cosgrave subsequent to the vote. Cllr Cosgrave confirmed to him his support for the Quarryvale project, and raised the issue of funding for the then forthcoming Local Election campaign. Mr Dunlop agreed to give him IR£2,000 which he duly paid over to Cllr Cosgrave. Mr Dunlop stated that his recollection of the payment to Cllr Cosgrave as having been made in the Royal Dublin Hotel and was 'referable to the arrangement to meet him during the course of a council meeting or after a council meeting.' Mr Dunlop acknowledged that until his December 2003 statement there was no reference by him to the location at which he made the payment to Cllr Cosgrave. Mr Dunlop blamed this omission on the 'ongoing business basis on which the Tribunal has operated and the constant request for further updated more detailed statements.'

6.05 Cllr Cosgrave, while he accepted that it was possible that Mr Dunlop and/or Mr O’Callaghan had spoken to him about the Quarryvale rezoning project, stated that he had no particular recollection of any such discussion with either of them in the period in question.¹ Cllr Cosgrave did accept that by June 1992, he had ‘in all probability’ met Mr O’Callaghan. He said that he had known Mr Dunlop since the late 1970s.

6.06 Cllr Cosgrave conceded that Mr Dunlop was known to him in May/June 1991 as a lobbyist who was promoting a number of rezoning projects before Dublin County Council, and that Mr Dunlop had sought his support in relation to such matters.

6.07 Cllr Cosgrave denied that, as alleged by Mr Dunlop, he had spoken to Mr Dunlop in the run up to the Local Elections seeking financial support, and at the same time expressed to Mr Dunlop his support for the Quarryvale rezoning project. Cllr Cosgrave, while confirming his receipt of ‘legitimate’ political donations from Mr Dunlop on occasions denied seeking or receiving a IR£2,000 cash donation from Mr Dunlop in May/June 1991.

6.08 The records of Dublin County Council indicate that Cllr Cosgrave was in attendance at the County Council at some point on the 16 May 1991, but he was not recorded as having voted in relation to either of the Quarryvale related motions on that date, or indeed, in relation to any other matter on that day’s agenda.

6.09 Questioned as to why he paid IR£2,000 to Cllr Cosgrave to support Quarryvale in circumstances where Cllr Cosgrave did not participate in the Quarryvale vote on 16 May 1991, Mr Dunlop maintained that it was paid in relation to Cllr Cosgrave’s ‘commitment’ to support Quarryvale. Mr Dunlop said he had no recollection of raising the issue of Cllr Cosgrave’s failure to vote on 16 May 1991 with Cllr Cosgrave subsequently.

6.10 In compiling his October 2000 and December 2003 Quarryvale statements Mr Dunlop did not avert to Cllr Cosgrave’s failure to vote on 16 May 1991. Mr Dunlop said that he had no recollection of reviewing the voting records of councillors prior to providing his statements to the Tribunal.

¹Mr O’Callaghan testified that he had met with Cllr Cosgrave by 16 May 1991.

6.11 In the course of his evidence on Day 771, Mr Dunlop stated:
‘Well I have many meetings with Mr. Cosgrave in relation to Quarryvale, of which he was a very enthusiastic supporter from day 1. He had spoken to me at the time prior to the May 16th vote, I spoke to him subsequent to the May 16th vote. During the course of the conversation with him in relation to the local elections the question of money arose and in the context of the support that he stated he was giving to Quarryvale I agreed to pay him money towards his election campaign, and that was 2,000 pounds.’

6.12 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that Cllr Cosgrave’s name was not included by him in his ‘1991 local election contributions’ list prepared for the Tribunal on Day 147 but described this omission as an ‘oversight’ on his part.

6.13 Mr Dunlop’s diaries did not record any meetings with Cllr Cosgrave until 31 March 1992. Cllr Cosgrave expressed his suspicion that Mr Dunlop (or others) may have ‘doctored or interfered with’ Mr Dunlop’s diaries.

THE NOVEMBER 1992 PAYMENT OF IR£5,000

6.14 In addition to his claim to have given IR£2,000 cash to Cllr Cosgrave in the course of the 1991 Local Election campaign, Mr Dunlop also alleged that he paid IR£5,000 in cash to Cllr Cosgrave on 11 November 1992 during the November General Election campaign in which Cllr Cosgrave was a candidate. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he had IR£55,000 cash available to him at that time which had been withdrawn from IR£70,000 transferred into his bank account by Mr O’Callaghan on 10 November 1992.² Mr Dunlop testified (as set out below) as to the specific circumstances in which he came to provide IR£5,000 cash to Cllr Cosgrave.

6.15 Cllr Cosgrave denied receiving IR£5,000 from Mr Dunlop in November 1992 in the circumstances claimed by Mr Dunlop, but acknowledged that he received IR£2,000 in cash from Mr Dunlop in Buswells Hotel as a political donation around that time. Cllr Cosgrave said that he did not solicit the payment, and that it was not made in connection with any rezoning issue.

6.16 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal of a discussion he had with Cllr Cosgrave during which Cllr Cosgrave had requested that Mr Dunlop convey to Mr O’Callaghan Cllr Cosgrave’s support for Quarryvale. Mr Dunlop stated:

² By 10 November 1992 Mr Dunlop had accumulated cash of IR£73,500.

'...Quarryvale – the Quarryvale issue was raised because of the context in relation to an impending vote. Mr. Cosgrave's concerns obviously were a little more immediate, they were in relation to the General Election. And Mr. Cosgrave, as I previously outlined, repeated his support in relation to Quarryvale and asked me to tell Owen O'Callaghan that that was the case.'

6.17 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal (in another module), Mr Dunlop stated the following:

'Yes. I had a discussion with Cllr Cosgrave in early November of 1992 in the context of the announcement of an election and Senator Cosgrave sought financial help... After a discussion I agreed that I would give him £5,000. The discussion did not relate solely to the election. And he undertook to continue to support another development which we discussed and named and asked me to tell the promoter of that particular development that he was supportive and would be on side.'

6.18 Mr Dunlop identified the other development as Quarryvale, and its promoter as Mr Owen O'Callaghan.

6.19 Mr Dunlop claimed that at the time he handed over the sum of IR£5,000 to Cllr Cosgrave on 11 November 1992, Cllr Cosgrave specifically referred to Quarryvale (the second vote on the Quarryvale rezoning was scheduled to be held in December 1992), and that Cllr Cosgrave had asked him to advise Mr O'Callaghan that he, Cllr Cosgrave, was being supportive. Mr Dunlop thus linked the payment to Cllr Cosgrave to the latter's support for the Quarryvale rezoning.

6.20 Mr Dunlop dealt with the November 1992 payment to Cllr Cosgrave in his October 2000 statement as follows:

I gave Mr. Cosgrave £5,000 in cash in a large envelope at the time of the 1992 General Election. The payment was made on the street outside a church on Newtownpark Avenue prior to a funeral. He had asked for support and said he would be facing a tough campaign because of the difficulties internally in Fine Gael in Dun Laoghaire.

6.21 In the course of his December 2003 statement Mr Dunlop said:

'The payment of £5,000 in cash to Liam Cosgrave at the time of the General Election in 1992 was made on Wednesday 11th November, 1992 at Newtownpark Avenue, Blackrock, Co. Dublin.'

6.22 In another module, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he and Cllr Cosgrave agreed to meet at Newtownpark Avenue in Blackrock ‘on the sidewalk’, prior to a funeral. The location was suggested by Cllr Cosgrave. Mr Dunlop said he did not know whose funeral Cllr Cosgrave had referred to, or where it was to take place. Mr Dunlop suggested that Cllr Cosgrave intended to attend the removal part of a funeral. When it was pointed out to Mr Dunlop that his diary entry relating to the meeting with Cllr Cosgrave on that date indicated that the meeting was to take place at 2.30pm, and that this was an unusual time for a removal, Mr Dunlop agreed but said that it was his belief that while the arrangement was made for 2.30pm, the meeting did not actually take place until one or two hours later.

6.23 Mr Dunlop gave a detailed description of the meeting. He said that Cllr Cosgrave parked his car in the church car park on Newtownpark Ave, and walked towards him, and they met on the sidewalk. Mr Dunlop said he parked his car on the road. He said he gave Cllr Cosgrave the money in a large envelope, and said that Cllr Cosgrave said to him ‘I must put this in the car before I go to the funeral.’

6.24 Mr Dunlop agreed that it was possible that the funeral may have been at a different location to the church at Newtownpark Ave. He said that Cllr Cosgrave had never stipulated to him that the funeral was at that or any particular venue.

6.25 Mr Dunlop’s diary entry on 11 November 1992 relating to Cllr Cosgrave stated the following:

‘2.30 LTC @ Newtownpark Ave’

6.26 Mr Dunlop’s diary on that date also recorded:

‘10.00 PR at home.

11.00 T.H.at home

11.30 MJC Marine Hotel

1.00 C.B. at DCC

~~2.30 Phil Monahan~~ (Struck through in Mr Dunlop’s diary).

6.27 Notwithstanding that, similarly to the aforesaid individuals, Cllr Cosgrave’s name was recorded in Mr Dunlop’s diary for 11 November, however he strongly denied that he had met Mr Dunlop at Newtownpark Avenue on 11 November 1992. The main thrust of Cllr Cosgrave’s denial related to the location claimed by Mr Dunlop for the payment, and its amount, as well as there being (according to Cllr Cosgrave) no reason for a meeting with Mr Dunlop at that location. Having regard to the claimed date of the payment, on Day 820 Cllr Cosgrave stated:

‘I don’t know whether I met him on 11th. I know I met him during that campaign all right at some stage.’

6.28 Inquiries by the Tribunal established that a removal of the late Dr Des Dillon was scheduled to take place at 5.30pm on 11 November 1992 at the Roman Catholic Church in Newtownpark Avenue. Cllr Cosgrave said he did not attend this funeral, and the funeral attendance/condolence book did not record Cllr Cosgrave's name.

THE JANUARY 1993 PAYMENT OF IR£1,000 AND THE ALLEGED PAYMENT OF IR£2,000

6.29 In his October 2000 statement Mr Dunlop stated the following:

Mr. Cosgrave received a cheque for £1,000 from me at the time of the 1993 Senate Election. The payment was made on 12th January 1993 (Appendix 1). I also gave him £2,000 in cash at that time...

6.30 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he paid Cllr Cosgrave a further sum of IR£1,000 at Cllr Cosgrave's request, at the time of the January 1993 Seanad election campaign (Cllr Cosgrave was a candidate in that election), by way of cheque drawn on the bank account of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, Mr Dunlop also paid Cllr Cosgrave IR£2,000 in cash.

6.31 Cllr Cosgrave acknowledged receipt of the IR£1,000 cheque payment made on 12 January 1993, but could not recall the circumstances in which it was paid. He denied receipt of any cash from Mr Dunlop at this time. Cllr Cosgrave commented to the effect that he would hardly deny receipt of cheque when the cheque was traceable by the Tribunal. Cllr Cosgrave believed that the source of a lodgement of IR£1,000 to his EBS Savings Account was Mr Dunlop's cheque.

6.32 Cllr Cosgrave could not recall if, upon the receipt of the IR£1,000 cheque from Mr Dunlop in 1993, he raised with him the earlier cash contribution given to him in November 1992 or if he had commented on the fact that Mr Dunlop was making the January 1993 contribution by cheque as opposed to cash.

6.33 Cllr Cosgrave told the Tribunal that insofar as his election campaigns of June 1991, November 1992 and January 1993 were concerned, no record had been kept by him of election contributions received, nor had he acknowledged the payment of IR£2,000 cash which he said he had received from Mr Dunlop in November 1992 or the IR£1,000 cheque received in January 1993. Cllr Cosgrave agreed however that in 1995 he personally acknowledged receipt of a IR£1,000 cheque given by Frank Dunlop & Associates for a Fine Gael fundraising event, and made payable to Fine Gael. Cllr Cosgrave said he acknowledged the 1995 payment of IR£1,000 because, unlike the 1992 and 1993 payments from Mr Dunlop, the 1995 payment was intended for the Fine Gael Party, and not himself.

6.34 One of 43 lodgements to accounts maintained by Cllr Cosgrave in the period May 1991 to February 1993 and queried by the Tribunal in 2004 was a lodgement of a cheque for IR£4,789.54 to an EBS account on 24 November 1992. When questioned as to the source of this cheque in the course of another module, Cllr Cosgrave was unable to provide relevant information, and undertook to investigate it further, but did not do so. In the course of his Quarryvale module evidence Cllr Cosgrave remained unable to advise the Tribunal as to the source of this lodgement, other than to state, that it probably represented election contributions received by him by cheque, together with county council expenses cheques received by him. He did not believe that, having regards to the amount, that the lodgement represented a single sum paid to him at that time. Cllr Cosgrave also said that he had no reason to believe that there was any cash element in this lodgement.

6.35 In another module, Cllr Cosgrave testified that he estimated the cost of his election expenditure to have been approximately IR£12,000 (IR£6,000 for the Dáil Election in November 1992 and IR£6,000 for the Seanad Election in January 1993). In this module he reiterated his claim not to know how much exactly he had expended in the course of his November 1992 and January 1993 election campaigns.

6.36 On 11 February 2003, Mr Dunlop listed Cllr Cosgrave as one of the individuals with whom Mr Dunlop had discussions after the establishment of the Tribunal. Cllr Cosgrave, in the course of his response to Mr Dunlop's statements about meetings with him in 1998/1999, addressed the issue of donations received from Mr Dunlop and Mr Dunlop's claims in regard to these donations, in the following manner:

I now believe that one of the reasons why Frank Dunlop has attempted to implicate me in his false testimony is because he learned that I had no idea how much he had given to me during the conversation we had after my interview with Patricia Dillon.³ This was a platform from which he was able to build up his lies. I believe they are designed to protect his financial interests from the Revenue Commissioners. I also believe that he needs to implicate people from Fine Gael as he believes his fabrications about widespread corruption would look better that way. He was probably also embarrassed about having stolen money from his paymasters...something that would have remained undetected except for the fact that my legal team exposed it. By pretending that I and others had received the money he had stolen, he was also trying to limit the damage to his reputation. I believe that these and other factors are the motives which underline his decision to destroy my character. (Extract from Cllr Cosgrave's 3 March 2003 statement to the Tribunal)

6.37 The first sentence of this statement was a tacit acknowledgement by Cllr Cosgrave that he had, as claimed by Mr Dunlop, discussed the subject of payments to him from Mr Dunlop following the establishment of the Tribunal in 1997. Cllr Cosgrave, in his sworn evidence said that he could not recollect any such discussions that might have taken place.

CLLR COSGRAVE'S INVOLVEMENT IN THE QUARRYVALE RELATED VOTES OF 17 DECEMBER 1992

6.38 On 17 December 1992 Cllr Cosgrave voted against the motions proposed by Cllrs Burton and Ryan to reverse the Quarryvale town centre zoning to 'E' (industrial) as it had been in the 1983 Development Plan. Likewise, he voted against a proposal to cap the retail area of Quarryvale at 100,000 square feet. Cllr Cosgrave supported the motion to amend the retail cap on Quarryvale to 250,000 square feet and he supported the Manager's Recommendation to 'approve the C&E zoning on the Quarryvale site as recommended by the Manager to ensure the provision of a suitable centre to meet the overall needs of the area and to restrict the retail shopping to 250,000 sq. ft.' Cllr Cosgrave also supported the restoration of the town centre 'D' zoning to the Neilstown lands.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO PAYMENTS MADE TO CLLR L T COSGRAVE BY MR DUNLOP

THE 1991 PAYMENT

i. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop gave IR£2,000 to Cllr Cosgrave in the period May/June 1991, and that this payment was in all probability solicited by Cllr Cosgrave, in the course of his being lobbied by Mr Dunlop in the period leading up to the Quarryvale rezoning vote. As a matter of probability, the funds were provided to Cllr Cosgrave at some point between the 17 May and the end of June 1991 a time when Mr Dunlop was in possession of considerable cash funds. It was a matter of fact that Cllr Cosgrave did not vote on 16 May 1991 but, as already referred to, the Tribunal was satisfied that he was lobbied by Mr Dunlop prior to that date to support Quarryvale. The Tribunal was satisfied that at the time of his soliciting and acceptance of the election contribution Cllr Cosgrave was aware of Mr Dunlop's ongoing role in relation to Quarryvale. In those circumstances the soliciting and acceptance of an election contribution compromised his required disinterested performance of his obligations, as an elected councillor in the making of a Development Plan, and was improper.

THE NEWTOWNPARK AVENUE ALLEGATION

- i. Notwithstanding the fact that there was no evidence given to the Tribunal which established that Cllr Cosgrave met with Mr Dunlop at a time when Cllr Cosgrave was in fact attending a funeral at a church in Newtownpark Avenue or at any other specific location, the Tribunal was satisfied that, as a matter of probability, Mr Dunlop's account of his meeting Cllr Cosgrave on that occasion, and at that venue, was true.
- ii. In particular, the Tribunal accepted that Mr Dunlop's diary entry which indicated that a meeting with Cllr Cosgrave was scheduled for that location on 11 November 1992 was genuine, and had not been forged (or otherwise altered) in order to mislead the Tribunal). Equally, the Tribunal was satisfied that the other entries for the same day identifying meetings with other councillors were genuine.
- iii. The Tribunal took the view that it would have been unnecessary, and indeed, quite bizarre, for Mr Dunlop to have identified a most unlikely meeting place, such as Newtownpark Avenue in Blackrock, as a location for a meeting between himself and Cllr Cosgrave, if in fact such a meeting had never taken place. Evidence was given to the Tribunal by both Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave, that meetings took place between them in a variety of locations including hotels, Mr Dunlop's office, Leinster House and Dublin County Council offices, and accordingly, if Mr Dunlop had wished to mislead the Tribunal in relation to his meeting with Cllr Cosgrave on 11 November 1992, he could have merely identified one of the aforesaid locations as the location of their meeting.
- iv. The Tribunal established that on 11 November 1992 Mr Dunlop gave cash donations of IR£2,000 (later returned), and IR£4,000 respectively to Cllrs Pat Rabbitte and Cathal Boland, two of the individuals named in his diary on that date.
- v. The Tribunal was also satisfied, as a matter of probability, that Cllr Hand, although not an election candidate, was a likely recipient of money from Mr Dunlop on that date. On 10 November 1992 Mr Dunlop provided IR£2,000 cash to Cllr McGrath and IR£500 cash to Cllr Mitchell, whom he met individually on that date, as listed in his diary.⁴

⁴ Mr Dunlop, during the period of November 1992 election campaign, made further cash disbursements to Mr Lawlor (IR£25,000), Cllr John Hannon (IR£500 or IR£1,000), Cllr Ridge (IR£1,000), Cllr G.V Wright (IR£5,000), and Cllr Cathal Boland (IR£4,000).

vi. While the fact that Mr Dunlop made disbursements to a number of individuals over the course of 10 and 11 November 1992 did not, of itself, prove that money was paid to Cllr Cosgrave specifically on 11 November 1992, it established that Mr Dunlop was heavily engaged at this time in the disbursement of cash to a number of individuals, most of whom, like Cllr Cosgrave, were election candidates.

vii. Thus the Tribunal was satisfied that on 11 November 1992 at Newtownpark Avenue, Cllr Cosgrave was provided with a cash sum by Mr Dunlop. The Tribunal believed there to have been no credible reason for Cllr Cosgrave's name to have been in Mr Dunlop's diary for 11 November 1992 (and which the Tribunal believed was an authentic diary entry), unless, as was the case with the other councillors, an arrangement had been made for Mr Dunlop to meet him. The Tribunal was also satisfied, as a matter of probability, that the cash sum provided to Cllr Cosgrave was IR£5,000 and not IR£2,000, which Cllr Cosgrave maintained he received at a location other than Newtownpark Avenue at around this time.

viii. The Tribunal was further satisfied that Cllr Cosgrave solicited the November 1992 payment from Mr Dunlop and that he found, in Mr Dunlop, a willing provider of such funds. Mr Dunlop has testified that at the time the IR£5,000 was handed over to Cllr Cosgrave, Cllr Cosgrave requested that Mr Dunlop convey to Mr O'Callaghan that he was supportive of Quarryvale. As a matter of probability, notwithstanding Cllr Cosgrave's denial, the Tribunal accepted that words to that effect were spoken by Cllr Cosgrave and was thus satisfied that Cllr Cosgrave, while not only accepting the money from a known lobbyist, linked the IR£5,000 election contribution to Mr O'Callaghan, and the forthcoming Quarryvale council vote.

ix. The soliciting and acceptance of money in such circumstances not only compromised Cllr Cosgrave's required disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor, but was, in the circumstances, corrupt.

THE PAYMENT OF IR£1,000 IN JANUARY 1993

i. In relation to the Frank Dunlop & Associates cheque payment of IR£1,000 on 12 January 1993 to Cllr Cosgrave's Seanad campaign, Cllr Cosgrave had knowledge of Mr Dunlop's role as a lobbyist in relation to zoning proposals which remained before the Council for consideration, not least of which was Quarryvale. Thus the acceptance of this payment compromised Cllr Cosgrave in the performance of his duties as a councillor, and was improper.

THE ALLEGED PAYMENT OF IR£2,000 IN 1993

i. In relation to the evidence tendered by Mr Dunlop of a further cash payment of IR£2,000 having been made to Cllr Cosgrave at the time of the 1993 Seanad Election, the Tribunal was not satisfied that such a payment was made.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 7 - CLLR MICHAEL J. COSGRAVE (FG)

7.01 Cllr M. J. Cosgrave was a Dublin County Councillor (representing the Howth Ward) from 1985, and from January 1994 was a Fingal County Cllr for the same area. He was elected to Dáil Eireann in 1977, 1981, 1982, 1987, 1989 and 1998. He was an unsuccessful candidate in the January 1993 Seanad Election.

7.02 In the course of his evidence Cllr Cosgrave acknowledged that he was lobbied by Mr Dunlop, and by Mr O’Callaghan, in relation to Quarryvale, both prior to 16 May 1991, and subsequently. Cllr Cosgrave’s recollection was that he was lobbied in the environs of Dublin County Council, the Royal Dublin Hotel and Conway’s Public House in O’Connell Street, Dublin.

7.03 Cllr Cosgrave was not recorded as having voted on 16 May 1991 on any Quarryvale related vote. He stated that had he been in attendance for the votes, he would have supported the Quarryvale position, as he did on 17 December 1992. An analysis of Mr Dunlop’s voting ‘scenarios’, compiled in advance of the December 1992 vote, indicated that as far as Mr Dunlop was concerned, the support of Cllr Cosgrave for Quarryvale was never in doubt. In the course of a number of modules¹ Cllr Cosgrave testified to having, almost without exception, supported rezoning proposals promoted by Mr Dunlop during the making of the 1993 County Dublin Development Plan (and subsequent Development Plans).

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FROM MR DUNLOP

7.04 In a response of 30 June 2001 to Tribunal queries, seeking details of all payments made by Mr Dunlop and/or his companies to him in the period 1990 to 1998, Cllr Cosgrave stated as follows:

Prior to the General Election of November 1992 Mr. Dunlop discussed with me the possibility of a donation towards the cost of that election. This discussion to the best of my recollection took place in the offices of Dublin County Council in O’Connell Street. I cannot give the exact dates and times as I did not keep diaries during this period but I believe the discussion occurred 4 to 5 weeks before the Election. I did not receive a donation from Mr. Dunlop or any of his companies prior to the election. I lost my Dáil seat in this General Election.

¹The Ballycullen/Beechhill, Cloghran and Cargobridge Modules.

I received a nomination from Fine Gael to contest the Senate Election on the Labour Panel and canvassed the 26 counties visiting as many Councillors as possible during the months of December 1992 and January 1993. I was not successful in this election.

As I had lost my Dáil seat in November 1992 by such a small margin of votes and following discussions with my family and supporters, it was agreed that I should devote as much time as possible to political work in Dublin North East in an effort to regain the seat.

I again met Mr. Dunlop around the end of January 1993 or early February 1993 when he gave me a donation of £1000. From my recollection it was by cheque. I understood that this donation was towards the cost of the Senate Election and was given to me by Mr. Dunlop at Dublin County Council offices in O'Connell Street. Again from my recollection, the money with other monies that I received from the Dept. of Finance was lodged into a savings account in the Bank of Ireland in Coolock around the 2nd week in February 1993.

I understood that the donation was towards the cost of the Senate campaign and the General Election campaign. The costs of the General Election campaign i.e. printing, electioneering, canvassing, and in the Senate campaign, overnighting in hotels throughout the country, were costly and this donation from Mr. Dunlop was for these purposes.

I also received a donation by way of cheque for £250; from my recollection towards the costs of the 1997 General Election for printing, canvassing and other election costs. I believe that this cheque would have been lodged into the Bank of Ireland in Killester.

7.05 On Day 146 (18 April 2000), Cllr Cosgrave's name featured in Mr Dunlop's 'preliminary list' of the councillors whom Mr Dunlop was then stating or suggesting had requested, and received, political contributions from him.

7.06 In his October 2000 statement Mr Dunlop stated:

I gave Mr. Cosgrave a cheque for £1,000 at the time of the Senate Election in 1993 (Appendix 1). He had been a TD but lost his seat in the November 1992 General Election. The payment was made following a request for support. Mr. Cosgrave always supported Quarryvale.

7.07 In the course of his sworn evidence Mr Dunlop repeated his assertion that Cllr Cosgrave was the recipient of a IR£1,000 cheque from Frank Dunlop & Associates on 12 January 1993, which he said he paid him in connection with his Senate campaign. An analysis of the cheque payments book of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd for the month of January 1993 showed that Cllr Cosgrave was one of four² councillors who each received IR£1,000 in the course of their Seanad Election campaigns.

7.08 Cllr Cosgrave acknowledged receipt of the IR£1,000 cheque from Mr Dunlop in January 1993 and he told the Tribunal that it had in effect been solicited by him.³ Cllr Cosgrave also testified that while he believed that the issue of an election contribution from Mr Dunlop did not take place until he had secured a Seanad nomination, he acknowledged that it was however ‘possible’ that such a discussion could have taken place at the time of the November 1992 General Election.⁴

7.09 Mr Dunlop’s diary recorded a meeting with ‘MJC’ and others on 6 November 1992, the day following the calling of the General Election. Cllr Cosgrave acknowledged that he probably met Mr Dunlop on that date, and indeed acknowledged that he had several meetings and lunches with Mr Dunlop at around that time.

7.10 In the course of his testimony Mr Dunlop was questioned in relation to an entry in his diary for 11 November 1992 relating to Cllr Cosgrave, which stated ‘MJC Marine Hotel.’ Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he had met and paid contributions to a number of councillors on that date, but could not say if, he in fact met Cllr Cosgrave at the Marine Hotel at 11:30am on 11 November 1992, but believed he had not done so for logistical reasons.

7.11 Cllr Cosgrave’s evidence, when questioned about the entry in Mr Dunlop’s diary regarding himself for 11 November 1992, was to the effect that although he could not recall such a meeting he was prepared to accept that one had taken place, if an entry to this effect was recorded in Mr Dunlop’s diary.

7.12 Cllr Cosgrave told the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop had never at any stage given him a cash donation.

² The others being Cllrs Liam T Cosgrave, Lydon and Ormonde.

³ In 2000 Mr Cosgrave told the internal Fine Gael Inquiry that the IR£1,000 cheque from Mr Dunlop had been unsolicited.

⁴ Indeed Cllr Cosgrave’s own 2003 statement asserts that the discussion took place at that time.

CLLR COSGRAVE'S CONTACTS WITH MR DUNLOP POST THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE TRIBUNAL

7.13 Both Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave agreed that they were in contact and met after the establishment of the Tribunal. On 5 February 2003 Mr Dunlop listed Cllr Cosgrave as one of thirteen individuals with whom he had discussions about the Tribunal. Cllr Cosgrave informed the Tribunal that post the establishment of the Tribunal he and Mr Dunlop did not meet as frequently as previously, and that as far as such meetings/contact were concerned, discussion about the Tribunal was confined to what was in the public domain.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO A PAYMENT TO CLLR M. J. COSGRAVE FROM MR DUNLOP⁵

- i. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr M. J. Cosgrave solicited and received a payment of IR£1,000 at the time of his January 1993 Seanad Election campaign, and that he did so in circumstances where Mr Dunlop had lobbied him and would again actively lobby him for his support for projects, including Quarryvale, on which he, Cllr Cosgrave, would or might be expected to exercise his vote at County Council meetings.
- ii. The said request for money, and its acceptance by Cllr Cosgrave compromised his required disinterested performance of his duties as an elected public representative, and was improper.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 7 - CLLR LIAM CREAVEN (FF)¹

8.01 Cllr Creaven was a Fianna Fail Councillor (for the Howth ward), having been elected in 1985, and re-elected in June 1991.

8.02 In the course of his evidence Cllr Creaven acknowledged that from May 1991 onwards, he voted in support of the rezoning of Quarryvale. He acknowledged having been lobbied by Mr Dunlop, and stated that he had been lobbied both for, and against, the rezoning. As was the case with Cllr Michael J. Cosgrave, Mr Dunlop's pre-December 1992 voting 'scenarios' listed Cllr Creaven as supportive of Quarryvale. Cllr Creaven acknowledged that he invariably supported Mr Dunlop's lobbying endeavours. There was contact between Cllr Creaven and Mr Dunlop in the months of October and November 1992 and Mr Dunlop's diaries recorded two meetings with Cllr Creaven in the month of November 1992. Cllr Creaven's response on 13 April 2000 to the Tribunal's inquiries as to whether or not he had received any payments or benefits in relation to Quarryvale was to the effect that he had received a 'hamper' from parties involved in the Quarryvale Shopping Centre. A Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoice of 21 December 1992 for IR£64,897.78 sent to Riga included a claim for IR£15,636.77 partly spent by Mr Dunlop on Christmas gifts.

¹ Please see Chapter Fifteen for the Tribunal's consideration of evidence relating to the circumstance in which certain statements provided to the Tribunal by Cllr Creaven were prepared with Mr Dunlop's assistance.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

PART 7 - CLLR JIM DALY (FF)

9.01 Cllr Jim Daly was co-opted onto Dublin County Council in 1990 to represent Tallaght/Rathcoole. He lost his Council seat in 1991, and was re-elected to the Council in 1999.

9.02 Mr Dunlop paid IR£2,000 in cash to Cllr Daly in June 1991, a fact acknowledged by Cllr Daly to the Tribunal. On Day 147, Cllr Daly's name appeared on Mr Dunlop's 1991 Local Elections list as the recipient of money, and he was likewise named in Mr Dunlop's October 2000 statement.

9.03 Both Mr Dunlop and Cllr Daly agreed that IR£2,000 was paid to Cllr Daly at the latter's home sometime in June 1991. Mr Dunlop stated that as he was speaking with Mr Daly on the day in question he left the money on a settee in Cllr Daly's sitting room. In a minor conflict of evidence however, Cllr Daly stated that it was he who had placed the envelope containing the money on the settee after being handed it by Mr Dunlop.

9.04 In evidence Mr Dunlop explained the reason for his payment to Cllr Daly in the following terms:

'Yes. Well in the specific, when I met Mr. Daly in relation to the payment. I had met Mr. Daly, Mr. Daly was a replacement councillor on Dublin County Council, by that I mean that either somebody had died or had resigned from the Council and he was appointed. He hadn't been elected at that stage. And I was introduced to him by Mr. Liam Lawlor at an early stage and I canvassed him in relation to the Quarryvale matter and he said he would support it. The local elections were coming up, he had never stood in a local election and a conversation ensued in which I undertook to give him a contribution towards the local elections in the context of his support for Quarryvale.'

9.05 Questioned as to whether the contribution requested by Cllr Daly was specifically for Quarryvale, Mr Dunlop stated:

'Yes. I discussed it with him, we discussed Quarryvale and I discussed it with him and I made the contribution before the local elections.'

9.06 In his evidence, Cllr Daly denied having ever been lobbied by Mr Dunlop in relation to Quarryvale, and he implicitly denied that Mr Dunlop and he had discussed Quarryvale on the occasion Mr Dunlop visited his home. Cllr Daly specifically denied that Mr Dunlop gave him the IR£2,000 donation in the context of his supporting Quarryvale.

9.07 In a statement provided to the Tribunal on 5 March 2001 Cllr Daly outlined his dealings with Mr Dunlop in the period 1990/1991 as follows:

I James Daly recall discussing with Frank Dunlop the proposed business park at Citywest. Frank Dunlop was acting as PRO for and on behalf of the developers. These discussions took place in mid 1990. A trip was subsequently organised in late 1990 to Bristol by the developers in order to view a similar type development there. Myself and a number of other councillors and Council officials attended on this trip. This proposed development was in my Council area and of direct interest to myself and constituents. At no time was any financial inducement offered to me by or on behalf of Frank Dunlop or the developers of Citywest and at no time did I seek any such inducement.

I recall subsequently approximately a sum of two thousand pounds (£2,000) being paid in cash by Frank Dunlop to me at my home during the 1991 local elections. An envelope containing the cash was handed to me by Frank Dunlop who, as I recall, stated that the monies were towards election expenses. This was the one and only payment ever made to me by or on behalf of Frank Dunlop. I did not seek payment from Frank Dunlop nor did Frank Dunlop specify any particular reason for the payment, save and except that same was made in contemplation of election expenses.

The monies were used directly by me in relation to election expenses. I did not lodge same to any account, but used the cash on an ad hoc basis for payment of meals, leaflets, printing and distribution expenses etc.

I issued no written acknowledgment or receipt to Frank Dunlop in respect of the monies. The monies were not paid directly or indirectly in a planning or rezoning context, nor did I seek any such payment directly or indirectly in a planning or rezoning context.

9.08 In further correspondence with the Tribunal on 20 July 2001 Cllr Daly advised, inter alia, as follows:

(a) I did not attend any public meetings in connection with the re-zoning of Quarryvale save meetings of South Dublin County Council.

(b) I did not attend any private meeting with any party or parties in connection with re-zoning of Quarryvale.

(c) I was not requested by any party or parties to provide any assistance in connection with the proposal to re-zone Quarryvale.

(d) I was not lobbied in connection with the re-zoning of Quarryvale.

(e) I was not requested nor did I solicit the support of any other the support of any other members or Dublin County Council for the rezoning of Quarryvale.

(f) I received no payments, donations or benefits of any kind, nature or description from any party or parties who were involved in the development of Quarryvale shopping centre save as disclosed above...

9.09 Cllr Daly went on to advise in that statement that at that time he did not meet with Mr Frank Dunlop, Mr Owen O’Callaghan, Mr Ambrose Kelly, Mr Liam Lawlor, Mr Pdraig Flynn, Mr Tom Gilmartin or anyone on behalf of Mr O’Callaghan in relation to the Quarryvale rezoning.

9.10 This position was maintained by Cllr Daly in his evidence, although he conceded the possibility that he had been approached by other councillors to support Quarryvale but had no recollection of any such approach.

9.11 Cllr Daly acknowledged that he was lobbied by Mr Dunlop in relation to the Citywest development project in respect of which there had been a vote for a material contravention of the Development Plan in March 1991. Cllr Daly stated that he only learned of Mr Dunlop’s personal interest in the Citywest project after the establishment of the Tribunal. He acknowledged that he himself had been centrally involved in the Citywest material contravention vote, a project he fully supported, as he was a representative for the Saggart/Rathcoole area where the development was located.

9.12 Cllr Daly maintained that he first met Mr Dunlop, by appointment, at Mr Dunlop’s office sometime in the latter half of 1990 to discuss Citywest. Subsequently a meeting, again in relation to Citywest, took place in the vicinity of the Mansion House, Dublin. Cllr Daly denied that he had been introduced to Mr Dunlop by Mr Lawlor.

9.13 Cllr Daly acknowledged that he received the IR£2,000 payment from Mr Dunlop some three months after the Citywest material contravention vote. Cllr Daly admitted that, at the time of the receipt of the IR£2,000 from Mr Dunlop it had crossed his mind that the money might have come from a party connected to the Citywest venture.

9.14 Asked if his suspicions that the IR£2,000 might be connected to the Citywest project gave him pause for thought Cllr Daly responded as follows:

'Yeah but it was after the vote and let me also tell you that I wasn't that familiar with donations for elections that was the first election I ran in, I was co-opted before that, and if it was, at the time when I got the envelope I didn't know what was in it, I knew afterwards, there is no point in saying different. But let's put it this way, if it was a donation for my election as Mr. Dunlop said, to help me in my election, well I had no problem with that. It was an election donation and that was for me campaign and that was that. That's the way I looked at it.'

9.15 Cllr Daly acknowledged to the Tribunal that he saw Mr Dunlop in and around the Council chambers and acknowledged that he probably knew Mr Dunlop was acting for clients other than Citywest. While he said that he may have seen Mr Dunlop with Mr O'Callaghan, he said had no recollection of knowing that Mr O'Callaghan was Mr Dunlop's client.

9.16 Council records show that Cllr Daly voted on 16 May 1991 in favour of the amending motion to cap the retail development on the Quarryvale site although he was not recorded as having voted on the substantive Quarryvale motion. Cllr Daly lost his Council seat in the June 1991 election.
