2.08 Mr Kelly's main objective, as far as Mr Dunlop's retention was concerned, was in relation to named councillors, specifically Cllrs Lydon and Hand. Mr Dunlop contended that he was told by Mr Kelly that as of September 1992 the two councillors in question were facing criticism from their respective party colleagues for their continued support of Mr Kelly's zoning ambitions for the lands. Mr Dunlop maintained that it was Mr Kelly's fear that, in the face of such criticism, Cllr Hand's and Cllr Lydon's support was wavering and, accordingly, Mr Dunlop was required by Mr Kelly to deal with this situation.

2.09 Mr Dunlop said that Mr Kelly gave him the somewhat convoluted history of the Pye lands, and that it was clear that Mr Kelly had done a lot of work himself in support of his plans including the lobbying of councillors and organising motions. Mr Dunlop stated that Mr Kelly's

'main objective was that he realised at this stage, by the time he came to me, given the history of the site and his involvement with it and with officials ... gave me the firm view that he had lost faith in the process and that he needed somebody other than himself to help him.'

'... he had obviously either on his own initiative or somebody had told him or educated him how to go about this in the context of lobbying the local councillors, getting signatures, doing whatever it entailed in relation to correspondence and explaining to him what was envisaged and he had done that. And I now know that there was some, you know, terse correspondence between himself and one or two councillors in relation to what was being proposed. But his main objective was in relation to named councillors in relation to the site. People that he had approached and what [sic] he thought he had on side.'

2.10 Mr Kelly named Cllrs Hand and Lydon in this context. Mr Kelly had concerns about their continued support and thus communicated to Mr Dunlop 'that he couldn't rely on them.'

2.11 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that Mr Kelly paid him IR£5,000 in cash for his services, and that the payment was made in the environs of Dublin County Council offices in O'Connell Street in Dublin. No invoice or other documentary proof of any such payment was apparently generated. Mr Dunlop believed that the IR£5,000 sum was agreed following negotiation, although he had no recollection of requesting a greater sum. He stated that the payment of a success fee had been raised, but the issue had been left in abeyance, with Mr Kelly using words to the effect of; 'well let's see how far we get with this and we'll discuss that with you later.'

2.12 A motion appeared on the County Council agenda seeking to rezone the Pye lands, signed by Cllrs Lydon and Hand; the vote on the motion was scheduled for 16 October 1992. Mr Dunlop stated that he had no hand, act or part in either preparing the Lydon/Hand motion or in obtaining the signatures of those councillors to it. Nor did Mr Dunlop have a recollection of being shown the motion at his first meeting with Mr Kelly. Mr Kelly testified that he did not know how this motion came into existence and did not recall who had procured the signatures of Cllrs Hand and Lydon.

2.13 While Mr Kelly testified that he visited Cllr Lydon's place of work at St John of God on one occasion, the Tribunal was satisfied to accept his testimony that he did not provide Cllr Lydon with the motion and that, as testified to by Cllr Lydon (see below) it was Cllr Hand who obtained Cllr Lydon's signature.

2.14 In response to the query as to why Mr Kelly thought that Mr Dunlop's involvement would ensure that Cllrs Hand and Lydon would remain supportive of Mr Kelly, Mr Dunlop stated that he; 'couldn't account for what [Mr Kelly] was told' and 'But I suspect and it's purely a suspicion and therefore completely speculation, speculative. That he had been told that if he came to me that I would guarantee that certain councillors would continue to support'. Mr Dunlop also stated:

'I think it would be absolutely flying in the face of credulity if, given my presence at Dublin County Council during the course of the Development Plan and the association that I had with certain clearly visible developers and certainly my association with clearly visible overt associations with councillors, that people would not have been able to come to a specific conclusion', that Mr Dunlop could guarantee the support of certain Councillors.'

2.15 Mr Dunlop also said:

'Mr Kelly was very persistent. He was on his own. He was not accompanied by any assortment of advisors. He did all of the work himself. He approached the Councillors himself. He lobbied them. He wrote to them and obviously came to a conclusion that he wasn't having very much success and therefore brought me on board. I am now brought on board in the context that I am able to be able to assist him with stiffening the backs of these two Councillors whom he suspected may well have been losing faith or losing interest and these two Councillors are known to me. I approached them, they discussed the matter openly with me, they expressed their views openly as to Mr Kelly.'

2.16 Mr Dunlop testified that in the course of their discussion Mr Kelly made reference to two other councillors, namely Cllrs Mitchell and Fitzgerald, and indicated that Mr Dunlop's function, with regard to those councillors, was to try and influence them to support Mr Kelly, in light of the difficulties that their proposals were causing for the proposal for a retail development on the lands. Mr Dunlop stated that he had no recollection of ever approaching Cllr Fitzgerald, but recalled that he had approached Cllr Mitchell who stated to Mr Dunlop words to the effect: 'Look it, Aidan Kelly is not going to get what he wants. He can bang his head off a wall as long as he wants to around here but he's not going to get it and he should take what he is being offered by the Council.'

2.17 Following his encounter with Mr Kelly, Mr Dunlop duly met with Cllrs Hand and Lydon.

2.18 Mr Dunlop formed the view that Mr Kelly had gone about the entire process in a 'cack-handed way and was not for compromise, notwithstanding the fact that he and his company were willing and prepared to discuss infrastructure with the County Council.'

2.19 Mr Dunlop also stated that he came to the view that probably Mr Kelly had been correct in relation to the concerns which he had expressed, in relation to Cllr Hand's and Cllr Lydon's ongoing support. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that when he approached those councillors 'they had indicated to me that they were getting criticisms from their own colleagues on the Council to the effect that this was going nowhere and why were they persisting the motion or were they persisting with their support.'

2.20 Mr Dunlop was questioned by Tribunal Counsel in relation to the fact that at the time of his retention by Mr Kelly in late September 1992, Cllrs Hand and Lydon were indicating their support for Mr Kelly's plans by virtue of the fact that they had signed a motion which sought to retain the zoning achieved in 1991, and in the context that, as evidenced by the County Council minutes, they had participated in the debate on the Mitchell/Fitzgerald motion. It was put to Mr Dunlop that the two councillors were 'very much on line' in supporting Mr Kelly. In response, Mr Dunlop stated:

'They were. There was absolutely no question that they were on line, they were on line notwithstanding their reservations about Mr Kelly and his proposal or notwithstanding the criticisms that they were getting in relation to their support for it from their party colleagues. They were on line on the basis that they signed a motion, which they couldn't easily resile from without causing further controversy ...And in the context of seeking their colleagues support in their own parties unless people had a vehement objection to it, notwithstanding any reservation that they might have had about it, they would support him.'

2.21 The following was also put to Mr Dunlop:

'But I have to suggest to you Mr Dunlop, that . . . they having supported the motion previously and now having drafted and signed the motion, that it would be unthinkable for them not to carry through their motion at an upcoming meeting. In other words, whatever about getting the support of unnamed councillors, the support of the two councillors who had signed the motion which was on the agenda, I would have thought, was a given.'

In response, Mr Dunlop said:

'Well I don't mean to pre-empt you. But, I mean, I think Mr Kelly's view as to his faith in the democratic process and in Mr Hand and in Mr Lydon was fairly well founded in the context of what did occur.'

2.22 Asked why Mr Dunlop thought a person might sign a motion and subsequently fail to support it, Mr Dunlop replied: 'There are a number of factors. One is, I am now in the frame, I am known to these two gentlemen, I have an association with these gentlemen. These two gentlemen expressed their view to me which was sort of a very interesting counter poise to Mr Kelly's expression of the view of them to me.'

MR DUNLOP'S CLAIM OF KNOWLEDGE ON THE PART OF MR KELLY THAT MONEY WOULD HAVE TO BE PAID TO COUNCILLORS IN RETURN FOR THEIR SUPPORT

2.23 Mr Dunlop alleged that, despite the lack of a specific discussion between himself and Mr Kelly on the topic, he, Mr Dunlop, had no doubt but that Mr Kelly knew money would have to be paid to Cllrs Hand and Lydon to ensure their ongoing support for his proposals. Mr Dunlop attributed his 'belief' that Mr Kelly knew of the likelihood of Mr Dunlop being asked for and paying money to the councillors in question to the manner in which Mr Kelly outlined his difficulties, namely Mr Kelly's fear that the two councillors in question were losing interest in the project, and in his belief that the councillors suspected that the proposed motion was going nowhere.

2.24 Mr Dunlop stated thus:

'From the context of my meeting with Mr Kelly and again, conditional on what I said earlier. That I had no knowledge of how I was recommended to him. It was my belief then and it is now that Mr Kelly knew that the only way that anybody could be kept on side was by way of payment . . . I've gone through this, you know, quite a number of times and I mean, there are two people sitting at a particular location discussing a particular issue in relation to named individuals vis-à-vis a problem and this gentleman has come to me in the context that he has been recommended that I act for him on the basis that I can solve his problem or alleviate it in some way and notwithstanding the fact that I don't know what he was told, I have absolutely no doubt in my mind, then or now, that Mr Kelly knew that parts of the money that he was giving me would have to be expended in the context of payments to councillors.'

2.25 Asked why he had not suggested to Mr Kelly that he himself might approach Cllrs Hand and Lydon directly and offer them money for their continued support, and if he had made enquiry of Mr Kelly as to whether he had been asked for by, or paid money to, Cllrs Hand and Lydon Mr Dunlop replied:

'No, I don't think that type of conversation ever took place. He [Mr Kelly] outlined his view in the context that I've mentioned and that his belief or his fear, one or the other, or both, that Cllrs Hand and Lydon were going offside because they were coming under criticism from their own councillors because they were losing interest and because he felt that they suspected that this was going to go nowhere.'

2.26 Mr Dunlop stated that at no time did Mr Kelly suggest to him that either Cllr Hand or Cllr Lydon had requested money, and equally Mr Kelly had never given Mr Dunlop reason to believe that he had offered or paid the money to them prior to Mr Dunlop's retention. Nor, in Mr Dunlop's encounters with them, had either Cllr Lydon or Cllr Hand told him that they had requested money from Mr Kelly or that they had been offered money by him. Mr Dunlop stated that insofar as those individuals spoke of Mr Kelly it was in the context of 'a strong element of frustration on their part that obviously Mr Kelly had been very persistent with them' in his lobbying.

2.27 Mr Dunlop stated that the wavering in the support of Cllrs Hand and Lydon stemmed from:

'criticisms that was coming to them from some of their own colleagues. And probably too, and I can say this without any, I don't mean to be critical of Mr Kelly, that Mr Kelly obviously had a project and he was as persistent as anybody else would have been and he probably was fairly persistent with them.'

2.28 In response to the suggestion put by Mr Aidan Kelly's counsel, Mr Noel Cosgrove BL, to Mr Dunlop that it was pure 'speculation' on his part that Mr Kelly was aware that he was in the habit of receiving cash and bribing councillors, Mr Dunlop stated:

‘Well, what I said in my statement and I believe Mr Kelly was aware from the outset that support elicited by me would entail financial payments to councillors though I do not recall any definitive remarks to which I can attribute that belief. And that was my belief then and this is my belief now in the circumstances in which Mr Kelly came to me in relation to his problem. I fully repeat what I said to you five minutes ago, that neither Mr Kelly nor I ever discussed payments to councillors. Mr Kelly did not ask that I should pay councillors, he did not ask me if I paid councillors and I never told him I would have to do so and I never told him that I had done so . . . it is my belief in the circumstances in which we discussed the matter with Mr Kelly, in the circumstances that he found himself, unstated, as I have freely admitted and repeat, unstated by him or me, but it is my belief that he knew.’

Replying to the further suggestion put by Counsel for Mr Kelly that there was no logic in his conclusion that Cllrs Hand or Lydon would have to be paid money when they already supported Mr Kelly’s proposal one hundred per cent, Mr Dunlop stated:

‘Yes. I don’t mean to be offensive to you Mr Cosgrove, I recognise fully the job you have to do but you obviously know nothing about political representations or political operations, what you say does not follow logically or rationally . . . I didn’t feel, I knew that when I approached these individuals that the likelihood was that I would have to pay and the new ingredient in all of this, Mr Cosgrove, is me, is Frank Dunlop. I had a relationship with these two people. I have no evidence to suggest, to indicate to me what the relationship between Mr Kelly and these two people were. It was never indicated to me either by Mr Kelly or them that they had ever received or asked for money from Mr Kelly, but I am the new ingredient in this, I have a relationship with these two people, an ongoing relationship in relation to matters in Dublin County Council, which on approach invariably resulted in payment.’

2.29 When it was put to Mr Dunlop that what in reality he was testifying to was a belief on his part, and that there was no evidence of any knowledge of the need to make payments to councillors on the part of Mr Kelly, Mr Dunlop disagreed and said:

‘in the context of the circumstances in which Mr Kelly came to me, either on his own initiative or at the recommendation or suggestion of others, that I was the person who could assist him in the difficulties that he had, given, given the long history that was associated with the project and with the lands and with the context of my meeting with Mr Kelly, I then had the belief and I still have, that Mr Kelly was aware that some of the monies that he was going to give me were to be used for disbursement.'

2.30 Asked as to why he had not expressly stated to Mr Kelly that he required the IR£5,000 to pay people, Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well I never met Mr Kelly before. I've had similar type of conversations not as you outline but I've had similar type encounters with other developers and I still did not have the type of conversation that you are suggesting with any of them, other than in specific circumstances that they would have raised the issue and, no, I didn't have that conversation and the reason I didn't have that conversation was because I didn't think it appropriate.'

Asked again as to why he had not informed Mr Kelly as to what he was about, Mr Dunlop replied:

'Well, the answer to that question is, I don't mean to be rhetorical, but the answer to that question is, what did Mr Kelly [think] he was giving me the £5,000 in cash for, to make a few phone calls or to have a few meetings with Don Lydon and Tom Hand.'

2.31 Mr Dunlop testified that his retention by Mr Kelly effectively came to an end following the 16 October 1992 vote.⁸ Mr Dunlop could not provide any detail as to the circumstances in which his retention ended.

MR KELLY'S RESPONSE TO MR DUNLOP'S EVIDENCE

2.32 While Mr Kelly admitted that he retained Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist, and agreed that the meetings and contact, as recorded in Mr Dunlop's diary and telephone records, probably did occur, his overall position was that he had little recollection of the circumstances under which he retained Mr Dunlop. In fact, Mr Kelly's evidence was that he had no memory of ever meeting Mr Dunlop, though he acknowledged that he had met him. He could not recollect engaging Mr Dunlop. He believed that his introduction to Mr Dunlop had come through Cllr Hickey who had told him that Mr Dunlop 'would canvas the representatives'.

2.33 Mr Kelly stated that he had a 'partial' memory of meeting Mr Dunlop in the latter's office on one occasion, but acknowledged that his first meeting may well have been in the environs of the County Council, as recollected by Mr Dunlop. Because of lack of recollection, he did not dispute Mr Dunlop's evidence that the purpose of Mr Dunlop's retention was to lobby councillors, specifically

Cllrs Hand and Lydon, although Mr Kelly claimed that he had never felt that he could not rely on those councillors.

2.34 Mr Kelly agreed that payment was made by him to Mr Dunlop, and that it may have been in cash, although his belief was that the sum was IR£4,000 and not IR£5,000 as suggested by Mr Dunlop. Mr Kelly had no recollection of having been provided with an invoice by Mr Dunlop. He had the 'vaguest recollection' of two cheques⁹ being written at the time in question, one to Mr Dunlop (or his company) which was cancelled, and the second to cash, which he cashed before paying the proceeds to Mr Dunlop.

2.35 While he could not recollect much about his involvement with Mr Dunlop, Mr Kelly denied absolutely Mr Dunlop's evidence that it was his (Mr Kelly's) understanding or belief that money would have to be paid to keep people 'on side'. He said that he met a number of councillors over the years and that none had ever requested payment, or had implied or insinuated that they required payment. The Tribunal was told by Mr Kelly that he had encountered improper requests for payment on only two occasions: once by way of a direct request from a County Council official in the early 1980s, and later, in the late 1980s, he had reason to interpret a telephone conversation with Mr George Redmond (the Assistant Dublin County and City Manager), as an indirect request for money.

THE EVIDENCE OF CLLR DONAL MARREN (FG)

2.37 Cllr Marren was a Fine Gael councillor who was first elected to Dublin County Council in 1978 and was a member of Dublin County Council during the creation of the 1993 Development Plan. In January 1994, he transferred to Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Council. Cllr Marren's voting record during the making of the 1993 Plan records opposition on his part to Mr Kelly's proposals. While Cllr Marren was not recorded as voting on the Hickey/Mitchell motion (as a result of which the lands were zoned C) on 31 May 1991, the minutes of the special meeting of 16 October 1992 recorded that Cllr Marren supported the Mitchell/Fitzgerald motion (which removed the C zoning from Mr Kelly's lands) and on 2 November 1993, he continued his opposition to retail development on those lands by voting against the (ultimately successful) motion which effectively reinstated the C zoning on the lands.

2.38 In the course of the review of the 1993 Development Plan, Cllr Marren met Mr Kelly. The meeting was arranged by his colleague Cllr Hand. At that meeting, Mr Kelly had outlined his proposals for the lands. Cllr Marren described the meeting to the Tribunal as being 'totally above board' and claimed that nobody (including Mr Kelly) had ever made any improper suggestions to him in connection with the lands. Cllr Marren testified that: 'There was no impropriety. Nothing either sought, solicited, offered. My connection was totally professional.'

2.39 In the course of his testimony, Cllr Marren was asked about notes which the Fine Gael Committee of Inquiry made in the course of an interview with him in May 2000. The rather cryptic notes included the following: 'other colleagues—concerns—yes—Mr Kelly' and 'Dundrum Pye Centre—major change in Development Plan. Make it worth your while. Tossed his head and walked out the door' and 'met Mr Kelly—voted against it'. Cllr Marren, in evidence, explained the content of the 'very abbreviated' notes as follows:

'A third party, as I have said, requested me to meet with Mr Kelly. And I consented to that request. And as he left, departed, said something to the effect and I can't be exactly correct but it sounded like worth your while, make it worth your while or it will be worth your while or something like that. To which I said rather sharply what do you mean by that and I got no answer. He proceeded to walk out the door.'

2.40 Cllr Marren was questioned as follows:

Q. 'So the person who said to you words to the effect of making it worth your while or it will be worth your while in connection with seeing Mr Kelly in connection with the Development Plan was the late Cllr Tom Hand?'

A. 'Yes.'

Q. 'You took him to task on that immediately as I understand you?'

A. 'Yes.'

Q. 'You said to him what do you mean by that?'

A. 'Uh huh.'

Q. 'And his response to that was to turn and leave the room, is that correct?'

A. 'That's correct.'

Q. 'What did you understand at the time by whatever was being suggested to you by Mr Tom Hand?'

A. 'Well, it left me with a little unease, like any enigmatic statement, any unfinished statement, any unanswered question. You wonder what was the full meaning. And I didn't pursue it at that time. I didn't pursue him either out the door or raise it in subsequent days. But my meeting with Mr Kelly which took place some days after that, the sort of deep anxieties I had were allayed insofar as the meeting was perfectly in order, brief, business-like and nothing untoward. So I never pursued it after that.'

Q. 'Mr Kelly did not make any suggestion, such as had been made to you by Mr Hand.'

A. 'Oh, no. No, no.'

Q. 'And insofar as the suggestion had been made to you by a fellow party colleague, isn't that right, Mr Hand was a party colleague of yours?'

A. 'Uh huh.'

Q. 'Did you take any step to take the matter any further within the party at that stage?'

A. 'Not at that stage, no. I did record there. I reported it there when I was asked about it. But I wasn't certain that that was just spoken in jest or whether there was something more worrying contained in the statement. But my subsequent meeting with Mr Kelly sort of allayed those immediate fears that I had.'

Q. 'Well insofar as the suggestions being made to you by a party colleague of yours, a fellow councillor. And the suggestion appears to have been that it would be worth your while presumably financially, or it could be worth your while financially?'

A. 'I don't know what was intended by the statement. That's why I asked the question. I didn't receive an answer. And then as I say, I didn't pursue it because Mr Kelly's meeting was totally above board.'

Q. 'In its ordinary language, Mr Marren, in a common understanding of I'll make it worth your while or it will be worth your while usually means some financial benefit, isn't that right?'

A. 'Well, it could.'

Q. 'Yes.'

A. 'But it could also have been spoken in jest. And remember, that was a real possibility. I couldn't be certain whether that was intended seriously or spoken in jest.'

Q. 'Yes. The reaction of what was said to you by Mr Hand was that the reaction of someone who thought they were being faced with a joke or something that they were taking seriously?'

A. 'Well if it were a joke, I didn't think it matter for joking and that's why I asked the question.'

2.41 Asked what was his 'gut feeling at the time' Cllr Marren responded:

'There was a sense of unease or concern. But beyond that I really couldn't. I'd prefer to not to even talk in those terms. Certainly not seriously but not even in jest.'

2.42 The conversation between Cllr Marren and Cllr Hand took place in the Fine Gael Party rooms in Dublin County Council, and while Cllr Marren could not put an exact date on it, he believed it to have taken place in the 1991–2 period.

2.43 Cllr Marren told the Tribunal that, notwithstanding the 1993 Garda Inquiry into alleged corruption in the rezoning/planning process, he did not consider raising the issue with the Gardaí at that time. He acknowledged that the matter was first articulated by him in the course of the Fine Gael Inquiry in May 2000.

2.44 The Tribunal was satisfied, having regard to the evidence given by Cllr Marren, that from his exchanges with Cllr Hand in the 1991 to 1992 period relating to the Pye lands, Cllr Marren understood Cllr Hand to have linked such support as Cllr Marren might give for the rezoning of the lands to the prospect of financial reward for Cllr Marren, as the price for such support.

2.45 Mr Kelly could not account as to how Cllr Donal Marren could have been left with the impression, following a discussion he had had with the late Cllr Hand, that he, Mr Kelly, might have made it worth Cllr Marren's while if Cllr Marren supported the Pye rezoning proposals. Cllr Hand, according to Mr Kelly, never sought money from him. Mr Kelly told the Tribunal that over a period of time he came to know Cllr Hand well, and that Cllr Hand was supportive of his proposals. Cllr Hand advised him how to go about seeking councillors' support. Mr Kelly stated: 'the way the system worked was you got one or two of the more senior councillors on board and then they did the necessary canvassing among their own party.'

MR KELLY'S EVIDENCE OF A REQUEST FOR MONEY BY AN UNIDENTIFIED COUNTY COUNCIL OFFICIAL

2.46 Mr Kelly told the Tribunal that within the period 1980-3, at a time when Pye Ireland Ltd was seeking to obtain planning permission to permit development of a portion of its lands, an accountant acquaintance of his arranged for him to meet an official of Dublin County Council for the purpose of exploring possible ways to ease the planning difficulties which Pye Ireland Ltd was at that time experiencing with Dublin County Council. The meeting took place in a public house in Baggot Street in Dublin.

2.47 Mr Kelly stated that in the course of the meeting with this unidentified County Council official, he was asked for a substantial cash payment, in return for the resolution of the planning difficulties relating to the land in question. Mr Kelly said that he rejected this request. Mr Kelly was unable to identify the said official or the precise location of his place of work, although he believed it to have been Tara Street in Dublin. Mr Kelly believed that he subsequently saw this individual in a Local Authority office in the Dublin area.

2.48 Later in the 1980s, probably in the period 1988/9, on becoming aware of a pending Garda inquiry into corruption linked to the planning process in County Dublin, Mr Kelly stated that he informed Mr Al Smith, a senior Administrative Officer with Dublin County Council, of the detail of his encounter in the early 1980s with the unidentified County Council official, and of the request made to him by that official for a payment of money. Mr Kelly met Mr Smith on a number of occasions on official business, but he stated that the particular meeting in question was solely concerned with the allegation that a County Council official had requested a payment from him to assist with a planning application. Mr Kelly told the Tribunal that Mr Smith had advised him that without a witness to the alleged encounter there was no point in pursuing the matter.

2.49 Mr Smith told the Tribunal that he recalled meeting Mr Kelly in relation to his planning difficulties, but had no recollection of Mr Kelly informing him of a demand for money by a County Council official. It was Mr Smith's contention that if such an allegation had been made to him in 1989 (or otherwise), he would have brought it to the attention of the Gardaí and the County Manager. He stated that on occasions where evidence merited it, he had brought matters to the attention of the Gardaí, and that these instances were well documented. Insofar, therefore, as Mr Kelly maintained he brought the matter to his attention, he, Mr Smith, could only surmise that it was communicated to him in a vague and unspecific manner, and that he may have seen little point in pursuing the matter further.

2.50 Mr Kelly himself did not apprise the Gardaí of his encounter with the unidentified County Council official, or of any improper demand for money. The Tribunal accepted as essentially accurate the evidence of Mr Kelly in relation to his meeting with the unidentified County Council official, and of the request for money in 1988. Such a request was clearly corrupt. The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr Kelly communicated the allegation to Mr Smith, albeit in a vague and unspecific manner.

MR KELLY'S ENCOUNTER WITH MR GEORGE REDMOND IN 1988

2.51 In his evidence, Mr Kelly described an incident which he says occurred in the late 1980s. A meeting had been arranged for Mr Kelly by Cllr Hickey in February 1988 with Mr George Redmond, with a view to obtaining the latter's support for Mr Kelly's then plans for his lands. Not being sufficiently competent in the area of planning, Mr Kelly had brought a third party to the meeting. He believed this was either Cllr Hickey or Mr Layden (although Mr Kelly had been unable to recollect this in his 2006 communications with the Tribunal). Mr Kelly described the meeting with Mr Redmond as brief and 'useless'.

2.52 Mr Kelly told the Tribunal that shortly after he returned to his office following the meeting, Mr Redmond telephoned him, and in effect admonished him for not having attended the meeting on his own, and advised him that in the future, he should attend such meetings alone. Mr Kelly believed this request to attend any further meeting alone was made to facilitate a request by Mr Redmond for the payment of money. No further meetings took place between Mr Kelly and Mr Redmond. In his explanation of his said interpretation of his conversation with Mr Redmond, Mr Kelly stated: 'Well my conclusion was that his preference to see me alone was perhaps to discuss or negotiate or whatever you might call it, side issues which didn't relate to planning or development.' Mr Kelly gave evidence that the interpretation he had placed on Mr Redmond's words related to the encounter he had with the unidentified County Council official in the early 1980s.

2.53 Mr Redmond told the Tribunal he had no memory of any meeting with Mr Kelly, but was prepared to accept that such may have taken place. He advised the Tribunal that it was normal practice for him (and other County Council officials) to meet with developers from time to time, and he stated that it was also the preferred practice of himself and other officials that County Council officials should not meet with developers in the company of councillors. Mr Redmond stated that if the telephone conversation did in fact take place, as suggested by Mr Kelly, it was in the context of this preferred practice, and that he may indeed have requested Mr Kelly to attend further meetings with him in the absence of councillors. Mr Redmond categorically denied that any such suggestion was made to facilitate an improper request for payment by him.

2.54 In the course of his testimony, Mr Redmond agreed that he had testified before the Tribunal in 2000 to having on specific occasions met developers alone, and that at such meetings, money had been paid to him. Mr Redmond's diary for 1988 indicated at least four meetings that were linked to the Pye Lands, namely:

- 18 February 1988: 'Kelly, Aidan 9.30',
- 26 April 1988: 'Pye' (this entry is crossed out in the diary),
- 22 August 1988: 'Pye Ireland, P Hickey',
- 25 August 1988: '11 am Pye in F. Vaughan's office, moved to 2.30pm'.

The Tribunal rejected Mr Redmond's contention that he had no memory of any contact or meetings in 1988 relating to the Pye lands.

2.55 The Tribunal further believed it likely to be the case that Mr Redmond's admonishment to Mr Kelly was, as suggested by Mr Kelly, linked to the fact that Mr Kelly had not attended the meeting alone, and that it was reasonable for Mr Kelly to infer (having regard to his previous experiences) that the motivation for such a request was to facilitate a demand for payment by Mr Redmond.

MR KELLY'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE REVENUE

2.56 In correspondence with the Revenue Commissioners on 5 November 2003, Mr Kelly referred to having been requested to pay cash for planning, and in the same correspondence he referred to his planning having been 'bought off', a reference, he explained on Day 723, to his belief that someone had 'bought' County Council officials and thus prevented him from obtaining planning permissions.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO MR DUNLOP'S AGREEMENT WITH MR KELLY IN SEPTEMBER/OCTOBER 1992

2.57 The Tribunal was satisfied that on some date in September 1992, Mr Dunlop was approached by Mr Kelly to be retained as a lobbyist. It was probable that Mr Dunlop was recommended to Mr Kelly by a third party, who may have been Cllr Hickey (who was not a councillor at the time). The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop received payment of IR£5,000 in cash in late September or early October 1992, and that payment in cash was probably requested by Mr Dunlop.

2.58 As a matter of probability, Mr Kelly's approach to Mr Dunlop was prompted by the criticism directed at Cllrs Hand and Lydon for their continued support for Mr Kelly's rezoning proposals, as testified to by Mr Dunlop, and Mr Kelly's concern that their support be copper-fastened. The Tribunal preferred the evidence given by Mr Dunlop on this matter to that of Mr Kelly or of Cllr Lydon. While he expressed to the Tribunal his belief that he had not lost faith in Cllrs Hand or Lydon in September or October 1992, Mr Kelly was unable to challenge Mr Dunlop's testimony on the matter, given his professed total lack of recollection of the events in question.

2.59 The Tribunal's conclusions in this regard were also assisted by the fact that objective factors, namely the plethora of motions which had been lodged by Cllrs Mitchell and Fitzgerald, suggested that as of September 1992, Mr Kelly had reason to be concerned that the zoning achieved in May 1991, might not be confirmed, and that it was probable that Cllrs Hand and Lydon (the signatories to the September/October 1992 motion to retain this zoning, and thus the perceived promoters within the County Council of Mr Kelly's plans), would face an uphill task.

2.60 The Tribunal also accepted that the principal subjects of Mr Kelly's and Mr Dunlop's discussions were Cllrs Hand and Lydon, and that such discussion centred, in the main, on the requirement that the support of Cllrs Hand and Lydon had to be maintained.

2.61 With regard to Mr Dunlop's evidence of his belief that Mr Kelly was aware of his intention to pay councillors to support the rezoning of his lands, the Tribunal did not accept (on the evidence adduced) that there was a common intention or common design as between Mr Dunlop and Mr Kelly that Mr Dunlop's assignment to lobby Cllrs Hand and Lydon would involve the payment of money to those councillors. The Tribunal took account of the fact that Mr Dunlop was unable to point to any express or implied action or words on the part of Mr Kelly which suggested to Mr Dunlop that Mr Kelly himself was aware that as part of Mr Dunlop's lobbying endeavours money would have to be paid to councillors.

2.62 There was no evidence to suggest that Mr Kelly paid money or attempted to pay money to any elected councillor in relation to the Pye lands rezoning project. Indeed, there was evidence from Mr Kelly that he had himself rejected one explicit demand for money, and another implicit request, in the past. Both requests were planning related. Mr Kelly may, however, have suspected that having regard to his own past experiences (one with an unidentified local authority official in the early 1980s and another with Mr George Redmond in 1988), that Mr Dunlop might, in the course of his lobbying activities, be requested to pay money to ensure sufficient councillor support for the rezoning of the Pye lands.

MR DUNLOP'S ALLEGATION OF PAYMENTS TO COUNCILLORS

CLLR TOM HAND (FG)

3.01 Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid IR£2,000 in cash to Cllr Hand in circumstances where he was retained by Mr Kelly to ensure that Cllrs Hand and Lydon would remain on side in relation to their support for the rezoning of the Pye lands. Mr Dunlop stated that he paid the money to Cllr Hand in the environs of Dublin County Council, following the receipt (in late September/early October 1992) of the IR£5,000 in cash from Mr Kelly. Mr Dunlop claimed that the IR£2,000 figure had been agreed between himself and Cllr Hand following negotiation, as, according to Mr Dunlop, 'there was always negotiation from Mr Hand'.

3.02 Cllr Hand's voting record in relation to the Pye lands was as follows: on 31 May 1991 he voted in favour of the successful Hickey/Mitchell motion to rezone the lands C; he was, together with Cllr Lydon, a signatory to the motion lodged before the Council in advance of the special meeting of 16 October 1992 seeking to retain the C zoning on the Pye lands, in the face of the motions then before the Council in the names of Cllrs Mitchell and Fitzgerald to have the lands revert to their 1983 Development Plan zoning status; he was one of two Fine Gael councillors present on 16 October 1992 who voted against the Mitchell/Fitzgerald motion.

3.03 Cllr Hand was a signatory (together with Cllrs Lydon, Lohan, Fox and Matthews) to a motion which was on the agenda of the County Council on 2 November 1993 and which successfully reinstated the 1991 Draft Plan zoning of C and E on the Pye lands, the zoning ultimately adopted in the 1993 Development Plan.

CLLR DONAL LYDON (FF)

3.04 Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Lydon at the latter's request in connection with the Pye lands rezoning. As with Cllr Hand, Mr Dunlop maintained that his focus was to ensure that Cllr Lydon remained supportive. He met Cllr Lydon after he approached Cllr Hand. With regard to his approach to Cllr Lydon, Mr Dunlop stated:

'in the discussion that I had with him it was indicated to me, by him to me, that he had been supportive of this and that Mr Kelly had been very persistent and that I cannot say specifically the language that was used but it was indicated to me that Mr Lydon had, hadn't got anything and required something and I suggested a thousand pounds . . . and he accepted that.'

Mr Dunlop stated that he had paid Cllr Lydon subsequent to their discussion, and that the payment was made either in the environs of the County Council offices or at Cllr Lydon's place of work at St John of God, Stillorgan.

3.05 Questioned whether Cllr Lydon had told him why he had signed the motion, Mr Dunlop stated:

'No, I don't recollect him telling me why he signed the motion. I think, and again, this, given the context of this suppositional nature of this, I think it was obvious to me at a certain stage that Mr Kelly had been advised by somebody, whom I don't know, that the two old reliables, in the context of getting a motion signed, were Tom Hand and Don Lydon. Now it so happened that in this particular context that the lands in question, the Pye lands in Dundrum, fell right bang in the middle of Mr Hand's . . . local area . . . I'm not so certain that it fell bang in the middle of Senator Lydon's immediate local area, but certainly it would be completely disingenuous for anybody to suggest that somebody had not gone to Mr Kelly at some stage and that, this is a matter for Mr Kelly himself, I can't, Mr Kelly never discussed this with me, neither did councillors Hand or Lydon that Mr Lydon and Mr Hand were reliable people to go to for signatures for a motion in the context where other people mightn't sign.'

3.06 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that, with regard to his approach to both Cllrs Hand and Lydon, the question of them arranging for the support of their fellow party colleagues did not arise in his discussions with them. Mr Dunlop stated:

'I certainly I don't recollect any discussion with Mr Kelly to that effect. The response that I got from both Cllrs Hand and Cllr Lydon was to the effect that they had been—they had worked in the vineyard long and hard in the context of this particular individual and development, they were getting no thanks for it and I'm saying this specifically now in the context of your question. They were getting no thanks for it among some of their own colleagues and in the case of Cllr Hand, I took this to mean he was having difficulty with a member of his own Party, namely, Olivia Mitchell. And in the case of Senator Lydon, I didn't come to any conclusion as to who specifically it was, but that obviously Aidan Kelly had lobbied other councillors in Fianna Fáil and as a result, they had gone to Lydon because he was a named individual and a signatory and arising from that, they had either told him that it was going nowhere or they queried why he was supporting it.'

3.07 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that, notwithstanding his evidence concerning his feedback from Cllr Lydon as to criticism the latter was receiving from his party colleagues, a substantial number of the Fianna Fáil councillors (20) had in fact opposed the Mitchell/Fitzgerald motion on 16 October 1992. However, he claimed that there was nothing inconsistent in his testimony on this issue as, according to Mr Dunlop, Cllr Lydon had recounted to him his Fianna Fáil colleagues' dissatisfaction and unhappiness, as communicated to Cllr Lydon, for persisting in his support for Mr Kelly. Mr Dunlop stated:

'They [the Fianna Fáil councillors] are either going to do one of three things. Either vote against it, which is slightly going against the grain from the political ideological training. Secondly, they are going to vote with him, which is much more collaborative and you know party supportive or else they are going to abstain, they are going to disappear, they are not going to vote for it. But in the main, the very fact that he would have been criticised for persisting with it doesn't in any way logically or rationally follow they would not support him in a vote.'

3.08 In his private interview with the Tribunal on 11 May 2000, Mr Dunlop referred to Cllr Lydon in terms of his having, on occasions, travelled to Cllr Lydon's place of work for the purposes of giving him money. When asked how much he would have given Cllr Lydon on any one occasion, Mr Dunlop stated: '£2,000, £2,500. Never be anything else.' In the course of his testimony in this module, Mr Dunlop revised that earlier statement and said that monies given to Cllr Lydon ranged between sums of IR£1,000 and IR£2,000/IR£2,500.

CLLR LYDON'S RESPONSE TO MR DUNLOP'S ALLEGATION

3.09 On 11 October 2006, Cllr Lydon provided a statement to the Tribunal in relation to this module in the course of which he stated as follows:

The locus of this planning matter is within the area which was then Cllr Lydon's electoral Ward and therefore it would be understandable that his support would be canvassed in relation thereto.

His recollection is that this particular development had somewhat convoluted problems, full details of which Senator Lydon is not in a position to recollect.

To the best of his memory, the site in whole or in part, was the subject of motions and votes before Dublin County Council—motions which had different outcomes at different times.

As a local councillor interested in promoting development and providing employment, Senator Lydon was at all times in favour of the development of the site in question. This involved voting either for or against motions on or about a half a dozen occasions. His guiding principle, we are instructed, was to secure the development of the site in order for it to achieve the accruing economic benefits.

On the two occasions abstracted in the correspondence copied to us, he recollects putting his name on motions, which appear at Pages 622 [the 16 October 1992 motion] and 643 [the November 1993 motion] of the Tribunal brief, at the request of Cllr Tom Hand. His reasons for so doing were as already stated above, to see the development of the site which was at the time occupied as a rather run-down Crazy Prices outlet and as a bowling alley. Our client was fully familiar with the site throughout the various changes of motions, which sometimes included the entire site and at other times a portion thereof and notes in passing that it is currently the site of the resplendent Dundrum Shopping Centre.

In regard to your inquiry re the persons with whom he had contact on this matter, he would have had discussions on such with his fellow members of Dublin County Council.

In relation to the motion on Page 643 of the Tribunal brief as set out in the headed paper of Kieran O'Malley & Co Ltd, our client feels that it is quite possible that the owner of the site at the time Mr Aidan Kelly, whose name and address is on the letter dated 5th October 1993, had possibly canvassed his support.

However, as to the text of the motion on the letter dated 5th October 1993, our client has no idea as to who drafted same. Likewise, our client has no recollection in relation to the text of the motion on Page 622 [the October 1992 motion] of the Tribunal brief as to who provided the draft thereof.

Insofar as the letter may request us to respond to the documents supplied by the Tribunal in this module, we note the allegations made by Mr Frank Dunlop and advise that our client rejects same.

3.10 In his evidence, Cllr Lydon claimed that he had no recollection of actually signing the October 1992 motion, save that he was ‘nearly certain’ that it was Cllr Hand who brought the motion to him for signature, and that he did so one day in the foyer of the County Council offices. Cllr Lydon told the Tribunal:

‘Tom often came to me with motions to sign. Sometimes I’d sign them and sometimes I wouldn’t. If I thought they were good proposals as I said often I’d sign them and if I didn’t I wouldn’t.’

3.11 In the course of his testimony Cllr Lydon acknowledged that Mr Kelly was known to him and that he may have met with Mr Layden. Cllr Lydon believed, however, that Mr Kelly did not discuss with him the Hickey/Mitchell motion in 1991.¹⁰

With reference to that motion, Cllr Lydon stated: ‘You see, when there was no hassle about this. Fianna Fáil and Fine Gael proposed it and it went through all right. And it was only afterwards when the two ladies got into the sort of battle that things began to change.’

3.12 Cllr Lydon believed that the October 1992 motion, which he had signed at the request of Cllr Hand, had been drafted by Mr Kelly. Cllr Lydon could not recall whether, at the time he was approached by Cllr Hand, he knew that Cllrs Fitzgerald and Mitchell were pursuing a different proposal for the Pye lands than that being promoted by Cllr Hand and himself. However, the Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Lydon must have known, when he signed the motion at Cllr Hand’s behest, that it was being done in the face of a countervailing motion which had been lodged by Cllrs Mitchell and Fitzgerald in early September 1992.

3.13 Cllr Lydon testified that sometime in October 1992, he learned of Mr Dunlop's involvement, but claimed that he was unable to recollect whether he knew of Mr Dunlop's involvement prior to the vote of 16 October 1992. With regard to the Pye lands, Cllr Lydon stated: 'Mr Dunlop had very little to do with me on this particular thing you see.'

3.14 In the course of his testimony in the Pye module, Cllr Lydon was reminded that evidence adduced in the course of the Ballycullen/Beechhill Module established that he and Mr Dunlop had a series of meetings and communications, acknowledged by Cllr Lydon, and he acknowledged that the evidence suggested that he and Mr Dunlop were in contact on 15 October 1992, the eve of the special meeting dealing with the Pye lands.¹¹ In relation to his contact with Mr Dunlop, Cllr Lydon stated on Day 719:

'You have to understand how this worked. Mr Dunlop was present at every meeting of the Development Plan. And we'd meet him in the hall or something. And maybe saying to him. You see, they way you put it you'd think we'd have sat down and had a big discussion with him. No, never.'

3.15 Asked if Mr Dunlop had lobbied him in relation to the Pye lands, Cllr Lydon said: 'That I'm not sure. He probably would have mentioned to me somewhere. He wouldn't need to lobby me because I was supportive.'

3.16 The following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Cllr Lydon on Day 719:

Q. 'But you were supportive and you had co-signed the motion. Surely that makes it all the more probable that he would have discussed it with you?'

A. 'No, he'd know I was on board. I mean, why would he want to?'

Q. 'He might also be concerned to find out from you as a co-signatory of the motion who else was on board?'

A. 'The whole Fianna Fáil Party was supportive of it all the time.'

Q. 'You see Mr Dunlop has given evidence to the Tribunal, and you will have seen and your solicitors will have brought it to your attention, Senator Lydon, that he was brought on board to keep yourself and Cllr Hand?'

A. 'I know, I saw that. That's insane.'

Q. 'Yes.'

A. 'I mean, that's total—'

Q. 'And for that purpose he gave money for your support to you, either in the environs of your place of employment or in the environs of Dublin County Council.'

¹¹ The meeting of 16 October 1992 also dealt with the Beechill lands (see Chapter 4).

A. 'I didn't ever get money from Frank Dunlop for anything like that. That's the first thing. Secondly, he didn't have to keep me sweet on that thing. I was supportive of it. If I could just explain to you for a second. I probably won't get in here again, I just want to say this. This is not about zoning, this is a political thing. There is four councillors in the area, there is myself and Paddy Hickey of Fianna Fáil, Eithne Fitzgerald and Olivia Mitchell for Fine Gael and Labour. Olivia and Paddy set down the first motion and it went through no bother. After than Eithne Fitzgerald got in on the act and Mulveys in Dundrum were getting a bit easy [sic], big Fine Gael people and they were probably mentioning it to Olivia. And Olivia and Eithne were always good friends but they were always one, because they both wanted to be TD's and you must remember shortly after that Eithne Fitzgerald got a huge vote of 17,000 and she was gone the next time. This was so that they could go to political meetings or residents' meetings and say we are modifying the proposals of the Fianna Fáil people. Eventually it came back again and we won again. Unfortunately we forgot to modify the Written Statement and so the Manager, who I believe had no time for Aidan Kelly in the first place, wrote it. And that's the whole story.'

3.17 Cllr Lydon vehemently denied Mr Dunlop's allegation of having been paid IR£1,000 in relation to the Pye lands. Cllr Lydon declared that 'Mr Dunlop never gave me any cash. Never, ever, ever!' Cllr Lydon also testified that neither Mr Kelly nor Mr Layden had ever supported him financially for elections, nor had he requested such support.

CLLR TONY FOX (FF)

3.18 Mr Dunlop testified that he paid Cllr Fox IR£1,000 in relation to the latter's support for the Pye lands rezoning. Unlike the position in relation to Cllrs Hand and Lydon, Cllr Fox's support (or otherwise) for the Pye lands had not been discussed between himself and Mr Kelly. The thrust of Mr Dunlop's evidence vis-à-vis Cllr Fox was that notwithstanding having understood his retention by Mr Kelly to be for the purposes of ensuring the continued support of Cllrs Hand and Lydon, Mr Dunlop had, of his own volition, approached Cllr Fox seeking his support as well. Questioned as to why he had, as he claimed, paid Cllr Fox IR£1,000 in circumstances where he had already expended or agreed to expend IR£3,000 on Cllrs Hand and Lydon (following his discussions with those councillors), Mr Dunlop stated: 'Because he [Cllr Fox] asked for it.'

3.19 While Mr Dunlop acknowledged that he would have been IR£1,000 better off had he not made the alleged payment to Cllr Fox, he stated:

'Yes, but I had a relationship with Tony Fox. I know these modules are dealt with on an individual stand-alone basis, so therefore there is an element of the people who were here on a constant basis listening to repetition but nonetheless it stands on its own feet, that is I had a relationship with Tony Fox. He was as he himself used to say, sort of mantra like, that he was pro development, but he was pro development on the basis that he was recompensed for it. And in the many occasions that I had to seek Cllr Fox's support either by way of signature or by way of support I paid him money at his request.'

3.20 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that the Council records showed that Cllr Fox had supported the proposal for retail development on the Pye lands at the Council vote of 31 May 1991. In explaining his decision, nevertheless, to pay IR£1,000 to Cllr Fox in circumstances where Mr Dunlop, as he testified, believed that the Hand/Lydon motion lodged with the Council in advance of 16 October 1992 would be unsuccessful, Mr Dunlop stated: 'Tony Fox consistently and repeatedly, though without giving a great deal of specifics, indicated that he would talk to others.' Mr Dunlop stated, however, that he was not specifically stating that Cllr Fox had in fact approached other councillors to support the Hand/Lydon motion; but he maintained that in general Cllr Fox's recounting to Mr Dunlop that he would approach other councillors 'was the specific orientation' of his relationship with Cllr Fox.

3.21 Questioned again as to why, on his account of events, he would have expended 50 per cent of the remainder of Mr Kelly's cash (net of the promised disbursement to Cllrs Hand and Lydon) on Cllr Fox, Mr Dunlop responded:

'My relationship with Mr Fox was when I went to him, invariably, it resulted in a payment for his support, either for himself or for others that he could garner and that was always the basis on which I knew as soon as I approached Mr Fox that that is what would happen.'

CLLR FOX'S RESPONSE TO MR DUNLOP'S ALLEGATION

3.22 In a statement provided to the Tribunal on 14 December 2000 in connection with queries posed by it in respect of a number of issues, including the Pye lands and Mr Dunlop's allegation in respect thereof, Cllr Fox denied receiving any money from Mr Dunlop in relation to same, and denied that he was ever in receipt of money from Mr Dunlop for any purpose whatsoever.

3.23 In evidence on Day 718, Cllr Fox rejected as completely untrue Mr Dunlop's evidence that he was paid IR£1,000 in connection with his support for the Pye lands rezoning. Cllr Fox's position was that he had supported the rezoning of the lands for retail development and that in that regard he had voted in favour of the Hickey/Mitchell motion of 31 May 1991. He recalled being lobbied by Mr Kelly in relation to this motion. Mr Kelly was known to him, given the latter's business interests in Dundrum, Cllr Fox's home area.

3.24 While acknowledging that he would have been aware, in 1992, of the Mitchell/Fitzgerald motions which opposed the C zoning for the lands, Cllr Fox did not recollect receiving representations on either the Mitchell/Fitzgerald motions or on the Lydon/Hand motion in support of the 1991 Draft Plan zoning, which was lodged with the Council in response to the Mitchell/Fitzgerald motion of 3 September 1992. On 16 October 1992, Cllr Fox was one of 20 Fianna Fáil councillors who voted against the successful Mitchell/Fitzgerald motion.

3.25 Cllr Fox told the Tribunal that he would not have seen any need to discuss the issue in 1992, given his support for the motion that was passed in 1991. He did not recall receiving correspondence from Mr Kelly in or about September or October 1992, notwithstanding the likelihood that all councillors were written to by Mr Kelly at that time. Cllr Fox did not recall any discussion with his Fianna Fáil colleagues on the likely success or otherwise of the Hand/Lydon motion, and he claimed that he could not recall whether Mr Kelly had made representations to him in 1992, notwithstanding his recollection that Mr Kelly had done so in advance of the 1991 vote.

3.26 Cllr Fox denied any knowledge of Mr Dunlop's involvement in 1992 in relation to the Pye lands. As acknowledged by him in the course of his testimony in the Ballycullen/Beechill module, he agreed that Mr Dunlop's office record of incoming telephone calls documented a call from him on 15 October 1992 (the eve of the special meeting dealing with the Pye lands¹²), although Cllr Fox nonetheless maintained that no actual contact was made with Mr Dunlop at that time. Cllr Fox acknowledged to the Tribunal that he recollected being lobbied by Mr Richard Lynn¹³ in 1993 in relation to the Pye lands, yet he had no recollection of being approached by Mr Dunlop in 1992, notwithstanding his acknowledgement that in relation to other rezoning proposals he had been lobbied by Mr Dunlop in the course of the making of the 1993 Development Plan.

3.27 In relation to two lodgements of IR£300 and IR£700 made to his account on 21 and 30 October 1992 respectively, Cllr Fox believed those to relate to an accumulation of savings on his part from monies received by way of County

Council expenses and for County Council conferences.¹⁴ (In response to questions in cross-examination by his own Counsel, Cllr Fox also stated that at the period in question he received his wages in cash.)

3.28 Cllr Fox was one of five signatories to the motion proposed to the County Council on 2 November 1993¹⁵, which reinstated to the Pye lands the retail zoning which had been achieved on 31 May 1991. Cllr Fox stated that he was almost sure that it was Cllr Hand who had asked him to sign this motion. As previously stated, he recollected being lobbied in relation to same by Mr Lynn. Cllr Fox also acknowledged that his was one of two signatures (the other was Cllr Matthews) to a motion brought in 1995, which proposed an amendment to the Written Statement in relation to the Pye lands.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO MR DUNLOP'S ALLEGATIONS REGARDING PAYMENTS MADE TO CLLRS HAND, LYDON AND FOX IN RELATION TO THE PYE LANDS

CLLR HAND

3.29 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop and Cllr Hand discussed the Pye lands at some point between the 28th September 1992 and the date of the vote, following upon Mr Dunlop's retention by Mr Kelly. The Tribunal was satisfied that following 'negotiation' between himself and Cllr Hand, Mr Dunlop paid Cllr Hand IR£2,000 in cash in return for Cllr Hand's continued support for the rezoning of the Pye lands. The purpose of the payment was to compromise Cllr Hand in the disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor. The said payment was corrupt.

The Tribunal was satisfied that as of September / October 1992, Mr Dunlop had an established relationship with Cllr Hand and had dealings with him in relation to the rezoning of the Ballycullen/Beechill lands at this time. Moreover, on 6 October 1992, Cllr Hand had made a demand for IR£250,000 in the presence of Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan, in return for his support for the rezoning of Quarryvale, and had, prior to that date, provided Mr Dunlop with the number of a bank account in Australia into which the demanded money was to be deposited. While the Tribunal accepted that Cllr Hand's demand for payment of a sum of IR£250,000 was not acceded to, the fact of what had taken place prior to, and on 6 October 1992 in this regard, rendered entirely credible Mr Dunlop's evidence that Cllr Hand had indeed requested money in return for his continuing support for the rezoning of lands, including the Pye lands. The Tribunal in arriving at its conclusion on this matter also had the benefit of the evidence of Cllr Marren to the effect that Cllr Hand had linked support for the rezoning of the lands to the prospect of financial reward. In all of those circumstances, the Tribunal was satisfied to accept Mr Dunlop's testimony that in the course of his approach to Cllr Hand, pursuant to the basis on which he, Mr Dunlop, was retained, namely on the basis to ensure Cllr Hand's continuing support for the rezoning of the Pye lands, Mr Dunlop was requested by Cllr Hand for money, a request duly acceded to by him.

CLLR LYDON

3.30 The Tribunal was satisfied to accept Mr Dunlop's evidence that he duly made contact with Cllr Lydon, following upon his retention by Mr Kelly in the circumstances described. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Lydon was paid IR£1,000 in cash by Mr Dunlop, and that Cllr Lydon solicited the payment in return for his continued support for the rezoning of the Pye lands. The purpose of the payment was to compromise Cllr Lydon in the disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor. The said payment was corrupt.

The Tribunal preferred the evidence of Mr Dunlop to that of Cllr Lydon, in circumstances where the Tribunal found as a fact that in or about September/October 1992, and prior to that time, Mr Dunlop and Cllr Lydon had been in contact in relation to other lands, namely the Ballycullen/Beechill lands then being promoted for rezoning by Mr Christopher Jones Snr. The evidence in the Ballycullen/Beechill Module established, to the Tribunal's satisfaction, that Cllr Lydon requested, and was paid money by Mr Jones prior to, and subsequent to, the rezoning of the Ballycullen lands in October 1992. The fact that money changed hands between Mr Jones and Cllr Lydon was one of the factors the Tribunal took into account in arriving at its conclusion in the Ballycullen module, that Mr Dunlop had been requested for, and had paid, money to Cllr Lydon in connection with the Ballycullen lands. With regard to the evidence of Mr Dunlop and Cllr Lydon in this module, all of the foregoing, inter alia, assisted the Tribunal in preferring Mr Dunlop's evidence over that of Cllr Lydon and thus the Tribunal was satisfied that when Mr Dunlop approached Cllr Lydon money was requested by him, a request acceded to by Mr Dunlop by the payment of £1,000.

CLLR FOX

3.31 The Tribunal rejected Cllr Fox's contention that he was unaware of Mr Dunlop's involvement with the Pye lands. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Fox was in touch with Mr Dunlop in and around the occasion of the Pye lands vote in Dublin County Council on 16 October 1992, including telephone contact with Mr Dunlop's office on the eve of the vote. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Fox solicited from Mr Dunlop, and was paid the sum of IR£1,000 in cash in return for his continued support for the rezoning of the Pye lands, and the purpose of the payment was to compromise Cllr Fox in the disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor. The said payment was corrupt.

THE ZONING AND PLANNING HISTORY OF THE LANDS POST OCTOBER 1992 MR KELLY'S RETENTION OF MR RICHARD LYNN AND MR PAT LAFFERTY IN THE COURSE OF HIS EFFORTS TO REVERSE
THE OUTCOME OF THE 16 OCTOBER 1992 SPECIAL MEETING AND RELATED ISSUES

4.01 Mr Kelly testified that Mr Lynn and Mr Lafferty were retained by him after the vote in the County Council on 16 October 1992. He believed that he was introduced to Mr Lynn by Cllr Hand. Mr Lynn had in turn introduced him to Mr Lafferty. At the time of their retention by Mr Kelly, both Mr Lynn and Mr Lafferty were full-time employees of Monarch Properties, which was then involved in seeking a change of zoning status for its lands at Cherrywood.¹⁶ Mr Kelly stated that Mr Lynn was a 'replacement' for Mr Dunlop and the purpose of his retention was that he would lobby councillors in an endeavour to reverse the County Council vote of 16 October 1992 which had resulted in the Pye lands losing the C zoning achieved in May 1991.

4.02 Mr Lynn's recollection of involvement with Mr Kelly and the Pye lands was that it commenced in October 1992, after the success of the Mitchell/Fitzgerald vote. He believed that he was approached by Mr Kelly on the day of the vote. Prior to this approach, he was aware of what had just occurred in relation to the lands on that date. Mr Kelly stated to him that he would be interested in discussing the Pye lands. Thereafter, a number of meetings took place between the two men. Mr Lynn believed that at the time of his retention by Mr Kelly it was generally understood that he was a full-time employee of Monarch Properties.

4.03 A call was documented by Mr Dunlop's office from Mr Lynn on 5 October 1992. The record read as follows: 'Richard Lynn—I've been in contact with Aidan Kelly'. Mr Lynn told the Tribunal that he was unable to account for this record as he found it difficult to believe that he had contact with Mr Kelly prior to 16 October 1992. Mr Lynn was at a loss to explain the telephone message. Equally, Mr Dunlop, in the course of his testimony, could not account for why his office records documented a call from Mr Lynn in relation to Mr Kelly. Mr Dunlop stated that he had no recollection of speaking to Mr Lynn about Mr Kelly. Mr Dunlop acknowledged that Mr Lynn was known to him, given his role in lobbying councillors in relation to the rezoning of the Cherrywood lands.

4.04 Mr Lynn told the Tribunal that he had nothing to do with drafting the Lydon/Hand motion which fell following the success of the Mitchell/Fitzgerald motion without being put to a vote when it came before the County Council on 16 October 1992. However, he agreed that it was drafted in a standard format which he himself used for motions. Questioned as to whether it was possible that Mr Kelly had approached him by early October 1992, and whether Mr Lynn, in that regard, had drafted the motion signed by Cllrs Hand and Lydon, Mr Lynn responded that while this was possible, he still did not accept or believe that he had done so, or that he was engaged by Mr Kelly prior to 16 October 1992. Nevertheless, given the format of the motion and the evidence of contact between Mr Lynn and Mr Kelly in early October, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lynn had an involvement in the drafting or preparation of the motion which came before the County Council on 16 October 1992.

THE CABRIOLE CHEQUES

4.05 On 12 October 1992, two cheques were drawn on the Bank of Ireland account of Cabriole Construction Ltd and signed by Mr Kelly in the sums of IR£2,000 and IR£1,000 respectively. The payees of these cheques were a 'Mr Richard Linn' (the IR£2,000 cheque) and 'Patrick Lafferty' (the IR£1,000 cheque).

4.06 The Tribunal established that the 'Richard Linn' cheque was negotiated on 13 October 1992 through a branch of TSB Bank in Grafton Street. The reverse of the IR£2,000 cheque payable to 'Mr Richard Linn' bore the endorsement 'Richard Linne'. The IR£1,000 cheque payable to 'Patrick Lafferty' was negotiated through Bank of Ireland, and the reverse of that cheque suggested that it had been endorsed by the payee.

4.07 In the course of his testimony, Mr Kelly accepted that on 12 October 1992, he wrote cheques in favour of Mr Lynn and Mr Lafferty, but he could not explain to the Tribunal, given his evidence that he had retained Mr Lynn and Mr Lafferty subsequent to 16 October 1992, why such payments had been made by Cabriole Construction Ltd.

4.08 In relation to the 12 October 1992 cheque for IR£2,000 payable to 'Mr Richard Linn', Mr Lynn told the Tribunal that the name which appeared on that cheque was not his name and that he did not endorse it and that he had never been in the bank in which it was endorsed. He told the Tribunal that in 1992 he had one bank account, namely an account at Bank of Ireland in Dundalk, and had no other operative account at that time. Mr Lynn stated that it was possible that his partner Ms Eileen Murphy had an account in TSB circa 1992. Mr Lynn told the Tribunal that the endorsement on the back of the cheque was in neither his nor Ms Murphy's handwriting.

4.09 With regard to the cheque drawn on Cabriole Construction Ltd and made payable to 'Patrick Lafferty' dated 12 October 1992, Mr Lynn stated that he was not aware of any relationship between Mr Kelly and Mr Lafferty prior to Mr Kelly having retained Mr Lynn. It was Mr Lynn who brought Mr Lafferty to the Pye project.

4.10 In the course of his evidence, Mr Lafferty accepted that the cheque for IR£1,000 dated 12 October 1992, was a cheque to him. Mr Lafferty testified that the endorsement on the back of the cheque appeared to be in the writing of his partner Ms Patricia Fearon. While Mr Lafferty agreed that the existence of the cheque suggested that he had met Mr Kelly prior to 12 October 1992, he maintained that he could not recall that period at all. Mr Lafferty stated that he had been brought into the Pye project by Mr Lynn to help with architectural and design work for the purposes of a planning permission application. He stated that he could not recall his first meeting with Mr Kelly.

4.11 Mr Lynn was unable to account to the Tribunal for the Cabriole Construction Ltd cheque to Mr Lafferty dated 12 October 1992, having regard to his evidence that he only introduced Mr Lafferty to the Pye project after his own engagement by Mr Kelly.

4.12 Notwithstanding the testimonies of Mr Kelly, Mr Lynn and Mr Lafferty with regard to the two cheques drawn on the account of Cabriole Construction Ltd on 12 October 1992, the Tribunal believed that Mr Kelly, for a reason or reasons unknown to the Tribunal, paid cheques for IR£2,000 (to Mr Lynn) and IR£1,000 (to Mr Lafferty) .

THE EVENTS LEADING TO THE SPECIAL MEETING OF 2 NOVEMBER 1993

4.13 Mr Kelly and Mr Lynn acknowledged Mr Lynn's involvement in lobbying councillors in support of the reinstatement of a C zoning on the Pye lands, prior to this issue being debated and voted on at County Council level in November 1993. Mr Kelly told the Tribunal that generally, however, Mr Lynn did not report back to him in detail on his lobbying efforts in relation to the Pye lands.

4.14 In the course of his testimony, Mr Lynn described the reason for his retention by Mr Kelly in the following terms:

'I was taken in not just to provide, if you like, a correction to the zoning. What had to be done and having spoken to people in relation to where it was. It appeared to me that what I had to do was to create a proposal that would be acceptable locally and would be acceptable by management. And that could go forward and then we might be able to reverse the decision of the zoning. But in the context of a known development and known acceptable development.'

4.15 Mr Lynn believed that the first work undertaken by him for Mr Kelly was the drafting of a pamphlet entitled 'Gateway to the mountains', a document which was probably created in late 1992 or early 1993. Mr Lynn described this document as having been well received. Mr Lynn acknowledged, however, as suggested by Tribunal Counsel, that he had 'a fairly uphill task' given that the C zoning had been overturned in October 1992. He acknowledged that the only people who could reverse this were the councillors. He described his work in relation to the Pye lands as 'trying to convince the members of the Council that this proposal [for a C and E zoning] was a good proposal.' Furthermore, Mr Lynn had to 'dilute the Manager's opposition to having the site developed as a full district centre.'

4.16 In October 1993, a motion in the names of Cllrs Hand, Lohan, Lydon, Fox and Matthews was lodged with the County Council. This motion proposed that the changes made to the Draft Development Plan map, following the October 1992 vote, be disallowed, and that the Pye lands revert to the 1991 Draft Development zoning. Mr Layden acknowledged that he met Cllr Lohan and wrote to him on 6 October 1993, enclosing a map for his attention. Mr Layden told the Tribunal that he was not involved in obtaining the signatures of the five councillors who signed the motion in support of the Pye lands¹⁷. Insofar as such councillors gave evidence to the Tribunal, each testified that they signed the motion at the request of Cllr Hand. The evidence suggested that it was Mr Kieran O'Malley (planning consultant) who drafted this motion. On 4 October 1993, Mr O'Malley also wrote to Mr Kelly enclosing details of the composition of the County Council and offering to make contact with councillors whom he knew, in advance of the 1993 vote.

4.17 By November 1993, opposition to the proposal to rezone the Pye lands was continuing. Cllrs Buckley and Doohan were signatories to a motion which came before the County Council on 2 November 1993, and which sought to confirm the 1983 zonings of E, A and C1 for the Pye lands, the zonings which had been achieved in October 1992 by virtue of the Mitchell/Fitzgerald motion.

4.18 However on 2 November 1993, the Buckley/Doohan motion was defeated. The motion signed by Cllrs Hand, Lohan, Lydon, Fox and Matthews was then put to a vote, with 36 councillors voting in favour and 27 against. As a consequence of this vote, the Pye lands regained their 1991 Draft zoning of C and E. This zoning was in due course confirmed on the map when the 1993 County Dublin Development Plan by the County Council was adopted on 10 December 1993.

4.19 Mr Layden acknowledged that his intervention in 1993 in lobbying councillors in support of Mr Kelly's ambitions for the Pye lands was vital, as, for example, the Progressive Democrat councillors who had supported the Mitchell/Fitzgerald motion in October 1992 reversed their earlier positions on the Pye rezoning issue and supported Mr Kelly's position in November 1993.

4.20 Mr Lynn acknowledged to the Tribunal that following the 2 November 1993 vote, it was believed that the way was then clear for a planning permission application for retail development to be made in relation to the lands. He acknowledged, however, that the motion passed on 2 November 1993 resulted only in the changes which had been made in October 1992 to Map 23 being deleted, and a C and E zoning being adopted. The amendment which had been made in June 1993 to the Written Statement, namely that it would be County Council policy to have hotel and tourism-related and light industry development on the lands, was unaffected by the success of the motion. On 12 November 1993, the Written Statement, having been voted on in June 1993, was confirmed by the councillors without a vote.

4.21 In late 1994, Mr Kelly and Cabriole Ltd set about applying for planning permission for retail development on the Pye lands,¹⁸ pursuant to the C and E zonings achieved in the 1993 Plan.

4.22 The inconsistency between the contents of the Written Statement and what was contained in the map was discovered when the application for planning permission was made for a retail development on the lands. Mr Kelly's ambitions were thus met with resistance by the Council Manager, whose views were communicated to his and Mr Layden's representative at a meeting on 19 December 1994.

4.23 As testified to by Mr Willie Murray (the Planning Officer in Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Council in 1994), in light of what was contained at paragraph 3.2.9 of the Written Statement pertaining to the 1993 Development Plan, the extent of the retail development sought by Cabriole Construction Ltd in late 1994 for the Pye lands, in the opinion of the Manager and the County Council Planners, constituted a material contravention of the 1993 Plan.

4.24 In the course of his testimony, Mr Lynn agreed with the suggestion that when the strategy for the reversal of what had occurred on 16 October 1992 was being agreed prior to the 2 November 1993 vote, no one appeared to have been aware that, in addition to changing the map, a motion would be required to change the Written Statement vis-à-vis the Pye lands, as voted on in June 1993. Mr Lynn acknowledged that the councillors' vote on 12 November 1993 in relation to the Written Statement effectively operated to overturn what they had voted for in relation to the lands on 2 November 1993. Mr Lynn stated that nobody had alerted the councillors to this fact. As a consequence, because of the limitation in the Written Statement, the planning permission application made in late 1994 received a negative reaction from the Council Manager.¹⁹

THE PAYMENT OF IR£34,848 TO PROPERTY DEVELOPMENT SERVICES LTD IN OCTOBER 1994

4.25 Property Development Services Ltd was paid IR£34,848 on 14 October 1994 by ACC Bank on behalf of Cabriole Construction Ltd/Mr Kelly.

4.26 Property Development Services Ltd was a company which was incorporated on 9 July 1993. Its registered Directors and Shareholders were Ms Eileen Murphy and Ms Patricia Fearon, the spouses/partners of Mr Lynn and Mr Lafferty respectively. Neither Mr Lynn nor Mr Lafferty was ever a registered director or shareholder of this company. Mr Lynn, in the course of his testimony, stated that he provided consultancy services to Property Development Services Ltd, as had Mr Lafferty. Neither was an employee of the company. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lynn and Mr Lafferty effectively controlled the company and were in effect the beneficiaries of the monies received by it, notwithstanding that on paper neither had any connection to it.

4.27 Mr Lynn described the company as having been established to carry out activity such as that for which he and Mr Lafferty were retained by Mr Kelly in relation to the Pye lands. It was Mr Lynn's testimony that while he was an employee of Monarch Properties Ltd in the period in question, he operated, together with Mr Lafferty, an independent business of providing services to third parties such as Mr Kelly, services which Mr Lynn stated included assessing the best development potential for a site and in that regard interfacing with elected members of the Council. Mr Lynn did not like the term 'lobbying.'

4.28 Mr Lynn acknowledged that when initially providing information to the Tribunal in relation to this module in March 2006 he did not then refer to the fact that he had provided his services to Mr Kelly via Property Development Services Ltd (PDS Ltd).²⁰ Nor did Mr Lynn refer to a company, Cedarcastle Investments Ltd,²¹ which, it transpired, had a connection to Mr Lynn's involvement in the years 1997/8 with the Pye lands. Mr Lynn stated that he had not done so as he did not consider these matters to be 'relevant'.

4.29 On 11 January 2007 the Tribunal wrote to Mr Lynn, requesting him to set out in detail any payments he had received in relation to the Pye lands either from Mr Kelly (Cabriole) or from Mr Joe O'Reilly/Castlethorn Developments Ltd²², and in response Mr Lynn furnished his statement on 19 January 2007 wherein he stated:

I was a consultant with PDS Ltd, a company which provided consultancy services. Aidan Kelly/Cabriole Construction Ltd retained PDS Ltd to assist with the Pye site and I believe a payment of IR£34,848 including VAT was received from Cabriole Construction Ltd by PDS Ltd on the 14th October 1994.

I believe this fee would have partly covered work to date on the zoning and planning application made on the site. There were significant fees outstanding in relation to work on the completion of the first planning application, the whole reassessment of the project, and the subsequent preparation of the second planning application.

I was in discussions with Aidan Kelly regarding a possible equity share in the project, but these negotiations came to nothing and were terminated on the appointment of the Receiver and after his appointment, neither I nor, to the best of my knowledge, PDS Ltd had any other involvement with Aidan Kelly or Cabriole Construction Ltd with regard to the Pye lands.

Joe Reilly/Castlethorn Developments Ltd retained the services of Richard Lynn & Associates Ltd as consultants and payments were made by Alice Developments Ltd [a company associated with Mr O'Reilly/Castlethorn] through Cedarcastle Investments Ltd, acting as agents for Richard Lynn & Associates Ltd, as follows

- 8 October 1998 IR£41,140
- 24 November 1998 IR£41,140
- 6 January 1999 IR£42,350.

4.30 Mr Lynn testified that the payment received in October 1994 from Cabriole Construction Ltd constituted the fee of approximately IR£25,000–

²⁰ Mr Lynn however did make reference to this company in an affidavit sworn on 8 May 2006.

IR£30,000 which he believed he had negotiated with Mr Kelly, following his retention. Mr Lynn stated that the October 1994 payment of IR£34,848 was the only payment received from Mr Kelly/Cabriole. The subsequent payments referred to in his 2007 statement were paid following the acquisition of the Pye lands by Mr Joe O'Reilly/Castlethorn Developments Ltd. These monies were paid to Cedarcastle Investments Ltd, which, Mr Lynn testified, invoiced Alice Developments Ltd on behalf of Richard Lynn & Associates Ltd.

4.31 Documentation furnished to the Tribunal showed that PDS Ltd opened an account in TSB, on the signatures of the directors Ms Murphy and Ms Fearon, on 5 November 1993. Mr Lynn explained that the first lodgment of IR£3,500 to that account was a sum contributed to equally by himself and Mr Lafferty in order to open the account. On 24 August 1994, a small lodgment of IR£359 was made and there followed in October 1994 the lodgment of the IR£34,848 fee received from Mr Kelly/Cabriole Ltd. A perusal of the accounts of PDS Ltd showed that for the twenty five months ending 31 July 1995 the company had a turnover of IR£28,000. Mr Lynn acknowledged that this sum in all probability represented the payment (less VAT) which had been made by Mr Kelly/Cabriole Ltd in October 1994. On 7 July 1995, a sum of IR£11,000 was debited to the TSB account of PDS Ltd and paid into an account of Lyncan & Associates (a company co-owned by Mr Lynn and his wife, in which, Mr Lynn stated, Mr Lafferty had no interest).

4.32 The evidence to the Tribunal suggested that the services provided by Mr Lynn and Mr Lafferty to third parties in the period 1993 to 1997 were billed for by PDS Ltd.

4.33 It was Mr Lynn's testimony that PDS Ltd and Lyncan & Associates were wound up by the time Richard Lynn & Associates Ltd²³ was incorporated on 26 November 1997. Mr Lynn testified that after Richard Lynn & Associates was set up he invoiced for services provided by him to third parties via this company, and via Cedarcastle Investments Ltd. It was through Cedarcastle Investments Ltd that Mr Lynn invoiced Alice Developments Ltd subsequent to his retention by Mr O'Reilly/Castlethorn Developments.

²³ Mr Lafferty had no involvement in this company. Post 1996 he operated as a sole trader in relation to services provided by him to third parties and in that capacity he also provided services to the new owners of the Pye lands.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF MR LYNN AND MR LAFFERTY IN THE ATTEMPTS MADE BY MR KELLY AND MR LAYDEN TO AMEND THE 1993 WRITTEN STATEMENT AND TO OBTAIN PLANNING PERMISSION FOR A RETAIL DEVELOPMENT ON THE LANDS

4.34 In the course of his testimony Mr Kelly acknowledged that the policy objective for the Pye lands as contained in the Written Statement continued to present a serious problem for him in 1995. By late January 1995 Mr Kelly and Cabriole Construction Ltd were under financial pressure from ACC Bank and Mr Layden/Donlay Ltd. Mr Kelly was under pressure to put lands up for sale in order to defray the liabilities of Cabriole Construction Ltd. A sale of the lands would only be effective if it had the benefit of planning permission.

4.35 The evidence to the Tribunal was that there were a number of options put forward concerning the impediment which paragraph 3.2.9 of the Written Statement presented. Discussions took place with County Council management, at which it was suggested by Mr Kelly that the policy objective in the Written Statement could be achieved if the retail development that Mr Kelly wanted could be undertaken on the Pye lands located closest to old Dundrum village.

4.36 However, Mr Kelly also testified that in early 1995 a decision was made to the effect that a motion would be put down in the County Council in an effort to delete paragraph 3.2.9. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lynn was retained by Mr Kelly to liaise with councillors and to put in place the necessary motion. A perusal of correspondence passing between Mr Kelly and Mr Layden in mid-1995, and between Mr Kelly and ACC Bank, revealed that one of the major objectives in the period April to June 1995 was to have paragraph 3.2.9 of the Written Statement (referred to in the correspondence as the 'objective note') deleted.

4.37 On 15 June 1995 Mr Kelly arranged to send Mr Layden a copy of a 'zoning motion' which, the Tribunal was satisfied, probably referred to the motion which it was proposed to bring to the Council. In the course of further correspondence with Mr Layden on 19 June 1995, Mr Kelly advised that Mr Lynn was dealing with the matter on his behalf. Mr Kelly told the Tribunal that the 1995 motion which sought a variation of the 1993 Dublin County Development Plan by the deletion therefrom of paragraph 3.2.9 was signed by Cllrs Fox and Matthews.

4.38 As he had done in regard to the November 1993 motion, Mr Layden acknowledged to the Tribunal that he canvassed a number of councillors in support of the motion which proposed to delete the 'objective note' from the 1993 Written Statement. In a letter written by Mr Layden on 21 June 1995 to Mr

Tom Linanne (an associate of Mr Kelly's), Mr Layden advised Mr Kelly of his intention to contact a number of named councillors (a mixture of Fianna Fáil, Fine Gael and Progressive Democrats) and to contact Mr Séamus Brennan, a local TD, in relation to the issue.

4.39 Mr Layden acknowledged, in the course of his evidence, that in mid-1995 an agreement had been reached whereby a sum of IR£75,000 (in two tranches of IR£25,000 and IR£50,000) would be paid to Mr Lynn and Mr Lafferty if the 'objective note' was removed from the Written Statement. Mr Layden stated that this fee related both to their work with regard to the attempt to delete the 'objective note' and work put in by them in relation to the preparation of a planning permission application in relation to the Pye lands.

4.40 While both Mr Lynn and Mr Lafferty, in the course of their respective testimonies, believed that any fees agreed in 1995 related to their work in connection with a planning permission application, the Tribunal was satisfied that such agreed fees also encompassed lobbying work which Mr Lynn, in particular, was undertaking at that time in the attempt to secure an amendment to the Written Statement.

4.41 Whatever the fees agreed between Mr Kelly and Messrs Lynn and Lafferty in 1995, it appears that same were never paid. The motion in the names of Cllrs Matthews and Fox was not pursued.

4.42 In January 1996, ACC Bank appointed a receiver over the Pye lands in the ownership of Cabriole, DPIC and Dalehall. Following the acquisition of the Pye lands by an intermediary, the lands were ultimately acquired by Mr Joe O'Reilly/Castlethorn Developments Ltd. As already stated, Mr Lynn, by then operating as Richard Lynn & Associates, was duly retained by Mr O'Reilly/Castlethorn Developments Ltd as a lobbyist.

4.43 The evidence before the Tribunal established that in due course the impediment which the Written Statement presented for the development of the Pye lands as a major retail centre was ultimately overcome by locating the proposed retail development on that portion of the Pye lands which adjoined the southern portion of Dundrum village centre.

MR LYNN AND CEDARCASTLE INVESTMENTS LTD

4.44 In the course of his evidence, Mr Lynn confirmed that he was neither a Director nor a Shareholder of Cedarcastle Investments Ltd, although he acknowledged telling the Tribunal in 2000²⁴ that he was a Director of that company but had corrected this in a further interview in 2002.

4.45 Mr Lynn confirmed to the Tribunal that the principal dealing of Cedarcastle Investments Ltd was collecting professional fees from clients to whom Mr Lynn, via Richard Lynn & Associates, provided services. Cedarcastle Investments Ltd invoiced such clients and in due course Mr Lynn, via Richard Lynn & Associates, invoiced Cedarcastle Investments Ltd for funds. Mr Lynn acknowledged, however, that, notwithstanding his use of Cedarcastle Investments Ltd for this purpose, it was the case that Richard Lynn & Associates itself also invoiced clients directly for the work it carried out.

4.46 Questioned as to why Richard Lynn & Associates Ltd could not have done this in all instances, Mr Lynn stated that he was using Cedarcastle Investments Ltd to manage the cash flow of Richard Lynn & Associates Ltd.

4.47 The evidence established that the first invoice issued by Cedarcastle Investments Ltd to a third party was on 2 September 1998, and its invoicing functions on behalf of Richard Lynn & Associates Ltd appeared to have concluded as of 5 October 2000. The total sum invoiced by Cedarcastle Investments Ltd on behalf of Richard Lynn & Associates Ltd in that timeframe was IR£653,000, (together with VAT of £137,130).

MR LYNN'S USE OF CEDARCASTLE INVESTMENTS LTD TO INVOICE DUNLOE
EWART/CHERRYWOOD PROPERTIES LTD FOR SERVICES PROVIDED BY RICHARD LYNN & ASSOCIATES TO THAT ENTITY IN THE YEARS 1997–8 IN RELATION TO THE ZONING OF THE CHERRYWOOD LANDS

4.48 In the course of his testimony in this module, Mr Lynn acknowledged that in relation to the work done by Richard Lynn & Associates in connection with the Cherrywood lands in the course of the variation by Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown Council, in 1997 to 1998, of the 1993 Development Plan, he had agreed a success fee for this work with Dunloe Ewart (the then promoters of that development). Mr Lynn's function as a lobbyist for Dunloe Ewart was to seek to adjust the science and technology park zoning on the Cherrywood lands achieved by Monarch Properties Ltd in 1993.

4.49 Mr Lynn had been questioned during the course of the Cherrywood module (Day 667) about the contents of a document dated 20 June 1994 entitled 'Cherrywood' 'zoning costs'. The Tribunal was satisfied that the document referred to prospective costs which would be incurred by Monarch Properties with regard to the Cherrywood rezoning. The document in question under a further heading 'staff—success bonus' included the following reference: 'R Lynn IR£100,000 (similar to JW).'

4.50 With regard to the issue of a success fee the questions put to Mr Lynn in the Cherrywood module on Day 667, when the document of 20 June 1994 was being discussed, were as follows:

Q. 666 'And under the heading zoning costs at 5180, in the same document. Again I think prepared by you. Under the heading of zoning costs, there's a figure for success bonus and yourself for 100,000 pounds?'

A. 'Yeah.'

Q. 667 'Did you prepare this document?'

A. 'No, I think Mr Sweeney prepared this one. I don't think I became aware.'

Q. 668 'Were you in fact paid a success?'

A. 'I wasn't no, Chairman.'

Q. 669 'You were never paid a success by—were you paid a success fee by Guardian Royal or by Monarch?'

A. 'I was earlier²⁵ paid a success fee but this related to going forward into the variation and then to the—'

Q. 670 'Thereafter.'

A. 'The next phase thereafter. No I didn't get a success fee of IR£100,000.'

4.51 On Day 719, Mr Lynn agreed that the variation at Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown Council of the 1993 Development Plan had commenced while Monarch Properties/GRE were still owners of the Cherrywood lands. That variation concluded after Dunloe Ewart took over the lands in 1997. Mr Lynn confirmed having been engaged by Dunloe Ewart in relation to the variation, on a success fee basis.

4.52 On Day 719, Mr Lynn acknowledged that he had previously told the Tribunal that he had not received such a fee and said that save for IR£7,500 he had not been paid a success fee by Monarch/GRE. He further acknowledged that he had not told the Tribunal when giving evidence in the Cherrywood module that he had in fact received a success fee totalling IR£200,000 (plus VAT) from Dunloe Ewart (paid by Cherrywood Properties Ltd) in respect of work carried out by Richard Lynn & Associates Ltd during the review by Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Council of the 1993 Dublin County Development Plan.

4.53 Mr Lynn sought to justify his failure to disclose this information concerning the payment of a success fee on the basis that he interpreted the question put to him in the context of his relationship with Monarch/GRE and that his emphasis when replying to the question was not on having been paid a success fee specifically by Monarch/GRE. He acknowledged however that he did not have to be asked that question in order to have volunteered that information but maintained that it had not crossed his mind to do so.

THE MANNER IN WHICH MR LYNN/RICHARD LYNN & ASSOCIATES INVOICED
FOR AND RECEIVED THE IR£200,000 SUCCESS FEE FROM DUNLOE EWART
IN RELATION TO THE CHERRYWOOD LANDS

4.54 Mr Lynn agreed that up to January 1998 he had invoiced Dunloe Ewart/Cherrywood Properties Ltd, with regard to work he was doing on Cherrywood, via Richard Lynn & Associates. However, by the autumn of 1998, the services being provided by Richard Lynn & Associates to Dunloe Ewart in relation to the Cherrywood lands (and to Mr Joe O'Reilly/Castlethorn in relation to the Pye lands) were being invoiced by Cedarcastle Investments Ltd.

4.55 Invoices totalling IR£653,000 together with VAT of IR£137,000 were issued by Cedarcastle Investments Ltd between September 1998 and October 2000. Alice Developments Ltd were invoiced IR£124,360 (inclusive of VAT) in relation to the works done in relation to the Pye lands while Cherrywood Properties Ltd were invoiced for IR£242,000 (inclusive of VAT) in relation to the Cherrywood lands.²⁶ Mr Lynn told the Tribunal that larger invoices were issued by Cedarcastle Investments Ltd rather than Richard Lynn & Associates Ltd.

4.56 Mr Lynn acknowledged that no portion of the IR£653,000 invoiced by Cedarcastle Investments Ltd and paid to it was drawn down by Richard Lynn & Associates until January 2001. Mr Lynn stated that when he required money, Richard Lynn & Associates duly invoiced Cedarcastle Investments Ltd. The invoices put in by Richard Lynn & Associates to Cedarcastle did not necessarily match the invoices which had been issued by Cedarcastle Investments Ltd to the clients of Richard Lynn & Associates, in relation to any specific project.

4.57 Mr Lynn was questioned by Tribunal Counsel as to how this system assisted the cash flow of Richard Lynn & Associates. Mr Lynn stated that he could not advise further in relation to this issue save that this was the system ‘good bad or indifferent’ that he had utilised to manage his cash flow. Asked why Richard Lynn & Associates had not simply opened a deposit account to hold the funds, Mr Lynn stated that he had chosen to hold the funds in Cedarcastle Investments Ltd. He agreed that neither the books of the paying company (be that Cherrywood Properties Ltd (on behalf of Dunloe Ewart) or Alice Developments Ltd (on behalf of Castlethorn Construction)), nor the books of the ultimate recipient of the funds (Richard Lynn & Associates), showed that those payments were being made to Richard Lynn & Associates. Mr Lynn stated that he never sought interest from Cedarcastle Investments Ltd with regard to the money it held, although he suggested, on Day 719, that he was in negotiation with the Directors of Cedarcastle Investments Ltd in relation to this issue.

4.58 The last recorded invoice by Richard Lynn & Associates to Cedarcastle Investments Ltd to draw down funds was on 2 January 2002. As of that date, there remained a balance of funds in Cedarcastle Investments Ltd. Mr Lynn told the Tribunal that in 2000 Richard Lynn & Associates ceased using Cedarcastle Investments Ltd as a mechanism to invoice clients.

4.59 The Tribunal rejected Mr Lynn’s evidence concerning the receipt by him of a success fee IR£200,000 in relation to the Cherrywood lands.

CHAPTER SIX - LISSENHALL MODULE

INTRODUCTION

1.01 This module concerned successful attempts in the early 1990s to rezone two adjoining parcels of land at Lissenhall, north of Swords, Co. Dublin, and close to the M1, the main Dublin–Belfast road.

1.02 Nineteen witnesses gave evidence when the module was heard in public between 23 March and 5 April 2006. Information provided to the Tribunal by Cllr Cyril Gallagher was read into the record on Day 629 (30 March 2006).

1.03 The parcel of land to the north (comprising approximately 18.5 acres) belonged to Rayband Ltd. (the Rayband lands). These lands were acquired in 1989 from Walls Properties Ltd for IR£277,500. The shareholders of Rayband Ltd (“Rayband”) at that time were Mr Michael Hughes, John J. O’Brien Churchtown Ltd (a company owned by Mr P.J. Moran, a developer, and his family) and IFG Securities Ltd (a company whose shareholders included members of the Moran family, Mr Richard Hayes and Mr Edward Hallanan).

1.04 Prior to their acquisition by Rayband, the lands (the Lissenhall lands) had been brought to the attention of Mr Hughes by Mr Tim Collins. Mr Collins was known to Mr Hughes through work Pilgrim Associates (Architects) had done for Rayband in relation to lands at Clonskeagh, Co. Dublin which were owned, and subsequently sold, by Rayband. Mr Collins was a partner in Pilgrim.

1.05 The Tribunal was told that after Mr Hughes and Mr P. J. Moran (also known as Joe Moran) had viewed the Lissenhall lands, a decision was made to acquire them. Subsequent to their purchase, Rayband’s immediate plan for the lands was to obtain planning permission for a residential development. This plan, if it was to come to fruition, would require a material contravention vote of Dublin County Council, given the lands’ then mainly agricultural zoning¹ status in the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan. A planning application which sought permission to construct 120 houses on the lands was prepared by Mr Tim Rowe of Pilgrim Associates, and lodged with Dublin County Council on 8 September 1989.

1.06 The Tribunal was satisfied that both prior to and during the consideration of that planning application, Rayband was alert to the need to lobby councillors, in order to ensure a positive outcome to the necessary material contravention motion. A memorandum of a meeting of 31 August 1989 attended by Mr P. J. Moran, Mr Hughes, Mr Collins, Mr Rowe and Mr Shane Redmond (a Swords-based auctioneer) recorded the intention of the Rayband interests to meet the County Council's chief planner, in advance of the submission of the planning application. It also recorded the intention to canvass the support of councillors in the Fingal area for the proposed development. Mr Redmond was retained by Rayband to assist in the lobbying of local councillors, an endeavour for which, if the planning permission was granted, Mr Redmond was to be paid a consultancy fee of IR£10,000. Moreover, it would appear that he, together with another firm of auctioneers, would in due course be awarded the franchise to sell the newly constructed houses on the site. Mr P. J. Moran said in evidence that he did not believe he ever met with Mr Shane Redmond, but the Tribunal was satisfied from the available documentary evidence that he did meet with Mr Redmond.

1.07 Mr Redmond began his lobbying work after the meeting of 31 August 1989, as was evident from a communication which passed between Mr Rowe and Mr Hughes on 14 September 1989 when Mr Rowe sent Mr Hughes a list of the Fingal councillors which he had received from Mr Redmond. The content of this letter also suggested that by that stage, Mr Redmond had approached local councillors about the planning permission application, as in the correspondence he conveyed the concerns of councillors regarding access onto the dual carriageway from the lands. The letter advised that Pilgrim Architects were addressing those concerns and attempting to alleviate any potential problems. Mr Rowe also advised Mr Hughes that 'it is important that Shane be left to do his work, and that he be the person to make the necessary representations to the councillors. He will report and advise if either ourselves or yourselves are needed for any particular purpose.'

1.08 By late September 1989, Mr Redmond was in a position to provide local councillors with information concerning the personnel behind Rayband. The issue of access was the subject of a discussion on 17 October 1989 between Mr P. J. Moran, Mr Hughes, Mr Collins and Mr Redmond. However, it would appear that the concerns regarding access to the lands became moot in November 1989 following the lodging by Lissenhall Kennels (a canine quarantine facility serving Dublin Airport located close to the Rayband lands) of an objection to Rayband's planning application for a residential development, an objection supported by the Department of Food and Agriculture. Rayband's planning permission application was duly withdrawn on 29 November 1989. The Tribunal was satisfied that following the withdrawal of this application, Rayband's attention turned to the prospect of getting its lands rezoned in the course of the review of the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan, which was by then underway.

1.09 The parcel of lands to the south of the Rayband lands belonged to Mr Declan Duffy. By a side agreement, Mr Duffy agreed with Rayband in March 1993 that Rayband would seek the rezoning of both parcels of land and would bear all associated costs, on condition that in the event of the Duffy lands being rezoned, he would cede two acres of his lands to Rayband.²

1.10 The Rayband lands were zoned B (agricultural) and the Duffy lands were zoned G (high amenity) in the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan. The lands were contained in Map 5, apart from the northernmost portion, which was contained in Map 1.

1.11 The lands retained their 1983 rezoning in the 1991 Draft Development Plan when it went on public display between September and December 1991. Paragraph 5.8.12(i) of the 1991 Draft Written Statement stated: ‘ . . . there are 119 hectares of industrial zoned land in Swords of which 36 hectares are developed. A considerable amount of undeveloped lands have planning permission for development. There are therefore sufficient serviced lands available to accommodate normal demands for the foreseeable future.’

1.12 A number of representations were received in relation to these lands during the display period. One was made by Manahan & Associates on behalf of Rayband and Mr Duffy, objecting to the B zoning on the Rayband lands and the G zoning on the Duffy lands. The covering letter from Manahan & Associates requested that the lands be zoned A (residential), although the body of the submission sought E (industrial) zoning on both parcels of land.

1.13 A motion, proposed by Cllr Seán Ryan and seconded by Cllr Tom Kelleher, resolving not to rezone further lands at Swords was defeated at a special meeting of the County Council held on 17 May 1993. This motion had also proposed that the County Manager set in train arrangements to be presented to Fingal County Council³ to further review the Development Plan for Swords within 12 months. The County Manager had recommended that the existing development strategy for Swords be continued, with no further changes in zoning except where previous commitments dictated.

² In December 1991, prior to the agreement, the Duffy lands were included in a rezoning submission made to the County Council by Rayband.

³ On 1 January 1994 Dublin County Council was separated into three new councils: Fingal County Council, South Dublin County Council and Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Council.

1.14 At a special meeting of the County Council held on 21 May 1993, Cllrs Cyril Gallagher and Anne Devitt proposed a motion they had both signed on 18 March 1993 calling for the lands to be zoned E (industrial). An amending motion was proposed by Cllr Don Tipping and seconded by Cllr Denis O'Callaghan which sought to add the following words: 'and in the light of its proximity to G zoned land that its use be restricted to light industry as defined in the Local Government (Planning and Development) Acts and the regulations made thereunder'. The amendment to the motion was passed unanimously. The Gallagher/Devitt motion to rezone the Lissenhall lands as thereby amended was then passed by 49 votes to 15 with 2 abstentions.

1.15 The changes effected by this vote were identified as Changes 2A and 2B on Map 6, and 4A and 4B on Map 30, in the 1993 amendments to the 1991 Draft Development Plan. (Changes 2A and 4A referred to the Rayband lands and Changes 2B and 4B referred to the Duffy lands.) The 1993 amendments went on public display between July and August 1993, where the lands were shown with a proposed zoning of E. Although the changes to the Lissenhall lands appeared in both Map 6 and Map 30, they were dealt with only in the context of Map 6. By September 1993, objectors had lodged a number of motions which sought, in effect, a reversal of the E zoning which had been achieved in May 1993.

1.16 At a special meeting of the County Council held on 16 September 1993, the Manager's report recommending that there be no change in the zoning of any substantial areas of land north of Swords was considered. The Manager also recommended that a study be undertaken of the issues listed with a view to adopting a coherent plan for the area within a year of setting up the new Fingal County Council. These proposals were not voted on at this meeting.

1.17 On 21 September 1993, the Manager further recommended in a revised report that in the event of the members wishing to rezone lands pending the recommended study, such extra zoning should be kept to a minimum. Motions recommending that the Manager's report and revised report be adopted were both defeated at this special meeting.

1.18 On the following day, a motion in the names of Cllrs Ryan and Kelleher adjourned from the previous day's special meeting recommending that the lands referred to as 2A on Map 6 be zoned B (agriculture) was withdrawn. The result of the withdrawal of that motion was that the zoning on the Rayband lands was confirmed E.

1.19 A further motion (relating to the Duffy lands), proposed by Cllr Seán Ryan and seconded by Cllr Tom Kelleher, that the lands identified as 2B on Map 6 be zoned G ('to protect and improve high amenity areas') was defeated when 29 councillors voted in favour with 33 against.

1.20 Cllrs Tipping and O'Callaghan respectively proposed and seconded a motion that the lands referred to as 2B on Map 6 revert to its former proposed zoning of B and G in the 1991 Draft Development Plan. This proposal was also defeated when 29 councillors voted in favour with 33 against.

1.21 A proposal by Cllr Joe Higgins and seconded by Cllr Gus O'Connell, that the lands at Lissehall identified as Change 2B on Map 6 be zoned G was defeated, with 24 votes in favour and 33 against. Change 2B Map 6 was then likewise confirmed.

1.22 Accordingly, when the 1993 Development Plan was adopted at the special meeting on 10 December 1993, the Rayband lands and the Duffy lands were zoned E.

MR FRANK DUNLOP'S RETENTION

2.01 At a meeting in late 1992, probably on 2 November, Mr Tim Collins introduced Mr Dunlop to Rayband representatives Mr Michael Hughes and Mr Colm Moran (representing Mr P. J. Moran of IFG).

2.02 Mr Dunlop was engaged to lobby councillors to support the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands. He conducted such lobbying from early 1993 to September 1993.

2.03 In the course of his October 2000 statement, Mr Dunlop informed the Tribunal that he had received fees of not less than IR£5,000 in respect of the Lissenhall lands. In a subsequent statement on 21 March 2006, following the Tribunal's provision to him of documentation relating to the Lissenhall Module, Mr Dunlop acknowledged that he had been paid a total of IR£27,625 (IR£25,000 net of VAT) in relation to the Lissenhall project. This figure was confirmed by Mr Dunlop in the course of his evidence. It comprised payments of IR£12,500 on 5 January 1993, IR£10,000 plus IR£2,100 VAT (IR£12,100) on 2 July 1993, and IR£2,500 plus IR£525 VAT on 1 November 1993 which was paid in the form of two cheques for IR£3,000 and IR£25 respectively.⁴

2.04 The payment of IR£12,500 on 5 January 1993 was by cheque drawn on the account of IFG Securities, payable to Frank Dunlop. The cheque was lodged to the Irish Nationwide Building Society account of Mr Dunlop and his wife, one of his so-called 'war-chest' accounts. No invoice was raised in respect of this payment, and it did not include VAT. However, IFG Securities Ltd recorded the payment in their books as inclusive of VAT, thereby indicating an amount of IR£10,330.88 plus IR£2,169.42 VAT. Subsequently, IFG's books were adjusted, and the IR£2,169.42 was added back, correctly representing the fact that the IR£12,500 had been paid to Mr Dunlop without VAT. IFG's accountant, Mr Donal Lynch told the Tribunal that the decision was made to add back the incorrectly deducted VAT because no invoice had been received from Mr Dunlop. Mr Lynch confirmed that no effort had been made to obtain an invoice from Mr Dunlop. He was unable to explain why an invoice was neither sought nor expected from Mr Dunlop.

⁴ The payment of IR£3,000 and IR£25 (IR£3,025) related to an invoice dated 28 September 1993 for an amount of IR£2,500 plus IR£525 VAT (IR£3,025).

2.05 Rayband's books and records revealed an explanatory note dated 31 December 1993 entitled 'Rayband Ltd, Swords Site'. It followed the entry relating to the IR£12,500 payment to Frank Dunlop and stated: 'Payment 5.1.1994 on IFG Securities Ltd. to F. Dunlop fees in respect of professional fees paid to ensure planning permission on Swords Site.' Mr Lynch confirmed that the date '5.1.1994' should have read '5.1.1993'.

2.06 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop admitted that he regarded this payment as improper and that he treated it entirely differently in his books and records to the later payment of IR£12,100 referred to below.

2.07 The second payment to Mr Dunlop was for IR£12,100 on 2 July 1993. It was made on foot of an invoice for IR£10,000 plus IR£2,100 VAT dated 24 May 1993 raised by Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd and directed to Mr Michael Hughes of Rayband. This invoice was paid by cheque drawn on the account of IFG Securities Ltd payable to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd and lodged to the account of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, as part of a composite lodgement of IR£22,141. Mr Dunlop referred to this payment as a 'success fee'.

2.08 The third payment of IR£3,025 (IR£2,500 plus VAT) was made in November 1993 by cheques on foot of an invoice raised by Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd and addressed to Joe Moran of Rayband Ltd. The cheques were drawn on the account of IFG Securities Ltd. They were lodged to the account of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd and recorded in its books accordingly.

RAYBAND'S AWARENESS OF MR DUNLOP'S INTENTION TO MAKE CORRUPT PAYMENTS TO COUNCILLORS

3.01 Mr Dunlop claimed that in the course of his initial meeting with Mr Collins, Mr Hughes and Mr Colm Moran in November 1992, there was a discussion and an open acknowledgment by those present that politicians would be paid in return for their signature and/or support in the Lissenhall rezoning process.

3.02 In his evidence, Mr Dunlop stated: 'These people said to me that they knew that matters would have to be dealt with in this manner.'

3.03 Mr Dunlop also stated:

'... a discussion took place as to their requirements. And I acknowledged and confirmed that there would be a requirement for payment to politicians and signature and support. This matter arose not from my side of the table. This matter arose in casual conversation, indicating to me that the people on the other side of the table were aware that payments would have to be made to politicians and I confirmed that.'

3.04 Mr Dunlop was asked to identify which of the three individuals (Mr Collins, Mr Hughes or Mr Moran) had raised the topic about payments to councillors. He responded as follows:

'No I can't. But there was a discussion. The discussion took place in the context of what was required and it's in the context of that discussion that it was indicated to me that these people knew that payments would have to be made. And I confirm it. I would not have raised the issue. Or I would not have said other than in oblique terms and watching their reaction as to what my usage of the word 'oblique' would be. These people said to me that they knew that matters would have to be dealt with in this manner.'

3.05 When asked to clarify the language that had been used in the course of the discussion with the three men, Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well, in a conversation that took place. I cannot absolutely say to you what the exact language used was. But it certainly would have been along the lines is that we know what you have to do. And I have a recollection, almost in the context of a jocular way, that one or other of the people present said that the councillors, some councillors were asking for quite a lot of money. That it was known.'

3.06 Mr Dunlop said in evidence that, other than confirming that payments would have to be made, he did not name any councillor, nor had he specified how many would require payment. He did explain to the group that it was likely that some councillors would request payment for their signatures and/or support for any motion and that the support could only be guaranteed by the payment of money. He had confirmed this to the meeting because, given what had been raised by the others present, the 'cat was out of the bag at this stage.'

3.07 Mr Dunlop was certain that Mr Collins, Mr Hughes and Mr Moran were aware, and made their awareness clear to him, that they knew what 'had' to be done, namely that councillors would 'have to be' paid in order to secure their support for the rezoning of the lands. The allegation that they were possessed of knowledge that any such payments would have to be made by Mr Dunlop in the course of his lobbying activities was rejected by Mr Collins, Mr Hughes and Mr Colm Moran.

3.08 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Colm Moran acknowledged that Mr Dunlop had stated that 'it's going to cost money' referring to the rezoning process.

3.09 However, Mr Moran told the Tribunal that he could not recollect if there was a discussion about payments to councillors.

3.10 Mr Colm Moran testified to the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop was unknown to him until Mr Collins recommended that his services be retained because he was good at dealing with rezoning issues. Mr Colm Moran met Mr Dunlop in Mr Dunlop's offices together with Mr Collins and Mr Hughes, and according to Mr Moran, at this meeting, Mr Dunlop was 'running the show', along with Mr Collins, who 'knew the score'. The discussion between them had centred on Mr Dunlop's agreement to lobby the 78 county councillors.

3.11 Responding to Mr Dunlop's evidence that the issue of making payments to councillors emanated from Mr Moran's 'side of the table', Mr Moran said:

'All I say is that—I think what he said one or other of the people present said that some councillors. I assure you I did not—that's not me. And I don't remember any of the other two saying it either. Then on the other hand it could have been said, but I do not recollect it.'

The following exchange took place between Counsel for the Tribunal and Mr Colm Moran:

Q. 768 'Is it possible that it was said by Mr Collins or by Mr Hughes?'

A. 'I don't know. I have my doubts.'

Q. 769 'You have your doubts?'

A. 'Uh-huh.'

Q. 770 'Why is that? Why do you have your doubts Mr Moran?'

A. 'The whole thing was kind of, if you like, unusual for me. I didn't know about it at the time. I know an awful lot more now than I did at that time. At any rate, I didn't know that thing was going to come up. It obviously did come up and Mr Dunlop said it.'

Q. 771 'Yes, I'm sorry, I understood you correctly. You say it came up, Mr Dunlop said it'

A. 'I don't remember that. Mr Dunlop said it came up. I didn't say it came up'

Q. 772 'That's correct. Mr Dunlop said it came up.'

A. 'Yeah'

Q. 773 'Yes, you don't recall either Mr Collins or Mr Hughes saying anything to the effect that'

A. 'No I don't recall it.'

Q. 774 'But they may have. It's possible that they did say it. Is that what you're saying?'

A. 'No I'm not saying that either, no no.'

3.12 Mr Moran was then asked: 'Well are you saying then, Mr Moran, that there was no discussion at that meeting with Mr Dunlop about the pay of some sort of money to councillors?' To this Mr Moran responded: 'What I am saying is I cannot recollect. Certainly—sorry. I don't remember that going on.'

3.13 When again questioned about his recollection as to whether there had been a mention at the meeting about payments to councillors, Mr Moran stated:

'I certainly don't recollect any such thing. On the other hand, my old memory's not as good as it used to be. I don't remember him saying that the councillors had to be paid.'

3.14 Mr Moran was also asked if it was possible that the first payment of IR£12,500 paid to Mr Dunlop, without an invoice, was money intended for councillors. He replied 'No possibility whatsoever'.

3.15 In the course of his evidence, Mr Hughes accounted for Mr Dunlop's retention in the following terms:

'Well, Mr Collins . . . Mr Collins contacted me one day to say that, you know, councillors are going to have to be met. This is—like, me pursuing councillors was useless that you'd want to get someone on board who is able to do the job. And he recommended this meeting with Mr Dunlop.'

Mr Hughes told the Tribunal that Mr Collins had told him that Mr Dunlop was 'a man who had the wherewithal to get councillors' support for your lands to have it rezoned'.

3.16 Mr Hughes told the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop had presented himself as a person who was familiar with the draft Development Plan process and the manner in which the County Council was going about completing the review, and he left Mr Hughes in no doubt but that 'he was very competent in doing this'. According to Mr Hughes, there had been no discussion about other Development Plan projects with which Mr Dunlop was associated. He maintained that the discussions centred on the nature of the lobbying exercise that would have to be carried out, and especially the need for ongoing meetings with councillors in order to refresh their memory in relation to the Lissenhall lands, in view of the number of land rezonings that were on the County Council's agenda.

3.17 It was Mr Hughes' evidence to the Tribunal that there had been no discussion about payments to councillors, nor had any such discussion been initiated from his 'side of the table'. He maintained that 'if it was from our side of the table it would come from me. I did most of the talking at the meeting. And I certainly did not say that.' He also stated that he would have been 'astounded' if anyone had suggested making payments to councillors. He told the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop came across as 'a very polished man' who had stated that he would 'get the site rezoned.'

3.18 Mr Dunlop's fees were discussed at the end of the meeting. Mr Hughes said that he asked for IR£25,000. He, Mr Hughes, reported back to Mr P. J. Moran, recommending the retention of Mr Dunlop. An arrangement was then entered into whereby Mr Dunlop would receive IR£12,500 up front, and a further payment of IR£12,500 in the event that the rezoning was successful.

3.19 Mr Hughes agreed that documentation provided to the Tribunal revealed that by 6 January 1993, Mr Dunlop had received IR£12,500. He claimed not to have knowledge of how this cheque came to be transmitted to Mr Dunlop notwithstanding evidence of a telephone message from Mr Collins to Mr Dunlop's office on 4 January 1993 which stated as follows 'Tim Collins—meeting tomorrow here at 10 o'clock with Mr Michael Hughes'.

3.20 The IFG Securities Ltd cheque in the sum of IR£12,500 received by Mr Dunlop, bore the date 5 January 1993. Mr Hughes claimed that he did not recall any meeting on that date. The Tribunal was satisfied, however, that such a meeting took place and that Mr Dunlop received the cheque from Mr Hughes on that occasion.

3.21 Mr Hughes agreed with the suggestion that he was the person within Rayband who dealt with the rezoning issue. The Tribunal noted that Mr Dunlop's telephone attendance records were replete with efforts by Mr Hughes to contact Mr Dunlop in the course of the rezoning process.

3.22 Mr Hughes denied knowing of Mr Dunlop's practice of making or his intention to make payments to councillors in return for signing motions or supporting the Lissenhall rezoning process, and denied that any such discussion had taken place at the meeting with Mr Dunlop.

3.23 Mr Collins recalled his meeting with Mr Moran, Mr Hughes and Mr Dunlop. He said that Mr Dunlop was given a map and asked to lobby councillors in relation to the Lissenhall lands. He recalled a discussion in relation to Mr Dunlop's fees but could not recollect any discussion as to how Mr Dunlop was to carry out his lobbying or about paying money to councillors. Mr Collins did not believe that anything had been said by himself or his two colleagues, Mr Moran and Mr Hughes, about payments to councillors.

3.24 The Tribunal was satisfied that by late 1992 or early 1993, Mr Collins already had an established business relationship with Mr Dunlop, part of which centred on the development potential of a number of land parcels in north Co. Dublin. In 1990, Mr Collins was instrumental in effecting the introduction of Mr Dunlop to Mr Robert White⁵ which led to Mr White retaining Mr Dunlop to lobby councillors in relation to a material contravention project in Swords.⁶ In January 1993, Mr Collins introduced Mr Dunlop to the promoters of lands at Cloghran (the Cloghran Module) and Kinsealy (the Walls Kinsealy Module).

3.25 In the course of his testimony on Day 631, Mr Collins conceded that he had a more extensive relationship with Mr Dunlop during the course of the making of the 1993 Development Plan than he had previously admitted to. Prior to his testimony in this module, Mr Collins had presented the Tribunal with a completely different picture of his relationship with Mr Dunlop, both generally and in relation to the Lissenhall lands. In a statement dated 28 February 2006 and received by the Tribunal on 1 March 2006, Mr Collins advised as follows:

- 1. As previously advised to the Tribunal, in 1989 I was a Director (Marketing) of Pilgrim Architects. Pilgrim were commissioned by Rayband to prepare and submit a planning application for the lands at Lissenhall, Swords, Co. Dublin. Pilgrim submitted the application but it was refused by the Planning Authorities.*

⁵ See Chapter 14 (the Duff Module).

⁶ On Day 624, when giving evidence in the Duff Module, Mr Collins conceded that it was he who had recommended Mr Dunlop to Mr Robert White, and while claiming not to recollect, he acknowledged that he must have had direct dealings with Mr Dunlop in the course of the latter's retention by Mr White. Prior to making this concession on Day 624, Mr Collins' prior statement to the Tribunal in relation to the matter had not adverted to the role he had played in introducing Mr Dunlop to Mr White.

2. During 1988/89 I became aware of the lands at Lissenhall, Swords, Co. Dublin and considered that they may have potential. I brought them to the notice of Michael Hughes of Rayband and—Rayband subsequently purchased the lands.
3. I had no involvement whatsoever with the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands.
4. I have no knowledge of any submissions made in relation to the rezoning of these lands.
5. As previously explained to the Tribunal, I had no direct relationship business or personal with Frank Dunlop.
6. I introduced Michael Hughes of Rayband to Frank Dunlop as a PR Consultant who may assist him in some way. I have no further dealings with Frank Dunlop in relation to the Lissenhall lands.
7. I personally never received any payments direct or indirect in connection with these lands. As advised at No. 1 above Pilgrim Architects prepared and submitted a planning application for Rayband in relation to these lands and was paid a fee for same.
8. & 9. I am dealing with these two points jointly because they are inextricably linked. Sometime in the mid 90s, I cannot recall the exact date, I was approached by Glen O'Neill to see if the lands at Lissenhall could be bought. I approached Joe Moran, owner of Rayband, to see if he would consider selling. He advised me he was not interested. I have never heard of Province Properties or Universal Management Consultants Limited.
10. As previously advised my only connection with the lands was in 1988/89 where I appointed Michael Hughes of Rayband in the direction of the lands. They (then) in the mid 90s I was asked to approach Joe Moran to see if he would consider selling them.
11. I have no interest legal or beneficial in any of the Lissenhall lands.

3.26 In a subsequent statement to the Tribunal on 30 March 2006, Mr Collins sought to clarify his past relationship with Mr Dunlop in the following terms:

The following is the extent of my dealings with Frank Dunlop:

- a) I introduced Robert White as a client in relation to the Duff lands.
- b) I introduced Rayband Ltd as a client in relation to the Lissenhall lands.
- c) I may have introduced John Butler as a client in relation to the lands at Cloghran.
- d) I introduced [named individual] as a client.
- e) In the late 1990s I became aware of a builder that was trying to raise finance for a project. I introduced the builder to Frank Dunlop. Frank Dunlop effected an introduction to Irish Nationwide Building Society. They refused funding.

3.27 It was clear to the Tribunal that Mr Collins' clarification arose following circulation to him of a brief of documentation by the Tribunal in advance of his public testimony in this module. It contained details of Mr Dunlop's telephone attendance records maintained by his secretary, including details of contact between Mr Collins and Mr Dunlop's office in relation to Lissenhall as well as other land and business projects. In the period from 1 January to 1 June 1993, 62 telephone contacts by Mr Collins to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd were recorded by Mr Dunlop's secretary. These contacts only related to telephone calls from Mr Collins on occasions when Mr Dunlop was unable to speak with him. The Tribunal was satisfied that information contained in the record of telephone contacts maintained by Mr Dunlop's office for 1 July 1993 indicated that by that date Mr Collins had involved himself on Mr Dunlop's behalf in an effort to precipitate payment of the Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoice which had issued on the 24 May 1993. The office note recorded the following:

12:45 Tim Collins—he phoned Joe Moran in IFG who is a brother of Colm Moran. Joe is trying to track down Colm and is a bit annoyed that this thing has not been put to bed. Tim suggested that Frank called Joe Moran at IFG in the afternoon at [number given].

3.28 Another telephone attendance for that same afternoon recorded '4.30 Tim Collins—cheque ready for you at Joe Moran's office Tim Collins (home)'. By 2.30 pm on 2 July 1993, Mr Dunlop's office recorded in a telephone attendance '2.30 Joe Moran—cheque ready 19 Fitzwilliam Square, ask for Donal Lynch', in essence confirming that the cheque was ready for collection that afternoon.

3.29 The Tribunal was satisfied that in his earlier dealings with the Tribunal relating to the Lissenhall lands, Mr Collins did not disclose to the Tribunal the extent of his relationship with Mr Dunlop. The Tribunal was satisfied that the contents of Mr Collins' statement to the Tribunal of 28 February 2006 were inaccurate.

3.30 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he paid Mr Collins IR£2,000 in cash at the end of 1993, and described the payment as a 'finder's fee' relating to the Lissenhall lands. Mr Dunlop maintained that this payment was made at Mr Collins' request and was in respect of Mr Dunlop's introduction to the Lissenhall rezoning project by Mr Collins.

3.31 Mr Collins said he had no recollection of any such payment being made to him by Mr Dunlop in relation to the Lissenhall lands.

3.32 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop did, as he claimed, pay IR£2,000 in cash to Mr Collins at the end of 1993 in relation to his introduction to the Lissenhall project. The payment was probably made at Mr Collins' request in respect of Mr Dunlop's introduction to the Lissenhall rezoning project by Mr Collins. The Tribunal rejected Mr Collins' denial of any recollection of this payment.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS ON MR DUNLOP'S CLAIM THAT MR
HUGHES, MR COLLINS AND MR COLM MORAN KNEW THAT PAYMENTS
WOULD HAVE TO BE MADE TO COUNCILLORS IN THE COURSE OF MR
DUNLOP'S LOBBYING

3.33 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's practice of making payments to councillors to support rezoning projects was known to those who met with him in November 1992 (at the time of his retention as a lobbyist in relation to the Lissenhall lands), namely Mr Collins, Mr Hughes and Mr Colm Moran. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence of what occurred at the November meeting. In all the circumstances, the Tribunal concluded that Messrs Hughes, Collins and Mr Colm Moran acquiesced in the contemplated corrupt activity on the part of Mr Dunlop in relation to the lobbying he was to undertake to secure the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands.

3.34 The Tribunal was satisfied that the primary purpose and motivation for the initial payment of IR£12,500 to Mr Dunlop personally, rather than to his company, without an invoice and without provision for VAT, was to facilitate his easy access to funds for the purpose of making payments to councillors in order to secure their support in the planning process.

3.35 The Tribunal was satisfied that both Mr Hughes and Mr Colm Moran, contrary to their evidence, knew at all relevant times that the manner by which Mr Dunlop was paid IR£12,500 in January 1993 followed upon the understanding which had been articulated at the meeting in November 1992 that he would require funds for payments to councillors.

3.36 The Tribunal was satisfied that a record of a telephone message from Mr Collins to Mr Dunlop's office on 4 January 1993 was accurate. That record stated: 'Tim Collins—meeting tomorrow here at 10 o'clock with Michael Hughes'.

3.37 The Tribunal was satisfied that such a meeting took place and that its purpose was to facilitate the payment of the IR£12,500 cheque to Mr Dunlop.

MR P. J. MORAN

3.38 Mr P. J. Moran acknowledged that he had agreed to Mr Collins' recommendation to retain Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist although he, Mr Moran, had never met Mr Dunlop. He was not at the meetings which had taken place on 2 November 1992 or 5 January 1993. Mr Moran testified that, beyond having inquired about Mr Dunlop and being told that he had a proven record in relation to other rezoning projects, he could not recall having made specific inquiries about what it was Mr Dunlop could contribute as a lobbyist. The following exchange took place between Counsel for the Tribunal and Mr Moran on Day 628:

Q. 349 'What was Mr Dunlop bringing to this enterprise that made it necessary to retain him?'

A. 'He was a professional. I mean, I asked a question what did he do and he was described as a professional who could get—assist and knowing his way around the planning situation, would get planning. He was a professional lobbyist I would call him now.'

Q. 350 'Well insofar as you needed professional planners you had those on board already.'

A. 'No, planners would draw up the plans etc. etc. He was a professional lobbyist.'

Q. 351 'Yes, and who was he going to lobby?'

A. 'I presume the councillors. People who were going to take the decision.'

Q. 352 'And were you aware that Mr Dunlop had an expertise in this area, Mr Moran?'

A. 'I was told he had. I didn't know Mr Dunlop in that capacity at that time other than being a highly regarded member of the, shall I say, of the hierarchy in Ireland.'

3.39 Mr P.J. Moran acknowledged that at some time between November 1992 and 5 January 1993 he had agreed to payment of Mr Dunlop's fees of IR£25,000 in the form of an upfront fee of IR£12,500 and a success fee of the same amount if the rezoning motion succeeded. On Day 628, Mr Moran was asked 'When were you first told about the fee that Mr Dunlop was going to charge?' to which he responded:

'Some days. Sometime, I have no idea. I mean, it would be some time after the three people meeting him. They came back and said he was looking for 25 grand. And they said, you know, that there was no way we should have agreed that kind of sum to him or anything else. And eventually they—somebody told me you have to pay this, is the going rate. If you want it done you have to pay it, he's a professional and you go along and you get it done. At this stage we had spent on this land hundreds of thousands of pounds literally on fees to architects, advisors, and everybody else. And somebody said look, at the end of the day it succeeds. And eventually I think I suggested I'd only give him half of it upfront and half of it when he delivers.'

3.40 Mr Moran accepted that he had authorised the 5 January 1993 payment to Mr Dunlop, although he professed not to have involved himself in the mechanics of any of the payments made to Mr Dunlop.

3.41 Mr Moran claimed to have 'no idea' as to why Mr Dunlop's first payment of IR£12,500 was made without an invoice, and without provision for VAT. Neither had he any recollection of Mr Collins having intervened with him in July 1993 in relation to the payment of Mr Dunlop's success fee. The Tribunal accepted that Mr P.J. Moran did not meet Mr Dunlop and was not involved in the day-to-day activity of IFG and Rayband in the Lissenhall rezoning process. However, it was uncertain as to how much he knew of Mr Dunlop's intention to make corrupt payments to councillors in order to secure their support for the Lissenhall rezoning.

MR COLLINS' EXPECTATION OF A 'FINDERS FEE' FROM MR P. J. MORAN

3.42 The Tribunal was satisfied that from the time the lands were acquired by Rayband, there was an arrangement between Mr Collins and Mr P. J. Moran whereby Mr Collins would be paid a finder's fee. It was clear from Mr Collins' testimony that he appreciated the benefits that rezoning would bring to the lands in terms of the increased value which invariably followed a successful rezoning vote, and that he appreciated that when the lands came to be sold he, Mr Collins, would be in a stronger negotiating position vis à vis his finder's fee because of their rezoned status. The Tribunal was satisfied that the acknowledged existence of the understanding as between Mr P. J. Moran and Mr Collins, for payment of a finder's fee prompted Mr Collins, in late 1992, to recommend the introduction of Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist for the Lissenhall lands for the purposes of assisting in the project to have these lands rezoned for development.

3.43 According to Mr P.J. Moran and Mr Collins, as of the date of their respective testimonies Mr Collins had not been paid a finder's fee despite the lands having been rezoned and despite planning permission having been obtained, because the lands, according to Mr Moran, remained unviable due to an ongoing problem with access.

3.44 As to the issue of the question of Mr Collins' finder's fees generally, the Tribunal, in the course of its enquiries, learned of instances when Mr Collins, in respect of work he had done in relation to a number of landholdings (unrelated to the Rayband lands), had received, or expected to receive, finder's fees equivalent to a percentage of the profits realized by their re-sale or based on the enhanced development potential of such lands.

3.45 Mr Collins acknowledged seven instances where his finder's fee (either already received or expected) was 12.5 per cent, with one instance yielding a fee of 8 per cent.

3.46 In the course of his testimony on Day 631, Mr Collins acknowledged that in some instances his finder's fee had been ring-fenced by means of a shareholding in a corporate structure in respect of which he was the beneficial owner.

3.47 The Tribunal did not establish whether any specific percentage had been agreed with Mr Collins in relation to his expected finder's fee in the context of the Rayband lands, or whether such percentage was to be recognised by an interest in a corporate structure or otherwise. Mr Collins denied he had any beneficial interest in the Rayband lands. Asked on Day 628 about the nature of the finder's fee Mr Collins might expect, Mr P. J. Moran responded: 'I have no idea. He'll come into my office and he'll argue and he'll look for something and he'll get less than he's looking for.'

THE DUFFY LANDS

3.48 There was no evidence to suggest to the Tribunal that the owners of the Duffy lands were ever made aware of what had been discussed between Mr Dunlop and Messrs Hughes, Collins and Colm Moran in November 1992. The Tribunal accepted Mr Declan Duffy's testimony that he never met with Mr Dunlop. There was no evidence to suggest a significant involvement by Mr Duffy in the rezoning process.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF MR SHANE REDMOND IN THE REZONING PROCESS

3.49 In his statement provided to the Tribunal on 22 March 2006 under a heading entitled 'Details of all and any meetings had by me with public representatives and Council Officials, including details of my knowledge of any financial arrangements, payments and meetings in respect of the Lands', Mr Redmond confirmed his involvement in the Lissenhall rezoning process to have been as follows:

In the subsequent joint-submission for industrial re-zoning in respect of the Rayband Duffy lands at Lissenhall at the behest of Rayband, I canvassed support at local level for the proposal and this included representations to local Councillors, Swords Business Association and Swords Community Council together with other local interests.

3.50 Mr Redmond confirmed this involvement in the course of his evidence to the Tribunal. Mr Hughes, in the course of his evidence, acknowledged Mr Redmond's work in this regard, stating 'my recollection is that Shane Redmond would have spoken to local councillors about the rezoning, as he was doing so for the initial Section 4 for the residential. That hadn't changed.'

3.51 On 21 December 1993, Mr Redmond wrote to Mr Colm Moran enclosing an invoice for IR£20,000 plus VAT with regard to: 'Property: Lissenhall Swords, Co. Dublin Ref Michael Hughes and Colm Moran'. In the course of his covering letter, he stated:

I attach herewith my invoice for professional fees in respect of the lands at Lissenhall, Swords, Co. Dublin. I don't have to say how pleased I am that the development plan has now been dealt with in its totality, as it has been a long road for all concerned.

3.52 The evidence established that the invoice was disputed by Rayband, which resulted in further correspondence from Mr Redmond on 1 February 1994 wherein he stated:

. . . in my discussion with Michael Hughes and yourself it was fully agreed that my professional fees would be forthcoming on confirmation of the land being rezoned.

This objective was achieved and my contribution to this end is irrefutable. In the circumstances I would be thankful if you would let me have a cheque in settlement of my fees.

3.53 In the course of his evidence on Day 632, Mr Redmond claimed that the invoice furnished by him in December 1993 represented the fee (which, he claimed, had been agreed) for work which he had done as an intermediary between Rayband and Mr Declan Duffy and which had led ultimately to the concluded purchase agreement in March 1993. Mr Redmond claimed that his invoice had nothing to do with the rezoning of the lands or the lobbying which he himself had engaged in. Furthermore, he maintained that the invoice did not relate to the work he had carried out in 1989. Mr Redmond maintained that when the planning permission application was withdrawn in November 1989, his agreement for a consultancy fee for lobbying work ended.

3.54 Having regard to Mr Redmond's testimony concerning his involvement as a lobbyist in the course of the rezoning process, and also having regard to the evidence of Mr Colm Moran and Mr P. J. Moran, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Redmond's invoice and the monies he subsequently received related at least in part to his lobbying of locally-based councillors in relation to the rezoning issue. The evidence established that Mr Redmond's invoice was discharged (albeit on a revised basis) in 1994 when he received two payments of IR£7,500 each. Mr Redmond acknowledged that he had agreed a fee in 1989 for lobbying work he was to carry out (and did) in relation to the planning permission application. In those circumstances, the Tribunal found it inconceivable, given that he had agreed to lobby councillors in the course of the rezoning campaign in 1993, that when he issued his invoice in December 1993 to the Rayband interests (some two months after the rezoning confirmation), he did not have in mind the work he had undertaken in lobbying councillors, as well as his involvement in the negotiations which took place in the period 1991 to March 1993 between Rayband and the owners of the Duffy lands.

3.55 There was no allegation of any impropriety on the part of Mr Redmond vis à vis his lobbying of councillors during the rezoning process.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER (FF)

4.01 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he paid a sum of IR£1,000 cash to Cllr Gallagher in return for his signature on the Lissenhall lands motion lodged with Dublin County Council on 18 March 1993, and his subsequent support for that motion.

4.02 Mr Dunlop believed that he obtained the signature of Cllr Gallagher on 18 March 1993 and that at that time he paid him the sum of IR£1,000 in return for the signature. Mr Dunlop's diary indicated a meeting between himself and Cllr Gallagher on that date.

4.03 Mr Dunlop believed that he paid Cllr Gallagher at the Royal Dublin Hotel.

4.04 Mr Dunlop said he decided to approach Cllr Gallagher to request him to sign the motion because he was anxious to get the support of councillors on the north side of the city as this would provide a strong incentive for other councillors to support it in due course. Cllr Gallagher was a senior councillor and a member of the Fianna Fáil party.

4.05 It was for the same reason that Mr Dunlop had approached Cllr Devitt, a senior North County Dublin councillor and a member of the Fine Gael Party.

4.06 In obtaining the signatures of Cllr Gallagher and Cllr Devitt, Mr Dunlop was maximising cross-party support at a senior level.

4.07 Cllr Gallagher's support for the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands remained consistent following the successful vote on 21 May 1993 (at which he voted in favour of the proposal). On 22 September 1993 he was among a majority of councillors who voted against attempts then being made to reverse the industrial zoning which had been achieved in May 1993.

4.08 Cllr Gallagher died on 20 March 2000, before he had the opportunity to provide sworn testimony to the Tribunal. In correspondence with the Tribunal, and specifically in response to a questionnaire issued by the Tribunal, Cllr Gallagher stated on 26 March 1998 that he was unaware of any improper conduct in the course of his work as a councillor.

4.09 In the course of a private interview with the Tribunal on 15 March 1999, Cllr Gallagher denied that he had any post office account deposits. Following his death some 12 months after the private interview, it transpired that Cllr Gallagher had a sum in excess of IR£60,000 on deposit with An Post (inclusive of interest), being the maturity value of lodgments and lump sum investments in An Post of approximately IR£43,500 made in the period 2 January 1991 to 12 January 1998.

4.10 In the period 25 March to 28 May 1993, Cllr Gallagher lodged round-figure sums to his bank and An Post accounts totalling IR£7,860. The following is a list of these lodgements:

- 1) 25 March 1993: An Post IR£2,000 (Savings Certificate)
- 2) 26 April 1993: An Post IR£1,000 (Savings Certificate)
- 3) 7 May 1993: Ulster Bank IR£360
- 4) 25 May 1993: AIB Bank IR£2,000
- 5) 25 May 1993: An Post IR£2,000 (Savings Certificate)
- 6) 28 May 1993: Ulster Bank IR£500

4.11 Cllr Gallagher lodged a total of IR£2,000 on 25 March 1993, in the purchase of Savings Certificates from An Post. This was within seven days of the alleged payment of IR£1,000 cash to him by Mr Dunlop.

4.12 The three aforementioned lodgements into the An Post account were in cash. The documentation available relating to the sums lodged to the AIB and Ulster Bank accounts do not disclose whether the lodgements were cheques or cash.

4.13 Cllr Gallagher was a retired Telecom Éireann senior technician. He retired in 1992, and was subsequently in receipt of an Eircom pension, council expenses and a state contributory old age pension. Cllr Gallagher's relatives were unable to definitively identify the source of the lodgements referred to above, other than to suggest that they included salary payments, pension and retirement payments, repayment of a loan from a family member and expenses from the County Council and Health Board.⁷

4.14 The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Gallagher received a sum of IR£1,000 from Mr Dunlop in or about 18 March 1993 in return for his signature on and support for the motion lodged with Dublin County Council on 18 March 1993 which was the subject of a successful vote at Dublin County Council on 21 March 1993. This payment was a corrupt payment.

4.15 While the lodgements referred to above did not individually or collectively establish with certainty that the said sum of IR£1,000 was in fact paid by Mr Dunlop to Cllr Gallagher, the Tribunal believed it likely that the total lodgement of IR£2,000 on 25 March 1993 included some or all of the said payment of IR£1,000.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR TOM HAND (FG)

5.01 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he paid a sum of IR£1,000 in cash to the late Cllr Hand, at his request, in return for his agreement to support the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that Cllr Hand frequently requested money to support rezoning motions, and that it was his normal practice to approach him for such support.

5.02 Mr Dunlop made no reference to the Lissenhall lands in the course of his private interview with the Tribunal in April 2000, nor did he identify Cllr Hand (or any councillor) as a recipient of money in relation to those lands. In the course of subsequent written statements, beginning in October 2000, and in advance of his sworn evidence on Day 625 (23 March 2006), Mr Dunlop stated that he paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Hand in return for his support for the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands.

5.03 The telephone records maintained by Mr Dunlop's secretary during the period from January to May 1993 indicated a significant number of calls from Cllr Hand to Mr Dunlop's office. Mr Dunlop believed that all such calls related to matters relevant to the review of the Dublin County Development Plan, and at least some of them were calls made in connection with the forthcoming Lissenhall rezoning motion, which was put to a vote on 21 May 1993. Cllr Hand voted in favour of this motion.

5.04 It appeared that telephone contact took place between Cllr Hand and Mr Dunlop's office in the period leading up to the vote relating to the Lissenhall lands on 23 September 1993. This contact probably related, at least in part, to the Lissenhall lands. On 22 September 1993 Cllr Hand voted against a series of motions which sought to remove the E zoning achieved for the lands in May 1993.

5.05 While the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop did on occasion pay money to Cllr Hand, and did so corruptly, it was not satisfied on the balance of probability that Cllr Hand received a sum of IR£1,000 (or any sum) from Mr Dunlop in return for his agreement to support the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR TONY FOX (FF)

6.01 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he paid a sum of IR£1,000 in cash to Cllr Fox, at his request, immediately before or shortly after the Lissenhall lands rezoning vote on 21 May 1993, and that he believed the payment was made in the environs of Dublin County Council. Cllr Fox voted in favour of the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands, and maintained his support in September 1993 by voting against requests to reverse the industrial zoning achieved in May 1993.

6.02 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he regularly sought voting support from Cllr Fox in relation to various rezoning motions in the course of the Dublin County Development Plan review. Mr Dunlop maintained that when lobbied, Cllr Fox sought payment 'virtually every single time'. He said that Cllr Fox 'consistently' requested money, and that he was one of his 'regulars'.

6.03 In his private interview with the Tribunal in April 2000, Mr Dunlop did not mention Cllr Fox in the context of the Lissenhall lands, although he did make reference to other payments allegedly made to Cllr Fox in the course of that private interview. In statements he made to the Tribunal from October 2000, and prior to his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop stated that he had paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Fox in relation to the Lissenhall rezoning motion in 1993.

6.04 In his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Cllr Fox insisted on a number of occasions that Mr Dunlop had never paid him any money, by way of political contribution or otherwise.

6.05 On 14 December 2000, Cllr Fox made a statement to the Tribunal in which he denied receiving any payments of any nature from Mr Dunlop. Cllr Fox told the Fianna Fáil Inquiry in 2000 that he never received any payments of any kind from Mr Dunlop.

6.06 On 20 March 2006, Cllr Fox made a statement to the Tribunal in which he stated that he could not recall any matter relating to the Lissenhall lands, or of ever being lobbied by anyone representing the owners of the Lissenhall lands.

6.07 In the course of his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Cllr Fox stated that he had no relationship with Mr Dunlop in or around May 1993, and that his only contact with him had been in relation to the Texas Homecare material contravention issue which arose in the late 1980s or early 1990s. Cllr Fox claimed that he did not meet Mr Dunlop in 1993 and had no contact with him throughout 1993, other than seeing him occasionally at meetings of Dublin County Council.

6.08 Cllr Fox was questioned extensively in relation to a number of telephone calls which he apparently made to Mr Dunlop's office in the period January to September 1993. Cllr Fox insisted that these were merely instances of him returning calls previously made by Mr Dunlop. He accepted that there was telephone contact at least to the extent indicated in the telephone records, and that such contact as there was between himself and Mr Dunlop related to the review of the Dublin County Development Plan.

6.09 Cllr. Fox vehemently denied ever requesting or receiving money from Mr Dunlop. He could not think of a reason why Mr Dunlop would make such an allegation, other than to suggest that Mr Dunlop might be trying to 'offload a lot of money he wants to offload in relation to tax'. Cllr Fox claimed that he was unaware that Mr Dunlop had paid political donations to councillors over the years. Asked, in a general way, as to his view of councillors requesting, or third parties offering, money in return for votes or support, Cllr. Fox replied that such would be 'terrible'. On the issue of a councillor being offered money by a developer at the time of a vote, by way of a political contribution or election contribution, Cllr Fox responded with the observation 'I wouldn't think it would be great'. He said he did not know if it was wrong to accept money in these circumstances. Cllr. Fox himself claimed never to have received a political contribution or an election expense around the time of a County Council rezoning vote. He stated that he had only received such contributions at election time.⁸ Cllr Fox also told the Tribunal that if he had been offered a political contribution, or an election contribution in May 1993, he would not have taken it as he 'wouldn't be needing it because there wasn't an election'.

6.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that the evidence from Cllr Fox to the effect that he had little or no contact with Mr Dunlop in 1993 was inaccurate. There was considerable contact between the two men in 1993, and this contact was associated with the review of the Dublin County Development Plan. The Tribunal was satisfied that the contact between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Fox went significantly beyond occasional contact at Dublin County Council meetings.

6.11 The Tribunal believed it inconceivable that, as Cllr Fox sought to maintain, Mr Dunlop, having had a successful association with Cllr Fox over the Texas Homecare issue, would not have reverted to Cllr Fox in relation to other matters which were the subject of a Council vote and in relation to which he had an interest. The Tribunal therefore rejected Cllr Fox's evidence that he had not been lobbied by Mr Dunlop in relation to the Lissenhall lands.

6.12 The Tribunal was satisfied that the alleged payment of IR£1,000 by Mr Dunlop to Cllr Fox in return for his support for the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands was in fact paid, and was paid in the circumstances indicated by Mr Dunlop in the course of his evidence. This payment was a corrupt payment.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR ANNE DEVITT (FG)

7.01 Prior to the rezoning process being initiated in relation to the Lissenhall lands, Cllr Devitt had an involvement in the attempt made in 1989 to achieve planning permission for 120 houses on the Rayband lands. During this short-lived planning permission application, Cllr Devitt had been lobbied on behalf of Rayband by Mr Shane Redmond. Documents furnished to the Tribunal revealed that Cllr Devitt had sought unsuccessfully to initiate the material contravention process at Council level. Cllr Devitt stated that she had no recollection of being lobbied on behalf of Rayband in relation to that planning application, nor did she recall proposing that a material contravention process be initiated. The evidence established that Mr Dunlop drafted a letter about Lissenhall Kennels, the canine quarantine facility for Dublin Airport, which was addressed and sent to Cllr Devitt. The letter was dated March 1993 and was signed by Mr Hughes and Mr P. J. Moran and on behalf of Mr Richard Hayes. It gave certain undertakings (which had been required by Cllr Devitt) on behalf of the developers of the Lissenhall lands relating to the protection of the operation of the Lissenhall Kennels. The purpose of the letter was to allay the concern of Cllr Devitt and others that the rezoning and development of the Lissenhall lands would adversely affect that enterprise.

7.02 Mr Dunlop duly obtained Cllr Devitt's signature on the motion relating to the Lissenhall lands which was lodged with the County Council on 18 March 1993, and passed in amended form on 21 May 1993. Mr Dunlop's diary recorded a meeting with Cllr Devitt on 18 March 1993.

7.03 Mr Dunlop recognised that Cllr Devitt's signature on the motion was of particular value because of her status as a local councillor, and the likelihood that her involvement with the project would influence other councillors to support it. Neither Cllr Devitt nor Mr Dunlop had any specific recollection of the circumstances in which Cllr Devitt came to sign the motion to rezone the lands in March 1993.

7.04 Cllr Devitt told the Tribunal that she signed the 18 March 1993 motion because she believed that the rezoning and development of the Lissenhall lands would contribute to the proper planning and development of the Swords area.

7.05 The Tribunal was satisfied from the evidence of both Cllr Devitt and Mr Dunlop that Cllr Devitt's signature was an important element in the effort to have the Lissenhall lands rezoned, given that she was a local councillor and the de facto leader of the Fine Gael group within the County Council at that time.

7.06 On 20 April 1998, Rayband lodged a planning permission application with Fingal County Council for the development of industrial units on the Lissenhall lands. In order to facilitate the granting of permission for the Lissenhall lands, it was deemed necessary to relocate a planned roundabout to an existing entrance to an Eastern Health Board (EHB) facility. This required the relocation of ambulance facilities. Contact was initiated between Mr Tim Rowe the architect representing the owners of the Lissenhall lands, and Mr Philip Doyle, a senior official in the EHB.

7.07 The owners of the lands and the EHB entered into discussions and negotiations in relation to the roundabout. In the course of this process, Cllr Devitt, who was also a local authority member of the EHB, was retained by Mr P. J. Moran on behalf of the landowners. The final grant of planning permission was dated 25 March 2002.

7.08 Documents furnished to the Tribunal established that Cllr Devitt had been approached on behalf of Rayband to assist them with their dealings with the EHB by late 1998. At the time, Cllr Devitt was both an elected councillor and a local authority member of the EHB. In a letter dated 25 November 1998 to Mr Rowe, from Kevin Flanagan & Associates (other professionals engaged by Rayband), there is reference to the importance of having had a meeting with Cllr Devitt, having regard to her role as a member of the health board and an elected councillor for Fingal County Council.

7.09 In the course of his evidence, Mr P.J. Moran described Cllr Devitt's involvement with him in relation to the EHB issue thus: 'She provided professional advice. She quite openly, there was an invoice from her, which we have on the front of it. And she provided professional advice and legal services.'

7.10 The relevant invoice headed 'Anne E. M. Devitt, Legal Services' which was provided by Cllr Devitt to Mr Moran, and stamped received on 30 April 2002 (some five weeks after the grant of planning permission), made reference to an 'agreed fee re advices/investigations of rights of way, mediation'. The invoice of IR£20,000 was duly paid on Mr Moran's authorisation by cheque which was debited to Rayband's AIB account on 4 July 2002.

7.11 At the time he retained the services of Cllr Devitt, Mr Moran was aware that she was a member of the EHB. In his evidence, Mr Moran accepted that Cllr Devitt's membership of the EHB was one of the reasons he engaged her, and that another reason was her portrayal of herself as a person who could provide professional services directed towards resolving the 'problem'. The 'problem' was a reference to the need to persuade the EHB to permit the construction of a roundabout at a particular location.

7.12 Mr Moran told the Tribunal that the payment of a fee to Cllr Devitt was conditional upon planning permission being obtained for the Lissenhall lands, and an agreement being reached facilitating access. The awarding of a planning permission was ultimately dependent on agreement being reached with the EHB in relation to the roundabout.

7.13 Cllr Devitt's recollection as to the circumstances and reasons for her engagement by Mr Moran was vague. However, she accepted that she was retained and that she was instrumental in bringing about a satisfactory conclusion of the access issue, and she acknowledged the invoicing for, and the receipt of, a sum of IR£20,000 from Rayband in 2002.

7.14 Cllr Devitt stated: 'Mr Moran was aware that I was a solicitor and he was aware that I had knowledge of the workings, intricate workings of the Health Board.'

7.15 Cllr Devitt also stated (referring to Mr Moran's reason for engaging her):
'He was looking for help in dealing with his access into these lands. He knew that I had legal knowledge. He knew I knew property. He knew I knew the land in Swords and he knew I knew the workings of the Health Board. So he knew that I had skills in this area.'

7.16 Cllr Devitt went on to state: 'What I was being—I was being consulted and engaged in order to assist them in getting access to the lands for which they had planning permission.'

7.17 Cllr Devitt told the Tribunal that she engaged in discussion with Mr Doyle⁹ of the EHB. Cllr Devitt claimed that she informed Mr Doyle that she was representing the interests of a client in her discussions with him so as to ensure that he did not believe that she was approaching him in her capacity as Chair of the northern area board of the EHB.

7.18 In a description of her role in this matter, Cllr Devitt stated:

'My job was to ensure that the Health Board provided sufficient information to the agent in order to allow the agent make his planning application. And that information required I think was to do with the details in relation to the ambulance centre and the details in relation to the workshop.'

7.19 She went on to state:

'There was so much work going on in the Health Board and that there was different—what I think helped to do was prioritise this as something that was worthwhile . . . Within the property section of the Health Board. It was nothing to do with any of the services you know the Health Board services. This was the property section of the Health Board.'

7.20 Cllr Devitt did not provide any written advices to Mr Moran or to his architect, Mr Rowe, nor did she receive written instructions from Mr Moran. She did not appear to have created or maintained any documentation relating to the issue.

7.21 Cllr Devitt was adamant that no conflict of interest arose in her being retained by the landowner for the purposes of discussing or negotiating with or mediating with the EHB, of which she was a member, and during a period when she was the Chair of its northern area. In particular, Cllr Devitt believed that since the access/roundabout issue required a degree of consensus or agreement between Rayband and the EHB, it was in the interests of both parties that it be resolved to both sides' satisfaction. Cllr Devitt believed that she had a role and a duty to ensure that the EHB would avail of an opportunity to acquire better facilities. She did not believe it was improper on her part to engage in this liaison between the owners of the Lissenhall lands and the EHB, and to be paid a substantial fee by the landowners. She believed that she had disclosed her position fully to the EHB and that they were aware that she was acting in a consultancy role on behalf of the landowners and would therefore be paid for her efforts.

7.22 In the course of her evidence, Cllr Devitt described her role as being to mediate between Rayband and the EHB, and to facilitate the flow of information between the EHB and Mr Rowe, who, as architect to Rayband, was dealing with the planning application to Fingal County Council. Cllr Devitt claimed not to have herself been directly involved in the planning application made by Rayband, and she stated that she did not play any role or take any interest in the relevant planning file within the County Council. The Tribunal was satisfied that Rayband was primarily motivated to approach Cllr Devitt for her assistance by her position both as a locally elected councillor and a member of the EHB.

7.23 The Tribunal took the view that the actions of Cllr Devitt in acting as a consultant to Rayband, with the promise of payment and having been duly paid IR£20,000, were entirely inappropriate, having regard to the positions she held both as an elected councillor in Fingal County Council and as Chair of the northern area of the EHB.

7.24 In her evidence, Cllr Devitt was at pains to place a distance between her consultative role and the Rayband planning permission application which was active between 1997 and 2002. She did not see any conflict of interest arising because she maintained that she 'had not used her influence in the planning application'. The Tribunal was satisfied, however, that, irrespective of the role, if any, Ms Devitt had played in the planning application process, there should not be any circumstances in which a councillor could properly claim financial reward for the advancement of a matter, the outcome of which rested with the decision making powers of the County Council of which that councillor was an elected member.

7.25 Having regard to her involvement on behalf of Rayband at a time when she was the Chair of the northern area of the EHB, the Tribunal was told by Cllr Devitt that that when 'mediating' with that body she had advised Mr Doyle of her business relationship with Rayband, and that, effectively, she was dealing with the matter qua 'consultant' to Rayband. However, the Tribunal noted Mr Rowe's evidence to the effect that his dealings with Cllr Devitt at this time were conducted entirely in her capacity as a public representative, (both as a councillor and a health board member).

7.26 The Tribunal found it inconceivable that Cllr Devitt failed to appreciate the conflict of interest which arose by her aforesaid actions. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Devitt's consultative role for Rayband together with the expectation of financial reward rendered it impossible for Cllr Devitt to perform her public duty as an elected councillor and health board member in a disinterested fashion.

THE ASSISTANCE GIVEN BY CLLR DEVITT TO MR SHANE REDMOND

7.27 Cllr Devitt also provided assistance to Mr Shane Redmond. In 2000, Mr Redmond was helping Mr Duffy¹⁰ resolve an issue which arose regarding access to the Duffy lands. Mr Redmond was at the time retained by Mr Duffy in relation to the proposed sale of his lands to a third party. On 17 August 2000, an attendance taken by Mr Duffy's solicitor of a meeting with Mr Duffy, Mr Redmond and others recorded the following:

During the meeting Shane took a telephone call from an Anne Devitt in the Eastern Health Board. She rang to say that Mr Rowe spoke with Rayband and has also spoken with her. They will give us whatever access we require which is direct access onto the site.

Mr Redmond told the Tribunal that he requested assistance from Cllr Devitt in her capacity as an elected councillor, and as far as he knew, Cllr Devitt made contact on his behalf with Mr P. J. Moran. Ultimately the difficulty was resolved. This position was subsequently confirmed to Mr Duffy's solicitors on 8 December 2000 when they were informed by Rayband's solicitors that 'through a third party's intervention on your Client's behalf our Client has agreed to furnish a Right of Way over the roadways'.

7.28 In the course of her evidence, Cllr Devitt agreed that she was the third party referred to in the 8 December 2000 letter, and that she had intervened with Rayband on behalf of Mr Duffy at Mr Redmond's request. Mr Redmond himself stated that he had consulted Cllr Devitt in her capacity as a local councillor and was unaware that she had been retained on a fee basis as a consultant to Mr P. J. Moran.

7.29 In the course of her evidence, Cllr Devitt was asked if she had charged fees for her intervention on behalf of Mr Redmond and his client, Mr Duffy. The following exchange took place between Counsel for the Tribunal and Cllr Devitt:

Q. And was any fee paid for this?

A. 'No, no, because I was contacted on that occasion as a councillor.'

Q. 'As a councillor?'

¹⁰ Mr Duffy was the landowner who joined with Rayband in the 1993 rezoning proposal.

A. 'So no fee arises. Is allowed to arise if you are being consulted as a councillor in relation to any matters dealing with the County Council.'

7.30 This explanation provided by Cllr Devitt as to the reasons why she did not charge fees for her intervention on behalf of Mr Redmond and Mr Duffy in relation to the right-of-way issue, and which the Tribunal believed to have been an appropriate position, was in stark contrast to Cllr Devitt having billed Mr P. J. Moran for and having received IR£20,000 for 'advices/investigation of right of way, mediation' relating to Rayband's interests.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR SEÁN GILBRIDE (FF)

8.01 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he lobbied Cllr Gilbride for his support for the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands. This evidence was accepted by Cllr Gilbride. No allegation was made that Cllr Gilbride sought or received payment in relation to the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands.

8.02 The telephone records maintained by Mr Dunlop's secretary indicated regular telephone contact between Cllr Gilbride and Mr Dunlop's office throughout 1993. One entry for 22 September 1993 recorded 'Lissenhall ok' as the message given by Cllr Gilbride in a telephone call on that date. This appeared to be a reference to the motions before Dublin County Council on that date which culminated in the confirmation of the industrial rezoning of the Lissenhall lands.

8.03 Cllr Gilbride accepted that this phone record was probably accurate, and that he was merely responding to a request from Mr Dunlop for confirmation that the rezoning of the lands had been confirmed.

8.04 Cllr Gilbride told the Tribunal that he supported the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands at all stages in the review of the Development Plan. He believed that additional rezoned land was needed in the Swords area. He cited an earlier difficulty which had arisen in the context of a potential Motorola industrial project and the lack of suitably zoned land in the Swords area for such a development.

CHAPTER SEVEN - CARGOBRIDGE MODULE

INTRODUCTION

1.01 This module concerned an investigation into the circumstances in which a number of individuals (referred to hereafter as the Cargobridge consortium) sought to rezone lands (the Cargobridge lands) adjoining Dublin Airport in north Co. Dublin.

1.02 Thirty witnesses gave evidence when the module was heard in public between September 2006 and February 2007. In addition, information provided by Mr Michael McGuinness was read into the record in his absence, as was information provided to the Tribunal by Cllr Cyril Gallagher, who died prior to the commencement of the public hearings in this module.

1.03 The consortium's members included Abervanta Ltd ("Abervanta"), which was beneficially owned by Messrs Ciarán Haughey and John Barnicle, owners of Celtic Helicopters, whose land was south of the Cargobridge lands. The remaining surrounding lands were owned by the Minister for Transport.

1.04 The development potential of the Cargobridge lands at the time they were acquired by the consortium was severely restricted due to their agricultural zoning, limited access and lack of piped public sewerage. Development of the lands was further curtailed by their designation in the Dublin County Development Plan as within the 'Airport Noise Zone', because of their close proximity to Dublin Airport.

1.05 On 4 November 1991, Cargobridge Ltd lodged a planning application with Dublin County Council seeking permission for the construction of a warehousing development on the site. The Minister for Transport lodged an objection to this application on 13 November 1991. In March 1992 the application was withdrawn.

1.06 A written representation lodged during the display of the 1991 Draft Development Plan by Ms Gráinne Mallon, consultant planner, on behalf of Cargobridge Ltd, was the subject of correspondence between the County Council and Aer Rianta in February 1993.

1.07 On 24 February 1993 a motion proposing that the lands be rezoned from B (agricultural) to E (industrial) was lodged with Dublin County Council. It was passed at a special meeting of the Council on 30 March 1993 and the rezoning was confirmed on 30 September 1993. The lands were zoned for industrial and related uses in the 1993 Dublin County Development Plan when it was confirmed on 10 December 1993.

1.08 Abervanta's interest in the Cargobridge lands was sold to High Degree Construction Ltd in April 1994 for IR£415,000.

1.09 The Cargobridge lands were sold by the then members of the Cargobridge consortium in July 1997¹ for in excess of IR£8m, representing a significant profit as against the 1991 purchase price of approximately IR£1m. In the interim, the zoning of the lands was altered from agricultural use to industrial use and the use of the right of way serving the lands was changed from use for aviation purposes to use for commercial purposes.

THE CARGOBRIDGE LANDS

2.01 The consortium acquired the Cargobridge lands from Mr Robert Morgan by tender for IR£1m on 21 June 1991. Aer Rianta was the under-bidder, having offered IR£200,000 (or possibly as much as IR£250,000) against the consortium's initial tender of IR£750,000 which Mr Morgan refused.

2.02 The lands were zoned B (agricultural) in the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan and retained this zoning in the 1991 Dublin County Draft Development Plan.

2.03 In 1991, access to the Cargobridge lands was by agricultural right of way across lands owned by the Minister for Transport. This was also Celtic Helicopters' right of way to its lands at the time they were acquired in 1988.

2.04 In 1989, Celtic Helicopters applied for and obtained planning permission for a helicopter business on its lands. Celtic Helicopters appear to have subsequently obtained a licence or grant from Aer Rianta (in its capacity as the Minister for Transport's agent) to use the agricultural right of way for aviation purposes. By December 1990 this licence had been converted to a deed of right of way.² The upgrading of the right of way from use for agricultural purposes to use for aviation business purposes was purchased from the Minister for Transport for IR£45,000.

² A Department of Transport memo stated that a draft licence was prepared, but, because of financing difficulties, it was converted into a deed of right of way, which was executed on 21 December 1990.

THE CARGOBRIDGE CONSORTIUM

3.01 The Cargobridge consortium comprised four separate parties, namely Neptune Freight Ltd (Mr Michael McGuinness and Mr Anthony Delaney), Mr Stephen Fitzgerald, Mr P. J. Cousins, and Abervanta Ltd (Mr Ciarán Haughey and Mr John Barnicle). The ownership division of the lands was as follows:

- Neptune Freight Ltd: 8 acres or 33.92 per cent,
- Stephen Fitzgerald: 6 acres or 25.44 per cent,
- P. J. Cousins: 6 acres or 25.44 per cent,
- Abervanta Ltd: 3.58 acres or 15.182 per cent.

3.02 In 1991, Neptune Freight Ltd operated a freight business at Baldoyle Industrial Estate. Mr Delaney told the Tribunal that he owned 32 per cent of its shares while Mr McGuinness owned the remaining 68 per cent.³

3.03 Mr Fitzgerald was the managing director of Williams Air Freight Ltd, a freight business operating in north Co. Dublin. He was involved in the Cargobridge consortium in a personal capacity.

3.04 Mr Cousins was chief executive of Aer Turas. In 1991 he owned 20 per cent of the company while Aer Lingus owned 80 per cent. Mr Cousins and others bought out Aer Lingus's share in 1993 or 1994. Mr Cousins was involved in the Cargobridge consortium in a personal capacity.

3.05 Abervanta's first directors and shareholders were Ms Anne Marie Smyth and Ms Catherine Daniel, employees of Noel Smyth & Partners, Solicitors. On 25 November 1991, they were replaced by Mr McGuinness and Mr Delaney.

THE BACKGROUND TO THE ACQUISITION OF THE CARGOBRIDGE LANDS

4.01 Both Mr Fitzgerald and Mr Delaney told the Tribunal that their primary purpose in becoming involved in the acquisition of the lands was to extend their respective freight businesses in north Co. Dublin. Mr Fitzgerald gave evidence that in early 1991 he became aware that approximately 24 acres of land in Cloghran owned by Mr Robert Morgan were for sale by tender.

³ In a written statement to the Tribunal, Mr McGuinness claimed he owned 62 per cent of the shares.

4.02 Mr Fitzgerald's evidence was that the lands for sale were too extensive for him to acquire on his own. He therefore approached Mr Delaney as a party who might be similarly interested in acquiring part of the lands for expansion and relocation purposes. He stated that Mr Delaney involved Mr McGuinness. Mr Delaney, however, stated that it was Mr Fitzgerald who initially contacted Mr McGuinness.

4.03 Mr Fitzgerald also approached Mr Cousins. Mr Cousins told the Tribunal that his involvement in the Cargobridge consortium was on his own behalf and not on behalf of Aer Turas. He stated that his decision to become involved was a speculative one and that his intention was to lease the lands acquired by him in due course to Aer Turas.

4.04 In discussions involving Mr Fitzgerald, Mr Cousins, Mr Delaney and Mr McGuinness, a decision was taken to form a consortium to purchase the Morgan lands. Although the idea came from Mr Fitzgerald, according to him, Mr Cousins and Mr Delaney, it was Mr McGuinness of Neptune Freight Ltd who very quickly became the 'lead person' in the proposed consortium.

4.05 In the course of the initial discussions about the purchase a decision was made to approach Celtic Helicopters to become involved as it was believed that Celtic Helicopters' established commercial right of way (for aviation purposes only) across the Minister for Transport's lands would strengthen their case to have their right of way altered to permit commercial use.

4.06 With the exception of Mr Barnicle, with whom the issue was not raised in evidence, the relevant parties involved with the lands from June 1991 onwards agreed in their evidence that their principal objectives were to change the lands' development status by way of planning permission and/or rezoning and to upgrade the quality of the access to the lands.

ABERVANTA LTD

5.01 Members of the Cargobridge consortium sought to conceal any association between Celtic Helicopters, and Mr Haughey, on the one hand and the ownership of the Cargobridge lands, on the other. They believed that if such an association were known, it would fuel opposition by Fine Gael councillors to any proposal to rezone the lands for industrial development or any proposal which required a material contravention vote of Dublin County Council.

5.02 Dedicated and strenuous efforts were made by the Cargobridge consortium to ensure that the interest of Celtic Helicopters and/or Mr Haughey in the ownership of the Cargobridge lands remained secret.

5.03 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Fitzgerald described Mr Haughey's 'political connectivity' as being of 'no real value to us'. Mr Cousins told the Tribunal that Mr Haughey had expressed the view in discussions that 'Fine Gael or Nora Owen in particular would block any rezoning' of the lands if his name was 'up front'.

5.04 The result of the approach made to Celtic Helicopters was that Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle were to become the purchasers of 3.58 acres (15.18 per cent)⁴ of the total lands being acquired by the consortium. It was agreed that Mr Haughey's and Mr Barnicle's interest in the lands being acquired would be effected in such a manner so as to conceal their or Celtic Helicopters' involvement with the project. By 17 June 1991, when Mr Mc Guinness wrote to Mr Michael Kennedy, the consortium's solicitor, advising him of the composition of the consortium, Mr McGuinness had knowledge of the corporate entity through which Messrs Haughey and Barnicle were to take their landholding, as he advised Mr Kennedy that 'Abervanta Ltd' was purchasing 3.58 acres of the Cargobridge lands. Abervanta was a shelf company which was incorporated on 22 July 1986. It was put at the disposal of Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle by Mr Noel Smyth. Two of Mr Smyth's employees, Ms Anne Marie Smyth and Ms Catherine Daniel were nominated as its directors and shareholders and remained so until 25 November 1991 when they were replaced in these capacities by Mr McGuinness and Mr Delaney. There was therefore no apparent or documented connection between Abervanta and Mr Haughey or Mr Barnicle throughout Abervanta's ownership (1991 to 1994)⁵ of the lands. At all times, however, Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle were the beneficial shareholders of Abervanta.

5.05 Throughout the campaign to rezone the lands and achieve a better access thereto, members of the consortium were determined to preserve the secrecy surrounding the involvement of Celtic Helicopters and/or Messrs Haughey and Barnicle with the Cargobridge lands. In pursuit of this aim, entirely misleading information was provided on occasions to third parties who enquired as to the ownership of the lands following rumours that Messrs Haughey, Barnicle and Celtic Helicopters had an involvement with the lands.

⁴ Mr Barnicle told the Tribunal that he did not know how the calculation of the acreage both he and Mr Haughey were to receive was arrived at.

⁵ Mr Delaney and Mr McGuinness resigned as directors on 8 April 1994.

5.06 On 22 October 1991, during a meeting attended by Aer Rianta's property manager, Mr Paul Pugh, Aer Rianta's general manager, Mr Brian Byrne, and consortium members Mr Michael McGuinness and Mr Stephen Fitzgerald, the Aer Rianta executives were informed that the Cargobridge lands had been purchased by Mr McGuinness and Mr Fitzgerald, with Mr Cousins as a financial contributor to Mr Fitzgerald. No mention was made by Mr McGuinness or Mr Fitzgerald of the involvement of Abervanta.

5.07 Mr Byrne told the Tribunal that in the course of a meeting with Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle, he asked Mr Haughey if there was any connection between Celtic Helicopters and Abervanta, and received a blanket denial of any such connection. Mr Byrne recalled Mr Haughey's response to have been: 'No, sure I'm too busy with other things, what would I be involved with that for'. Mr Barnicle did not demur. In evidence, Mr Haughey claimed to have no recollection of being asked such a question by Mr Byrne, but accepted that it could have been put to him.

5.08 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Byrne asked Mr Haughey whether he had an interest in the Cargobridge lands, most probably in late 1991 or early 1992, that Mr Haughey denied such involvement and that this position was consistent with the secrecy adopted by the consortium members vis-à-vis his and Mr Barnicle's ownership of Abervanta's share of the land.

5.09 Both Mr Pugh and Mr Byrne told the Tribunal of efforts made by Aer Rianta to identify the persons behind Abervanta. Mr Byrne said that because the lands which had been transferred to Abervanta were located immediately adjacent to the Celtic Helicopters' lands, Aer Rianta suspected that Celtic Helicopters had a connection to them. He stated that the possible involvement of Celtic had set off 'alarm bells' because the previous granting of a right of way for aviation purposes had been done in good faith, given that Celtic Helicopters' business was aviation related. There was concern within Aer Rianta that advantage would be taken of this good faith in relation to the larger Cargobridge lands.

5.10 It also appeared that as early as July 1991 the Department of Transport was aware of questions being asked about the ownership of Abervanta. Aer Rianta discovered to the Tribunal a draft letter dated 19 June 1991 sent to the Department in which the issue of Abervanta's ownership was raised.

5.11 On 25 November 1991, Abervanta's nominal shareholders, Ms Smyth and Ms Daniel, transferred their shares to Mr McGuinness and Mr Delaney who also replaced them as directors of the company.

5.12 The Tribunal was satisfied that by late 1991 there were rumours circulating in public about the likely owners of Abervanta and that such rumours identified Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle as persons likely to have an interest in Abervanta. The Tribunal was satisfied that the prevalence of such rumours was the factor which led to the change of ownership structure of Abervanta in late 1991.

5.13 Documentation furnished to the Tribunal revealed that on 25 November 1991 Abervanta resolved that a Declaration of Trust would be executed by the Abervanta shareholders. It is not disputed that, as from November 1991, Mr McGuinness and Mr Delaney held their respective shareholdings in Abervanta in trust for Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle, as, in all probability, Ms Smyth and Ms Daniel had done from June to November 1991.

5.14 Mr Delaney told the Tribunal in evidence that the decision to vest the shareholding in himself and Mr McGuinness was taken to forestall any suggestion or intimation that Mr Haughey was involved with the consortium.

5.15 The Tribunal was satisfied that Abervanta's shareholding was changed so that if a suggestion was made that Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle had an involvement in the lands, the consortium could point to Mr McGuinness and Mr Delaney as the owners of Abervanta. That this was the thinking behind the change in the Abervanta ownership structure that took place in November 1991 was graphically evidenced by letters which emanated both from Mr McGuinness and the consortium's solicitor, Mr Michael Kennedy, in March 1992.

5.16 On 12 March 1992, Mr Kennedy wrote to the Minister for Transport clearly stating that 'the entire beneficial and legal ownership of Abervanta Ltd' was held by Mr McGuinness and Mr Delaney, directors of Neptune Freight Ltd.

5.17 This letter included the following statement: 'As to 15.18% thereof in Abervanta Limited. The entire beneficial and legal ownership of Abervanta Ltd is held by Michael McGuinness and Anthony Delaney, directors of Neptune Freight Limited.' This was an entirely untrue assertion. Neither Mr McGuinness nor Mr Delaney was a beneficial owner or shareholder of Abervanta. This fact was acknowledged by Mr Fitzgerald and Mr Cousins in the course of their evidence to the Tribunal.

5.18 The Tribunal considered that Mr Kennedy knew when writing to the Minister on 12 March 1992 that what was being expressed in his letter vis-à-vis Abervanta was not factually correct. Mr Kennedy advised the Tribunal that what was contained in the letter complied with his instructions from Mr McGuinness.

5.19 In a letter of 13 March 1992 to Mr Al Smith, Principal Officer in Dublin County Council, Mr McGuinness wrote as follows:

It has come to our attention that certain malicious rumours and lies are being circulated regarding the ownership of our lands at Cloghran, County Dublin.

We completely and utterly reject these allegations. We attach herewith a letter from our solicitors certifying the ownership of the land. We invite any public representative or Public Official to contact our Solicitor to ascertain the truth for themselves or to visit Neptune's office and warehouse at Baldoyle or Williames Airfreight offices and warehouse at Blake's Cross to assure themselves that we are what we say we are.

We regret having to write this letter, we find it despicable that those behind this campaign of rumours and innuendo will not reveal themselves and make their accusations in public so that we could challenge them in a court of law.

We rely on the honesty, integrity and fair-mindedness of our Public Representatives and Officials to ensure that the purveyors of those lies are not successful in their aims. We hope that our planning application will be judged on its merits and when the technical difficulties have been resolved that it will be granted.

This letter was copied to Mr D. Byrne, Manager, Dublin County Council and to the Secretary, the Department of Transport and Tourism and to all public representatives in the Fingal area.⁶ The Tribunal believed that the reference to 'certain malicious rumours and lies being circulated regarding the ownership of our lands at Cloghran, County Dublin' referred to a widely circulated rumour to the effect that Celtic Helicopters and/or Mr Haughey had some involvement in the ownership of the Cargobridge lands.

5.20 Mr Delaney told the Tribunal that as of November 1991 it was his understanding that he and Mr McGuinness were 'fronting' for Celtic Helicopters. He acknowledged that at no time did he ever hold a beneficial interest in Abervanta. He had adopted this false position because Mr McGuinness had advised him that the consortium 'would be needing cross party support for the rezoning and words to the effect that it wouldn't be helpful if the Haughey name was known to be part of the consortium'.

5.21 The Tribunal was satisfied that the letters to the Minister for Transport and to Dublin County Council of 12 and 13 March 1992 were written in an attempt to stop the rumours circulating at the time concerning the involvement of Celtic Helicopters and/or Mr Haughey and/or Mr Barnicle in the Cargobridge consortium. The rumours had the potential to damage the consortium's efforts to obtain planning permission and/or rezoning and an upgraded right of way for its lands.

5.22 The Tribunal was satisfied that the letters were deliberately intended by the Cargobridge consortium to mislead officials at County Council and Departmental level and elected representatives at local and governmental level, including the Minister for Transport, as to the beneficial ownership of the Abervanta lands.

THE DISCLOSURE TO THE TRIBUNAL OF THE HAUGHEY/BARNICLE INVOLVEMENT IN ABERVANTA LTD

5.23 The Tribunal first learned that Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle had a share in the ownership of the Cargobridge lands through Abervanta approximately four days before public hearings in this module began on 19 September 2006.

5.24 None of the consortium members had disclosed this information to the Tribunal. According to Mr Delaney prior to receiving documentation from the Tribunal, he was unaware that Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle were personally involved in Abervanta.

5.25 In his statement of 3 April 2006 to the Tribunal, Mr Cousins described ownership of the lands as follows:

In 1990, I was Chief Executive of Aer Turas and owned 20% of this company with Aer Lingus owning the balance. In late 1990, a former colleague of mine in Aer Turas, Stephen Fitzgerald of Williams Air Freight, approached me regarding the purchase of 23 acres of land close to Dublin Airport. He was trying to put together a group to purchase the land and introduced me to Mike McGuinness, managing director of Neptune Freight. The fourth member of the group was Abervanta Ltd. There had been no commercial relationship between the parties before this particular venture. Together, we agreed to buy the land for approximately IR£1M. The financing for my portion of the land, comprising 6 acres, was from Ulster Bank by way of personal overdraft.

5.26 Mr Fitzgerald, in his statement dated 31 March 2006, gave the following information regarding Abervanta:

In or around 1990, I saw an advertisement in a newspaper offering for sale a piece of land adjacent to the 'Eastlands' area owned by Aer Rianta. I was interested in purchasing this as it would allow the company have direct access to the airport. The property consisted of approximately 23 acres which was a larger area than what was required by the Company. I approached other people who I thought might be interested in purchasing a portion of the lands. I entered into discussions with Mike McGuinness of Neptune Freight Limited and he expressed an interest. I then approached Pat Cousins [otherwise known as P. J. Cousins] of Aer Turas who was also interested. The fourth partner in the land purchase venture was Abervanta Ltd, whose share was subsequently purchased by High Degree Construction in or around February 1994.

5.27 On 4 August 2006, in the course of his reply to the Tribunal's letter of 23 February 2006, and a subsequent reminder of 18 May 2006, Mr McGuinness advised as follows: 'Abervanta was an Irish company set up to hold its share of the lands. I was a director for about two years.'

5.28 The Tribunal was satisfied that in correspondence with the Tribunal between March and July 2006, Mr Fitzgerald, Mr Cousins and Mr McGuinness separately referred to the ownership of Abervanta in terms which deliberately concealed the involvement of Celtic Helicopters (and of Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle) in the ownership of the Cargobridge consortium.

5.29 Mr McGuinness's letter to the Tribunal dated 14 October 2006 (sent while the public hearings were underway, and after a reference had been made in the course of those hearings to the letter of 12 March 1992 to the Minister for Transport), sought to explain his earlier failure to reveal the association of Celtic Helicopters and Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle with the Cargobridge lands. He maintained in the letter that, he 'genuinely did not realise the implication of 'beneficial' ownership. I believed that if I owned the shares I owned the company'. The Tribunal rejected this explanation and was satisfied, particularly having regard to Mr McGuinness's experience in business, that Mr McGuinness understood at all times the concept of 'beneficial ownership' in the context of the ownership of Abervanta.

THE FUNDING OF ABERVANTA'S PURCHASE OF, AND ITS INVOLVEMENT IN, THE CARGOBRIDGE LANDS

6.01 Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle settled on a figure of IR£185,000 as their necessary financing requirement to become involved with the Cargobridge consortium. To secure this funding it appeared that their first port of call was the businessman Mr Ben Dunne. Both Mr Dunne and Mr Barnicle told the Tribunal of a meeting between the two, following which Mr Dunne agreed to assist Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle financially, and referred them to his solicitor, Mr Noel

Smyth. Mr Smyth described his instructions from Mr Dunne as being to assist Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle in relation to the securing of the lands, and to ensure that the financial assistance which he was providing was secured.

6.02 By 17 June 1991 Mr Smyth had adapted the memorandum and articles of the shelf company, Abervanta, to suit the needs of Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle. Mr Smyth⁷ then set about putting in train the process by which Abervanta secured a loan facility of IR£185,000.

6.03 On 19 June 1991 Mr Smyth wrote on behalf of 'Abervanta Ltd' to Bank of Ireland Private Banking advising the bank of this company's acquisition of 3.58 acres of a larger site for a consideration of IR£151,823.62, and that the total cost to it for so doing (to take account of its proportion of 'stamp duty, planning and other costs') was IR£185,000. A loan in this amount was then sought, and in the course of his letter Mr Smyth 'proposed that £110,000 would be lodged leaned [sic] and hypothecated as far as the bank are concerned.'

6.04 This correspondence between Mr Smyth and the bank was followed by a further 'EXTREMELY URGENT' letter from Mr Smyth to the bank on 21 June 1991 enclosing 'cheques to the value of £136,653.57 payable to Bank of Ireland for the account of the above named Company [Abervanta]' and requesting that the bank put this money on deposit in the name of Abervanta, on Mr Smyth's undertaking 'to sign such necessary lien and hypothecation documents as the Bank may require in this matter'.

6.05 Under cover of the same letter he requested that 'in consideration of this deposit, etc.' the bank would arrange a loan to Abervanta in the sum of IR£136,653.57 and forward him a bankers draft in favour of Mr Michael J. Kennedy (the consortium's solicitor). This was intended to be a temporary cash advance (pending negotiation of a term loan facility of IR£185,000), to assist Abervanta in completing the purchase of the 3.58 acres.⁸

6.06 Mr Smyth told the Tribunal that the cheques totalling IR£136,653.57 (referred to in Mr Smyth's letter to the bank of 21 June 1991) included the funds which, according to Mr Dunne and Mr Smyth, Mr Dunne had agreed to advance to Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle. It appeared that the cheques referred to in Mr Smyth's letter were lodged to the 'credit current account' of Abervanta on 21 June 1991.

⁷ Mr Smyth in evidence said that he never had any discussions with Mr Haughey. He was asked by Mr Dunne to speak with Mr Barnicle.

6.07 Mr Smyth was unable to account for the source of the balance of the funds (IR£26,653.57) lodged to Abervanta's credit current account. He agreed that this sum had not been provided by either Mr Haughey or Mr Barnicle. He doubted that he himself had provided these funds and surmised that they may have been borrowed from Bank of Ireland. The Tribunal however saw no evidence that these funds had been lent by the bank. There was every suggestion (as indeed accepted in evidence by Mr Smyth himself) that he had organized the provision of these funds, as was evidenced from the contents of a letter written by Abervanta to Bank of Ireland on 22 July 1991 (see below).

6.08 This sum of IR£136,653.57 was duly debited to Abervanta's debit current account No. 97817745 with Bank of Ireland Private Banking on 21 June 1991 with the purchase of a draft made payable to Mr Michael J. Kennedy, the consortium's solicitor, for transmission to the vendor's solicitor.

6.09 The loan facilities applied for by Abervanta on 19 June 1991 duly became available through Bank of Ireland Private Banking on that same day. The advance of this facility was secured by a charge on Abervanta's share of the Cargobridge lands in favour of Bank of Ireland. In addition, the bank took a lien over the IR£110,000 sum which Mr Dunne had provided, and which had been lodged in the credit current account of Abervanta. In addition, Mr Dunne, in consideration of the advance to Abervanta, irrevocably agreed and undertook, if compelled by the bank at any time after two years from 19 July 1991, to redeem all principle and interest payable by Abervanta to the Bank on foot of the loan facility.

6.10 On 22 July 1991 Ms Catherine Daniel (a director of Abervanta) for and on behalf of Abervanta, wrote to the bank authorising the draw down of the facility of IR£185,000, and directing that the funds be distributed as follows:

- IR£136,653 to repay a existing temporary facility in the company's name at the bank
- IR£1,500 to pay the bank's arrangement fee
- The balance to be paid by way of bank draft in favour of Noel Smyth & Partners, solicitors.

6.11 In the course of her letter Ms Daniel directed the bank as follows: 'Also, please pay £26,653.00 on the company's Deposit Account by way of a bank draft in favour of Noel Smyth & Partners'. Mr Smyth accepted in evidence that irrespective of whether this sum was provided by his firm from their office account or by way of a loan from the Bank of Ireland he almost certainly would have organized this sum at the time. The Abervanta 'credit current account' No. 97817737 credited with the IR£136,653.57 on 21 June 1991 was likewise debited with this sum of IR£26,653.00 on 22 July 1991 and the bank statement carried the reference 'DFT F/O N SMYTH & PA' which Mr Smyth accepted in evidence indicated that his firm received back by bank draft this sum.

6.12 Mr Smyth acknowledged (although he could not state how it was done) that the final paragraph of that letter was evidence that Noel Smyth and Partners had organized the provision of IR£26,653 which, together with Mr Dunne's cheque for IR£110,000, had been lodged to the credit current account of Abervanta on 21 June 1991. Following the deduction of expenses totalling IR£16,953.49 (comprising stamp duty and other costs), from the IR£185,000 advanced to Abervanta there remained approximately IR£30,000 left on deposit in the client account of Noel Smyth and Partners. It was probable that these funds were utilised in the period 1991 to 1994 to discharge bills owed by Abervanta, on foot of its participation in the consortium's bid to have the Cargobridge lands rezoned and its right of way upgraded. The Tribunal had sight of documentary evidence of such requests being made of Abervanta and on one occasion through their solicitors Noel Smyth and Partners. Mr Barnicle told the Tribunal that no money was paid out in the absence of an invoice and that every invoice was approved prior to payment, either by phone or passed directly to Mr Smyth. He said that he and Mr Haughey would have accepted an invoice from Neptune Freight or Cargobridge as being genuine, irrespective of what it was for, and would have authorised Mr Smyth to pay it from their remaining funds.

6.13 Both Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle agreed that neither they nor Celtic Helicopters Ltd had injected any personal or company resources into the acquisition of the lands, and that the entire funding for their acquisition of 3.5 acres was put in place through the involvement and assistance of Mr Dunne and Mr Smyth.

6.14 Mr Dunne and Mr Smyth's involvement commenced in June 1991. By this time the required IR£100,000 deposit for the purchase of the land had been paid by Neptune Freight Ltd as the contract for the purchase of the lands was dated 17 May 1991. There was no evidence before the Tribunal that either Mr Haughey or Mr Barnicle contributed to or reimbursed Neptune Freight in the sum of IR£15,182, the amount which would have been required from them as their contribution to the deposit, based on their 15.18 percentage participation in the Cargobridge consortium. Mr Barnicle said that he was bemused as to where the deposit amount came from and had no idea where it was sourced. Mr Barnicle accepted the proposition that someone had come to him with an idea in relation to these lands, and that he (and Mr Haughey) purchased them at no cost to themselves.

6.15 The Tribunal rejected the claim of both Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle that they were completely unaware that a bank loan had been arranged by Mr Smyth for Abervanta. The Tribunal was satisfied that the letter of 4 February 1994 from Mr Smyth to Mr Barnicle indicated that they both knew of Bank of Ireland's involvement in the financing process throughout the life of the loan, between 1991 and 1994.

THE DISPOSAL BY ABERVANTA LTD OF ITS SHARE IN THE CARGOBRIDGE LANDS AND THE UTILISATION OF THE SALE PROCEEDS

7.01 Bank of Ireland Private Finance had allowed a two-year rollover of interest on the loan. By June of 1993, it was seeking repayment from Abervanta of the loan. Documents produced to the Tribunal indicated that Abervanta was given a further period of some months in which to repay the bank.

7.02 Abervanta's 15.182 per cent interest in the Cargobridge lands was sold to High Degree Construction Ltd in April 1994 for IR£415,000, representing a gross profit to Abervanta of IR£230,000. The beneficial owner of High Degree Construction Ltd was Mr Patrick Mooney.

7.03 By the time the lands were acquired by High Degree they had the benefit of a commercial right of way, albeit at a price not yet formalised.⁹

7.04 Documentation produced to the Tribunal by Noel Smyth & Partners showed that on 25 April 1994 a sum of IR£218,726.21 (the initial loan of IR£185,000 plus interest) was paid to Bank of Ireland. On the same day, Bank of Ireland released the IR£110,000 deposited by Mr Dunne, which it had held since June 1991 and over which it exercised a lien.

7.05 On 6 May 1994 Mr Dunne was repaid from Mr Smyth's client account a sum of IR£141,538.87 – in effect a return to him of the IR£110,000 he had placed on deposit plus an additional sum of IR£31,538.87.

7.06 Neither Mr Dunne, Mr Smyth, Mr Haughey nor Mr Barnicle were in a position to explain the basis on which Mr Dunne had been paid IR£31,538.87 in excess of the initial sum deposited by him. Having regard, however, to the evidence given by Mr Smyth and Mr Dunne, the Tribunal believed it probable that the IR£31,538.87 included a measure of profit to Mr Dunne, as well as fees to Noel Smyth & Partners for the work carried out by that firm for Abervanta.

⁹The commercial right of way licence was formally granted on 23 October 1995 at a cost of IR£155,000.

7.07 The repayment of Abervanta's bank loan plus interest (IR£218,726.21), and the payment of IR£31,538.87 to Mr Dunne, left a sum of approximately IR£164,000 (out of the sale price of IR£415,000) available to Abervanta's owners. This was the subject of particular inquiry by the Tribunal.

7.08 On 3 October 2006, both Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal that they had received just IR£10,000 each from the Abervanta sale proceeds. Mr Haughey, who acknowledged on 3 October 2006 that Bank of Ireland Private Banking had been repaid from the proceeds of sale, told the Tribunal that the balance had been used to repay Mr Dunne. Mr Barnicle claimed not to know what had happened to the balance and suggested that Mr Smyth, solicitor, would have this knowledge. He did not recall receiving any details from Mr Smyth in 1994 giving a breakdown of the proceeds of sale and the apportionment of those proceeds.

7.09 Following their testimony on 3 October 2006, on 4 October Messrs Haughey and Barnicle provided further statements to the Tribunal. In his statement, Mr Haughey said as follows:

I wish to clearly state that Mr Ben Dunne did not profit and was not in any way involved in my purchase or sale of the Cargobridge Lands save as a loan facilitator/ guarantor of the loan referred to in my evidence.¹⁰

7.10 Mr Smyth first gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal in relation to the matter on 4 October 2006. Responding to the evidence which had been tendered by Mr Haughey and Barnicle the previous day to the effect that they had each received IR£10,000 from the proceeds of sale of the lands, Mr Smyth declared:

'Well the beneficial own [sic] of the monies was Abervanta and the beneficial owner of Abervanta was John Barnicle and Ciaran Haughey. So the monies were theirs and whatever directions or instructions that we got from them is where we would have sent the money. But I don't know where the £10,000 comes from. Because the proceeds would certainly have been closer to £200,000.'¹¹

7.11 The records of Noel Smyth and Partners which dealt with the distribution of the net proceeds of the sale of the Abervanta lands were duly discovered to the Tribunal by Mr Smyth.

¹⁰Mr Barnicle furnished a statement in similar terms.

¹¹While Mr Smyth was giving his evidence the Tribunal received Messrs Haughey's and Barnicle's statements of 4 October 2006 stating that Mr Dunne had not profited from the proceeds of sale.

7.12 In the course of their evidence to the Tribunal on 19 December 2006, both Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle accepted that the evidence which had been tendered by them on 3 October 2006 (to the effect that each had received only IR£10,000 from the proceeds of sale) was incorrect, and both acknowledged that the surplus of approximately IR£164,000 had been in fact distributed, at their direction, to themselves and their company, Celtic Helicopters, directly or indirectly.

7.13 The Tribunal's examination of the disbursement of the surplus sum of approximately IR£164,000 identified the following movements of funds:

- IR£5,000 to Mr Haughey
- IR£5,000 to Mr Barnicle
- IR£19,000 to Celtic Helicopters Ltd
- IR£24,875 to an account operated by Mr Barnicle at Bank of Ireland, Dublin Airport, entitled 'Soltina 2 Account'
- IR£24,875 to an account operated by Mr Haughey at Bank of Ireland
- IR£85,194.02 for all intents and purposes the balance of the net proceeds of the sale transferred on 24 May 1994 to the account of Carlisle Services Ltd in Bank of Ireland, Isle of Man, an offshore account. Carlisle Services was a shelf company incorporated in Delaware, USA which Mr Smyth procured for Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle in May 1994. Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle acknowledged that they had travelled to the Isle of Man to deposit this money.

7.14 Of the money¹² in the Carlisle Services Ltd, Bank of Ireland, Isle of Man offshore account:

- IR£50,000 was transferred on 26 January 1995 from the Isle of Man to the account of Medeva Properties Ltd at National Irish Bank, Malahide in Co. Dublin. Medeva was a company owned by Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle which had been incorporated on 24 May 1994.
- IR£18,469.27 was withdrawn from the Isle of Man company account and used by Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle, via Carlisle Services, to purchase shares in a mining company.
- IR£6,000 was transferred on 18 May 1995 from the Isle of Man bank account to Mr Barnicle's Soltina 2 Account at Bank of Ireland at Dublin Airport.
- The equivalent of IR£14,500 was withdrawn in sterling cash from the Isle of Man account in April 1998.

¹²IR£85,194.02 which together with earned interest less 'cash handling' fees and 'hold correspondence' charges eventually totalled IR£88,969.27.

7.15 The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle that they believed, when initially giving sworn evidence to the Tribunal on 3 October 2006, that they each had received just IR£10,000 from the proceeds of the Abervanta sale, and that they had forgotten or were otherwise unaware of the disbursement details of the great bulk of the funds. The Tribunal was satisfied that both Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle had received between them, directly or indirectly, approximately IR£164,000 in total of those proceeds.

EVENTS LEADING UP TO MR FRANK DUNLOP'S RETENTION

8.01 On 4 November 1991, a planning application seeking permission for the development of approximately 36,000 square metres of warehousing and associated offices on the Cargobridge lands was lodged with Dublin County Council in the name of Cargobridge Ltd (with an address at Neptune Freight Complex, Baldoyle Industrial Estate). Given the lands' agricultural zoning, the grant of such a permission would inevitably lead to a material contravention vote within the Council.¹³

8.02 On 13 November 1991, the Department of Transport, at the direction of the Minister, and, it appeared, at the behest of Aer Rianta, lodged an objection to the Cargobridge planning permission application of 4 November 1991.

8.03 Documentation discovered to the Tribunal suggested that Council officials were strongly opposed to the planning application on the grounds that there was no commercial access to the site, and there was no possibility that a connection to the main sewerage and drainage system serving Dublin Airport would be forthcoming.

8.04 However, elected representatives on Fingal planning committee were supportive. Notwithstanding the evident support for the application within this committee in November/December 1991, and the initial procedure put in place by the councillors to proceed with a Section 4 motion, it appeared that the Cargobridge consortium chose not to pursue this option. The option was withdrawn on 18 March 1992.

8.05 Independently of the 4 November 1991 planning permission application, on 29 November 1991, in the course of the first statutory public display of the 1991 Draft Development Plan, Ms Gráinne Mallon, town planner, lodged a submission with Dublin County Council on behalf of Cargobridge Ltd seeking E (industrial) zoning for the lands.

¹³ According to Mr Smith, the Council's chief planning official. This position was doubted by Cllr Anne Devitt and Mr Brian Byrne of Aer Rianta.

8.06 On 2 December 1991, also in the course of the first public display of the Draft Development Plan, the Department of Transport¹⁴ made a representation to the Council objecting to any rezoning of lands within the natural road boundaries of the airport. This area included the Cargobridge lands. The representation stated: 'it is proposed progressively to acquire all lands within these boundaries for future airport expansion purposes.'

8.07 Contemporaneous documentation furnished to the Tribunal revealed that the Cargobridge consortium's attempts to upgrade the right of way from agricultural use to commercial use, and to obtain planning permission and/or rezoning for their lands, were implacably opposed by Aer Rianta, who regarded the Cargobridge lands as strategically important for its development plans for Dublin Airport.

8.08 By the late 1980s and early 1990s, Aer Rianta's objective was to secure, for its own purposes, as much of the land in the environs of Dublin Airport as possible. Prior to the consortium's acquisition of the Cargobridge lands, Aer Rianta had made a number of efforts to purchase the lands from Mr Morgan.

8.09 As of October 1991, Aer Rianta's belief was that the Cargobridge consortium's purchase of the lands was a purely speculative venture. This was notwithstanding the fact that, on 22 October 1991, Mr McGuinness and Mr Fitzgerald had told Aer Rianta of the consortium's plan to develop a freight complex for Neptune Freight and Williams Air Freight on the lands.

MR DUNLOP'S RETENTION

9.01 In February 1993, Mr McGuinness retained Mr Dunlop's services on behalf of the Cargobridge consortium. Entries in Mr Dunlop's diary for 22 and 23 February 1993 confirmed that the two men met on 23 February 1993. Mr Dunlop's involvement with the Cargobridge lands began at a time when the County Council was about to embark on the process of considering the Draft Development Plan insofar as it related to lands in north Co. Dublin.

9.02 Mr Dunlop said that in February 1993 he knew of Mr McGuinness but had not previously met him.

9.03 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that at their meeting, Mr McGuinness outlined the consortium's proposals to rezone its lands from B (agricultural) to E (industrial) and its belief that the proposal enjoyed widespread support among councillors. While he alluded to a number of persons being involved in the consortium, he identified only Mr Fitzgerald.

9.04 Mr Dunlop said that Mr McGuinness told him that a significant level of canvassing of councillors had been undertaken by February 1993, and showed him a motion to rezone the lands signed by Cllrs Anne Devitt, Cyril Gallagher, Michael Kennedy, G. V. Wright, Michael J. Cosgrave, Liam Creaven and Sheila Terry. The variety of signatures had indicated to Mr Dunlop that there was cross-party support for the motion. The motion was lodged on 24 February 1993.

9.05 Mr McGuinness outlined to Mr Dunlop Aer Rianta's opposition to the consortium's proposal. Mr Dunlop understood that his role was to counter Aer Rianta's lobbying efforts against the proposal. It was his belief that this would include lobbying councillors who might be under pressure from Aer Rianta to withdraw their already committed support for the proposal.

9.06 In his written statements to the Tribunal, Mr McGuinness maintained that he retained Mr Dunlop only in relation to the Cargobridge lands right of way issue, and more specifically to lobby the Department of Transport in that regard. While Mr Dunlop admitted to being involved in lobbying the Minister regarding the right of way, he claimed that this occurred in late 1993 subsequent to the confirmation vote on the rezoning of the lands.

9.07 Mr Delaney told the Tribunal that Mr McGuinness had informed him that Mr Dunlop was retained for the right of way issue only. Mr Delaney told the Tribunal that he was unaware of Mr Dunlop having any role in the lobbying of councillors.

9.08 Mr Cousins met Mr Dunlop on one occasion in Mr Dunlop's offices in late February 1993. Mr Cousins said that he was certain that Mr Dunlop had been engaged only in relation to the right of way issue.

9.09 Mr Fitzgerald first met Mr Dunlop in late February or early March 1993, shortly after the initial meeting between Mr Dunlop and Mr McGuinness. It was his understanding that Mr Dunlop had been engaged solely in relation to the right of way issue because he was a political lobbyist with assumed access to the Department of Transport.

9.10 Both Mr Cousins and Mr Fitzgerald maintained to the Tribunal (as did Mr McGuinness in correspondence) that by February 1993 the consortium had substantial councillor support for the rezoning proposal. The Tribunal was told this had been achieved by Mr McGuinness and Mr Fitzgerald lobbying for a substantial period prior to February 1993. Both Mr McGuinness and Mr Fitzgerald had continued to lobby councillors up to the rezoning vote of 30 March 1993 and they maintained that Mr Dunlop had played no role in such lobbying.

9.11 Mr Kennedy, solicitor to the consortium, gave evidence of a discussion he had had with his client Mr McGuinness on 11 May 2000 concerning Mr Dunlop's involvement with the consortium.

9.12 A written attendance prepared at that time by Mr Kennedy, solicitor, on that discussion with his client Mr McGuinness and which he confirmed to the Tribunal accurately represented what Mr McGuinness had told him, stated:

Attending on Michael McGuinness today when he gave me the following information:

- 1) He told me that in relation to Cargo Bridge and the development at Dublin Airport Business Park, he had been involved extensively in lobbying politicians at the time in seeking rezoning and planning permission.*
- 2) He made it quite clear at no time was he ever asked for monies by a politician or did he ever pay money to any politician or county councillors.*
- 3) In or about 1993, he became aware that Aer Rianta were providing considerable hospitality to County Councillors with a view to influencing them against granting the applications being made by Cargo Bridge/Neptune for the development of Dublin Airport Business Park. As a result, he contacted and hired Mr Dunlop to monitor how councillors were being influenced by Aer Rianta and whether or not they were likely to vote for or against his proposals for rezoning and planning. Mr Dunlop requested a fee of either IR£3,000 or IR£5,000 from Michael McGuinness and his fellow developers and he specifically requested this in cash and was paid the sum. Michael cannot remember whether it was IR£3,000 or IR£5,000 and it was split equally between himself and the other developers, Hi [High] Degree Construction, Mr Fitzgerald and P. J. Cousins. Michael McGuinness made it quite clear to me that this fee was paid directly to Mr Dunlop for his work and it was never the intention that the money would be passed on to anybody else and it was simply his professional fee for the work he was doing.*

PAYMENTS MADE TO MR DUNLOP

10.01 According to Mr Dunlop, the issue of fees arose in his initial February 1993 meeting with Mr McGuinness. At this meeting Mr McGuinness had acknowledged his awareness of and his support for participation in the practice of, if necessary, making disbursements to councillors to ensure that they would stay 'on side'. Mr Dunlop stated: 'Mr McGuinness said straightforwardly to me during the discussion in relation to fees, that he recognised that disbursements might be required to keep people on side’.

10.02 Mr Dunlop stated that at this meeting neither he nor Mr McGuinness had mentioned which councillors would require payment, or if any had been paid to date. From Mr McGuinness’s mention of the likely need for disbursements, Mr Dunlop believed that he understood the nature of the ‘system’ that pertained within Dublin County Council.

10.03 Mr Dunlop testified that he and Mr McGuinness duly agreed a fee of IR£10,000. He had requested that this fee be paid off-shore, to his Xerses Jersey account. Mr McGuinness said he would seek his accountant’s advice on this proposed arrangement.

10.04 Mr McGuinness subsequently telephoned Mr Dunlop to say that such a method of payment would not be possible as his accountant’s advice had been that ‘it would stick out like a sore thumb in the accounts’. Consequently the two men decided on cash as the method of payment. Mr McGuinness had duly arrived in Mr Dunlop’s office with IR£10,000 in cash.

10.05 Mr Dunlop conceded in evidence that since their initial meeting was on 27 February 1993, it was likely that the entry in Mr Dunlop’s diary for a scheduled meeting for 10 March 1993 meant that he received this IR£10,000 on that date at a meeting between himself and Mr McGuinness.

10.06 Records showed that on 15 March 1993 a cash lodgement of IR£12,000 was made to Mr Dunlop’s Irish Nationwide Building Society deposit account (one of Mr Dunlop’s ‘war chest’ accounts). Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that such a lodgement suggested that he had a large amount of cash at that time. He was unable to exclude the possibility that the lodgement included some or all of the IR£10,000 paid to him by Mr McGuinness.

10.07 Mr Dunlop testified that when they were negotiating fees, Mr McGuinness had told him that Mr Fitzgerald would also pay him some fees and suggested that Mr Dunlop contact him.

10.08 Mr Dunlop stated that shortly after his initial meeting with Mr McGuinness, he contacted Mr Fitzgerald about fees. On 4 March 1993, Frank Dunlop and Associates Ltd raised an invoice for IR£3,025 (IR£2,500 plus VAT) on Mr Fitzgerald’s company, Williams Air Freight Ltd. A cheque payment of IR£3,025 was made against this invoice by Mr Fitzgerald on 5 March 1993 and was lodged to the bank account of Frank Dunlop and Associates Ltd on 5 March 1993 as part of a composite lodgement of IR£12,784.

10.09 Mr Dunlop's recollection as to how this second payment had arisen was poor, save that he claimed to have a 'residual' recollection of an agreement having been reached with Mr Fitzgerald for a payment of IR£5,000, though he acknowledged that the documentary evidence suggested only that a payment of IR£2,500 plus VAT had been made.

10.10 Mr Fitzgerald told the Tribunal that he had no recollection as to why his company, Williams Air Freight Ltd, had paid IR£3,025 to Frank Dunlop and Associates Ltd on 5 March 1993, although paid on foot of an invoice. It was his belief that this payment did not relate to the Cargobridge lands but to a separate project. Mr Fitzgerald said in a written statement to the Tribunal that he was unaware of the detail of any discussion about fees between Mr Dunlop and Mr McGuinness, other than that he was subsequently asked to contribute IR£1,000 towards Mr Dunlop's fees, which he paid to Mr McGuinness in the autumn of 1993. It was his understanding that IR£3,000 in cash had been paid to Mr Dunlop in relation to lobbying work associated with the right of way issue.

10.11 Mr Cousins' recollection of Mr Dunlop's fee arrangement was similar to that of Mr Fitzgerald. It was his understanding that Mr Dunlop had been paid IR£3,000 in cash in relation to the right of way issue, to which he had contributed IR£1,000. He recalled that Mr McGuinness had indicated to him that Abervanta would not be making a contribution, because of lack of funds. Mr Cousins regarded Mr Dunlop's request for his fees to be paid in cash as 'a little unusual'.

10.12 Mr Delaney told the Tribunal that he had no knowledge of any matter relating to Mr Dunlop's fees. As far as he had been concerned, Mr McGuinness had himself dealt with this matter.

10.13 Both Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle stated that they had no knowledge of Mr Dunlop's involvement with the Cargobridge lands. Had any request been made for a contribution to Mr Dunlop's fees, it was their belief that it would have been conveyed to Mr Smyth, who was the person who controlled the monies which had been advanced to Abervanta through Mr Dunne's involvement.

10.14 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that he had had little or no contact with consortium members other than Mr McGuinness. He was certain that payments to councillors had not been mentioned to any member of the consortium other than Mr McGuinness. Mr Dunlop stated that he was unaware of Abervanta in 1993, and of the involvement of Mr Haughey and/or Mr Barnicle and/or Celtic Helicopters Ltd with the project.

10.15 In May 1993 a Cargobridge Ltd statement of account, furnished to Abervanta and headed 'Abervanta Ltd-31.12.1992. amount due to Cargobridge Ltd' which included a sum of IR£379 owed by Abervanta to 'F. Dunlop'. Having regard to the fact that Abervanta's landtake/involvement in the Consortium was 15.18 per cent of the overall, the inclusion of such a sum, on its face, suggested that the consortium as a whole had incurred a liability to Mr Dunlop of approximately IR£2,000 for year end 1992. No witness with whom this issue was raised could account to the Tribunal as to why the accounts of Cargobridge Ltd included a reference to a sum owed by Abervanta to 'F. Dunlop'. The Tribunal was thus left with the conundrum that contemporaneous documentary evidence suggested an involvement by Mr Dunlop with the Cargobridge consortium in 1992, yet the sworn testimony of Mr Dunlop, Mr Fitzgerald and Mr Cousins was that Mr Dunlop was retained by the consortium in February 1993, a position also maintained by Mr McGuinness in correspondence. Moreover, the beneficial owners of Abervanta, the recipient of the aforesaid bill, claimed that they were at all times unaware of any involvement by Mr Dunlop with the lands.

10.16 Mr McGuinness chose not to give sworn evidence to the Tribunal. However, in the course of written correspondence with the Tribunal between 2000 and 2006, his stated position was as follows:

- Mr Dunlop had been retained by the Cargobridge consortium only in relation to the right of way issue.
- Mr Dunlop had not been paid IR£10,000.
- Mr Dunlop received only IR£3,000 in cash.
- He (Mr McGuinness) was unaware that payments were to be made to councillors.
- He (Mr McGuinness), Mr Fitzgerald and Mr Cousins were present when the fee of IR£3,000 was agreed with Mr Dunlop.

10.17 In evidence, both Mr Fitzgerald and Mr Cousins rejected Mr McGuinness's assertion that they were present when the fee of IR£3,000 was agreed. Mr Dunlop denied that a fee of IR£3,000 had been agreed at any stage and he denied receipt of such a sum.

WAS MR DUNLOP RETAINED TO LOBBY COUNCILLORS?

11.01 Notwithstanding the evidence given by Mr Fitzgerald, Mr Cousins and Mr Delaney, and the position adopted by Mr McGuinness in correspondence, the Tribunal was satisfied that one of the reasons Mr Dunlop was retained by the Cargobridge consortium in February 1993 was to lobby councillors in connection with the rezoning proposal then before Dublin County Council. It was likely that Mr Dunlop's particular role was to counter the lobbying campaign against the rezoning that was then being conducted by Aer Rianta.

11.02 The Tribunal did not regard it as mere coincidence that Mr Dunlop was retained by the Cargobridge consortium only weeks prior to the rezoning vote. Indeed, Mr Fitzgerald, in the course of his evidence, acknowledged that the immediate focus of the consortium's attention in February/March 1993 was the upcoming rezoning vote. The Tribunal therefore accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that he was retained by Mr McGuinness on behalf of the consortium to lobby councillors, and rejected the denials given in evidence by Mr Fitzgerald, Mr Cousins and Mr Delaney, and in correspondence by Mr McGuinness.

11.03 In reaching this finding, the Tribunal took into account other evidence which supported that of Mr Dunlop.

11.04 The Tribunal accepted that Mr Kennedy, in all probability, noted correctly what Mr McGuinness told him on 11 May 2000. While Mr Kennedy could not recollect the context in which Mr McGuinness had given him the information, the Tribunal was satisfied that it was at a time when Mr Dunlop was being questioned by the Tribunal both publicly¹⁵ and in private session¹⁶ about his activities as a lobbyist.

11.05 There was contemporaneous evidence of Mr Dunlop's retention as a lobbyist for the Cargobridge rezoning project. Mr Dunlop's secretary's record of telephone calls included the following message as left by Mr McGuinness for Mr Dunlop on 24 March 1993: 'Patricia—Neptune Freight, Mike McGennis waiting for letter to be faxed over. Telephone 393064, fax 393810'.

11.06 The Tribunal was satisfied that this message referred to a draft letter, either prepared or settled by Mr Dunlop, which was to be sent to all county councillors seeking their support for the Cargobridge rezoning proposal, in advance of the vote on the proposal. The Tribunal was satisfied that such a letter, bearing the signatures of Mr McGuinness and Mr Fitzgerald, was probably sent to all councillors, on or about 25 March 1993. The Tribunal had sight of two such letters, one sent to Cllr David Healy, signed by Mr McGuinness and Mr Fitzgerald, and one addressed to Cllr Joe Higgins unsigned.

¹⁵ Mr Dunlop was questioned in public by the Tribunal on 11, 18, and 19 April 2000 and 9 May 2000.

¹⁶ Mr Dunlop was questioned in private by lawyers for the Tribunal on a number of occasions between 19 April 2000 and 1 June 2000.

11.07 There was considerable contact between Mr McGuinness and Mr Dunlop in the period March to September 1993, and, while the Tribunal accepted that this contact was not solely concerned with the Development Plan Review, and the rezoning motion passed on 30 March 1993 and confirmed on 30 September 1993, the Tribunal was satisfied that the level of contact and meetings between Mr Dunlop and Mr McGuinness within that timeframe strongly indicated Mr Dunlop's involvement in the rezoning process.

11.08 The Tribunal noted in particular the message, as recorded by Mr Dunlop's office, left by Mr McGuinness for Mr Dunlop on 29 September 1993 which read as follows: 'Mike McGennis—spoke to GV no meetings arranged for next week as yet. Chairman has full power to call a meeting for every day next week if he wishes. Our friend Brian has employed a PR company, handing out leaflets and info all day yesterday outside the PR company'.

11.09 The Tribunal was satisfied that in this message Mr McGuinness was updating Mr Dunlop on his (Mr McGuinness's) liaisons with Cllr G. V. Wright regarding the likely dates of Council meetings and on Aer Rianta's activities in the lead-up to the confirmation vote. The reference to 'Our friend Brian' was in all probability a reference to Mr Brian Byrne, General Manager of Aer Rianta, who was spearheading Aer Rianta's opposition to the Cargobridge rezoning proposal.

11.10 Further, Mr McGuinness's letter of 1 October 1993 to the Minister for Transport concerning the right of way issue, in which he gave his opinion of Aer Rianta's conduct in the lead-up to the rezoning vote of 30 September 1993, strongly indicated his involvement in the lobbying process.

11.11 In all the circumstances, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop was retained in connection with the Cargobridge rezoning proposal which was before Dublin County Council in 1993.

11.12 The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr Dunlop's retention as a lobbyist evolved to encompass the right of way issue on which the consortium had been making representations to the Department of Transport since 19 June 1991.

11.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that at the time of Mr Dunlop's retention, Mr Fitzgerald and Mr Cousins had some knowledge of his proposed role in the lobbying of councillors and in the countering of Aer Rianta's lobbying. However, the Tribunal accepted that, as evidenced by the substantial level of contact between them, Mr McGuinness conducted all relevant negotiations in relation to Mr Dunlop's retention as lobbyist with him, and that Mr McGuinness was the person who instructed Mr Dunlop and to whom he reported.

11.14 In his evidence, Mr Dunlop did not suggest that Mr Fitzgerald or Mr Cousins (or indeed Mr Delaney, Mr Ciarán Haughey or Mr Barnicle) was privy to the discussion between himself and Mr McGuinness on 23 February 1993 in the course of which, Mr Dunlop claimed, Mr McGuinness acknowledged that Mr Dunlop's lobbying efforts might require him to make payments to councillors.

DID MR DUNLOP AND MR MCGUINNESS DISCUSS PAYMENTS TO COUNCILLORS AND DID MR DUNLOP RECEIVE IR£10,000 IN CASH FROM MR MCGUINNESS?

12.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that in the course of their initial discussion Mr McGuinness acknowledged to Mr Dunlop his awareness that disbursements to councillors might be made. Mr Dunlop's evidence on this issue was unchallenged by any sworn evidence of Mr McGuinness. The Tribunal believed that Mr Dunlop was paid IR£10,000 cash on or about 10 March 1993, a date for which Mr Dunlop's diary showed a meeting between the two. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that he had sought payment offshore and that Mr McGuinness declined to facilitate this request.

12.02 The Tribunal rejected the position adopted by Mr McGuinness in correspondence with the Tribunal, that only IR£3,000 in cash was paid to Mr Dunlop.

12.03 The Tribunal was satisfied that in paying the IR£10,000 cash to Mr Dunlop, Mr McGuinness anticipated that Mr Dunlop might pay councillors in the course of his lobbying and/or counter lobbying. Given that Mr Dunlop stated in evidence that the possible payment of councillors was raised by Mr McGuinness, the Tribunal believed that Mr McGuinness was aware, from whatever source, that Mr Dunlop engaged in the practice of making corrupt payments to councillors. The Tribunal was therefore satisfied that Mr McGuinness's payment of IR£10,000 to Mr Dunlop was made, in part at least, for corrupt purposes.

12.04 There was no evidence before the Tribunal that Mr Fitzgerald, Mr Cousins, Mr Delaney, Mr Haughey or Mr Barnicle were privy to or aware of the arrangement entered into by Mr Dunlop and Mr McGuinness in February 1993, or that any of them knew or suspected that Mr Dunlop was likely to pay councillors for their support for the Cargobridge rezoning.

12.05 While likewise there was no evidence to suggest that they were specifically aware that Mr McGuinness paid Mr Dunlop IR£10,000 in cash, two members of the consortium, namely Mr Fitzgerald and Mr Cousins, acknowledged making cash payments of IR£1,000 each in their belief that they were contributing to the IR£3,000 which they understood Mr McGuinness had paid to Mr Dunlop. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payments were made at Mr McGuinnesses' suggestion.

12.06 The Tribunal did not accept Mr Fitzgerald's evidence that a cash payment of IR£1,000 was the extent of his contribution to Mr Dunlop's fees. The Tribunal was satisfied, based on Mr Dunlop's testimony and on documentary evidence, that Frank Dunlop and Associates invoiced Mr Fitzgerald through Williams Air Freight for the sum of IR£2,500 plus VAT on 4 March 1993, most probably following a discussion between the two men. The Tribunal was further satisfied that in paying this invoice on 5 March 1993 Mr Fitzgerald understood it to be fees for Mr Dunlop's lobbying work in the lead up to the rezoning vote.

12.07 It is likely that Mr Dunlop was given to understand by Mr McGuinness, and that Mr Fitzgerald himself understood, that Mr Dunlop's 'brief' would include lobbying relating to the right of way and rezoning.

12.08 The Tribunal found it noteworthy that while Mr Fitzgerald acknowledged that the payment of 5 March 1993 was made to Frank Dunlop and Associates on foot of an invoice, he maintained that it was for work Mr Dunlop did in 1993, most likely for Williams Air Freight in relation to a US project. The Tribunal rejected Mr Fitzgerald's contention.

12.09 Insofar as Mr Dunlop was involved in work for Mr Fitzgerald and/or Williams Air Freight on a project other than Cargobridge, the available evidence suggested that such work was carried out in the early months of 1994 and not in March 1993 when the IR£3,025 invoice was paid.

12.10 The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's claim that Mr McGuinness informed him that Mr Fitzgerald would be contributing to his fees. The Tribunal was satisfied that the IR£3,025 fee paid to Mr Dunlop was the fee (whether fully discharged or otherwise) that was negotiated by Mr Dunlop and Mr Fitzgerald at some point following Mr Dunlop's discussion with Mr McGuinness regarding fees.

12.11 The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that the discussions he had with Mr Fitzgerald encompassed only his payment of a fee to Mr Dunlop and that they did not discuss or acknowledge payments to councillors or anything else of that nature.

12.12 The Tribunal was satisfied that IR£3,000 in cash was not paid to Mr Dunlop in September/October 1993. However, it was satisfied that, at Mr McGuinness's suggestion, Mr Fitzgerald and Mr Cousins each contributed IR£1,000 to Mr McGuinness towards Mr Dunlop's fee.

12.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that the timing of the invoice to Mr Fitzgerald/Williams Air Freight and the proof of its discharge corroborated Mr Dunlop's account of having been paid fees by the consortium in March 1993, and of being paid by Mr McGuinness in March 1993, and not September/October 1993, as claimed by Mr McGuinness.

THE REZONING OF THE CARGOBRIDGE LANDS

13.01 The motion seeking to rezone the Cargobridge lands lodged on 24 February 1993 was passed at a special meeting of the County Council on 30 March 1993 by 51 votes to nil, with 2 abstentions. The Draft Development Plan, including the newly rezoned Cargobridge lands, went on public display between 1 July and 4 August 1993.

13.02 The Minister for Transport, through his agent Aer Rianta, lodged a submission with Dublin County Council on 3 August 1993 objecting to the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands, given their proximity to Dublin Airport. Cllrs Joe Higgins and Guss O'Connell signed a motion that was also lodged with the County Council. This motion sought, in effect, to revert the lands to their original B (agricultural) zoning.

13.03 A special meeting of Dublin County Council took place on 30 September 1993. The Manager's report for that meeting referred to representations from Aer Rianta, on behalf of the Minister for Transport, and its objection to the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands for industrial use because it would interfere with the safe and efficient navigation of aircraft. The Manager indicated his view that the aircraft safety issue was unfounded, but he did not recommend confirmation of the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands because of drainage difficulties.

13.04 At the 30 September 1993 meeting the Higgins/O'Connell motion was defeated by an overwhelming majority. The E (industrial) zoning was duly confirmed. The 1993 Development Plan was adopted by Dublin County Council on 10 December 1993.

THE CARGOBRIDGE CAMPAIGN TO OBTAIN A COMMERCIAL RIGHT OF WAY

14.01 Crucial to the Cargobridge consortium's ambition to rezone their lands for industrial use was the alteration of the right of way serving those lands from agricultural to commercial use.

14.02 Following the acquisition of the lands by the consortium in mid-1991, Mr Kennedy, the consortium's solicitor, wrote to the Department of Transport on 19 June 1991 seeking to have the right of way upgraded to permit commercial use. This request was refused in a letter from the Department of Transport dated 9 October 1991.

14.03 The consortium appealed this decision on 15 October 1991.

14.04 Mr McGuinness began to correspond directly with the Minister for Transport on behalf of the consortium on 22 October 1991, and followed this by making a commercial offer to the Minister for such right of way.

14.05 On 22 October 1991, Mr McGuinness and Mr Fitzgerald met with Mr Byrne and Mr Pugh of Aer Rianta, hoping to persuade Aer Rianta to facilitate commercial use of their right of way. They were reminded at this meeting that they knew of the right of way issue, that the land was not serviced for sewerage and lacked the necessary zoning at the time of their purchase of the lands.

14.06 Aer Rianta was vehemently opposed to the Cargobridge lands being used for any industrial purpose, and to the right of way serving those lands being upgraded from agricultural use to commercial use.

14.07 The Department of Transport, at the direction of the Minister for Transport, lodged objections to the planning permission application and the rezoning proposals of Cargobridge on 13 November 1991 and 2 December 1991 respectively. This ministerial opposition was informed by the case being made by Aer Rianta to the Department at that time, namely that the Cargobridge lands were of strategic importance for the future development of the civil aviation business of Dublin Airport.

14.08 In similar fashion, Aer Rianta urged the Department on 13 November and 4 December 1991 to refuse the application made by Cargobridge for a commercial right of way.

14.09 While the Ministerial objection to the Cargobridge planning application had been lodged with the Council on 13 November 1991, correspondence passing between the Department and Aer Rianta on 20 November 1991 indicated some degree of unease on the part of the then Minister for Transport to the concept of a blanket objection being made to the use of the Cargobridge lands for private commercial purposes. This was evident from a letter from the Department to the Chief Executive of Aer Rianta on 20 November 1991 stating:

The Minister finds it difficult to defend publicly the lodging of objections to developments by private enterprises on lands in the vicinity of Dublin Airport in the absence of a well defined and clearly articulated Aer Rianta policy on the future use of such lands, including access problems arising. He has asked that such a policy be formulated and the company make a submission on this to the Department as a matter of urgency.

14.10 It was common case that the Cargobridge planning application, which was before the Fingal planning committee of Dublin County Council between November 1991 and March 1992 (when it was withdrawn), enjoyed considerable support among local councillors. Moreover, it appeared that these councillors took issue with the opposition of Aer Rianta to this planning application. In a letter to the Minister for Transport dated 21 November 1991, Mr McGuinness advised the Minister of the strong support at Council level for the planning application and sought to counter the objections of Aer Rianta by stating that:

We are aware that Aer Rianta objected to all developments in the environs of Dublin Airport which are not directly related to airport activities. Cargobridge Limited is seeking the development on this particular site because the business of the two freight companies involved is aviation related i.e. the warehousing of freight and access to European and nationwide distribution of this freight. These two companies are at the present time providing freight distribution to multi-nationals such as Digital and Northern Telecom who are enormous contributors to the Irish economy and who expect and demand a superior service.

Mr McGuinness reminded the Minister that:

Access to the same right of way has already been granted to Celtic Helicopters and the fact that the Government has stated its wish to develop air transport services and airport related industries, we urge you to reconsider your decision at this time.

14.11 This letter was silent on the fact that Celtic Helicopters, through its directors Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle, were associated with the Cargobridge consortium through Abervanta.

14.12 The first breakthrough on the right of way issue, from the perspective of the consortium, occurred on 3 December 1991 when the private secretary to the Minister for Transport wrote to Mr McGuinness in the following terms:

The Minister notes that the company's application for planning permission for a warehousing development on lands at Dublin Airport, at present zoned for agricultural use, is being considered by Dublin County Council. In the event of planning permission being granted, the Minister will be prepared to consider further the question of granting of a right-of-way over his lands to the lands on which the warehousing development will be located.

14.13 Mr Byrne, general manager of Aer Rianta, in his evidence expressed the opinion that this letter from the Minister was in reality indirectly advising the consortium that a right of way would not be granted.

14.14 Aer Rianta continued to object to the commercial use of the Cargobridge lands because of their proximity to Dublin Airport. On 4 December 1991, in response to a request from the Department of Tourism, Transport and Communications that it outline its policy on land acquisition, Aer Rianta advised the Department that the Cargobridge lands were of 'strategic value' and stated that:

The East lands [which included the Cargobridge lands] have long been identified as essential for future development needs. Because of aeronautical restrictions the area which can be used for future airport development is very limited and the former Morgan lands are located within the unrestricted zone. Options for the development of this area have been under consideration for the past few years.

Aer Rianta went on to outline the possible development it envisaged for the Cargobridge lands which included airport hotels, offices and car parking facilities. On the issue of access, Aer Rianta advised the Department as follows:

In a general sense access to the airport infrastructure is of major commercial and strategic value and should not be given away. There is substantial advantage for any developer or other operator in being able to locate at the airport a link into the existing infrastructure which has been funded by the Exchequer.

and

Cargobridge Ltd. has applied to change an agricultural right-of-way to a commercial right-of-way. In this context the question of road access cannot be separated from land acquisition. Without road access, land has significantly reduced value. It would be imprudent from the Exchequer's point of view to take any action to enhance the value of land scheduled for acquisition by granting access beyond what is legally required. For the same reason, it would be inappropriate to assist in having these lands rezoned for industrial purposes. A further complication is that the access in question is of a temporary nature and not suitable for high volume traffic because of its proximity to a major roundabout.

The restricted access granted to Celtic Helicopters did not conflict with future acquisition plans or airport development nor did it involve any change in the existing agricultural zoning.

14.15 On 1 October 1992, Mr John McGuinness,¹⁷ then a member of Kilkenny County Council, made a direct representation by letter on behalf of his brother Mr Michael McGuinness to the then Taoiseach, Mr Albert Reynolds, in respect of the right of way issue. In the course of that letter he stated that there was a ‘need for direct political intervention in this case in order to remove some of the ‘red tape’ which is preventing the project from getting to the ‘start position’. I believe that some of the correspondence from the officials indicates the problem.’

14.16 This approach to the Taoiseach prompted further consideration of the issue by the Department of Transport. In November 1992, the Civil Aviation Division of the Department recommended:

That the Taoiseach be informed that a right of way cannot be granted for access for commercial purposes to lands which are zoned for agricultural use in the County Development Plan. Should Cargobridge reapply for, and be granted, planning permission for the project and, for a change of use, the question of a grant of a commercial right-of-way across the Minister’s lands could be considered. However primary consideration would have to be the future development needs of Dublin Airport.

14.17 This position was advised to Mr John McGuinness on 15 March 1993 by the private secretary to the then Minister for Transport, Mr Brian Cowen TD.

14.18 The campaign to secure the necessary commercial right of way continued following the rezoning vote of 30 March 1993. On 6 April 1993, Mr Michael McGuinness wrote to the Minister advising him of the political support which his plans for the Cargobridge lands had received at Council level. He repeated his request for a commercial right of way, a request he elaborated on in a letter of 4 May 1993 when he sought ‘a free commercial right of way over your lands’. The Minister’s private secretary, while noting that the lands had been rezoned, responded that ‘when planning permission has been received by the company the Minister will give consideration to the granting of a right of way across the Minister’s land’.

14.19 On 6 May 1993 Mr McGuinness replied to this correspondence. He expressed his disappointment with the Minister's decision and emphasised the imperative nature of obtaining the necessary commercial access, before making an application for planning permission.

14.20 In his letter, Mr McGuinness stated that the Cargobridge consortium understood that they were not being given a commercial right of way because 'Aer Rianta have input to this file'. In the course of this letter Mr McGuinness sought a meeting with the Minister.

14.21 In early 1993, representations supporting the Cargobridge consortium's request for the grant of a commercial right of way over the Minister's lands were made by Mr Michael Smith TD,¹⁸ Mr Ruairi Quinn TD, Minister for Enterprise and Employment, and Ms Nora Owen TD, Deputy Leader of Fine Gael. Deputy Owen reminded the Minister that a precedent was already in place in the upgrading of the right of way facilitating Celtic Helicopters' use of land adjacent to the Cargobridge lands.

14.22 The contemporaneous records produced to the Tribunal suggest that the reason why the Department did not change its approach to the Cargobridge request for a commercial right of way, notwithstanding the various political representations which had been made to the Minister, was most likely Aer Rianta's request in June 1993 that the Minister issue a policy statement to Dublin County Council under Section 7 of the Local Government Act 1991 in support of Aer Rianta's objectives in relation to a number of land parcels (including Cargobridge) in the vicinity of Dublin Airport. The Department of Transport records indicated that, in response to this request, the Minister in turn had sought that Aer Rianta produce its own policy statement detailing its plans for the development of the lands over a 10–12 year period.

14.23 On 3 August 1993, in the course of the second public display of the Draft Development Plan, and in advance of the confirmation vote on the Cargobridge lands, Aer Rianta lodged a submission objecting to the rezoning.

14.24 Notwithstanding Aer Rianta's objection, the Cargobridge rezoning was confirmed on 30 September 1993. As in March 1993, the confirmation was by another almost unanimous vote of the Council.

14.25 Although contemporaneous documentation from the Department of Transport showed that a draft policy statement on the future development of ¹⁸ Mr Smith made representations on behalf of Ms Terri Brennan, Mr Anthony Delaney's wife.

Dublin Airport (including the safe operation and development of air traffic at the airport) had been drawn up within the Department in August 1993, pursuant to the Local Government Act 1991, no such policy statement had been submitted to the County Council by the Minister prior to the vote of 30 September, 1993. In the course of giving evidence to the Tribunal, Mr John Loughrey, Secretary General at the Department of Transport, Energy and Communication stated that the Section 7 (of the Local Government Act 1991) policy statement was not issued to the County Council by the Minister as Aer Rianta had been requested to put together a coherent strategic plan for lands adjacent to the Airport, including the Cargobridge lands, but had failed to do so. Mr Loughrey did not recall ever seeing the draft prepared within the Department, stating that such a document would not necessarily be brought to his or the Minister's attention in its draft form.

14.26 However, on 6 October 1993, following the receipt of a letter from Aer Rianta on 5 October 1993 the Department, under cover of a letter from Mr Loughrey, furnished a written submission entitled 'Statement On The Need For Safe Operation and Development of Air Traffic at Dublin Airport' to Dublin County Council on air safety. This document drew the attention of county councillors to the implications that certain proposed rezonings (then before the Council for consideration) had for 'the safe operation and development of aircraft and air navigation at Dublin airport'. Included in the Department's listed rezonings in this context was change 10-2 on the Draft Development Plan the Cargobridge lands and in respect of which the submission observed 'This area lies close to the Approach Cone of the main Runway 10-28. Noise levels at this location could be intrusive'.¹⁹ Insofar as the aforesaid observations on the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands were before the County Council on 6 October 1993, the issue was, for all intents and purposes, moot, since industrial zoning for the Cargobridge lands had been confirmed by the Council on 30 September 1993. The issuing of such a statement, however, suggested to the Tribunal that the concerns which Aer Rianta had expressed, regarding the rezonings listed in the submission, had resonated to some degree within the Department of Transport.

14.27 On 1 October 1993, the day following the confirmation of the new industrial zoning of the Cargobridge lands, Mr McGuinness again wrote to the Minister for Transport seeking a commercial right of way to facilitate the Cargobridge lands. On that date also, Mr Dunlop wrote to the Minister in relation to the right of way issue. On 29 October 1993 Mr Dunlop wrote to Mr McGuinness advising him that he had had sight of a letter prepared by the Minister. That letter, Mr Dunlop advised, 'states categorically that following the recent rezoning decision by Dublin County Council he (the Minister) has no objection in principal [sic] to the granting of full commercial access to the Cargobridge lands' and that the Minister's position in this matter 'is subject only to the attendant costs of such access being decided by arbitration'. The Minister wrote to Mr McGuinness on 19 November 1993 advising him that, in view of the fact that Dublin County Council had recently confirmed the rezoning of the lands from agricultural to industrial use, he wished to state that 'in principle' he had no objection 'to full commercial access being made available to the land in question.'²⁰

14.28 In the course of evidence given to the Tribunal, Mr Brian Cowen TD (who had been Minister for Transport between 12 January 1993 and 15 December 1994) stated that his letter of 19 November 1993 was his agreement in principle to the grant of a commercial right of way to Cargobridge subject to agreement on price. In evidence, Mr Cowen agreed that the requirement for planning permission to be in place before such a grant of right of way would be given was no longer a pre-condition.

14.29 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Cowen's letter to Mr McGuinness on 19 November 1993 was written having regard to the fact that the lands had been rezoned in September 1993. The Tribunal was satisfied that it was within Mr Cowen's discretion as Minister for Transport to take into account the probability that the Cargobridge consortium was unlikely to be granted planning permission without being in a position to show the Council that they had adequate access to the lands which they proposed to develop. This case had been made to Mr Cowen by both Mr McGuinness and Mr Dunlop, and indeed was the central difficulty, as noted by Mr Ruairí Quinn TD (then Minister for Enterprise and Employment), when he wrote to Mr Cowen in May 1993.

14.30 The decision to grant a commercial right of way to Cargobridge was made in the teeth of strong opposition from Aer Rianta. Mr Byrne, in his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, stated that up to this point the Department of Transport had been strongly supportive of Aer Rianta in its aims and objectives for the development of Dublin Airport. However, as outlined by Mr Cowen and by Mr Loughrey, in their evidence, the Tribunal was satisfied that within that Department both at Ministerial and Secretary General level there was evolving, from 1992 onwards, somewhat of a sea-change in their thinking on the role of Aer Rianta vis-à-vis lands in the vicinity of Dublin Airport. Mr Cowen's view on this matter was evident from the contents of a letter written by him to Senator G. V. Wright on 8 December 1993. While the subject matter of that correspondence was unrelated to the Cargobridge lands, the sentiments expressed by Mr Cowen in the final paragraph of that letter (which was that he did not share Aer Rianta's view that it should undertake all development at Dublin Airport) reflected what Mr Cowen in evidence had stated was his approach to the general issue of Aer Rianta and airport development in 1993.

14.31 In a letter to Senator G. V. Wright on 8 December 1993 Mr Cowen stated: 'I do not share the view that Aer Rianta itself must undertake all development on Dublin Airport. I welcome private sector development provided it conforms absolutely with my Department's safety and technical requirements and does not impede the future operation and development of the airport.'

14.32 Thus the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Cowen exercised his discretion having regard to the circumstances at the time, namely that the lands were zoned for industrial use and no case had been made out by Aer Rianta to his satisfaction or that of his Department that the lands were strategic to its plans for Dublin Airport. Notwithstanding the approach taken at Ministerial level within the Department, the Tribunal noted that as late as January 1994 officials were still recommending planning permission as a precondition for the upgrade of the right of way being sought by the Cargobridge consortium. In a document entitled 'Application by Cargobridge Ltd for commercial right of way across Minister's lands at Cloghran near Dublin Airport' prepared in January 1994, the Department officials recommended as follows:

A precedent has been set for the granting of a right-of-way across the Minister's lands to private companies through the granting of a right of way to Celtic Helicopters Ltd in 1990. In view of the absence of specific aviation-related plans by Aer Rianta which would allow compulsory acquisition process to be entered into and the unlikelihood that Cargobridge Ltd would be prepared to sell their lands to Aer Rianta at an affordable price, it is recommended the Minister agrees to the granting of a right-of-way to Cargobridge Ltd provided that a satisfactory commercial payment is agreed and provided that the company succeeds in obtaining planning permission.

14.33 The Tribunal was satisfied that intense lobbying was conducted by the Cargobridge consortium in the course of its attempts to upgrade their right of way, and which intensified over the course of 1993 and which involved active participation by Mr McGuinness and Mr Dunlop. Their participation continued throughout 1994 in relation to the issue of putting in place a mechanism for assessing the cost to the Cargobridge consortium of their newly acquired commercial right of way. Save for a cursory reference thereto, Mr Dunlop's active role on behalf of the consortium in the lobbying for the upgraded right of way was not addressed by him in the statements he furnished to the Tribunal.

ALLEGED PAYMENTS BY MR DUNLOP TO COUNCILLORS

15.01 Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid Cllrs Tony Fox and Cyril Gallagher IR£1,000 each to secure their support for the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands, and that he paid Cllr Seán Gilbride a ‘composite’ payment of IR£2,000 in connection with these and other lands.

CLLR TONY FOX (FF)

15.02 In the course of a private interview on 18 May 2000, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he had paid Cllr Fox money in relation to the Cargobridge lands. He repeated this allegation in his written statements to the Tribunal dated 9 October 2000 and 26 February 2004.

15.03 Mr Dunlop’s sworn testimony to the Tribunal on 20 September 2006 was that when he canvassed Cllr Fox for his support for the Cargobridge rezoning proposal, Cllr Fox had informed him that he had already been lobbied by Mr Michael McGuinness, and that he supported the rezoning proposal. Mr Dunlop said that Cllr Fox told him that he had assured Mr McGuinness of his support, but complained to Mr Dunlop that ‘he [Mr McGuinness] gave me nothing’. Mr Dunlop stated that he had interpreted this comment as a hint or request for payment, and he promised Cllr Fox IR£1,000, which he said he duly paid to him ‘somewhere in the environs of the Council’ prior to the vote for the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands on 30 March 1993.

15.04 Cllr Fox’s specific comments to Mr Dunlop about Mr McGuinness, as alleged by Mr Dunlop in evidence, which he stated led him to proffer IR£1,000 to Cllr Fox, were not included in Mr Dunlop’s prior statements to the Tribunal of 9 October 2000 and 26 February 2004. Nor did Mr Dunlop allude to Cllr Fox making these comments in his private interview with the Tribunal.

15.05 Mr Dunlop was questioned by the Tribunal as to why he felt he had to pay Cllr Fox money given his assurance of support for the Cargobridge proposal. He replied: ‘Because of my relationship with him and because of his ongoing relationship with me in a variety of developments, in some of which he was crucially important.’

15.06 Before giving evidence in this module, Cllr Fox furnished a statement to the Tribunal in which he stated:

I have no particular recollection of the zoning of the above lands. In particular in relation to the questions raised in the tribunal the letter from the tribunal on 23 February 2006, I reply as follows:-

- (a) To the best of my recollection I cannot recall any meeting or discussion with Mr Frank Dunlop, Mr Michael McGuinness, Mr Michael Fitzgerald or any agent of those persons including Neptune Freight Limited and/or Williams Air Freight Limited in relation to the zoning of these lands.*
- (b) I have received no payment or benefit whatsoever from anyone in connection with the rezoning of these lands.*

15.07 In the course of his evidence Cllr Fox stood over the contents of his statement. He vehemently denied Mr Dunlop's allegations, and he denied that he had received IR£1,000 from him. He described Mr Dunlop's evidence as 'total fabrication, absolute rubbish'. He denied ever having the conversation described by Mr Dunlop and claimed that Mr Dunlop was coming to the Tribunal about him 'to justify his [Mr Dunlop's] own greed'.

15.08 Cllr Fox's evidence was that Mr Dunlop had made representations to him in relation to only two developments, neither of which included the Cargobridge lands.

15.09 Telephone records maintained by Mr Dunlop's secretary suggested telephone contact between Cllr Fox and Mr Dunlop's office on eight separate occasions in 1993, including 9 and 31 March 1993. In 1994, telephone contact was recorded on 15 occasions. While Cllr Fox did not concede the accuracy of these records, he did accept that there was a certain level of contact between himself and Mr Dunlop during these years. It was his belief that this contact related only to Texas Homecare in Dundrum and Quarryvale.

15.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop lobbied Cllr Fox for his support for the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands in 1993 in the course of regular contact between them. The Tribunal accepted evidence of regular telephone contact between Cllr Fox and Mr Dunlop in and around March 1993 (and on other occasions).

15.11 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid IR£1,000 in cash to Cllr Fox in return for his support for the Cargobridge lands rezoning, and that Cllr Fox had solicited that payment. The said payment was intended to ensure that Cllr Fox would act otherwise than in the disinterested performance of his public duties as a councillor. The said payment was therefore corrupt.

CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER (FF)²¹

16.01 Cllr Gallagher was one of seven signatories to the motion to rezone the Cargobridge lands which was lodged with the Council on 24 February 1993. The lands in question were in Cllr Gallagher's electoral ward.

16.02 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Gallagher in the Royal Dublin Hotel some days prior to the 30 September 1993 Cargobridge lands confirmation vote, to ensure Cllr Gallagher's support for same and that the money had been solicited by Cllr Gallagher.

16.03 Council records produced to the Tribunal suggested that Cllr Gallagher had also been supportive of the attempts made by the Cargobridge consortium in November/December 1991 to obtain planning permission for the lands, and that on 16 December 1991, he had seconded a motion proposing a material contravention.²² The records suggested that Cllr Gallagher had been approached by the consortium in this regard. The planning permission application was ultimately withdrawn in March of 1992.

16.04 In the course of his evidence, Mr Cousins told the Tribunal that from the outset he had been aware of Cllr Gallagher's support for the rezoning.

16.05 Council records showed that Cllr Gallagher did not attend the special meeting of 30 March 1993, having sent his apologies to the Council for his absence. Mr McGuinness, in correspondence, stated that Cllr Gallagher had telephoned him before the meeting and had advised him that for personal reasons he was unable to attend.

16.06 In the course of his private interview on 18 May 2000, Mr Dunlop made reference to Cllr Gallagher in the following terms:

'Now, in relation to Gallagher who is recently deceased, but in relation to Gallagher, Gallagher was enthusiastically supportive of it at the outset. A doubt entered into people's minds as to whether Aer Rianta had got to him and if you bear in mind the military campaign that was conducted by Aer Rianta which it was, I mean they put five or six people on this and they used every subterfuge in the book including over-flights, you know, heights of buildings, flight paths, notwithstanding the fact that the Team Aer Lingus building was on the roundabout and they were still talking about the heights that would be necessary in case planes would crash into the buildings, but Gallagher at one stage was suspected of having changed sides and that Aer Rianta got him and remember that, sorry, I shouldn't say words like 'remember', Swords was very much centred on activity at the airport and Cyril would have been conscious of the fact that, you know, if he did something that was in some way could be represented by Aer Rianta as seriously affecting employment or future employment, that would seriously affect him in his own electoral area and not only there, there would be people from Fine Gael that would use it, there would be people from Fianna Fáil that would use it against him. So he was suspected from getting at from outside. So he was directly in receipt of something of the order of two grand from me in relation to that to ensure that he stayed onside.'

²¹ Cllr Gallagher died in March 2000.

16.07 On Day 674 (20 September 2006) Mr Dunlop was asked to explain how it was that between May and October 2000, the payment he alleged he had made to Cllr Gallagher had moved from a figure of 'something of the order of two grand' to a specific figure of IR£1,000. Mr Dunlop explained the shift in his position in the following terms:

'I am trying to be as helpful as possible and we have traversed this territory before in relation to other matters. Outside of the frenetic atmosphere of what occurred in April and May 2000 here and in the private sessions, when I was asked for an extensive narrative statement by the Tribunal in relation to my association with councillors on the one hand, politicians on the one hand and builders, developers on the other, I had to sit down and reflect over my relationship with all of these people over a period of, periods of time, the developments that I was involved in with them, and what relationship I had with them, and what monies changed hands, it is in that context that I said what I said.'

16.09 In his statement of 26 February 2004, Mr Dunlop had advised the Tribunal as follows:

Some of the councillors on the North Side of the city came under intense pressure from representatives of Aer Rianta to vote against the proposal on 30 March 1993. One such councillor was Cyril Gallagher. Enthusiastically supportive of the proposal initially his enthusiasm waned and he did not vote on 30 March 1993. He did not attend the meeting. He voted for the confirmation of the zoning on 30 September, 1993. I paid him IR£1,000 for his support on that occasion. The payment was made in the Royal Dublin Hotel some days prior to the meeting. He asked for IR£1,000.

16.10 In the course of his sworn testimony to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop stated that within a short time of having been retained as a lobbyist he canvassed a substantial number of councillors in relation to the rezoning, including Cllr Gallagher. Mr Dunlop's diary entries for March 1993 revealed that during that month he had contact with Cllr Gallagher, in addition to Cllrs Devitt, Creaven, M. J. Cosgrave, Kennedy and Wright—all signatories to the motion to rezone. Mr Dunlop stated that he would have spoken to these individuals in relation to the Cargobridge and other rezoning proposals then ongoing.

16.11 All concerned, including Cllr Gallagher, had been conscious of the intense lobbying Aer Rianta was conducting against the Cargobridge rezoning proposal. Northside councillors were particularly targeted for lobbying. Mr Dunlop had regarded Cllr Gallagher, being a local councillor, as having taken a 'brave stance' in signing and supporting the motion, notwithstanding that his support for the Cargobridge rezoning motion, according to Mr Dunlop, had been 'palpable, overt and evident'.

16.12 Cllr Gallagher's failure to attend the special meeting of 30 March 1993 was the subject of political discussion, particularly among Fianna Fáil councillors. Mr Dunlop, in evidence, cited Cllrs Wright and Gilbride as having queried the reasons for Cllr Gallagher's non-attendance. It had, according to Mr Dunlop, 'raised signals'. While, as Mr Dunlop conceded, there may have been some perfectly genuine reason for Cllr Gallagher's absence from the special meeting which voted on a proposal he himself had signed, nonetheless there had been speculation that he had come under pressure and had been lobbied successfully by Aer Rianta, and that he had dealt with this pressure by absenting himself from the meeting.

16.13 Mr Dunlop said that he had contemplated this matter in the run up to the confirmation vote on 30 September 1993 and that it was his belief that if Cllr Gallagher again failed to support the motion in September 1993 'it would have been particularly odd and even though the vote might have been passed, it mightn't have looked well if Cyril Gallagher from the north side, particularly from Swords, with the airport in his constituency, voted against, or abstained again'.

16.14 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that Cllr Gallagher had confirmed his suspicion that he had been canvassed and put under pressure by Aer Rianta when Mr Dunlop had lobbied him in the run-up to the confirmation vote.

16.15 On Day 674 (20 September 2006), the following exchange took place between Counsel for the Tribunal and Mr Dunlop:

Q. 527 'Why did you pay him IR£1,000?'

A. 'Because he asked. I had a discussion with him about it, he told me he would come after the discussion, after he had said you know, are you going to give me something, I cannot give you the exact words but we agreed that I would give him IR£1,000 and I did, and he voted for the confirmation.'

Q. 528 'Just to be absolutely specific, Mr Dunlop, are you telling the Tribunal that you felt that unless you paid Cyril Gallagher deceased IR£1,000 in September 1993 he would not have voted for this project?'

A. 'I certainly had a doubt.'

Q. 529 'And that he had not voted for the project the project might, the confirmation might not have gone through?'

A. 'Let me replicate again or reprise for you what I said in another module. Mr Cyril Gallagher's name begins with a G, his name is called out very early on. If people, if a whiff that Cyril is going to vote against or not appear again other people might have said well if Cyril is not voting for it or if Cyril is not on side there must be a reason for it and he could have affected other people, I'm not saying that it would, it could have. I have given evidence to that effect at another occasion.'

Q. 530 '1099, this is the Motion, Mr Dunlop, lodged and voted on in March 93, the very second signature on that motion of many signatures is Councillor Gallagher's?'

A. 'Correct.'

Q. 531 'Are you saying to the Tribunal that when the confirmation came for that almost identical proposal, that it was your worry or fear that Cyril Gallagher would have voted against something that he was so enthusiastically supportive of the previous March?'

A. 'No, I didn't say worry or fear, I said I had a doubt that Aer Rianta got to him or that he would either not vote or vote against it.'

Q. 532 'Even if we are talking about a negotiating situation from Mr Gallagher's point of view, what negotiating position had Mr Gallagher or what had he to offer you when he, as you allege, sought IR£1,000 from you in September 1993 when he was the second signatory to a Motion which had been successful by 52 votes to nil the previous March?'

A. 'Exactly that, his name and the fact that he was a signatory that's what he had to offer.'

Q. 553 'He had none?'

A. 'That's what he had to offer.'

Q. 534 'He was never going to vote against a proposal that he had signed a Motion in respect of and had been supportive of?'

A. 'What happened on the 30th March.'

Q. 535 'Enthusiastically supportive of it?'

A. 'Well, what happened on the 30th March.'

Q. 536 'So you are saying to ensure his attendance?'

A. 'There was a doubt in people's minds about what position Cyril would take in the confirmation vote. I made contact with Cyril, I had lots of contact with him, I made contact with him, we met and we were seriously concerned that Aer Rianta had in fact managed to nobble him and that that might have an effect on other people, it's as simple as that.'

Q. 537 'Did he tell you that Aer Rianta had nobbled him?'

A. 'Had what?'

Q. 538 'That Aer Rianta had nobbled him?'

A. 'No, told me that Aer Rianta lobbied him.'

Q. 539 'Certainly lobbied him. They lobbied every councillor?'

A. 'Absolutely very heavy. Very badly as well, I mean they were very heavy handed about it, which is another factor that comes into play for the level of support which existed for it.'

16.16 The Tribunal accepted that from the outset Cllr Gallagher was supportive of the proposal to rezone the lands and was, in all probability, an enthusiastic supporter prior to Mr Dunlop's retention as a lobbyist. It is certainly the case that he had supported the 1991 planning application and had signed the motion which was lodged before the Council on 24 February 1993, and that in September 1993 he voted against the Higgins/O'Connell motion which sought to have the Cargobridge lands revert to their agricultural status.

16.17 Given the strength of the vote in favour of the motion to rezone in March 1993, and of the vote which defeated the attempts by Cllrs Higgins and O'Connell to have the lands dezoned back to agricultural in September 1993, Cllr Gallagher's vote or failure to vote would not, in all probability, have altered the outcome of either vote. However, as already indicated (Q. 529), Mr Dunlop claimed in evidence that Cllr Gallagher's status as a local councillor, together with the fact that his vote would be a relatively early one (by virtue of his surname) and thus an indicator for other councillors who followed him in voting, were factors he considered important in September 1993 relative to the Cargobridge lands.

16.18 Cllr Gallagher died in March 2000 without having had the opportunity to address Mr Dunlop's allegations that he had sought and received money from him. Cllr Gallagher did, however, tell the Tribunal in the course of a private interview in March 1999 that he had not received corrupt payments.

16.19 The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that he had the discussion he claimed to have had with Cllr Gallagher in the lead-up to the confirmation vote and that Cllr Gallagher's attendance and support at the special meeting of 30 September 1993 was assisted by an agreement with Mr Dunlop that he would pay him IR£1,000. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that this money was paid to Cllr Gallagher in the Royal Dublin Hotel prior to the September vote. In respectively proffering and accepting the sum of IR£1,000, Mr Dunlop and Cllr Gallagher acted corruptly.

CLLR SEÁN GILBRIDE (FF)²³

17.01 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he made a 'composite' payment of IR£2,000 in cash to Cllr Gilbride in relation to his support for three rezoning motions, namely those relating to the Cloghran (Cloghran Module), Drumnigh (Fox and Mahony Module) and Cargobridge (Cargobridge Module) lands. Mr Dunlop's evidence was that this payment was made on a day after 28 April 1993.

17.02 Mr Dunlop was questioned in the course of his evidence as to why he might have paid a sum of IR£2,000 to Cllr Gilbride after he had already supported the three rezoning motions in respect of which the payment was being made. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that while he and Cllr Gilbride were discussing another pending rezoning issue, on a date probably prior to 28 April 1993, Cllr Gilbride complained that he had not been paid anything in respect of those three matters. Mr Dunlop said that it was on this basis, and for this reason, that he proceeded to pay him the sum of IR£2,000. In doing so he was conscious of the support already provided by Cllr Gilbride in relation to the three rezoning issues, and his ongoing support in relation to future projects.

17.03 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he had agreed to pay Cllr Gilbride IR£2,000 for his support for the rezoning of the Drumnigh, Cloghran and Cargobridge lands. The discussion took place at the time Cllr Gilbride signed the Drumnigh²⁴ rezoning motion, between 10 and 12 March 1993, or shortly thereafter but before the vote on the Drumnigh motion on 28 April 1993.

17.04 In the course of his evidence in the Cloghran Module, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that this discussion took place after votes had been cast in the Cloghran and Cargobridge motions, without mention of the Drumnigh lands rezoning motion.

²³ Cllr Gilbride died in January 2011.

17.05 Cllr Gilbride signed the Cloghran rezoning motion on 12 March 1993. The vote took place on 1 April 1993.

17.06 Cllr Gilbride told the Tribunal that he supported the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands on 30 March 1993 and the confirmation vote on 30 September 1993. His recollection was that he had supported the rezoning without having been canvassed. He took a similar position in a written statement he provided to the Tribunal on 14 July 2006. In contrast, in information provided to the Tribunal in 2001, Cllr Gilbride acknowledged that in fact he had been lobbied in relation to the Cargobridge lands. His explanation for this apparent inconsistency was that his 2001 statement referred to lobbying literature he had received in relation to the Cargobridge lands.

17.07 In any event, Cllr Gilbride strongly rejected the allegation that he had been paid IR£2,000 or any sum by Mr Dunlop in the circumstances outlined by him. He claimed that he had received a sum of IR£2,000 in cash from Mr Dunlop as a legitimate political donation in the course of the 1991 Local Elections in which he was a successful candidate for re-election to Dublin County Council.

17.08 Cllr Gilbride also acknowledged that there was a significant degree of contact between himself and Mr Dunlop in 1993. He acknowledged that Mr Dunlop's office telephone records, which indicated 11 telephone calls made from Cllr Gilbride to Mr Dunlop's office between 4 January and 2 February 1993, and 17 calls between 2 February and 25 March 1993, were accurate. Cllr Gilbride accepted that this contact was in connection with the Development Plan review that was ongoing at the time. Between 31 March 1993 and 28 September 1993, there were in excess of 30 such calls between Cllr Gilbride and Mr Dunlop's office. Specifically, there was one telephone contact between Cllr Gilbride and Mr Dunlop's office on 29 March 1993, the eve of the Cargobridge rezoning motion. Cllr Gilbride was unable to account for this call or its subject matter, but he believed no such call related to Cargobridge, as he was satisfied that neither Mr Dunlop nor Mr McGuinness had lobbied him in relation to that project.

17.09 The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Gilbride was lobbied by Mr Dunlop to support the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands in advance of both relevant County Council votes on 30 March and 30 September 1993.

17.10 The Tribunal's determination in relation to the issue of Mr Dunlop's alleged 'composite' payment of IR£2,000 to Cllr Gilbride is to be found in Chapter 10 (the Fox and Mahony module).

CLLRS COLM MCGRATH (FF) AND DONAL LYDON (FF)

18.01 In the course of a private interview with the Tribunal on 18 May 2000, Mr Dunlop named Cllrs Tony Fox, Cyril Gallagher, Seán Gilbride, Colm McGrath and Don Lydon as recipients of payments made in connection with the Cargobridge lands rezoning.

18.02 Although in his written statements of 9 October 2000 and 26 February 2004, Mr Dunlop again identified Cllrs Fox, Gallagher and Gilbride as recipients of money in relation to the Cargobridge lands, he did not repeat his earlier contention relating to payments to Cllrs McGrath and Lydon.

18.03 In evidence on 20 September 2006, Mr Dunlop said that neither Cllr McGrath nor Cllr Lydon had received money from him in relation to the Cargobridge lands. He acknowledged that, in the course of the private interview with the Tribunal on 18 May 2000, he had 'wrongly identified' both individuals as recipients of money in relation to those lands.

18.04 When pressed as to how he might have made an error in identifying two councillors as having received money in relation to the Cargobridge lands, Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well again, notwithstanding the reference to them as usual recipients because they were recipients of monies in other instances, but in the context of assisting the Tribunal and the generality of what took place in Dublin County Council and my relationship with these Councillors, I wrongly identified McGrath and Lydon' and '... the fact of the matter is in the private sessions, I was assisting Mr Hanratty and Mr Gallagher and some of his solicitor attendances, some of whom are present here today and will recall what occurred, we were - I was trying to indicate to the Tribunal the level of payments that were made, the recipients of those payments, the widespread nature of the system that existed and it didn't apply to only one development, that was the, that was my main concern at that time.'

18.05 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop erroneously identified Cllrs McGrath and Lydon as recipients of money in relation to the Cargobridge lands, in the course of his private interview with members of the Tribunal's legal team on 18 May 2000.

CLLR ANNE DEVITT (FG)

19.01 Cllr Devitt was a councillor in Dublin County Council between 1991 and 1993, and from 1 January 1994 a councillor with Fingal County Council. She was a trainee solicitor between 1991 and 1994, and qualified in 1994.

19.02 In December 1991, Cllr Devitt had proposed a material contravention (Section 4 motion) to a meeting of Dublin County Council in relation to the Cargobridge lands. At that time, this application was controversial and was strenuously opposed by the County Manager. The effect of the motion, had it been passed, would have been to permit industrial use of the Cargobridge lands.

19.03 In her evidence to the Tribunal, Cllr Devitt acknowledged that she had moved this material contravention motion at the request of the owners of the Cargobridge lands, and specifically Mr McGuinness.

19.04 Cllr Devitt played an active role in the process to rezone the Cargobridge lands in 1993 and in the consortium's subsequent application for planning permission. She was a signatory to the Cargobridge rezoning motion passed at the special meeting of Dublin County Council on 30 March 1993. Records indicated that Cllr Devitt contributed to the discussion at this meeting prior to the vote, and voted in favour of the motion. Cllr Devitt was also recorded as having voted against the Higgins/O'Connell motion on 30 September 1993. This led directly to the confirmation of the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands.

19.05 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he lobbied Cllr Devitt to support the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands, and that she was an enthusiastic supporter of the proposal.

19.06 Cllr Devitt acknowledged that she had been canvassed to support the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands but only by Mr Michael McGuinness and not by Mr Dunlop.

19.07 Cllr Devitt opposed the stated position of Aer Rianta on the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands. It was her belief that the Cargobridge motion was not in conflict with Aer Rianta's plans for the development of lands close to the airport. Cllr Devitt told the Tribunal that she perceived Aer Rianta as wishing to control ancillary business activity in the vicinity of Dublin Airport, and that she believed this to be unreasonable and unnecessary. She also appeared to believe that the sewage/draining system serving Dublin Airport should be accessible to the lands through which the system travelled, including the Cargobridge lands. This was contrary to Aer Rianta's view, which was that the system should serve Dublin Airport only.

19.08 On 8 December 1997, Cllr Devitt submitted an invoice to Mr Michael McGuinness/Neptune Freight Ltd entitled 'Planning and Development of Neptune Freight premises at above', in which she sought an 'all inclusive fee as agreed' of IR£10,000.

19.09 The description in the invoice stated:

To Professional Fee for Legal Work done in the following matters:

- 1. Taking instructions, reviewing draft, planning application, attending at the offices of Fingal County Council to examine Development Plan advising on amendments to draft application, attending at the offices of Dublin Corporation to review way leave agreements in relation to change, advising and amending terms of way leave agreements between Neptune Freight and the Minister for Trade Transport and Communications.*
- 2. Advising on draft planning applications for extensions to existing premises at Airport Business Park, reviewing regulations to densities heights, contributions. Attendance at meetings with Bio cycle Engineers and client architect to advise on Buildings Regulations in relation to County Council drainage requirements. Further miscellaneous advice in relation to legal requirement of Council's Planning Authority.*

This invoice was paid by Neptune Freight Ltd by cheque dated 17 December 1997.

19.10 At all material times during and before the year 1997, Cllr Devitt was an elected member of Dublin County Council (until 31 December 1993) and of Fingal County Council (from 1 January 1994), representing the Swords ward. Cllr Devitt told the Tribunal that the work in respect of which she invoiced Neptune Freight Ltd and received payment was professional legal work she had carried out in her capacity as a lawyer. In evidence, Cllr Devitt maintained that at the time she entered her commercial relationship with Mr McGuinness (i.e. in 1994, the year she qualified as a solicitor), they had reached an agreement that she would be paid a fee for her advices.

19.11 In the course of her dealings with the Tribunal, Cllr Devitt furnished a copy of a letter from Mr McGuinness dated 24 May 2002, written in response to her efforts to ascertain details from Neptune Freight Ltd of the work she had carried out for him. Mr McGuinness wrote as follows:

Dear Anne,

Further to your recent phone call to Tony Delaney I can confirm that all files relating to the problem you advised on, Right of Way, Access to Sewers, Biocycle and Bord Pleanála etc were all at the offices of Neptune Freight when it was sold to Tibbet and Britton in 1997.

I can confirm you gave me advice on all of the above including advice on EU competition law relating to Aer Rianta refusal to allow us access to sewers and their refusal to grant a right of way over our existing right of way. You introduced me to Frank Cavanagh of Biocycle and also advised on the Aer Rianta Bord Pleanála appeal.

You first undertook this work when you were working at the offices of Neptune's Solicitor—Michael Kennedy as an apprentice. After you left Michael Kennedy as a qualified solicitor I asked you to continue to advise us on all of the above.

I can confirm you continued to act as consultant solicitor to Neptune Freight until I sold the company in 1997. I hope this is sufficient.

Yours faithfully

Michael McGuinness.

19.12 In her capacity as a consultant solicitor with Noel Smyth & Partners from 1994 to 1996, Cllr Devitt on occasion worked on files connected with Abervanta. On 12 April 1994, Mr Kennedy, Cargobridge's solicitor, wrote to Noel Smyth & Partners (for the attention of Cllr Devitt) regarding the right of way issue. In the same month, Bank of Ireland Private Banking wrote to Noel Smyth & Partners (again for the attention of Cllr Devitt) regarding Abervanta and the discharge of its debt to the bank.

19.13 Documentary evidence produced to the Tribunal revealed that in the course of a meeting between Mr McGuinness and others with persons representing High Degree Construction Ltd concerning the disposal to it of Abervanta's lands, Mr McGuinness was being advised by Cllr Devitt by telephone of Dublin County Council planners' likely approach to the installation of a biocycle tank on the consortium's lands to take foul sewerage.

19.14 On 23 May 1995, on Fingal County Council headed notepaper, and headed 'Re Cargobridge' Cllr Devitt wrote to Mr John Lumsden of the Department of Transport in relation to the biocycle sewage proposals then being put forward by the Cargobridge consortium as being suitable for the Cargobridge lands.

19.15 In the course of her evidence to the Tribunal, Cllr Devitt maintained that, notwithstanding the use of Fingal County Council letterhead in the correspondence with the Department of Transport and Mr McGuinness, she was not acting in her role as councillor with Fingal County Council, but rather in her capacity as an advisor to Mr McGuinness.

19.16 On 2 April 1996, Cllr Devitt used the headed notepaper of Noel Smyth & Partners when contacting an official of the Department of Transport about the right of way to the Cargobridge lands. In her evidence to the Tribunal, Cllr Devitt suggested that this contact, although on Noel Smyth's headed notepaper, was not written in her capacity as a lawyer acting for Mr McGuinness, but was instead for her information 'as a councillor point of view'.

19.17 Having regard to the nature and content of the letter of 2 April 1996 which included direct communication from Aer Rianta to Mr McGuinness regarding the right of way issue, the Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Devitt, in liaising with the Department of Transport, was representing the interests of Mr McGuinness and the Cargobridge consortium.

19.18 Mr Fitzgerald and Mr Cousins both told the Tribunal that they had no knowledge of the payment of IR£10,000 by Mr McGuinness/Neptune Freight to Cllr Devitt in December 1997. According to them, Mr McGuinness had never sought any contribution from them towards this payment.

19.19 It was apparent to the Tribunal that Cllr Devitt played a significant role in Cargobridge's attempts to have the lands rezoned in the period 1991-3, and in its planning permission application subsequent to the rezoning of the lands in September 1993. Cllr Devitt was handsomely remunerated by Mr McGuinness for the assistance she provided in December 1997. Cllr Devitt sought to maintain that, as her commercial relationship with Mr McGuinness began in April 1994 and related essentially to issues of drainage and the right of way, any assistance provided by her was not in conflict with her role and duties as a councillor.

19.20 The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Devitt could not reasonably or credibly seek to divorce the role she played after the rezoning from the matters she concerned herself with in her capacity as an elected councillor prior to 1994 and which involved her casting her vote in favour of the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands.

19.21 The Tribunal was of the view that Cllr Devitt's actions in taking on a role in the Cargobridge planning application process from 1994 to 1997, together with the agreement she reached with Mr McGuinness that she would be paid for this role, compromised the requirement on her as an elected representative to perform her duties in a disinterested manner. In effect, Cllr Devitt, a local councillor, in anticipation or expectation of reward, assisted the Cargobridge consortium in its ultimately successful planning application. The Tribunal was of the view that Cllr Devitt's actions, in agreeing to act for financial reward, for the advancement of matters the outcome of which rested in the decision-making powers of the Council of which she was a member, were entirely inappropriate.

19.22 The Tribunal was of the view that Cllr Devitt permitted herself to become engaged in the Cargobridge project in circumstances where there was a potential conflict of interest with her role and her duty as a councillor. This conflict arose by her intermingling two clearly separate and distinct aspects of her work: that of a councillor on the one hand, and that of a lawyer/advisor on the other hand.

19.23 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr McGuinness's motivation in engaging Cllr Devitt's services related to her role as county councillor and the positive influence which she would bring to bear in that capacity on his interests in relation to the Cargobridge lands.

CLLR G. V. WRIGHT (FF)

20.01 Cllr Wright was a strong supporter of the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands, and was unhappy with the attitude of Aer Rianta to land development adjacent to Dublin Airport. He was a signatory to the motion to rezone the Cargobridge lands which succeeded on 30 March 1993, and again supported the confirmation process for the rezoning of the lands on 30 September 1993 (by voting against the Higgins/O'Connell motion).

20.02 From 1991, Cllr Wright actively supported Mr McGuinness in his efforts to obtain zoning/planning permission for the Cargobridge lands. He actively lobbied the planning department of Dublin County Council in this cause, and met with Mr Fitzgerald, Mr Delaney, Mr Cousins and Mr McGuinness on a number of occasions.

20.03 Mr Dunlop recalled lobbying Cllr Wright to support the rezoning of the Cargobridge lands and noting that Cllr Wright's attitude to the proposed rezoning was enthusiastic.

20.04 Cllr Wright acknowledged that in 1993 he may have sought support for himself for fundraising events such as golf classics from Mr Cousins, whom he knew.

20.05 Mr Fitzgerald recalled supporting a golf classic fundraising event for Cllr Wright in September 1993 in advance of the rezoning confirmation vote on 30 September 1993. He believed he contributed IR£100 to this event, having been solicited for a contribution by Cllr Wright. Mr Fitzgerald told the Tribunal that he was not interested in politics and did not therefore see himself as a political supporter of Cllr Wright.

MR MICHAEL MCGUINNESS'S INVOLVEMENT WITH THE TRIBUNAL

21.01 The Tribunal originally contacted Mr McGuinness by letter on 2 June 2000 seeking details of any direct or indirect payments he had made to any elected representative or public official, including any such payments made through Mr Dunlop or any other intermediary. Mr McGuinness replied to that letter from a Spanish address on 17 June 2000. His reply was in the negative, and he indicated that he had now retired and was travelling through Europe, and no longer resided in Ireland. Mr McGuinness provided the Tribunal with a London address for future correspondence.

21.02 The Tribunal resumed correspondence with Mr McGuinness in 2003 to his London address. A second letter was sent to him at his Isle of Man address, and a third letter was sent to him at both addresses. The Tribunal received a three page response from Mr McGuinness dated 13 November 2003, sent from his Isle of Man address.

21.03 Mr McGuinness provided a further written statement on 11 April 2004 from a Bangkok address.

21.04 The Tribunal made an order for discovery and production of documentation against Mr McGuinness on 14 June 2006. While Mr McGuinness maintained that he was not subject to this or to any order from the Tribunal, because he lived outside the jurisdiction, he nevertheless swore a short affidavit of discovery on 18 August 2008 in which he maintained that he no longer had relevant documentation available to him.

21.05 By letter dated 5 July 2006, the Tribunal advised Mr McGuinness that public hearings in the Cargobridge Module were scheduled to commence on 19 September 2006. Mr McGuinness was provided with relevant documentation, which he was entitled to receive as a scheduled witness in that module.

21.06 Further written statements were received from Mr McGuinness on 4 August and 11 August 2006.

21.07 On 18 August 2006 Mr Dónall King, solicitor to the Tribunal, engaged in a lengthy telephone conversation with Mr McGuinness in the course of which Mr McGuinness indicated the following:

- It was not his intention to attend the Tribunal as it was 'only' an inquiry and not a court case. Mr McGuinness stated that he did not understand the 'importance of attending the Tribunal'.

- It was not his intention to instruct a legal team to represent him at the Tribunal.
- He was resident outside the jurisdiction and was therefore not obliged to comply with any order of the Tribunal, although it was his intention to do so.

21.08 In a later telephone discussion with the Tribunal, initiated by him, Mr McGuinness emphasised that he intended no disrespect to the Tribunal in describing it as ‘only’ an inquiry and not a court, and that his earlier telephone reference to his decision not to instruct a legal team was intended to convey that he did not have time to instruct a legal team.

21.09 By letter dated 27 August 2006, Mr McGuinness declined the Tribunal’s offer to fix a date for his sworn evidence to be given at public hearing, stating that he was unable to break a planned year-long worldwide trip for such purpose. Mr McGuinness indicated that he would contact the Tribunal on his return from his travels and, subject to legal advice, agree a date for his attendance at a public sitting of the Tribunal for the purpose of giving sworn evidence. He did not do so.

21.10 On 1 July 2008, the Tribunal wrote to Mr McGuinness notifying him that it expected public hearings to conclude ‘in the near future’. Mr McGuinness was invited to make written submissions to the Tribunal, but did not do so.

21.11 With its letter dated 1 August 2008, the Tribunal sent Mr McGuinness copies of previous correspondence at a UK address and advised him that the Tribunal’s public hearings were expected to conclude in the autumn, and invited him to nominate a date between 16 and 26 September 2008 for the taking of his sworn evidence. The Tribunal received no response to this letter or invitation.

21.12 This letter, delivered by DHL couriers was signed for as having been received by Mr McGuinness (or a person purporting to be him), on 12 August 2008 at 10.30 am.

21.13 While Mr McGuinness provided some written information to the Tribunal, he elected not to attend the Tribunal to give sworn evidence, although the Tribunal made all reasonable efforts to facilitate him in that regard. Mr McGuinness, although having stated that he would do so, failed to contact the Tribunal for the purposes of arranging an agreed date for him to give sworn evidence to the Tribunal.

Re: Michael McGuinness.

Attending on Michael McGuinness today when he gave me the following information:-

1. He told me that in relation to Cargo Bridge and the development at Dublin Airport Business Park, he had been involved extensively in lobbying politicians at the time in seeking rezoning and planning permission.
2. He made it quite clear at no time was he ever asked for monies by a politician or did he ever pay money to any politician or county councillors.
3. In or about 1993, he became aware that ~~the Kinnia were providing considerable~~ ~~hospitality to County Councillors with a view to influencing their decisions regarding the~~ ~~approval of the rezoning of Cargo Bridge/Neptune for the development of Dublin~~ ~~Airport Business Park. As a result, he contacted and hired Frank Dunlop to monitor~~ ~~how the politicians were being influenced by Aer Rianta and whether or not they were~~ ~~likely to vote for or against his proposals for rezoning and planning. Frank Dunlop~~ ~~requested a fee of either £3,000 or £5,000 from Michael McGuinness and his fellow~~ ~~developers and he specifically requested £3,000 in each and was paid the sum. Michael~~ ~~cannot remember whether it was £3,000 or £5,000 and it was split equally between~~ ~~himself and the other developers, Hi Decree Construction, Mr. Fitzgerald and P.J.~~ ~~Cousins. Michael McGuinness made it quite clear to me that this fee was paid directly~~ ~~to Mr. Dunlop for his work and it was never the intention that the money would be~~ ~~passed onto anybody else and it was simply his professional fee for the work he was~~ ~~doing.~~
4. He told me that subsequently he received requests for money from Councillors as follows:-
 - a) A request for a contribution towards a hospice development. He paid £100.00

- b) A request for payment to an incapacitated persons in respect of which he paid £100.
 - c) A further request, details of which he cannot remember and in respect of which he paid £50.00. He will let me have further details.
5. He also told me that having met Anne Devitt through this office and being aware that she was doing a degree in Community and Environmental Law in U.C.D. and also that she offered services as a planning consultant he retained her in an independent capacity as a planning consultant to sort out various problems he was having in relation to the development at Dublin Airport Business Park and particularly obstructive tactics being employed by Aer Rianta. She worked on his behalf over a number of years, and even though he got planning permission in 1993, she subsequently submitted a bill to and was paid by Tibbett & Brittan who took over his business of a sum of £8,000.00 in or about 1997.
6. He had spoken to Anne Devitt about this payment and she informed him that it had been properly recorded in her books and she furnished a proper invoice.

Date 1st October 1993

Dear Minister,

On Monday 27 September Aer Rianta held a reception in the Royal Dublin Hotel for Dublin County Councillors. The purpose of the reception was to inform the councillors of Aer Rianta plans of Dublin Airport and to explain their objections to various zoning proposals. Mr Byrne (?) and other senior Aer Rianta personnel were in the council Chambers on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday for the same purpose.

The councillors were therefore fully informed despite some misinformation when they voted on the motion on Thursday afternoon. The result of that vote a rescinding motion proposed by Mr Joe Higgins Independent Militant Labour was 4 for, 54 against and 2 abstentions. A majority of 50 comprised of members of all political parties voting in our favour. We were very pleased to have received such massive support from the councillors and now wish to proceed with all speed to develop the lands.

Unencumbered commercial access is vital. We would be very grateful if you would grant this without delay so we may proceed with our expansion plans.

Thank you for your time and the courtesy extended to me at our last meeting

Yours sincerely

An Taoiseach,
Mr. Albert Reynolds, T.D.

Dear Taoiseach,

Please find enclosed a file which was passed to me by my brother Michael. The content is self explanatory:

The matter has been discussed with Deputy Marie Geoghegan Quinn, Minister, Deputy Liam Aylward, Minister and John Ellis, T.D. The project would cost £12 - £15m and secure at least 400 jobs in Neptune Freight Ltd. A number of smaller companies would also benefit as they rely heavily on Neptune Freight for work. My own Company, which employs 30 people in Kilkenny, is a sub-contractor to Neptune Freight.

It would seem that there is a need for direct political intervention in this case in order to remove some of the "red tape" which is preventing the project from getting to the "start position". I believe some of the correspondence from the Officials indicates the problem.

I would appreciate your help.

Kind Regards,

John J. McGuinness.

STRICTLY PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL

Brian
Dear Minister,

You will have seen from this morning's newspapers that Cargobridge, the company jointly owned by Mike McGennis, had the industrial zoning on its lands at Cloghran, County Dublin finally and irrevocably confirmed at a meeting of Dublin County Council yesterday, 30th. September, 1993, by a massive 54 votes in favour to 4 against. You will recall that they won their initial zoning by 50 votes to zero.

This vote underlines the huge support that Mike's company has and equally emphasises the low esteem in which Aer Rianta is held by elected members of Dublin County Council, more especially those in the North County (Fingal Electoral Area). Aer Rianta's tactics during the past week both on this issue and on another piece of land nearby have been nothing short of despicable. These tactics have included arbitrary, and heretofore unannounced, decisions regarding new runway, new terminal buildings and the emotive arousal of fears regarding public safety.

You will recall that when we spoke last with regard to the question of access to Cargobridge's land (Mike McGennis's) we agreed that we would achieve the confirmation of the zoning on the land first before doing anything about Aer Rianta and access. Cargobridge will now apply for planning permission and the question of access will become crucial. It is reported that a senior Aer Rianta manager stated that "hell would freeze over" before Cargobridge would get access and that Aer Rianta would "stitch them up" in the planning process.

Perhaps we could meet soon to discuss further.

Meanwhile I would appreciate an opportunity to bring in Des Burke (ex. Roscrea) to meet you at your convenience.

Kind regards,

Dear Michael.

I telephoned you yesterday following my meeting with the Minister for Transport, Energy and Communications Mr. Brian Cowen, TD. I should now like to put in writing what I told you verbally in the conversation. The Minister has prepared a letter, which I have seen, which states categorically that following the recent zoning decision by Dublin County Council (the Minister) has no objection in principle to the granting of full commercial access to the Cargobridge lands. His position on this matter is subject only to the attendant costs of such access being decided by arbitration.

I understand that the letter was being posted for arrival today (Friday 29th.). In the event that it does not arrive today I will ensure that you are in receipt of it on Monday next (1st. November).

Kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Dear Sir,

I enclose herewith copy of letter from the cycle club which deals with the objection from Aer Rannas relating to the bridge. You will notice on page 2 that Aer Rannas themselves have installed 3 such systems. The club is recently in this regard.

I also enclose a letter from Fingal County Council Planning Dept which deals with condition 3.

I trust this further clarifies my position.

Yours faithfully

CHAPTER EIGHT - CLOGHRAN MODULE

INTRODUCTION

1.01 This module related to attempts in the 1990s to rezone approximately 18 acres of land located immediately north of the M1 motorway close to Dublin Airport. They were separated from the Cargobridge lands by the airport slip road from the M1 motorway.

1.02 The module was heard in public over 17 days, between 24 October 2006 and 29 October 2008. Twenty-three witnesses gave evidence and information provided to the Tribunal by Cllr Cyril Gallagher in his lifetime was read into the record.

1.03 The lands were acquired by a consortium comprised of Messrs John Butler, Niall Kenny and Tom Williams who were partners at that time in a restaurant in Donnybrook, Dublin 4, known as the Courtyard Restaurant.

1.04 The first parcel of approximately 9 acres was acquired from its owner, Mr Paddy Molloy, for IR£165,000. An adjoining parcel of 9.1 acres was bought in December 1989 from its owner, Mr Robert Morgan, for IR£50,000.

1.05 Prior to the lands being transferred into the names of the consortium members, the members' interests in both parcels of land were held in trust by solicitors—Mr Gerald Kean for the Molloy lands and Mr Denis Murnaghan for the Morgan lands.

1.06 At the date of purchase the lands were zoned B (agricultural). Appendix D of the 1983 Development Plan set out development restrictions on lands close to the airport, including the Cloghran and Cargobridge lands, in the following terms:

Zoning:

Zoning in the Development Plan for the airport and the contiguous lands is agriculture and the Council's normal criteria for development in agricultural areas will apply, where lands are not otherwise affected by considerations of safety, noise or any factor affecting the safe operation of the airport.

Drainage:

There are no public piped drainage services in the airport area.

Noise:

That following previous policy and practice, the Council will continue to restrict development about the line of and within the area encompassed by the three 35NNI contour as shown on map 1 of the Development Plan.

1.07 The 1991 Draft Development Plan retained the 1983 zoning for these lands. Its draft written statement, under the heading ‘Airport Related Development’, outlined four factors affecting development on land adjoining the airport, namely safety, zoning, drainage and noise.

1.08 A motion proposing that these lands be rezoned from B (agricultural), to E (industrial and related uses) was lodged with the County Council on 12 March 1993. It was signed by Cllrs Anne Devitt, Cyril Gallagher, Seán Gilbride, G. V. Wright, Liam Creaven and M. J. Cosgrave. The motion was passed at a special meeting of the Council held on 1 April 1993, when 41 councillors voted in favour and 2 against.

1.09 In August 1993, during the display period of the plan, Aer Rianta lodged objections to the rezoning. As agent for the Minister for Transport, it cautioned that, if passed, these amendments to the 1983 zoning would interfere with aircraft safety and efficiency.

1.10 Three motions seeking to reverse the rezoning motion that was passed on 1 April 1993 were scheduled to be debated at a special meeting of the Council on 29 September 1993. The Manager advised the members of Aer Rianta’s objections and the debate was deferred to a meeting held the next day.

1.11 At the meeting on 30 September 1993, the Manager advised that on that morning the Planning Department and officials from Aer Rianta had discussed queries raised by members at the meeting held on the previous day. Consideration of the three motions was further adjourned to the next meeting, which was held on 6 October 1993.

1.12 At the special meeting on 6 October 1993, the Manager brought to the attention of the members a letter received that morning from the Secretary of the Department of Transport, Energy and Communications. The letter outlined the implications for air safety of a number of proposed rezonings of land in the environs of Dublin Airport, including the Cloghran lands. The Manager also brought the members’ attention to correspondence received from Aer Rianta, the Chamber of Commerce and the Irish Airline Pilots’ Association. All of these organisations supported the Aer Rianta position, and recommended with Aer Rianta that the 1983 zoning be retained, and that the matter be referred for examination to the County Planning Officer for Fingal and reported on to the incoming Fingal County Council. A motion in favour of this recommendation was defeated, with 40 votes against and 27 in favour. A further motion in support of the Manager's recommendation that the proposed rezoning amendment be deleted was lost when 40 members voted against the motion, with 19 in favour and 9 abstentions.

1.13 The proposed amendments of the 1993 Draft Plan were deemed confirmed. The lands were shown rezoned to E (industrial) in the 1993 Dublin County Development Plan, which was adopted on 10 December 1993.

1.14 It was agreed in December 1994, that the lands would be sold for IR£2.4m. This sale fell through and the consortium subsequently sold the lands in March 1996 for IR£1.6m.

MR FRANK DUNLOP'S RETENTION

2.01 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he was retained as a lobbyist for the rezoning of the Cloghran lands at a meeting with Mr John Butler on 13 January 1993. The meeting was arranged by Mr Tim Collins, who also attended.¹ At a later date, Mr Dunlop was introduced to Mr Butler's two colleagues in the consortium, Mr Tom Williams and Mr Niall Kenny.

2.02 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that in the course of this meeting he advised Mr Butler of the need to prepare and lodge a motion (and accompanying map) with Dublin County Council as a first step to rezoning the Cloghran lands for industrial use. Mr Dunlop maintained that at this meeting Mr Collins stated that there was already widespread support for the rezoning. Mr Dunlop also claimed that Mr Butler told him that a number of councillors had already been lobbied to support the proposed rezoning, including Cllr G. V. Wright. According to Mr Dunlop, Mr Butler described Cllr Wright as being 'completely on side'. Both Mr Collins and Mr Butler denied making any such statements.

2.03 Mr Dunlop advised the Tribunal that both Mr Collins and Mr Butler had indicated to him at that meeting that they were aware that some councillors would require payment in return for their support for the Cloghran rezoning. Mr Dunlop said that this part of the conversation arose when he was outlining the difficulties that he felt might arise because of the late entry of the Cloghran motion in the Development Plan review.

2.04 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that Mr Collins said that he 'knew that I would have to do certain things with councillors otherwise they wouldn't support it'. It was his understanding that Mr Collins had in this way introduced the topic of payment to councillors for their support for the rezoning. Mr Dunlop said that Mr Butler had participated in the discussion, and had acknowledged his awareness of what had been stated by Mr Collins with words to the effect 'I know what's going on. I know what goes on'. Mr Dunlop said he had no doubt that Mr Butler was aware of the practice and need to pay councillors in order to secure their support for the rezoning of lands, and that he, Mr Butler, and Mr Collins 'were singing off the same hymn sheet'. He was satisfied that Mr Collins knew of his practice of paying councillors because of their already established relationship in the context of the Development Plan review.

2.05 Mr Dunlop first identified the rezoning of the Cloghran lands (described as 'Other lands near airport') as one of the projects for which he had been retained as a lobbyist, and paid money, in the course of giving evidence on Day 148 (9 May 2000). He was then seeking to explain to the Tribunal the sources of a number of lodgments made to his AIB Rathfarnham 042 account, one of his 'war chest' bank accounts.

2.06 Included at No. 6 on a list Mr Dunlop had prepared, entitled '1991/1993 inclusive' (the developers list) was the description 'other lands near airport . . . £10,000'.

2.07 Also on Day 148 (9 May 2000), Mr Dunlop named 'John Butler MD Scafform Ltd' as one of the individuals associated with the Cloghran lands.

2.08 In a private interview with the Tribunal on 18 May 2000, Mr Dunlop identified Mr Williams and Mr Kenny as Mr Butler's partners in the Cloghran venture. Mr Butler was described by Mr Dunlop as the 'lead man' in the consortium, and he identified Mr Collins as the person who had introduced him to Mr Butler.

2.09 Mr Dunlop confirmed to the Tribunal his statement to the Tribunal of 9 October 2000, that subsequent to his meeting with Mr Butler on 13 January 1993, he told him that payments 'had been made to individuals such as Messrs. Gilbride [and] Gallagher'.

2.10 Mr Dunlop's recollection was that the question of his fees arose in the course of his meeting with Mr Butler on 13 January 1993, but in the absence of Mr Collins. Mr Dunlop said that he requested IR£20,000, and that he agreed a payment of IR£10,000 with Mr Butler. Mr Dunlop's evidence to the Tribunal was that he received the sum of IR£10,000 agreed with Mr Butler on 13 January 1993, shortly after the first meeting, and it was his belief that he received this payment by way of a cheque which he cashed. None of the documentation discovered to the Tribunal concerning payments made to Mr Dunlop in connection with the Cloghran rezoning revealed either payment to or receipt by him of a sum of IR£10,000 in the weeks subsequent to his retention as a lobbyist. He was adamant, however, that such a sum had been received by him within the timeframe he described, and said that 'it was highly unlikely that I would have been entering into an agreement with Mr John Butler or his partners through Mr John Butler on 13 January 1993 and not being paid money until April, May 1993'.

2.11 Although Mr Butler and Mr Collins acknowledged meeting Mr Dunlop in relation to the Cloghran rezoning, and Mr Butler acknowledged that Mr Dunlop's services were retained in connection with it, both disputed aspects of Mr Dunlop's evidence about the meeting.

2.12 Both Mr Butler and Mr Collins denied that they were aware of a need or practice to pay councillors to support the rezoning of lands, and that such a practice would have to be followed in relation to the rezoning of the Cloghran lands. They both stated that the initial meeting between Mr Dunlop and Mr Butler was, in effect, a chance encounter in the offices of Mr Ambrose Kelly. Mr Butler was in that office for a meeting with Mr Tim Rowe, one of the company's architects, and Mr Collins in relation to the proposed rezoning of the Cloghran lands, and it was during this meeting that Mr Collins introduced Mr Dunlop to Mr Butler. Mr Butler described Mr Dunlop's assertion that both he and Mr Collins knew that councillors would have to be paid as 'off the wall'.

2.13 Mr Collins told the Tribunal that in the course of a meeting with Mr Butler in the offices of Ambrose Kelly & Co, when the rezoning of the Cloghran lands was being discussed, Mr Dunlop had walked into the offices by chance. Mr Collins introduced Mr Dunlop to Mr Butler as a public relations man who might be of assistance to him in the context of the Cloghran rezoning. Mr Collins maintained that he had had no other involvement or further discussion with Mr Butler and Mr Dunlop, then or subsequently. Mr Collins said he had played no role in relation to the Cloghran rezoning process.

2.14 Mr Collins disputed Mr Dunlop's evidence that he had discussed councillors with him and Mr Butler. He denied that he indicated to Mr Dunlop that there was widespread support for the rezoning of the Cloghran lands amongst councillors. He described as a lie Mr Dunlop's assertion that he, Mr Collins, was aware of a need to pay councillors to support rezoning. He said that he was unaware of Mr Dunlop's activities, stating 'I knew two councillors—that's all I ever have—how the hell would I be au fait with it?'

2.15 Mr Butler told the Tribunal that following this chance encounter, he next met Mr Dunlop in the Royal Dublin Hotel when Mr Dunlop produced a list of councillors and urged Mr Butler and his partners to meet them. Mr Butler told the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop's role was to introduce the consortium members to councillors.

2.16 Mr Dunlop's assertion that he had advised Mr Butler at a meeting in January 1993, of the need to prepare and lodge a motion and accompanying map in relation to the proposed rezoning of the Cloghran lands was denied by Mr Butler.

2.17 Mr Butler also denied Mr Dunlop's assertion that he had advised Mr Dunlop that Cllr Wright was 'fully on side' in relation to the issue. Mr Butler told the Tribunal that he had never spoken to Cllr Wright about the rezoning of the Cloghran lands, although Cllr Wright told the Tribunal that when they met at his Malahide constituency office Mr Butler had spoken to him about his plans to construct a hotel on the lands.

2.18 Mr Butler also rejected Mr Dunlop's evidence that they had discussed fees, or that Mr Dunlop had sought IR£20,000 but had agreed to fees of IR£10,000, or that any such sum was subsequently paid to Mr Dunlop. According to Mr Butler, at no stage had he discussed fees with Mr Dunlop, maintaining that it was Mr Kenny and Mr Williams who had such a discussion.

2.19 Mr Butler maintained that he had no knowledge of when or how Mr Dunlop was to be paid. In the course of his evidence, Mr Butler accepted that documentation discovered to the Tribunal revealed that the consortium had made a number of payments in 1993 to Mr Dunlop, in some cases on foot of invoices addressed to him. However, Mr Butler nonetheless maintained that he had had no contact with Mr Dunlop regarding payment, that he had never personally received invoices from him, nor had he ever delivered payments to him. He disputed Mr Williams' evidence that Mr Butler had passed on to him a January 1993 invoice he had received from Mr Dunlop.

2.20 In his statement to the Tribunal on 14 February 2006, Mr Butler maintained that he was unaware of any money having been paid to Mr Dunlop for the purposes of securing councillors' support for the rezoning of the Cloghran lands. Mr Butler advised the Tribunal that he and his partners in the consortium had retained Mr Dunlop to handle public relations work in relation to the lands. With regard to Mr Dunlop, Mr Butler stated as follows: 'I had very little contact with him, save when I met him casually. No payments were made by me directly or indirectly to Frank Dunlop. The payment for his professional services was made by our accountants, Coopers & Lybrand.'

2.21 Most of the evidence in this module was heard by the Tribunal between 24 October and 9 November 2006. Mr Butler was unavailable during this period, and did not give his sworn evidence to the Tribunal until 23 September 2008. Prior to this, on 26 March 2007, Mr Butler wrote to the Tribunal through his solicitor, altering the position he had previously adopted that Mr Dunlop's fees had been paid when the Cloghran lands were sold in 1996. In this letter, Mr Butler conceded that certain payments had in fact been made to Mr Dunlop in 1993 during the period of his retention as a lobbyist.

2.22 In the course of his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Butler maintained, as he had done in prior statements to the Tribunal, that he had had only limited contact with Mr Dunlop while he was retained in relation to the rezoning of the Cloghran lands. Mr Butler suggested that it was his partners, Mr Kenny and Mr Williams, who had handled most of the consortium's dealings with Mr Dunlop.

2.23 Documentary evidence suggested that there was frequent telephone contact between Mr Butler and Mr Dunlop's office in January, February and March 1993, prior to the Cloghran rezoning vote on 1 April 1993. There was also frequent telephone contact in the months of April, June, August, September and October 1993 in the period leading up to the Cloghran rezoning vote on 6 October 1993. There was further contact by Mr Butler on 7 and 12 October 1993. Mr Butler suggested that Mr Dunlop's telephone records had been fabricated.

2.24 Mr Dunlop's diary recorded a meeting with Mr Butler scheduled for 22 February 1993. Mr Dunlop's diary also indicated scheduled meetings with Mr Butler (together with Mr Kenny) on 16 and 25 March 1993, and again on 14 September 1993 (together with Mr Collins), and on 18 October 1993. Mr Collins denied attending any meeting with Mr Dunlop in relation to the Cloghran lands subsequent to January 1993.

2.25 Mr Butler's colleagues, Mr Williams and Mr Kenny, told the Tribunal that in 1993, Mr Butler advised them that Mr Dunlop had been engaged to assist with the process of rezoning the Cloghran lands.

2.26 Both Mr Williams and Mr Kenny maintained that they had had limited contact with Mr Dunlop. Both understood that Mr Butler was the consortium member who dealt with most issues relating to the rezoning process, and was the person who took care of most of the consortium's dealings with Mr Dunlop.

2.27 In the course of his evidence, Mr Williams accepted that he must have dealt in some shape or form with payments to Mr Dunlop in 1993, though he had no recollection of doing so, because many of the payments made to Mr Dunlop had come from an account of Blackfearn Ltd, trading as the Courtyard Restaurant. Mr Williams ran Blackfearn Ltd on behalf of the consortium and was one of the signatories to the company's cheques. Mr Williams stated that he would not necessarily have been aware of any payments, other than the Blackfearn Ltd payments in 1993, that might have been made by Mr Butler to Mr Dunlop. He stated that he was not aware of payments made to Mr Dunlop other than those the Tribunal's discovery process had yielded.

2.28 While accepting that Blackfearn Ltd had made payments to Mr Dunlop on behalf of the consortium, Mr Williams could not recall Mr Dunlop ever having approached him about the payments. He did not recall any payment of IR£10,000 having been made to Mr Dunlop in January 1993. He believed that every payment Mr Dunlop received in 1993 had been accounted for in the Coopers & Lybrand figures compiled in 1996, though he could not assist the Tribunal as to what documentation had been provided in 1996 to the accountants for them to have come up with a figure of IR£23,025.

2.29 Although Mr Williams and Mr Kenny subsequently met Mr Dunlop following his retention by Mr Butler, there had been no discussion, or reference at any such meeting, of either a practice or a need to make payments to councillors in order to secure the rezoning of lands, and in particular the Cloghran lands.

2.30 Mr Dunlop himself did not suggest that he believed or understood Mr Williams and/or Mr Kenny to have any such knowledge. Mr Kenny recalled that Mr Dunlop had advised him and Mr Williams that funds would be required to support councillors' favourite charities.

MR DENIS MURNAGHAN'S ADVICE

2.31 Mr Denis Murnaghan, the solicitor representing the consortium, told the Tribunal of a meeting he had with Mr Butler and Mr Kenny in his office after he had learned that the consortium had retained Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist. Mr Murnaghan told the Tribunal that he advised Mr Butler and Mr Kenny to have nothing to do with Mr Dunlop because of his suspicions that 'the way in which Mr Dunlop was doing business was not quite proper.'

2.32 Mr Murnaghan's evidence was that he suspected at the time that Mr Dunlop was paying councillors in return for their votes, and that while he had not articulated this suspicion in those explicit terms to Mr Butler and Mr Kenny, he did advise them to have nothing to do with Mr Dunlop. Mr Murnaghan told the Tribunal that subsequently Mr Kenny informed him that the consortium had decided to continue their relationship with Mr Dunlop because they were 'in too deep' and 'had gone too far' and 'other like expressions.'

2.33 Mr Murnaghan told the Tribunal, referring to Mr Kenny's words quoted above, 'I felt when Mr Kenny said this to me that money was talking and that influenced his decision as to whether he would go along with Mr Dunlop or not ... It was a financial consideration.'

2.34 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Kenny agreed that at a meeting with him, Mr Murnaghan had raised the issue of Mr Dunlop's involvement in the rezoning and had warned him against retaining Mr Dunlop. Mr Kenny said that when he queried him about this warning, Mr Murnaghan had replied that he had no foundation for his warning save that he had heard a rumour. He said that Mr Murnaghan had not expanded on the detail of the rumour. Mr Kenny said that by the time Mr Murnaghan raised the issue of Mr Dunlop's retention, the consortium had already engaged Mr Dunlop and was acting on his advice. He denied that he would have used the words 'in too far' in his discussion with Mr Murnaghan.

2.35 Mr Murnaghan told the Tribunal that following the rejection of his advice to Mr Butler and Mr Kenny in relation to Mr Dunlop's engagement, his professional relationship with the consortium cooled.

2.36 Mr Butler denied receiving any warning or advice in relation to Mr Dunlop from Mr Murnaghan.

2.37 Mr Murnaghan did not appear to have spoken to Mr Williams in relation to the issue of Mr Dunlop's engagement with the consortium. Mr

Williams told the Tribunal that he was unaware of Mr Murnaghan's warning about retaining Mr Dunlop's services.

2.38 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Murnaghan did advise, or warn both Mr Butler and Mr Kenny against the retention of Mr Dunlop, but that in doing so, he did not explicitly refer to Mr Dunlop's propensity to bribe councillors.

MR COLLINS' RELATIONSHIP WITH THE CLOGHRAN CONSORTIUM

3.01 Mr Collins told the Tribunal that in his capacity as a land agent he sourced the Cloghran lands for the consortium, on the basis that he would receive a finder's fee. He advised the Tribunal that he located development land for potential purchasers in the area of north Co. Dublin, and cited, by way of example, the Cloghran lands and lands at Lissenhall which he had found for Mr P. J. Moran.² In the years 1989 to 1992, he was involved in a marketing role with Pilgrim Architects³ who provided architectural services relating to zoning and planning proposals. Mr Collins advised the Tribunal that there was an understanding between himself and Mr Butler that he would be paid a finder's fee in relation to the Cloghran lands at some point in time. Mr Collins said that he normally expected payment when the value of the lands in question was enhanced following rezoning or the granting of planning permission. Mr Collins said that his dealings in relation to the Cloghran lands were with Mr Butler, and he had no recollection of discussing a fee with either Mr Kenny or Mr Williams. Mr Collins was unable to assist the Tribunal as to how the fee of IR£29,613 was arrived at.

3.02 Mr Collins' association with the consortium arose through his friendship with Mr Butler, a friendship which went back a substantial number of years and which was apparently revived sometime in the late 1980s when Mr Butler once again encountered Mr Collins in Fianna Fáil circles. It appears that Mr Collins had introduced Mr Butler to Mr Des Richardson, and was instrumental in persuading Mr Butler to sell a property he owned at City Quay to him.

3.03 The Tribunal was satisfied that at some point Mr Butler was made aware of Mr Collins' adeptness at finding lands for potential purchasers and in this regard the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Butler, on his own behalf and on behalf of Messrs Kenny and Williams, instructed Mr Collins to source lands in north Co. Dublin. Mr Butler claimed to have no recollection of who had given instructions to Mr Collins and believed the latter's endeavours to have been promoted by a casual comment made to Mr Collins that Mr Butler and his partners in the Courtyard Restaurant were looking for lands in the north of the county upon which to expand their business. Mr Collins told the Tribunal that it was during a discussion over lunch one day in the Courtyard Restaurant that one of the three (he could not remember which one), said 'look we would like to replicate this on the northside, if you see something let us know.'

³ By the end of 1992 Pilgrim, then known as Project Architects, had effectively merged with the Ambrose Kelly Group.

3.04 However, the Tribunal believed it more likely that Mr Collins was specifically instructed to find lands, and the Tribunal believed that this instruction came from Mr Butler, albeit with the knowledge of Mr Kenny and Mr Williams.

3.05 Mr Collins' position, as set out in evidence, was that he had an involvement in sourcing the Molloy lands, subsequently purchased by the Cloghran consortium in 1989. He believed he had a lesser role in the purchase by the consortium of the Morgan lands. Yet Mr Tim Rowe⁴ believed that he was in attendance with Mr Collins during the negotiations between Mr Morgan and Mr Williams which led to the purchase of those lands.

3.06 Mr Collins described the fee arrangement he had with the Cloghran consortium as a relatively loose arrangement, and he stated that he did not know whether Mr Williams and Mr Kenny knew of his arrangement with Mr Butler in this regard, but assumed that they knew that he would get something for finding the site. He had no recollection of ever discussing a finder's fee with either Mr Kenny or Mr Williams. His only discussions had been with Mr Butler.

3.07 In 1996, subsequent to the rezoning of the Cloghran lands, Mr Collins was paid a finder's fee of IR£29,613 through his company Collins Consultancy Services. Mr Collins maintained that 'out of the blue' in 1996, he had received a telephone call from either Mr Kenny or Mr Williams, following which he met with one of the two. Mr Butler had not been present. At this meeting, he was apprised of the finder's fee he was to receive in relation to the lands, and he was requested to submit an invoice, which he duly did. He could not assist the Tribunal as to how the sum of IR£29,613 had been arrived at.

3.08 In evidence, Mr Butler claimed to have been entirely unaware of any arrangement made with Mr Collins for the payment of a finder's fee, and he maintained that he, Mr Butler, had made no such arrangement with Mr Collins. Moreover, he maintained that his agreement to the payment of the IR£29,613 fee paid to Collins Consultancy Services (for Mr Collins) in 1996, had only come about when Mr Kenny had telephoned him and has asked him whether he considered that sum a 'fair payment' for Mr Collins. He had agreed to such a payment.

3.09 On Day 902 the following exchange took place between Counsel for the Tribunal and Mr Butler:

Q. 'Why did you agree to the payment Mr Butler?'

A. 'Because I would have thought it was fair.'

Q. 'But fair for what?'

A. 'Fair for the work he did on the, on getting the land, the architects—well his involvement in the architectural work.'

Q. 'That has been paid?'

A. 'Or the work he did in introducing the councillors.'

Q. 'So can we take it that the payment of the £29,000 to Collins Consultancy Services is a payment in relation to introducing councillors to the project?'

A. 'I can't—I mean I can't say for definite it's either introducing councillors or getting the lands, when you say Tom says it was for getting the land, I can't—I'd have to leave that to Tom Williams and Niall Kenny to answer you that question.'

3.10 Mr Williams testified that it was his belief that it was Mr Butler who had agreed the figure of IR£29,613 with Mr Collins. It had normally been Mr Butler who had had dealings with Mr Collins. Mr Williams did not recollect any discussion having taken place between himself, Mr Kenny and Mr Collins on the issue of a finder's fee for Mr Collins although he accepted that it was possible that such a discussion could have taken place.

3.11 Mr Kenny told the Tribunal that he was outraged when confronted with a claim for IR£29,613 by Mr Collins. He totally disputed Mr Butler's evidence that he had telephoned Mr Butler to advise him of the payment to Mr Collins. Mr Kenny recollecting having telephoned Mr Butler, who was in Atlanta constructing stages for the Olympic Games at the time, to complain about what was being presented by way of a bill from Mr Collins. Mr Kenny was outraged because he felt Mr Collins had already been adequately recompensed by the Cloghran consortium by payments that were made to Pilgrim Architects and Project Architects. Mr Butler's response to his complaint had been that a fee had been agreed with Mr Collins and that it had to be paid. Mr Kenny said that he did not see or know of any work that was done for the fee. He disputed the payment with Mr Butler.

3.12 The Tribunal believed that the sum paid to Mr Collins was in fact agreed by Mr Butler and Mr Collins, and in this regard the Tribunal accepted the evidence of Mr Kenny and Mr Williams that they played no significant part in deciding the level of fee paid. The Tribunal rejected in its entirety Mr Butler's evidence that he had no involvement in agreeing a finder's fee with Mr Collins or arranging in due course for such a fee to be paid.

3.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that from the outset there was an agreement or arrangement in place between Mr Collins and Messrs Butler, Kenny and Williams that at some point Mr Collins would be remunerated by way of a finder's fee for his role in sourcing the lands. It was probable that this arrangement was made by Mr Collins and Mr Butler in the first instance. Despite Mr Kenny's and Mr Williams' protestations that they were unaware of such an arrangement, the Tribunal believed it was probable that some mention was made of this arrangement to them at the time Mr Collins was engaged in his task, although the Tribunal believed it unlikely that any figure was agreed at that stage.

3.14 The Tribunal noted that there was a substantial difference between the 'finder's fee' paid to Mr Collins compared to that (IR£5,625) paid to Mr Seán Dillon (an auctioneer retained by the consortium in connection with the Molloy lands). The Tribunal thus concluded that Mr Collins' fee encompassed more than the mere sourcing of two parcels of lands, one of which, by all accounts, was already for sale in 1989, independently of any intervention by Mr Collins. The Tribunal believed that the consortium's recompense of Mr Collins in 1996, largely organized by Mr Butler, took into account the role played by Mr Collins in introducing the consortium members to Mr Dunlop.

PAYMENTS MADE TO MR DUNLOP

4.01 As previously set out, Mr Dunlop claimed to have sought IR£20,000, and agreed a fee of IR£10,000, at his first meeting with Mr Butler in January 1993, which he claimed was paid to him shortly thereafter.

4.02 In the course of his private interview with the Tribunal in May 2000, Mr Dunlop reaffirmed his statement on Day 148 that Mr Butler had given him IR£10,000. Mr Dunlop also advised the Tribunal at that interview that there had been an understanding between himself and Mr Butler that the money was to be used 'for the purpose of making sure that people were kept happy'.

4.03 Mr Dunlop essentially confirmed this position in his written statement to the Tribunal in October 2000, and he attached to that statement a pro forma invoice dated 5 April 1993 addressed to Mr John Butler, Managing Director of Scafform Ltd, for IR£10,000 plus VAT, a total of IR£12,100.

4.04 In an affidavit of discovery sworn on 20 October 2006, Mr Dunlop referred to two further payments, of IR£5,100 and IR£6,050, that he believed he had received in relation to the Cloghran lands.

4.05 In evidence on Day 686 (24 October 2006), Mr Dunlop admitted that his October 2006 disclosures in relation to fees had come about following circulation to him by the Tribunal of a brief of documentation which had contained material relating to these newly disclosed payments. Mr Dunlop maintained that much, if not all, of the material which had prompted the admissions in a statement furnished by him to the Tribunal in October 2006 had come from his own discovery to the Tribunal.

4.06 The documentation discovered by Mr Dunlop to the Tribunal indicated that significant sums of money had been paid to him in connection with the rezoning of the Cloghran lands, in addition to the sums initially claimed by him.

4.07 In their initial dealings with the Tribunal, Mr Butler, Mr Williams and Mr Kenny claimed that, following the sale of the Cloghran lands in 1996, Mr Dunlop had been paid a total of IR£23,025 by their agent Coopers & Lybrand. The Tribunal was satisfied, however, that this total figure in the Coopers & Lybrand prepared documentation, which apportioned costs against the proceeds of sale, did not refer to a payment to Mr Dunlop but was Coopers & Lybrand's calculation, based on information forwarded by the consortium, with regard to payments made to Mr Dunlop up to that point in time.

4.08 From evidence provided, the Tribunal believed it probable that Mr Dunlop was paid a sum not less than IR£34,175 between January and July 1993.

4.09 The documentary evidence suggested that the following payments were made:

- IR£3,025 in January 1993, on foot of an invoice of 29 January 1993, for IR£2,500 plus VAT from Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, which was issued to 'John Butler–Blackfearn Ltd', and was recorded in the cash receipts book of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd on 29 January 1993.

- IR£7,000 on 6 April 1993, by cheque from Blackfearn Ltd to 'Frank Dunlop & Ass', which was cashed and was not recorded in the books of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd.
- IR£5,100 by cheque dated 11 June 1993, which was marked paid 17 June 1993, on an invoice dated 28 June 1993, and was recorded in the cash receipts book of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd to Scafform Ltd on 28 June 1993.
- IR£6,050 in June 1993, attributed to Scafform Ltd in the books of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd as received from Scafform Ltd.
- IR£3,000 in late July 1993, by cheque from Blackfearn Ltd, IR£2,000 of which was lodged to the joint AIB account of Frank and Sheila Dunlop on 26 July 1993.

4.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that, in addition to these payments, Mr Butler paid Mr Dunlop IR£10,000 shortly after their initial meeting in January 1993. The Tribunal considered it likely that this payment was made by cheque, and that Mr Dunlop immediately cashed the cheque.

4.11 The Tribunal rejected Mr Butler's evidence that he was unaware of the amount of money paid to Mr Dunlop in relation to the Cloghran lands. The Tribunal was satisfied that while many of the payments made to Mr Dunlop in relation to the Cloghran lands came from Blackfearn Ltd's bank account and were signed by Mr Williams, it was likely that Mr Butler organized the payments.

4.12 The Tribunal was satisfied as to the following:

- The 29 January 1993 invoice for IR£3,025 (IR£2,500 plus VAT) from Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd issued to 'John Butler/Blackfearn Ltd' was given to Mr Williams by Mr Butler.
- A pro forma invoice of 5 April 1993, for IR£10,000 plus VAT (IR£12,100) generated by Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd probably issued following contact between Mr Butler and Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop's secretary's telephone records indicate telephone contact between Mr Butler and Mr Dunlop's office on the same date.
- The payment on 6 April 1993 to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd of IR£7,000 by way of cheque drawn on the account of Blackfearn Ltd was arranged following contact between Mr Dunlop and Mr Butler on 5 April 1993.
- The payment of IR£5,100 by cheque dated 11 June 1993 from Blackfearn Ltd, and noted by Mr Dunlop as received on 17 June 1993, was physically given to Mr Dunlop by Mr Butler. This followed telephone contact between Mr Butler and Mr Dunlop's office on that date which indicated Mr Butler's intention to call to Mr Dunlop's office later that morning.

- The payments of IR£7,000 and IR£5,100 on 6 April and 17 June 1993 respectively, were probably in discharge of the pro forma invoice for IR£12,100 dated 5 April 1993. The Tribunal so found, notwithstanding the existence of invoice no. 864 dated 28 June 1993 for IR£5,100 (IR£4,209.88 plus VAT at IR£885.12). This invoice is marked 'paid 17/6/93.'
- The IR£6,050 recorded as received by Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd on 28 June 1993, was probably payment received on foot of invoice No. 865 for IR£5,000 plus VAT dated 28 June 1993.

4.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop, Mr Butler and Mr Collins met on 13 January 1993 in the offices of Ambrose Kelly & Partners and that the meeting was prearranged by Mr Collins.

4.14 The Tribunal was satisfied that at that meeting the focus of the discussion was the rezoning of the Cloghran lands, and the assistance in that endeavour to be provided by Mr Dunlop.

4.15 Contrary to Mr Butler's denials, the Tribunal was satisfied that he was the 'lead person' in the Cloghran consortium. The Tribunal rejected as untrue Mr Butler's contention that he had had little or no contact or dealings with Mr Dunlop. The Tribunal rejected his claim that Mr Dunlop's telephone records were fabricated. Having regard to the findings of the Tribunal as set out above, it was satisfied that he was aware of, and involved in, the payments made to Mr Dunlop. The Tribunal was further satisfied that, throughout his evidence, Mr Butler deliberately sought to distance himself from his dealings with Mr Dunlop.

4.16 The Tribunal was satisfied from the evidence adduced in the course of the public hearing that Mr Butler actively engaged with Mr Dunlop in relation both to the rezoning that was in progress from January to October 1993 and Mr Dunlop's remuneration from the consortium over that period.

4.17 The Tribunal was also satisfied that in the course of their initial meeting, Mr Butler and Mr Collins indicated to Mr Dunlop their awareness that payments by him might be required to obtain the support of certain unnamed councillors. The Tribunal was satisfied to accept that the words attributed by Mr Dunlop to Mr Collins and Mr Butler were stated on 13 January 1993, and that those words led Mr Dunlop to conclude that they were au fait with Mr Dunlop's 'system'. The Tribunal was also satisfied that all three left the meeting on 13 January 1993 in the knowledge that Mr Dunlop might well engage in corrupt activity in the course of his retention as a lobbyist for the rezoning of the Cloghran lands.

4.18 The Tribunal was satisfied that neither Mr Kenny nor Mr Williams was privy to what was contemplated by Mr Dunlop, Mr Butler and Mr Collins on 13 January 1993, and there was no evidence before the Tribunal to suggest that either Mr Kenny or Mr Williams was subsequently advised of what was in the contemplation of Messrs Butler, Dunlop and Collins. The Tribunal was satisfied, however, that, following Mr Murnaghan's advice to Mr Butler and Mr Kenny to have nothing to do with Mr Dunlop (albeit that this advice was expressed in less than explicit terms), and having regard to Mr Kenny's later statement to Mr Murnaghan, Mr Kenny had to have had some suspicion of Mr Dunlop's modus operandi.

THE SAATCHI & SAATCHI 'PICK-ME-UP' PAYMENTS⁵

5.01 On 28 February 2001, the Tribunal wrote to Mr Butler requesting him to inform the Tribunal as to whether he, directly or indirectly, on his own behalf or on behalf of any other person or company, had made payments of money or provided any benefits of any kind to any elected representatives or public officials at any time. The request made to Mr Butler extended to 'any payments which may have been made or benefits provided to or through Mr Frank Dunlop or any other intermediary'. Mr Butler responded by letter of 12 March 2001 wherein he stated as follows:

I wish to state that no money was paid by me directly or indirectly on behalf of any company to any elected representative or any public official. However Frank Dunlop did request that we pay an amount due to him by invoices raised from Saatchi & Saatchi. We believe that this was a bill owed by the Fianna Fáil party. Another amount of £750 was paid for a table at the Fianna Fáil dinner.

5.02 Following the provision of this information, the Tribunal identified payments totaling IR£9,929 made to the public relations company Saatchi & Saatchi in December 1993. Of this, IR£4,000 was paid on 23 December 1993 by Construct Sales Ltd, a company owned by Mr Butler, and IR£5,929 was paid on 30 December 1993 by Blackfearn Ltd, the company co-owned by Mr Butler, Mr Kenny and Mr Williams. Both payments were in discharge of Fianna Fáil party debts to Saatchi & Saatchi.

⁵ The Tribunal heard evidence of a practice known as 'pick-me-up' payments whereby third parties settled from their own resources invoices issued to Fianna Fáil in respect of work done on behalf of Fianna Fáil.

5.03 Construct Sales Ltd had been invoiced by Saatchi & Saatchi for a total of IR£7,381 (IR£6,100 and VAT of IR£1,281) and the Courtyard Restaurant had been invoiced for a total of IR£5,929 (IR£4,900 and VAT of IR£1,029).

5.04 In a statement made on 21 March 2007, Mr Butler, through his solicitors, retracted the assertion he had made on 12 March 2001, stating:

...as regards the Saatchi payments from Construct Sales and Blackfern Mr Butler would like to clarify his original communication with the Tribunal wherein it was suggested that those payments were made at the request of Mr Dunlop. Having now had the benefit of all of the documentation it is clear that that was not correct and that those payments made were entirely unrelated to the lands at Cloghran and equally unrelated to Mr Dunlop.

5.05 Mr Butler maintained this position in his sworn testimony to the Tribunal and described the information he had given in March 2001, as ‘a complete mistake’. He could not recall what had prompted him to connect the Saatchi & Saatchi payment to Mr Dunlop in March 2001.

5.06 Mr Butler claimed that the two payments that had been made by Blackfearn Ltd and Construct Sales Ltd respectively had been made at the request of the ‘fundraising committee of Fianna Fáil’, although he claimed not to recollect who within Fianna Fáil had approached him in this regard. While Mr Richardson could have been the person who made the request, Mr Butler stated that he did not recollect him so doing. He acknowledged that he was acquainted with Mr Richardson from the 1980s and acknowledged having sold property to him in 1989. Mr Butler also acknowledged being a regular attendee at the annual O’Donovan Rossa fundraising dinner, often travelling home from abroad to attend the event.⁶

5.07 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he never had a discussion with Mr Butler about payments to Saatchi & Saatchi on foot of monies owed to them by Fianna Fáil. He also stated that he had no discussion with Mr Butler about his fees being used to defray a Saatchi & Saatchi bill due by Fianna Fáil. He professed himself ‘amazed’ at such a suggestion.

5.08 Mr Dunlop conceded, however, that he was well acquainted with the concept of a pick-me-up payment, and he stated that on two occasions his firm had discharged debts owed by Fianna Fáil to third parties. Mr Dunlop acknowledged liaising with Mr Richardson⁷ (in December 1993) in relation to the O'Donovan Rossa Cumann fundraising dinner, and said that it was likely that communications passing between Mr Richardson and his office immediately around the time of that fundraising event were in connection with that fundraiser and other issues.⁸ However, Mr Dunlop claimed never to have requested any of his, Mr Dunlop's, clients to defray Fianna Fáil expenses on the basis of a pick-me-up. It was 'possible', Mr Dunlop said, that he had asked clients of his on occasions to make donations to Fianna Fáil and perhaps to other parties.

5.09 Mr Williams testified that Blackfearn Ltd had made the payment to Saatchi & Saatchi at the request of Mr Butler. Mr Dunlop's name had not been mentioned by Mr Butler, and Mr Williams stated that he had not associated the request to make the payment with the Cloghran lands. He had understood it to be by way of a donation to the Fianna Fáil Party. He believed Mr Butler to be a supporter of Fianna Fáil, although he did not know which way he voted. Mr Williams said that he was told by Mr Butler that a company (Construct Sales Ltd) connected to him was going to make a similar payment. He thought that 'it was going to be half and half.' He could not explain why a payment of only IR£4,000 was ultimately made by Construct Sales Ltd.⁹

5.10 Mr Williams stated that he did not think he ever made another donation to Fianna Fáil either before or after this one.¹⁰ Mr Williams explained his reason for making the payment in the following terms:

'Well, I suppose at the time I would have looked at it from the point of view that we were establishing ourselves on the business market within Dublin and we aligned ourselves to policies that Fianna Fáil would have had. And so we would have supported them on that basis. But my own personal attitude would have been, you know, that I would have aligned myself to any party who had policies that I would have agreed with. So I wasn't just so it wasn't just Fianna Fáil. I haven't made political donations to any party since or before.'

⁸ Mr Dunlop and Mr Richardson had joint business interests in 1993. See Chapter 15 (Mr Frank Dunlop).

⁹ It was the evidence of Mr Seán Fleming (the financial controller of Fianna Fáil in 1993) that insofar as the Construct Sales invoice was concerned, his initial information was that the amount of the pick-me-up would be IR£7,381.00, but the amount actually paid and credited was IR£4,000.00. See below.

¹⁰ However, Mr Williams acknowledged having attended an O'Donovan Rossa Cumann dinner at the Royal Hospital Kilmainham, which probably took place in the 1990s. His attendance at the dinner was organized by Mr Butler, he said.

5.11 Mr Collins told the Tribunal that he knew nothing about a payment made on behalf of Mr Butler in December 1993 to Saatchi & Saatchi and he stated that he had not asked Mr Butler to make such payment either to Fianna Fáil or on its behalf. Mr Collins professed not to know what a pick-me-up payment was.

5.12 Giving evidence on Day 714 and 722, Mr Richardson acknowledged that Mr Butler was known to him from the 1980s as a supporter of the O'Donovan Rossa Kilmainham annual fundraiser, but stated that he was not particularly friendly with Mr Butler. Mr Richardson said he never approached Mr Butler to pay a pick-me-up for Fianna Fáil. He had not approached Mr Butler in 1993 to request that he discharge the Saatchi & Saatchi bill, and his evidence was he had never approached Mr Butler in relation to any fundraising matters connected with Fianna Fáil.

5.13 Mr Richardson agreed that he had on occasions approached people, including Mr Dunlop,¹¹ seeking that they discharge pick-me-ups, but claimed that Mr Butler was never on the list of people he, Mr Richardson, had approached. Mr Richardson also stated that it was his belief that no one from the Kilmainham Committee (which organized the O'Donovan Rossa fundraising event) would have approached Mr Butler in relation to a pick-me-up, and he was of the belief that the request to Mr Butler would have come from the general Fianna Fáil fundraising committee.

5.14 The Tribunal was satisfied that there was evidence of Mr Richardson having directly approached Mr Butler in the context of fundraising on at least one occasion. An undated typed list entitled 'Des' and with the manuscript note 'list of people to contact for 6 December' included the name 'Johnny Butler Scafform'. The list also included (in manuscript) Mr Dunlop's name. It is probable that this list could refer to the O'Donovan Rossa fundraising event for 1996.¹²

5.15 Mr Seán Fleming, the financial controller of Fianna Fáil in 1993, told the Tribunal that he was unable to say who within the fundraising committee of Fianna Fáil had made the approach to Mr Butler in relation to the pick-me-up. He acknowledged, however, that he himself must have been apprised, by whoever it was had made the request of Mr Butler, that Mr Butler was willing to donate to the party by way of a pick-me-up. He also acknowledged that he must have been apprised of the mechanism by which Mr Butler intended to defray Fianna Fáil's

¹¹ When asked if he ever approached Mr Dunlop to make a donation to Fianna Fáil by way of a pick-me-up or to pay a pick-me-up, Mr Richardson replied, 'Yeah. I think I did yeah, probably at the Galway Races'.

indebtedness to Saatchi & Saatchi, given the detailed directions he provided to that company. Mr Fleming advised the Tribunal that Fianna Fáil did not keep records as to who on the fundraising committee would have made such an approach to Mr Butler, and thereafter provided the relevant information to him. Mr Fleming stated 'I keep—kept good records of all the donations. But I didn't keep ancillary notes of who rang me about what or who said we might be getting a donation. I never kept those detailed records.' Mr Fleming did say, however, that he would have informed Mr Richardson about the donation. However, he did not believe the initial approach to him had been made by Mr Richardson, and equally Mr Dunlop's name (having been initially put forward by Mr Butler in this context) was a 'mystery' to Mr Fleming since he believed that Mr Dunlop was never centrally involved with Fianna Fáil fundraising.

5.16 According to Mr Fleming, Mr Butler was known to him in 1993 because of the Butlers' connection to Scafform, a company whose services were used by Fianna Fáil over the years. Mr Butler's connection to the Courtyard Restaurant was also known to Mr Fleming in 1993. Mr Fleming claimed that Mr Butler was not known as a contributor to Fianna Fáil save on this one occasion when the Saatchi bill had been discharged. Neither Mr Kenny nor Mr Williams was known to Mr Fleming. He explained the lack of follow-up with regard to the underpayment of the Saatchi invoice by Construct Sales Ltd on the basis of the 'voluntary' nature of the payment and his belief that it would have been 'impolite' to have done so.

5.17 In relation to the two Saatchi invoices, as discharged by Blackfearn Ltd and Construct Sales Ltd respectively, it was noteworthy that there was a coincidence in time with the said discharge and the Cloghran rezoning confirmation, which took place some two months prior on 6 October 1993. Notwithstanding the position adopted by Mr Butler in correspondence in 2007, and in evidence on Days 901 and 902, the Tribunal was satisfied that a temporal connection existed between the making of these payments and the Cloghran rezoning success. There was also the coincidence that a person associated with certain aspects of Fianna Fáil fundraising activity, namely Mr Collins, worked in close association with Mr Butler during the entirety of the Cloghran rezoning process.

5.18 However, over and above the foregoing, the issue for the Tribunal was whether monies due to be paid by the Cloghran consortium to Mr Dunlop were paid, at Mr Dunlop's request, to Saatchi & Saatchi for the benefit of Fianna Fáil. This is what Mr Butler maintained in his initial dealings with the Tribunal, but later resiled from in 2007 when he gave evidence. Mr Dunlop denied any involvement in the matter.

5.19 The Tribunal was struck by the very clear and precise nature of Mr Butler's initial letter to the Tribunal of 12 March 2001 which stated as follows:

. . . however Frank Dunlop did request that we pay an amount due to him by invoices raised from Saatchi and Saatchi. We believe that this was a bill owed by the Fianna Fáil party. Another amount of £750 was paid for a table at the Fianna Fáil dinner.

Enclosed please find copies of the correspondence on the matter, which is self-explanatory. If there are any other queries please do not hesitate to contact me.

ALLEGED PAYMENTS BY MR DUNLOP TO CLLR G. V. WRIGHT (FF)

6.01 Cllr Wright was one of six signatories of the Cloghran rezoning motion passed on 1 April 1993. He told the Tribunal that he supported and voted for the motion on its merits. He remained supportive when the rezoning was ultimately confirmed on 6 October 1993, and had not been in favour of deferring consideration of the matter to the soon-to-be-established Fingal County Council.

6.02 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he sought Cllr Wright's signature and support for the Cloghran rezoning in March 1993. Cllr Wright had indicated to him his support for the project (thus confirming what Mr Dunlop had been told by Mr Butler) and had said that 'he would need something for his support.' A payment of IR£1,000 was agreed. Mr Dunlop's belief was that he may have obtained Cllr Wright's signature to the motion at a meeting on 12 March 1993, at the Gresham Hotel. This was the date on which Cllr Wright had signed a motion in relation to the Fox and Mahony lands at Drumnigh. Mr Dunlop was unable to state the exact date or location of the payment of IR£1,000 to Cllr Wright, save that he believed the money was handed over somewhere in the environs of the Council some time between the time Cllr Wright signed the motion and the vote of 1 April 1993. Mr Dunlop maintained that notwithstanding his knowledge that Cllr Wright had previously indicated his support for the rezoning to Mr Butler, he, Mr Dunlop, had not demurred when Cllr Wright had requested a payment, given the importance, as far as Mr Dunlop was concerned, of Cllr Wright's support in the context of 'totality'. Mr Dunlop said that he could not definitively say whether Cllr Wright was leader of the Fianna Fáil group on the Council at that stage, but certainly he was either the leader or the whip.

6.03 In a private interview with the Tribunal's legal team on 18 May 2000, Mr Dunlop identified Cllr Wright as having been paid money by him in relation to Cloghran. Mr Dunlop said he was 'virtually certain' that he had paid Cllr Wright from the IR£10,000 paid to him by Mr Butler, without specifying the amount of such payment. Previously, on Day 148, when giving evidence in public, Mr

Dunlop had listed the Cloghran lands as a project in respect of which he had received monies from the developers, i.e. Mr Butler. On that occasion he did not make any reference to having paid Cllr Wright for support for the Cloghran rezoning. Cllr Wright's solicitor, Mr Kennedy, in the course of his cross-examination of Mr Dunlop, made much of Mr Dunlop's failure to give specifics regarding Cllr Wright on either Day 148 or in the course of private interview in May 2000. However, the Tribunal took the view that Mr Dunlop's evidence regarding Cllr Wright could not be disregarded because specific reference to a payment of IR£1,000 to Cllr Wright was not made until he furnished his October 2000 statement. The Tribunal was satisfied that from the time Mr Dunlop began to explain the nature of his involvement in the Cloghran rezoning (on Day 148), he had alluded to Cllr Wright as having been the recipient of money from him in connection with that rezoning.

6.04 There was frequent contact between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Wright in 1993, and particularly in the period from March to October 1993. Mr Dunlop's secretary's telephone records indicated at least ten telephone calls from Cllr Wright to Mr Dunlop's office during this period, and Mr Dunlop's diary indicated meetings with Cllr Wright. Both Mr Dunlop and Cllr Wright acknowledged that there was regular contact between them, and Cllr Wright acknowledged that he signed the Cloghran motion (and probably several others as well) at Mr Dunlop's request at a meeting with him on 12 March 1993, and there was ongoing contact between them in relation to the Cloghran lands and other rezoning projects during the course of the Development Plan Review.

6.05 Cllr Wright denied that he received IR£1,000 or any sum from Mr Dunlop in relation to the Cloghran lands. He told the Tribunal that he did not sign the relevant motion or support the project in return for payment.

6.06 Cllr Wright admitted to receiving IR£10,000 in three separate cash payments from Mr Dunlop in the 1991–3 period. Mr Dunlop maintained the total paid was IR£12,500. Cllr Wright categorized all such payments as political donations, and listed them as follows:

- IR£2,000 in cash given to him by Mr Dunlop in the Dáil bar¹³ in or around the time of the 1991 Local Elections. Mr Dunlop disagreed that this payment was made in the Dáil bar, and maintained that the making of the payment at the time of the Local Election in 1991 'was a convenient circumstance in which monies could be given to politicians in the context of support for other issues that might be coming up in Dublin County Council'.

¹³ See Chapter 10 (the Fox and Mahony Module) and Chapter 2 (the Quarryvale Module).

- IR£5,000 in cash in or about the time of the General Election in November 1992. On that occasion the money was paid when Mr Dunlop paid a visit to his constituency office in Malahide. Cllr Wright explained that this payment was a donation towards the expenses of the General Election as well as assistance towards the running of his constituency office. Mr Dunlop acknowledged making this cash payment to Cllr Wright, and said he did so at a time when he accompanied Mr Owen O’Callaghan¹⁴ to Cllr Wright’s constituency office where Mr O’Callaghan paid Cllr Wright IR£5,000 by cheque.
- IR£3,000 in cash in or about October/November 1993, in or close to the Dublin County Council offices on O’Connell Street. Cllr Wright said this donation was towards the expenses incurred by him in the course of the Senate Election in early 1993, approximately ten months previously, and also in relation to constituency funding. Mr Dunlop disputed making a payment to Cllr Wright at this time.

6.07 Findings by the Tribunal in relation to the three payments totaling IR£10,000 explained by Cllr Wright as political donations from Mr Dunlop in 1991, 1992 and 1993 are dealt with elsewhere in this Report.

6.08 The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Wright solicited a payment of IR£1,000 from Mr Dunlop in return for his support of the rezoning of the Cloghran lands, including his signature on the rezoning motion which was passed by Dublin County Council on 1 April 1993. It was intended that the payment should also provide for Cllr Wright’s support for future relevant motions up to, and including, the confirmation motion in October 1993. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Wright did not perform his duties as a councillor in a disinterested fashion as he was required to do. The said payment of IR£1,000 was corrupt.

CONTACT BETWEEN CONSORTIUM MEMBERS AND CLLR WRIGHT

6.09 Mr Kenny told the Tribunal that, save for one occasion on which he may have had a drink with him, he never spoke to Cllr Wright, although he knew that there was contact between Cllr Wright and Mr Butler in relation to the Cloghran project.

6.10 Although Mr Butler knew Cllr Wright prior to 1993, he said he did not believe he spoke to him in relation to the Cloghran project, and he denied stating to Mr Dunlop in the course of a meeting with him that Cllr Wright was 'on side'. It was Mr Butler's belief that Mr Collins may have spoken to Cllr Wright.

6.11 Cllr Wright stated that Mr Butler did speak to him at his Malahide constituency office, saying that he was keen to build a hotel, and emphasising the employment opportunities in the construction of the hotel and in its subsequent operation. Cllr Wright stated that Mr Butler did not give him any financial support.

6.12 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Butler spoke with and lobbied Cllr Wright to support the rezoning of the Cloghran lands. The Tribunal rejected Mr Butler's denial that there was contact between himself and Cllr Wright in relation to the Cloghran lands, and was satisfied that Mr Butler knew that his evidence on this issue was untrue at the time he gave it. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Butler spoke to Cllr Wright concerning his plans prior to engaging Mr Dunlop, and that at their meeting on 13 January, Mr Butler did apprise Mr Dunlop of Cllr Wright's support for the project, when he said that he believed Cllr Wright to be 'on side' in relation to their proposal.

6.13 Cllr Wright denied any knowledge of an involvement by Mr Collins as a land agent in the Cloghran lands acquisition, and had no recollection of Mr Butler ever mentioning either Mr Collins or Mr Dunlop to him in the context of the Cloghran rezoning project.

6.14 Mr Collins claimed in evidence that he was not friendly with Cllr Wright in 1993, saying he knew him only as a local county councillor in Malahide.

6.15 The Tribunal was satisfied that during the Development Plan review, Mr Collins' role as a land agent was known to Cllr Wright, and Cllr Wright's position as a prominent Fianna Fáil councillor in the north Dublin area was well known to Mr Collins.

ALLEGED PAYMENTS BY MR DUNLOP TO CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER (FF)

7.01 Cllr Gallagher was interviewed in private by the Tribunal's legal team on 15 March 1999. In a questionnaire he completed for the Tribunal he denied receiving payments of money in relation to any rezoning or planning matter. He died on 20 March 2000, before he had the opportunity to provide sworn testimony to the Tribunal.

7.02 Mr Dunlop stated in the course of his evidence to the Tribunal that he paid Cllr Gallagher IR£1,000 in cash when he obtained his signature on the Cloghran rezoning motion. He believed that he made this payment on 11 March 1993, in return for Cllr Gallagher's signature and support for the rezoning for the Cloghran lands.¹⁵

7.03 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that Cllr Gallagher solicited this payment.

7.04 On Day 148, Mr Dunlop had listed Cllr Gallagher as someone who received a payment from him in relation to the Cloghran lands. Some weeks later, in a private interview with the Tribunal's legal team on 18 May 2000, Mr Dunlop stated that he paid Cllr Gallagher 'something of the order of two grand from me in relation to the [Cloghran lands] to ensure that he stayed on side'.

7.05 In a written statement to the Tribunal in October 2000, Mr Dunlop altered the amount of the payment from being in the 'order of two grand' to IR£1,000. In the course of his evidence on Days 686 and 687, Mr Dunlop accounted for the discrepancy by stating that while on occasion he had given IR£2,000 to Cllr Gallagher, on a number of occasions he had given IR£1,000, and Cloghran was one such occasion. In the course of his evidence in the Fox and Mahony Module,¹⁶ Mr Dunlop stated that at Cllr Gallagher's request he paid him IR£1,000 on 11 March 1993, in return for his signature on the motion seeking to rezone the Drumnigh lands. On Day 686 (24 October 2006), Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he obtained Cllr Gallagher's signature on the rezoning motions for both the Drumnigh lands and the Cloghran lands on 11 March 1993.

7.06 Cllr Gallagher voted in favour of the rezoning motion on 1 April 1993, and supported the confirmation process which concluded on 6 October 1993.

7.07 An examination of Cllr Gallagher's financial records identified a cash lodgment of IR£2,000 to a post office savings certificate account in his name, on 25 March 1993, approximately two weeks after Mr Dunlop's alleged payment of IR£1,000. This lodgment was one of a series of unaccounted for lodgments to accounts held by Cllr Gallagher in An Post.¹⁷ Ulster Bank and AIB totaling IR£7,860 between 25 March and 28 May 1993.¹⁸

¹⁷ In the course of Cllr Gallagher's private interview with the Tribunal on 15 March 1999, he denied having an account with An Post at any time.

¹⁸ See Chapter 6 (the Lissenhall Module).

7.08 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid Cllr Gallagher a sum of IR£1,000 between 10 and 12 March 1993, in return for his signature on the Cloghran rezoning motion, and his support for the rezoning thereafter. This payment constituted an inducement to Cllr Gallagher to perform his duty as a councillor otherwise than in a disinterested fashion, and was corrupt.

7.09 The aforementioned lodgments, including the IR£2,000 lodgment into Cllr Gallagher's An Post saving certificate account on 25 March 1993, approximately two weeks following Mr Dunlop's payment to him of IR£1,000, may have included all or a portion of that payment.

ALLEGED PAYMENTS BY MR DUNLOP TO CLLR SEÁN GILBRIDE (FF)

8.01 Cllr Gilbride was a co-signatory on the motion and map seeking the rezoning of the Cloghran lands which were lodged with the County Council on 12 March 1993. He subsequently supported the motion which was passed on 1 April 1993, and also supported the confirmation process which concluded on 6 October 1993.

8.02 Cllr Gilbride told the Tribunal that, as a north Co. Dublin councillor, he had a general idea of the location of the lands. He was generally pro-development and voted accordingly and he supported the Cloghran rezoning because the proposed development would provide badly needed employment.

8.03 Cllr Gilbride maintained that he was approached by Mr Kenny (in the company of Mr Kenny's brother whom he had previously known), who sought his support for the rezoning of the Cloghran lands. Cllr Gilbride said he agreed to support the project. He also agreed to Mr Kenny's request that he co-sign the necessary motion and map in due course. Cllr Gilbride said he did not seek any payment from Mr Kenny, nor did Mr Kenny offer him any payment for any purpose.

8.04 At a later stage, probably on 12 March 1993, Cllr Gilbride co-signed the map and motion which was lodged with the County Council later that day. He was presented with the map and motion for his signature by Mr Dunlop, whom he knew to be retained by the consortium because Mr Kenny had told him so. Indeed, between the discussion with Mr Kenny and the signing of the map and motion on 12 March 1993, Cllr Gilbride himself had informed Mr Dunlop of the fact that he had agreed with Mr Kenny to sign the documents.

8.05 Mr Dunlop alleged that Cllr Gilbride's request for payment in relation to the Cloghran lands came about when he approached Cllr Gilbride some time subsequent to the Cloghran rezoning vote, seeking his support for another matter. In their discussion, Cllr Gilbride had referred to three developments promoted by Mr Dunlop, including Cloghran, that he had supported.

8.06 According to Mr Dunlop, Cllr Gilbride complained to him that he had been given nothing for this support. Notwithstanding the fact that voting had already taken place in respect of the three rezonings alluded to, and notwithstanding the level of support that had been apparent for the Cargobridge and Cloghran rezonings, Mr Dunlop agreed to pay Cllr Gilbride a 'composite payment' of IR£2,000 because Cllr Gilbride had raised the issue when asked for his support in respect of other impending matters.¹⁹

8.07 Cllr Gilbride denied that he had ever requested or received any money in relation to the three rezoning projects, including Cloghran.

8.08 Cllr Gilbride maintained in his evidence in this module (and in other modules) that the only money he ever received from Mr Dunlop was a sum of IR£2,000 which he said was paid as a contribution at the time of the 1991 Local Elections.

8.09 Mr Dunlop's evidence in this and other modules clearly established that there was an active relationship between the two men during this period and that they were in regular contact.

8.10 The records of telephone calls to Mr Dunlop's office maintained by Mr Dunlop's secretary indicated frequent telephone contact between the two throughout 1993. For example, in the period from 31 March to 28 September 1993 there were in excess of 30 recorded telephone calls to Mr Dunlop's office from Cllr Gilbride. While Cllr Gilbride made the point that some of these calls were simply return calls, the extent of the contact was nevertheless considerable.

8.11 Furthermore, a number of entries in Mr Dunlop's diary in 1993 indicated six prearranged meetings between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Gilbride between 31 March and 28 September, which is entirely inconsistent with the suggestion made by Cllr Gilbride in his letter to the Tribunal of 30 September 2003 to the ¹⁹This alleged payment of IR£2,000 to Cllr Gilbride is also reviewed in Chapter 7 (the Cargobridge Module) and Chapter 10 (the Fox and Mahony Module). The Tribunal's determination in relation to the alleged payment is made in Chapter 10 (the Fox and Mahony Module).

effect that he rarely met Mr Dunlop, indicating only very casual contact with him at the County Council offices in O'Connell Street.²⁰

8.12 The Tribunal was satisfied that throughout 1993 Mr Dunlop had virtually unfettered access to Cllr Gilbride. Mr Dunlop accurately considered Cllr Gilbride as a strong supporter of all development, and somebody to whom he could turn for support in relation to his various rezoning projects.

8.13 The Tribunal's determination in relation to the issue of Mr Dunlop's alleged 'composite' payment of IR£2,000 to Cllr Gilbride is to be found in Chapter 10 (the Fox & Mahony Module).

CLLR TONY FOX (FF)

9.01 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he paid Cllr Fox a sum of IR£1,000 in return for his support for the Cloghran rezoning confirmation vote of September 1993.

9.02 Mr Dunlop stated that he paid Cllr Fox on a number of occasions for his support for particular proposals that were coming before Dublin County Council, and that such payments were made at Cllr Fox's request. Cllr Fox denied receiving any money from Mr Dunlop for any purpose, at any time.

9.03 Mr Dunlop initially implicated Cllr Fox as having received payment from him in respect of the lands at Cloghran in his written statement of October 2000. He did not implicate Cllr Fox in the course of his private interview with the Tribunal on 18 May 2000, nor did he list Cllr Fox on Day 148 as having been in receipt of monies in relation to the Cloghran rezoning.

9.04 Asked on Day 686 why he had not identified Cllr Fox on Day 148 or in May 2000, Mr Dunlop's response was that having reflected in the months between appearing in private session and furnishing his October 2000 statement to the Tribunal, he had recollected Cllr Fox as having been the recipient of monies from him. According to Mr Dunlop, during this period he had reviewed all of the contacts he had had with politicians, councillors and developers, and his disbursements during the Development Plan review.

9.05 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that while he had no recollection of lobbying Cllr Fox in advance of the Cloghran rezoning vote in April 1993, he did recall speaking to him about the Cloghran lands at the time of the September ²⁰See Chapter 10 (the Fox and Mahony Module) for further consideration of the content of Cllr Gilbride's letter.

1993 vote, and believed that he had lobbied him in relation to the issue between April and September 1993. He was unsure whether at that time he was aware of whether or not Cllr Fox had voted on the April 1993 motion.

9.06 He stated that Cllr Fox solicited the payment having indicated his intention to support the rezoning. Mr Dunlop suggested that Cllr Fox said these or similar words to him: 'I will need something for this, what are you going to give me?'

9.07 According to Mr Dunlop, they duly agreed on IR£1,000. He was uncertain as to whether the IR£1,000 had been paid at the time of the discussion or subsequently, but he maintained that he paid Cllr Fox prior to the scheduled special meeting of 29 September 1993, when the confirmation vote in relation to the Cloghran lands was imminent.

9.08 Under cross-examination, Mr Dunlop agreed that he was unable to state specifically as to where or when the agreement for payment of the IR£1,000 had been made with Cllr Fox, and when the payment was actually made. According to Mr Dunlop, it was likely that the money had been handed over in the environs of the Council. Nothing 'stuck out in his mind' in relation to the actual making of the payment. Pressed by Mr Breffni Gordon BL (Counsel for Cllr Fox), Mr Dunlop's evidence was that he had given Cllr Fox money in relation to a substantial number of rezonings including Cloghran. Having recollected that he had lobbied Cllr Fox specifically in relation to Cloghran prior to the confirmation vote, Mr Dunlop was certain that he had made a payment to him. His recollection was aided by the 'global circumstances' that pertained in the lead-up to the confirmation vote, and in particular the opposition to the rezoning (from Aer Rianta) that was apparent at the time.

9.09 Mr Dunlop described his relationship with Cllr Fox in the context of the Development Plan review as being 'very very close', a relationship which, Mr Dunlop asserted, continued after Dublin County Council was divided into three county councils, and Cllr Fox became a member of Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Council. That relationship had continued until the establishment of the Tribunal, and according to Mr Dunlop, it would have so continued but for the Tribunal.

9.10 Cllr Fox voted against the motion to rescind the Cloghran lands rezoning on 6 October 1993.

9.11 Cllr Fox had no recollection of being lobbied by Mr Dunlop in relation to Cloghran. He asserted that he was ‘100% sure, nearly’ that Mr Dunlop did not approach him in relation to Cloghran. Nor did Cllr Fox have any recollection of being lobbied by any member of the consortium who owned the Cloghran lands or by any person on behalf of Aer Rianta at any time in 1993. He accepted, however, that he may well have received representations or submissions in advance of the relevant votes in the County Council.

9.12 Although he was noted in the records of Dublin County Council as having been in attendance at the County Council meeting on 1 April 1993, Cllr Fox is not recorded as having voted in the rezoning motion for the Cloghran lands on that date. However, Mr Dunlop’s telephone records indicated Cllr Fox contacted his office on the eve of the 1 April 1993 vote.

9.13 Mr Dunlop’s telephone records indicated a telephone call from Cllr Fox at 10.27 am on 29 September, with a note stating that ‘FD would know what it was about.’

9.14 Cllr Fox told the Tribunal that he could not recollect the purpose of the telephone call to Mr Dunlop’s office on that date. While it may have related to the Cloghran rezoning vote, Cllr Fox maintained that it ‘could have been anything.’

9.15 Mr Dunlop had no doubt but that the 29 September 1993 telephone call related to the agenda for the County Council meeting later that day which included the confirmation issue relating to the Cloghran lands. Mr Dunlop also received telephone calls on that date from Cllr Wright, Mr Butler, Mr Collins and Cllr Liam Creaven. Mr Dunlop and Cllr Fox agreed²¹ that the only common subject of interest likely to have prompted any contact during 1993 was the review of the Dublin Development Plan. However, Cllr Fox’s only specific recollection of contact with Mr Dunlop related to the Texas Homecare²² material contravention issue from 1989 to 1992, although Cllr Fox accepted that he had had contact with Mr Dunlop in relation to Quarryvale when Mr Dunlop brought Mr O’Callaghan to his home.

9.16 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop lobbied Cllr Fox in relation to the Cloghran lands, particularly in the period leading up to the confirmation process in late September/early October 1993, and that in the course of that process, Cllr Fox solicited a payment of money from Mr Dunlop in return for his support, and that Mr Dunlop duly paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Fox in or about this time.

²¹ See Cllr Fox’s evidence in Chapter 10 (the Fox and Mahony Module) and Chapter 2 (the Quarryvale Module).

²² Texas Homecare was a retail development proposed for Dundrum, within Cllr Fox’s electoral ward.

The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment represented an inducement to Cllr Fox to ensure that he would act other than in the disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor. The said payment was a corrupt payment.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR LIAM CREAVEN (FF)

10.01 Cllr Creaven was a close acquaintance of Mr Dunlop. They were in frequent contact with each other throughout 1993. For example, between 1 April and 6 October 1993, Mr Dunlop's secretary's phone records identified 41 occasions on which Cllr Creaven telephoned Mr Dunlop's office. In addition, Mr Dunlop's 1993 diary had records of six meetings between himself and Cllr Creaven during this period.

10.02 Cllr Creaven did not dispute the extent of contact between himself and Mr Dunlop. More particularly, he did not dispute the level of telephone contact between them, although a number of the telephone calls may simply have been return calls, or telephone calls concerning a variety of issues, or arising because of their friendship.

10.03 Mr Dunlop obtained Cllr Creaven's signature on the motion and map seeking the rezoning of the Cloghran lands. The signature was probably obtained between 10 and 12 March 1993.

10.04 Mr Dunlop's diary for this period indicated a meeting with Cllr Creaven on 11 March 1993 at 1 pm. The Tribunal was satisfied that this was the meeting at which Cllr Creaven signed the motion and map, as well as signing other rezoning motions at Mr Dunlop's request.

10.05 Mr Dunlop stated that Cllr Creaven did not seek payment from him, nor was he paid, in respect of the rezoning of the Cloghran lands.

10.06 Cllr Creaven supported the motion to rezone the lands on 1 April 1993, and supported the confirmation process relating to the rezoning of the Cloghran lands in September/October 1993. Cllr Creaven was consistently pro-development in relation to the review of the Development Plan.

10.07 Mr Dunlop's secretary's telephone records indicated that on 18 March 1993, Mr Kenny telephoned Mr Dunlop's office and left a message for him asking 'Who is looking after Liam Creaven'. The record further indicated that Mr Dunlop's secretary returned the call to Mr Kenny and advised him that Mr Dunlop would contact him the following day.

10.08 Mr Dunlop was asked to explain his understanding of Mr Kenny's message. He told the Tribunal that he presumed that Mr Kenny was asking who was lobbying Cllr Creaven. He rejected any suggestion that the message was a reference to the payment of money to Cllr Creaven, and again emphasised that he and Mr Kenny had never discussed payments to councillors.

10.09 Mr Dunlop also took the opportunity, when being questioned on the meaning of Mr Kenny's telephone message, to restate to the Tribunal that neither Cllr Creaven nor his close friend Cllr M. J. Cosgrave received payment from him in return for support for rezoning motions. Mr Dunlop intimated that both councillors signed motions merely at his request, implying that attempting to bribe either of them was unnecessary.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR MICHAEL J. COSGRAVE (FG)

11.01 As was the case with Cllr Creaven, Cllr Cosgrave had been a close acquaintance of Mr Dunlop from the 1980s. Mr Dunlop generally succeeded in lobbying Cllr Cosgrave in relation to rezoning projects in which he was involved.

11.02 Mr Dunlop's 1993 diary and the telephone records maintained by his secretary indicated frequent contact between him and Cllr Cosgrave in 1993. For example, between 1 April and 6 October 1993, 22 occasions were recorded when Cllr Cosgrave contacted Mr Dunlop's office, and during this period 8 meetings were recorded in Mr Dunlop's diary.

11.03 There was also telephone contact between Cllr Cosgrave and Mr Dunlop's office on 3, 5, 8, 10 and 11 March 1993.

11.04 While all these calls and this contact related to matters relevant to the review of the Development Plan, the number of these calls and meetings which related to the rezoning of the Cloghran lands is unknown.

11.05 Mr Dunlop probably obtained Cllr Cosgrave's signature on the 11 March 1993 motion and map. It was likely that an entry in Mr Dunlop's diary indicating a meeting with Cllr Cosgrave on 11 March 1993, was a reference to the meeting at which Cllr Cosgrave signed the motion. Cllr Cosgrave also supported the rezoning confirmation process for the Cloghran lands in September/October 1993.

11.06 Mr Dunlop stated that Cllr Cosgrave neither sought nor was paid money in relation to the Cloghran lands.

11.07 Cllr Cosgrave was generally supportive of development. In relation to the Cloghran lands specifically, he stated that he supported the rezoning of these lands because they were close to the airport. He also believed that the rezoning of the Cloghran lands was ‘an excellent idea’ on planning grounds.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR ANNE DEVITT (FG)

12.01 Cllr Devitt was one of the co-signatories on the motion to rezone the Cloghran lands.

12.02 Cllr Devitt was uncertain as to whether her signature was obtained by Mr Kenny, whom she met and who lobbied her in relation to his proposed development of the lands at Cloghran, or by Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he did not recall obtaining Cllr Devitt’s signature, although he is virtually certain he did. Cllr Devitt’s signature was obtained between 10 and 12 March 1993, the latter being the date on which the motion and map to rezone the Cloghran lands was lodged with Dublin County Council.

12.03 Cllr Devitt was lobbied for her support for the Cloghran rezoning motion by both Mr Kenny and Mr Dunlop.

12.04 Cllr Devitt recalled Mr Kenny discussing the details of the project with her, including mention of a hotel with internet connections suited to business people using Dublin Airport. Cllr Devitt saw merit in these proposals and supported the rezoning of the Cloghran lands.

12.05 Cllr Devitt was also lobbied by Mr Butler at the Dublin County Council offices.

12.06 Cllr Devitt told the Tribunal that she had questioned Aer Rianta’s motivation in lodging objections to the rezoning of the Cloghran lands in August 1993. She and other councillors questioned whether the objection was related to safety, as Aer Rianta maintained, or whether it had more to do with protecting its commercial interests. Cllr Devitt did not accept Aer Rianta’s argument that the rezoning of the Cloghran lands would puncture the airport ‘red zone’, given that an existing large commercial building operated by Team Aer Lingus had been built and operated without difficulty for the airport.

12.07 Cllr Devitt also told the Tribunal that she had not supported a proposal to defer the decision on the Cloghran rezoning for consideration by Fingal County Council, because she believed there was a desire to complete the Development Plan review as quickly as possible. Cllr Devitt expressed her belief that there was no evidence before the Council in the autumn of 1993 to the effect that the rezoning of the Cloghran lands would interfere with the safe operation of the airport. Accordingly, she voted against the motion that sought to have the Cloghran lands revert to agricultural zoning.

THE AER RIANTA ISSUE

13.01 Having regard to the evidence of the councillors who gave evidence in this module, the Tribunal was satisfied to accept that on a certain level there was some resistance among councillors generally to the manner in which Aer Rianta sought to impose its views in relation to the rezoning. Following the Aer Rianta submissions, and following the intervention of the Department of Transport, Energy and Communications on 6 October 1993, Cllrs Wright, Gilbride, Gallagher, Fox, Creaven, M. J. Cosgrave and Devitt were among a large majority of councillors who continued to support the proposal to rezone the Cloghran lands E (industrial and related uses) by opposing and voting against motions which would either have adopted the Manager's proposals to refer the matter to the County Planning Office at Fingal to examine and report to Fingal County Council, or his recommendation to delete the proposed amendment No. 1, Map 10.

13.02 However, in their evidence to the Tribunal, Cllrs O'Callaghan and Rabbitte stated that the submission made by Aer Rianta, and the intervention of the Minister for Transport, Energy and Communication, Mr Brian Cowen TD, had persuaded them to vote in support of the motion to have the Cloghran lands revert to their agricultural zoning. Cllr O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that he had voted in favour of industrial zoning for Cloghran in April 1993 in the belief that these lands (being adjacent to the airport) were suitable for industrial zoning, and that they had potential for job creation. However, he had taken seriously the concerns relating to airport safety that had come to prominence in the period leading to the confirmation vote, and accordingly, in October 1993 he had supported the motion to have the lands revert to agricultural zoning having first unsuccessfully supported a motion by Cllrs Buckley and Tipping that the Manager's recommendation to refer the matter to the County Planning Office at Fingal to examine and report to Fingal County Council be adopted. He had also supported the unsuccessful Cllrs Higgins'/Tipping's motion that the Manager's recommendation to delete proposed amendment No. 1, Map 10 be adopted. While Cllr Rabbitte appeared not to have voted in April 1993, he too had taken seriously the issues raised by Aer Rianta and the Minister, and had voted accordingly on 6 October 1993.

CHAPTER NINE – THE BALDOYLE/PENNINE MODULE

INTRODUCTION

1.01 In this module the Tribunal inquired into the activities of a number of individuals in relation to efforts to rezone lands at Baldoyle near Sutton in north County Dublin. Mr Frank Dunlop made allegations that he bribed named councillors in return for their support for the rezoning of these lands in the course of the review of the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan, in the early 1990s.

1.02 Seventeen witnesses gave evidence in the course of the Tribunal public hearings between 28 November 2006 and 14 December 2006. In addition, evidence was read into the record in respect of deceased councillors Tom Hand, Cyril Gallagher, Jack Larkin and the late Mr Liam Lawlor.

THE PENNINE OPTION ON LANDS AT BALDOYLE

2.02 By an agreement dated 4 November 1991 and made between Endcamp Ltd ('Endcamp'), Melvin Securities Ltd ('Melvin') and Pennine Holdings Ltd ('Pennine') ('the Pennine option agreement'), Pennine, in consideration of a IR£5,000 payment it had already made, and of its future performance of certain specified tasks related to rezoning ('the tasks'), was granted an option ('the Pennine option') to purchase up to 250 acres ('the Pennine option lands') of approximately 400 acres of land at Baldoyle in north County Dublin ('the Baldoyle lands') during the period from 4 November 1991 to 25 January 1996.

2.03 The remaining 150 acres, approximately, of the Baldoyle lands ('the retained lands') were proposed to be retained for the purpose of constructing a hotel and golf course development.

2.04 The Pennine option was exercisable in stages, but initially in respect of a minimum tranche of 50 acres of the Pennine option lands. However, there could be no exercise of the Pennine option until Pennine had discharged both elements of the consideration, and in this regard the tasks would be performed only when Pennine had used all reasonable endeavours to obtain planning permission for a hotel and golf course in respect of the retained lands.

2.05 The Pennine option entitled Pennine to purchase the option lands at a price of IR£30,000 an acre if the option was exercised by 25 January 1995, or at a price of IR£37,500 an acre if the option was exercised after that date, but by 25 January 2006.

2.06 As one of the tasks imposed by the Pennine option agreement, Pennine had total responsibility for the application for rezoning in respect of the Baldoyle lands (including the Pennine option lands).

2.07 At the date of the Pennine option agreement the Baldoyle lands (including the Pennine option lands) were held for Mr John Byrne through a number of companies. In Recital A of the Pennine option agreement Endcamp was described as the beneficial owner and Melvin was described as the registered owner of the Baldoyle lands (including the Pennine option lands). For ease of reference and where appropriate Mr Byrne will be referred to in this Chapter as the owner of the Baldoyle lands (including the Pennine option lands).

2.08 The witnesses who gave evidence in relation to the Pennine option agreement all agreed that effectively it was to be exercised only if the Pennine option lands were rezoned for development in the course of the review of the 1983 Development Plan, which was ongoing from 1987 to December 1993.

2.09 The Tribunal sought to establish from the evidence of various witnesses, including Mr Dunlop, Mr Brendan Hickey (a property developer), Mr David Shubotham (a stockbroker in Davy Stockbrokers), Mr Anthony Collins, solicitor and Mr John Gore-Grimes, solicitor, and from relevant contemporaneous documentation, the identity of the individuals and/or entities who stood to benefit from the exercise of the Pennine option, and also the respective roles played by Mr Dunlop, Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham, Mr Liam Lawlor and Mr Byrne in the attempted rezoning of the Baldoyle lands during the period from January 1991 to December 1993. Davy Hickey Properties Ltd ('Davy Hickey Properties') was the corporate vehicle used by Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham (and others) to invest in and develop property.

THE GENESIS OF THE PLAN TO ACQUIRE THE PENNINE OPTION

2.10 While there was some agreement among Mr Dunlop, Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham that the genesis of the idea to acquire an option over part of the Baldoyle lands could be traced to January 1991, these witnesses provided substantially conflicting accounts of their respective roles in the acquisition of the Pennine option.

2.11 In his statement to the Tribunal dated October 2000, Mr Dunlop stated as follows:

Davy Hickey Properties agreed to become involved in the Baldoyle racecourse lands. However, they were only prepared to do so if the land was rezoned. Accordingly I formed Pennine Holdings Limited. Pennine Holdings Limited bought an option on the Baldoyle racecourse lands from John Byrne in late 1990, early 1991. Davy Hickey Properties paid for the option and underwrote the expenses involved in preparing the professional submission to Dublin County Council.

2.12 In his statement to the Tribunal dated November 2006, Mr Dunlop stated as follows:

On an unspecified date either in late 1990 or early 1991, probably the former, the late Mr Liam Lawlor proposed that Davy Hickey properties and I become involved with lands at Baldoyle, formally the Baldoyle Racecourse, then in the ownership of Endcamp Ltd (Endcamp) with a view to their being rezoned for either residential or commercial use or both during the course of the Dublin County Development Plan. I believe that Mr Lawlor made this proposal following the successful material contravention of the then County Plan regarding lands at Newlands/Saggart by Davy Hickey Properties Limited, ('DHPL') for which I was an adviser. I believe that Brendan Hickey about this time also proposed that I become involved in the proposed rezoning.

At a meeting held in Davy Stockbrokers' office at Dawson Street, Dublin, Mr Lawlor outlined the potential for these lands which were given the working title: 'Eastview.' This was done to avoid the negative perception in existence regarding these lands arising from previous unsuccessful planning applications by Endcamp. To my recollection, Mr David Shubotham, Mr Brendan Hickey and I were present with Mr Lawlor at this meeting. A combination of this personnel attended a number of meetings subsequently with regard to the proposals for these lands.

I do not believe that, other than a general expression of interest by DHPL, that any commitments were given at this first meeting. At a later date DHPL agreed to become involved but on the condition that they would do so after the lands had been successfully rezoned. They were not prepared to become involved in the process of lobbying – either of officials or elected representatives on the Council – necessary to effect a successful outcome. They were prepared to carry out feasibility studies regarding the potential for the lands, to pay for an option on the lands from Endcamp, were it willing to grant such an option, and to defray costs relating to professional fees, publicity material and any other miscellaneous costs arising.

It was agreed that a company be formed which would enter into any option agreement and which would be the vehicle for all necessary transactions relating to the lands following the purchase of the said option.

I cannot accurately recall the sourcing of the company Pennine Holdings Limited. I believe it was a shelf company provided either by Eugene F. Collins, Solicitors, or another unnamed party. I recall only one meeting in relation to the provision of signatures on the required Companies Office documentation and I believe that this meeting took place at the offices of Eugene F. Collins, Solicitors, Fitzwilliam Square, Dublin. A work colleague – at my request – and I became directors of the company and Pennine Holdings Limited became the identified vehicle for all actions, and publicity regarding the Baldoyle/Eastview lands. I do not know precisely of the beneficial ownership of Pennine Holdings in the period from its incorporation in early 1991 to December 1993.

I do not recall whether Mr Lawlor approached Mr John Byrne of Endcamp regarding an option or whether he introduced Mr Brendan Hickey to Mr Byrne. In either event, Mr Brendan Hickey solely conducted and concluded negotiations with Mr John Byrne and paid the requisite consideration. I was not aware at the time of any of the financial arrangements associated with the option and only became aware of these arrangements subsequent to DHPL's withdrawal of interest after the proposed rezoning failed at Dublin County Council. Notwithstanding this, Pennine Holdings Limited held the option. I do not recall attending any meetings regarding the option, signing any documentation in its regard and/or paying any monies for the said option.

I do not believe that any formal arrangement was entered into by any of the parties, namely DHPL, Mr Lawlor or myself as to how the individual parties were to benefit in the event of the lands being rezoned. There was no arrangement agreed between Mr Lawlor and me. Nor was there any such arrangement concluded between DHPL and me. The only arrangement between DHPL and me was verbal and related to the discharge of expenses incurred by me in my endeavours to effect the rezoning. I am not aware now, and I was not aware at the time of the rezoning proposal of any arrangement as to the interests held or to be held by the parties if the lands were successfully rezoned. Ultimately, when the rezoning bid was unsuccessful, the option was sold on to Ballymore Homes in 1994 at which time I received payment in respect thereof.

2.13 Statements provided to the Tribunal by Mr Liam Lawlor and by Mr Byrne did not materially contradict the account of the initial meeting contained in Mr Dunlop's November 2006 statement, save that Mr Byrne claimed to have been in attendance together with Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor, Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham and Mr Anthony Gore-Grimes (of the firm Gore & Grimes, Mr Byrne's solicitors) at a meeting in Davy's offices. Mr Byrne believed that the initial approach to him had come from Mr Hickey. In his statement to the Tribunal dated 29 September 2006 Mr Byrne stated:

I recall that in 1991 or possibly in 1990 an approach was made to me by Brendan Hickey of Davy Hickey Properties who were interested in acquiring an option over part of the Baldoyle lands. This company was a joint venture between Brendan Hickey and Davy Stockbrokers.

I believe that I attended at a meeting sometime in 1991 at the offices of Davy Stockbrokers in Dawson Street which was attended by Liam Lawlor and Brendan Hickey, David Shubotham of Davy Stockbrokers, Frank Dunlop and Anthony Gore Grimes at which discussions took place in relation to my Company granting an option to Davy Hickey Properties in respect of approximately 250 acres of the Baldoyle lands. It was intended that the purchasers would attempt to have the zoning of the lands changed to residential/leisure/business park use and that approximately 158 acres being part of the lands would be used for the construction of a hotel and golf course.

2.14 Mr Byrne's position was that having someone of the financial standing and reputation of Davy Stockbrokers as backer of the project made it attractive to him to effectively tie up his lands in a five year purchase option.

2.15 In a statement provided to the Tribunal in April 2002, Mr Lawlor stated that he 'recommended Mr Dunlop to Davy Hickey Properties' in relation to Citywest, and also that he 'arranged a lunch/meeting at Davy Stockbrokers' which he attended with Mr Shubotham, Mr Hickey, Mr Dunlop and Mr Byrne. Mr Lawlor further stated: 'Arising from that lunch the parties entered into some form of business relationship of which I was not a party to.'

2.16 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he did not recall Mr Byrne's presence at a meeting in Davy Stockbrokers, but acknowledged that he did meet Mr Byrne on a number of occasions, including in Mr Dunlop's office and at Mr Byrne's home, and once, in the office of Gore & Grimes, Mr Byrne's solicitors.

2.17 Mr Hickey, in evidence, disputed that it was Mr Lawlor who introduced either himself or Davy Hickey Properties to the Pennine project. He also disputed that Mr Lawlor asked him to meet Mr Byrne. He maintained that it was Mr Dunlop who approached him about the matter and who set up a meeting for him with Mr Byrne. Mr Hickey acknowledged that it was he who led the negotiations with Mr Byrne for the acquisition of the Pennine option, but claimed that he took over the negotiations from Mr Dunlop because of Mr Dunlop's lack of technical expertise. Mr Hickey could not recall a meeting in Davy Stockbrokers that was attended by both Mr Byrne and Mr Lawlor.

2.18 Mr Shubotham told the Tribunal that he could not recollect the circumstances of his initial contact ‘in relation to the Pennine options.’ He strongly doubted that it was Mr Lawlor who initiated his and Mr Hickey’s contact with Mr Byrne, and he agreed with Mr Hickey that the initial approach came through Mr Dunlop. Mr Shubotham recalled a meeting which he believed Mr Dunlop had set up in order to introduce Mr Byrne. He said that this meeting was attended by a number of other individuals, whose identities he claimed he could not recall.

2.19 Mr Shubotham also acknowledged having made the IR£5,000 Pennine option consideration payment on 28 January 1991 from his own personal resources. He told the Tribunal that he envisaged that his role would have been to secure the investors required in the event that the project came to fruition.

2.20 The Tribunal was satisfied, having regard, in particular, to the sequence of events that commenced in January 1991 and continued until May/June 1993, that on a date or dates in January/February 1991 Mr Dunlop, Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham, Mr Lawlor and Mr Byrne made contact and met with a view to entering an arrangement whereby Mr Byrne, through his companies, would grant an option in relation to 250 acres of his lands at Baldoyle. The Tribunal was further satisfied that Mr Lawlor was the individual who brought Mr Byrne, Mr Dunlop Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham together and that Mr Lawlor was the originator of the Pennine option/rezoning concept.

SECURING THE PENNINE OPTION

2.21 According to a memorandum dated 11 February 1991 from Mr Anthony Gore-Grimes, solicitor, addressed to his colleague, Mr John Gore-Grimes, solicitor (also of Gore & Grimes), Heads of Agreement in relation to the Pennine option (which were not seen by the Tribunal) had by then been prepared, and Gore & Grimes were then preparing to forward details of the title to the Baldoyle lands to Eugene F. Collins, Solicitors.

2.22 By early February 1991 Eugene F. Collins had begun the process of registering a company - Pennine Holdings Ltd - in the Companies Office. Mr Anthony Collins (senior partner in Eugene F. Collins), accepted in evidence that by this time the IR£5,000 payment, forming part of the consideration for the Pennine option, had been paid to Mr Byrne/Endcamp/Melvin. This had been paid on 28 January 1991 from the personal account of Mr Shubotham, but as of 18 August 1993 was attributed in the accounts of Davy Hickey Properties as a payment made by that firm.

2.23 There appeared to have been some coincidence in time between the funding by Mr Shubotham of the IR£5,000 Pennine option consideration payment, the retention of Eugene F. Collins by Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham, the intended provision of title documents in relation to the Baldoyle lands by Gore & Grimes to Eugene F. Collins and the process begun by Eugene F. Collins to have Pennine incorporated. Mr Collins told the Tribunal that he was instructed by both Mr Shubotham and Mr Hickey. Mr Collins explained that while virtually all of his old files were gone, he thought that his instructions involved the formation of a company, as well as a partnership agreement and subsequently an option agreement. While Mr Collins told the Tribunal that he did not know whether he had full instructions in relation to the Pennine option agreement as of February 1991, the Tribunal was satisfied that by early February 1991, Mr Collins was in receipt of sufficient information from Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham to begin the work of incorporating Pennine, the entity which was to and duly became the party to the formal Pennine option agreement executed on 4 November 1991.

2.24 Pennine was incorporated on 15 April 1991. Two employees of Eugene F. Collins, Ms Leonora Malone and Mr Sean McCormick, were named as Directors and each was registered as the holder of one share.

2.25 In the course of his evidence Mr Collins stated:

'...the company was getting the option and we effectively held the company to the order of David Shubotham, Brendan Hickey. There was a partnership agreement which sometime in the future some people might be partners of. But I'm not sure how much I knew at the beginning really...'

2.26 Mr Collins described Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham as the individuals who gave him instructions in the matter and on whose instructions he acted. Mr Collins stated that he did not consider Davy Hickey Properties to be his client in this matter, and that he considered his clients to be Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham personally.

2.27 Mr Hickey denied that he had any interest in Pennine or in the Pennine option. The thrust of his evidence was that his (and Davy Hickey Properties) and Mr Shubotham's interaction with Mr Dunlop in relation to the Baldoyle lands was conducted only on the basis of a prospective involvement on the part of Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham, in the event that the Baldoyle lands were rezoned. Mr Hickey maintained that Mr Dunlop 'came to us with the prospect of getting an option on the lands', and that he was merely rendering assistance to Mr Dunlop in the early stages of the project arising from Mr Dunlop's association with and his involvement in Citywest.¹

2.28 In relation to the role envisaged for Mr Dunlop, Mr Hickey stated the following:

'Well we had found Mr Dunlop to be a very competent, a very professional, a very diligent, very powerful, well connected individual. Somebody who we intimately trusted in City West and had been extremely important in that team. And if we had got involved and if we had have wanted to get involved and then got involved in Baldoyle, we would have seen him as an integral part of that team also. On what terms, they weren't discussed, as far as I'm aware.'

2.29 Mr Hickey considered that his connection with Baldoyle in the period January 1991 to July 1993 did not amount to an involvement. He said:

'I think to try and summarise what our position was in relation to Baldoyle was. I suppose I was initially sceptical. And I was never convinced. And we never committed. We, at a number of stages, got very close to by looking very hard at it over a long period of time. Principally because if Frank Dunlop wanted to persist with [it] and he was a very valued member of our team with City West and we stayed with it. But I was never convinced. And because of that I never committed to the project. I never committed at the option stage. And we never went through when, at a later stage, at a partnership stage.'

2.30 As to who Mr Collins was representing, Mr Hickey stated:

'I would have always, again, I would not have focused on who the company was going to take the vehicle. Depending if the vehicle was something we wanted to get involved in. So the corporate structure, whether it was a company shelf company or otherwise, so I doubt if I had any discussions with him what the company was or whether it was Exco or Pennine. But at all times it was Frank Dunlop's option and I always took it that I was acting on his behalf. And I can understand Anthony Collins had previously dealings with him and so did David Shubotham. And because of the, I suppose, the extent of the dealings with him that he [Mr Collins] presumed that we were the clients.'

2.31 Mr Shubotham told the Tribunal that Mr Byrne was wrong in his belief as expressed in his statement to the Tribunal dated 29 September 2006, that the entity seeking an option over part of the Baldoyle lands was a joint venture between Mr Hickey and Davy Stockbrokers. To the suggestion that the logic of Mr Byrne's willingness to tie up his lands on such a five year option could be explained by what Mr John Gore-Grimes had described as the attraction of having an entity with the financial standing and reputation of Davy Stockbrokers as the backers, he said:

'I might be able to explain the logic a bit further. I don't know again this to be true but I'll suggest to you that that I think it might have happened. That when Frank Dunlop came to me first. This was over the 5,000 whatever. I think that Frank might have said could I get a cheque for 5,000 from Davy Stockbrokers. I've a feeling he said. It's just my recollection was that it was important to him to show John Byrne something of importance or standing and I said you couldn't do that. You know, in other words, I think he was looking to have somebody who was credible as opposed to Frank if you like. I'm not saying Frank wasn't credible but something of some substance so that would support what he thought. Of course that isn't a joint venture.'

2.32 The first recorded communication between Mr Hickey and Mr Collins, available to the Tribunal in connection with this matter, was a letter sent by Eugene F. Collins to Mr Hickey on 22 August 1991 with the heading 'Pennine Holdings Limited' which read, inter alia, as follows:

Dear Brendan,

I refer to the above company which is presently under the control of two solicitors in this office. The Directors and Secretary are acting as such on your instructions, and the shares are being held in trust for you and your nominee.

I am enclosing herewith a first draft of Minutes of the First Meeting of Directors of the Company, at which meeting the control of the Company can be transferred to yourself and your nominees. [...]

I note that yourself and David Shubotham are both willing to act as Directors of the Company. In that regard, I am enclosing herewith Form B10 which must be signed and completed by both yourself and Mr Shubotham, where indicated. [...]

As previously mentioned, the authorised share capital of the Company is IR£10,000.00. However, only two shares of IR£1 each had been issued. Please indicate whether you would like us to allot more shares in this Company. [...]

I have had brief discussions with both you and David Shubotham about a Shareholders agreement. I feel this should now be dealt with in the reasonably near future.

2.33 This letter was copied to Mr Dunlop, apparently by Mr Hickey.

2.34 Mr Collins told the Tribunal that as of 22 August 1991 he considered Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham to be the beneficial owners of Pennine. He stated that he could not recall whether he knew in 1991 (but he did not believe that he did), who the proposed shareholders were, but stated that in the light of his letter dated 22 August 1991 he believed that it had been indicated to him that there was going to be a number of shareholders in Pennine. Furthermore, there was no doubt in his mind at that point in time but that Pennine was being directed by Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham.

2.35 Mr Collins said that he had no recollection of Mr Hickey reverting to him, following receipt of the letter dated 22 August 1991, to advise him that at all relevant times Pennine was Mr Dunlop's company (as Mr Hickey himself maintained). Mr Hickey stated that in August 1991 he discovered that Mr Collins had got it wrong, as regards his belief that Mr Hickey was his client. Mr Hickey believed that he remedied that situation so that it became clear to Mr Collins that his client was Mr Dunlop and Pennine. The Tribunal was satisfied that if Mr Hickey had done so then such an important detail would have been clearly noted by Mr Collins and that the involvement of his firm in relation to Pennine would have reflected Mr Hickey's avowed disinterest in Pennine. That did not happen.

2.36 Four days later, on 26 August 1991, Eugene F. Collins again wrote to Mr Hickey under the heading 'Endcamp Limited/Pennine Holdings Limited' enclosing for his attention, inter alia, 'two further engrossments of the option agreement and the Company Seal for Pennine Holdings Limited' and calling on Mr Hickey to arrange 'to have all three engrossments of the option agreement sealed by the Company in accordance with his Articles of Association and return. The Company's sealing should be witnessed by an independent witness who should state his address and occupation.'

2.37 In the final paragraph of that letter Mr Hickey was advised that: 'there are still some conveyancing points relating to the lands to be sorted out and these will not be dealt with until John Gore-Grimes returns to his office at the end of September next. I would propose returning the executed documentation to Gore & Grimes subject to our right to raise whatever additional queries we deem necessary to resolve the outstanding requisitions relating to the title on John Gore-Grimes' return.'

2.38 Pennine held its first Directors Meeting on 2 September 1991. The minutes recorded those present as Ms Leonora Malone, Mr Simon McCormick, Mr Dunlop and Mr Kieran O’Byrne (an employee of Frank Dunlop & Associates). The minutes also recorded that Ms Malone and Mr McCormick resigned as Directors and were replaced by Mr Dunlop and Mr O’ Byrne, with Mr O’Byrne also assuming the office of Secretary to the company. Eugene F. Collins were appointed solicitors. It was decided that the one share each held by Ms Malone and Mr McCormick be transferred to Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Byrne respectively. Mr O’Byrne’s registration as a Director and shareholder was at Mr Dunlop’s behest, and it was never at any stage envisaged or intended that he was acting other than in an nominee capacity².

When asked if Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Byrne, in becoming the directors and shareholders of Pennine on 2 September 1991, did so as nominees of himself and Mr Shubotham’s interest, Mr Hickey responded: ‘Absolutely not.’

2.39 On 13 September 1991 at a meeting of the Directors of Pennine, chaired by Mr Dunlop, Pennine approved the Pennine option agreement.

2.40 On 2 October 1991 Eugene F. Collins wrote to Mr Dunlop as follows:

I confirm that the relevant Minutes, Resolutions and associated documentation have been finalised and that the above company has now been transferred to the control of yourself and Mr O’Byrne.

As requested by Brendan Hickey I am enclosing the following documentation in relation to the company which I understand will be kept by Mr O’Byrne as Secretary of the company [...]

2.41 Mr Dunlop’s contact with Eugene F. Collins over a two and half year period was fleeting, and amounted to one or two meetings at the most. Mr Dunlop however seemed to have been aware of the ongoing professional relationship between Eugene F. Collins and Mr Hickey, concerning the Baldoyle lands.

2.42 While Mr Collins denied in evidence that in October 1991 he considered Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Byrne to be Mr Hickey’s nominees, he acknowledged that he continued to regard Mr Hickey as his client in early October 1991, as evidenced by the contents of the letter dated 2 October 1991 from Mr Collins’ office to Mr Dunlop (and as evidenced by later correspondence with Mr Hickey concerning Pennine in 1993, following the resignation of Mr O'Byrne).

2.43 While the letter dated 22 August 1991 from Mr Collins to Mr Hickey, under the heading 'Pennine Holdings Limited', had referred to his having had brief discussions with Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham about a shareholders agreement, there was no evidence before the Tribunal of such an agreement having been concluded, or of having been considered in draft form.

2.44 However, the Tribunal was satisfied from what is set out below that in the period December 1991 to March 1993 Eugene F. Collins were engaged, on the instructions of Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham, in drafting a partnership agreement relating to the Pennine option lands and the possible benefits therefrom, in the event that the lands were rezoned and the Pennine option exercised. It appeared to the Tribunal to be entirely logical that Mr Collins would have been instructed to do this given that all concerned were probably aware at the time that a shareholder's agreement would not, in all probability, be an effective instrument to hold the beneficial interest in the company, because of Mr O'Byrne's (at least) pure nominee status. The Tribunal was satisfied that the execution of the Pennine option agreement on 4 November 1991 was a trigger point for the discussions which commenced in or about December 1991 concerning a partnership agreement, and that the subject of such an agreement exercised the minds of Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham and their legal advisors over a period of sixteen months.

2.45 Documentation provided to the Tribunal disclosed that on 25 November 1992 under the title 'Client: Davy Hickey Re: Partnership agreement', Eugene F. Collins invoiced J & E Davy in the sum of IR£1,875 together with VAT and outlay of IR£430.05 (total IR£2,305.05) for services as follows:

To professional fees to cover all work done in relation to the Partnership agreement between 17 December 1991 and 24 November 1992, including considering draft of similar Partnership agreement, discussing same with you and redrafting the agreement, subsequently discussing same and providing further draft together with commentary.

Professional fees to cover all the above work and to include attendances, correspondence and other matters not specifically detailed [...]

2.46 Having first issued a reminder to J & E Davy on 3 February 1993 in respect of this invoice dated 25 November 1992, Eugene F. Collins, on 26 March 1993, saw fit to issue a replacement invoice for it, this time addressed to Pennine and citing Pennine as its client. Mr Collins was unable to explain why this was done.

2.47 On 14 June 1993 Eugene F. Collins invoiced Davy Hickey Properties under the title 'Client: PENNINE HOLDINGS LTD' in the sum of IR£825.00 together with VAT and outlay of IR£188.37 (total IR£1,013.37) for services as follows:

To professional fees to cover all work done in relation to the Partnership agreement and other ancillary matters between 25 November 1992 and 31 March 1993 including considering a memo of some time before, discussing same with Brendan Hickey, redrafting the document and advising generally in relation to it.

Professional fees to cover the above and to cover other miscellaneous information and advices during the above period [...]

2.48 Mr Collins accepted that the proposed partnership agreement discussed with Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham over the period referred to in this invoice was in all probability a document providing for the beneficial ownerships of the parties intended to have an interest in the Pennine option lands in the event of the Pennine option being exercised under the Pennine option agreement. However, Mr Collins said that he could not assist the Tribunal as to the identities of the intended parties to the proposed partnership agreement, and in particular as to whether, in the period from December 1991 to March 1993, Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham, Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and/or Mr Byrne were among the intended parties to such an agreement.

2.49 Mr Hickey acknowledged that Mr Collins had initially been under the impression that he was acting for Mr Hickey, but Mr Hickey's understanding was that it had then been clarified to Mr Collins that his client was Mr Dunlop/Pennine.

2.50 Mr Hickey told the Tribunal that in August 1991, having, as he believed, corrected Mr Collins as to the identity of his client, they were still considering becoming involved if satisfied that the Baldoyle lands (including the Pennine option lands) could be rezoned, and if he thought that the land could be serviced and therefore granted planning permission. To that extent, there were some discussions about the vehicle to use for such an involvement. He considered that some sort of a partnership agreement would be appropriate if they became involved. There was some further discussion with Mr Collins whom he said was engaged to look at a partnership agreement 'if they would get involved.'

2.51 It was proposed that their Citywest partnership agreement would be used as a template for Pennine. The Tribunal was advised that the composition of the partnership would be definitely decided only if and when the project became 'viable.'

2.52 Mr Hickey further testified that by September/October 1992 he and Mr Shubotham had definitely decided not to get involved with Pennine. He explained that by that time it was his belief that even if rezoning of the land took place, planning permission was unlikely because of lack of services and attempts to secure bank funding had proved unsuccessful.

2.53 Notwithstanding this position, the Eugene F. Collins invoice dated 14 June 1993 for services provided to Pennine in the period 25 November 1992 to 31 March 1993 and addressed to 'PENNINE HOLDINGS LTD', was paid by Davy Hickey Properties. Mr Collins was unable to explain why this had transpired, although he believed that he had an involvement with Mr Hickey until certainly 31 March 1993.

MR DUNLOP'S EVIDENCE IN RELATION TO THE PENNINE OPTION

2.54 Mr Dunlop said in evidence that no formal arrangement was entered into between himself and Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham and/or Davy Hickey Properties in relation to the extent of the benefit he would ultimately receive from the Pennine option lands, in the event of the Baldoyle lands being rezoned and the Pennine option exercised. He claimed that a percentage figure for him had not been discussed. In this regard, he said:

'No such document to my knowledge exists. Yes, there are various – there have been various allusions to shareholding and all the rest of it and what was owned and what was not owned. The fact of the matter is that there was no such arrangement to my knowledge with Davy Hickey Properties.'

Specifically in relation to the involvement of Davy Hickey Properties, Mr Dunlop said that he understood that (a), they would only become involved if the lands were rezoned (b), they would pay the IR£5,000 Pennine option consideration payment and (c), they would meet miscellaneous expenses, and would pay him IR£10,000 in this regard (which they did).

2.55 Mr Dunlop said he neither negotiated nor received a fee for the work carried out by him in relation to attempts to rezone the Baldoyle lands. Mr Dunlop maintained that Pennine was established to promote the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands, and that he saw himself effectively as the person doing the promoting, in a public relations sense.

Mr Dunlop also claimed to have no knowledge of any arrangement which might have been entered into by others, including Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham and Mr Lawlor. Mr Dunlop professed no knowledge of the draft partnership agreement which was the subject of ongoing discussion between Mr Collins and Mr Hickey over a period of two and a half years. Mr Dunlop's stated that his awareness of the possibility of the execution of some sort of partnership agreement between various parties associated with Davy Hickey Properties only arose after reading an Irish Independent article of 27 April 1993 on the issue.

2.56 Mr Dunlop was questioned by the Tribunal as to the reality of the ownership structure of Pennine in circumstances where his evidence suggested uncertainty as to his and Mr Hickey's and Mr Shubotham's beneficial interest in Pennine.

2.57 Mr Dunlop was asked:

'But is that not extraordinary commercial terms that the parties should proceed forward in an a venture such as this, over two and a half years or so, having the benefit of accountancy advice and certainly the benefit of a solicitor setting up a corporate entity to be the nominal advancer of this project and yet not go the other step, the basic step, one would have thought of agreeing matters in advance?'

Mr Dunlop replied:

'Well I'm saying no. And without being naughty, I have no evidence or knowledge of any other arrangement between any of the other parties to the exclusion of me.'

2.58 Mr Dunlop also maintained in evidence that:

'there was no arrangement between either Mr Shubotham, Mr Hickey, I am discounting any other parties because I cannot speak for any other party, [including] Mr Byrne and Mr Lawlor. There was no arrangement between Mr Lawlor and Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham and myself in relation to the beneficial ownership of these lands. I certainly had a piece of paper or was the nominee director in Pennine Holdings. But I had put up no – I bought nothing. I put up nothing. I didn't pay for any option. I didn't pay for any miscellaneous expenses. I paid for nothing. This was Brendan Hickey and David Shubotham. Davy Hickey properties, I hesitate to use the word but, since you yourself, Judge, have used it. If you put it in blunt terms, was taking a punt on the possibility that these lands in Baldoyle would be rezoned as a result of an option agreement that they entered into, that certainly it was negotiated by Mr Hickey in relation to these lands.'

2.59 When asked 'But who was the beneficial owner? Who was going to benefit?' Mr Dunlop replied: 'the beneficial owner, as far as I was concerned, on an ongoing basis was Davy Hickey Properties.'

2.60 The thrust of Mr Dunlop's evidence was that as of September 1991 both he and Mr O'Byrne were in effect nominee Directors of Pennine, albeit with Mr Dunlop himself having an expectation of some future reward. When it was put to him that he himself was suggesting that Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham were the beneficial owners of Pennine, Mr Dunlop replied:

'Well I certainly wasn't a beneficial owner. I take...[the] point in relation to had the zoning taken place on the 20th of April 1993 and it had been – and it was in the name of Pennine Holdings. That Pennine Holdings qua Pennine Holdings would then be the proud possessor of rezoned land in Baldoyle to the tune of 230 - 280 acres...'

2.61 In response to the further suggestion that, if the Tribunal was to believe everything it was being told, it must follow that everyone who could possibly be associated with Pennine was denying beneficial ownership of it, Mr Dunlop said:

'Well, then the only conclusion that I can come to..., without being facile about it was that then nobody owned it. Everybody is at odds. The history of the matter, as far as I'm concerned, is relatively simple. That Pennine Holdings was established as the front company to claim ownership of lands in Baldoyle which were purported to be rezoned – the purpose of which was to have them rezoned. Following such a rezoning, certainly as far as I'm concerned, and I can't speak for anybody else, that an arrangement would eventuate between Davy Hickey Properties and myself.'

2.62 Asked what would have happened if someone had approached him with an offer of IR£500,000 for the Pennine option, Mr Dunlop replied that he would have:

'... felt obliged to go to Mr Hickey and to Mr Shubotham in these circumstances at that time. Because of the nature of the relationship in relation to Baldoyle. Brendan had drawn up the - - had negotiated the option. I had signed it, at the request of Anthony Collins, on the instructions of Brendan. And I would have felt obliged. Other than saying to you, on the basis of the hypothesis that you outlined, I can't say absolutely but I would have felt because of my relationship at that time in the context of the option I would have gone to them and said I have been offered. Sean Mulryan has come to me or Mr X has come to me. He knows that I had this option on John Byrne's land in Baldoyle. And he's offered me 500,000. What should I do? Will I accept it, will I reject it? And if I had accepted it I would obviously have accepted it in circumstances where there would have been a division.'

2.63 Mr Dunlop said he would have believed that he had an obligation to Davy Hickey Properties given ‘the circumstances in which the project had come into being.’ He added:

‘Notwithstanding differences between Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham and myself about who brought the project to them or not. But that doesn’t go to the substance of the issue. The substance of the issue is that on receipt of the information Mr Hickey negotiated the option with Mr Byrne. At his request, via his solicitor Mr Collins. I signed the option. Legally, I think Judge Faherty raised this issue on the last day. Legally that was my option and had I or had the option been sold or had it gone to the vote and the vote, which the likelihood was actually that it would have been passed, that I would have been in receipt of a profit of ten million. Divisible by myself and the other director who was an employee of mine and only signed at my request. Had no knowledge or involvement in the company whatsoever.

I would, at that stage, whether it was then, prior to the vote, or at the vote, have discussed the matter with Mr Hickey or Mr Shubotham. On the basis that they had paid for the option and they had paid for all of the outstanding professional fees, including giving me 10,000 pounds.’

2.64 Asked how it was that in 1994 he had felt free to sell the Pennine option to Mr Sean Mulryan of Ballymore Homes Ltd for IR£1.2m without discussing the matter with Mr Hickey or Mr Shubotham, Mr Dunlop said that after the failed attempt to rezone the lands in April/May 1993 (see below), he had been handed the Pennine option by Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham to do with as he wished. They had declared to him that they had no further interest in it. He said:

‘Neither gentlemen Mr Hickey nor Mr – ever raised the issue with me. Either directly, indirectly, seriously or jocosely. And I’m not aware of how they became aware that the option had been sold. The option was mine. And as per their, I suppose I shouldn’t use the word resiling but as per their statement, they didn’t want to have anything to do with it. I’m interested in Mr Hickey’s comment that I reprised with Mr Gordon that is that he never believed that this was a project of any substance. Now, Brendan Hickey never said that to me, to my face. But both Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham made it palpably obvious to me in the circumstances of 1993 that they just didn’t want to have anything whatsoever to do with Baldoyle.’

2.65 Asked why it was that he felt free to retain the sale proceeds, Mr Dunlop said:

'Well, we've had an intervening event. And the intervening event is that the matter has gone down the swanny. In dramatic circumstances, including bringing various names, which have never appeared before and of which I knew nothing, into the public domain. Demanding, leading to a demand for an apology. An apology being given. And either Brendan Hickey or David Shubotham or both of them together saying look it, that's it, we don't have anything further to do with this. That's yours, do what you like with it.'

2.66 Returning to the hypothetical sale of the Pennine option for IR£500,000 in the early stages, Mr Dunlop said that he would have been very surprised if in such circumstances, Mr Lawlor would not have approached him for money. Mr Dunlop did not know if Mr Lawlor ever received money from anybody in connection with the Pennine option. When the Pennine option was eventually sold in 1994 Mr Dunlop did not pay anything to Mr Lawlor and Mr Lawlor did not approach Mr Dunlop looking for payment. Mr Dunlop said:

'I wouldn't say he didn't raise the subject with me. He may. I shouldn't say he may. I think the best way of describing it is that he made a number of remarks which indicated to me that he knew that I'd sold the option to Sean Mulryan but he did not know how much I'd got.'

THE BALDOYLE REZONING PROJECT FROM 1991 TO MAY 1993

THE REZONING SUBMISSION OF NOVEMBER 1991

3.01 During the course of the first statutory public display of the 1991 Draft Development Plan between 2 September 1991 and 3 December 1991, a submission entitled *'Representation for proposed use of Land at Maynetown, Stapolin (Baldoyle/Portmarnock) Co. Dublin'*³ and dated November 1991 was lodged with the County Council. This proposed a change from the existing B&G (green belt) zoning to allow for the development of residential areas, two business parks, a district centre and a golf course.

3.02 Ms Grainne Mallon, town planner, stated in evidence that the first ten pages of that submission document represented work she prepared on the instructions of Mr Dunlop, who she believed at the time was representing Mr John Byrne. She told the Tribunal that the only meetings she ever had with Mr

³ A hundred copies of this submission were duly printed and bound (funded by the Eastview Partnership account) for Mr Dunlop to distribute to councillors. Mr Dunlop referred to the submission as the 'blue book.'

Dunlop were in relation to the Baldoyle lands. Mr Dunlop's diary contained entries for meetings with Ms Mallon on 11 November 1991 and on 27 November 1991.

3.03 Mr Kevin O'Donnell who in 1991 was employed by McCarthy & Partners, consulting engineers, told the Tribunal that he wrote the submission document in its entirety. While he didn't believe that he received the report of Ms Grainne Mallon to incorporate it in the submission, he acknowledged that he was probably aware of Ms Mallon's engagement as a planning consultant in connection with the matter.

3.04 Mr Dunlop believed that this submission was a composite production put together in Mr Lawlor's office resulting from various involvements. His recollection at the time was that the first twelve pages contained material prepared by Ms Mallon and that the remainder, dealing with the planning and zoning aspects, was prepared by McCarthy & Partners. Mr Dunlop maintained that Mr Lawlor attended meetings in the offices of McCarthy & Partners who were retained at the behest of Mr Lawlor to deal with technical matters (such as the measures being proposed to deal with the issue of flooding).

PAYMENTS MADE IN CONNECTION WITH THE PENNINE OPTION AND THE REZONING ATTEMPT

3.05 The evidence established that McCarthy & Partners were paid a sum of IR£5,164.27 on 6 May 1992 from the 'Eastview⁴ Partnership Account.'

3.06 The Eastview Partnership bank account was created in December 1991. Mr Shubotham explained that it was his account, and that it was held in his name with a permitted Eastview Partnership account designation even though there was no such partnership. He also appeared to suggest that he was the sole signatory to this account.

3.07 The evidence established that a total of IR£28,126.42 was paid out of the Eastview Partnership account between 6 January 1992 and 20 August 1992, including the payment of IR£5,164.27 made to McCarthy & Partners and a payment of IR£943.80 to Grainne Mallon & Associates. The first recorded payment out of the Eastview Partnership account was an IR£10,000 payment to Mr Dunlop's company Shefran Ltd ('Shefran') on 6 January 1992. On 6 February 1992 a payment of IR£10,488.35 was made to Eugene F. Collins in respect of work carried out in 1991 in connection with the incorporation of Pennine and the completion of the Pennine option agreement. Finally, a payment of IR£1,530 to Frank Dunlop and Associates was also paid out of the Eastview Partnership account.

3.08 An accounting record entitled 'Baldoyle payments' dated 18 August 1993 indicated that another source of funding for the project was Davy Hickey Properties, which incurred expenditure totalling IR£16,820.51 between January 1991 and June 1993, including the IR£5,000 Pennine option consideration payment paid by Mr Shubotham from his personal account in 1991.

3.09 In addition to the IR£10,000 payment Mr Dunlop received through Shefran from the Eastview Partnership account in January 1992, four further round figure payments were made to Mr Dunlop/Shefran between 6 June 1991 and 16 March 1993. These four payments were not funded by the Eastview Partnership account or by the accounts of Davy Hickey Properties. These four payments (as well as the January 1992 payment) and their source are considered later in this chapter.

THE CPO ISSUE

3.10 Between January and June 1993, a proposal by Dublin County Council to compulsorily acquire a portion of the Pennine option lands was the subject of contact between Mr Hickey/Davy Hickey Properties and Mr John Gore-Grimes (Mr Byrne's solicitor).

3.11 On 6 January 1993 Mr John Gore-Grimes wrote to Mr Byrne enclosing a Compulsory Purchase Order ('CPO'), seeking his immediate instructions and advising him that an objection to the CPO was required to be lodged by 12 February 1993.

3.12 Mr Hickey said he was notified of the service of the CPO by Mr Dunlop. Mr Hickey then retained Fenton-Simons, town planners and development consultants, with whom he said he had a long-standing business relationship, and who had had an involvement in Citywest, to assist in the objection to the CPO.

3.13 On 28 January 1993, Fenton-Simons wrote to Mr Hickey setting out their proposals for opposing the CPO. On 29 January 1993 Mr Hickey wrote directly to Mr Byrne on Davy Hickey Properties notepaper with an enclosed copy of the letter from Fenton-Simons and a suggestion for progressing the CPO objection.

3.14 The thrust of Mr John Gore-Grimes' evidence confirmed that the dealings of Mr Byrne with Mr Hickey/Davy Hickey Properties (who Mr Byrne and Mr John Gore-Grimes believed to be the beneficial owners of the Pennine option)⁵ were a logical follow on to the course of dealings which had begun in January/February 1991 in relation to the granting of the Pennine option. Mr Gore-Grimes confirmed, in particular, that from December 1992 until mid April 1993 Mr Hickey and himself were jointly engaged in endeavouring to challenge the CPO that affected the land at that time.

3.15 Mr Hickey explained what he described as his 'very little involvement' in the CPO project as simply 'help', which he was continuing to give to Mr Dunlop, as Mr Dunlop was continuing unstintingly to help them. Having agreed to assist Mr Dunlop in this way, he would have been reasonably diligent, but he maintained that in no way was he 'mentally engaged.' He denied that he had any specific interest in the matter.

3.16 Notwithstanding that the lands concerned by the CPO were in the legal/beneficial ownership of Mr Byrne, and that it was he who was objecting to the CPO, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Hickey/Davy Hickey Properties had a considerable input into the effort then being undertaken to prevent the CPO coming into effect. The Tribunal's conclusion in this regard was assisted by the following contents of an attendance of Mr John Gore-Grimes dated 5 February 1993:

Attending to speak to Mr Fenton when he said that he was sending out a letter and he would send it across to me for approval. I then received the letter by fax and immediately phoned his office to say that his client was not Melvin Securities Limited, but was Davy Hickey and he should be very careful not to write on behalf of our clients as most of the grounds of objection were not grounds which we would use or indeed would want to use. Speaking to his secretary, Mr Fenton was not available and she said that she would make sure that the letter was not sent out and that she would ring me before it went out.

3.17 By letter dated 17 February 1993, Mr John Gore-Grimes, at Mr Byrne's request, provided Mr Hickey with a copy of the letter of objection which his firm had presented to the relevant Minister in relation to the CPO, together with a copy of the response received.⁶

⁵Mr Gore-Grimes believed Mr Dunlop's role to be a public relations one.

⁶The CPO hearing took place on 15 April 1993.

THE EVENTS LEADING TO THE SPECIAL MEETING OF 20 APRIL 1993

3.18 The CPO issue coincided largely with the consideration by Dublin County Council of a series of motions seeking the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands (including the Pennine option lands) over the course of a number of Special Meetings held between 20 April 1993 and 6 May 1993.

3.19 The lands in north County Dublin were not scheduled for consideration as part of the review of the published 1991 Draft Development Plan until the Spring of 1993. In early 1993, councillors were advised that the latest date for the lodgement of motions in relation to lands at Baldoyle and other lands in north County Dublin was 12 March 1993.

3.20 By 12 March 1993 a motion drafted and prepared by Mr Dunlop had been signed by Cllrs Michael J. Cosgrave, Liam Creaven, Cyril Gallagher and Sean Gilbride, and it was lodged on that date with Dublin County Council. This motion proposed zoning objectives A1 (residential), E (industrial), C (district centre) and B&G (a public pay-as-you-play golf course) for the Baldoyle lands.

3.21 Mr Dunlop's diary and telephone records disclosed that he had substantial contact with Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham, Mr Lawlor and Mr Byrne in the months of March, April and May 1993. Mr Dunlop met with Mr Hickey on 3 March 1993.

3.22 During the same period Mr Dunlop was also in contact with a substantial number of councillors, including the councillors who signed the motion submitted on 12 March 1993, and councillors who signed other motions, and/or who signed and/or received correspondence associated with the Baldoyle rezoning attempt.

3.23 Mr Dunlop's diary for 9 March 1993 – three days before the motion was lodged – contained an entry for a meeting at 'Davys.' On the following day Mr Dunlop met with Mr Byrne and Mr Lawlor. Mr Dunlop's telephone records indicated that Mr Shubotham made two attempts to contact Mr Dunlop on 11 March 1993, and a further attempt on the following day. The Tribunal had no doubt that during the period between 9 and 12 March 1993, Mr Dunlop made contact with the persons involved in the Baldoyle rezoning project, namely Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham, Mr Byrne, Mr Lawlor and the four councillors who signed the motion.

3.24 The first rezoning motion having been lodged by 12 March 1993, Mr Dunlop met with Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham at the offices of Davy Stockbrokers on 24 March 1993. Between 24 March 1993 and mid May 1993, Mr Dunlop had ongoing contact with Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham and also with Mr Byrne and Mr Lawlor.

3.25 Mr Dunlop's evidence was that there would not have been a meeting with Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham in circumstances other than in order to brief them as to what was going on. The frequency of his contact with Mr Byrne, Mr Shubotham and, to a lesser extent at this stage, Mr Hickey, either individually or collectively, all related to Baldoyle, and he confirmed that he reported to both Mr Shubotham and Mr Hickey on occasion in relation to the status of the Baldoyle proposal.

3.26 According to Mr Hickey, his contact with Mr Dunlop in 1993 was Citywest related, with any discussion of Baldoyle as incidental. The possibility of a discussion about Baldoyle existed because they were discussing matters in relation to Citywest. He had no specific memory of discussing Baldoyle with Mr Dunlop during the period when the rezoning motions were being considered by the Council.

3.27 The Tribunal was satisfied, however, that most, if not all, of the contact that Mr Dunlop had with Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham and Mr Byrne in the months of March, April and May 1993 was in relation to the Baldoyle lands and in particular the rezoning motions to be considered at forthcoming meetings of Dublin County Council.

3.28 The Tribunal was further satisfied that the contact between Mr Dunlop, Mr Shubotham and Mr Hickey during the period from 12 March 1993 to 14 April 1993 (when Mr Dunlop also had contact with Mr John Byrne, Mr John Gore-Grimes and Mr Lawlor) probably concerned a decision to lodge a new rezoning motion before the Council's first scheduled meeting dealing with the Baldoyle lands on 20 April 1993. Such a motion,⁷ signed by Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven, at Mr Dunlop's behest, was then lodged by 14 April 1993. It proposed that the Baldoyle lands be rezoned B&G (public golf course), A (new high quality housing), C (district centre) and G (high amenity).

3.29 Mr Dunlop agreed that insofar as Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham, Mr Lawlor, others and himself had been discussing the matter up to then, this new motion (which on 20 April 1993 replaced the earlier motion lodged on 12 March 1993) represented the optimum rezoning they thought could be achieved as of that date.

3.30 On 19 April 1993, the day before the first special meeting of Dublin County Council at which the proposed Baldoyle rezoning was to be considered, Mr Shubotham attempted to contact Mr Dunlop from London. Mr Dunlop's telephone records also indicated that on 20 April 1993 both Mr Shubotham and Mr Lawlor attempted to contact him (Mr Shubotham on two occasions, first at 9.45 am and later at 1.45 pm). Mr Shubotham told the Tribunal that he had no idea what these telephone calls were about and appeared to suggest that they must have related to Citywest, and not Baldoyle or Pennine. The Tribunal was satisfied that these attempts to contact Mr Dunlop were made immediately before and immediately after the special meeting of the Council that was taking place on 20 April 1993 and therefore that it was likely that they concerned the Baldoyle rezoning attempt.

THE SPECIAL MEETING OF 20 APRIL 1993

3.31 On 20 April 1993 three rezoning motions affecting lands at Baldoyle were before Dublin County Council. The first motion, motion 14(5)(i), was lodged by Cllr David Healy and proposed the retention of the entire of the lands between Baldoyle and Portmarnock as 'green belt', as set out on the Draft Development Plan.⁸ The second motion, motion 14(5)(G)(i), was the rezoning motion signed by Cllrs M J Cosgrave, Creaven, Gallagher and Gilbride and lodged by 12 March 1993. The third motion, motion 14(5)(G)(ii), was the rezoning motion signed by Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven and lodged by 14 April 1993.

3.32 On 20 April 1993 the County Manager reiterated his objections (which had previously been circulated to councillors) to the proposal to rezone the Baldoyle lands.

3.33 As the first in time, Cllr Healy's 'green belt' motion, motion 14(5)(i), was then proposed by him and seconded by Cllr Gordon. Cllr Creaven then indicated his intention to withdraw motion 14(5)(G)(i), and this was agreed. Cllr M J Cosgrave proposed and Cllr Creaven seconded motion 14(5)(G)(ii). They then proposed and seconded an amendment to motion 14(5)(G)(ii) which in relation to its proposed A (residential) zoning sought to provide for (i) not more than 450 new houses on approximately 75 acres at Baldoyle and (ii) not more than 450 new houses on approximately 75 acres at Portmarnock.

⁸ This motion if successful would have defeated the rezoning ambitions for the Baldoyle lands.

3.34 Neither the Healy 'green belt' motion 14(5)(i) nor the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion 14(5)(G)(ii) were considered on 20 April 1993 as the Special Meeting was adjourned owing to what the Council minutes recorded as 'disorder' in the chamber.

3.35 Under the heading 'Council vote on north Dublin zoning postponed amid chaos' an article appearing in the edition of the Irish Times published on 21 April 1993 reported the events in the Council chamber on 20 April 1993 as follows:

Amid chaotic scenes of procedural wrangling, disorder and confusion, Dublin County Council has postponed for a week a decision on a proposal to rezone major tracts of green belt between Baldoyle and Portmarnock for large housing developments.

The proposal is strongly opposed by council officials, but there appeared to be a majority of councillors at yesterday's meeting ready to push the scheme through against their wishes. In the end, however, a vote could not be taken.

Throughout the meeting, Mr Frank Dunlop, a director of the property company which had put forward the plan, Pennine Holdings Ltd, held regular consultations outside the chamber with councillors who supported him, discussing what they should do next.

Yesterday's meeting was due to end at 1 p.m. Supporters of the proposal – put forward by a Fine Gael councillor Mr Michael Joe Cosgrave, and a Fianna Fail councillor, Mr Liam Creaven – successfully extended the meeting by half-an-hour in a vain attempt to have the motion passed. [...]

For most of the morning Mr Dunlop stood between the public and press gallery. He nodded vigorously when councillors made points with which he agreed and commented on points with which he disagreed. Throughout the meeting he was going to and out of the room, consulting with the proposers of the motion and others. A councillor would go out one door, Mr Dunlop would go out the other, and after a few minutes both would re-enter.

The previous evening, couriers had arrived at the homes of most Dublin county councillors delivering a new version of his development proposals. This version contained a slight reduction in the acreage of land intended for housing.

As the debate on the matter began, the chairwoman announced that she had just received this new proposal in the form of a motion from Councillors Cosgrave and Creaven. Objectors led by Councillor Sean Ryan TD (Labour) demanded that this motion be circulated for all councillors to see. 'It is unacceptable that stuff comes out by courier to councillors from third parties,' said Councillor Bernie Malone (Labour).

Mr Don Tipping (Democratic Left) proposed that the matter be postponed until a meeting next week. 'I want full and accurate information before we come to a meeting to decide these matters,' he said. Ms Joan Maher (Fine Gael) said that she had yet to receive a copy of the new map of the scheme. Councillors from the Green Party and individuals from Fianna Fail and Fine Gael also supported the postponement.

Those who wanted the discussion to go ahead stayed very quiet. They won the vote.

Supporting the proposal, Mr Cosgrave said that Baldoyle had become a desirable area in which to live and houses there were selling well. There was a need for football pitches and places to eat in the area. 'You can't get any of the above without building houses. The plan is good, it's what we need in Baldoyle and when it's put properly to the residents of Baldoyle, they'll support it,' he maintained.

But Mr Joe Higgins (Independent) described the application as 'a ferocious assault on the green belt between Portmarnock and Baldoyle' and said that the way the application had been altered at the last minute was 'a gross insult to the members and staff of the county council.'

If the plan was approved 'north Co. Dublin will be approaching the Los Angeles type of sprawl with ugly developments all over the place.'

Mr Tipping said that the application amounted to 'gross speculation as being against the will of the people who live in the area. If we start breaking the green belt here on this occasion, I've no doubt that in future years we'll see more encroachment in this area.'

It was approaching 1 p.m. and it seemed highly unlikely that the matter would be voted on before the end. By now tension was very high. Mr Ryan was on his feet demanding to know by how long the chairwoman was proposing to extend the meeting. Ms Ridge refused to answer. Councillors raised their voices at each other. She finally said that she was proposing a half-hour extension to 1.30 p.m. The proposal was carried.

But before discussing the Pennine proposal, the council first had to discuss a motion from Councillor David Healy of the Green Party. This motion proposes that no building development take place on the whole Baldoyle/Malahide green belt area. It must be defeated before the motion supporting the Pennine proposal can be passed.

Just when the meeting was again about to run out of time, the chairwoman announced that the extension of the meeting had not been simply until 1.30 p.m, but until at least 1.30 p.m. (This ran contrary to the recollection of all five reporters in the press gallery.) The only councillors who shared Ms Ridge's recollection appeared to be some of those in favour of the rezoning.

Amid uproar and angry shouts of 'disgrace', Ms Devitt then proposed an immediate vote on the Green Party proposal. It appeared that there would have been enough pro-Pennine councillors in the room to support her proposal and defeat the Green Party motion, but order in the chamber broke down completely and a five-minute adjournment was called.

Finally, the chairwoman agreed to postpone the issue until next week 'in view of the disorderly conduct.'

THE SPECIAL MEETING OF 27 APRIL 1993

3.36 The M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion 14(5)(G)(ii), and its proposed amendment, were scheduled for consideration by Dublin County Council on 27 April 1993. Mr Dunlop's telephone records for 26 April 1993 indicated an attempt by Mr Shubotham to contact him from Bermuda⁹ that afternoon, and Mr Dunlop's telephone records for 27 April 1993 indicated a call from Mr Hickey at 9:45 am, when he left a telephone number, and another call from Mr Shubotham at 2:55 pm (Irish time), again from Bermuda.

3.37 The Tribunal was satisfied that both of these attempted contacts on 27 April 1993 probably concerned an article published that morning in the Irish Independent referring to a link between the Baldoyle rezoning proposal that was scheduled for consideration by Dublin County Council that day and a consortium of named individuals and entities, including Mr Shubotham and other members of Davy Stockbrokers. The article also linked Mr Dunlop to both the Baldoyle project, and the Citywest project.

3.38 Mr Shubotham accepted in evidence that it would be very unlikely that he did not receive telephone calls about the Irish Independent article, and that he was very definitely upset by it. He said that it was possible that he telephoned Mr Dunlop about the article.

⁹ This call may have related to another development, according to Mr Shubotham.

3.39 Mr Dunlop said in evidence that he would have discussed the outcome of that day's Council Special Meeting with Mr Shubotham and Mr Hickey when they each telephoned him in the afternoon. He was also likely to have addressed with them the possibilities of undoing the harm caused by the media article.

3.40 Under the heading 'Group to net £10m if green belt goes' the article began as follows:

A PROPERTY consortium stands to make £10m profit if a move to allow house building on agricultural land incorporating the old Baldoyle Racecourse in North Dublin is successful today.

The consortium has an option to buy green belt land for £20,000 an acre and if Dublin Co Council agrees to rezone it for housing, its value would instantly shoot up to £100,000 an acre.

This would reap the consortium a profit of more than £10m before a single brick is laid for any of the planned 900 houses.[...]

The consortium is represented by PR consultant Frank Dunlop, who was successful in winning a lucrative rezoning battle for Davy's £45m City West Business Park in Tallaght about two years ago.

Mr Dunlop, a former Government press officer, has been involved in several property rezoning proposals. It is understood many of the City West investors also are behind the 438-acre Baldoyle rezoning proposal. [...]

If the rezoning proposal is successful it will allow up to 450 houses on each of the two 75-acre portions, a business park on 18 acres and the remainder reserved for a golf course and amenity use.

However, the consortium is unlikely to purchase the entire tract of land, as the open space is non-profitable and will require costly maintenance, with a poor return.

The company could exercise its option to buy only the 150-acre residential section of the land at £20,000 an acre, or £3m for the entire tract.

The same land's true market value, with planning for houses, is worth about £100,000 per acre, or £15m for the 150 acres, creating a profit of more than £10m before any development takes place there.

Many local residents also are opposing the rezoning and will picket the council chamber today in advance of the 10am meeting.

The motion to rezone the land is being put forward by Liam Creaven (FF) and Michael Joe Cosgrave (FG).

3.41 Mr Dunlop referred in evidence to the adverse effect that the publication of this newspaper article had on the rezoning prospects for the Baldoyle lands. He agreed that the release of this story could not have been with any intention other than that of damaging the prospects of the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion. It had the effect that somebody clearly desired, namely, it just torpedoed the whole exercise. Mr Dunlop said that he learned of the story when he received a telephone call from Mr Lawlor while driving past the Gresham Hotel on 27 April 1993. As a damage limitation exercise, Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor thereupon decided to have the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion deferred.

3.42 Mr Dunlop advised Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven of the decision to defer their rezoning motion to another date.

3.43 The minutes of the Special Meeting of Dublin County Council held on 27 April 1993 recorded, inter alia, as follows:

Councillors M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven indicated a wish to postpone discussion. They were asked to clarify the matter which they wished to have deferred. Councillor M.J. Cosgrave indicated that he asked to have Motion 14(5)(G)(ii) only deferred.

It was indicated to the meeting that if such a motion were moved and passed Motion 14(5)(G)(i) in the name of Councillor Healy would remain on the agenda.

It was proposed by Councillor M.J. Cosgrave, seconded by Councillor Creaven:

‘That Motion No. 14(5)(G)(ii) and the proposed amendment thereto be deferred for further consideration to a date not later than 15th May, 1993.’

A discussion followed to which Councillors Maher, Malone, M.J. Cosgrave, Healy, O’Halloran, Coffey, Barrett, Sargent, Gilmore, S. Ryan, Quinn, Tipping, Boland, Doohan, Higgins and Cass contributed. The Manager advised the members that in the interests of completing the review of the Development Plan that the motion to defer consideration of Motion 14(5)(G)(ii) should not be passed. Councillor Healy advised the meeting that he did not wish to have Motion 14(5)(G)(i) deferred. The Manager advised the members that the tradition of the Council was that if a councillor moved a motion, it should not be deferred if he dissented. Before the vote was taken it was indicated to the members that in the event of the motion being passed, the motion being proposed by Councillor Healy, seconded by Councillor Gordon 14(5)(G)(i), would remain to be considered.

The motion proposed by Councillor M.J. Cosgrave, seconded by Councillor Creaven to defer Motion 14(5)(G)(ii) was put and on a division the voting resulted as follows:

FOR: Thirty-seven (37)

AGAINST: Thirty-three (33)

ABSTENTIONS: Nil (0)

3.44 Once the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion 14(5)(G)(i) had been deferred, the only motion affecting lands at Baldoyle that remained on the Council agenda on 27 April 1993 was the Healy ‘green belt’ motion 14(5)(i).

3.45 Before the Healy ‘green belt’ motion was put to a vote, a further motion was proposed by Cllr John O’Halloran and seconded by Cllr Liam T Cosgrave seeking:

‘That decisions relating to the Baldoyle/Portmarnock area be deferred until a site meeting is held in that area to allow all councillors view lands proposed for re-zoning.’

3.46 The objective of bringing this motion was apparently to have the Healy ‘green belt’ motion deferred, just as the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion had been deferred some minutes earlier.

3.47 Cllr O’Halloran could not explain to the Tribunal exactly why he brought this motion. It may have been because of the debate that was taking place at the time. He suggested as a possible reason that he may have thought it a good idea for people to hear the lands being discussed. He had no recollection of discussing the matter with Mr Dunlop. He may have met Mr Dunlop, but certainly not about Baldoyle. He denied having an appreciation at the time of the adverse consequences for the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion of the Healy ‘green belt’ motion being passed, and communicating or attempting to communicate that appreciation to Mr Dunlop.

3.48 Cllr Liam T Cosgrave did not remember Mr Dunlop being present at the Council’s special Meeting on 27 April 1993. He did not recall Mr Dunlop making any contact with him either before or at this meeting with a view to influencing his vote in any particular way, and he had no recollection of discussing any of the affairs of the day with Mr Dunlop at that time.

3.49 In his Statement to the Tribunal dated November 2006, Mr Dunlop stated that Cllr O'Halloran, on his own initiative, proposed the deferral of decisions relating to the Baldoyle/Portmarnock area until after a site visit had taken place. He also stated that he had a brief discussion with Cllr O'Halloran on the margins of the Council meeting on 27 April 1993 when Cllr O'Halloran pointed out the folly of allowing matters to proceed without his motion, the likelihood being that the Healy green belt motion might succeed.

3.50 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop explained that he did not have a recollection of directing Cllr O'Halloran or Cllr Liam T Cosgrave to put in their deferral motion on 27 April 1993. He thought that Cllr O'Halloran, on his own initiative, seeing what was occurring on the floor, very sharply and intuitively saw what was going to happen and tried to obviate it.

3.51 Less definite in later evidence, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he could not say definitively that he actually generated that motion with both Cllr O'Halloran and Cllr Liam T Cosgrave. He certainly had conversations with them but he believed it was Cllr O'Halloran's own initiative to propose the motion.

3.52 The Tribunal was satisfied, however, that the O'Halloran/Liam T Cosgrave motion was proposed by the two councillors at the instigation of Mr Dunlop.

3.53 This deferral motion was, however, ruled out of order by the acting chairperson of Dublin County Council, Cllr Therese Ridge,¹⁰ on the advice of the County Manager, Mr Smyth.

3.54 In these circumstances, the Healy 'green belt' motion 14(5)(i) proposing that 'Dublin County Council hereby resolves that all land zoned B & G on the Draft Plan between Baldoyle and Portmarnock retain this zoning' was put to a vote and passed with 43 councillors voting in favour, 3 voting against and 23 abstentions.

3.55 As recorded in the minutes of this Special Meeting on 27 April 1993, the deferred M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion fell as a result of the passing of the Healy 'green belt' motion, and the County Manager advised the councillors accordingly.

¹⁰Cllr Ridge was acting chairperson of Dublin County Council for approximately the first half of 1993, following the appointment of the previous chairperson, Cllr Eithne Fitzgerald, as Minister of State in the 'Rainbow Coalition' Government.

3.56 This outcome took the promoters of the Baldoyle rezoning motion by surprise. Mr Dunlop said in evidence on Day 704:

'And obviously none of us and I could easily blame somebody but I won't, I'm including myself. That none of us spotted the procedural aspect of if you, if you withdrew the motion that another motion that existed on the order paper would have to be taken. And once that became clear in the chamber as a result of the Manager highlighting it, chaos ensued because people, I did not have an opportunity, even though I was there, to say to people we have to re-strategise. Let's get out of here or let's call an adjournment of the meeting or whatever. But once that motion of David Healy's was on the order paper, to actually deconstruct the whole aspect of a rezoning in Baldoyle, that had to be taken into account. Now, in fairness, the Manager pointed that out.'

3.57 Mr Dunlop also said:

'I could blame people who were on the floor, on the floor that they weren't nifty enough on their feet as to how the procedural issue should be dealt with. That's retrospective judgement.'

3.58 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that if there had been no newspaper article on 27 April 1993, it was his expectation that the Healy 'green belt' motion would have been defeated and that the M.J. Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion (as amended with a limitation of the housing to 450 in Baldoyle and 450 in Portmarnock), would have attracted sufficient councillor support that day to have ensured its passing.¹¹

3.59 Mr Dunlop's telephone records on 27 April 1993 indicated attempts to contact him after the Council meeting by Mr Lawlor, Mr Hickey, Cllr Ridge, Cllr Hand and Mr John Gore-Grimes.

THE ACTIONS OF MR DUNLOP, MR LAWLOR AND OTHERS FOLLOWING THE SPECIAL MEETING OF 27 APRIL 1993 AND RELATED EVENTS

3.60 The unsatisfactory outcome of the Council Special Meeting on 27 April 1993 (from the perspective of Mr Dunlop's and the other promoters of the Baldoyle rezoning project), and the unwelcome newspaper article were matters which needed urgent attention. A two pronged approach was embarked upon on the part of Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor, Mr Byrne and his legal advisors which involved liaising with one another and contact organised by Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor with a number of councillors, the County Council chairperson and Council officials, all with a view to undoing the successful Healy 'green belt' motion.

¹¹Mr Dunlop testified that up to that point in time the project had widespread support from councillors, not least because of his own association with the project.

3.61 Mr John Gore-Grimes said in evidence that some of these actions were undertaken with a view, if it were to prove necessary, to challenging in the courts the decisions made in the Council on 27 April 1993.

3.62 On 30 April 1993, the Irish Independent published what was, in effect, an apology to Davy Stockbrokers and certain of the individuals identified in its article of 27 April 1993 as the holders of an option in relation to lands at Baldoyle, as follows:

Land re-zoning: an apology

IN AN article on the Baldoyle land re-zoning by Clodhna O'Donoghue, our Property Editor, published last Tuesday, we stated that Davy Stockbrokers and other high profile businessmen had, subject to re-zoning, an option to purchase part or all of the land for around £20,000 an acre.

Martin Naughton and Lochlann Quinn of Glen Dimplex, as well as Yeoman International's Paul Coulson, were named, as members of a consortium. They have informed us that they were not potential investors in the scheme and we unreservedly apologise for any upset caused to them in a personal or business capacity.

We would also like to make it clear that it was Davy-Hickey, the property arm of the stockbroking company Davys that had expressed an interest in the development but only if it was re-zoned. Neither Davy Stockbrokers nor Davy-Hickey were prepared to get involved in the re-zoning process.

3.63 The contents of that published apology notwithstanding, and in particular the reference it made to Davy Hickey Properties becoming involved only if the lands were rezoned, Mr Dunlop stated in evidence that between March 1993 and 27 April 1993, Mr Hickey and (probably) Mr Shubotham were kept apprised by him of all aspects of the rezoning process. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that at all relevant times he kept Mr Hickey and (probably), Mr Shubotham 'in the loop' regarding the rezoning process.¹²

¹² On 29 and 30 April 1993 Mr Hickey made contact with Mr Dunlop's office.

THE O'HALLORAN/GILBRIDE MOTION AND THE EVENTS IN THE COUNTY COUNCIL ON 4 MAY 1993 AND 6 MAY 1993

3.64 Between 27 April 1993 and the 4 May 1993 Mr Dunlop reprised the proposal put forward in the motion brought by Cllrs O'Halloran and Liam T. Cosgrave, but ruled out of order on 27 April 1993, for a site meeting to be held in the Baldoyle/Portmarnock area before any decisions relating to lands proposed for rezoning in that area were made by the Council.

3.65 To this end a motion and a letter were drafted in Mr Dunlop's office, the results of a combined effort on the part of Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and Cllr. O'Halloran. The letter, signed by Cllr O'Halloran and the motion, signed by Cllrs O'Halloran and Gilbride, were furnished to the chairperson of the Council (Cllr Ridge), on 4 May 1993. The letter from Cllr O'Halloran read as follows:

Dear Chairperson,

I formally request you to bring this letter and the motion which accompanies it, to the attention of today's meeting of the Council called to continue the review of the County Development Plan.

On Tuesday, 27th April last I proposed a motion which was duly seconded that a site meeting be held on the lands between Baldoyle and Portmarnock (the subject of Motions Nos. '5(i)' and '5(G)(ii)' as amended) PRIOR to any decision being taken on the future uses of these lands. This motion is similar to the motions taken with regard to the lands at Carrickmines and in the Liffey Valley.

On the advice of the Manager you refused to put my motion to the Council for a vote thereby denying my right, under this Council's Standing Orders, to have my motion debated and decided upon.

I believe that this refusal was a serious breach of the Council Standing Orders and as such calls into question the validity of the meeting and the decisions taken.

In support of my claim that your decision was in breach of Standing Orders I would refer you to a similar motion to defer consideration of a duly proposed item on the agenda of last Thursday's meeting 29th April, 1993 of the Draft Development Plan Review which, having first been ruled out of order, was subsequently taken and voted upon when the ruling was challenged and the relevant Standing Order quoted and upheld.

I therefore request you, as chairperson, to put the attached motion to this morning's meeting...'

3.66 The motion, signed by Cllrs O'Halloran and Gilbride, proposed the following:

That Dublin County Council hereby resolves that a site meeting be held on the lands between Baldoyle and Portmarnock, the subject of Motions Nos. 5 (i) & 5 (G) (ii) (as amended) on the Draft Development Plan Review agenda, PRIOR to any decision regarding the future uses of these lands and that a full report be made to the appropriate Development Plan meeting.

3.67 At the Special Meeting of Dublin County Council held on 4 May 1993, the O'Halloran/Gilbride motion was adjourned for further consideration to 6 May 1993.

3.68 Aside from the efforts being made by Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor to have Cllrs O'Halloran and Gilbride challenge the procedural rulings made by the chairperson of the Council on 27 April 1993, Mr Byrne obtained an opinion from Counsel (which Mr Dunlop had in his possession by 6 May 1993) to the effect that the Council had been in error in allowing Cllr Healy's 'green belt' motion to proceed on 27 April 1993 once the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion had been deferred. Counsel expressed the opinion that the O'Halloran/L T Cosgrave motion proposed on 27 April 1993, seeking the deferral of all decisions relating to the Baldoyle/Portmarnock area pending a site visit by councillors should have been allowed to have been put to a vote.

3.69 Mr Dunlop's evidence was that he advised Cllr Ridge of the substance of the Counsel's opinion obtained by Mr Byrne before the Special Meeting of the Council on 6 May 1993 had taken place.

3.70 In a letter to Cllr Ridge dated 5 May 1993, the County Manager repeated the advice he had provided on 27 April 1993 that the motion proposed by Cllr O'Halloran on that date was out of order. In a further letter to Cllr Ridge dated 6 May 1993 (following her receipt of Cllr O'Halloran's letter dated 4 May 1993 with the attached motion), the Manager again reaffirmed this advice.

3.71 At the Special Meeting of the Council held on 6 May 1993, Cllrs O'Halloran and Gilbride sought to amend the wording of their motion adjourned from 4 May 1993 by adding the words 'the site visit to take place on Tuesday 18th May 1993.'

3.72 Once again the Manager repeated his earlier advice (provided originally at the Special Meeting of the Council on 27 April 1993 and repeated in his letters to Cllr Ridge dated 5 May 1993 and 6 May 1993) that the deferral / site visit motion was out of order.

3.73 Following a short adjournment due to disorder in the Council chamber, the Manager again advised that the motions before the meeting were out of order and Cllr Ridge informed the councillors that:

‘...because there was a doubt as to the correctness of her decision when ruling the motion proposed by Councillor O’Halloran, seconded by Councillor L. Cosgrave, out of order at the meeting on 27/4/1993 she was ruling the motions now before the Council in order but that that all decisions taken in relation to this matter would be referred to the Law Agent for advice.’

3.74 On a vote taken by direction of Cllr Ridge, the following amendment to their motion adjourned from the Special Meeting on 4 May 1993, proposed by Cllr O’Halloran and seconded by Cllr Gilbride, was passed by 33 votes in favour and 4 against with 1 abstention: ‘That the motion be amended by the addition of the words ‘the site visit to take place on Tuesday May 18th 1993.’

3.75 The substantive O’Halloran/Gilbride deferral motion, as amended, was then put to a vote and carried by 34 votes in favour and 4 against, with 1 abstention.

3.76 As a result of this vote and subject to the ruling of the Council’s Law Agent, a fresh opportunity presented itself for the Baldoyle rezoning motion to be considered on its merits by the councillors. The decision to allow this motion was controversial.

3.77 The Council Special Meeting held on 6 May 1993 was reported in the Evening Herald newspaper on 7 May 1993 as follows:

A controversial bid to build on the Baldoyle Green Belt has been resurrected – because of a row over procedures at a Co. Council meeting.

Last week, councillors voted to preserve the entire green stretch between Baldoyle and Portmarnock, effectively vetoing a plan to develop part of the 450 acre site for five years.

But now the Council’s law agent is to decide if a vote – taken yesterday – to hold a Council meeting on the site overturns the Green Belt decision.

The vote could give a second chance to the plan by Pennine Holdings Ltd, a consortium of business people headed by former Government press secretary Frank Dunlop, to build on the land, which includes the former Baldoyle racecourse.

Yesterday's shock vote could put the plan back on the agenda because it specifically declared that the site meeting should take place prior to any decision on the plan being taken. The on-site meeting is scheduled for May 18 [...]

The surprise turnaround came at an unruly meeting which saw a number of brief adjournments before Labour, Democratic Left, the Greens and the Progressive Democrats walked out in protest at what they said was an 'illegal vote' [...]

THE CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN COUNCILLORS M J COSGRAVE, CREAVEN AND RIDGE

3.78 The Tribunal was satisfied that arising from the outcome of the Council Special Meeting on 6 May 1993, Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor, together with Mr John Gore-Grimes, were instrumental in devising a further strategy in the attempt to secure the reinstatement of the Baldoyle rezoning proposal before the Council, as had been achieved, albeit provisionally, on 6 May 1993.

3.79 Mr Dunlop's telephone records indicated that at 3.25 pm on 6 May 1993 he received a telephone call to his office from Mr Shubotham. Mr Shubotham's evidence was that he did not have a memory of making this call or of what its subject matter was, but nevertheless he was certain that 'the substantive nature of it was not to do with Baldoyle.' Mr Dunlop did not give evidence about this telephone call in particular, but his earlier evidence was that there was no circumstance in which he would not have discussed the outcome of the Council Special Meeting on 27 April 1993 with Mr Shubotham and Mr Hickey when both of them were recorded as having telephoned him that afternoon. The Tribunal concluded that whatever the purposes of this telephone call from Mr Shubotham on 6 May 1993 might have been, they at least included his wish to ascertain what had transpired at the Council Special Meeting on that date.

3.80 The strategy being devised by Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor as of 7 May 1993 was based on the Counsel's opinion obtained by Mr Byrne, which declared erroneous the Council chairperson's decisions on 27 April 1993 to rule out of order the O'Halloran/Liam T. Cosgrave deferral/site meeting motion, and to allow the Healy 'green belt' motion to proceed.

3.81 Mr Dunlop said in evidence that arising from a meeting between himself, Mr Lawlor and Mr John Gore-Grimes on either 7 or 8 May 1993, it was agreed that Mr Lawlor and himself would draft a series of letters with the primary objective of ensuring that the Baldoyle rezoning motion would be reinstated for consideration by the councillors.

3.82 There was to be a letter from Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven (the signatories to the Baldoyle rezoning motion), to Cllr Ridge, chairperson of the Council, together with her reply. In addition, there was to be a letter, also from Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven, to the County Manager, dealing with more technical matters. This was to issue at the same time as their letter to Cllr Ridge.

3.83 With the exception of Mr Smith (the County Manager), the putative authors and recipients of these letters all featured in Mr Dunlop's diary on 10 May 1993. There was an entry for the return of Cllr Ridge from Paris, and there were entries for a meeting with Mr Lawlor at 10.00 am, and a meeting with Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven at 12.45 pm. The Tribunal was satisfied that by the time Mr Dunlop met with Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven on 10 May 1993, Mr Lawlor and himself had (over the course of the weekend), drafted letters in their names addressed to Cllr Ridge and to the County Manager and that they had also drafted the reply from Cllr Ridge.

3.84 An attendance of Mr John Gore-Grimes dated 11 May 1993 headed 'Re: Endcamp and Pennine' referred to a consultation with Counsel on that date at which Counsel approved the three draft letters, and to a subsequent meeting with Mr Lawlor and Mr Dunlop at which the letters were approved.

3.85 The Tribunal had sight of two drafts of the letter to Cllr Ridge in the name of Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave/Creaven, including an unsigned copy, typed on the notepaper of the Fingal Committee of Dublin County Council.¹³

3.86 The Tribunal was satisfied that the unsigned draft was a replica of the letter which was actually sent to Cllr Ridge in the names of Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven. That letter dated 12 May 1993 read as follows:

Dear Chairperson,

You will recall that at the meeting of the Draft Development Plan Review, held on 27th April, 1993 I proposed that the motion, No. 5 (G) (ii), in our joint names – Councillor Michael Joe Cosgrave and Councillor Liam Creaven – be deferred for consideration and decision to a date not later than 15th May 1993. This deferral motion was put to the members, voted upon and carried by 37 votes to 34.¹⁴ Implicit in this deferral motion was that no further discussion, consideration or decision could take place or be taken regarding the specific lands contained in motion 5(G)(ii). Notwithstanding this you proceeded to take motion 5(i) in the name of Councillor David Healy. Given that Councillor Healy's motion referred to 'all land zoned B & G on the Draft Plan between Baldoyle and Portmarnock' should you not have advised the members that following on the decision to defer consideration of our motion, 5 (G) (ii), and the specific lands referred to therein, that an amendment be moved to Councillor Healy's motion excluding the specific lands referred to in our motion? If, however, the lands referred to in Councillor Healy's motion, and presumably outlined in red on an attached map, coincided exactly with the lands referred to our motion should you in accordance with Standing Orders, not have taken Councillor Healy's motion before ours?

Could you confirm that our interpretation of Standing Orders is correct? Specifically, therefore could you confirm to us that:

(a) Councillor Healy's motion, No. 5(i) should have been taken prior to our deferral motion.

(b) Had Standing Orders been adhered to and Councillor Healy's motion put to the members prior to ours the resulting vote would have had the following effect:

- if passed, Councillor Cosgrave's deferral motion could not have been taken;
- if defeated, Councillor Cosgrave's deferral motion would have been put to the members and when passed – given that we have concrete evidence of the voting intentions of the members, 37 to 34 – no decision could be taken regarding the lands referred to in motion No. 5 (G)(ii), until a date not later than 15th May, 1993.

We have written to the Manager requesting clarification on a number of important issues pertaining to the lands covered by our motion, No. 5 (G) (ii). We attach a copy of this letter for your information. Given the serious nature of the proposed land uses by the Corporation / Council of the Baldoyle lands, as outlined in our letter to the Manager, we are confident that you will agree, that the elected members and the residents of the area are entitled to be fully appraised of the local authorities intentions, and the implications thereof. In our view it is incumbent on the Manager to provide the elected members with a comprehensive report and slide presentation regarding the works on these lands scheduled for completion during the period 1994 - 1997 given that the current review, when adopted, will extend beyond this period.

We look forward to hearing from you in these matters.¹⁵

3.87 On Day 705 Mr Dunlop confirmed that the purpose of this letter was to ensure that the chairperson would confirm the accuracy of the Counsel's opinion obtained by Mr Byrne (which Mr Dunlop had in his possession and had discussed with Cllr Ridge), to the effect that under the Council's Standing Orders the chairperson's ruling of 27 April 1993 was erroneous.

3.88 Mr Dunlop confirmed that the purpose of the series of letters was 'an old civil service thing [...] to keep the file right', but also to prompt the chairperson to respond to the effect that the interpretation advised by Counsel was correct.

3.89 The Tribunal also had sight (from Mr Dunlop's Discovery) of a somewhat muddled draft of a letter which may have been the purported draft reply of Cllr Ridge to the letter from Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven.

The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's and Mr Lawlor's purpose in drafting Cllr Ridge's reply to the letter from Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven was to place on record her acknowledgment that she had made an error.

This draft letter (which Mr Dunlop maintained was not typed in his office, or with his typewriter) read as follows:

Draft letter

Michael Joe Cosgrave

cc. Councillor Liam Creaven

Dear Councillor

Following your query regarding the Council's decision on the 27th April regarding motions 5(G) I have already sought clarification from the Secretariat regarding the interpretation of Standing Orders and have been informed that motion 5(G) should have been taken first and as 5(1) was taken and carried by majority in the Council Chamber the lands associated with the submission, the subject of the deferral, [effectively] excluded from the taking of motion 5(G). I am consulting with the Manager as to how motion 5(i) deferred could be re-entered on the Order ¹⁵ There was no question but that the chairperson of the Council received this letter as reference is made to it in a further letter which was sent by Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Liam Creaven to the chairperson on 2 June 1993.

Paper for decision after the information it was sought on a separate letter to the Manager has been established.

As you are no doubt aware the Council's meeting on x date decided to carry out a site visit to the Baldoyle/Portmarnock area. After this site visit has been undertaken any information you have sought [clarification] the matter can be put before the Council for a full discussion and decision.

I trust the above clarifies your queries. [...]

3.90 Mr Dunlop did not believe that this was the letter which he and Mr Lawlor ultimately drafted for use by Cllr Ridge, although this draft, he conceded, appeared to contain, in principle, an indication of what was expected to happen within the Council after the proposed site visit had taken place, namely that the M J Cosgrave/ Creaven rezoning motion would be placed back onto the Council agenda. Mr Dunlop stated that this was the 'key' objective of the exercise.

3.91 Mr Dunlop believed that he personally delivered to Cllr Ridge the draft of her reply to the letter from Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven.

3.92 Cllr Ridge maintained in evidence that at all times throughout the course of the procedural controversy which developed in April /May 1993 in relation to the Baldoyle lands she had acted appropriately in her capacity as chairperson of the Council. While she acknowledged that Mr Dunlop had lobbied her to support the rezoning, she denied knowledge of Mr Dunlop's involvement in the drafting of letters to her, or of his drafting a letter for her to issue in reply. She acknowledged her long-standing friendly relationship with Mr Dunlop (as far back as the early 1980s), and confirmed that she used Mr Dunlop's office facilities when required. Mr Dunlop's office telephone records indicated frequent telephone contact between them in the period 8 March to 18 May 1993 amounting to 21 telephone calls. Mr Dunlop's diary also referred to a pre-arranged meeting with Cllr Ridge on 18 May 1993.

3.93 Irrespective of whether Cllr Ridge replied to the letter from Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven in the terms proposed by Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor's draft, the Tribunal was satisfied to accept Mr Dunlop's evidence that a draft response was provided to Cllr Ridge.

3.94 It was apparent from a letter sent by Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven to Cllr Ridge on 2 June 1993 (again a letter drafted by Mr Dunlop and possibly Mr Lawlor), that Cllr Ridge did in fact respond to their letter dated 12 May 1993. However, it appeared unlikely to the Tribunal that the response she provided on 25 May 1993¹⁶ was in the precise terms of the draft, as that draft had envisaged her responding prior to the proposed site visit by councillors to the Baldoyle lands on 18 May 1993.

3.95 The Tribunal did not have sight of Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven's original letter dated 12 May 1993, or of Cllr Ridge's reply thereto, as it was informed that the Council's secretarial file was missing.

THE EXIT OF MESSRS HICKEY AND SHUBOTHAM/DAVY HICKEY PROPERTIES FROM THE PENNINE OPTION AND THE REZONING PROCESS

3.96 In April / May 1993, Davy Stockbrokers were the stockbrokers appointed by the Government for the sale of some twenty five million shares in Greencore Plc on behalf of the State. The Minister for Finance was informed by Davy's that these shares had been successfully placed with Irish and overseas investors but he was not informed that the directors of Davy's and companies connected to Davy's themselves controlled some IR£19m of these shares after the sale. This revelation caused dealing in the shares to be suspended and resulted in inquiries conducted by both the Irish Stock Exchange and the Attorney General. Media coverage in the first week of May 1993 in relation to the Greencore shares issue was highly critical of Davy's directors. On 7 May 1993 the Irish Times carried a series of articles outlining the origins of the controversy. In the course of one such article reference was made, inter alia, to Mr Shubotham and to Davy Hickey Properties, again described in that article as 'the property investment arm of Davy.' The article also stated:

Davy Hickey is developing the £60 million Newlands Business and Industrial Park. The 300 acres in the development are reported to have been bought for £4.5 million. The property development company had expressed an interest in the Pennine Holdings plan to build a major housing scheme on the old Baldoyle racecourse if it was rezoned. The rezoning, sought by the public relations consultant Mr Frank Dunlop was rejected by Dublin County Council.

3.97 Mr John Gore-Grimes' attendance on Counsel dated 11 May 1993 (at which the draft letters to be written by Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven and Cllr Ridge were approved) noted the following: 'Frank Dunlop is to remove Brendan Hickey and David Shoebottom [sic] from the Pennine Board. There is to be absolutely no conversation with the Press.'¹⁷

¹⁶ Reference was made to this reply in a letter from Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven on 2 June 1993

3.98 Mr Dunlop's diary for 10 May 1993 recorded a meeting with Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham. Mr Dunlop could not say what the purpose of this meeting was but he acknowledged that on the following day there was a discussion between himself, Mr John Gore-Grimes and Mr Lawlor (and possibly with Mr Byrne by telephone), about Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham's exit from the project to rezone and acquire the Pennine option lands. Mr Dunlop understood that 'in whatever capacity they were acting, Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham were no longer to be involved.'

3.99 Mr Dunlop stated in evidence that as of May 1993, Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham began to express serious doubts about their continued involvement in the proposal to rezone the lands. Their unease, Mr Dunlop stated, had commenced following the publication of the above mentioned article in the Irish Independent on 27 April 1993. Mr Dunlop suggested that both men had displayed 'unease' and 'angst', following this publication. The Tribunal was however satisfied that there was no evidence, as of that date, that Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham had resolved to cease their involvement with the Baldoyle project, other than to take action (which they did), to distance certain clients of Davy Stockbrokers, who had been named in the Irish Independent article, from the project.

3.100 It was Mr Dunlop's belief that two controversial issues, namely the Pennine rezoning fiasco and the 'Greencore' controversy were the factors which ultimately prompted the exit of Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham on 11 May 1993 from the Baldoyle project, although, according to Mr Dunlop, the 'Greencore' issue had not been mentioned in his presence by either Mr Hickey or Mr Shubotham.

3.101 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he could not rule out the possibility that, notwithstanding their imminent exit from the project, he discussed the strategies that he and Mr Lawlor were then putting in place in an attempt to resurrect the Baldoyle rezoning motion with Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham at that time.

3.102 In the course of their evidence, Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham denied that the controversy surrounding the Baldoyle rezoning attempt featured in their decision to cease involvement with that project. Essentially, the thrust of their evidence was that such involvement as they had had in the project had effectively ceased as early as October 1992. Mr Hickey maintained that as a result of a feasibility study it had become clear to himself and to Mr Shubotham that the project was not viable, and that it would not receive planning permission. Thus, his and Mr Shubotham's involvement (which, it was suggested, was in any event only going to take effect if rezoning/planning permission were likely), effectively ceased as of October 1992. Mr Shubotham, likewise told the Tribunal that he and Mr Hickey had pulled out of the Pennine option/Baldoyle rezoning project as of October / November 1992. Mr Shubotham described the Baldoyle project as 'dead in the water' by the end of 1992. No documentary evidence of the feasibility study referred to by Mr Hickey was provided to the Tribunal.

THE BALDOYLE REZONING PROJECT BETWEEN 6 MAY 1993 AND SEPTEMBER 1993

3.103 The lifeline given to the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion, by virtue of the decision of Cllr Ridge on 6 May 1993 to allow the O'Halloran/Gilbride site visit motion to be put to a vote (which it was and which was passed, subject to consideration by the Council's Law Agent), ultimately came to no avail. On 28 May 1993 councillors were circulated with a copy of a legal opinion procured by the Council's law agent, which confirmed (albeit for somewhat different reasons), the correctness of the original decision of 27 April 1993 to the effect that the O'Halloran/Liam T. Cosgrave site visit motion was out of order and which confirmed (again albeit for somewhat different reasons), that the approach which had been taken by the Manager was correct.

3.104 The consequences of that opinion were that the Healy 'green belt' motion, as passed on 27 April 1993, stood, as did the ruling on the same date that as a result of the success of the Healy motion, the M.J. Cosgrave/Creaven Baldoyle rezoning motion fell. This legal opinion effectively proved to be the death knell for the Baldoyle rezoning project.

3.105 Nothing came of a further and final effort to revive the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion in the form of a letter dated 2 June 1993 (drafted by Mr Dunlop), and sent by Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven to Cllr Ridge, in the following terms:

Dear Chairperson,

We wrote to you on 12th May last (copy attached) asking you to confirm our interpretation of Standing Orders in respect of the sequence of motions at the meeting of the Draft Development Plan Review held on 27th April 1993. You replied on 25th May saying that you had forwarded our letter to the manager for a response from the law agent. To date we have not received this response. In the interim however, a copy of the Opinion of Mr John Gallagher, S.C., with regard to questions he had been asked by the manager to advise upon has been made available to us. We note that although the date of this Opinion is 22nd May, 1993, it was not made available to the elected members until 28th May, 1993. It would appear also that this Opinion was available at the time of your acknowledgement and reply to us on 25th May, 1993.

In his Opinion Mr Gallagher states that he had been asked to advise on four questions, all of which ignored the substantive issue contained in our letter of the 12th May, namely whether our deferral motion, when passed by the elected members by 37 votes to 34, restricted any further consideration of the lands in question until a date not later than 15th May, 1993.

We would respectfully query why the law agent was not asked to adjudicate on this crucial matter and we therefore request you to have his response to the matter raised in our letter of 12th May last made available to the Council before 5.30pm tomorrow, 3rd June, 1993.

We have been denied the opportunity to have the Council consider in full the merits of our deferred motion addressing the neglect of the so-called green belt between Baldoyle and Portmarnock and we would request an early meeting with you to have this matter resolved amicably.

3.106 Notwithstanding the failed rezoning attempt and the exit of Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham/ Davy Hickey Properties from the project, it appeared that both Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor retained a belief that there remained some hope for the Baldoyle rezoning project during the currency of the Development Plan Review. This was evidenced by an attendance of Mr John Gore-Grimes on his colleague, Mr Anthony Gore-Grimes, dated 29 June 1993 as follows:

On this file we have all the matters to do with Dublin County Council and Pennine Holdings. Pennine Holdings (Frank Dunlop) now want to re-negotiate the option agreement by getting a longer term and by reducing money. I am fairly certain that John Byrne will not be interested in reducing the money but whether or not he would be prepared to extend the option date from the 21st January 1995 onwards is a matter for him. Frank Dunlop is to submit proposals and I doubt if I will get these before I go away but if I do I will deal with them. I feel that John will not be anxious to extend the proposals but the problem here is that Frank Dunlop feels that he is the key to the whole development of the site. We should know by October when the final plan comes out as to whether or not he is right. Basically, if the zoning is confirmed as amenity we are scuppered for a further five years. [Frank] remains reasonably confident however that he can turn this around but the problem is that much of the land that was available for the golf course will now be required by Dublin County Council for:

- a) Sewage Treatment Plant
- b) Sludge Treatment Plant
- c) Flood pools.

This has become a new political issue as a result of the flooding and the tragic death in Baldoyle recently. This is going to take up about 125 acres which would leave about 85 acres only for golf course. As you will know this is not sufficient. I am not exactly sure what Frank Dunlop is playing at but it seems to me that he is trying to increase the housing at the Portmarnock end significantly from 100 to say 200 houses and to wipe out any further development at the Baldoyle end other than the shopping centre and the housing that Kennedy is carrying out so that there would be sufficient land for a golf course at that end and for the County Council's requirements. I am not sure if this will work or what John Byrne thinks about it and Frank Dunlop and Liam Lawlor were in with me on the 28th of June but they both seemed to me to be speaking in riddles and were telling me half the story only. I think in reality the reason why half the story only was being told to me was that Frank Dunlop does not particularly trust Liam Lawlor and is very careful about what he says. You will have to deal with this in my absence.

3.107 Mr Dunlop said in evidence that his discussions with Mr Gore-Grimes in June 1993 were in the context of a possible opportunity for the lands to be rezoned during the review of the 1993 Development Plan by the soon to be established Fingal Council. On Day 705 Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well, I think basically that we are now in June of 1993. By the end of 1993 the plan is going to be finalised so there is no way that this matter is going to be dealt with in that context. By the 1st of January 1994 we are going to have a new Council. And that's going to be Fingal, in whose area this particular land lay. And the two councillors that had been the proposers and seconders of the motion, notwithstanding that any of the motions or documents generated in relation to it were generated by me, were councillors in that particular area. And if you reprise the vote pattern that took place, albeit some of them were abstentions, that you will see that there was a level of support for the project on an ongoing basis, even though it was expressed in some peculiar ways towards the end. By that I mean that people abstained rather than voted.'

MR DUNLOP'S PROPOSAL HOWEVER WAS NOT ACCEPTED
BY MR BYRNE.

3.108 The 'wrap up' Special Meeting of Dublin County Council on 29 September 1993 did not feature the Baldoyle lands (including the Pennine option lands). In the 1993 Development Plan adopted on 10 December 1993, the Baldoyle lands retained their B & G (green belt) zoning. The attempts to rezone the Baldoyle lands for development had failed.

3.109 Mr Sean Mulryan of Ballymore Homes in due course exercised the Pennine option acquired from Mr Dunlop/Pennine in April 1994, The lands were subsequently developed for residential use.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS ON THE RESPECTIVE INTERESTS OF MR HICKEY, MR SHUBOTHAM AND MR DUNLOP IN THE PENNINE OPTION
IN THE PERIOD FROM JANUARY 1991 TO MAY 1993

4.01 The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham that in the period 1991 to 1993, they or Davy Hickey Properties had no ultimate beneficial interest in the Pennine option.

4.02 The Tribunal was satisfied that a beneficial interest was held by Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham in the Pennine option for the following reasons:

- (i) The payment by Mr Shubotham of IR£5,000 for the Pennine option;
- (ii) The injection of funds into the project by the Eastview Partnership account and from accounts of Davy Hickey Properties (see below); and
- (iii) The involvement of Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham in discussions about a partnership agreement over a sixteen month period.

4.03 Equally, the Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop's claim that he had no beneficial interest in the Pennine option between January 1991 and May 1993. Notwithstanding the absence of evidence of any concluded partnership arrangement or agreement, the Tribunal was satisfied that he had, in that period, an arrangement, whether formalised or otherwise, whereby it was understood that he had a beneficial ownership in the Pennine option. In October/November 1991 Mr Dunlop, through his company Shefran, became a registered shareholder in Citywest. It was inconceivable to the Tribunal that in the period December 1991 to March 1993 when discussions about a partnership agreement in relation to the Pennine option lands were ongoing, that Mr Dunlop, given his own admission of his expectation of a beneficial involvement in the Pennine option lands, did not have an agreement with Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham which acknowledged and ensured his beneficial interest in the project.

4.04 The Tribunal was also assisted in reaching the foregoing conclusion by the content of a memorandum prepared by Mr Kay of AIB on 20 May 1992 which recorded Mr Dunlop advising AIB that he had an 8% shareholding in the Pennine option¹⁸ (and which appeared to tally with Mr Lawlor's understanding, as advised to the Tribunal, that Mr Dunlop's interest was to be 'in the region of 10%').¹⁹ While the Tribunal could not determine with any degree of certainty the extent of Mr Dunlop's agreed, intended or anticipated beneficial interest, it was satisfied, as it was in the case of Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham, that all three individuals, were in the period 1991 / 1993 the beneficial owners (possibly with others) of Pennine's shares.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS ON THE INVOLVEMENT OF MR HICKEY AND MR SHUBOTHAM IN THE ATTEMPT TO REZONE THE PENNINE OPTION LANDS

4.05 On the evidence before it, the Tribunal was satisfied that in the period January 1991 to May 1993 there was ongoing and significant involvement on the part of Messrs Hickey and Shubotham in the attempt to rezone the Pennine option lands. Evidence to the Tribunal indicated that a number of professional third parties associated with the rezoning attempt were funded from the Eastview Partnership account (an account under the control of Mr Shubotham), and from accounts of Davy Hickey Properties. That expenditure (including a payment of IR£10,000 to Mr Dunlop's company, Shefran, on 6 January 1992), totalled almost IR£50,000, and included the IR£5,000 Pennine option consideration payment for which Davy Hickey Properties assumed responsibility.²⁰ The evidence also established substantial contact between Mr Dunlop, Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham in the period March to May 1993, the most crucial period in the rezoning attempt.

4.06 The Tribunal therefore rejected the explanations tendered by Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham for their contact with Mr Dunlop at this time, namely that it largely related to Citywest issues. As persons who were to beneficially share in the Pennine option lands, once acquired, it was entirely logical and probable that Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham, during the crucial rezoning period, would have ongoing contact with Mr Dunlop – the individual who from late 1991 to May 1993 was both the public face of Pennine and the person who was largely charged with the task of securing the rezoning of the lands.

¹⁸ Mr Dunlop said that he did not believe that he said this to Mr Kay

¹⁹ Mr Dunlop said that he never discussed shareholding percentages with Mr Lawlor.

²⁰ This payment was made from a personal account of Mr Shubotham in January 1991 but was attributed as an expense of Davy Hickey Properties Ltd in a ledger compiled on 18 August 1993.

4.07 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham, in the course of their evidence, went to considerable lengths in their attempts to distance themselves from the Baldoyle rezoning project as it evolved from late 1992 to May 1993. Their respective testimonies did not reflect their true involvement throughout this period. The Tribunal believed that this was indeed an attempt on their part to distance themselves from actions in respect of which Mr Dunlop has apprised the Tribunal and testified to, namely Mr Dunlop's contention that he made payments to a number of councillors in connection with the Baldoyle rezoning project. Moreover, the Tribunal concluded that their claimed date of the cessation of their interest or involvement in the Pennine option lands was in no small way connected to their resolve to distance themselves from any connection between them and the payments made to Shefran in the period June 1991 to March 1993, totalling IR£62,500 as part of the rezoning effort.

4.08 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham, together with Mr Dunlop, were co-adventurers in the endeavour to overturn the B & G (green belt) zoning which attached to the Pennine option lands, and that all three did so in their capacity as beneficial owners of Pennine, the entity beneficially entitled to the Pennine option.

THE ROLE PLAYED BY MR JOHN BYRNE IN THE REZONING ATTEMPT

5.01 In a statement furnished to the Tribunal dated 29 September 2006, Mr Byrne stated as follows:

I had no involvement whatsoever in the efforts by Pennine Holdings Limited to achieve their aims but I am aware that they ran into difficulties with the local authority as the local authority wanted to acquire a substantial part of the option lands for the purpose of erecting a sewage treatment plant, sludge treatment plant and creating a flood plain.

5.02 The Tribunal rejected this assertion on the part of Mr Byrne. Throughout the rezoning process Mr Byrne involved himself in its progress and to this end liaised with Mr Hickey, Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and with his own solicitor on an ongoing basis. Mr Byrne's interest in the rezoning process was significant, particularly given that the Pennine option would not be exercised unless the Pennine option lands were rezoned, and planning permission obtained. Mr Byrne's actions, like those of Mr Dunlop, Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham, were undertaken with a view to ensuring that the 250 acres of the Pennine option lands (in addition to the remaining 150 acres of the Baldoyle lands) would be rezoned. Mr Byrne did not give sworn evidence to the Tribunal because of ill health.

THE PAYMENTS MADE TO FRANK DUNLOP AND ASSOCIATES AND / OR SHEFRAN

6.01 In his statement of November 2006, Mr Dunlop listed as relevant to the Tribunal a number of 'invoices raised and payments actually received by Frank Dunlop, Frank Dunlop & Associates and/or Shefran Limited with and from DHPL or any associated company, Mr Brendan Hickey, or Mr David Shubotham personally in the period 1990 to December 1993.'

6.02 In chronological order, these were as follows:

- 1) A payment of IR£20,000 in June 1991 invoiced by and paid to Shefran , attributed by Mr Dunlop as relating to the Citywest lands.
- 2) A payment in September 1991 of IR£862, attributed to Citywest, on foot of a Frank Dunlop and Associates invoice in the sum of £861.65 furnished to Davy Hickey Properties.
- 3) A payment of IR£178 in January 1992, although Mr Dunlop stated he had no recollection of same and had no copy invoice.
- 4) A payment of IR£10,000 relating to the Baldoyle Eastview lands invoiced by and paid to Shefran in January 1992.
- 5) A payment of IR£177.75 on 10 March 1992, on foot of a Frank Dunlop and Associates invoice.
- 6) A payment of IR£598 on 27 March 1992, although Mr Dunlop stated that he had no recollection of same and had no copy invoice.
- 7) A payment of IR£1,530 in May 1992 invoiced by and paid to Shefran and attributed to Baldoyle/Eastview.
- 8) A payment of IR£2,500 in August 1992 invoiced by and paid to Shefran by Newlands Industrial Park Ltd, and attributed to Citywest.
- 9) A payment of IR£333.55 on 27 August 1992 by Mr Shubotham personally, attributed by Mr Dunlop as a Citywest payment.
- 10) A payment of IR£10,000 in November 1992 invoiced by and paid to Shefran attributed by Mr Dunlop to the Citywest lands.
- 11) A payment of IR£20,000 'sometime in 1993' by Mr Shubotham personally, attributed by Mr Dunlop to the Citywest lands.
- 12) A payment of IR£150 to Mr Dunlop on 10 March 1994, attributed by Mr Dunlop to a Fianna Fail fundraiser.
- 13) An invoice of Frank Dunlop and Associates in the sum of IR£5,787.51 dated 28 April 1993 and furnished to Davy Hickey Properties.
- 14) A payment of IR£3,160.74 on foot of a Frank Dunlop and Associates invoice dated 24 August 1993.
- 15) A payment of IR£625 on 20 August 1993, in part discharge of a Frank Dunlop and Associates invoice for IR£1,917.10.

- 16) An invoice of Frank Dunlop and Associates for IR£1,200 dated January 1994 in respect of Citywest.
- 17) A payment of IR£386 on 24 May 1995, on foot of a Frank Dunlop and Associates invoice for IR£438.49, attributed to Citywest.

6.03 In his statement to the Tribunal of November 2006, Mr Dunlop also referred to his belief that he received an initial ‘token fee’ from Citywest for his work on that project. In evidence Mr Dunlop suggested that his overall fee for the work he carried out in relation to the Citywest material contravention vote in or about March 1991 was IR£75,000, which he maintained was converted in October/November 1991 into an equity shareholding in Citywest, by way of his participation in a partnership agreement. Mr Dunlop’s equity shareholding in that venture was taken in the name of Shefran.

THE PURPOSE OF THE FIVE PAYMENTS MADE TO MR DUNLOP/SHEFRAN BETWEEN JUNE 1991 AND MARCH 1993

6.04 In relation to the payments Mr Dunlop, via Frank Dunlop and Associates and/or Shefran, received from Davy Hickey Properties and/or entities or individuals associated with that company, including the Eastview partnership account, and from companies associated with Citywest, the Tribunal focussed on a series of five round figure payments, totalling IR£62,500, made to Shefran in the period 1991 to 1993. These included IR£20,000 paid on 6 June 1991, IR£10,000 paid on 6 January 1992, IR£2,500 paid on approximately 6 August 1992, IR£10,000 paid on 11 November 1992 and IR£20,000 paid on 16 March 1993.

6.05 In his statement of November 2006, and in the course of his evidence, Mr Dunlop attributed only one of these Shefran payments, namely the payment of IR£10,000 made on 6 January 1992, as relating to the Baldoyle lands, and he maintained that the other four Shefran payments had been made in connection with Citywest.

6.06 In the course of his evidence in this module, Mr Dunlop, as he had in other modules, acknowledged that the primary purpose of his use of Shefran was to generate funds for his confluence of funds or ‘stash of cash’, in effect the funds he had available to him in the years 1991 to 1993 and from which he made payments to politicians, including councillors. Mr Dunlop acknowledged that Shefran was not a trading company and was not registered for VAT. (However, see also “The Shefran Payments” in Chapter 2 – Part 5)

6.07 With regard to the above recorded five Shefran payments, Mr Dunlop acknowledged that while Shefran was identified as the payee in the records of the donors of the five cheques, invoices were not generated for each of these payments. On their receipt by him, the cheques were invariably cashed, pursuant to the arrangement he had with Mr John Ahern of AIB. The thrust of Mr Dunlop's evidence, over a series of modules, was that insofar as any of the encashed proceeds of Shefran cheques were lodged, such lodgements were almost exclusively made to his 'war chest' accounts.

6.08 Against this backdrop, the Tribunal examined the five Shefran payments totalling IR£62,500 made to Mr Dunlop during the currency of his, Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham's interest in the Pennine option and the rezoning project.

THE PAYMENT OF IR£20,000 TO SHEFRAN BY NEWLANDS INDUSTRIAL PARK ON 6 JUNE 1991

6.09 In his statement of November 2006, Mr Dunlop described the background to this payment as follows:

This was invoiced and paid to Shefran Limited. The monies related to the Citywest lands. This cheque was either cashed or lodged and withdrawn and formed part of the confluence of funds available for distribution to Councillors.

6.10 Mr Dunlop did not refer to this payment in the section of his statement to the Tribunal dated October 2000 headed 'Baldoyle/Eastview.'

6.11 The cheque payments book/ledger of Newlands Industrial Park (a company associated with Citywest) recorded payment on 6 June 1991 of IR£20,000 to 'F. Dunlop & Ass. PR(fees).' A cheque in the sum of IR£20,000 was debited to the company's Bank of Ireland Private Banking account on the same date. While thus recorded as a payment to Frank Dunlop and Associates in the cheques payment book, the Tribunal was satisfied (and indeed this was not disputed), that the cheque was in fact made payable to Shefran. Evidence of this fact was found in a Citywest document dated 30 June 1992 entitled 'Reconciliation of Public Relations' which listed a total of IR£21,638 as paid to Mr Dunlop/Frank Dunlop and Associates/Shefran in the period 27 March 1991 to 31 March 1992 and which described the IR£20,000 payment on 6 June 1991 as having been made to 'F Dunlop and Associates(Shefran).'

6.12 In a further undated document recording expenditure on the part of the Citywest Partnership, under the heading 'OTHER OPERATING EXPENSES', the IR£21,638 figure listed under 1992 was again described as 'Public Relations.'

6.13 In a ledger of their expenditure associated with Mr Dunlop (prepared in 2000 for submission to the Tribunal), Davy Hickey Properties listed the IR£20,000 payment to Shefran on 6 June 1991 (together with the IR£10,000 Shefran payment on 11 November 1992) under the heading ‘City West Payments to Frank Dunlop/Shefran Limited identified as Political Contributions.’

6.14 The document stated that the said funds were paid to Mr Dunlop to facilitate political contributions to ‘various elected representatives’ at the time of the Local Election and that this was done at Mr Dunlop’s suggestion.

6.15 In the course of his private interview with the Tribunal on 18 May 2000, Mr Dunlop referred to the IR£20,000 Shefran payment in June 1991 (and the IR£10,000 Shefran payment on 11 November 1992) in the following terms:

‘They were – I think and if you look at the cheque payments you will find that they are, you know, at that time, you know, and they were a specific request by me to Brendan Hickey that there was going to be calls, people were going to be ringing me looking for money and all the rest of it and I needed a few bob in the kitty and what I... did with it, who I allocated it to in relation to the 1991, it obviously went right across the board, and in relation to ‘92’ similarly. [...]

There were two payments [June 1991 and November 1992] because there were two elections... They were for election contributions, but in total transparency here, in relation to – you see City West, as I have explained to you earlier on, was done by way of material contravention and was done by the power and the strength and the reputation of Davy Stockbrokers and Davy Hickey Properties and all the rest of it. To my knowledge, and I say that now advisedly, to my knowledge I am not aware that any monies were disbursed or dispensed with or in any way given as inducement in relation to the actual material contravention in relation to City West which was in 1990.²¹ There was subsequent motions obviously based on that material contravention and the land being zoned by the material contravention route. There was obviously motions in relation to specific elements of the City West development. There was a planning application which was granted, all of that, all done perfectly legitimately, but my request to Brendan Hickey in relation to money was, I knew in my heart and soul, you know, that somebody was going to say to me look it, he looked after you in City West or we looked after you in whatever it happened to be, Ballycullen, we looked after you and I certainly was looking for monies so that I would put monies into the war chest. I wasn’t looking for the monies from Davy Hickey or Brendan Hickey specifically in relation to anything that was coming up.'

6.16 Asked in the course of that same private interview if the money disbursed by him to politicians in June 1991 and November 1992 was intended in any way as a 'thank you' for their support for the Citywest material contravention vote, Mr Dunlop replied as follows:

'Well they were making them – first of all at my specific suggestion because I knew that [Brendan Hickey] was going to be asked for monies because the election time was used as the subterfuge, let's be honest about that, and, you know, I needed funding, I needed to have money available and they took the view, without putting words in Brendan Hickey's mouth, I am quite certain he will say, you know, he will say 'look it there is an election on, yeah, I agree, people have been helpful to us and I don't see anything wrong with it and yeah, okay' and we agree 20 on the 1991 one and similarly, if my memory serves me right in relation to the November 1992 one, he was a little less accommodating. He was sort of saying 'well look it, we have done our bit and elections and how many more bloody elections are we going to have? Is this going to go on forever and a day? But nonetheless I got 10 grand out of him.'

6.17 Giving evidence on Day 706 in relation to the IR£20,000 Shefran payment in June 1991, Mr Dunlop stated that he initiated contact with Mr Hickey 'in the circumstances that there was an election' and Mr Dunlop described that contact in the following terms:

'.... while I did not say to Brendan Hickey that I need money to give to people because people will be demanding money from me on the basis that they supported City West, I said to him that there was an election and I would be – monies would be demanded of me as election contributions, whether they were given specifically in relation to any specific element. That never arose in relation to my conversation with Brendan Hickey. It was on the basis, there's an election. I'm going to be asked for funds. I need something for the Kitty.'

6.18 Mr Dunlop later stated:

'Mr Hickey was not giving me the money so that I could go on a trip to the Bahamas or go down to Brown Thomas and buy a fur coat. Mr Hickey and I had a conversation on the basis generated by me that there was an event called an election. That there would be demands for money to me and that I needed some funds and I was asking him in effect to make a contribution to me on both occasions to facilitate that.'

6.19 Mr Dunlop said that the IR£20,000 Shefran payment in June 1991 (and the IR£10,000 Shefran payment on 11 November 1992) was intended to be utilised by him at his 'discretion.'

'But [in Mr Hickey's estimation] ... I would give monies to politicians in the context of a local and in November 1992, a General Election. The word 'inducement' 'bribe' or whatever other euphemism you like to think of was never, never used, either by him or by me. And I never intimated to him that this money would be used retrospectively or prospectively in relation to votes at Dublin County Council.'

6.20 In response to Tribunal Counsel's question:

'Well, do you think for a moment that it wasn't understood, it was certainly understood by you what you were intending to use it. Do you think for a moment that Mr Hickey did not believe exactly as you did that the way of the world, as you described at that time, involved the payment of monies to politicians and this was part of that exercise that he and you were engaged in, in the payment of the 20,000 in June?'

Mr Dunlop replied:

'Well, the only answer that I can give to that, Mr O'Neill. He may well have done and he may well not have done. And I can't account for what Brendan Hickey will say as to what his understanding was. But that was my understanding.'

6.21 Mr Dunlop reiterated evidence previously (and subsequently), given by him that the subterfuge of the local elections allowed him to make payments to politicians and afforded him 'the opportunity to look after those politicians that I would need in the context of the forthcoming' Development Plan review.

6.22 He stated he had not identified the disbursements that he made to councillors in the course of the 1991 Local Election campaign as being related to Davy Hickey Properties. He had not been requested to do so, and no particular politician or political party had been identified by Mr Hickey as a likely recipient of funds. Following the receipt of the IR£20,000 Shefran cheque, Mr Dunlop did not account to Mr Hickey for its expenditure.

6.23 Mr Dunlop could not explain to the Tribunal why, in the light of his specific evidence as to the purpose for which he was put in funds of IR£20,000 in June 1991 by Mr Hickey, the contemporaneous record of Newlands Industrial Park had linked the IR£20,000 Shefran payment as PR expenses paid to Frank Dunlop and Associates.

6.24 He acknowledged that at the time of his discussion with Mr Hickey about funds for the Local Election he had embarked on a course of dealings involving himself, Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham and others relating to the acquisition of an option on lands at Baldoyle with the specific objective of making an application to have such lands rezoned in the course of the then current review of the 1983 County Development Plan.

6.25 Mr Hickey described the payment of IR£20,000 to Shefran on 6 June 1991 as 'a legitimate political donation.' He stated in evidence that the payment arose in the following circumstances:

'Frank Dunlop came to us and said that it is a Local Election. There are 75 or 77 local councillors and that I think it would be appropriate that you would make a political donation to all of the various members. Now, every single – it was a practically unanimous vote that voted for City West. Every single party, workers party, Labour Party, PDs, Fianna Fail, Fine Gael voted for the proposal. And I would have presumed that he was going to spread out the money, equally to all of those. If Frank Dunlop had equally come to me and said how do we [do] this. This is how it's done. Because I didn't know how it was done. If he came to me and said I would like you to write out 75 cheques for 250 pounds I'd have done that. Or if he'd have broken it into different. He asked me to do it this way and that's why I did it that way. It's as simple as that.'

6.26 Mr Dunlop said that following receipt of the cheque, he had not been asked by Mr Hickey to account for its expenditure. Mr Hickey's explanation for not having done so was that he trusted Mr Dunlop to make the donations in an appropriate manner. He told the Tribunal that he received no acknowledgment of any donation from any politician at that time.

6.27 While Mr Hickey accepted that the company cheque payments book described the IR£20,000 payment as 'fees' to Mr Dunlop (and not political donations), he stated that Mr Dunlop had approached him in June 1991 requesting the money and suggested that political donations would be made 'in a certain format', a suggestion with which he saw nothing wrong. He could not recall how it was 'notated' in the company's ledger but agreed with Tribunal Counsel that the payment had been 'mis-described in the ledger as fees.'

6.28 It was clearly open to Mr Hickey/Newlands Industrial Business Park to record the IR£20,000 Shefran payment as a political donation in its books, as that company, at the time the IR£20,000 Shefran payment was 'mis-described' in its books as 'fees', had deemed it in order to identify a donation of IR£500 to Cllr Paddy Madigan under the term ‘Local Election.’ Mr Hickey maintained that he would not have told his accountant that the payment to Shefran was fees. Unlike the 6 June 1991 IR£20,000 Shefran payment, Cllr Madigan’s political donation was not carried in the accounts of Newlands Industrial Park as an expense of the company.

6.29 The manner in which the June 1991 IR£20,000 Shefran payment was treated in the contemporaneous records of Newlands Industrial Park ensured that it was not capable of being identified as a payment to a politician or politicians.

6.30 Mr Hickey expressed surprise and astonishment when informed that Shefran, the company to whom his company paid IR£20,000, was a non-trading company, then without a bank account and not registered for VAT, and suggested that this information was unknown to him. In the course of his evidence, Tribunal Counsel posed the following to Mr Hickey:

‘The audit trail that would be followed by the Tribunal would trace a payment made by you of 20,000 pounds to Mr Frank Dunlop. It would find that it did not go to any account of Shefran, which was the person to whom you’d written the cheque. It would find that because Shefran did not have a bank account. It would find that Shefran was not a company which was trading. It would find that Shefran was not a company which was VAT registered. All of those matters would cause the Tribunal, and did cause the Tribunal, to conduct the type of investigation that it is conducting at present as to why this payment was made and for what service. And it would then be indicated that it was a payment made to politicians. And then the next question is why.’

6.31 Mr Hickey’s response to this was:

‘Well, I hear what you’re saying that Shefran is a non-trading company. That Shefran is a company that doesn’t pay VAT. That Shefran doesn’t hold a bank account. Which comes as a great surprise to me. Considering Shefran was the name of the company that took (sic) the partnership share in City West. I’m astonished when you say those things. [...] So I, I would not have been dealing with a company– a person who was carrying on his affairs like that if I had known that was the case. And I had absolutely no reason to believe that he was carrying on his affairs like that.’

6.32 Mr Hickey acknowledged that he had made a connection between the IR£20,000 provided to Mr Dunlop for the purposes of disbursement to councillors in the course of the local election and the voting support of those councillors for the Citywest material contravention motion in March 1991. He told the Tribunal:

'I would have met nearly all of the local politicians, not just the local ones but nearly all of the County Councillors. I don't know whether I met 40 of them or whether I met all 77. But I would have met nearly every one of them. I would have met some of them quite a number of times. I would have briefed them on what we were doing. I would have said to them look it, we are looking to rezone a large tract of land. We know it's a big ask but I know what I'm talking about. I believe this is the type of development you need to do. I said that if you support us we will honour what we're saying we're doing and we will deliver what we say, which we did do. It was in the context of all of those meetings with those people who did trust us and voted through by every single party. And every person in the chamber bar one voted for it. And in that context Frank Dunlop said these people have been very supportive of you, they're coming up to a Local Election. It's a very expensive time. It is normally expected that businesses would support politicians by making legitimate donations. And it was in that context that I thought that was a very fair and reasonable argument and I acquiesced to what he was saying.'

6.33 When asked if he had considered that the IR£20,000 in political contributions in June 1991 might be of assistance to him/Davy Hickey Properties in any ongoing planning projects, he said:

'Well, I don't think I was as Machiavellian as that. I mean, they had supported us. And I was aware that politicians look for donations at times of elections and we were supporting them back. I mean, I don't think I was any more Machiavellian than that.'

6.34 Mr Shubotham said in evidence that he 'definitely' knew that in June 1991 Newlands Industrial Park made a IR£20,000 payment as a political donation. He said that he was made aware of this information by Mr Hickey, but he claimed that Mr Hickey would not have necessarily told him that Mr Dunlop (or Shefran) was being used as the conduit for the political contributions in question.

6.35 Evidence given in the Quarryvale module established that in the period April to June 1991 Mr Dunlop was in possession of cash funds of at least IR£165,000 including the encashed proceeds of the IR£20,000 Shefran cheque he received on 6 June 1991. Mr Dunlop used this 'confluence of funds' for disbursements to councillors during the course of the 1991 local election campaign.²²

THE PAYMENT OF IR£10,000 TO SHEFRAN ON 6 JANUARY 1992

6.36 Documentation discovered to the Tribunal by Davy Hickey Properties included a reconciliation ledger dated 18 August 1993 entitled ‘Baldoyle Payments’ which detailed expenditure on the Baldoyle rezoning project between January 1991 and June 1993 from the bank accounts of Davy Hickey Properties, and from the bank account associated with the project known as the ‘Eastview Partnership’ account. The total expenditure, as detailed in that document, was IR£44,946.93, of which IR£28,126.42 was attributed to the ‘Eastview Partnership’ account, with the balance of IR£16,820.51 attributed to Davy Hickey Properties. Included in the figure of IR£28,126.42 (which comprised five payments made between January and August 1992) was a payment of IR£10,000 recorded as having been made to Shefran on 6 January 1992.

6.37 Mr Dunlop claimed to have no backup documentation in relation to this payment but he confirmed that Shefran was the recipient of the IR£10,000 payment. Mr Shubotham acknowledged that he signed the cheque to Shefran in January 1992. The Tribunal established that the Eastview Partnership Account was debited in the sum of IR£10,000 on 24 February 1992.

6.38 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that the payment was one of two payments to him associated with Baldoyle from the Eastview Partnership account (the other being a payment of IR£1,530 to Frank Dunlop & Associates on 6 May 1992). He stated:

‘I believe that payment was made on foot of an invoice issued by Shefran Limited. The payment was made in circumstances where I had informed Mr Hickey that I required the sum of £10,000 to defray certain expenses such as print work etc. This sum was however given by me to councillors in relation to Baldoyle. Mr Hickey would, in the circumstances, be justified in contending that I owe him or his company £10,000 as he never received any receipts or vouchers in relation to the expenses I told him that I would have to incur but did not incur.’

6.39 In his statement of November 2006 Mr Dunlop described the payment as relating to ‘the Baldoyle/Eastview lands’ and went on to state that:

It was invoiced by and paid to Shefran Limited. This cheque was either lodged to the Shefran account, lodged and withdrawn or cashed and formed part of the confluence of funds referred to heretofore. This payment was sought to defray unspecified expenses incurred in the rezoning project. Whilst some of these funds may have been paid to Councillors, DH PL were not so advised.

6.40 In the course of his private interview by the Tribunal on 18 May 2000, in the context of references made by him to being in receipt of IR£10,000 for ‘Newlands/City West’, Mr Dunlop stated:

‘Eastview. I put that in there specifically to link it to, not City West, but to Brendan Hickey because, and I regard that £10,000 as ‘Expenses’ in relation to – there was no monies, there was no fund per se in relation to Baldoyle or given to me by Davy Hickey Properties...’

6.41 Later in the course of that same interview, when asked what the IR£10,000 payment was for, he replied:

‘The £10,000 was monies that I said to Brendan Hickey that I would need for expenses, not expenses in the context of disbursements but it went into the total fund. I may have used it for print work or whatever, but as far as I am concerned, while I cannot be absolutely categorical, there was no monies out of, we’ll say East View / Baldoyle / Pennine in relation to, from that source in relation to it. Yes, there was monies given to councillors in relation to Baldoyle out of the total fund and would be far in excess of £10,000, when we come to that, but that – I put it down because it was monies that I received in or around that time and which, in my view, went into the total fund. I may have ended up paying for print work or whatever out of Frank Dunlop and Associates, I may have discharged bills, for example, when the formation of Pennine Holdings with, which was done by Eugene F. Collins, I am virtually certain that the monies to discharge all of that and to discharge other bills in relation to print work were paid out of Frank Dunlop and Associates. That’s why I put that £10,000 there. While I did get the £10,000 from Brendan Hickey, I did not directly use it for the purpose – it’s that I would have said to him listen I need to pay for bills. Now, if you were to talk to Brendan Hickey, he might well turn around with some justification and say ‘well Frank Dunlop still owes us money. We paid him £10,000 in expenses and we never got any receipts or vouchers for it.’

6.42 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop reaffirmed his claim that he did not discharge any specific bill from the IR£10,000 Shefran payment, and that the payment went into his confluence of funds, from which he paid politicians. He acknowledged that expenses which he had incurred in the course of his work on the Baldoyle rezoning project (for example, printing etc) were discharged by Davy Hickey Properties and /or the Eastview Partnership account on foot of invoices furnished by Frank Dunlop & Associates.

6.43 Mr Dunlop agreed with Mr Hickey that he had not been asked to account for the January 1992 IR£10,000 Shefran payment. He advised that, in accordance with the prior agreement that the expenses would be met by Davy Hickey Properties, all of the Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices submitted by him post January 1992 were discharged by Davy Hickey Properties.

6.44 Asked why, in those circumstances, he had sought the IR£10,000 payment, Mr Dunlop stated:

'Oh well I may well have sought the 10,000 pounds under the sobriquet or euphemism of ongoing expenses knowing that had I got 10,000 pounds it would, as it eventually did, end up in the confluence of funds.'

6.45 He also acknowledged that 'the real reason, the overriding reason in the context was that I was probably going to be asked for money by politicians.'

6.46 Asked if there was any reason why in this instance he did not indicate to Mr Hickey what that 'real reason' or 'overriding reason' was, given that in the case of both the IR£20,000 paid in the previous June, and the IR£10,000 paid in the following November, he had felt comfortable to indicate to Mr Hickey that he needed the money because politicians would be requesting money from him, Mr Dunlop sought to distinguish those other occasions by pointing out that those payments were made at election times. He said:

'In the circumstances that in June 1991 and in November 1992 I went to Brendan Hickey looking for money for political donations. I did not say to Brendan Hickey I need money to give to x, y and z, because I need him to do x, y and z for me in the future or for something that he has done for me in the past. I went to Brendan Hickey as a source of funding, in the full knowledge that I would be importuned by politicians for funds, in the context of elections.'

6.47 The following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Dunlop on Day 706:

'Q. Yes. And certainly from what you've told us at (sic) interview before and which has been outlined earlier this morning, that is something which you weren't keeping back from him. You were telling him look, Brendan, the position is these people will be coming to me looking for money. They'll say that you helped or we helped you in City West, we helped you in Ballycullen, whatever it might be. They'll be looking for money?'

A. Yes

Q. It was on that basis that he gave you the money?

A. Yes

Q. There was a full and frank exchange between both of you at that time as to what the realities of life were?

A. Yes.

Q. That you should have money in a Kitty available to you?

A. That I should, yes.

Q. Available to you to meet the requests which inevitably were going to flow from the fact that an election was called and therefore, the politicians would be on your door looking for money?

A. Well, I think I've given evidence in a number of modules.

Q. Yes?

A. And let the record show that I am here now giving it too.

Q. Sure?

A. Once an election is called. You either took the phone off the hook or else you just kept it in your ear on a continuous basis. And most of the calls were politicians.

Q. But what is of importance at this particular time, is that this is information which you imparted to Mr Hickey?

A. That I would be getting calls for funding, yes.

Q. Exactly?

A. Yes yes.'

6.48 In the course of his evidence Mr Dunlop sought to emphasise that the IR£10,000 Shefran payment in January 1992 was the only one of the five Shefran payments made to him in the period 1991 to March 1993 that related to the Baldoyle lands. He further maintained that he cashed the Shefran cheque in or about mid February 1992 before adding the proceeds to his confluence of funds/accumulated cash. Although Mr Dunlop acknowledged that the actual funds were expended by him in 1992, he nevertheless claimed that this IR£10,000 was the 'source' of the six IR£1,000 payments he claimed to have made to six named councillors in the period March 1993 to June 1993, in connection with the attempt to rezone the Baldoyle lands.

6.49 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that the IR£10,000 he requested, and received in January 1992 was intended to be used in a similar fashion as the IR£20,000 sum paid to Shefran in June 1991, namely for payments to politicians, albeit in the absence of the background of an election in January 1992.

6.50 Mr Hickey professed in evidence to have no recollection of the IR£10,000 payment made to Mr Dunlop, through Shefran, in January 1992 other than to acknowledge that he and Mr Shubotham must have spoken about it prior to drawing a cheque for that amount on the Eastview Partnership account. He said that he could not assist the Tribunal as to whether this payment had been made on foot of an invoice from Shefran, but he presumed that there was an invoice. On Day 707 Mr Hickey told the Tribunal:

'In '92 we were still considering getting involved. There, to me, there are two aspects to whether we would get involved. Is it possible to service these lands, which is essentially an engineering thing. And two, even if it's possible, would it be acceptable. Would it be acceptable to the residents, would it be acceptable to the planners, the local representatives. Frank Dunlop, I believe, asked for the money on the basis that he needed [it]. He was going to incur certain costs or expenses in ascertaining the side that he was doing, which was the acceptability side.'

6.51 In his statement to the Tribunal dated 19 October 2006, Mr Shubotham described the payment of IR£10,000 as a payment to Mr Dunlop 'to sound out reaction to the [rezoning and development] plan prepared for [Baldoyle] from all interested parties.'

This was rejected by Mr Dunlop as follows:

'... the idea of me sounding out the reaction to the plan proposed for the area. I mean, that is capable of quite a large number of interpretations, I might suggest. But certainly if you were to formalise it, it wasn't Frank Dunlop & Associates or Frank Dunlop or Shefran conducting a market survey or an opinion poll as to the likelihood of the success or otherwise of this project.'

6.52 Mr Shubotham told the Tribunal that while the remainder of the expenditure on the Baldoyle project, as documented on the 'Baldoyle payments' ledger of 18 August 1993, related to expenses incurred in the course of the project, the January 1992 Shefran payment was provided by way of a 'float' to Mr Dunlop to enable him meet unspecified expenses. Mr Shubotham accepted that neither the payment nor the purpose to which it was put was accounted for by Mr Dunlop.

THE PAYMENT OF IR£2,500 TO SHEFRAN IN AUGUST 1992

6.53 Documentation provided to the Tribunal indicated that on 6 August 1992 Shefran issued an invoice to Newlands Industrial Park requesting payment of IR£2,500 for 'refresher facilities vis-a-vis professional strategic communications and education.' The invoice was discharged on 7 August 1992 with a cheque for IR£2,500 drawn on the account of Newlands Industrial Park.

6.54 Mr Dunlop did not mention this payment in the section of his statement to the Tribunal dated October 2000 headed 'Baldoyle/Eastview.'

6.55 However, in his statement to the Tribunal dated November 2006 Mr Dunlop referred to it in the following terms:

This was invoiced by Shefran Limited and paid by Newlands Industrial Park Limited subsequent to the reissue of the invoice at the request of Mr Brendan Hickey and related to the Citywest lands.

6.56 Giving evidence on Day 706, Mr Dunlop professed to have no idea of the purpose of this payment. Mr Dunlop was questioned by Tribunal Counsel with a view to ascertaining whether the record (maintained by his secretarial staff) of telephone calls made to his office on 7 August 1992 might assist in jogging his memory of the payment, in particular the following: '2.45 David Shubotham – meeting you are attending on his behalf – single payment only' and '4.00 Liam Lawlor – ringing you at home.'

6.57 Mr Dunlop acknowledged the temporal link between his receipt of the IR£2,500 Shefran cheque on the one hand and a meeting which his telephone records indicated he was attending on behalf of Mr Shubotham, apparently concerning a payment of money on Mr Shubotham's behalf, on the other. Mr Dunlop had no recollection of ever having been asked by Mr Shubotham to make any payment to Mr Lawlor.

6.58 Mr Hickey stated in evidence that he had assumed that the Shefran invoice dated 6 August 1992 was a legitimate invoice, notwithstanding Mr Dunlop's evidence that the invoice was in fact a bogus invoice and its written content 'verbiage.' Mr Hickey believed that the invoice related to PR assistance Mr Dunlop had provided in or about May/June 1992 in relation to Citywest's efforts to attract a major US company to its campus, and in relation to other services provided by Mr Dunlop at that time, including the organisation of meetings with Dublin County Council on the issue of a sewer facility through the Citywest lands.

THE PAYMENT OF IR£10,000 TO SHEFRAN ON 11 NOVEMBER 1992

6.59 Documentation provided to the Tribunal established that on 11 November 1992 Shefran invoiced Newlands Industrial Park in the sum of IR£10,000 in the following terms: 'To refresher facilities vis-à-vis professional strategic communications and education.' This invoice was discharged on the same date with a cheque for IR£10,000 payable to Shefran, drawn on the account of Newlands Industrial Park and signed by Mr Hickey. The cheque was furnished to

'Mr Frank Dunlop, Shefran Limited' under cover of a letter from Mr Hickey. This was written up in the company's cheque payments book under 'public relations.'

6.60 Mr Dunlop did not mention this payment in the section of his statement to the Tribunal dated October 2000 headed 'Baldoyle/Eastview.' In his statement of November 2006 he referred to it in the following terms:

This payment related to the Citywest lands. It was invoiced by and paid to Shefran Limited by cheque. This money was either lodged, lodged and withdrawn or cashed and formed part of the confluence of funds referred to heretofore. Some of this money may have been used personally.

6.61 In the course of his private interview with Tribunal Counsel on 18 May 2000, Mr Dunlop referred to this payment as having been made to him by Mr Hickey, at his suggestion, for disbursement to politicians in the course of the November 1992 General Election campaign.

6.62 Giving evidence on Day 706, Mr Dunlop said that, as he had done for the June 1991 Local Election, he approached Mr Hickey after the November 1992 Election was called with a request for money for political donations. He agreed that elections were 'points on the road' at which 'you could stop and pay politicians bribes on the basis that this is a political contribution towards the election[...] whereas everyone involved knew it was a bribe.'

6.63 In the Davy Hickey Properties document provided to the Tribunal in 2000 which detailed, inter alia, payments made to Mr Dunlop/Frank Dunlop & Associates/Shefran, the November 1992 IR£10,000 payment was described as one of two payments made by Citywest to 'Frank Dunlop/Shefran Limited' identified as 'political contributions.'²³

6.64 In his statement to the Tribunal dated 17 January 2001, Mr Hickey addressed the November 1992 IR£10,000 Shefran payment under the heading 'Payments to Frank Dunlop', as follows:

In respect of the payments made to Mr Frank Dunlop identified as political contributions, the first of IR£20,000 made in June 1991 followed upon a suggestion by Mr Dunlop that, given it was a time of local elections, it would be appropriate to make political contributions to the various elected representatives. This seemed both reasonable and unremarkable.

The second payment of IR£10,000 was again made following a suggestion by Mr Dunlop at the time of the general election at the end of 1992.

²³ The other identified political contribution on the document was the June 1991 payment of IR£20,000, also made to Shefran.

6.65 Mr Dunlop agreed that this was yet another payment evidenced by a bogus invoice which he would not have generated unless requested to do so. He said: 'Well Brendan Hickey obviously needs some sort of paperwork in relation to it.' Mr Dunlop conceded that Mr Hickey did not take issue with the contents of the invoice and said:

'How Brendan Hickey regarded it on receipt or whether he acknowledged – he never acknowledged it to me that it was a bogus invoice. Whether he acknowledged it personally to himself, that's a matter for him. But certainly the agreement to pay the 10,000 was on foot of the production of an invoice, whatever the terms of the invoice were.'

6.66 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that, as in the case of the June 1991 IR£20,000 Shefran payment, he did not account to Mr Hickey for how, or to whom, he had disbursed the November 1992 IR£10,000 payment. By mid November 1992, Mr Dunlop had the encashed proceeds of this cheque available to him (together with other funds, namely a cash withdrawal of IR£55,000 from his 042 account on 10 November 1992 and IR£8,500 of the encashed proceeds of an IR£11,000 cheque provided to him by Mr Christopher Jones Snr) for disbursement to politicians, including councillors.²⁴

6.67 On Day 708 Mr Hickey gave the following explanation for this IR£10,000 payment:

'There was a General Election going on. And again Mr Dunlop came and said that we should, it would be appropriate that with the General Election that we would make a political donation to the various parties. I saw it as a legitimate political donation. [This IR£10,000] was paid to Frank Dunlop for him to pay out in the appropriate manner. And I wasn't aware whether he would give equally to the parties or proportionately according to the strength or how exactly he was going to do it.'

6.68 With regard to the bogus nature of the Shefran invoice, Mr Hickey told the Tribunal that he 'didn't take any particular cognisance of either the company or the verbiage. It was the fact that would I pay it or not was the question.' He did not suggest to the Tribunal any particular reason why the payment was not documented in the books of Newlands Industrial Park as a political donation, other than to maintain that payments to Mr Dunlop were 'all put under the same classification for Mr Dunlop [...] for ease of reference.'

THE PAYMENT OF IR£20,000 TO SHEFRAN IN MARCH 1993

6.69 In his statement to the Tribunal dated 17 January 2001 dealing with his private interests, Mr Shubotham, in response to queries raised by the Tribunal, stated as follows:

With regard to payments to Mr Frank Dunlop, Mr Shubotham has made two payments to Mr Dunlop.

1. A cheque dated 27 August 1992 was drawn on Mr Shubotham's personal account in the sum of IR£333.55. Mr Shubotham is not able to say at this remove what the [...] payment was for. [...]

2. On or about 16 March 1993, Mr Shubotham made a payment from his personal account to Mr Dunlop in the sum of IR£20,000. The payment arose in circumstances where Mr Dunlop had raised the issue of a payment for work carried out in respect of City West. At that point in time he had agreed to a return through a shareholding he had received in City West. It is Mr Shubotham's recollection that in early 1993 the question of whether or not City West might be a success was far from assured and the value of Mr Dunlop's shareholding was questionable. Mr Shubotham, on his own account, formed the view that Mr Dunlop had done good work in respect of the project but, given the pressures on financing, he did not believe any request made to City West for additional payments would be well received. In the circumstances, he made a decision to make a personal payment to Mr Dunlop as a gesture of goodwill.

6.70 To the extent that it could be identified by the Tribunal, the documentary trail established that on 16 March 1993 a cheque to Shefran for IR£20,000 was debited to a personal account of Mr Shubotham at Bank of Ireland Private Banking.

6.71 While Mr Dunlop, in the course of his private interview with the Tribunal legal team on 18 May 2000, advised the Tribunal of the two Shefran payments of IR£20,000 in June 1991, and IR£10,000 in November 1992 (which he claimed were linked to Citywest) and of the January 1992 'Baldoyle' payment of IR£10,000, he did not refer to the receipt of a IR£20,000 payment from Mr Shubotham in March 1993. Equally, Mr Dunlop's October 2000 statement did not disclose this payment.

6.72 In his statement of November 2006, Mr Dunlop made a brief reference to Mr Shubotham's payment to him of IR£20,000 in the following terms: 'At some time in 1993 I was paid IR£20,000 by David Shubotham personally. This payment related to the City West lands.'

6.73 In his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop maintained that the payment was in response to a request he made for additional recompense for work he had undertaken in the course of his lobbying of councillors to secure the Citywest material contravention vote in March 1991.

6.74 In March 1993 Mr Dunlop (through Shefran) was an equity shareholder in Citywest. In late 1991 he had been rewarded with a shareholding in recognition of his lobbying activity for that project, in lieu of fees due to him in the amount of IR£75,000, and because he had invested IR£55,000 in the project. On Day 706, Mr Dunlop stated:

'We had already made an arrangement vis-à-vis the fee schedule and that was transmuted into a shareholding. But there was, I think I replied to you yesterday in the context of when you asked me, you thought that Davy Hickey Properties sold me a pup in the context of shareholding in City West. I had no knowledge at the time of whether the City West project would be successful or not. And I just made a plea to Mr Shubotham in relation to fees. He said, if I recollect correctly, that he wasn't prepared to go back to the partnership in relation to fees given what had occurred and he gave me 20,000 pounds personally.'

6.75 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that his substantial PR work for Citywest had to all intents and purposes ceased prior to March 1993 other than assistance he had provided in relation to the opening of a bridge to service the Citywest development for which Frank Dunlop & Associates invoiced Citywest for IR£3,160.74. This was paid on 26 August 1993.

6.76 In the period leading up to March 1993 there was no ongoing communication between Mr Dunlop and Mr Shubotham (or indeed other Citywest interests) which recorded any dissatisfaction or issue on Mr Dunlop's part with the fees which he had effectively received in October/November 1991 through his equity shareholding in Citywest.

6.77 Questioned as to the circumstances in which his additional fees for past work for Citywest were paid by Mr Shubotham personally, Mr Dunlop said:

'But, I mean, the genesis of the payment was a complaint or an approach by me to Mr Shubotham in relation to the fact that this project had gone ahead. Yes, I had been given a shareholding. But in effect up to that point I had received very little money in fees.'

6.78 Asked why should Mr Shubotham, who, like himself, was a relatively minor shareholder in Citywest, have taken it upon himself to make a payment of IR£20,000 to him, Mr Dunlop replied:

‘Well, I don’t mean to be evasive. But I will leave it to Mr Shubotham. And I think he has already done so in a statement, to say what he did or did not understand the position to be or what he told other people about it. But up to the time, that as you quite rightly point out, in 2000, I had not adverted to this payment at all because I had simply completely forgotten about it. But it is true that I did approach Mr Shubotham. It is true that we had a discussion. It is true that it eventuated in a payment of 20,000. The circumstances were, as I have outlined to you. In fact, I do recall Mr Shubotham saying to me that he was not prepared to go back to the partners in relation to fees. Given what the discussion that had taken place with the partners in relation to the shareholding. In other words, the transformation of the original fee into the shareholding. But that it is undeniable that a payment was made.’

6.79 Mr Dunlop accepted that Mr Shubotham had no personal liability to him, and he acknowledged that, having regard to the high net worth of the various individuals and entities associated with the Citywest project, he should have had no difficulty in making his case for a further fee to those individuals or entities. He also acknowledged that if the other shareholders had made a pro rata payment to him similar to the payment he received from Mr Shubotham, then he, Mr Dunlop, would have received a very substantial sum of money.

6.80 An analysis of Mr Dunlop’s bank accounts revealed that on 15 March 1993 a lodgement of IR£12,000 was made to his Irish Nationwide Building Society (‘war chest’) account. Mr Dunlop accepted that this lodgement was likely to have represented a portion of the encashed proceeds of the IR£20,000 Shefran cheque received from Mr Shubotham. He believed that he may have cashed the cheque at AIB College Street, pursuant to his arrangement with Mr John Ahern.

6.81 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop was in possession of the IR£20,000 Shefran cheque from Mr Shubotham by 12 March 1993.

6.82 Mr Dunlop also acknowledged that he lodged IR£2,000 in cash to an AIB account in the name of Frank J Dunlop and Sheila Dunlop (IR£1,000 on 12 March 1993 and IR£1,000 on 15 March 1993).

6.83 Mr Dunlop agreed that on the assumption that he had cashed Mr Shubotham’s cheque by 12 March 1993 and had utilised IR£14,000 for his own purposes, then he retained IR£6,000 in cash from it, and that he had that sum in cash within the time frame in which he alleged having made payments totalling IR£6,000 to six named councillors in relation to the Baldoyle rezoning project. The Baldoyle rezoning motion was lodged with Dublin County Council on 12 March 1993.

6.84 When asked if it was purely a coincidence that he was discussing with Mr Shubotham the question of a further payment to him for Citywest at a time when he and Mr Shubotham both knew that 12 March 1993 was the deadline for the signature of motions before the Council, and was therefore one of Mr Dunlop's trigger dates for payments to councillors, Mr Dunlop replied: 'Yeah, well in my belief, yes, it is. Because I never had a discussion with Mr Shubotham in relation to monies in the context of payments to councillors, either for their signature or for their vote.'

6.85 Mr Shubotham told the Tribunal that it was his vague recollection that Mr Dunlop had approached him saying that he had done a lot of additional work for Citywest, for which he received no fees since 1991. He said that Mr Dunlop's approach had come 'out of the blue.' Mr Shubotham maintained that Citywest was then in a difficult financial position and that there was no way it could pay money to Mr Dunlop. Mr Shubotham had therefore made the decision to personally pay him. He acknowledged that he himself had no personal liability to Mr Dunlop and that it was unusual in itself that Mr Dunlop should have approached him seeking money.

6.86 Mr Shubotham acknowledged that he could have taken Mr Dunlop's request to Citywest which in 1993 had no bank borrowings and which was fully equity funded. However, he maintained that he resisted making such an approach because Citywest's bank at that time was only advancing funds for capital expenditure. While Mr Shubotham's 2006 statement on this issue was silent on any such constraint on Citywest's finances, his earlier 2001 statement referred to 'pressures on financing' within Citywest, in the context of his IR£20,000 payment to Mr Dunlop/Shefran, and to the fact that he did not believe that 'any request to Citywest for additional payments would be well received.'

6.87 However, somewhat inconsistently with this explanation, the Tribunal established that on 26 August 1993, only about five months following Mr Shubotham's personal payment of IR£20,000 to Mr Dunlop/Shefran, a Citywest linked company discharged a Frank Dunlop & Associates invoice for IR£3,160.74 (a non-capital expenditure). Furthermore, only four months before Mr Shubotham's personal payment of IR£20,000 to Mr Dunlop/Shefran, Newlands Industrial Park / Citywest paid out IR£10,000 (also a non-capital expenditure) on foot of Mr Dunlop's bogus Shefran invoice, in order to put him in funds for the purpose, as acknowledged by Mr Hickey and Mr Dunlop, to make payments to politicians during the course of the November 1992 General Election.

6.88 Mr Shubotham denied any connection between his payment of IR£20,000 to Mr Dunlop/Shefran and the events which were occurring on 12 March 1993 and thereafter vis-à-vis the attempt to have the Pennine option lands rezoned.

6.89 Mr Dunlop's telephone records indicated that Mr Shubotham telephoned his office at 9:15 am on 11 March 1993 (in response, it would appear, to an attempt being made by Mr Dunlop to contact him). On the same day, Mr Shubotham again attempted to make contact with Mr Dunlop at 11:10 am. On 12 March 1993, the telephone records indicated a call from Mr Shubotham requesting Mr Dunlop to call him. Mr Shubotham told the Tribunal that he had no recollection of the purpose for which he attempted to make contact with Mr Dunlop on 11 March 1993 and claimed not to have been aware of the significance of the date. Given the activity evident from his bank account however, he acknowledged that he must have met Mr Dunlop during this timeframe to provide him with the IR£20,000 Shefran cheque, although he claimed not to know whether he and Mr Dunlop would have had any discussion about the events which were then taking place with regard to the Baldoyle rezoning motion.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE PAYMENTS TOTALLING IR£62,500 MADE TO SHEFRAN BETWEEN 6 JUNE 1991 AND 16 MARCH 1993

6.90 There was no dispute between Mr Dunlop and Mr Hickey that IR£20,000 was provided to Mr Dunlop in June 1991 for transmission to councillors. Mr Dunlop and Mr Hickey both attributed this payment to 'Citywest' and both claimed it was made in circumstances where Mr Dunlop went to Mr Hickey at the time of the June 1991 Local Election and suggested to him that a political donation should be made to councillors. The thrust of Mr Hickey's evidence was that in June 1991 there was a connection between the IR£20,000 cheque to Shefran which was used to support councillors financially, and the voting support that councillors had provided in respect of the Citywest material contravention motion in March 1991.

6.91 The evidence established that at the time Mr Dunlop requested the funds from Mr Hickey, Mr Hickey, Mr Dunlop and Mr Shubotham had already embarked on the Pennine option lands project, and as of January 1991, had resolved to attempt to have the lands rezoned in the course of the Development Plan review then underway.

6.92 Mr Hickey, when asked whether he believed that paying politicians IR£20,000 through Mr Dunlop at the time of the Local Elections in June 1991 would assist him in future planning/zoning projects, replied that his thinking had not been ‘Machiavellian’ to that degree. However, the Tribunal believed it to have been so. While the purpose of Mr Hickey’s decision to provide IR£20,000 to Mr Dunlop to be disbursed to councillors may have been partly to thank councillors for their support for Citywest, the Tribunal was satisfied the provision of this money was also motivated to a significant degree by a desire to curry favour from councillors in relation to the Baldoyle rezoning project.

6.93 The Tribunal was satisfied that this IR£20,000 Shefran payment was in due course added to Mr Dunlop’s confluence of funds from which he made corrupt payments to councillors during the June 1991 Local Elections.

6.94 The Tribunal was equally satisfied that the payment of IR£10,000 to Shefran in January 1992 was made to provide Mr Dunlop with funds in order for him to respond to requests for money from councillors in the course of the ongoing review of the Development Plan. The Tribunal did not identify any other probable or logical reason for the payment to Shefran of this amount of money.

6.95 Attempts to label this IR£10,000 payment in January 1992 as a payment to Mr Dunlop for the purpose of sounding out opinion on the Baldoyle rezoning project echoed particularly hollow, as did Mr Dunlop’s efforts to distance Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham from the purpose of the payment while at the same time acknowledging that its probable purpose was to make funds available to meet requests for money expected to be made of Mr Dunlop by councillors. The Tribunal viewed as particularly cynical, on the part of Mr Dunlop, his suggestion in his October 2000 statement that he had received this money ‘to defray certain expenses such as print work etc’, a purpose for which he had not expended this money, and his contention that Mr Hickey would ‘be justified in contending that I owe him or his company £10,000 as he never received any receipts of vouchers in relation to the expenses I told him that I would have to incur but did not incur.’

6.96 The Tribunal believed it to have been most unlikely that Mr Dunlop advised Mr Hickey that the IR£10,000 was required to discharge such third party expenses, as from the outset Mr Dunlop was aware that such expenses were to be independently discharged by Davy Hickey Properties. Equally, the Tribunal did not accept the explanations tendered by Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham for this payment.

6.97 The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment of IR£2,500 in August 1992 was not a payment to Mr Dunlop for public relation services relevant to the Citywest venture. Had that been the case, Mr Dunlop would have probably invoiced for same on foot of a Frank Dunlop and Associates invoice as opposed to a Shefran invoice, as he had done on a number of other occasions both prior to and subsequent to August 1992. Having regard in particular to the manner in which the IR£2,500 payment was made, the Tribunal was satisfied that this payment was made to Mr Dunlop to be expended by him in connection with the Baldoyle rezoning project.

6.98 Both Mr Dunlop and Mr Hickey confirmed that the payment of IR£10,000 to Shefran in November 1992 was intended for disbursement to politicians (including councillors) by Mr Dunlop, and that the money was to be dispensed, according to Mr Hickey, 'to the various parties' in the course of the November 1992 General Election. The Tribunal was satisfied that these funds were indeed used during the 1992 General Election campaign to make cash payments to election candidates.

6.99 The Tribunal believed that Mr Dunlop, under the happenstance of a General Election campaign, requested money from Mr Hickey and that Mr Hickey, as he had done in June 1991, acceded to that request. Given the imminence of the Baldoyle rezoning coming before the Council,²⁵ the Tribunal was satisfied that it was that particular issue which was uppermost in the minds of Mr Dunlop and Mr Hickey when this IR£10,000 payment was made on foot of a bogus Shefran invoice.

6.100 The Tribunal rejected both Mr Dunlop's and Mr Shubotham's accounts of how the March 1993 payment of IR£20,000 came about. In particular, the Tribunal rejected the suggestion that Mr Dunlop, in March 1993, some two years after the Citywest material contravention vote, would have 'out of the blue' gone to Mr Shubotham and sought additional fees. Had there been some truth in this suggestion, there would, the Tribunal believed, have been some documentary evidence to that effect, or at the very least, some evidence that Mr Shubotham had brought this matter to the attention of the entities/interests who were part of the Citywest project. Furthermore, the Tribunal rejected Mr Shubotham's evidence as to his reason for not alerting his fellow Citywest investors to Mr Dunlop's request. The fact that Citywest funds were paid out to Mr Dunlop in November 1992 (the IR£10,000 Shefran payment) and in August 1993 (the discharge of a Frank Dunlop & Associates invoice), belied the claim that there was some constraint on non capital expenditure by Citywest thus necessitating Mr Shubotham personally making a payment to Mr Dunlop.

6.101 The timing and manner of the IR£20,000 payment, coupled with Mr Dunlop's admission that he used Shefran to receive monies destined for councillors, led the Tribunal to conclude that in March 1993 Mr Dunlop's confluence of funds required to be replenished in order to assist his lobbying endeavours in relation to the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands. The Tribunal was satisfied that it was on this basis and for this reason that Mr Dunlop and Mr Shubotham agreed a payment of IR£20,000 to Shefran.

6.102 As a matter of probability, the contact which the Tribunal was satisfied took place between Mr Dunlop and Mr Shubotham on 11 and 12 March 1993, was, inter alia, for the purposes of Mr Dunlop being put in funds by Mr Shubotham in the context of the Baldoyle rezoning motion, which was lodged with Dublin County Council on 12 March 1993. Indeed, Mr Shubotham accepted in evidence that the cheque for IR£20,000 must have been given to Mr Dunlop at or about this time, as he would not have sent it by post. The Tribunal was satisfied that the transmission of these monies by Mr Shubotham to Mr Dunlop was likely to have occurred in the context of Mr Dunlop having apprised Mr Shubotham that his lobbying endeavours on foot of the motion would precipitate requests for payments from councillors.

6.103 Mr Dunlop himself acknowledged (while maintaining that the IR£10,000 Shefran payment of January 1992 was the real source of the monies he claimed to have paid to councillors), that the likely source of his alleged payments to councillors regarding Baldoyle was the encashed proceeds of the IR£20,000 Shefran cheque of March 1993.

6.104 Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham maintained that they were at all times unaware of Mr Dunlop's payments to councillors in connection with the Baldoyle rezoning project. Likewise, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he never had any discussion or agreement with Messrs Hickey and Shubotham which would have left them with the knowledge or understanding that he intended to make (or did make) corrupt payments to councillors in return for their support for the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands.

6.105 Yet, both Mr Dunlop and Mr Hickey freely acknowledged that they had discussions about making payments to councillors albeit at times of election campaigns (June 1991 and November 1992). Mr Shubotham acknowledged being aware that 'political donation payments' were made at election times. He maintained that he could not say if these were to be made on an individual (councillor) basis or not.

6.106 The Tribunal believed that the reluctance on the part of Mr Dunlop and Mr Shubotham to connect, in any way, the March 1993 payment to the Baldoyle project (in particular by maintaining that it was a 'City West fees' payment to Mr Dunlop), was an attempt on their part to deny the reality of the payment, namely that it was a payment made to Mr Dunlop in the throes of the Baldoyle rezoning campaign for disbursement to councillors in that context.

6.107 The Tribunal was satisfied that the four Shefran payments (IR£20,000 in June 1991, IR£10,000 in January 1992, IR£10,000 in November 1992 and IR£20,000 in March 1993) were paid to Mr Dunlop in order to put him in funds to distribute cash to councillors for the purpose of influencing them to support the Baldoyle rezoning project (and to satisfy demands for money by councillors). The said payments were corrupt.

MR DUNLOP'S ALLEGATIONS THAT HE PAID NAMED COUNCILLORS IN RELATION TO THE BALDOYLE LANDS REZONING PROJECT

7.01 In his 2006 statement to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid Councillors Jack Larkin, Cyril Gallagher, Tom Hand, Tony Fox, Liam Cosgrave and Don Lydon IR£1,000 each, in cash. He stated that the payments 'were either immediately before any vote took place relating to the Baldoyle / Eastview lands or during the course of their consideration by the Council. The payments were by and large made in the environs of Dublin County Council.'

7.02 In his evidence to the Tribunal Mr Dunlop confirmed this statement as accurate 'to the best of [his] knowledge.'

7.03 Mr Dunlop was unable to specifically date the payments to the individual councillors. He stated that they were made 'during the period when [the Baldoyle rezoning] was being considered.' The Council meetings which considered these lands were held on 20 April, 27 April, 4 May and 6 May 1993. Mr Dunlop confirmed that none of the payments pre-dated 1 March 1993.

7.04 An analysis of Mr Dunlop's diary and telephone records for the period 1 March 1993 to 20 April 1993 indicated contact (or attempted contact) between Mr Dunlop and Councillors Hand, Fox, Gallagher, O'Halloran and L.T. Cosgrave. There was no recorded contact between Mr Dunlop and Councillors Lydon or Larkin within that period. According to these records, Mr Dunlop had extensive contacts with Councillors Hand and O'Halloran. Mr Dunlop's diary for 11 March 1993 documented a meeting with Cllr Gallagher. Mr Dunlop's telephone records indicated that Cllr Fox rang Mr Dunlop's office on 9 and 31 March 1993. These telephone records also showed that Cllr L.T. Cosgrave rang Mr Dunlop's office on 20 April 1993, after the Council meeting at which the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands was first proposed had been adjourned 'amid chaos.'

7.05 Mr Dunlop's belief was that up to the date of the lodging of the motion he had not paid any politician in connection with the matter. He acknowledged as 'logical' the suggestion that insofar as he claimed to have an arrangement to pay councillors, such would have been in place prior to the date of the first scheduled meeting (20 April 1993) dealing with the rezoning motion. However his evidence also suggested that his arrangements with councillors for the purposes of paying them may have been made at a later stage, as evidenced from the following exchange which took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Dunlop on Day 704:

Q You would remember the detail of how this took place and when. And I think you fairly say that in these instances you cannot distinguish one occasion as opposed to the other as regards these six councillors involved. You're not saying that you paid them all on the same day?

A. No.

Q. You're not saying that you paid them all in exactly the same way?

A. No.

Q. Or in the same location as much as we know from you is that they are identical payments. They are for the same service insofar as it was intended to ensure that they supported your proposition or your proposal for Pennine Holdings and that they were to do whatever it was I take it that would have advanced that from your point of view?

A. Correct.

Q. Isn't that right? And in relation to all these councillors, only one of them actually did anything in the sense of signing of documents. The others were men behind the meetings who would cast their vote, you believe, in favour of your proposals?

A. That is correct. Except the one proviso that I would add to that. In relation to the other Councillor to a composite payment?

Q. Yes

A. To Councillor O'Halloran, which included monies in relation to Baldoyle.

7.06 Mr Dunlop was further questioned as follows:

Q. It's in that context that I want to ask you whether the events of the 20th were such that you felt that you had to make a payment in circumstances were (sic) to that time you hadn't intended to make those payments, you understand?

A. Yes, it is possible. It is possible. I cannot absolutely say that to you but it is possible.

Q. So are we to take it that you don't know whether it's the position that you had paid all of the money?

A. No.

Q. Or intended to pay all of the money in anticipation of a successful outcome on the 20th or whether you had paid some money for the signature in the first instance, some money at the conclusion of the affairs – sorry. Of the motion on the 20th and pending that adjournment and some further money when the substance of the motion was debated or was intended to be debated more fully in the chamber?

A. Yes. And there is another that went into that matrix, if I might be so bold as to suggest. That it might well be that I had arranged to pay. Had had discussions already with these people but hadn't actually paid them. And so but I cannot precisely give you the date as to when the payments occurred.

Q. Yes. And again, why is that? I mean, we see the events, we see the opportunities for payment. We see how in certain circumstances in hindsight you can see this might have been an opportunity where a payment would be necessary to achieve a certain result. You seemed to accept that yes, they are the possibilities. But you don't have any recollection of actually paying in those instances. And I'm wondering why that is?

A. Well I can't – I can't say anything other than.

Q. Yes?

A. What I have said to you in relation to the discussions in relation to this particular development that trigger in my mind a recollection of the discussion with the individuals concerned.

7.07 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that on his account of events, by the date of the first scheduled meeting, he appeared to be achieving his objectives without having to pay any councillor (with the exception of Cllr Gallagher), in that by 20

April 1993 he had secured the signatures of Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave, Creaven and Gilbride to two motions without having been asked for money.

7.08 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that while Cllr Gilbride was a councillor to whom he had paid money in other instances, he had not sought money in regard to the Baldoyle rezoning motion. Asked on Day 705 why he had paid Cllr Gilbride in some instances but not in relation to the Baldoyle motions, Mr Dunlop replied as follows:

'Firstly, the first instance the matter didn't arise. I mean, it wasn't raised by him. I have given evidence to the effect in relation to other modules that the issues were raised by – money issues were raised by him... But in this particular module I think he considered his role as a personal – a personal supporter. He was already in receipt of significant monies from me at that stage and that he regarded this as something of doing something for me.'

7.09 According to Mr Dunlop, the fact that he had presented himself as being the promoter of the Baldoyle rezoning project 'would have given a lot of councillors the idea that they should help.'

7.10 He said that no requests for payments were ever made to him by Cllrs M J Cosgrave or Creaven²⁶ and in relation to the support given to him by those individuals, Mr Dunlop stated 'without being offensive to either gentlemen [...] they were very willing. We went to lunch quite often together [...] but I've never given them any money in relation either to this development or any other development.'

7.11 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that on 12 March 1993 his diary indicated the words 'Dev Plan' which Mr Dunlop explained related to his presence in or around Dublin County Council. Mr Dunlop stated that the environs of Dublin County Council was one of the locations in which he made payments to councillors. He agreed that his relationship with councillors in March 1993 was such that councillors did not necessarily request payment in advance of signing or supporting motions. He acknowledged that he had built up 'credibility' with them and stated there was 'an added dimension in this particular context, and that is that [he was] promoting this qua Frank Dunlop.'

7.12 In March 1993 Mr Dunlop received IR£20,000 from Mr Shubotham, a payment which was the last of a series of four large round figure payments made to Shefran by individuals/entities associated with the Baldoyle rezoning process.

²⁶ In January 1993, Cllr M J Cosgrave was the recipient of a IR£1,000 cheque from Mr Dunlop for the Seanad election campaign.

7.13 In the course of a private interview conducted in May 2000, Mr Dunlop advised members of the Tribunal's legal team that he had paid 'far' in excess of IR£10,000 to councillors in relation to the Baldoyle lands. However subsequently, in the course of his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, he stated that this information was erroneous and that in fact the payments made by him to councillors in connection with the Baldoyle lands amounted to less than IR£10,000.

COUNCILLOR LIAM T COSGRAVE

7.14 Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid IR£1,000 in cash to Cllr L T Cosgrave. Cllr L T Cosgrave denied soliciting or receiving this payment.

7.15 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that Cllr L T Cosgrave was very much in favour of the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands because of Mr Dunlop's personal involvement in that project.

7.16 When asked 'when you were talking to Cllr Cosgrave, that's Cllr Liam Cosgrave, about that motion, either before it was put forward or subsequent to it, did that play any part in your decision to pay him the sum of £1,000 or had you already paid him?' Mr Dunlop responded 'No' and added:

'Well, I cannot say definitely that I had already paid him, but on the basis that I outlined to you on Friday in relation to support, Cllr Cosgrave was a supporter of the motion. He was very much in favour of it in the context of my being personally involved. And I hereto promised or maybe had paid him at that stage. I cannot definitely say but certainly the question of money would have been discussed.'

7.17 Cllr L T Cosgrave was the seconder to the site visit motion proposed by Cllr John O'Halloran on 27 April 1993 after the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion was deferred and Cllr Healy insisted that his 'green belt' motion scheduled for hearing on that date should proceed. Cllr L T Cosgrave told the Tribunal that he could not recall why the M J Cosgrave /Creaven Baldoyle rezoning motion had been deferred on 27 April 1993, and he said that he had no recollection of the article in the Irish Independent newspaper linking Mr Dunlop and others to the rezoning proposal, and which mentioned a possible £10m profit from the venture. The Council minutes recorded that Cllr L T Cosgrave was one of those who voted to defer the M.J. Cosgrave/Creaven motion.

7.18 Cllr L T Cosgrave acknowledged that he seconded Cllr O'Halloran's motion that 'decisions relating to the Baldoyle/Portmarnock area would be deferred until a site meeting' was held. Questioned as to what had motivated him to second this motion, and what he sought to achieve by this action, Cllr L T

Cosgrave's evidence was that while he was familiar with the lands there were many councillors who were not. He stated: 'I would imagine that 80 or 90 percent of the people had never been within a stone's throw of Baldoyle and that would have been the intention that well it wasn't going to hurt anyone to go and look at the area.'

7.19 Cllr Cosgrave acknowledged that he, like other councillors, would have received the initial rezoning motion which had been lodged on 12 March 1993 and that a map would have accompanied that motion.

7.20 With regard to his decision to second the O'Halloran site visit motion, he was asked whether in doing so he had had considered the fact that if Cllr Healy's 'green belt' motion was passed, the M J Cosgrave/Creaven motion might fall, or whether he believed that the M J Cosgrave/Creaven motion would in any event arise in the normal course of further debate. He could not recall whether he had considered this, nor could he say whether or not he was surprised by the fact that the M J Cosgrave/Creaven motion fell, following the success of the Healy 'green belt' motion.

7.21 Cllr L T Cosgrave said that he had no recollection of seeing Mr Dunlop in the Council chamber on either 20 or 27 April 1993. Nor could he recall the purpose for which he sought to make contact with Mr Dunlop on 20 April 1993. On that date Cllr L T Cosgrave was recorded by Mr Dunlop's secretary as having left the following message for Mr Dunlop at 3.20 pm: 'Liam Cosgrave, not urgent, call him this evening at home.' Notwithstanding that he made this call only two hours after the Council meeting had been adjourned 'due to disorder in the Chamber' during the consideration of the Baldoyle rezoning motion, Cllr L.T Cosgrave stated that the call 'could have been about anything.'

7.22 Other than Cllr L T Cosgrave seconding the O'Halloran site visit motion on 27 April 1993, there was no record of him having taken a proactive role in relation to any other motion concerning the Pennine option lands, save that his voting pattern over the period from 27 April to 6 May 1993 was generally supportive of the proposal to rezone the Baldoyle lands.

7.23 When asked how frequently he met Mr Dunlop at the time in question, Cllr. L T Cosgrave stated:

'Well, I suppose if he was down there at meetings or in the local hostelry or hotel, you could run into him but I wouldn't call them meetings as distinct from just you might pass, there used to be a number of people in the foyer of the Council, if you were going through, people you knew, you would probably acknowledge them.'

7.24 Cllr L T Cosgrave told the Tribunal that he had no memory of any meeting or discussion with Mr Dunlop in relation to the rezoning motion relating to the Baldoyle lands.

7.25 Mr Dunlop's evidence in support of his allegation that he paid IR£1,000 in cash to Cllr L T Cosgrave in relation to the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands was vague and imprecise, with regard to any discussion between himself and Cllr L T Cosgrave which accompanied either the request for payment by Cllr L T Cosgrave, or the actual payment to him. In those circumstances, the Tribunal was not satisfied to find that Mr Dunlop had indeed paid money to Cllr L T Cosgrave in relation to the Baldoyle lands.

COUNCILLOR JACK LARKIN

7.26 Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Larkin in return for his support for the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands.

7.27 Prior to his death on 6 May 1998, Cllr Larkin completed a questionnaire (dated 23 March 1998), at the invitation of the Tribunal in which he denied receiving improper payments or benefits as an elected councillor from identified individuals and/or entities in relation to certain lands.

7.28 Cllr Larkin's voting pattern in April/May 1993 was supportive of the project to rezone the Baldoyle lands. There was no record of any contact between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Larkin, either by way of diary entry or recorded telephone contact, in the period from 1 March to 20 April 1993 (or indeed for the remaining duration of the Baldoyle rezoning attempt).

7.29 Mr Dunlop's evidence in support of his contention that he paid Cllr Larkin money in relation to the Baldoyle lands was sparse. In those circumstances, the Tribunal was not satisfied to find as a matter of probability that a payment was made to Cllr Larkin by Mr Dunlop in relation to the Baldoyle lands.

COUNCILLOR CYRIL GALLAGHER

7.30 Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Gallagher in return for his support for the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands. He told the Tribunal that Cllr Gallagher requested the payment in return for his signature on the Baldoyle lands rezoning motion which was lodged with Dublin County Council on 12 March 1993.

7.31 Cllr Gallagher was the only one of the four signatories of this motion who Mr Dunlop alleged was paid any money in relation thereto.

7.32 Mr Dunlop's diary referred to a meeting with Cllr Gallagher on the 11 March 1993. It was probable that Cllr Gallagher signed the Baldoyle rezoning motion on that occasion. (This motion was withdrawn on 20 April 1993 and replaced by another rezoning motion in the names of Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven which had been lodged with Dublin County Council by 14 April 1993.)

7.33 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that aside from signing this motion, Cllr Gallagher did not otherwise play a proactive role in the rezoning process as it progressed.

7.34 Asked when he might have paid Cllr Gallagher for his support, Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well, I think it is likely that at the time that he signed the first motion that we had a discussion about a payment and that subsequent to that, I cannot say to you before or after the withdrawing of that motion. But certainly I had a discussion with him, I have given evidence already in relation to many modules. And I had a discussion with him in which the subject of money was raised and the normal fee that I – not fee, it's not the word. The normal amount of money concerned was £1,000. But I cannot say to you exactly when I paid him. He continued to support the project, to the best of my recollection, voted in all of the motions and all of the motions changed and altered, even in the heat of the battle on the council floor. But I cannot precisely say to you when I gave him the money.'

7.35 On the issue of his claim that he paid Cllr Gallagher, Mr Dunlop was questioned as follows:

Q. Right. And do I understand from that response where you say that you usually gave him 1,000, that you are making to some extent an assumption that the sum that you paid him in respect of this particular project was 1,000 or are you saying that you have a recollection?

A. No.

Q. Of paying him 1,000?

A. No, it is I have a recollection because as with others, which I presume we will deal with, as with others, we had a discussion in relation to my involvement. I was not saying, notwithstanding the comments that you've made this morning. I was not saying to any councillor I am the front man for this consortium or development. Quite the contrary. The image was created that I, this was actually my project. And the attitude on various people's parts was we must do this for Frank.

Q. Yes?

A. And in that context, I had a discussion with Cyril Gallagher. I said to Cyril Gallagher, this is something that I am doing myself. In an attempt, in an attempt to reduce as much as possible any outgoings that I might have.

Q. Right.

A. Now, it did not occur in the context of the two other councillors with whom I had a slightly fractious debate about it. But not in the context of Cyril Gallagher.

Q. So, to the extent that in this particular instance, you are more identified with having a personal interest in the project rather than being the representative of a named developer and/or builder, as the case may be, isn't that right?

A. Cyril – I don't mean to be disrespectful, but Cyril really couldn't give a damn. He was doing something for me. In a way, he did something for me all of the time when I approached him in relation to motions or signatures or support.

Q. Yes?

A. There were occasions when I did specifically tell him who the promoter or developer was, for whom I was acting. I did not do so in this instance.

Q. Yes and is that-when you say that that translated into there being no difference in the fee, if I could call it that? He charged you what he was going to charge you, even if you were acting for somebody else?

A. I think so, yes.

7.36 Mr Dunlop again said that he was unable to confirm that the payment to Cllr Gallagher was made on a particular date, but that 'certainly it was within the period on which this was coming before the council.' Cllr Gallagher's voting pattern in the period from 27 April to 6 May 1993 was generally supportive of the Baldoyle rezoning project.

7.37 The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment to Cllr Gallagher was made as alleged by Mr Dunlop, and that it had been requested by him. In those circumstances, the payment was corrupt.

COUNCILLOR TOM HAND

7.38 Mr Dunlop alleged that Cllr Hand requested money for his support for the rezoning motion as a result of which he paid him IR£1,000.

7.39 Cllr Hand, according to Mr Dunlop, was aware of Mr Dunlop's personal involvement in the project. He told the Tribunal that he had a specific recollection of discussions between himself and Cllr Hand concerning the payment of IR£1,000, discussions which Mr Dunlop described as 'fractious' because Cllr Hand 'was looking for a greater sum than 1,000 pounds.' Mr Dunlop had no particular recollection of the actual payment of the money.

7.40 He described his discussion with Councillor Hand in the following terms:
'In the case of Tom Hand. I had an argument with Tom Hand about it. Notwithstanding the fact that I made the – I posited it in the way that it was me. This was something that I was going to ... benefit from. And I was doing it. Tom was, notwithstanding anybody else's view of it, Tom was quite a realist and he said 'look if this is going through you're going to make a hell of a lot of money'... and we had a discussion with him. But I sort of held my ground, as it were, and we – I agreed to give him 1,000 pounds.'

7.41 The Tribunal was satisfied that there was frequent contact between Cllr Hand and Mr Dunlop in the period from March to April 1993. A number of telephone calls were made to Mr Dunlop's office by Cllr Hand between 1 March 1993 and 16 April 1993, and there was a reference to Cllr Hand in Mr Dunlop's diary for 8 March 1993. In a telephone message left with Mr Dunlop's secretary on 10 March 1993, Cllr Hand was said to have stated that he was 'anxious to do that bit of business' with Mr Dunlop. Asked what inference was to be drawn from that recorded statement Mr Dunlop responded:

'In relation to Mr Hand in particular, who's no longer with us, and can't answer for himself. But I did have a very close relationship with him and I met him very, very frequently and he did a number of things for me and was extremely cooperative and I did give him money. He signed the motions for me. He actively supported various developments. And for me to say specifically that it related to a payment, which is I presume what you mean when you use the word euphemism... or whether it was to look after signing a motion or whatever. I hesitate to be specific. But because of my relationship with Mr Hand, there is no doubt that it relates only to matters in Dublin County Council.'

7.42 Mr Dunlop agreed that other than matters pertaining to Cllr Hand's role as a councillor he had no business or commercial relationship with him. Cllr Hand's voting pattern in April and May 1993 was generally supportive of the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands.

7.43 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop had a sufficiently clear recollection of the circumstances in which Cllr Hand sought payment (although not of the actual payment itself) in return for his support, and was therefore satisfied that such a payment was made to Cllr Hand. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that he and Cllr Hand had an argument in relation to the payment and its amount and was satisfied that that occurrence aided Mr Dunlop's recollection of agreeing to the payment. The Tribunal was satisfied to accept Mr Dunlop's evidence in circumstances where it was established from evidence in other modules that by the Spring of 1993 Mr Dunlop and Cllr Hand had engaged in a number of dealings where money was sought by, and paid to, Cllr Hand. The said payment was corrupt.

COUNCILLOR TONY FOX

7.44 Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Fox in return for his support of the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands.

7.45 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he had a particular memory of a discussion he had with Cllr Fox when the subject of the IR£1,000 arose. He told the Tribunal that Cllr Fox enquired of him as to how much Mr Dunlop was prepared to pay him for his support in relation to the Baldoyle lands project, and Mr Dunlop said he suggested IR£1,000. Mr Dunlop recalled Cllr Fox indicating to him that this sum was insufficient. Mr Dunlop went on to say that in spite of this disagreement, Cllr Fox eventually agreed to accept IR£1,000, and that the sum was paid to him. Mr Dunlop said:

'In the case of Tony Fox, when the discussion took place with him in relation to what I was going to give him. And I said £1,000. That wasn't enough. I agreed – we finally agreed that was it. Again, in the context that this was money, this was my proposal, I was doing it. There was no backing as it were, I wasn't getting the money from anywhere else.'

7.46 Mr Dunlop agreed that the discussion between himself and Cllr Fox in relation to the payment was 'a bit contentious', but said it was 'less contentious' than the similar debate he had had with Cllr Hand. Mr Dunlop said that Cllr Fox 'was very realistically appreciable of what this [rezoning motion] would entail if it went through.'

7.47 There were two recorded contacts between Cllr Fox and Mr Dunlop's office in the period from 1 March to 20 April 1993, namely on 9 and 31 March 1993. On 31 March 1993, Cllr Fox requested Mr Dunlop to call him. Asked why Cllr Fox might have wanted Mr Dunlop to contact him at that time, Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well it can only – without being blasé about it, can only relate to matters dealing with Dublin County Council. Tony Fox rarely, rarely called the office. There are very few indications of his contact with me by telephone in my telephone lists... we either met at the Council or arranged to meet at the Council the following day of the following week or whatever. That is the way he operated. But, no, I don't have a specific recollection. [...] He either wants to tell me something that has either happened at the Council or is going to happen at the Council or he wants to arrange to meet me.'

7.48 Mr Dunlop agreed that he did not have a personal or business relationship with Cllr Fox, other than in the context of motions coming before the Council.

7.49 Cllr Fox's voting pattern in April and May 1993 was generally supportive of the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands.

7.50 In relation to his contact with Mr Dunlop, Cllr Fox reiterated evidence previously given by him that his recollection of having been lobbied by Mr Dunlop was in connection with particular developments, other than the Baldoyle rezoning proposal. With regard to Mr Dunlop's telephone records which documented contact by Cllr Fox in March 1993, Cllr Fox reiterated evidence previously given by him in relation to the reason for them, namely that he was merely returning calls to him from Mr Dunlop. In response to Mr Dunlop's allegations regarding the alleged payment of IR£1,000 to him in relation to Baldoyle, Cllr Fox stated: 'I emphatically deny wholeheartedly, its complete untruth.'

7.51 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop had a strong recollection of the circumstances in which money was sought by Cllr Fox in return for his support for the Baldoyle lands rezoning project. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment was made as alleged by Mr Dunlop. The Tribunal also rejected Cllr Fox's contention that he had never been lobbied in relation to the Baldoyle lands. The payment was corrupt.

COUNCILLOR DONAL LYDON

7.52 Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Lydon in return for his support for the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands, but he could not specify the date on which this payment was made.

7.53 Cllr Lydon's voting pattern was generally supportive of the project. There was no record of any contact between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Lydon, either by way of diary entry or recorded telephone contact, in the period from 1 March to 20 April 1993 (or indeed for the remaining duration of the Baldoyle rezoning attempt).

7.54 Cllr Lydon denied that Mr Dunlop had ever approached him in order to pay him money for his support in Baldoyle. He acknowledged that he was very familiar with the presence of Mr Dunlop in the environs of the Council throughout the course of the review of the 1983 Development Plan, and commented that Mr Dunlop was 'nearly always present.' Although Cllr Lydon did not recall Mr Dunlop's presence in relation to the Baldoyle rezoning proposal, he acknowledged that Mr Dunlop had written to him 'probably looking for support or something' and went on to state that 'he probably talked to me about this as well because it would be absolutely, beyond belief if he didn't because he was going to make £10m out of it, I think he canvassed everybody.'

7.55 Cllr Lydon did not initially recall publicity with regard to the Baldoyle rezoning proposal which had appeared in newspapers in 1991 and believed that even if he had seen it he would not have paid attention to it as 'it was away in the far end of the county, it didn't matter to me to be honest with you.' Cllr Lydon recalled the Baldoyle rezoning proposal as being 'a controversial thing' but did not recall its actual detail. Cllr Lydon could not recollect if the reason for the deferral of the M J Cosgrave/Creaven rezoning motion had been connected to media coverage of the proposal on 27 April 1993, but agreed it was likely to have been the case. In response to the question 'and I suppose in real politics, there's no way it would have gone through with that sort of publicity attaching to it isn't that right?' Cllr Lydon responded: 'I think so, yes. It wasn't anything to do with Mr Dunlop making money, I don't think anybody minded him getting rich but it was the controversy that surrounded the whole zoning thing.'

7.56 When questioned about Mr Dunlop's evidence that he and Mr Lawlor had made a strategic decision on 27 April 1993 to seek the deferral of the rezoning motion, and whether it indicated to him anything as to the manner in which the Council was being controlled at that time, Cllr Lydon stated:

‘Well, it seemed like he had control over a couple of people anyway. I don’t think he had control over many more. I think – I always thought that Frank Dunlop assumed he had control when he hadn’t. Mr Dunlop. I mean, as I said before one time before all those motions, he would be outside there, ‘go on in there and vote for that I’ll look after you’ that’s what he kept saying and but I don’t think people ever voted for him or indeed for anybody else if they didn’t want to.’

7.57 Cllr Lydon told the Tribunal that he found ‘extraordinary’ Mr Dunlop’s evidence regarding the manner in which he had drafted correspondence in the names of councillors and the chairperson of the Council.

7.58 Cllr Lydon rejected Mr Dunlop’s evidence that he paid him money in relation to the Baldoyle lands. He stated that (as he had done in other modules) he received two contributions from Mr Dunlop, one of IR£1,000 for the Senate election in January 1993 which he said was unsolicited, and one solicited contribution in 1999 for the Local Elections. Cllr Lydon denied there was any connection between the IR£1,000 Seanad contribution given to him in January 1993 and any support he would have given to rezoning proposals associated with Mr Dunlop. Cllr Lydon stated:

‘He (Mr Dunlop) did this with a number of people, he sent them donations for the Senate and I suppose he did it, like I said before, because he was a lobbyist and he wanted to keep well in with us, there was no conditions attached, he didn’t attach any, definitely, I can say that for him.’

7.59 Asked if he believed that Mr Dunlop had any grounds for a personal grudge or antagonism towards him which would have motivated him to give false testimony in relation to him, Cllr Lydon responded:

‘I don’t think he has any personal grudge against me, I never thought he had. I think he got stuck the night he was sent home by Justice Flood and he picked out the people who had done favours for him, proposed or seconded something and the rest were dead that’s all there is to it. That’s what I believe.’

7.60 The Tribunal was not satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid IR£1,000, or any sum, to Cllr Lydon specifically in return for his support for the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands. Mr Dunlop’s evidence in relation to the allegation was imprecise, vague and therefore unreliable.

COUNCILLOR JOHN O'HALLORAN

7.61 Over the course of his evidence in a number of modules, Mr Dunlop alleged that he made payments totalling IR£5,000 to Cllr O'Halloran in return for his support in a number of rezoning issues coming before Dublin County Council in the period 1991 to 1993, with which he was associated.²⁷ One of the alleged payments was in respect of the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands. Cllr O'Halloran denied receiving any payment of any nature from Mr Dunlop in relation to the Baldoyle lands or indeed relating to any other matter arising in the course of the review of the County Dublin Development Plan.

7.62 As set out previously in this chapter, Cllr O'Halloran had a considerable involvement with the Baldoyle lands rezoning project. Indeed, on 27 April 1993, 4 May 1993 and 6 May 1993, he was the proposer of motions to defer the decision on the rezoning of the area until a site visit was held to allow all councillors to view the lands.

7.63 This significant involvement with the Baldoyle lands rezoning project appeared to be in conflict with Cllr O'Halloran's evidence that neither Mr Dunlop nor anyone else had made representations to him in relation to it. Specifically, he denied Mr Dunlop's evidence that the motion proposed by him on 4 May 1993 had been drafted by Mr Dunlop or that it was prepared on his advice. Cllr O'Halloran denied discussing the issue with, or taking advice from, Mr Dunlop in relation to that matter. He, however, did not dispute Mr Dunlop's evidence that the letter dated 4 May 1993 which was sent by him to Cllr Ridge had been typed in Mr Dunlop's office. Cllr O'Halloran however insisted that it had not been drafted by Mr Dunlop.

7.64 There was evidence of significant and regular contact between Cllr O'Halloran and Mr Dunlop. Indeed, there were over fifteen occasions between 1 March and 6 May 1993 when Cllr O'Halloran contacted Mr Dunlop's office, including on 19 April, 3 May, 4 May and 5 May. Cllr O'Halloran did not directly challenge the telephone records maintained by Mr Dunlop's secretary. Mr Dunlop's diary also indicated a meeting with Cllr O'Halloran on 19 April 1993, the day before the Baldoyle rezoning motion was due to be voted on.

7.65 While the Tribunal was satisfied (from evidence in this, and in other modules), that Cllr O'Halloran did on occasion receive small payments in the region of IR£500 each from Mr Dunlop in the course of the making of the Development Plan 1991-1993, it could not determine which of Mr Dunlop's development projects these payments related to. The Tribunal was however satisfied that insofar as Cllr O'Halloran solicited and/or accepted such payments, he did so improperly in the knowledge that Mr Dunlop was a lobbyist in relation to rezoning issues current in Dublin County, including Baldoyle.

²⁷ The issue of Mr Dunlop's allegation that he made a composite payment of IR£5,000 to Cllr O'Halloran is considered in detail in Part 7 of Chapter Two.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF COUNCILLORS M J COSGRAVE AND LIAM CREAVEN IN THE ATTEMPTS TO REZONE THE BALDOYLE LANDS²⁸

8.01 Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven were closely involved in the project to rezone the Baldoyle lands. Although members of opposing political parties, both councillors were close friends and tended to work in harmony on issues arising in the course of the review of the County Development Plan. This fact was indeed acknowledged by Cllr Creaven in his evidence, and was certainly the view expressed by Mr Dunlop in this and in other modules.

8.02 The role played by Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven in the project to rezone the Baldoyle lands was significant. Both were signatories to two crucial rezoning motions lodged respectively with Dublin County Council on 12 March 1993, and prior to 14 April 1993, and which came before the Council at its Special Meeting of 20 April 1993. These motions were drafted by Mr Dunlop with assistance from Mr Lawlor, although both Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven said that they were unaware of Mr Lawlor's involvement with those motions.

8.03 On Day 705, Mr Dunlop agreed with the suggestion put to him by Counsel for the Tribunal, referring to Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven, 'that their actual input in that strategy was zero. They were not the creators of the motion, it wasn't their concept, they did not – it did not come from their combined or individual thinking of the issue.'

8.04 In their evidence to the Tribunal, both councillors and especially Cllr M J Cosgrave, took issue with the manner in which Mr Dunlop described their involvement. Cllr M J Cosgrave, in particular, maintained that he had an input in the wording of the various motions and more importantly in the proposals put forward in these motions. By way of example, he claimed credit for the proposal to cap the number of houses to be built on the lands at 450, and that there should be a golf course and a pitch and putt course included in the development. These, he said, were his ideas although they were written in Mr Dunlop's handwriting and typed by Mr Dunlop. He said that this was because 'Mr Dunlop was very good at putting together motions.'

²⁸This Section of the Report should be read in conjunction with the earlier section of this chapter headed 'The correspondence between Councillors M J Cosgrave, Creaven and Ridge.'

8.05 Cllr M J Cosgrave acknowledged that he was lobbied by Mr Dunlop to sign the motions on behalf of Pennine. He said that he supported the limited development of the Baldoyle lands for the benefit of the community and for the provision of 450 houses. He was of the view that the lands constituted a derelict site and were of no value to the community in their undeveloped state. He also acknowledged that he was aware that Mr Dunlop had an option on the lands, but beyond that, he was not sure of the ownership details.

8.06 Cllr Creaven's evidence was largely similar to that of Cllr M J Cosgrave. He did not take issue with the fact that Mr Dunlop lobbied him on the basis that he, Mr Dunlop, had an interest in the lands. He maintained however that he supported the development of the Baldoyle lands for a mix of leisure space and housing development. It was his belief that the development of the lands would benefit people in his constituency.

8.07 Both councillors claimed lack of memory in relation to the circumstances in which correspondence in their names, addressed to the acting chairperson of Dublin County Council, Cllr Ridge and designed to ensure that the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands would remain a live issue in the Council, came about.

8.08 Although it was unlikely that Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven were directly involved in the formulation of the strategy or the preparation of the correspondence in question, the Tribunal was satisfied that they nevertheless fully consented to such correspondence being prepared and sent in their names, and that, almost certainly, and contrary to what was stated by them, they had a clear recollection of those events. The Tribunal believed that both councillors acted to promote the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands in the absence of any individual or independent assessment on their part of the merits of that proposal.

8.09 It appeared to the Tribunal that both Cllrs M J Cosgrave and Creaven, as elected councillors, permitted themselves to be controlled and used for the purposes of promoting the private interests of Mr Dunlop (and others), and that this amounted to an abuse of their role, duty and obligation as councillors. The Tribunal rejected their claimed ignorance of the extent to which they permitted themselves to be used and manipulated (and were, in fact, so used and manipulated) by Mr Dunlop.

8.10 Mr Dunlop made no allegation of any improper or corrupt payments to either Cllrs M J Cosgrave or Creaven in relation to the Baldoyle lands rezoning project or indeed any other rezoning projects. Cllr M J Cosgrave acknowledged that he received a payment of IR£1,000 from Mr Dunlop in January 1993²⁹, two months or so before his involvement with the Baldoyle lands issue. Both Mr Dunlop and Cllr M J Cosgrave claimed that this was a bona fide political donation made and received at the time of the Seanad Election in January 1993, in which Cllr M J Cosgrave was a candidate.

MR LAWLOR'S RELATIONSHIP WITH MR SHUBOTHAM AND MR HICKEY PRIOR TO JANUARY 1991

MR LAWLOR AND CITYWEST

9.01 Mr Dunlop identified Mr Lawlor as the person who introduced him to Citywest, and the individual whom he believed was the originator of the Citywest concept.

9.02 Mr Dunlop was initially involved as a lobbyist in the Citywest venture having been retained to assist in securing planning permission for the proposed development. The necessary planning permission could only be secured with a successful material contravention motion in Dublin County Council, as the Citywest lands were not zoned under the 1983 Development Plan for the proposed development, namely an Industrial and Business Park.

9.03 Mr Dunlop testified that towards the end of 1989 and into the beginning of 1990 he, together with Mr Lawlor, attended a meeting with Mr Shubotham in the offices of Davy Stockbrokers after Mr Dunlop had been contacted by Mr Shubotham on the recommendation of Mr Lawlor. This meeting took place prior to Mr Hickey's involvement in the venture. Following Mr Hickey's appointment as Managing Director of Davy Hickey Properties in July 1990, Mr Dunlop met with Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham to discuss the process by which the planning permission for Citywest could be best achieved. He believed that it was Mr Lawlor who had initially identified the Citywest lands to Mr Shubotham.

9.04 By mid 1991 Mr Dunlop's lobbying on behalf of Citywest had concluded, the material contravention motion to approve the planning permission application having been successfully passed by Dublin County Council on 11 March 1991. As acknowledged by Mr Dunlop himself, his lobbying activity for Citywest thereafter was sporadic and largely involved public relations work.

9.05 In a statement furnished to the Tribunal on 8 April 2002, Mr Lawlor advised as follows:

²⁹ See Part 7 of Chapter Two.

Through a mutual contact a meeting was arranged with the above personnel. Due to the lack of an international type Business Park to provide jobs on the west side of Dublin and as Council management were suggesting a substantial area of Corcagh Demesne, a regional park should be promoted as a job creation location. I suggested the above executives should explore the possibility of setting up an international business park on lands owned by the late Dick Killeen [...] The parties went forward and provided what is today City West Business park.

It is my recollection that I recommended Mr Frank Dunlop to Davy Hickey Properties.

9.06 In a later statement dated 15 December 2004, Mr Lawlor appeared to eschew the reasons which he had previously given for his having suggested the Citywest lands for development, when he stated, inter alia, as follows:

This proposal was vehemently opposed by the Planning Manager and his senior staff to the extent that a bus tour was arranged for the elected members and senior planning staff which outlined management's intentions as recommended on the tour. This intention was to locate a Business Park on the Council's lands on the northern side of the Naas Dual Carriageway, opposite Citywest Business Park in Corcagh Demesne, Council records will establish the full details of management's policy on this matter.³⁰

9.07 In the course of correspondence with the Tribunal on 1 February 2005, with reference to Mr Dunlop's involvement in the Pennine option lands and in Citywest, Mr Lawlor stated as follows:

I am also aware that Mr Frank Dunlop derived a substantial financial gain from his dealings in the lands at Baldoyle and similarly so in relation to the Citywest Business Park project, the largest material contravention of a County Development Plan in the history of the State.

THE EVIDENCE OF MR SHUBOTHAM IN RELATION TO MR LAWLOR'S INVOLVEMENT IN CITYWEST

9.08 Mr Shubotham believed that the originator of the idea of a Business Park for Citywest was Mr Jim Bolger, a racehorse trainer, and he disputed Mr Dunlop's evidence, and Mr Lawlor's assertion, that the idea was Mr Lawlor's.

³⁰In the course of the said statement Mr Lawlor referred to Mr Dunlop's claim that he made donations to politicians (including Mr Lawlor himself) on behalf of the promoters of Citywest and, in view of Mr Dunlop's having categorised certain payments to councillors as made to influence their actions while exercising their functions at public meetings of the Council and, on the other hand, Mr Dunlop having claimed to have made payments he categorised as political donations to local and national politicians, Mr Lawlor called upon the Tribunal to investigate Mr Dunlop's actions in representing Davy Hickey Properties.

9.09 However when asked on Day 708: 'Discussions had taken place between yourself and Mr Lawlor I take it in the context of City West or do you have any memory of him being involved or do you say it's purely with Mr Bolger that you had this arrangement?' Mr Shubotham replied:

'Again, very hard to put a time line on it. But certainly somewhere along the way you would say that if Liam Lawlor was around you were discussing the idea of what you are about. Liam Lawlor would be there, wonderful idea, great idea, supportive, whatever else. So I can't tell you whether that was before we bought the lands, while we were buying the lands, but it's most unlikely to have been before we bought the lands.'

9.10 Mr Shubotham acknowledged that prior to the acquisition of the Citywest lands, he had a business relationship with Mr Lawlor through Davy Stockbrokers. Indeed, Mr Lawlor was a shareholder in Gandon Holdings, a company which in 1988 owned a 45% shareholding in Davy Stockbrokers. Mr Shubotham described Mr Lawlor's shareholding as 'tiny.' He acknowledged however that he had corresponded with Mr Lawlor in the context of an invitation to Gandon shareholders to subscribe for additional shares. Mr Shubotham insisted that Mr Lawlor was not a regular client of Davy's.

9.11 Aside from this commercial relationship, Mr Lawlor was also known to Mr Shubotham before the Citywest venture through their mutual interest in horseracing, both having retained Mr Bolger as their trainer for a period.

9.12 In documentation provided by Mr Lawlor to the Tribunal in which he outlined the monies he received from individuals and various entities, Mr Lawlor attributed a IR£5,000 cheque received on 6 June 1989 to 'David Shubotham Davy.'

9.13 In a letter dated 13 July 2000, Davy Stockbrokers confirmed having a written record of a payment of IR£5,000 to Mr Lawlor in June 1989, stated by the writer (Davy's compliance officer) to be 'a contribution to his General Election campaign.' The Tribunal was advised that there was 'no supporting documentation for the donation, merely a written record of a cheque dated 1st June 1989 for Mr Lawlor.'

9.14 Although he did not recollect him doing so, Mr Shubotham suggested that it may have been the case that Mr Lawlor approached him for a political donation in 1989.

THE EVIDENCE OF MR HICKEY IN RELATION TO MR LAWLOR'S
INVOLVEMENT IN CITYWEST

9.15 Mr Hickey told the Tribunal that at the time of his recruitment by Davy Stockbrokers in connection with the Citywest project, the Citywest lands had already been identified for acquisition and a price had been agreed between Mr Shubotham and the landowner. Mr Hickey did not know who had originally introduced the Citywest concept to Mr Shubotham. He professed to have no knowledge of the suggestion that Mr Lawlor was the person who brought the concept of Citywest to Mr Shubotham.

9.16 However, he acknowledged an involvement in the Citywest project on the part of Mr Lawlor as the latter had, Mr Hickey stated, turned up to quite a lot of Citywest meetings in the company of Mr Dunlop. He acknowledged that Mr Lawlor 'was very helpful' in relation to Citywest. In particular, Mr Hickey described Mr Lawlor as having advised himself and Mr Shubotham on how to liaise with a number of State agencies, including the Air Corps, Aer Rianta and the Department of Defence, with a view to resolving difficulties they were encountering at the time in relation to Citywest's proximity to Baldonnell airport. Mr Hickey said that Mr Lawlor 'had a very good grasp of the machinery of State' and 'knew exactly how the various entities interlinked. [...] I have to say that he was helpful in indicating how we would go about it, who we should contact etc.'

9.17 Nevertheless, Mr Lawlor's tendency to arrive unannounced at Citywest meetings had caused Mr Hickey concern. In relation to this, he said:

'I got concerned that whilst he was very helpful in the beginning that, I don't want to be disparaging, but I felt he was perhaps maybe a little bit of a magpie. Information he was getting from our meetings were going on to other people and it was inappropriate. And I would have raised this issue with David Shubotham. And I think David actually in turn raised that with Frank Dunlop and after that I think his meetings, or him arriving very much ceased. I can't say that they ceased completely but I think they fairly much came to an end. [...] the whole City West concept. It was a very difficult one. Nobody had done it before. I mean, essentially what I was trying to do was create a world class high technology park with a very Irish landscaping and but built around the concept of the 19th Century Victorian Garden cities. Borne Ville working village. It was a highly sophisticated complex that I had to worry my way through every aspect of. I didn't think it was appropriate that he should be at meetings. He would literally turn up. As I say at quite a number of them, he was very helpful but I didn't think it was appropriate. I felt uncomfortable.'

9.18 In his statement to the Tribunal dated 17 January 2001, Mr Hickey described Mr Lawlor's role in Citywest as only that of a political representative and he made no reference to Mr Lawlor's 'magpie' tendencies or to him turning up at meetings at which he was not invited.

MR BYRNE AND MR JIM KENNEDY'S BUSINESS RELATIONSHIP FROM 1986 TO 1993 AND THE INVOLVEMENT OF MR LAWLOR

9.19 Mr Byrne's total landholding in Baldoyle was close to 500 acres. The lands which became the Baldoyle lands (including the Pennine option lands) comprised the bulk of this landholding. All of these lands had been acquired by Mr Byrne in the 1960s and 1970s. These lands were for the most part zoned green belt (including the entire of the Pennine option lands), with a relatively small portion (approximately 11 -12 acres), zoned for residential development.

9.20 Mr Byrne made several unsuccessful attempts to obtain zoning/planning permission for his lands. On 17 December 1984, An Bord Pleanala refused planning permission to Mr Byrne for residential and ancillary development on some 467 acres of his lands at Baldoyle. This refusal was the culmination of the last effort which was made by Mr Byrne personally and by his companies to secure zoning/planning permission for the lands save Mr Byrne's involvement via/in conjunction with Edington Ltd in seeking planning permission, in early 1986, for 110 houses on the portion of his lands (some 11 to 12 acres) zoned residential under the 1983 Development Plan. Planning permission was refused by Dublin County Council on 5 May 1986, but was granted by An Bord Pleanala on 29 July 1988.³¹

9.21 Some of Mr Byrne's lands at Baldoyle which were not part of the Pennine option lands were themselves the subject of an option agreement between Mr Byrne's company Endcamp Ltd and Bauval Ltd.³²

9.22 In the course of the public hearings in this module, the Tribunal conducted a limited inquiry into the Bauval option for the purposes of establishing the nature of Mr Lawlor's relationship with Mr Byrne and the extent to which Mr Lawlor was, by January 1991, in a position to facilitate the bringing together of Mr Byrne and Messrs Shubotham, Hickey and Dunlop for the purposes of the those individuals acquiring an option on part of the lands.

³¹ This issue is considered further below.

³² An Isle of Man registered company.

THE LICENCE AGREEMENT BETWEEN ENDCAMP AND EDINGTON

9.24 On the 27 January 1986, Mr Byrne's company Endcamp Ltd signed a licence agreement with Eddington whereby Eddington was entitled to build a residential development on lands zoned residential in the ownership of Endcamp, with a site fine of IR£5,000 per house to accrue to Endcamp. Pursuant to a statement furnished to the Tribunal by Mr Byrne on 31 May 2004, the Tribunal was satisfied to accept that the Endcamp/Eddington agreement was in all probability the first manifestation of Mr Byrne's relationship with the developer Mr Jim Kennedy in relation to what would evolve as the Bauval option. Their relationship probably commenced sometime in late 1985.

THE NEGOTIATION OF THE BAUVAL OPTION AND THE EDINGTON PLANNING APPLICATION FROM 1986 TO 1988

9.25 In August 1986 a meeting took place between Mr Byrne, Mr Kennedy and Mr Lawlor at Mr Byrne's County Kerry residence. In a statement provided to the Tribunal, Mr Byrne said that Mr Lawlor appeared to him to have attended as an advisor to Mr Kennedy. In the immediate aftermath of that meeting, on 28 August 1986 Mr Kennedy's Solicitors, Binchy and Partners, wrote to Mr Byrne confirming '...on behalf of our clients that they are agreeable to entering into an option agreement with the owners of the land (which we understand involves 80 acres). The option shall be for a period of 4 years and the price per acre will be £20,000.00. The payment for the option shall be in the sum of £50.00...'

9.26 By 18 November 1986, as evidenced by an attendance of Gore Grimes Solicitors, Mr Byrne was instructing his solicitors that he required: '...an option Contract sent out covering 100 acres of land at Baldoyle on which he is prepared to give an option at £20,000 an acre or a total of £2m to a Mr James Kennedy acted for by Binchy and Partners.'

³³The balance of the 100 acres Bauval option was never exercised by Bauval and the option duly lapsed.

9.27 The lands which were the subject matter of Mr Byrne and Mr Kennedy's 'arrangement' in 1986 (and which became the subject matter of the Bauval option agreement signed in November 1988) included the portion of Mr Byrne's lands zoned residential in respect of which application was being made by Edington Ltd for the construction of 110 houses.

9.28 The pursuit of planning permission on the part of Edington Ltd between 1986 and 1988 coincided with the timeframe in which the negotiations took place between Mr Byrne (Endcamp) and Mr Jim Kennedy (Bauval) for the acquisition by the latter of the Bauval option.

9.29 The Tribunal was satisfied that, at all relevant times, it was understood, as between Mr Byrne and Mr Kennedy, that the latter would only exercise the option agreement if the planning permission then being sought by Edington was successful.

9.30 An attendance on Mr Byrne by his solicitors on 11 December 1986 reflected Mr Byrne's belief that if such planning permission was granted the value of the lands could achieve IR£60,000 an acre.³⁴

9.31 The Tribunal established that in the period from 1986 to 1988, Mr Lawlor played an active part in efforts being made via Edington to secure planning permission for 110 houses. Mr Lawlor's involvement in this process was on two fronts, both as an elected public representative and as a party interested in the lands. On one occasion he wrote to the County Council in his capacity as a TD and councillor, following a meeting he had with Council officials, to discuss 'progress being made on the various engineering aspects of the surface and foul drainage network in the Baldoyle area.' The Tribunal was satisfied that this meeting related to the Edington planning permission application, by then on appeal to An Bord Pleanála.

9.32 Mr Lawlor's activity in the timeframe in question included drafting a series of letters to County Council officials and others in the names of Mr Byrne, of Edington Ltd and of a named engineer all of which were aimed at convincing County Council officials that a solution had been found or could be found, for the problems concerning the lands the subject matter of the Edington planning permission application, namely the inadequacy of the sewage and drainage facilities.

9.33 In the course of its inquiries, the Tribunal heard evidence from Ms Joan Clarke who was employed by Mr Lawlor as his secretary in the mid to late 1980s. Ms Clarke identified the following correspondence as having being typed by her on Mr Lawlor's instructions:

- A letter dated 10 October 1986 purporting to be from Mr Byrne on notepaper giving Mr Byrne's address at Simonscourt Lodge, Ballsbridge, addressed to Mr Tom Leahy of Dublin County Council wherein reference was made to proposed solutions for the problems relating to foul drainage and surface water on the lands the subject matter of Edington's appeal to An Bord Pleanala.
- A letter dated 20 May 1987 to a senior engineer in Dublin Corporation, written by Mr Lawlor in his capacity as a T.D. and member of Dublin County Council and which related to the issue of the surface and foul water drainage network in Baldoyle. This letter was written on Dail Eireann notepaper. It was copied, inter alia, to Mr Byrne.
- A letter dated 31 July 1987 purporting to be from Edington, again on headed notepaper giving Mr Byrne's address in Ballsbridge, addressed to An Bord Pleanala reporting progress on the issue of the surface water problems attaching to the lands and making reference to having had discussions with the Council.
- A letter dated 31 July 1987 purporting to be from Edington Ltd again on headed notepaper with Mr Byrne's address in Ballsbridge and addressed to Mr MacDaid, Council Official making reference to a recent meeting which took place in relation to surface water/foul drainage in the Baldoyle area and giving the writers interpretation of that meeting.
- An unsigned draft letter dated 6 November 1987 purporting to be from the engineer to Mr Al Smith, Planning Department, Dublin City Council, with reference to Eddington Ltd, and enclosing detailed technical and planning information regarding Eddington's planning application then under appeal to An Bord Pleanala.
- An unsigned draft letter dated 6 November 1987 again purporting to be from this engineer to An Bord Pleanala, making reference to foul sewer and surface water issues in Baldoyle in the context of Eddington's appeal then before the Board.
- An unsigned draft letter dated 6 November 1987 to Mr MacDaid, Council Official with reference to the Eddington planning permission, purportedly from the engineer expressing gratitude to the Council for its coordination of 'the foul and surface water improvement schemes' in Baldoyle.

9.34 Notwithstanding Mr Byrne's assertion (in the course of statements made by him to the Tribunal) that he was unaware of this correspondence, the Tribunal was satisfied that insofar as Mr Lawlor wrote to Council Officials in the name of Mr Byrne and in the name of others he did so with the imprimatur of Mr Byrne. The Tribunal was further satisfied that Mr Lawlor's endeavours (by virtue of the aforesaid correspondence) were also being done at the behest of and/or with the knowledge of Mr Kennedy. The Tribunal was led to this conclusion by the fact that Mr Lawlor had brought Mr Kennedy and Mr Byrne together. The Tribunal found further evidence for its conclusion in an attendance of Gore & Grimes Solicitors of 23 December 1987. This attendance noted the then ongoing dispute between Mr Byrne and Mr Kennedy as to whether there was a contract for the acquisition of the option in existence (something being denied by Mr Byrne but being asserted by Mr Kennedy) and in that context the attendance noted, inter alia, as follows: 'Kennedy is trying to make the point that there is already a contract in being because he has done all the planning work.'

9.35 The above correspondence indicated the level to which Mr Lawlor orchestrated and managed the process to assist in securing permission for Mr Byrne's lands. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor's work in this regard was being undertaken with a view to facilitating the conclusion of the agreement between Mr Byrne and Mr Kennedy for the latter to take an option on 100 acres of Mr Byrne's lands at Baldoyle.

MR LAWLOR'S INVOLVEMENT IN THE NEGOTIATIONS WHICH LED TO THE CONCLUSION OF THE OPTION AGREEMENT BETWEEN ENDCAMP AND BAUVAL ON 4 NOVEMBER 1988

9.36 An attendance taken by Gore & Grimes dated 5 January 1988 recorded the presence of Mr Lawlor on 23 December 1987 at a meeting between Mr Byrne and Mr Kennedy. Notwithstanding the issue regarding the existence or otherwise of a contract, as of February 1988 negotiations between the two continued and on one particular aspect of the negotiations, namely the boundary line of the 100 acres to be the subject matter of the proposed option agreement, resulted in a successful outcome. The role played by Mr Lawlor in securing the agreement on the boundary line was evidenced in a document entitled 'agreement between Jim Kennedy and John Byrne[...]reached at Simmonscourt, on Wednesday 3rd February 1988, regarding the boundary line of 100 acre holding.' This document, as testified to by Ms Clarke, was typed in Mr Lawlor's office on his instructions and it appeared, was to have formed the basis of correspondence to be sent to Mr Kennedy's solicitors by Mr Byrne's solicitors, Gore & Grimes.

9.37 On 29 July 1988 An Bord Pleanála granted planning permission for the erection of 110 houses on Mr Byrne's lands as sought by Edington.

9.38 On 4 November 1988 Endcamp and Bauval formally concluded the agreement for the latter to acquire an option on the 100 acres. Pursuant to this agreement, Bauval had the option to acquire the 100 acres at £20,000 per acre.³⁵ (Annexed to this option agreement was a 'PLANNING SEQUENCE PROPOSAL' – a step by step guide to the work to be undertaken to secure planning permission for the portion of the option lands which had residential zoning but which had not been the subject of a planning application theretofore. Ms Clarke testified that this document was typed by her on Mr Lawlor's instructions and in a format directed by Mr Lawlor.

THE EXERCISE OF THE BAUVAL OPTION AND THE INVOLVEMENT THEREIN OF MR LAWLOR

9.39 Bauval exercised its option on three occasions. On 6 December 1989, Bauval served Notice to acquire 11.96 acres of the lands.³⁶ On 8 December 1989, the 11.96 acres were to be taken by Bauval in the name of Sabre Developments Ltd at a contract price of IR£239,200. On the same date as Bauval exercised the option, Sabre Developments sold the lands to Mr Finbar Cahill, Solicitor, (in trust) for IR£622,917, netting a profit to Bauval/Sabre Developments/Mr Kennedy of IR£383,000. To that point in time Mr Kennedy's outlay for the option amounted to just IR£50 for the option fee, together with whatever professional expenses he had incurred.

9.40 Two further exercises of the Bauval option took place on 24 January 1991 in respect of a total 36 acres including the 11.96 acres above. Bauval served notice on Endcamp for Cara Sports Ltd to acquire 13.74 acres and for Sabre Developments to acquire 10.24 acres.

9.41 These 1991 option exercises were the subject of ongoing litigation between Mr Byrne/Endcamp and Bauval/Sabre/Cara Sports for a number of years. Eventually, the Sabre option lands were sold to Alcove Developments Ltd on 12 August 1994, and the lands not subject to an option were sold to Ballymore Homes in July 1999.

³⁵Notwithstanding planning permission having been granted the option price remained at IR£20,000 in the contract. Subsequently the purchase price increased to IR£30,000 per acre for part of the option lands.

³⁶These lands had a residential zoning in the 1983 Development Plan and an industrial zoning in the 1991 Draft Development Plan. There were two planning applications by Edington with regard to these lands: application 90A/1036 for 92 houses (lodged on 24/04/1990); application 90A/301 for industrial development (lodged on 24/05/1990). Permission was granted on 24 August 1990 for the industrial development and on 30 August 1991 on appeal for the residential development.

9.42 In the course of its limited inquiry into the Bauval option, the Tribunal established recorded involvement on the part of Mr Lawlor with regard to the option lands which were being acquired by Bauval via Cara Sports and Sabre Developments.

9.43 In instructions provided by Gore & Grimes Solicitors on 28 January 1992 to Senior Counsel retained by Endcamp (in relation to anticipated and/or ongoing litigation with Bauval etc. regarding the option) reference was made by Mr Byrne/Endcamp's solicitor Mr Gore-Grimes to Mr Lawlor in the following terms: 'He (Mr Kennedy) is represented by Liam Lawlor and Liam Lawlor is very closely involved in this whole deal.'

9.44 Mr Gore-Grimes believed Mr Lawlor to have been Mr Kennedy's agent, a sort of middleman 'who would approach rezoning Councillors.' He acknowledged however Mr Lawlor's substantial involvement in particular in relation to the lands the subject of the option Notices of 24 January 1991.

9.45 In a further attendance of Gore & Grimes Solicitors dated 5 March 1992 reference was made, inter alia, to Mr Byrne's intention 'to go and see Mr Lawlor' in relation to specific aspects of the 1991 option exercises by Bauval/Sabre Developments/Cara Sports which remained unresolved. This approach was made by Mr Byrne in light of High Court proceedings having been commenced against Endcamp by Bauval/Sabre/Cara Sports seeking specific performance of the sale of the lands the subject matter of the Bauval Notices of 24 January 1991. On 6 April 1992, Mr John Gore-Grimes noted Mr Byrne's instruction 'that Liam Lawlor had been in touch with him but really he had made his case perfectly clear.'

9.46 Mr Lawlor's ongoing involvement in the dispute between Endcamp/Bauval/Sabre/Cara Sports was equally evident in 1993, as evidenced again by an attendance of Mr John Gore-Grimes of 18 March 1993 wherein, inter alia, he noted Mr Byrne advising him that Mr Caldwell (of Binchy & Partners) was awaiting instructions from Mr Lawlor.³⁷

9.47 On 5 April 1993, Mr Gore-Grimes wrote to Mr Byrne under the heading 'Re: Endcamp Limited to Sabre Developments Limited' enclosing a draft contract and, inter alia, made reference as follows with regard to a proposed closing date for the contract: 'The closing date is six months after ratification and again I have provided that ratification must not be later than the 1st January 1994. This is as per Liam Lawlor's own programme.' The letter also referred to the price per acre for the lands having increased from IR£20,000 (as provided for in the option agreement) to IR£30,000. Mr John Gore-Grimes, in evidence, acknowledged that this increase was probably negotiated by Mr Byrne and Mr Lawlor.

9.48 A letter of 29 June 1993 from Mr Gore-Grimes to Mr Byrne with the title 'Endcamp Limited and Sabre Developments' contained, inter alia, the following: 'Liam Lawlor was in the office the other day and I asked him what was happening', a reference, the Tribunal was satisfied, to Mr Gore-Grimes having made enquiries of Mr Lawlor with regard to the Bauval option lands which were to be acquired by Sabre Developments.

9.49 The Tribunal's limited inquiry into matters relating to the Bauval option established conclusively that Mr Lawlor was intrinsically involved both with Mr Byrne and Mr Kennedy in (i) the coming into being of that option, (ii) the planning permission application/appeal by Edington, which facilitated the option being concluded, and (iii) the exercise of that option by Bauval in December 1989 and January 1991.

9.50 In the course of its inquiries the Tribunal established that in 1998 Mr Lawlor was the beneficiary of the sum of approximately IR£335,000, money which was part of the proceeds of sale of portion of the lands in respect of which Bauval exercised its option in January 1991.

THE SIMILARITIES BETWEEN MR LAWLOR'S INVOLVEMENT WITH REGARD TO THE BAUVAL OPTION AND HIS INVOLVEMENT WITH REGARD TO THE PENNINE OPTION

9.51 Much of the involvement on the part of Mr Lawlor in the years 1986 to 1993 vis-à-vis the Bauval option was mirrored by his actions in relation to the Pennine option in the years 1991 to 1993.

9.52 In both instances, Mr Lawlor was the individual who brought together the option grantor (Mr Byrne) and the option grantees Mr Kennedy (Bauval) and Messrs Dunlop, Hickey and Shubotham (Baldoyle/Pennine).

9.53 To progress the Bauval option, Mr Lawlor involved himself directly in the Edington planning permission appeal by meeting with and drafting letters to be sent to a number of officials, in an attempt to secure a favourable outcome from An Bord Pleanála. To realise the potential of the Pennine option lands, Mr Lawlor, together with Mr Dunlop, embarked on a strategy to attempt to obtain the rezoning of these lands, which included Mr Lawlor compiling, on foot of information provided by professionals, the rezoning submission made to the County Council in November 1991 and as well as him assisting Mr Dunlop with the preparation and drafting of a number of motions and maps.

9.54 Moreover, in the wake of the series of unfortunate events which befell the Baldoyle rezoning proposal on 27 April 1993, both within and outside the County Council, Mr Lawlor, together with Mr Dunlop, embarked in May 1993 on the task of drafting correspondence in the names of Cllrs M.J. Cosgrave and Creaven to Cllr Ridge (the acting chairperson of Dublin County Council), in order to keep the Baldoyle rezoning proposal alive.

9.55 For Mr Byrne's part, Mr Lawlor's presence and assistance with regard to the Bauval option was well documented in the attendances of Gore & Grimes Solicitors. Mr Dunlop, in evidence, acknowledged the role played by Mr Lawlor in bringing the option parties together and in the attempt to secure the rezoning of the lands, although he claimed to have no knowledge of any possible beneficial interest on the part of Mr Lawlor in the Pennine option.

MR LAWLOR'S INVOLVEMENT IN RELATION TO THE PENNINE OPTION

9.56 In the course of a statement provided to the Tribunal on 8 April 2002, Mr Lawlor, inter alia, stated as follows:

I have known John Byrne for over 20 years.

I had discussions with him in the 80's regarding the findings of the ERDO (Eastern Regional Development Organisation) Study relating to the options for population placement in the Eastern region of the country and other general information.

Mr John Byrne, for many years, was the owner of the Baldoyle Racecourse lands. He sought my views as the lands were lying vacant and in the interest of safety he had to demolish the old stand and other derelict buildings on the site.

I would have met John Byrne socially and would have had general discussions with him over the years.

I arranged a lunch/meeting at Davy Stockbrokers and in attendance were Mr David Shubotham, Mr Brendan Hickey, Mr Frank Dunlop, Mr John Byrne and myself. Arising from that lunch the parties entered into some form of business relationship of which I was not a party to. To the best of my knowledge the business relationship never advanced to finality by the parties.

Mr John Byrne would have supported some of the annual fundraising events.

9.57 The Tribunal was nevertheless satisfied to accept Mr Dunlop's evidence that Mr Lawlor was an active participant in the negotiations which led to the acquisition of Pennine option from Mr Byrne, as well as in the subsequent attempt to rezone the Baldoyle lands. It also appeared to the Tribunal that the initial idea of bringing together Mr Byrne, Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham and Mr Dunlop was that of Mr Lawlor.

MESSRS HICKEY AND SHUBOTHAM'S KNOWLEDGE OF MR LAWLOR'S INVOLVEMENT IN THE PENINE OPTION

9.58 As already set out, Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham disputed any input on the part of Mr Lawlor in effecting their introduction to Mr Byrne and/or to the Pennine option lands and they denied any knowledge of Mr Lawlor's input into the rezoning process. Mr Shubotham did not accept that Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor were jointly involved in the Pennine rezoning from its inception until its conclusion in 1993. In his statement of 19 October 2006, Mr Shubotham stated 'as far as I am aware Liam Lawlor has no involvement at all' [with Pennine]. Mr Hickey testified that he was 'not sure' that he had ever seen the November 1991 submission to the Council titled 'Representation for proposed use of Land at Maynetown, Stapolin (Baldoyle/Portmarnock) Co. Dublin.' He later testified that he may have read it. In a statement to the Tribunal on 24 October 2006 Mr Hickey said the following concerning Mr Lawlor's involvement in the Pennine rezoning process: 'My belief is that Frank Dunlop was the only person who was involved in seeking the rezoning of the lands... I have no knowledge of any involvement of Liam Lawlor.'

9.59 However, the Tribunal was satisfied, as a matter of probability, that both Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham were aware of Mr Lawlor's role in the rezoning process, albeit, as testified to by Mr Dunlop, that this role on the part of Mr Lawlor was not immediately apparent to anyone (including councillors - save with the possible exception of Cllr Gilbride) other than those directly involved in the negotiation of the Pennine option, namely Mr Byrne, Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham and Mr Dunlop.

9.60 The Tribunal was also satisfied that in the course of their respective testimonies Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham chose to distance themselves from Mr Lawlor's involvement, both in relation to the Pennine option and the rezoning project.

MR LAWLOR'S POSSIBLE BENEFICIAL INTEREST IN THE PENNINE OPTION

9.61 While there was no documentary evidence before the Tribunal, and although no witness testified that Mr Lawlor would have been entitled to any benefit which might have accrued had the Pennine option lands been rezoned and the Pennine option exercised, the Tribunal could not rule out the possibility that had this occurred under the stewardship of Mr Hickey, Mr Shubotham and Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor would, in some shape or form, have received recompense for the assistance he rendered.

9.62 In the course of his evidence Mr Dunlop acknowledged as remote the likelihood of Mr Lawlor not being rewarded for his efforts invested into the Pennine option and the rezoning attempt. Mr Dunlop said: 'I believe that it is inconceivable that Liam, as I knew him, would in effect be doing the type of work that he was doing for the good of society generally solely.'

9.63 The following exchange also took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Dunlop on Day 706:

Q. And in relation to the Baldoyle lands specifically and I'm talking now about the lands which were not the subject of this particular option, that is the Pennine Holdings option but rather which were the subject of the Bauval option. You may be aware of the fact that Mr Lawlor has already given evidence on that issue when he confirmed that he received some £300 – translated as 825,000 deutsche marks. I think at the time it was 335,000 pounds for his share in relation to ten acres or thereabouts of this particular Baldoyle holding, isn't that correct?

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. So a measure of his expectation of what he was likely to get per acre on this certainly up to 30,000 pounds an acre of it was intended for him. That was his aspiration. I'm not saying that he may have attained it in this. You can't answer that. But you certainly, I take it, are you aware having followed the events in the Tribunal itself. That that was Mr Lawlor's reward for a ten acre involvement?

A. Yes, and this may not be ad rem Mr O'Neill, but it goes to the core of the evidence that I have given in relation to the genesis of my involvement in relation to Baldoyle. It came from Liam. Liam was the primary motivator in my becoming involved and subsequently discussing the matter with the individuals concerned. And I think I indicated again in another module, but at the time that the genesis of my involvement occurred I was not aware that Liam had already or was about to enter into an option agreement with other parties, including the main party, namely, Mr John Byrne in relation to a body of lands in the same totality.

THE CONNECTION MADE BY THE TRIBUNAL BETWEEN THE FRANK DUNLOP & ASSOCIATES INVOICE OF 4 JANUARY 1994 TO MR HICKEY/CITYWEST FOR IR£1,200 AND A LODGEMENT OF THE SAME AMOUNT MADE TO AN ACCOUNT OF HAZEL LAWLOR

9.64 On 4 January 1994, Frank Dunlop & Associates issued an invoice to ‘Mr Brendan Hickey, Managing Director City West Limited’ in the sum of IR£1,200 for ‘media training costs re City West developments.’ This invoice had no VAT element and the Tribunal noted that, unlike the vast majority of other Frank Dunlop & Associates invoices, it was not numbered. Mr Dunlop agreed that the payment from Citywest/Mr Hickey, on foot of this invoice, was not put through the books of Frank Dunlop & Associates.

9.65 Asked how the invoice came to be generated, Mr Dunlop stated:

‘Well, how it came to be generated. I obviously generated it. What the actual reason for the generation is, other than the nonsense wording as we agreed it was on the last day. I have absolutely no idea why it was generated. In the circumstances of the particular date. And unless somebody can other wise indicate to me there was a specific undertaking by me for City West in relation to a fee generating exercise, I have no idea. And I am just looking for the document. My own statement in relation to this matter. Yes, I have it. All I’ve said in relation to it is that it is an invoice raised in relation to lands at City West. That is all I have any recollection of. I don’t have any recollection of raising it for a specific purpose.’

9.66 Mr Dunlop stated that he never provided training services to Citywest and had no recollection of billing for any service to Citywest after the 1993 bridge invoice. In response to the suggestion that the January 1994 invoice, on Mr Dunlop’s own evidence, was ‘bogus’, Mr Dunlop stated that he would ‘slightly resile’ from the word ‘bogus’ but agreed that it was ‘bogus in the sense that other than the agreement between the addressee and myself I would provide an invoice on agreement that an amount would be paid. Obviously, the invoice would not have been submitted to Mr Hickey unless there had been an agreement between him and me.’

9.67 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that whatever the purpose of this exchange of funds between himself and Mr Hickey was, it was not reflected in the document generated by Mr Dunlop to receive the funds and he acknowledged that there must have been some reason to conceal the true purpose of the payment, as 'otherwise that wording would not have been used.'

9.68 Mr Hickey's recollection was that Mr Dunlop had invoiced for the IR£1,200 for work done by him in connection with a major presentation being made at that time by Citywest to Xilinx Corporation (who later became an anchor tenant of Citywest), namely Mr Dunlop's assistance in the preparation of brochures and in marketing. Mr Hickey stated that the payment was treated as a payment to Mr Dunlop in the company's books. Mr Dunlop, however told the Tribunal he had no recollection of his involvement in such a presentation.

9.69 In the course of information provided by Mr Lawlor to the Tribunal in response to the Tribunal's request for information on lodgements made to accounts held by him or on his behalf in excess of IR£1,000, Mr Lawlor attributed a lodgement of IR£1,200 made on 12 January 1994 to an account in AIB in the name of Hazel Lawlor to 'Brendan Hickey via FD.'

9.70 Mr Hickey testified that he had 'no idea whatsoever' how a payment made by him/Citywest to Mr Dunlop could have ended up in an account of Mrs. Hazel Lawlor.

9.71 Mr Dunlop testified that he had no recollection of making a payment of IR£1,200 to Mr Lawlor and stated:

'I don't recollect giving an endorsed or otherwise cheque to Mr Lawlor. I have had engagements with Mr Lawlor in a variety of formats, I think we have visited some of them and I'm sure we'll visit more of them again. But the likelihood is that given the circumstances in which the documents highlight, not only the dates in relation to the drawing down of the invoice and the payment on (sic) the lodgement. It is quite likely that I gave the cheque to Mr Lawlor.

Now, as I've said to you, I have no recollection of the circumstances in which the invoice from me to Mr Hickey was drawn down. And I certainly do not recall ever asking either Mr Hickey or any of his partners, for any sum of money, either by cheque or otherwise, for payment to Mr Lawlor.

So the payment was made to me by cheque. Whether I endorsed it or not, I cannot tell you. I'm sure that it can be discovered if necessary by the Tribunal. But the likelihood is that the circumstances that you have outlined are correct. That that cheque founds its way into Mrs. Hazel Lawlor's account via Mr Lawlor.'

9.72 While Mr Dunlop denied any suggestion that he had gone to Mr Hickey in January 1994 seeking money for Mr Lawlor, he stated that it is possible that he might have approached Mr Hickey in the knowledge that Mr Lawlor ‘might ask me for money.’ In response to Tribunal Counsel’s suggestion that his approach to Mr Hickey was made in the knowledge that the money would go to Mr Lawlor, Mr Dunlop replied:

‘In the broad perspective of my relationship with Mr Lawlor. I would not say that that was a probability, Mr O’Neill. I think I did indicate on a number of occasions and I do so again now. That Mr Lawlor was a frequent visitor to my office, particularly on Thursday and Friday’s. With a specific remit in mind. And that was the collection of money. Where I got the money, where I sourced that money, from what accounts I withdrew it or whether or not I had money or other forms in my possession, including a cheque from Brendan Hickey. That is a likely explanation. But I have to say to you quite definitively that I never asked Mr Hickey. I never prepared an invoice for Mr Hickey for money, for transmission to Mr Lawlor. I never spoke of such a matter to Mr Hickey. It is unlikely that I would have made an invoice for that odd amount, it’s a slightly odd amount. It’s 1200 pounds. It’s not 1,000 or 2,000 it’s 1,200. And the likely explanation I would suggest, without being absolute about it. The likely explanation is that Mr Lawlor called looking for money and I had this cheque available and I endorsed it and gave it to him.’

9.73 The Tribunal was satisfied:

- i) that the payment of IR£1,200 was made by Mr Hickey to Mr Dunlop or at the behest of Mr Dunlop on foot of an invoice dated 4 January 1994 from Frank Dunlop & Associates in respect of a service that was never provided to the invoice recipient (Mr Hickey/ Citywest);
- ii) that the said cheque was provided to Mr Lawlor and, on 12 January 1994, lodged into the bank account of Mrs. Hazel Lawlor.

CHAPTER TEN – FOX AND MAHONY MODULE

INTRODUCTION

1.01 This module inquired into attempts in the early 1990s to rezone approximately 36 hectares of land at Drumnigh and Snugborough, north Co. Dublin. These lands adjoined the old Baldoyle Racecourse. Mr Noel Fox, an accountant, owned the larger and more southerly portion of these lands, while Mr Denis Mahony, a motor dealer, owned the northern portion.

1.02 Twenty-nine witnesses gave evidence in public between 21 October and 18 November 2003, and on 6 and 25 May 2005. Information provided to the Tribunal on behalf of Cllrs Cyril Gallagher and Jack Larkin was read into the record.

1.03 The lands were zoned B (agricultural) and 'B & G' (green belt) in the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan and they retained this zoning in the 1991 Draft Development Plan which went on public display from 2 September to 3 December 1991.

1.04 During the course of the statutory first public display of the 1991 Draft Development Plan, proposals were put forward on behalf of Mr Fox and Mr Mahony by Messrs E. M. Hogan & Associates, Architects and Planning Consultants, seeking the rezoning of approximately 36 hectares at Drumnigh and Snugsborough from B (agricultural) and 'B & G' (green belt) to A1 (to provide for new residential communities in accordance with approved action area plans) (hereinafter 'residential'). Ultimately, at a special meeting of the Council held on 28 April 1993, the Mahony lands were zoned A1, a zoning which was confirmed on 29 September 1993, with the defeat of a motion proposed by Cllr Sargent and seconded by Cllr Gordon that that change be deleted. This zoning was thus adopted in the 1993 Development Plan. The process whereby this was achieved and whereby proposals to rezone the Fox lands were withdrawn during the review, is set out below.

THE REZONING STRATEGY BEFORE MR FRANK DUNLOP'S RETENTION

2.01 By 1991, Mr Mahony and Mr Fox had decided to seek to alter the zoning on their respective lands at Drumnigh from B (agricultural) (Mr Mahony's lands), and 'B & G' (green belt) (Mr Fox's lands), to A1 (residential).

2.02 Cllr G. V. Wright, a friend of Mr Mahony's over a long period of time, acknowledged in his evidence to the Tribunal that between 1990 and 1993 he was actively engaged in advising Mr Mahony about the rezoning of his lands at Drumnigh. He told the Tribunal that his motivation in doing so was his long-term friendship with Mr Mahony, his disagreement with the County Council planners' approach to the lands and his opinion that the proposed rezoning for residential use was based on good planning for the area.

2.03 The Tribunal learned that Cllr Wright and Mr Mahony met in June, August and November 1990, and in April 1991. It was likely that the subject of those meetings was the Dublin County Development Plan review. In particular, Cllr Wright acknowledged that it was likely that, on 26 June 1990, they discussed Dublin County Council's decision on 22 June 1990 on the agricultural zoning of Mr Mahony's lands, and the agricultural and green belt zoning of Mr Fox's lands.

2.04 Mr Edward Hogan, of Hogan & Associates Architects, told the Tribunal that on the instructions of Cllr Wright he prepared and lodged a submission with Dublin County Council on 2 December 1991 in support of zoning for low density housing for the lands at Drumnigh. At the time he was working on a commercial development in Malahide for the Wright family. Mr Hogan told the Tribunal that it was Cllr Wright who instructed him to prepare the submission and that he had no contact other than by telephone with either Mr Mahony or Mr Fox in relation to the issue. Equally, Cllr Wright acknowledged that neither Mr Mahony nor Mr Fox was involved in any way in the organising of the submission prepared by Mr Hogan.

2.05 Although Mr Mahony professed not to have known that a submission for the Drumnigh lands had been lodged with Dublin County Council in December 1991, Mr Fox acknowledged that he knew of the submission, but not its detail. However, Cllr Wright stated that he would only have requested Mr Hogan to prepare the submission after discussing doing so with Mr Mahony.

2.06 Meetings were known to have taken place between Mr Mahony and Cllr Wright on 11 September 1991 and between Mr Fox and Mr Mahony on 3 October and 25 November 1991. The plan to have submissions prepared and lodged with Dublin County Council was almost certainly discussed at these meetings.

2.07 Mr Mahony and Mr Fox told the Tribunal that in the period 1991 to February 1993 their zoning ambitions for their lands were left in Cllr Wright's hands. Mr Mahony said that he understood at all times that Cllr Wright was looking after the zoning 'file' on behalf of himself and Mr Fox, and he believed and understood that Cllr Wright would in due course prepare the necessary motion and accompanying map. Evidence to the Tribunal suggested that, as late as 9 March 1993, Mr Mahony and Mr Fox believed that Cllr Wright was looking after the rezoning issue on their behalf.

2.08 Cllr Wright told the Tribunal that prior to 10 March 1993 he advised Mr Mahony that he could not continue with the rezoning project because of his busy work schedule both as a councillor and Leader of the Seanad, and because of Cheltenham Races week. He advised Mr Mahony to retain a third party to assist with the project and suggested Mr Dunlop, among others.

2.09 The Tribunal was satisfied that by 9 March 1993 Cllr Wright had informed Mr Mahony that he was not going to complete the task necessary to bring the rezoning issue before the County Council. The deadline for lodging the motion was 12 March. This triggered the decision to retain Mr Dunlop's services on Cllr Wright's recommendation.

MR DUNLOP'S RETENTION IN MARCH 1993

3.01 Mr Dunlop informed the Tribunal that Mr Mahony had asked him to meet with himself and Mr Fox on either 10 March 1993 or the previous day. Accordingly, probably on 10 March 1993, the three men met at the Shelbourne Hotel. At that meeting, Mr Dunlop was engaged by both men to lobby councillors in Dublin County Council to support the rezoning of their adjacent lots of lands at Drumnigh. Both Mr Mahony and Mr Fox acknowledged that they attended a meeting with Mr Dunlop at the Shelbourne Hotel, during which Mr Dunlop agreed to act as a lobbyist. The deadline for lodging the necessary rezoning motion was 12 March 1993.

3.02 Mr Dunlop immediately undertook to prepare a motion for the rezoning of the lands and to obtain signatures for it. On the next day, 11 March 1993, he collected a map of the lands from Mr Mahony's office in Kilbarrack and obtained a reference number from either Mr Mahony or Cllr Wright. By 5 pm on 12 March 1993 Mr Dunlop had lodged a motion and map seeking the rezoning of the Fox and Mahony lands. The signatories to the motion were Cllrs M. J. Cosgrave, Creaven, Gallagher, Wright and Gilbride.

3.03 Mr Dunlop claimed that a fee of IR£10,000 in cash was agreed at the meeting on 10 March 1993. While he could not state whether he had requested cash, or if cash had been offered to him, he was certain that on the day it was agreed that he would receive the IR£10,000 from Mr Mahony in cash. He stated that he discussed and agreed the fee with Mr Mahony and that Mr Fox, although present and within earshot of his discussion with Mr Mahony, did not participate in any way in the discussion.

3.04 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he believed that both Mr Mahony and Mr Fox were aware that he would 'have to' pay councillors to support the rezoning of the Drumnigh lands, and that both men were aware of this in the course of the Shelbourne Hotel meeting on 10 March 1993.

3.05 This belief on Mr Dunlop's part stemmed from Mr Mahony's statement to him in the course of the meeting on 10 March 1993 that they 'knew how the world worked' (or words to that effect). Mr Dunlop understood that when Mr Mahony said 'we', he was referring to himself and Mr Fox. He claimed that Mr Mahony expressed this (or a similar) sentiment in Mr Fox's presence, and that Mr Fox took no issue with it, indicating to him, Mr Dunlop, that he agreed with it.

3.06 Mr Mahony told the Tribunal that at the meeting on 10 March 1993 Mr Dunlop requested IR£10,000 in cash, and he agreed to this request. He said it was the only occasion in his business life when he had been requested to pay cash, or had agreed to pay cash. Referring to Mr Dunlop's request, Mr Mahony stated: 'He asked me for cash and I was so bent on getting him to take over this job to rezone my land which I had had for 12 years idle, that is the only explanation I can give you.'

3.07 Mr Mahony told the Tribunal that Mr Fox had not participated in the discussions with Mr Dunlop, about fees or any other issue.

3.08 Mr Mahony agreed that the payment of IR£10,000 in cash was 'unusual', but said that it had never 'crossed [his] mind' that it might be used by Mr Dunlop to make payments to councillors.

3.09 Both Mr Dunlop and Mr Mahony agreed that the IR£10,000 in cash was paid to Mr Dunlop on 23 March 1993. Mr Fox was not present at the handover.

3.10 Mr Fox told the Tribunal that he had no specific recollection of his meeting with Mr Mahony and Mr Dunlop, although he believed that the three had met on only one occasion, in the Shelbourne Hotel, at a time when it was urgent that a motion and accompanying map be prepared for the County Council.

3.11 Mr Fox said that, although he recollected Mr Dunlop seeking a professional fee, and nominating an amount, he could not recollect the amount nominated. He had no recollection of cash being discussed or agreed and he was unaware that Mr Mahony later paid Mr Dunlop's fees.

3.12 Some time between 12 March and 28 April 1993, Mr Fox decided to withdraw his lands from the project, and he believed he had expressed this intention before Mr Mahony paid Mr Dunlop any fees. He believed it likely that Mr Mahony would have sought a contribution from him to the fees had he still been involved in the project, particularly as his lands were more extensive than those of Mr Mahony. Mr Fox's lands had not been formally withdrawn when Mr Mahony paid Mr Dunlop on 23 March 1993. They were withdrawn by unanimous vote of the Council at the Development Plan meeting on 28 April 1993.

3.13 Both Mr Mahony and Mr Fox denied that Mr Mahony spoke the words Mr Dunlop attributed to him at the meeting of 10 March 1993, or that he expressed similar sentiments. They both emphatically denied that they had any knowledge, understanding or suspicion at any time that in the course of his retention by them Mr Dunlop would make corrupt payments to councillors for the purposes of securing their support for the rezoning of the Drumnigh lands. Mr Fox told the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop gave 'no implication that monies would have to be paid to councillors.'

3.14 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that his claim that Mr Mahony and Mr Fox were aware of the intended corruption was based on his interpretation of the words 'knew the way the world worked' (or similar) as referring to the need for or practice of making such payments. He accepted that the words were also capable of a different or innocent interpretation but continued to maintain that that was the interpretation he had taken from them. Mr Dunlop acknowledged that he had not specifically discussed paying councillors with either Mr Mahony or Mr Fox, and he agreed that throughout his continuing relationship with Mr Mahony, which lasted until approximately February 1994, no such discussion ever took place.

3.15 Mr Mahony agreed that the manner of the payment of the fees to Mr Dunlop did not amount to a 'legitimate professional transaction' in the sense that there was no documentary trail and VAT was neither charged nor paid. He did not accept that this supported a perception that he was aware or conscious of Mr Dunlop's practice of making payments to elected councillors to secure their support for rezoning motions, or of his intention to participate in such a practice.

THE AMENDING MOTION TO WITHDRAW MR NOEL FOX'S LANDS FROM THE REZONING PROCESS

4.01 Mr Fox's decision, made between 12 March and 28 April 1993, to withdraw his lands from the rezoning attempt meant that the motion prepared by Mr Dunlop and lodged with the County Council on 12 March required amendment by deleting the reference to Mr Fox's lands.

4.02 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Fox in all probability communicated his decision to Mr Mahony and Mr Dunlop in mid April, as is evidenced by entries in their respective diaries for meetings with Mr Fox, and by Mr Dunlop's telephone records indicating calls to his office by Mr Fox. The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr Fox's decision was communicated to Cllr Wright in the same period and it accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that from the time Mr Fox indicated his decision to withdraw from the project, Cllr Wright and Mr Dunlop were in discussion as to how this might be put into effect.

4.03 While the Tribunal was satisfied, on balance, that Mr Fox withdrew his lands for the reasons he had stated, i.e. his view that the proposed residential zoning of the lands, if achieved, would not be commercially viable, and that from the outset he was, at best, only lukewarm in relation to the project, the Tribunal was also satisfied that the decision taken by him was to some extent influenced both by discussions that were ongoing with local councillors, and by a motion then being proposed by Cllr Healy, the objective of which was to preserve all 'green belt' lands in the locality. The remit of Cllr Healy's motion, as proposed, included some 18 acres of Mr Fox's lands. Even if steps had not been put in train to remove the Fox lands from consideration by the Council by 28 April 1993, when the Fox & Mahony motion was scheduled for hearing, some 18 acres of Mr Fox's lands would, in any event, have been excluded from consideration by the Council by virtue of the success of the Healy motion on 27 April.

4.04 At a special meeting of the Council on 27 April 1993, a motion was proposed by Cllr David Healy and seconded by Cllr Gordon (the Healy green belt motion) that all land zoned B & G between Baldoye and Portmarnock (which included approximately 18 acres of Mr Fox's lands) retain that zoning. The motion was passed. Cllr Wright voted in favour.

4.05 The motion to amend the 12 March motion by deleting Mr Fox's lands was signed by Cllrs Wright, Owen, Creaven, Gilbride and Kennedy. It was put to a vote and passed unanimously at the special meeting of 28 April 1993.

THE REZONING OF MR DENIS MAHONY'S LANDS

5.01 The original motion to rezone the lands owned by Mr Fox and Mr Mahony lodged on 12 March 1993 now related only to the Mahony lands. It was duly considered at the 28 April 1993 special meeting. The Healy/Gordon motion had passed the previous day. The rezoning motion was carried by a majority vote of 28 in favour, 11 against, and 2 abstaining. Therefore, when the Draft Development Plan went on public display for the second time, for the month of July 1993, the Mahony lands were zoned A1 (residential), while the Fox lands remained zoned 'B & G' (green belt).

5.02 The meeting to confirm the Draft Development Plan was scheduled for 29 September 1993. By that date, councillors had lodged three separate motions, including one signed by Cllrs Healy and Sargent, seeking to reverse the A1 rezoning on the Mahony lands to its original B zoning; these motions were supported by the County Manager. The Manager's report pointed out that the proposed development 'would encroach on the agricultural and greenbelt areas and would be contrary to the development of policies of the Council and the adopted settlement strategy'. In addition, 2,530 representations objecting to the rezoning had been lodged, most from members of the public.

5.03 A motion proposed by Cllr Sargent and seconded by Cllr Gordon that Change 4, Map 8 be deleted, thereby zoning the lands B (agricultural) was put before the Council and on a division was lost with 24 members voting in favour and 28 against, with 1 abstention. Accordingly, the rezoning of the Mahony lands was confirmed at this special meeting of the Council on 29 September 1993, and this zoning was ultimately adopted in the 1993 Dublin County Development Plan.

MR DUNLOP'S 'SUCCESS FEE'

6.01 Mr Mahony and Mr Dunlop met on 3 February 1994 at the Berkeley Court Hotel and Mr Dunlop sought a 'success fee' for the rezoning of Mr Mahony's lands.

6.02 A cash payment of IR£2,000 was made to Mr Dunlop on 8 February 1994 at Mr Mahony's offices. On that date, the following entry appeared in Mr Dunlop's diary: '9.30 Denis Mahony. Collect message.'

6.03 Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd had raised an invoice on 1 December 1993 to Mr Denis Mahony for IR£5,000 plus VAT (IR£6,050) in respect of 'professional fees with regard to public affairs consultancy on Drumnigh file'.

6.04 The debtors' ledger account of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd recorded 'sales invoiced' on 1 December 1993 for IR£6,050, but on 3 February 1994, a credit note was recorded for IR£6,050, leaving a nil balance. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he had created the invoice on 1 December 1993 with a view to seeking a success fee from Mr Mahony, and that he later cancelled this invoice following his agreement with Mr Mahony for a IR£2,000 cash payment. Mr Dunlop said that he did not send the invoice to Mr Mahony.

6.05 Mr Dunlop maintained that at the February 1994 meeting he had told Mr Mahony of the amount of work he had done at the time of the rezoning of the lands. This included arranging for the removal of Mr Fox's lands from the rezoning process and dealing with zoning motions that had been put forward for consideration in September 1993, in addition to ensuring that councillors' support held firm for the confirmation vote. He asked for IR£5,000. According to Mr Dunlop, as the meeting progressed Mr Mahony became 'a little aggressive' and asked him if 'all of the IR£10,000 was used up'.

6.06 Mr Dunlop said he told Mr Mahony that he had used up all the money and that he had had expenses. He did not expressly tell Mr Mahony that he had made payments to councillors, although these were the expenses to which he was referring. Mr Dunlop agreed that he had not spelled out for Mr Mahony what he meant by the term 'expenses', and had never discussed with him the fact that he had made payments to councillors in relation to the rezoning project.

6.07 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that Mr Mahony did not seek clarification from him as to what precise expenses had been incurred or paid. Mr Dunlop claimed that the 'expenses' he had in mind at the time of his discussion with Mr Mahony were the payments he claimed to have made to four individual councillors (see below).

6.08 Mr Mahony denied asking Mr Dunlop if 'all of the IR£10,000 was used up' or any such question. He had no recollection of being informed by Mr Dunlop at the meeting on 3 February 1994 that he had incurred expenses. He was annoyed at Mr Dunlop's request for additional fees but agreed in order to 'finalise the proceedings' and 'finish a deal on a happy note'. He believed that he and Mr Dunlop had not discussed how the IR£10,000 had been spent. He had not sought any reimbursement or discount of the IR£10,000 paid in March after Mr Fox's lands were withdrawn from the rezoning process in April 1993.

WERE MR FOX AND MR MAHONY AWARE OF MR DUNLOP'S INTENTION TO MAKE CORRUPT PAYMENTS?

7.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that a meeting took place on 10 March 1993 between Mr Dunlop, Mr Mahony and Mr Fox. The Tribunal accepted that Mr Fox did not fully participate in the meeting, although he was present throughout.

7.02 The Tribunal believed it likely that in the course of the meeting on 10 March, Mr Mahony expressed his annoyance to Mr Dunlop that Cllr Wright had decided not to continue with the work necessary to bring the motion to the County Council, hence the decision to engage Mr Dunlop's services.

7.03 The Tribunal was satisfied that, as accepted in evidence by both Mr Mahony and Mr Dunlop, Mr Mahony agreed with Mr Dunlop that he would lobby certain councillors on his own behalf about the project, and that Mr Dunlop would lobby councillors for the same purpose.

7.04 The Tribunal was satisfied that as a matter of probability Mr Dunlop nominated his fee of IR£10,000 and requested that it be paid in cash.

7.05 The Tribunal was satisfied that, while Mr Fox was aware that Mr Dunlop was to be paid for his lobbying efforts, he was probably unaware of the amount of the agreed fee, and that it was to be paid in cash. He was probably unaware that Mr Mahony paid Mr Dunlop IR£10,000 (or any other sum) in cash on or about 23 March 1993.

7.06 As a matter of probability, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Fox did not contribute to Mr Dunlop's payment nor did Mr Mahony request him to do so nor did he inform him as to any detail relating to the payment. On the balance of probability, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Fox was unaware of and was not privy to any intention on the part of Mr Dunlop to pay money to councillors in the course of his retention as a lobbyist for the Fox and Mahony lands.

7.07 However, although in Mr Mahony's case the Tribunal did not find that he was aware of Mr Dunlop's intention to pay councillors for their support, it did believe, particularly having regard to Mr Dunlop's request for the IR£10,000 to be paid in cash (as it was), that Mr Mahony must have been at least suspicious that Mr Dunlop might use a portion of the funds in such a manner.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR G. V. WRIGHT (FF)

8.01 It was clear that in the period 1990 to 1993 Mr Mahony and Mr Fox relied heavily on Cllr G. V. Wright to ensure that all necessary steps to advance the rezoning of the Drumnigh lands were taken.

8.02 It was also quite clear that, on 10 March 1993, after Cllr Wright decided not to proceed with the rezoning proposal, Mr Mahony and Mr Fox engaged Mr Dunlop on Cllr Wright's advice.

8.03 Cllr Wright's involvement with the Drumnigh rezoning project after Mr Dunlop's engagement may be summarised as follows:

- Cllr Wright signed the motion and accompanying map, prepared by Mr Dunlop in his offices and lodged with Dublin County Council on 12 March 1993. Mr Dunlop requested signatures from Cllr Wright (and other councillors).
- Cllr Wright signed and probably assisted in drafting the amending motion to remove Mr Fox's lands from the motion on 28 April 1993.
- On 28 April 1993, Cllr Wright proposed both the amending motion and the substantive rezoning motion and voted in favour of both.
- Cllr Wright agreed that he had lobbied approximately 24 fellow councillors to support the rezoning motion.
- Cllr Wright supported the rezoning at the County Council confirmation vote on 29 September 1993.
- There were a number of contacts between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Wright in the period March to September 1993, although not necessarily solely dealing with the Drumnigh lands.

8.04 Cllr Wright's written statement to the Tribunal of 28 July 2003 did not acknowledge his involvement in the 2 December 1991 submission to Dublin County Council. However, in his statement of 20 October 2003, after the Tribunal provided him with documentation including Mr Hogan's statement dated 5 October 2003 which referred to Cllr Wright's involvement in the 1991 submission, he did acknowledge his involvement.

8.05 When asked to explain in evidence why he had failed to disclose this information to the Tribunal, Cllr Wright stated: 'I did not think it was of that great importance to say that I prepared or asked someone to prepare a submission.'

MR DUNLOP'S ALLEGED PAYMENTS TO CLLR WRIGHT

8.06 In his statement of October 2000, Mr Dunlop alleged that he had paid Cllr Wright IR£2,000 in relation to the Drumnigh lands rezoning project. However, in earlier evidence, on Day 148 (9 May 2000), he had not identified Cllr Wright as a recipient of money in connection with the lands. He explained that his recollection was aided by his perusal of documentation between May and October 2000, including details of motions, voting information and other data referred to in official Dublin County Council records.

8.07 Mr Dunlop said that at some time between the signing and lodging of the motion on 12 March and 25 March 1993, he agreed to pay Cllr Wright IR£2,000. They had not discussed money on 12 March 1993. The agreement to provide Cllr Wright with IR£2,000 had been duly made in the environs of the County Council in the context of a discussion about impending Development Plan votes. Cllr Wright had raised the rezoning issue, and requested payment. According to Mr Dunlop, Cllr Wright said he needed 'two grand for this'. The parties had made contact on a couple of occasions following Mr Dunlop's retention on 10 March 1993.

8.08 Mr Dunlop was questioned on Day 421 (22 October 2003) as to why Cllr Wright might have requested payment, given that he had a considerable association with the land prior to Mr Dunlop's retention through his friendship with Mr Mahony, and that he supported the motion. Mr Dunlop repeated his claim that Cllr Wright had requested the money and added that he had paid 'because G. V. was important to a lot of things that were happening in Dublin County Council.'

8.09 Mr Dunlop alleged in evidence that on either 25 March or 19 April 1993 he met Cllr Wright in the visitors' bar in Leinster House in order to pay him IR£2,000. He told the Tribunal that he had handed him the cash wrapped in a newspaper. Mr Dunlop's diary for 25 March 1993 recorded a meeting with Cllr Wright in the Seanad, and a further meeting with him the following day in Leinster House. However, in evidence on Days 420 (21 October 2003) and 421 (22 October 2003), Mr Dunlop ruled out 26 March 1993 as a likely date for the handing over of the money because when he met Cllr Wright that day it was in the company of third parties.

8.10 Cllr Wright strongly denied requesting or receiving IR£2,000 or any sum from Mr Dunlop in return for signing or supporting the rezoning motion for the Drumnigh lands. He denied ever receiving corrupt payments from Mr Dunlop in relation to any issue. He emphasised that in twenty years of public service he had never asked for or received an improper payment from anyone, or sold his vote to any individual or in respect of any projects. Cllr Wright acknowledged, however, that he had received IR£2,000 from Mr Dunlop, wrapped in a newspaper in the Dáil bar, but maintained that this occurred prior to June 1991 Local Elections. He said that on that occasion the money was placed in an envelope and the envelope was placed inside a newspaper. He believed this to have been an unsolicited and legitimate political donation to him from Mr Dunlop.

8.11 In his October 2000 written statement, Mr Dunlop stated that he paid IR£2,000 in cash to Cllr Wright at the time of the June 1991 Local Elections, and that it was 'handed over in the visitors' bar of the Dáil wrapped in a newspaper'. On Day 420 (21 October 2003), Mr Dunlop resiled from this statement to some extent and claimed that he used a newspaper to conceal money paid to Cllr Wright in relation to the Drumnigh lands in March or April 1993. Mr Dunlop confirmed, however, that Cllr Wright had been the recipient of IR£2,000 cash in June 1991; although he stated that he could not accurately recall the exact circumstances of how that payment had been effected. His belief was that it was made at some stage during the course of a meeting in Dublin County Council.¹

8.12 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he also paid Cllr Wright IR£5,000 in cash at the time of the November 1992 general election.² He said that he and Mr Owen O'Callaghan³ attended at Cllr Wright's office in Malahide and in the course of this visit he handed Cllr Wright IR£5,000 in cash.

8.13 Mr Dunlop also gave evidence that in January/February 1993 (at the time of the 1993 Seanad Election) he gave Cllr Wright either IR£2,500 or IR£3,000 in cash by way of a political donation. He said that although this payment, like the June 1991 and November 1992 payments, was made under cover of elections, they were not bona fide political donations but were made to secure Cllr Wright's support for rezoning motions.

8.14 In his February 2001 statement, Cllr Wright sought to attribute a lodgement of IR£3,000 made to his ICS building society account on 7 October 1993 to money he claimed to have received from Mr Dunlop in September/October of that year for the Seanad Election. This was at least seven months after the Seanad campaign had concluded. In his October 2003 statement, and in sworn evidence in the course of this module, Cllr Wright maintained that the IR£3,000 payment was for 'both Senate and constituency expenses'. While he and Mr Dunlop disputed this payment (Mr Dunlop denied making such a payment at that time), on Cllr Wright's own admission he received monies from Mr Dunlop at a time other than when an election campaign was imminent or underway.

² This payment to Cllr Wright is considered in Chapter 2 (the Quarryvale Module).

³ Mr O'Callaghan provided Cllr Wright with a cheque for IR£5,000. See Chapter 2 (The Quarryvale Module).

DEALINGS BETWEEN MR DUNLOP AND CLLR WRIGHT IN MARCH 1993

8.15 It was common case that Cllr Wright initiated Mr Dunlop's involvement in the Drumnigh lands rezoning and signed the motion he prepared on 12 March 1993. Telephone records maintained by Mr Dunlop's secretary for the period March/April 1993 indicated a significant level of contact (or attempted contact) between Cllr Wright and Mr Dunlop's office. For example, in the period 9 March to 23 April 1993, there were 11 telephone calls from Cllr Wright to Mr Dunlop's office leaving messages for Mr Dunlop. Five of these calls took place in the week ending 26 March 1993 and four took place in the week ending 23 April 1993. On 22 March 1993 Cllr Wright telephoned Mr Dunlop's office to speak to Mr Dunlop on two occasions, once from Leinster House.

8.16 Mr Dunlop's diaries indicated pre-arranged meetings with Cllr Wright on 22, 25 and 26 March 1993, and 19 April 1993. The relevant rezoning votes on the Drumnigh lands were scheduled for 28 April 1993.

8.17 Mr Dunlop's telephone records for the days leading up to the confirmation motion to rezone the Drumnigh lands on 29 September 1993 indicated four telephone calls from Cllr Wright, on 23, 24, 28 and 29 September 1993.

8.18 Cllr Wright did not dispute that there was a significant level of contact between himself and Mr Dunlop and that this was evidenced by the telephone and diary records referred to above. However, he suggested that not all the calls or meetings were in relation to the Drumnigh lands, that some might have been about other rezoning projects, especially the Baldoyle lands (in which Mr Dunlop had a personal stake) in relation to which he and Mr Dunlop were in frequent contact.

8.19 An analysis of Cllr Wright's accounts did not reveal conclusive evidence of unexplained cash lodgements. However, he conceded that he was the recipient at election times of large sums of money that were not necessarily lodged to any bank account. It was clear that by March/April 1993 Cllr Wright had been the recipient of large sums in cash from Mr Dunlop. On Cllr Wright's testimony alone, by March 1993 he was the recipient of 'political donations' of IR£2,000 in cash from Mr Dunlop in May/June 1991 and IR£5,000 in cash in November 1992. If, as the Tribunal believed, Mr Dunlop's 1993 payment was made in January/February during the course of the Seanad elections and not in September/October 1993 as Cllr Wright suggested, by March 1993, irrespective of the Drumnigh rezoning issue, Cllr Wright had already received some IR£10,000 in cash from Mr Dunlop over a 20-month period.

8.20 Cllr Wright rejected Mr Dunlop's allegation that he paid him IR£2,000 to support the Drumnigh rezoning motion saying that he was always supportive of Mr Mahony's rezoning endeavours and therefore did not need to be enticed or persuaded in any way to honour a commitment he had made as far back as 1991. It was the case that Cllr Wright was supportive of the rezoning from an early stage, taking it upon himself to unilaterally organise a submission to the Council seeking rezoning during the first statutory public display period of the Draft Development Plan between September and December 1991. In the course of his evidence, Cllr Wright stated that he had had no reservations about promoting the Drumnigh lands for rezoning – his support being grounded on good planning, and his friendship with Mr Mahony over a long period.

8.21 The Tribunal believed that the question of whether or not Cllr Wright sought and was paid IR£2,000 from Mr Dunlop could not be resolved solely on the basis of pre-existing support on his part for the rezoning. It seemed to the Tribunal that the issue was more properly assessed in the light of the relationship between Cllr Wright and Mr Dunlop and the credibility of their evidence.

8.22 Notwithstanding inconsistencies⁴ in Mr Dunlop's recollections, the Tribunal found his evidence overall to be more credible than that of Cllr Wright. The Tribunal noted that in the course of his dealings with the Tribunal over a period of time Cllr Wright sought, through evasiveness and delay, to distance himself from payments he subsequently admitted to receiving from Mr Dunlop. The Tribunal believed that Cllr Wright tried to hide the true extent of his relationship and dealings with Mr Dunlop.

8.23 The Tribunal concluded, as a matter of probability, that a IR£2,000 payment was agreed between Cllr Wright and Mr Dunlop at some point between 12 and 25 March 1993, and that in all probability Mr Dunlop made this payment

⁴ 1) Mr Dunlop did not identify Cllr Wright as a recipient of money in relation to the Drumnigh lands prior to his October 2000 statement to the Tribunal.

2) Mr Dunlop's October 2000 statement had attributed the 'wrapped in a newspaper' method of payment to the IR£2,000 cash given to Cllr Wright in June 1991, whereas in the course of his evidence in this module he claimed that method of payment had in fact been used for his payment to Cllr Wright in respect of the Fox and Mahony land rezoning.

3) Mr Dunlop's failure to classify the £2,000 payment to Cllr Wright in 1991 as an 'improper payment' on Day 147 (19 April 2000), but doing so in his sworn evidence to the Tribunal on Day 420 (21 October 2003).

on 25 March or 19 April 1993 when he and Mr Wright met in Leinster House. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's somewhat late recollection that the money was handed over wrapped in a newspaper in the Dáil bar. While, in October 2000, Mr Dunlop had attributed this method of payment to the IR£2,000 he gave Cllr Wright in May/June 1991 (as conceded by Cllr Wright) the Tribunal accepted his explanation that in this statement he had erroneously attributed the newspaper method to May/June 1991.

8.24 Cllr Wright made the case (through his solicitor, in the course of his cross-examination of Mr Dunlop) that Mr Dunlop had a grievance against him because Cllr Wright had voted in favour of the successful Healy 'green belt' motion of 27 April 1993, the result of which had adverse implications for Mr Dunlop's rezoning ambitions for the Baldoyle/Pennine lands.⁵ The Tribunal believed it reasonable that such a grievance, if it existed, would have been present from 27 April 1993 (the date of the Healy/Gordon green belt motion). However, Cllr Wright himself maintained (although this was disputed by Mr Dunlop) that he received IR£3,000 from Mr Dunlop in September/October 1993. This undermined any suggestion that Mr Dunlop had a grievance against Cllr Wright.

8.25 The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that he paid Cllr Wright IR£2,000 in cash on either 25 March or 19 April 1993, and that the payment was wrapped in a newspaper and was given to Cllr Wright in the visitors' bar in Leinster House. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment was made following a request for payment from Cllr Wright in return for his support for the rezoning of the Drumnigh lands. In requesting and receiving the said payment, Cllr Wright was compromised in the disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor in relation to the rezoning of the Drumnigh lands. The Tribunal was satisfied that the said payment was a corrupt payment.

8.26 The most likely reasons for Cllr Wright's recommendation to Mr Mahony that Mr Dunlop be engaged in March 1993, instead of Cllr Wright himself preparing the motion, were Mr Dunlop's knowledge of the process, his ability to persuade councillors to support rezoning proposals, and his propensity to pay key councillors for their support for rezoning motions, from which Cllr Wright had previously benefited.

8.27 In the 1991/3 period, before his involvement with the Drumnigh lands, Mr Dunlop was a generous donor to Cllr Wright, giving him cash funds of IR£10,000 (Cllr Wright's figure) or IR£9,500–IR£10,000 (Mr Dunlop's figure).

MR MAHONY'S PAYMENT OF IR£500 TO CLLR WRIGHT

8.28 Mr Mahony made a payment to Cllr Wright of IR£500 by cheque on 20 June 1991, and described it as a political donation.

8.29 Mr Mahony should not have paid Cllr Wright at a time when Cllr Wright was actively engaged in assisting Mr Mahony in having the Drumnigh lands rezoned. Equally, Cllr Wright should not have accepted the payment while so engaged. The payment was not a bona fide political contribution, undermined Cllr Wright's disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor, and was corrupt.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER (FF)

9.01 Cllr Cyril Gallagher was the fifth signatory on the Drumnigh rezoning motion and accompanying map.

9.02 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he obtained Cllr Gallagher's signature on 11 March 1993. An entry in Mr Dunlop's diary recorded a 2.30 pm meeting with Cllr Gallagher on that date. According to Mr Dunlop, although Cllr Gallagher appeared on the motion and accompanying map as the fifth and final signatory he was in fact the third of the councillors to sign. When asked to sign, he left a gap for two other signatures before adding his own name.

9.03 At the meeting on 11 March 1993,⁶ Mr Dunlop outlined the difficulties which had arisen because of Cllr Wright's failure to progress the rezoning proposal. According to Mr Dunlop, Cllr Gallagher agreed to sign the rezoning motion when Mr Dunlop confirmed that Cllr Wright would also sign it.

9.04 Mr Dunlop's evidence was that Cllr Gallagher requested a payment of IR£1,000 in return for his signature, and that he paid him that sum in cash there and then, although he himself had not yet been paid by Mr Mahony. He said that he had sufficient cash with him at the time of the meeting, as he had expected such a demand. As reported elsewhere, Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid Cllr Gallagher IR£1,000 on 11 March 1993 in return for his signature and support for another land rezoning.⁷

9.05 Cllr Gallagher voted in favour of both the rezoning motion on 28 April 1993 and the confirmation motion on 29 September 1993.

⁶ At this meeting Cllr Gallagher also signed the Cloghran rezoning motion for Mr Dunlop. See Chapter 7 (the Cloghran Module).

⁷ See Chapter 7 (the Cloghran Module).

9.06 Mr Dunlop had provided the Tribunal with lists of councillors on Day 147 (19 April 2000) and Day 148 (9 May 2000) to whom he alleged he had made ‘improper’ payments in 1991 and 1992 out of his ‘042 Rathfarnham account’. He named Cllr Gallagher in the 1991 list. On Day 148 (9 May 2000), he was asked to provide a further list, which was a continuation of the 1991 and 1992 lists,⁸ of councillors identified in those lists to whom he alleged he had made payments at other times. Cllr Gallagher’s name appeared on that list as well. On day 148, Mr Dunlop was unable to indicate either the date or the amount of a payment made to Cllr Gallagher in 1993. On the same day, Mr Dunlop identified Cllr Gallagher as the recipient of money from him in relation to four named developments with which Mr Dunlop was involved, and cited Cllr Gallagher as being the possible recipient of monies in relation to the Drumnigh lands.

9.07 Mr Dunlop’s October 2000 statement made specific reference to his having provided IR£1,000 to Cllr Gallagher in return for his support for the Drumnigh lands. In a statement to the Tribunal on 6 May 2003, prior to giving sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop described the IR£1,000 paid to Cllr Gallagher as payment ‘for his signature of the original motion... on the 11th March 1993’. In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, he repeated his claim that he had paid Cllr Gallagher IR£1,000 for his support for the Drumnigh lands rezoning. He said that the signature and payment were exchanged in the environs of Dublin County Council in O’Connell Street.

9.08 Cllr Gallagher died on 2 March 2000 without giving sworn evidence to the Tribunal. Mr Giles Montgomery, solicitor, (since deceased) represented the family of Cllr Gallagher during the course of this module. Mr Montgomery advised the Tribunal that Cllr Gallagher had denied to him in his lifetime that he had received money from Mr Dunlop in 1993. During the course of the module Mr Montgomery availed of the opportunity of cross-examining Mr Dunlop.

9.09 The Tribunal believed it useful to conduct an investigation of Cllr Gallagher’s finances with a view to identifying, if possible, the source or sources of a number of lodgements to his accounts in the period from March to May 1993. The bank statements (and in the case of An Post, the applications for Savings Certificates) available to the Tribunal showed the following lodgements to accounts held by Cllr Gallagher in this period:

- 1) IR£2,000 cash lodgement on 25 March 1993 to his An Post account.⁹
- 2) IR£119.16 to Cllr Gallagher’s personal account at Ulster Bank on 7 April 1993 (there was no underlying documentation in relation to this lodgement).

⁸ For ease of reference the Tribunal will refer to these lists as follows: ‘1991 list’, ‘1992 list’ and ‘continuation list’.

⁹The documentation suggests that Cllr Gallagher bought for cash a savings certificate for this amount.

- 3) IR£1,000 cash lodgement to Cllr Gallagher's An Post account 26 April 1993¹⁰

- 6) IR£254.07 to Cllr Gallagher's Ulster Bank account on 18 May 1993 (there was no underlying documentation in relation to this lodgement)
- 7) IR£2,000 cash to Cllr Gallagher's An Post account on 25 May 1993¹¹
- 8) IR£2,000 to Cllr Gallagher's AIB deposit account on 25 May 1993 (there was no underlying documentation in relation to this lodgement)
- 9) IR£500 to Cllr Gallagher's Ulster Bank account on 28 May 1993.

9.10 Cllr Gallagher had retired from Eircom in April 1992. In 1993 his only known sources of income were an Eircom pension, County Council and Health Board expenses, and a state retirement pension. The Tribunal sought explanations from Cllr Gallagher's estate as to the source of the above and other lodgements. The Tribunal was told by Mr Montgomery that Cllr Gallagher's family was not familiar with Cllr Gallagher's banking and financial arrangements, and therefore was not in a position to assist the Tribunal, other than to say that he had made a loan to his son in 1992 which was subsequently repaid. Details were also forwarded of expenses payments made to Cllr Gallagher by the Eastern Regional Health Board. Insofar as Cllr Gallagher was in receipt of expenses, the Tribunal was satisfied that such expenses as were received by him were unlikely to relate to the large round-figure lodgements referred to above, particularly those cash lodgements. These expenses and the other sources of income did not provide an obvious or likely source for the substantial lodgements of cash in this period.

9.11 The Tribunal was advised, however, of two gratuity payments made by Eircom to Cllr Gallagher of IR£7,000 and IR£10,101.68 respectively. The first of these payments was made on 27 April 1992, and the Tribunal was satisfied that this sum was lodged to Cllr Gallagher's An Post account on 15 May 1992. Since this sum was received by Cllr Gallagher in 1992, and since it formed part of the monies standing to his credit with An Post the Tribunal discounted this sum as a possible source of the above lodgements made between March and May 1993. The second payment was made on 1 May 1992. Mr Montgomery speculated that Cllr Gallagher must have had another account other than those disclosed as the method of dealing with the draft or cheque for the IR£10,101.68 did not appear to be capable of being identified. The same applied, he said, to the loan to Cllr Gallagher's son and its repayment. He suggested that the IR£10,101.68 must have been lodged in some form or other to an account, or processed in some form, because otherwise Cllr Gallagher would not have been able to make a payment of IR£5,500 of this sum to his wife's account on 2 June 1992. The lodgement to his wife's account left a balance of approximately IR£4,600, which may have been applied towards a sum used to pay off a loan of IR£4,863.64 on or about 25 September 1992. A lodgement of IR£4863.64 on that day could not be otherwise reconciled to a withdrawal from the known accounts of Cllr Gallagher. Even allowing for the likelihood of Cllr Gallagher holding onto this sum until the spring of the following year, this balancing sum could not explain the round-figure lodgements totalling IR£7860 in this period. In the circumstances, the Tribunal was satisfied, after eliminating from its inquiries those recorded lodgements to Cllr Gallagher's accounts which had as their source his earned income, pensions and expenses, that substantial round-figure sums were lodged by him between March and May 1993 for which no credible explanation was forthcoming.

9.12 While there was no conclusive evidence which indicated that Mr Dunlop's alleged payment of IR£1,000 had in fact been lodged (in whole or in part) into any of Cllr Gallagher's accounts, the said round-figure sum of unexplained lodgements totalling IR£7,860 was sufficient to accommodate this alleged payment, in addition to a separate alleged payment also of IR£1,000 by Mr Dunlop to Cllr Gallagher at about the same time. Although not conclusive evidence on this issue, it may be that the IR£2,000 cash lodgement to Cllr Gallagher's An Post account on 25 March 1993 included all or part of the IR£1,000 in cash Mr Dunlop paid Cllr Gallagher on 11 March 1993 in connection with these lands.

9.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop obtained Cllr Gallagher's signature for the Drumnigh rezoning motion on 11 March 1993. The issue for the Tribunal was whether money was solicited and paid. As a matter of probability, the Tribunal believed that money was solicited by Cllr Gallagher in return for his signature and support for the Drumnigh land rezoning and duly paid over on that day by Mr Dunlop. This payment constituted an inducement to Cllr Gallagher to perform his duty as a councillor otherwise than in a disinterested fashion, and was corrupt. In all the circumstances, therefore, having regard to the Tribunal's findings in Chapter 7 (the Cloghran Module), Mr Dunlop corruptly paid Cllr Gallagher IR£2,000 between 10 and 12 March 1993, including the IR£1,000 paid on 11 March in respect of the rezoning of these lands.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR JACK LARKIN (FF)

10.01 In his sworn evidence on Day 148 (9 May 2000), Mr Dunlop identified Cllr Larkin as a recipient of money from him in 1991 and 1992, but not in 1993. He first identified Cllr Larkin as a recipient of money from him in relation to the Drumnigh lands in his statement to the Tribunal of October 2000. His explanation for his failure to do so earlier was that it was only between May and October 2000, when he studied certain County Council documentation detailing the various motions put forward in the course of the review of the Dublin Development Plan, and the attendances and voting details of councillors, that his memory was prompted sufficiently to identify Cllr Larkin (among others) as a recipient of money in connection with the Drumnigh lands.

10.02 Cllr Larkin did not sign either the rezoning motion lodged on 12 March 1993 or the amending motion which was passed unanimously on 28 April 1993 which deleted Mr Fox's lands from the process.

10.03 Cllr Larkin voted against the retention of the green belt zoning on 27 April 1993 (to the benefit of a portion of the Drumnigh lands) and in favour of the rezoning motion on 28 April 1993. He also voted in favour of the Drumnigh confirming motion on 29 September 1993.

10.04 Mr Dunlop stated in evidence that he discussed the forthcoming Drumnigh lands motion with Cllr Larkin between 12 March and 28 April 1993.

10.05 Mr Dunlop claimed that he paid Cllr Larkin IR£1,000 after the vote on 28 April 1993, at his request, in return for his support for the motion. Mr Dunlop said that the payment was made in the environs of Dublin County Council in O'Connell Street.

10.06 Mr Dunlop's diary did not refer to any pre-arranged meeting between himself and Cllr Larkin in the period 12 March to 28 April 1993. Mr Dunlop explained that pre-arranged appointments between himself and Cllr Larkin were generally unnecessary as he was easily contactable at specific locations in the environs of Dublin County Council, and Mr Dunlop generally met him in this manner.

10.07 It was almost certain that Mr Dunlop lobbied Cllr Larkin to support the rezoning of the Drumnigh lands, and there was an opportunity for him to do so in March and April 1993.

10.08 A review by the Tribunal of the bank accounts operated by Cllr Larkin in the period March to July 1993 identified a number of round-figure lodgements, the source of which remained unknown. In the period late March/April 1993, the period in which, according to Mr Dunlop, he paid Cllr Larkin IR£1,000, there was no lodgement which might possibly relate to such a payment.

10.09 Cllr Larkin died without giving sworn evidence to the Tribunal.

10.10 The Tribunal found that Mr Dunlop's claim that he paid Cllr Larkin IR£1,000 was not established in evidence as a matter of probability.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR SEÁN GILBRIDE (FF)

11.01 Cllr Gilbride was one of the five signatories on the Drumnigh lands motion and accompanying map.

11.02 Mr Dunlop obtained Cllr Gilbride's signature. He had no specific memory of the precise date on which he obtained the signature. Mr Dunlop's diary for 12 March 1993 stated '10.30 Dev Plan'. Mr Dunlop may have obtained Cllr Gilbride's signature on this date.

11.03 Cllr Gilbride supported the vote on the rezoning motion of Mr Mahony's lands on 28 April 1993 and the confirming motion on 29 September 1993.

11.04 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he paid Cllr Gilbride IR£2,000 in cash in return for his signature and support for the Drumnigh motion, and the rezoning of two further and unrelated developments (Cargobridge and Cloghran). He made the payment (described by Mr Dunlop as a composite payment) shortly after 28 April 1993, and probably within the first two weeks of May 1993. Mr Dunlop said the payment was made in the environs of Dublin County Council offices in O'Connell Street. Mr Dunlop contended that the agreement to pay Cllr Gilbride was made either at the time he signed the Fox and Mahony rezoning motion or shortly thereafter.¹²

11.05 Cllr Gilbride accepted that he signed the motion lodged with the County Council on 12 March 1993 and that he may have consulted with other (unnamed) councillors before doing so to ascertain their agreement with the proposal, or their views on it. He agreed that Mr Dunlop's secretary's telephone records indicated that on 11 and 12 March 1993 he told Mr Dunlop of his whereabouts, and he agreed that it was likely that he had signed the motion and accompanying map between 4.15 and 5 pm on 12 March 1993.

11.06 Cllr Gilbride denied receiving money from Mr Dunlop in return for his signature on the Drumnigh rezoning motion or for his support for the rezoning. He specifically denied receiving the sum of IR£2,000 as alleged by Mr Dunlop, or in the circumstances claimed by him.

11.07 The Tribunal wrote to Cllr Gilbride on 28 March 2003, prior to his giving sworn evidence in this (Fox and Mahony) Module. He was asked to state what he knew about Mr Dunlop and to describe his dealings with him. In the course of his written response on his meetings with Mr Dunlop in 1993, Cllr Gilbride advised as follows:

No knowledge or dealings with Mr Denis Mahony. No knowledge or dealings with Mr and Mrs Fox . . . to the best of my recollection, Mr Dunlop asked me to sign the motion. I had no involvement with anyone other than signing the Motion. I would've consulted with the other local councillors to see if it was alright, I have no great recollection of the amended motion. I would have voted in favour of the motion, as I did on numerous other occasions. I had no involvement and did not receive any payments or benefits.

11.08 The Tribunal again wrote to Cllr Gilbride on 17 July 2003 seeking a detailed narrative statement. Cllr Gilbride did not comply with this request.

11.09 On 26 September 2003, in response to a request from the Tribunal for information on his association with Mr Dunlop in relation to the Quarryvale lands, Cllr Gilbride stated: 'I have no great recollection of any meetings with Frank Dunlop, I would have met him in the County Council offices, O'Connell Street on the odd occasion. I remember having lunch with Mr Dunlop once during the summer but I am not sure if it was 1993.'

DEALINGS BETWEEN MR DUNLOP AND CLLR GILBRIDE IN THE PERIOD 1992 TO 1993

11.10 When giving his sworn evidence on Day 430 (13 November 2003), Cllr Gilbride, having acknowledged that the references to him in Mr Dunlop's diary and phone records were probably accurate, accepted that Mr Dunlop's diaries indicated pre-arranged meetings with him on 15 occasions between 11 May 1992 and 8 September 1993, a period of 15 months.

11.11 In the period April 1992 to December 1993, 49 telephone contacts between Cllr Gilbride and Mr Dunlop's office were recorded. In the period 2 to 31 March 1993, Mr Dunlop's secretary recorded 9 telephone calls from Cllr Gilbride. In acknowledging that he made these calls to Mr Dunlop's office, Cllr Gilbride commented that some of them may have been return calls from him to Mr Dunlop.

11.12 Specifically, Cllr Gilbride stated: 'My recollection, most of my recollection was it would have been in reply, that Mr Dunlop might have been looking for me and I would always reply.'

11.13 In any event, the number of meetings and the extent of telephone communication between Cllr Gilbride and Mr Dunlop during these periods indicated a significant level of contact between them.

11.14 The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Gilbride's suggestion of minimal contact in 1993 between himself and Mr Dunlop was untrue (and designed to minimise his relationship with Mr Dunlop), and belied the relationship which actually existed between them throughout the course of the review of the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan.

11.15 On Day 148 (9 May 2000) Mr Dunlop identified Cllr Gilbride, who appeared on the list of councillors to whom he alleged he had made payments in 1991 and 1992, as one of those who had received additional payments at other times.

THE 'COMPOSITE PAYMENT' – A SUMMARY

11.16 The following is a summary of the 'composite payment'

- 1) Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid a composite payment of IR£2,000 to Cllr Gilbride in recognition of his support for the rezoning proposals relating to three separate landholdings, namely those which were the subject of the rezoning proposals considered by the Tribunal in the Cargobridge, Cloghran and Fox and Mahony Modules, and to ensure support for future rezoning matters. Mr Dunlop maintained that, in effect, the payment was requested by Cllr Gilbride.
- 2) Cllr Gilbride denied soliciting and receiving the IR£2,000 payment.
- 3) While the questioning of Mr Dunlop, and the evidence given by him in relation to his allegation, varied in its detail to some extent as between the three modules, Mr Dunlop's evidence to the Tribunal was, save for one aspect of it, generally consistent in all three modules.
- 4) The inconsistent aspect of Mr Dunlop's evidence related to the approximate period of time in which he had claimed that the question of payment first arose with Cllr Gilbride. In the Cargobridge Module, Mr Dunlop alleged that a discussion about the payment of money first arose within a period commencing on 10 March 1993, and ending on 28 April 1993. However, in the Cloghran Module, Mr Dunlop maintained that the date of the discussion was 'sometime subsequent to the Cloghran rezoning vote' (i.e. approximately two to three weeks later than suggested by Mr Dunlop in his evidence to the Tribunal in the Cargobridge Module).

The Tribunal did not consider this inconsistency to have been sufficient to discredit Mr Dunlop's evidence on the matter.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSION ON THE 'COMPOSITE PAYMENT'

11.17 The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence in relation to the alleged payment of IR£2,000 to Cllr Gilbride and was satisfied that it was solicited by, and paid to Cllr Gilbride, essentially as claimed by Mr Dunlop. This payment compromised the disinterested performance of Cllr Gilbride's duties as a councillor in relation to his involvement in the review of the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan and was therefore corrupt.

CASH FUNDS AVAILABLE TO MR DUNLOP IN 1993

12.01 In February 1993, Mr Dunlop received a cheque for IR£25,000 from Riga Ltd (see Chapter 2, the Quarryvale Module). He said he cashed the cheque and lodged IR£10,000 to his Irish Nationwide building society account, one of his 'war chest' accounts, on 19 February 1993. He apparently retained the balance in cash (IR£15,000).

12.02 Mr Dunlop lodged IR£5,000 to the same Irish Nationwide Building Society account on 3 March 1993 from cash in his possession. He made further cash lodgements to the joint bank accounts of himself and his wife at the AIB College Street Dublin branch in two sums of IR£1,000 each on 12 and 15 March 1993. He lodged IR£12,000 in cash to the Irish Nationwide account on 15 March 1993. Mr Dunlop testified that his cash lodgements represented only a portion of his cash reserves. The Tribunal accepted that this was the case.

12.03 Of the IR£10,000 in cash paid by Mr Mahony to Mr Dunlop on 23 March 1993, Mr Dunlop believed he lodged IR£3,500 to his Irish Nationwide account on 26 March 1993. He lodged IR£4,175.36 to an account in the name of himself and his wife Sheila on 26 March 1993.

12.04 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop had sufficient cash funds available to pay the councillors he alleged he had paid in return for their support for the rezoning of the Drumnigh lands.

POLITICAL DONATIONS MADE BY MR MAHONY OR DENIS MAHONY LTD

13.01 Mr Mahony, either personally or through his company, made a number of substantial political donations between 1987 and 1993. These included payments to the Fianna Fáil Party made between 1987 and 1989 and totalling IR£8,500, IR£6,000 of which was receipted and recorded as received in the party's accounts. He also made payments of IR£500 to Cllr G. V. Wright in 1991, IR£250 to Cllr Larry Butler in 1993, and IR£500 to Cllr Nora Owen in 1991, all by cheque.

13.02 Cllr Butler voted in support of the motion to rezone Mr Mahony's lands on 28 April 1993, but insisted that there was no link between his support and his request to Denis Mahony Ltd for a political donation in relation to a fundraising event on 27 May 1993. He had not associated those lands with Mr Mahony. Cllr Butler stated that Mr Mahony was not known to him personally, and that he had had no dealings with him.

13.03 Cllr Butler said he had no recollection of being lobbied by Mr Dunlop to support the Drumnigh lands rezoning, and he had no reason to believe this had occurred. However, Mr Dunlop's diary for 18 March 1993 recorded a pre-arranged meeting in the Royal Dublin Hotel with Cllr Butler and Cllr Ned Ryan. Cllr Butler was almost certainly lobbied by Mr Dunlop in relation to the Drumnigh lands on this occasion, assuming that the meeting took place.

13.04 On Day 427 (7 November 2003), Cllr Butler suggested that it was unlikely that Mr Dunlop would have lobbied him, because his ward was far removed from the Drumnigh lands, and Mr Dunlop would not have assumed that he had any knowledge or interest in those particular lands. Cllr Butler stated that he had 'no interest in the activities of what was happening in the north side of the city because I didn't know the geography obviously of the lands in question and I would depend totally on the local councillors for to be in tune with what was happening in their own areas.'

13.05 Cllr Butler told the Tribunal that he would generally have followed the views of local Fianna Fáil councillors when dealing with rezoning issues in relation to lands outside his own electoral area.

13.06 On Day 427 (7 November 2003), the following exchange took place between Tribunal counsel and Cllr Butler:

Q. 'But it would seem, Mr Butler, with the greatest possible respect to you, that you seem to have abrogated your County Councillor responsibility once you stepped outside the Glencullen ward?'

A. 'I suppose to a large extent you could say that, yes.'

Q. 'Right, and you don't dispute that?'

A. 'Not really, no.'

13.07 Notwithstanding Cllr Butler's protestation that it was not so, the Tribunal believed it likely that Cllr Butler was aware of the connection between Denis Mahony Ltd and the lands at Drumnigh when he approached Denis Mahony Ltd in May 1993 seeking a political contribution, and ought not to have done so.

13.08 Mr Mahony made a cheque payment to Cllr Nora Owen on 28 June 1991 in connection with the Local Elections on 27 June 1991. Mr Mahony and Cllr Owen knew each other for a number of years, and Mr Mahony occasionally supported Cllr Owen's golf fundraising events in aid of the Fine Gael Party. Cllr Owen was a co-signatory of the motion of 28 April 1993, and generally was a supporter of the project to rezone the Drumnigh lands.

CHAPTER ELEVEN – THE WALLS KINSEALY MODULE

INTRODUCTION

1.01 This module concerned an unsuccessful attempt in 1993 to rezone 54 acres of land (the Walls Kinsealy lands) at Kinsealy Lane, south of Malahide Demesne in north Co. Dublin. The land had been acquired in 1989 by Mr Paul Walls for IR£240,000 through Glenellen Homes Ltd, a property development company and wholly owned subsidiary of Walls Properties Ltd. Glenellen Homes disposed of the lands in 1993 for IR£275,000.

1.02 The module was heard in public over five days between 6 April and 27 July 2006. Eleven witnesses gave evidence.

1.03 The lands were zoned B (agriculture) in Map 6 of the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan, a zoning they retained in the 1991 Draft Development Plan.

1.04 On 18 March 1993, a motion signed by Cllr Seán Gilbride seeking to rezone the Walls Kinsealy lands from agriculture to low density residential, was lodged for consideration at a special meeting of the County Council held on 4 May 1993. The motion was withdrawn in the course of the meeting.

1.05 A few days earlier, on 15 March 1993, Cllr Gilbride had signed and lodged two motions affecting other lands owned by Mr Walls, at Seatown West, Swords, Co. Dublin (the Walls Seatown lands and the Walls Hydraulic lands), to be considered at a special meeting of the County Council on 26 May 1993. Although the motions were proposed and seconded on that date they too were duly withdrawn by Cllr Gilbride.

1.06 The Walls Kinsealy lands retained their 1983 agricultural zoning when the 1993 County Development Plan was adopted on 10 December 1993. The Seatown and Walls Hydraulic Lands, likewise, retained their 1983 G zoning, their protected status having been further enhanced by a series of changes approved in September 1993.

THE SEATOWN AND WALLS HYDRAULIC MOTIONS

2.01 The two motions lodged by Cllr Gilbride on 15 March 1993 concerned parcels of lands at Seatown West, Swords, Co. Dublin which were zoned G in the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan and retained that zoning in the Draft Development Plan 1991.

2.02 The first motion related to four and a half acres of land (the Seatown lands) and sought to exclude them from the proposed area of scientific interest, as set out in the Draft Dublin County Development Plan 1991. The lands were designated as being of scientific interest because of their location at the mouth of the Swords/Malahide estuary, and because of their importance for the passage of migrant and wintering birds.

2.03 The second motion lodged by Cllr Gilbride related to some 12 acres of land (the Walls Hydraulic lands) adjoining the Seatown lands and sought to have them deleted from that portion of the Draft Development Plan 1991 which had as its objective the preservation of views and prospects and of areas of scientific interest.

2.04 Mr Walls' family home was on the Seatown lands, which he owned. The Walls Hydraulic lands were owned by Hydraulic Plant Ltd, a company which, in 1993, appeared to have held these lands in trust for Mr Walls' father. Mr Walls was a director of this company.

2.05 Prior to the first public display of the Draft Development Plan from 2 September to 3 December 1991 the County Council planners had provided councillors with reports on their plans to further protect and enhance areas of scientific interest and these had been incorporated into the Draft Written Statement. Councillors had had the opportunity to submit motions before the plan went on public display but none of the motions submitted sought changes to the zoning of the Seatown or Walls Hydraulic lands.

2.06 On 2 December 1991, on the eve of the expiry date for the first public display, Hydraulic Plant Ltd lodged a representation with Dublin County Council which argued, in effect, that the Walls Hydraulic lands were not an area of scientific interest, an argument also put by Mr Walls in an oral submission to the County Council on 21 February 1992.

2.07 Following the first public display period, the County Council held a series of meetings dealing with the objections, representations and motions that had been lodged relating to the Draft Development Plan.

2.08 Maps 6 and 7 of the Draft Plan, which included the Seatown and Walls Hydraulic lands, were listed for consideration before the County Council at a special meeting on 26 May 1993.

2.09 The minutes of the County Council meeting of 26 May 1993 indicate that Cllr Gilbride withdrew the two motions he had lodged on 15 March 1993 and they were not put to a vote by the councillors.

THE WALLS KINSEALY MOTION

3.01 During the first public display of the Draft Development Plan 1991, the Council planners did not recommend changes to the Walls Kinsealy lands' B zoning.

3.02 On 2 December 1991, the County Council received an objection to the proposed B zoning from Mr Walls of Glenellen Homes. He sought the rezoning of the lands at Kinsealy to A (residential).

3.03 Mr Walls lodged a further written submission for rezoning on 10 February 1992 and he made an oral submission on 11 February 1992.

3.04 The 18 March 1993 motion signed by Cllr Gilbride seeking to rezone the Walls Kinsealy lands was due for consideration at a special meeting on 4 May 1993 held to consider Map No. 7 of the Draft Development Plan which included the Walls Kinsealy lands. At this meeting the County Manager recommended, inter alia, against the rezoning of the Walls Kinsealy lands from agricultural to residential, relying on the County Council planners' stated objections to that proposal.

3.05 The minutes of the meeting record that, following the County Manager's recommendation, Cllr Gilbride withdrew his motion.

3.06 During the second statutory display period from July to August 1993, the Walls Kinsealy lands retained their agricultural zoning, and this zoning was confirmed when the Development Plan was adopted in December 1993.

MR FRANK DUNLOP'S INVOLVEMENT

4.01 In a written statement to the Tribunal on 9 October 2000, Mr Dunlop claimed that, in the course of his work as a lobbyist for Mr Paul Walls seeking the rezoning of the Walls Kinsealy lands as residential, he paid Cllr Seán Gilbride IR£1,000 in connection with that attempt.

4.02 Mr Dunlop suggested in the course of that statement that to the best of his recollection and belief he obtained the sum of IR£5,000 from Mr Walls and the IR£1,000 paid to Cllr Gilbride was from that sum. However, in 2006, Mr Dunlop asserted that he had received only IR£3,025 (IR£2,500 plus VAT) from Mr Walls (see below).

4.03 In the preface to his October 2000 statement, Mr Dunlop stated that the presence of an asterisk beside lands identified in the statement denoted knowledge on the part of the land owner/developer that Mr Dunlop would be likely to, or would be required to, pay councillors for their support for rezoning. An asterisk appeared on the Walls Kinsealy part of Mr Dunlop's October 2000 statement.

4.04 In May 2000, while under examination by Tribunal counsel, Mr Dunlop prepared lists of developments in respect of which he claimed to have paid money to councillors in connection with the rezoning process. He did not allude at that time to the Walls Kinsealy lands or to the names of Mr Paul Walls or Cllr Gilbride in connection with these lands. In evidence, Mr Dunlop stated that he had not recollected his involvement in the rezoning of the lands in April/May 2000 but had recalled it when he had reviewed, in the period May to October 2000, the documentation relating to County Council meetings ('the road map'). There was no dispute but that Mr Dunlop did have an involvement as a lobbyist for the Walls Kinsealy lands in early 1993.

4.05 In March 2006, Mr Dunlop prepared a statement in advance of the public hearing of this module. It was received by the Tribunal after a brief of documentation had been circulated to all affected parties, including Mr Dunlop. In this statement Mr Dunlop made reference for the first time, in the context of Walls Kinsealy, to the role played in January 1993 by Mr Tim Collins in introducing him to Mr Paul Walls for retention as a lobbyist. In this statement, Mr Dunlop attributed to both Mr Walls and Mr Collins an awareness in 1993 that some councillors would seek payment from him for either their signature or their support or both when he was lobbying them on rezoning motions.

MR DUNLOP'S RETENTION AND HIS LOBBYING OF COUNCILLORS

5.01 Mr Dunlop maintained in the course of his evidence that he had met Mr Walls and Mr Collins at his office on 7 January 1993, a meeting which he claimed had been arranged by Mr Collins. He said that he had been retained to lobby councillors to support Mr Walls' proposal to rezone the Walls Kinsealy lands from agricultural to residential.

5.02 Mr Dunlop described Mr Walls as one of a number of landowners introduced to him by Mr Collins in the period 1990 to 1993 in the context of the then ongoing review of the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan so that they could retain him in connection with the rezoning of land. All of the individuals introduced by Mr Collins to Mr Dunlop in early 1993, including Mr Walls, had a common objective, namely the alteration of the zoning of their respective landholdings in order to maximise their development potential, and consequently their value.

5.03 Mr Dunlop's impression from the meeting with Mr Walls and Mr Collins on 7 January 1993 was that Mr Walls' intention to seek the rezoning of the Walls Kinsealy lands was a 'last throw of the dice' by him as an opportunity had presented itself in 1993 to seek the rezoning of the lands.

5.04 Mr Dunlop stated that in the course of the meeting Mr Walls had outlined his proposals for the lands and alluded to the actions which had already been taken in relation to them. Mr Dunlop said that he, Mr Walls and Mr Collins had discussed whether there was likely to be support from councillors for the motion to rezone the lands as residential. Mr Dunlop stated that he had a specific recollection of Mr Collins mentioning Cllr Nora Owen in the context of her known opposition to rezonings in the Walls Kinsealy area.

5.05 Mr Dunlop maintained in his evidence to the Tribunal that the discussions between himself, Mr Walls and Mr Collins had left him in no doubt but that 'the people present at the meeting were aware of what was required in relation to, or maybe required, in relation to disbursements' to councillors.

5.06 While maintaining that both Mr Walls and Mr Collins were aware of the possibility that, as he put it, councillors might have to be paid, Mr Dunlop was unable to point to any specific utterance on the part of either Mr Walls or Mr Collins which had given him that impression.

5.07 However, Mr Dunlop maintained that Mr Collins' awareness of the likelihood or possibility of his making disbursements to councillors in the course of his lobbying efforts stemmed from an already established relationship between himself and Mr Collins in other rezoning projects which were under way by January 1993.

5.08 Both Mr Walls and Mr Collins acknowledged that the meeting with Mr Dunlop on 7 January 1993 was probably arranged for Mr Walls by Mr Collins. Mr Walls acknowledged this on the basis of the entry in Mr Dunlop's diary on that date which read '10.30 Tim Collins Paul Walls'. However, Mr Walls did not believe that Mr Collins was present at the meeting of 7 January 1993 and professed to have very little recollection of it. Mr Walls acknowledged, however, that he had met Mr Dunlop on that date for the purposes of retaining him to lobby councillors to rezone the Walls Kinsealy lands from agricultural to residential. Mr Walls believed that Mr Dunlop's functions included ensuring that sufficient councillors would attend to vote in any rezoning motion, a point Mr Walls had noted in manuscript on the letter received from Mr Dunlop on 13 January 1993.

5.09 Mr Walls denied any awareness or knowledge on his part of the possibility or likelihood of payments being made to councillors and he rejected Mr Dunlop's evidence that anything was said or done at the meeting of 7 January 1993 which could have suggested to Mr Dunlop that he had such knowledge or awareness.

5.10 Mr Collins said that he had no recollection of attending the meeting of 7 January 1993 and maintained that he had not attended it. He believed that while he had recommended Mr Dunlop to Mr Walls, Mr Walls had 'a tendency to do his own thing' and had met with Mr Dunlop without him.

5.11 Mr Collins acknowledged that Mr Walls was one of a number of landowners with rezoning ambitions who had met with Mr Dunlop on Mr Collins' recommendation in early 1993. He agreed that he had been in attendance when other landowners/developers had met with Mr Dunlop.¹ Notwithstanding his presence at other meetings, Mr Collins was adamant in evidence that he had not accompanied Mr Walls to Mr Dunlop's office on 7 January 1993. Mr Collins said that, as he had not attended this meeting, he could not have expressed to Mr Dunlop any awareness of the need to make disbursements to councillors.

5.12 Mr Collins professed himself to be unaware of the 'system' of making disbursements to certain councillors, as described by Mr Dunlop in evidence. Mr Collins also denied that he had ever spoken to Mr Dunlop about Cllr Owen's opposition to the rezoning of the lands in question and maintained that he was acquainted with only one councillor in the north Dublin area, namely Cllr G. V. Wright, then a neighbour of his.

5.13 Mr Dunlop claimed to the Tribunal that from the outset of his retention as a lobbyist in relation to the lands at Walls Kinsealy he did not encourage Mr Walls with regard to the prospects for rezoning these lands. He had, he stated, advised Mr Walls of the need to canvass support from a cross-section of councillors, and in particular from local councillors, before approaching councillors in other areas.

5.14 Documentation produced to the Tribunal revealed that in the period January to May 1993 Mr Walls and Mr Dunlop had regular contact regarding Mr Dunlop's lobbying endeavours. By 4 March 1993, Mr Dunlop was in a position to advise Mr Walls that rezoning proposals had to be submitted by mid March 1993 and of his intention to approach Cllrs Wright and Devitt and others to sign the necessary motion. By 15 March 1993, Mr Walls knew from Mr Dunlop that the Walls Kinsealy motion had to be submitted to the County Council by 18 March 1993. Although Mr Walls disputed this, it was likely that he and Mr Dunlop met on 9 March 1993 to discuss the text of the motion to be lodged. In addition to Mr Dunlop's lobbying efforts, Mr Walls himself lobbied councillors by letters dated 28 April and 3 May 1993.

5.15 While Mr Dunlop acknowledged that by 18 March 1993 Mr Walls (or companies associated with him) had put three proposals before Dublin County Council (including a proposal to rezone the Walls Kinsealy lands), he claimed responsibility only for the Walls Kinsealy motion and professed to have no knowledge of the two motions relating to the Seatown lands and the Walls Hydraulic lands which had been lodged with the County Council on 15 March 1993. Mr Dunlop believed that he had never been informed of Mr Walls' zoning ambitions for these lands, stating that the focus of his retention at all times had been the Walls Kinsealy lands.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR SEÁN GILBRIDE (FF)

6.01 Mr Walls largely agreed with Mr Dunlop's evidence with regard to the Seatown and Walls Hydraulic lands, although he believed that there had been some discussion with him about his becoming involved in lobbying in relation to these lands should Mr Walls secure local councillor support for his zoning proposals. This support had not materialised, which in turn led Mr Walls to approach Cllr Seán Gilbride to sign the Seatown and Walls Hydraulic motions.

6.02 While retained as a lobbyist for the Walls Kinsealy lands, during the period between 14 January and 18 March 1993, Mr Dunlop turned to Cllr Gilbride to have a motion signed in relation to the lands. On 15 March 1993, Cllr Gilbride had signed the Seatown and Walls Hydraulic lands motions at Mr Walls' request. Mr Walls had called to the councillor's home for that purpose. Cllr Gilbride told the Tribunal that, though he believed that there was no local support for these motions, he had signed them as a favour to Mr Walls whom he had known through Fianna Fáil connections for thirty years. He told the Tribunal he did not give any specific thought to the merits of the proposals, believing that they would in due course be debated within the County Council.

6.03 While there was evidence that as early as 9 February 1993 Mr Walls was in possession of a typed motion proposing the rezoning of the Walls Kinsealy lands, he did not request Cllr Gilbride to sign it on 15 March 1993. Mr Walls' explanation to the Tribunal for not having done so was that this issue had been left in Mr Dunlop's hands. According to Mr Walls, the Walls Kinsealy issue needed to be handled 'sensitively' because of the opposition that was expected to emerge locally to his ultimate objective for these lands i.e. to build 'select' housing.

6.04 Neither Mr Walls nor Cllr Gilbride, in the course of their evidence, could recollect whether in fact Mr Walls had mentioned the Walls Kinsealy rezoning proposal when requesting Cllr Gilbride to sign the other two motions. The Tribunal believed that they did discuss the Walls Kinsealy proposal as there was no conceivable reason why Mr Walls would not have raised his zoning ambitions for these lands with Cllr Gilbride.

6.05 Both Mr Dunlop and Cllr Gilbride agreed that Mr Dunlop presented the Walls Kinsealy motion to Cllr Gilbride for signature in the County Council offices on the evening of 18 March 1993, the final date for lodgement of motions in connection with the lands.

6.06 Mr Dunlop and Cllr Gilbride disagreed about the circumstances in which Cllr Gilbride came to sign the motion. Cllr Gilbride maintained that his meeting with Mr Dunlop on the evening of 18 March 1993 arose following a telephone call to him from Mr Walls who asked him to sign a motion in relation to the Walls Kinsealy lands, which Mr Dunlop would provide. Cllr Gilbride stated that he duly signed this motion after being presented with it by Mr Dunlop in the Fianna Fáil rooms of the County Council. Cllr Gilbride stated that he had a particular recollection of the telephone call from Mr Walls in view of the urgency of the matter, given that 18 March 1993 was the final date for the submission of motions to the County Council.

6.07 Mr Walls said he had no recollection of telephoning Cllr Gilbride or requesting him to sign the Walls Kinsealy motion. His evidence in relation to this motion was that he had left it in Mr Dunlop's hands.

6.08 Mr Dunlop's evidence was that, after his retention as a lobbyist in relation to the lands, he spoke on a number of occasions to Cllr Gilbride about the rezoning proposal. Although Mr Dunlop had no specific recollection, it was probable that he spoke about the motion to other councillors in addition to Cllr Gilbride. It was likely, having regard to his initial advices to Mr Walls about securing local councillor support, and having regard to Mr Walls' note of his discussion of 4 March 1993 with Mr Dunlop, that Mr Dunlop had approached local councillors for support, but to no avail. While Cllr G. V. Wright told the Tribunal that he had no specific recollection of the matter he did not dispute that Mr Dunlop may have spoken to him about it. Cllr Wright stated that Mr Dunlop would have been told or would have known himself of Cllr Wright's stated opposition to any rezoning of the lands in question.

6.09 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that when he approached Cllr Gilbride about the matter Cllr Gilbride stated his belief that the motion was not a 'runner' but agreed to sign the motion and seek the support of other councillors. Mr Dunlop claimed that Cllr Gilbride had sought payment for his signature and support for the motion, and that a payment of IR£1,000 was agreed. Mr Dunlop described Cllr Gilbride's request for payment as having been conveyed with the words 'it will cost you' or other similar phrase. Mr Dunlop testified that he duly paid Cllr Gilbride IR£1,000.

6.10 Although adamant that he had paid Cllr Gilbride IR£1,000, Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he had no specific recollection of paying the money and could not say when or where he had paid it, save that he believed it may have been in the environs of the County Council, or at a local hotel, at the time of the signing of the motion, or shortly thereafter. Mr Dunlop stated that he made the payment of IR£1,000 to Cllr Gilbride out of cash resources available to him at the time.

6.11 Cllr Gilbride withdrew the Walls Kinsealy motion on 4 May 1993.

6.12 Cllr Gilbride denied receiving any money from Mr Dunlop or from anyone else in relation to the Kinsealy lands motion. It was his recollection that, having signed the motion and map provided to him by Mr Dunlop, he lodged them with Ms Sinéad Collins, the County Council's administrative officer. He did not believe that Mr Dunlop had otherwise lobbied him at any time about the Kinsealy lands. Cllr Gilbride said that he signed the motion/map as 'a favour to Mr Walls' and in circumstances where he suspected the proposal would not succeed because of opposition from his local councillor colleagues, Cllrs Michael Kennedy and G. V. Wright.

6.13 On the issue of whether or not Cllr Gilbride requested and was paid IR£1,000 for his signature and support for the Walls Kinsealy motion, the Tribunal noted that Mr Dunlop's evidence in this regard was vague and unconvincing. It was common case that by March 1993 Mr Dunlop and Cllr Gilbride had an established relationship from, at least, early 1991 which had been developed and strengthened throughout the course of the review of the 1983 Development Plan. Although the Tribunal has found as fact, with regard to evidence adduced in other modules, that Cllr Gilbride (in relation to other rezoning matters) received money from Mr Dunlop, both in return for his signature on motions and for his voting support for rezoning motions, the Tribunal was not satisfied in this instance that it has been established, on balance of probability, that Cllr Gilbride sought or received IR£1,000 from Mr Dunlop in relation to the Walls Kinsealy lands.

PAYMENTS TO MR DUNLOP BY MR PAUL WALLS

7.01 In his October 2000 statement Mr Dunlop claimed that he received IR£5,000 from Mr Walls. However, in his 2006 statement and in sworn evidence, Mr Dunlop altered this figure to IR£3,025 (IR£2,500 plus VAT). Documentary evidence established that Mr Dunlop wrote to Mr Walls on 13 January 1993 referring to their recent meeting and setting out a schedule of payments. He sought IR£2,500 plus VAT as an upfront fee, the discharge of all 'legitimate disbursements' and a success fee of IR£10,000 (plus VAT). The success fee was revised down to IR£6,000 on 22 January 1993. Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoiced Walls Properties Ltd for IR£3,025 (IR£2,500 plus VAT) on 26 February 1993 and payment was received from that company on 1 March 1993 and duly recorded in the accounts of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd. Mr Dunlop does not appear to have claimed any 'legitimate disbursements'. Mr Walls stated that this sum of IR£3,025 was the only sum he paid Mr Dunlop. The agreed revised success fee did not ultimately materialize.

7.02 Mr Dunlop's explanation for the earlier figure of IR£5,000 was that he had not checked his records at the time he was preparing his October 2000 statement. He agreed that, as late as February 2003 (when giving sworn evidence in the Carrickmines I Module), he had continued to maintain that he had received IR£5,000 from Mr Walls.

7.03 Mr Dunlop maintained that a cash lodgement of IR£5,000 to his Irish Nationwide Building Society account on 3 March 1993 was unconnected with monies he received from Mr Walls.

WERE MR WALLS AND/OR MR TIM COLLINS AWARE OF MR DUNLOP'S INTENTION TO BRIBE COUNCILLORS?

8.01 The Tribunal was not satisfied that evidence adduced at the hearing established that Mr Walls was aware that Mr Dunlop would or might make payments to councillors. Mr Dunlop's evidence on this issue was vague and it appeared to the Tribunal that insofar as Mr Dunlop sought to attribute knowledge or awareness to Mr Walls he did so by virtue of Mr Walls' association with Mr Collins.

8.02 The Tribunal was satisfied that by January 1993 Mr Dunlop and Mr Collins had an established association and relationship particularly in the context of the review of the 1983 Development Plan, then ongoing. In the course of giving evidence in other modules (Lissenhall and Cloghran) Mr Dunlop claimed (and the Tribunal accepted) that Mr Collins was aware of the possibility or likelihood that he would make disbursements to certain unnamed councillors while lobbying in support of the rezoning of those particular lands. Mr Dunlop's testimony in those modules was that this had been articulated by Mr Collins in a general way when he had met with him in the company of certain individuals associated with those lands.²

8.03 There was a dispute between Mr Dunlop on the one hand and Mr Walls and Mr Collins on the other as to whether Mr Collins had attended the meeting of 7 January 1993. Mr Dunlop was adamant that Mr Collins was present and stated that his recollection was aided by utterances at the meeting regarding a certain councillor's opposition to the rezoning proposition. Mr Collins said he was not at the meeting. The full extent of Mr Walls' evidence on this issue was that he had no recollection of Mr Collins being there but believed that he had not attended.

8.04 It was common case that in the period November 1992 to January 1993 Mr Collins brought individuals who had rezoning ambitions for their lands to Mr Dunlop so that he might be engaged to lobby councillors. Mr Collins accepted that in November 1992 he attended a meeting concerning lands at Lissenhall with Mr Dunlop in the company of Mr Colm Moran and Mr Michael Hughes. It was Mr Collins who had recommended Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist to the promoters of the Lissenhall rezoning project. He accepted (though disputing the circumstances in which the meeting arose) that he was present at a meeting with Mr Dunlop and Mr John Butler (Cloghran Module) on 13 January 1993. The Tribunal was satisfied that the meeting with Mr Butler was pre-arranged by Mr Collins. Therefore, if Mr Collins was not at the meeting between Mr Dunlop and Mr Walls it would have been an exception to his practice in the period November

² See the chapters on the Cloghran and Lissenhall Modules.

1992 to January 1993 when introducing Mr Dunlop to individuals in connection with rezoning matters. The Tribunal believed that Mr Collins did attend the meeting with Mr Walls and Mr Dunlop, as evidenced by a note to that effect in Mr Dunlop's diary for 7 January 1993.

8.05 However, while the Tribunal believed that Mr Collins was at the meeting it was not established to its satisfaction that Mr Collins, either by utterances on his part or by his acquiescence with or acceptance of any utterances on Mr Dunlop's part, gave any indication at that particular meeting of his awareness of Mr Dunlop's modus operandi.

8.06 The Tribunal believed that it might well have been that on 7 January 1993 Mr Dunlop had in mind the November 1992 meeting between Mr Collins, Mr Moran, Mr Hughes and himself when, the Tribunal was satisfied, Mr Collins gave Mr Dunlop to understand that he was au fait with his 'system'. Equally, the Tribunal was satisfied that, at a meeting on 13 January 1993 between Mr Dunlop, Mr Collins and Mr Butler, Mr Collins' awareness of Mr Dunlop's modus operandi was again articulated, as described by Mr Dunlop in the course of his evidence in the Cloghran module.

8.07 Thus, while the Tribunal believed that at least from November 1992 Mr Collins was acquainted with the 'system' articulated by Mr Dunlop, the Tribunal could not, on the available evidence, make a finding that Mr Collins articulated this awareness in the course of the meeting of 7 January 1993.

STRICTLY PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Paul,

I write regarding our meeting at my office on 7th. January last.

Having thought about the matter in the interim I believe that your proposal regarding the totality of the land will be difficult, though not impossible, to implement via the Draft Development Plan in Dublin County Council. However, I am prepared to undertake the task involved and I suggest the following business arrangement:

- IR£2,500 + VAT payable as an up-front fee;
- payment of all agreed legitimate disbursements;
- payment of a success fee of IR£10,000 + VAT. This fee obviously does not become payable if the required zoning is not achieved. It is payable however in circumstances where a compromise is entered into by the planners and the elected members.

I hope this is indicative of the work involved and the fees attached to same. As I explained to you at our meeting this is a cumbersome and time consuming exercise. Nonetheless it has to be done if you want to achieve your objective.

Perhaps you could revert with your views.

Sincerely,

Frank Dunlop

CHAPTER TWELVE – THE BALHEARY MODULE

INTRODUCTION

1.01 This module concerned attempts to rezone approximately 70 acres of land situated north of Swords, which had been acquired in the late 1950s by the Irish Christian Brothers ('the Brothers') as part of a larger parcel of land. Mr Joe Tiernan, a property developer, was also involved in the rezoning attempts, having acquired an option on the lands on 8 February 1991. The attempts were unsuccessful.

1.02 The module was heard in public over nine days, between 9 November and 19 December 2006. Twenty-four witnesses gave evidence in public and information was provided to the Tribunal in relation to three deceased persons.

THE PLANNING HISTORY OF THE LANDS 1991 TO 1995

2.01 The lands, which were partly contained in Map 5 of the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan, were shown zoned B (to protect and provide for the development of agriculture) and G (to protect and improve high amenity areas).

2.02 A motion dated 29 January 1991, signed by six councillors, seeking to have the lands zoned for residential development was received by the Council on 15 February 1991. The motion was considered at a special meeting of the Council on 21 March 1991 but was withdrawn. Consequently, the lands retained their 1983 zoning when the 1991 Draft Development Plan went on public display between 2 September and 3 December 1991.

2.03 During the 1991 display period Mr Kieran O'Malley, Consultant Planner, made a written submission on behalf of the Brothers and Tiernan Homes Ltd ('Tiernan Homes')¹ requesting that 75 to 80 acres of the lands zoned B be rezoned to A (to protect and improve residential amenity) or A1 (to provide for new residential communities in accordance with approved action area plans). The submission also supported the amenity zoning along the Broadmeadow River banks, which zoning affected a relatively small area along the southernmost margins of the overall holding.

2.04 On 18 March 1993, a motion signed by Cllrs Anne Devitt and Cyril Gallagher, proposing that approximately 70 acres at Balheary Demesne, Swords, be rezoned to A1 was lodged with Dublin County Council. The stated objective of the motion which was in accordance with the proposals contained in Mr O'Malley's submission was to extend the Broadmeadow linear park to maximize the amenity value of the 0.4 mile Broadmeadow River frontage, and provide three acres for active recreation.

2.05 On 17 May 1993, the County Manager recommended to the elected councillors that no additional lands be rezoned at that time, except in certain limited circumstances. He did not recommend the rezoning of the Balheary lands. Nonetheless, on 21 May 1993 the Gallagher/Devitt motion to rezone the Balheary lands was carried by 39 votes to 27, with 2 abstentions, and as a consequence, the lands were shown zoned A1 when the Dublin County Development 1993 draft amendments to the 1991 Draft Development Plan went on public display between 1 July and 4 August 1993.

2.06 When the lands were reconsidered by the Council following this display period the Manager recommended that new residential zoning for lands in the general Swords area be limited to some 65 acres, which did not include the Balheary lands. Accordingly, his recommendation was that the Balheary lands revert to their prior agricultural and high amenity zoning.

2.07 Prior to the special meeting of 21 September 1993, Cllrs Gallagher and Devitt had lodged a motion seeking the confirmation (albeit with a limit of 480 houses) of the May 1993 residential zoning which had been granted to a portion of the Balheary lands.² However, by September 1993, a number of other motions had also been lodged by councillors who were objecting to the zoning achieved in May 1993, seeking a return to B (agricultural), and G (high amenity) zoning for the lands.

2.08 The first motion concerning Balheary was put to a vote on 21 September 1993 in the names of Cllrs Seán Ryan and Tom Kelleher. It sought the return of a portion of the lands to their 1983 B and G zoning, and was passed, with 35 votes in favour, 28 against, and 1 abstention. The Gallagher/Devitt motion therefore fell without being put to a vote. A second motion, also in the names of Cllrs Ryan and Kelleher, which sought the return of the other portion of the lands, (Change 1B on Map 6) to their 1983 zoning status G (high amenity), was passed unanimously. The result of the votes on the Kelleher/Ryan motions was that the Balheary lands remained zoned agricultural and high amenity when the Development Plan was finalised in December 1993.

²The change from B (agricultural) to A1 (residential).

2.09 On 24 September 1993, a motion proposed by Cllr Gallagher and seconded by Cllr G. V. Wright proposing that 'the Manager be requested to prepare and submit to Fingal County Council a Draft Variation of the new County Development Plan as it affects the Swords area' and that it should 'be available to the Council before 30 April 1994 ...with a view to having the variation in effect before 31 December 1994', was passed unanimously. This had the effect of keeping alive the prospect of having the Balheary lands rezoned for residential purposes when they were considered by councillors in the soon to be established Fingal County Council.³

2.10 Fingal County Council commenced its variation of the 1993 Plan, in the context of the lands in its functional area, in early 1995. In June 1995, during the display period of a Draft Variation of the 1993 Development Plan in relation to the Swords area, which contained proposals for 14 changes to the plan, Mr Kieran O'Malley made a further written submission on behalf of the Brothers. The submission sought to have the lands zoned 'A' or 'A1', and to have the long-term development area boundary for the town of Swords varied to include these lands, together with consequential adjustments to the written statement. However, since the submission did not refer to any of the 14 proposed changes envisaged by the variation, on the recommendation of the Manager it was not considered by Fingal County Council on 21 November 1995. Thus, the Balheary lands retained their 1983 zoning.

2.11 The councillors agreed at that meeting (Cllr Cathal Boland wishing to be recorded as dissenting), that, in view of the restricted interpretation of the Fingal County Development Plan 1993 Draft Variation 1995 (Swords), which confined members to considering only representations within the Swords area, the Council should immediately, but not later than, 12 December 1995, review the Development Plan 1993 as it referred to the Swords area.

2.12 This process commenced in late 1995. However no representations were made seeking to have the Balheary lands rezoned. Accordingly when the Fingal County Council Development Plan Swords 1997 was adopted on 29 January 1997, the Brothers' lands retained their B and G zoning.

2.13 During the currency of the making of the 1993 Development Plan, and the variation of that Plan by Fingal County Council, the attempts to rezone the Balheary lands were largely led by Mr Joe Tiernan who retained Mr Frank Dunlop of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd as a lobbyist

³ Fingal County Council together with South Dublin County Council and Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Council was established on 1 January 1994, in place of the old Dublin County Council and the Borough of Dun Laoghaire.

MR JOE TIERNAN'S INVOLVEMENT WITH THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS, AND THE REZONING CAMPAIGN

3.01 The Brothers had purchased their lands comprising approximately 160 acres in 1959. By 1978 some 74 acres had been sold to the Industrial Development Authority (IDA). In or about 1989, following a property audit carried out by Hamilton Osborne King (HOK) on their behalf, the Brothers formed the view that they held land surplus to their requirements. Their agents advised them that; 'because [of] the current zoning and the possibility of rezoning at the next or subsequent Development Plan review date, we recommend that the property should not be publicly marketed at the present time'.

3.02 The advice was that the Brothers should instead seek to change the zoning on the lands with a view to enhancing their selling potential. They had an opportunity to do so at that time, as a review of the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan was by then under way. Mr Derek Mulligan of HOK approached a number of third parties with a view to establishing the lands' development potential. In 1990 three expressions of interest were received, including one from Mr Tiernan.

3.03 On 8 February 1991, Mr Tiernan, through his company Tiernan Corporation Ltd, entered into a written agreement with the Brothers in relation to the Balheary lands, which provided as follows:

- a) Mr Tiernan would seek to have the Balheary lands rezoned for either residential or industrial development in the new Draft Development Plan.
- b) Mr Tiernan thereafter would apply for planning permission in respect of the land.
- c) Once full planning permission was obtained within the period of the agreement (four years from 8 February 1991 subject to extensions) the Brothers would sell the lands and the proceeds of sale would be applied as follows:
 - i) The first IR£35,000 per acre to belong exclusively to the Brothers.
 - ii) The next IR£35,000 per acre to belong exclusively to Tiernan Corporation.
 - iii) Any amount in excess of IR£70,000 but not exceeding IR£100,000 to be divided equally between the Brothers and Tiernan Corporation Ltd.
 - iv) Any amount in excess of IR£100,000 per acre to be divided as to 70 per cent to the Brothers, and 30 per cent to Tiernan Corporation Ltd.

3.04 It was also agreed that the Brothers would not accept any offer to purchase the lands without first giving Tiernan Corporation Ltd the opportunity of acquiring the relevant property at the price offered – i.e. they would be offered first refusal. Mr Tiernan and the Brothers concluded a similar agreement with regard to lands owned by the Brothers at Santry. The consideration paid by Mr Tiernan for the options he acquired on foot of the two agreements was IR£850 for Balheary, and IR£150 for the Santry lands.

3.05 Prior to concluding this agreement, both Mr Tiernan and the Brothers had already embarked on a lobbying exercise in relation to the Balheary lands. The Brothers most probably did so at Mr Tiernan’s behest.

3.06 Mr Tiernan was anxious to exploit the opportunity presented by the 1983 Development Plan review to have the Balheary lands rezoned, and believed himself best placed to achieve the rezoning of the lands, as evidenced by a letter written by him to Mr Mulligan of HOK on 20 December 1990. He wrote as follows:

‘I believe that with my contacts that I am the best person to secure the rezoning of the Balheary Demesne lands.’

3.07 Mr Tiernan told the Tribunal that this was a reference to both his political contacts,⁴ and to the fact that he was well known to councillors, as a developer.

3.08 By 1990 Mr Tiernan had a long association with Fine Gael having been actively involved⁵ with that party since 1973.

3.09 Asked as to what he meant to convey by the above statement Mr Tiernan responded:

‘Well, like what another well known person said one time, ‘I would say that wouldn’t I’, because I felt it was important to sell myself as being a person that could secure and achieve the development potential of those very desirable lands...’

3.10 He told the Tribunal in correspondence in June 2000, that he had supported the Fine Gael party since 1973 ‘publicly physically and financially during the twenty-seven-year period supporting most fundraising ventures’ and he advised that as far as he was concerned, he was the ‘only one of my size in the Construction Industry to be publicly identified with the Party in the Dublin area.’

⁴ Mr Tiernan explained that his political contacts were Councillors who knew his track records as a developer.

⁵ He stood unsuccessfully as a local election candidate for Fine Gael in 1994.

MR DUNLOP'S RETENTION IN FEBRUARY 1991

4.01 By February 1991, Mr Dunlop was already known to Mr Tiernan through dealings they had in 1990, having been introduced to him by Mr Liam Lawlor (see below). Asked why he had engaged Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist, Mr Tiernan stated:

'Well, I was busy with other interests. Construction projects ...I was aware of the fact that he was acting for other lands ...that he was interfacing and had interaction between a large number of the people on Dublin County Council'

4.02 It appeared that no specific fee arrangement was agreed between Mr Tiernan and Mr Dunlop in 1991. Mr Dunlop gave evidence that, while he may well have requested a fee, the question of payment was left in abeyance and for later negotiation, pending the outcome of the rezoning vote scheduled for 21 March 1991. Mr Dunlop testified as follows:

'...There was – there was a question of money, it would be completely disingenuous to imagine that two people of the status of Mr Tiernan and myself were talking together, and this is in 1991, in the context of the Development Plan, that a fee would not have been mentioned. And I, while I cannot say to you that, how much I asked for or whether I asked for a specific sum, or whether Mr, Tiernan refused, but the arrangement was that there would be a negotiable fee if it was successful.'

4.03 Mr Tiernan, in his evidence, although he claimed to have no recollection of the matter, did not dispute Mr Dunlop's evidence in this regard, stating: 'I am sure we did [discuss fees] but the furthest I could go now because I do not remember, would be that look it we'll agree on a generous fee. A performance related fee.'

4.04 Mr Dunlop did not allege that he paid any councillor, or that any councillor asked him for money, to support the Balheary rezoning in 1991. However, in the course of his evidence he told the Tribunal that in 1991, when he was engaged by Mr Tiernan as a lobbyist in relation to Balheary, he had inferred that Mr Tiernan probably knew and/or expected that he would pay councillors in the course of his lobbying endeavours. Mr Dunlop's inference did not, according to him, come about as a result of any discussion he had with Mr Tiernan in 1991, but rather it dated from a previous encounter in 1990 in connection with a matter unrelated to the Balheary lands.⁶

4.05 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that in 1990, or earlier, he had been retained by Mr Tiernan in relation to a planning permission project associated with Mr Tiernan, the progress of which would require a material contravention vote of Dublin County Council. Mr Liam Lawlor (then a Dublin County Councillor and TD) had introduced them. Both Mr Tiernan and Mr Dunlop agreed that Mr Tiernan handed over a sum of cash to Mr Dunlop in relation to this matter, Mr Dunlop putting the amount at IR£6,000 and Mr Tiernan putting it at IR£4,000.

4.06 Mr Dunlop denied that this sum had been paid to him as a fee. Mr Tiernan acknowledged that the cash had been given to Mr Dunlop to secure his services to lobby councillors in relation to Mr Tiernan's planning permission project.

4.07 Mr Dunlop's evidence was that IR£2,000 of the cash given to him had been duly returned to Mr Tiernan, at his request, because Mr Tiernan wanted, in the words of Mr Dunlop, 'to look after so and so myself'.

4.08 In the course of his evidence, Mr Dunlop identified 'so and so' as Cllr Tom Hand. Mr Dunlop maintained that he had inferred from this exchange that Mr Tiernan was paying councillors, and that Mr Tiernan knew in 1990 that Mr Dunlop was likely to pay councillors to ensure support for the planning permission project for which he had been retained by Mr Tiernan.

4.09 It was on the basis of their 1990 exchange, as described by Mr Dunlop, that Mr Dunlop inferred in 1991, when he was again retained by Mr Tiernan, that there was an expectation and/or acceptance on Mr Tiernan's part that he, Mr Dunlop, might have to pay councillors in the course of his Balheary lobbying attempts.

4.10 On Day 695 the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Dunlop:

'Q...Yes. There was no discussion, there were no explicit words --

A. No, no.

Q. -- words that conveyed that?

A. No, no, no.

Q.Or that he conveyed to you that he understood that or you said it to him so that he'd know?

A.It's my inference in the context of my relationship with Mr.Tiernan.

Q.And in other Modules, Mr. Dunlop, you've told the Tribunal that when you had a meeting you were introduced to a developer, Mr. Collins or Mr. Lawlor, or whoever it was. You understood from --

A.Yes.

Q. – at the meeting from what was said, without anything being said expressly –

A.Yes.

Q. – and I think you used an expression ‘the ways of the world’. You understood that the developers, to whom you were being introduced, knew very well that you were going to pay councillors?

A. Yes, that was the Ballycullen Module that I used that phrase, where that phrase had been used, ‘the ways of the world apply.’

Q. All right. There were other Modules though I think where, without you saying expressly I’ll have to pay councillors. You realised that they knew that you’d have to pay councillors?

A.Yes.

Q. This was your evidence.

A. Yes.

Q. Is this the same sort of situation?

A. Well, I suppose – I don’t want to go into semantical differences.

Q. No.

A. Which is futile.

Q. Yeah.

A. Bearing in mind what I’ve said to you in relation to what Mr.Tiernan had said to me on a previous occasion and I have to be absolutely, absolutely definitive about this, Mr. Tiernan did not say to me, I want you to act for me in relation to Balheary. I know you’re going to have to pay councillors. I know you’re going to have to give X, Y or Z money. He did not say any of that.

Q. No.

A. However, in context of the background of my relationship with Mr. Tiernan vis-a-vis a previous occasion, my inference was that Mr. Tiernan probably knew. Though no such discussion took place.’

- 4.11 In reply to questions in cross-examination on Day 695, Mr Dunlop stated:
‘...Because the only benchmark that I had in the context of Joe Tiernan was in relation to the comment that he had made to me some time previous in relation to another development when he had, as Mr. O’Dulachain has now pointed out. Where he had asked for money back and because, for a specific purpose, because he wanted to look after a particular individual himself.’

And he went on to say:

‘Well if he was asking – well if in one instance sometime previous he was asking me for money back because he [wanted] to look after Tom Hand himself. I don’t think it takes Einstein to come to the conclusion that he was going to give Tom Hand some money or that I could infer with some credibility that in fact Joe Tiernan knew that this may be something that was necessary'

4.12 Mr Tiernan denied that he ever used the words attributed to him by Mr Dunlop, and he denied that he ever knew Mr Dunlop would have to pay councillors. Moreover, he denied that he himself had ever paid bribes to councillors.

4.13 Mr Tiernan told the Tribunal that when he terminated Mr Dunlop's (short lived) appointment in 1990, he requested the return of the entire fee, but that Mr Dunlop cited a cash flow problem as the reason for the return of only IR£2,000.

4.14 While he recalled the Environment Minister, Mr Michael Smith's 1993 'debased currency' speech, Mr Tiernan denied any knowledge of the practice of paying councillors for their support in rezoning motions. He denied knowing that Mr Dunlop would engage, or did engage, in such activity while retained by him. Mr Tiernan stated that, had he become aware of any such activity being undertaken by Mr Dunlop, he would have dissociated himself from it.

4.15 On Day 696, Mr Tiernan was questioned as follows:

'Q.Mr. Tiernan, Mr. Dunlop told the Tribunal yesterday and on previous occasions, that once he is engaged to rezone he knows that that is going to involve paying money to councillors to secure their vote. He said that yesterday.

A. Well, if he said that, I accept what you're telling me.

Q.Yes. And he said yesterday also he knew that once he was brought in by you to Balheary with a view to lobby for the rezoning, that it was – it was going to be necessary for him to pay councillors to get the vote?

A. Right.

Q.You accept that he said that?

A. Well, you're telling me, I believe you, yes.

Q.All right.Were you aware when you first met him in Balheary that he would have to pay councillors?

A. Not for the vote.

Q.Pardon?

A. Not for their vote.

Q.What were you aware –

A. Or for anything else.

Q.Why did you say not for the vote. Stop. Pause. And then when I'm going onto the question add a next bit on?

A. Well just for completeness.

Q.Yes. Is your evidence that you were not aware that Mr. Dunlop would pay for the vote or for anything else?

A. That is my evidence Mr. Murphy.

Q.All right. When you met him in Balheary and can we take it throughout the Balheary process the rezoning process in Balheary you were not aware that Mr. Dunlop would or did pay councillors?

A. When I met Mr. Dunlop in his office in Upper Mount Street, not in Balheary, regarding the Balheary lands.

Q.Yes?

A. I was not aware. He never mentioned that to me.

Q.All right. Well, okay. We'll be coming that. Perhaps just at the moment if we stick to February March 1991. You weren't aware that Mr. Dunlop would be paying councillors?

A. That is right.

Q.And nothing that happened in the previous experience, the previous development, when Mr. Lawlor introduced to you Mr. Dunlop and you were impressed by Mr. Dunlop. Nothing happened in that that would have led you to believe that Mr. Dunlop would pay councillors?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q.All right. And in 1991 you weren't aware that that was something that Mr. Dunlop did?

A. That is correct.'

And:

'Q.Mr. Dunlop said in evidence that he inferred from the previous experience he'd had with you when you paid him money, I think he believes it's 6,000?

A.Six?

Q.I think you say it's 4,000?

A. I do.

Q.And you looked for it back and he gave 2,000. And you said the reason was that you would look after somebody yourself. He inferred from that, that you were aware of the necessity to pay councillors in relation to these motions?

A. Well, if he inferred that, Mr. Murphy, and Mr. Chairman, he is wrong.'

4.16 With regard to his engagement of Mr Dunlop in 1990 (in relation to the matter unconnected to the Balheary lands) Mr Tiernan advised the Tribunal by letter, on the 25 September 2001, inter alia, as follows:

'It was Mr Lawlor who introduced me to Frank Dunlop early in 1990. We met in Mr Dunlop's office and had a general discussion as to whether he could be of assistance.'

...I was fully aware that Mr. Dunlop was known to most politicians in Dublin County Council, however I subsequently decided not to have him involved. Consequently there was no written or verbal agreement.'

And,

'At a later date perhaps some few months later, Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor called to my office in Abbey House by appointment with me and there was a consensus reached that Mr Dunlop could be of assistance because of his friendship with elected members of Dublin County Council. A sum of IR£6,000 was discussed and some few days later I met with Mr Dunlop and gave him IR£4,000 in cash, as far as I recall there was no person present and I am not sure of the location of the hand over of the cash perhaps it was at my office. Some few days later I had reservations as to what contribution he could make to canvassing the County Councillors as I was known to most of the County Councillors and certainly all the Fianna Fail, Fine Gael, some PD's and some Labour Party Councillors, I requested from Mr Dunlop by telephone the return to me of the IR£4,000 I gave him some few days earlier. Mr Dunlop immediately returned IR£2,000 to me stating cash flow reasons for the non return of the balance i.e. IR£2,000. There was no person present at the time of the refund to me and I am not sure of the location of the hand over, perhaps it was outside my office at Abbey House.'

4.17 Having regard to the content of his reply to the Tribunal, Mr Tiernan was questioned as to why he had retained Mr Dunlop in connection with Balheary, given that the composition of the Council in the Spring of 1991 was the same as the Council which would have been voting on his material contravention application, and given that he himself was known to all the councillors. Mr Tiernan's response, in refuting any suggestion that his retention of Mr Dunlop in 1991 was at odds with the reason he had terminated Mr Dunlop's appointment in 1990, was as follows:

'...it was my opinion that Mr Dunlop was acting for other clients i.e. landowners. And that he was interfacing and that there was a lot of potential interaction between councillors. I had other responsibilities and I felt that he could contribute because of his lobbying.'

THE 1991 REZONING CAMPAIGN

5.01 On 12 February 1991, Mr Dunlop was retained by Mr Tiernan as a lobbyist in relation to the rezoning campaign for the Balheary lands.⁷

5.02 On 18 May 2006, the Tribunal requested information from Mr Tiernan about his and Mr Dunlop's involvement in relation to the attempts to rezone the Balheary lands. In his reply of 6 June 2006 Mr Tiernan claimed that he did not 'recall or remember what Mr Dunlop's involvement in relation to the 1991 motion was Fifteen years ago (15 years ago)'. In his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Tiernan stated that, in providing this response, it had been his understanding that the Tribunal had merely asked about Mr Dunlop's role (if any) in obtaining councillors signatures to the motion, and not about Mr Dunlop's lobbying activities.

5.03 Notwithstanding Mr Dunlop's retention as a lobbyist, both Mr Tiernan and the Brothers were also involved in lobbying Councillors in support of the rezoning of the lands.

5.04 From the date of his retention by Mr Tiernan, Mr Dunlop, through correspondence and meetings, advised the Brothers how best they might lobby the councillors for their support. Mr Tiernan did likewise. This was acknowledged in evidence by Brothers John Heneghan, David Gibson and J. K. Mullan.

5.05 On the 29 January 1991, Mr Tiernan furnished Brother Heneghan with copies of a rezoning motion and map which, Mr Tiernan advised, Brother Heneghan should have when meeting councillors. He also provided him with Cllr Hand's (described as the 'leader' of the Fine Gael group in the Council) telephone number and advised that he had already spoken to Cllr Hand about the matter. He said he anticipated contact by Cllr Anne Devitt⁸ with Cllr Hand, after she had been spoken to by Brother Heneghan.

5.06 On 15 February 1991 the motion (with accompanying map) dated 29 January 1991, seeking to rezone 70 acres of the Balheary lands to A1 (residential) was lodged with Dublin County Council. Cllrs Jim Fay, Jim Fahey, Ned Ryan, Betty Coffey, Séamus Brock and Donal Lydon were the signatories to the motion. None of the six represented the Swords area in which the lands were situated. Five of the signatories were members of the Fianna Fáil Party, and the remaining signatory, Cllr Fay, was a member of the Fine Gael Party.

⁷ Mr Dunlop's retention is considered in detail below.

⁸ Cllr Devitt was a councillor for the Swords area.

5.07 On or about 15 February 1991, the same six councillors lodged a further motion to rezone some 12.5 acres located at Santry,⁹ also owned by the Brothers, from F (to preserve and protect open spaces and recreational amenities) to E (industrial).

5.08 None of the signatories to the Balheary motion who gave evidence had a clear recollection as to how he or she came to sign the motion. Cllr Lydon told the Tribunal that, although he had no recollection of the motion, or of signing it, having worked for a number of years with the Brothers, and out of respect for them, he would have agreed to sign a motion for them. Cllr Coffey withdrew her name from the motion on 19 February 1991, although in evidence she could not recollect why she had done so.

5.09 Mr Dunlop testified that he did not procure any of the signatures to the motion.

5.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that the Balheary motion was organised by Mr Tiernan, and that he obtained the councillors' signatures, probably with the assistance of Cllr Hand.¹⁰ Mr Tiernan and Cllr Hand were well known to one another through Mr Tiernan's association with the Fine Gael party.

5.11 Brother Heneghan testified that he had been made aware by councillors whom he had approached and by Mr Tiernan, that because of the upcoming local elections they would not sign the motion.¹¹ The Tribunal believed it probable that the impending elections¹² may indeed have contributed to the councillors' reluctance to be a signatory to the motion, as rezonings could often be quite controversial and strongly resisted by the local community.

5.12 By 26 February 1991, Mr Dunlop, in his role as lobbyist for Mr Tiernan, had engaged with the Brothers by furnishing them with a draft letter to be sent to all councillors, urging them to give favourable consideration to the rezoning Motion. On 5 March 1991, in advance of a scheduled Council meeting of the 7 March 1991 when the rezoning motion was on the Council agenda, he furnished Brother Mullan with a list of eleven named councillors who were to be telephoned in advance of that meeting, although he advised Brother Mullan that ⁹ This land (together with the Balheary lands) was the subject of an option agreement between the Brothers and Mr Tiernan.

¹¹ Cllr Sean Ryan believed that Fianna Fail and Fine Gael councillors had a policy that councillors outside a local area would be asked to sign a motion if an election was pending. Cllr Devitt, a local councillor, disputed that she would have refused to sign a motion on those grounds and stated that the Development Plan was replete with examples where local councillors had signed motions at the time of local elections.

¹² The local election was called on 24 May 1991. Voting took place on 27 June 1991.

he himself would oversee much of the contact with the councillors. Mr Dunlop followed up this correspondence, on the 15 March 1991, by providing Brother Mullan with a draft of another letter to be sent to all councillors.

5.13 Mr Dunlop's 'Notes' on individual councillors contained such diverse information as a councillor's marital status, religion, profession, employment status, sporting affiliation, his or her importance within the respective political parties, and his or her attitude (as of 15 March 1991) to the rezoning motion.

5.14 Prior to the 21 March 1991 Mr Dunlop met with representatives of the Brothers in the company of Mr Tiernan. Mr Tiernan described the meeting as a courtesy visit while Mr Dunlop believed that the purpose of the meeting was that the Brothers 'needed to be reoriented' as, according to Mr Dunlop, 'Their focus of attention was slightly extra terrestrial.' As testified to by Brother Mullan, who attended the meeting, Mr Dunlop accepted that the message he was conveying at that meeting was that the rezoning of the Balheary lands was unlikely to be achieved. Mr Dunlop acknowledged that there was opposition to the rezoning proposal within, and without, the County Council. Moreover, Mr Dunlop believed that at the time there was an 'anti-Tiernan' element on the part of 'certain Fianna Fáil people'. Mr Dunlop testified:

'There being discussion particularly in the Fianna Fáil side, which I was dealing with, of the political affiliations of Joe Tiernan and why Fianna Fáil people should support somebody of the opposite persuasion'.

Mr Tiernan did not agree with Mr Dunlop's analysis as indicated in his following exchange with Tribunal counsel on Day 697:

'Q. 141 - And would that be on the political ground that you were Fine Gael?

A. Well be sorry to think that anybody would think that way because it's important that democracy survives and that everybody can survive in freedom, I would be disappointed if anybody had an attitude like that.

Q. Are you serious, Mr Tiernan?

A. About what?

Q. What you've just said ?

A. What are you asking me am I serious about?

Q. Are you serious in the little speech that you've just given to the Tribunal?

A. Yes. I passionately believe that it would be a wrong attitude for any individual to have, that a person of a particular political persuasion should not be co-operated with.

Q. Should not what?

A. If there was merits in what they were advocating.

Q. That somebody of a political persuasion---

A. Of a different.

Q. Say for example somebody from Fianna Fail should oppose a rezoning motion because there is some Fine Gael person involved?

A. Yes. Provided that there was merit in what they would be advocating.

Q. You would be disappointed if that happened?

A. I would. Yes.

Q. And you would be surprised?

A. Well, I have no knowledge down the years of building projects being opposed by politicians because of the political persuasion of the promoter. And I'm around this town for 40 years.'

5.15 Mr Dunlop (as indeed did Mr Tiernan) professed to have very little recollection of exactly what lobbying had been done by Mr Dunlop in relation to the 1991 motion. Mr Dunlop's evidence was that it was his belief that he had lobbied Fianna Fáil councillors in 1991, while Mr Tiernan had concentrated on Fine Gael councillors. Mr Tiernan did not dispute that they had divided up their respective lobbying functions in this fashion but claimed, effectively, (which was probably the case) that the lobbying demarcation lines were not rigidly drawn as suggested by Mr Dunlop, given that he, Mr Tiernan, was well acquainted with a number of Fianna Fail councillors.

5.16 Overall, the Tribunal was satisfied that in the run up to the Council meeting on the 21 March 1991, when the rezoning motion was withdrawn (see below), Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan engaged in an intensive lobbying campaign and that likewise, the Brothers too had lobbied councillors at this time, on the advice of Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan.

5.17 It would appear that the requirement that they engage in lobbying had not been anticipated by the Brothers when they entered their arrangement with Mr Tiernan. Minutes of the meeting between the Brothers and Mr Mulligan of HOK on 2 July 1991 included the following note: 'Brother Heneghan has said that in his absence the Provincial Council had experienced unexpected pressure from Joe Tiernan for them to lobby Co. Councillors. This was not anticipated or agreed at any stage of the negotiations'.

THE DUBLIN COUNTY COUNCIL SPECIAL MEETING OF 21 MARCH 1991

5.18 Despite the lobbying efforts of Mr Tiernan, Mr Dunlop, and indeed the Brothers, throughout the month of February 1991, and up to the Council's special meeting of 21 March 1991, it became apparent to all concerned that there was little support for the Balheary rezoning motion. It was probable that the negative responses to the motion were the subject of the meetings recorded in

Mr Dunlop's diary between Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan on 20 March 1991 (the eve of the Council Special Meeting) and on the day of the Council meeting.¹³

5.19 Certainly, it was the intention of the Council planners that the Balheary lands retain their 1983 agricultural and high amenity zoning. This zoning was retained on the 1990 Draft Plan map and written statement which had been considered by the Council on 19 January 1991 as part of the Development Plan review. On 21 March 1991, when the Council met to consider the 1990 Draft Plan prior to its first statutory public display, the Manager recommended that the motion to rezone Balheary to A1 residential be rejected. He had made his recommendation after the motion signed by Cllrs Fay, Fahy, Ned Ryan, Brock and Lydon (Cllr Coffey having withdrawn her signature), had been proposed by Cllr Fay and seconded by Cllr Hand. The minutes of the Council meeting indicated that Cllr Fay withdrew the zoning motion prior to it going to a vote.

MR DUNLOP'S RE-ENGAGEMENT IN 1993

6.01 Notwithstanding the failure to progress the rezoning prior to the first statutory display, Mr Tiernan remained optimistic that the rezoning of the lands could be achieved, as evidenced by the contents of a letter written by Mr Mulligan of HOK to Brother Heneghan on 4 September 1992, when he advised, inter alia, as follows:

'I had a further meeting with Joe Tiernan yesterday and he is proceeding immediately to strengthen the boundary at the entrance to Santry Avenue to dig a trench inside the boundary to discourage trespassing and to take down the goal posts. In the course of our discussion he went to confirm that he is still optimistic about getting planning permission at Eamus. I think it is encouraging that notwithstanding the changes on the council etc. he remains enthusiastic. By contrast, he went on to express a potential lack of enthusiasm in relation to Santry Avenue...'

6.02 The next opportunity to submit a motion arose following the first statutory display of the Draft Development Plan, (which occurred in September to December 1991). As the councillors had made a decision to consider the draft map in sections going from South to North, it would be the Spring of 1993 before lands in North County Dublin would be considered.

6.03 Following the withdrawal of the motion on 21 March 1991, the arrangement between Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan had lapsed. It was revived in the spring of 1993 in the context of an opportunity to submit a further motion seeking the residential rezoning of the Balheary lands.

6.04 In March 1993, Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan concluded a financial arrangement in relation to Mr Dunlop's continuing lobbying efforts (Mr Dunlop's role was described in this agreement thus: 'act in a professional public affairs capacity ...in order to achieve the residential zoning' of the lands), with regard to the Balheary lands. The agreement was drafted in the form of a letter dated 23 March 1993 by Mr Dunlop and was signed by both parties. Mr Dunlop was to receive a minimum of IR£100,000, of which half was payable after full planning permission was achieved, and the balance 12 calendar months later.

6.05 In addition to the Balheary fees, Mr Dunlop was to receive a further IR£100,000 if lands owned by Mr Tiernan at Mountgorry (unconnected to the Balheary lands) were rezoned for development under the then review of the County Development Plan. A similar timeframe for the payment of this IR£100,000 was provided for in the letter of 23 March 1993.

6.06 Mr Dunlop's letter to Mr Tiernan dated 23 March 1993 included, inter alia, the following,

'...It is agreed that I will act in a professional public affairs capacity on your behalf in order to achieve the residential zoning of both these bodies of land under the current review of the County Dublin Development Plan scheduled for finalisation in December of this year.

The financial arrangement relating to this professional activity is as follows:

- IR£100K (at minimum) for Balheary
- IR£100K (at minimum) for Mountgorry.

payable as follows:

- (a) 50% one year after full planning permission in each case;
- (b) 50% twelve calendar months subsequent to the payment of the first 50% referred to at (a).'

6.07 The final paragraph of the document, referred to it as 'an accurate account of the arrangement discussed'. It was signed by Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan. Included in this written agreement was the following clause:

'Frank Dunlop will bear all costs relating to the public affairs programme (lobbying) with the sole exception of print work the cost of which will be borne by Mr Joe Tiernan.'

However, this clause was crossed out from the signed letter, apparently by agreement.¹⁴

6.08 Both Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan agreed that Mr Dunlop may have looked for an upfront payment but, according to Mr Tiernan agreement was reached on a 'generous sum of money' 'contingent on success' and 'performance related'.

6.09 Both Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan denied that the deleted clause was a reference to the cost of bribing councillors.

6.10 Mr Dunlop stated that the costs which he was to bear related to 'entertainment', or (as he referred to them in the context of a later agreement in 1994) other 'extraneous' costs. Mr Dunlop also referred to them as 'miscellaneous costs' and 'postage costs'.

6.11 Questioned as to what his belief was in 1993, following his re-engagement by Mr Tiernan, of Mr Tiernan's understanding of the necessity to pay councillors, Mr Dunlop stated: 'There [was] no discussion between Mr Tiernan and myself about the necessity to pay anybody'.

6.12 Asked whether the deleted clause (referred to above) was a reference to Mr Dunlop, as the bearer of all costs (save print work), making payments to councillors, Mr Dunlop responded 'No. I don't think so. No, no, no, absolutely not ...because I never had such a - I never had a discussion with Mr Tiernan.'

6.13 The following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Dunlop:

'Q. Can you help the Tribunal as to what that meant? What was in your mind when you dictated that?

A. Well, I think to go back to your question of two questions ago. I think it would be for expedition it would be better if I said to you that it certainly does not refer to payments to councillors, couldn't refer to payments to councillors.

Q. Well why not? If – I mean, if you know that you're going to have to pay councillors, which you do.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. And Mr. Tiernan isn't paying you any money. It's making it clear to Mr. Tiernan that he doesn't have to make the payments to the councillors. It's a very logical thing to put in if it's referring to payments to councillors.

¹⁴ The letter of the 23 March 1993, as furnished to the Tribunal, showed the clause crossed out, along which were the words 'J.T deleted by agreement F.T.D. 23.3.97'.

A. Well whatever logical matrix that you want to outline about it. The fact of the matter is that I never received any money from Mr. Tiernan.'

6.14 Pressed again as to what costs the deleted clause could have referred to, Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well the only – the only attendant costs in relation to lobbying might have been, we'd say for example, entertainment costs of councillors or other parties but certainly not in the context of anything to do with payments to Councillors'

6.15 While Mr Dunlop, in the course of his evidence, was at pains to emphasise that this clause did not refer to payments he might make to elected councillors, and was not inserted on the basis of any such discussion between himself and Mr Tiernan having taken place in 1993, he nonetheless told the Tribunal that underlying his re-engagement by Mr Tiernan in March 1993 was his belief that Mr Tiernan knew that he would 'have to' pay councillors to support the Balheary rezoning project. Mr Tiernan disagreed with Mr Dunlop's contention.

6.16 In the course of his testimony Mr Tiernan appeared to suggest that the contents of the written agreement of 23 March 1993 including the deleted portion were all Mr Dunlop's 'doings'. Mr Tiernan testified that he did not know who had drawn lines through the deleted clause, but acknowledged as a 'possibility', that he had done so. He stated:

'...Because as far as I was concerned I had an agreement with him for 100,000 and there was no strings attached. I saw the opportunity here for Mr Dunlop to be raising invoices for other matters and that had not been agreed.'

6.17 Mr Tiernan acknowledged that the clause (prior to its deletion) fixed Mr Dunlop with the costs of lobbying.

6.18 When asked, Mr Tiernan could not recall what discussion took place between himself and Mr Dunlop about the costs of lobbying although he accepted that there may well have been some discussion on the issue. He surmised that he may well have been the one who had the clause deleted, and that he may have misread the clause because (apart from fixing him with the cost of print work) '...I may have thought that there was an opportunity for Mr Dunlop to start invoicing me for lobbying and public affairs, apart from the agreement to pay him 100 grand.'

6.19 The following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Tiernan:

Q. Now, the paragraph that you're taking out is an assumption by Mr. Dunlop of the costs of lobbying. What are those costs? You can't remember the discussion about it. Looking at it there, you had the paragraph taken out. What costs were in Mr. Dunlop's and your mind there?

A. Well, in my mind, whatever time and effort he was going to put into this.

Q. You have already said that the 100,000 we are talking about, at minimum, it is a success fee?

A. Yes.

Q. There is no other money involved, isn't that right?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. So it can't be -- it can't be him charging you for his time or anything like that?

A. Well it should not be.

Q. Because it's costs relating to lobbying?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Dunlop thought -- he used two words. And I'm sure I'll be corrected if I'm wrong. He certainly used the word entertainment and he also used the word extraneous. Now, so he felt that he didn't want to have the bear the costs of entertainment. Can you think of, apart from entertainment, what other costs could be involved in Mr. Dunlop going to lobby the councillors

A. No, no, except that fundraisers are frequent events. Of all descriptions.

Q. But he wouldn't be holding a fundraiser, would he?

A. No, he wouldn't but others would be. And people might lean on him to participate.

Q. All right. And just deal for a second for his entertainment. We'll come on to your invitation to a few people to Dobbins later on. But Mr. Tiernan, if it was entertainment, if that was all Mr. Dunlop could offer. Now, he could only offer the only possible explanation for the cost of lobbying would be entertainment. What on an entertainment category, what costs what, value, what total would you put on the amount that would be spent on entertainment to entertain councillors for the rest of, between March and September?

A. I've no idea, Mr. Murphy. No idea. Sure the sky is the limit.

Q. Were you in the business of taking councillors out for a meal?

A. No, but I'm sure I did.

Q. Yeah?

A. On occasion.

Q. All right. So you can't quantify what the costs of lobbying. I mean, you knew what lobbying was about Mr. Tiernan, didn't you?

A. Well I thought I did.

Q. Yeah. Well did you learn something new?

A. I'm always learning but I know it costs money.

Q. And is it that you now know?

A. All kinds of entertainment, as you well know Mr. Murphy, costs money and time.

Q. You know now?

A. I now know from the media, yes. And from this Tribunal.

Q. Is that a reference to this?

A. No it's not.

Q. Frank Dunlop is writing into this letter and it's being deleted 'Frank Dunlop will bear all costs relating to lobbying', is that what is being spoken of there in the letter and previously at the discussion at the meeting namely, paying councillors for the vote for Balheary?

A. Mr. Murphy, sure it's the converse to the situation. On reflection it would have been much better if that had been left as it was. Because what you're saying is that the converse could have happened.

Q. Mr. Tiernan, that is precisely why I said to you a few moments ago your evidence didn't make sense. You should have left that in?

A. Yes.

Q. Because any costs of lobbying would be left with Mr. Dunlop?

A. Yes, I can see that now.'

6.20 Mr Tiernan was also questioned as follows:

'Q.If Mr. Dunlop had said 'I'll have to pay councillors and I'd like you, Mr. Tiernan, to put me in funds, what you what would you have said?

A. I would not have agreed.

Q. You wouldn't have agreed to put him in funds?

A. He didn't say that to me that I can recall.

Q. If he had?

A. Well that's hypothetical now, Mr. Murphy.

Q. If he had said Mr. Tiernan 'I'll have to pay councillors' would you have said to him that's fine but you weren't paying it he could pay it himself.

A. Yes and that didn't happen.

Q. Would you have discontinued your relationship?

A. I would not have agreed to it.

Q. You wouldn't have agreed to what?

A. To paying councillors for votes.

Q. Would you have fired Mr. Dunlop?

A. Look at, this is whenever it was, back in 1993. What I would have done then I don't know. I would expect that I would have disassociated myself from him.

Q. All right. At this particular meeting, just before this agreement. Was there any discussion by Mr. Dunlop about paying councillors?

A. I would say not. I don't remember.'

MR TIERNAN'S AND MR DUNLOP'S INVOLVEMENT IN THE REZONING CAMPAIGN IN 1993

7.01 By the time Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan signed the agreement of 23 March 1993, the process to have the Balheary lands rezoned had already been put in train. On 18 March 1993, a motion in the names of Cllrs Devitt and Gallagher was lodged with the County Council seeking to have approximately 70 acres of the Balheary lands rezoned A1 residential. It provided as follows:-

'In order to extend the Broadmeadow Linear Park and maximise the amenity value of the 0.4 mile Broadmeadow River frontage and with an objective of providing three acres for active recreation, Dublin County Council hereby resolve to rezone A1 in the current review of the County Dublin Development Plan the 70 acres approximately at Balheary Demesne Swords...'

7.02 Mr Tiernan said he was unable to recollect whether or not he drafted and/or typed and/or requested councillors to sign the above motion, although he accepted that he may have undertaken all or some of these activities. He acknowledged that he canvassed councillors, (both Fine Gael and others), to support the rezoning of the Balheary lands. Mr Dunlop was certain that he had not prepared¹⁵ the 1993 motion, and that he had not obtained Cllr Devitt's signature. He accepted that he might have obtained Cllr Gallagher's signature, although he had no recollection of doing so (see below).

7.03 In the course of his retention, Mr Dunlop, as he had done in 1991, advised the Brothers in relation to the lobbying of councillors. He drafted a letter to be sent by the Brothers to all seventy eight councillors and prioritised twenty four councillors in the Fingal area who were to be telephoned by Brothers Heneghan. Sometime after 23 March and before 21 May 1993, Mr Dunlop himself was engaged in actively lobbying councillors in support of Balheary, as evidenced by his communications to Brother Heneghan on the 5 May 1993.

¹⁵ He claimed it was not the typeface used in his office.

MR DUNLOP'S RE-ENGAGEMENT IN 1994

8.01 In 1994, Mr Tiernan and Mr Dunlop entered into a fresh agreement for Mr Dunlop's retention as a lobbyist in relation to the Balheary, (and Mountgorry), lands in the context of the proposed variation of the 1993 Development Plan to be undertaken by the newly established Fingal County Council. The agreement provided for payment to Mr Dunlop of IR£100,000 for Balheary, and IR£100,000 for Montgorry, which was payable in a similar timeframe as provided for in the 1993 agreement. As with the 1993 agreement, Mr Dunlop's fees were contingent on the lands being rezoned.

8.02 This agreement was written on the letterhead of Mr Tiernan's company, Tiernan Homesteads Ltd, dated 22 September 1994 and signed by both men. It provided, inter alia, that Mr Dunlop would 'bear all costs relating to the public affairs programme lobbying'.

8.03 Mr Tiernan told the Tribunal that he did not recall the meeting with Mr Dunlop on 22 September 1994 which led to their signed agreement, but acknowledged that under that agreement Mr Dunlop was to 'bear all costs relating to the public affairs programme lobbying'.

8.04 Questioned as to what lobbying costs were in contemplation in 1994, Mr Tiernan responded '...whatever costs he's going to incur.' He continued '..time is the most important one'.

8.05 This clause was essentially similar to the clause deleted from the earlier 1993 agreement. Mr Dunlop was again expected to shoulder the costs of 'the public affairs programme lobbying'. Again, Mr Dunlop was adamant that the clause did not relate to '...costs in relation to payments to councillors'.

8.06 Essentially, with regard to the clauses in question, the thrust of Mr Dunlop's testimony was that notwithstanding the unspoken understanding, as he perceived it, between himself and Mr Tiernan which flowed from Mr Tiernan's utterances in 1990 and which gave rise to the inferences described by Mr Dunlop, that understanding was not reflected in any shape or form in the 1993 or 1994 written agreements. Mr Dunlop stated,

'...The only evidence that I can give on a factual basis is that neither Mr. Tiernan nor I discussed the payments to councillors, either in relation to 1991 to 1993. And the only benchmark that I have in relation to anything that Mr. Tiernan may have known or believed or knew in relation to payments to councillors was a comment that he made to me in the context of a previous development.

Now I am absolutely adamant that neither Mr. Tiernan nor I discussed payments to councillors, either individually, collectively, in specific amounts, or otherwise, ever. I am aware of other comments that were made, but that's another issue...'

8.07 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that, consequent on the absence of any discussion with Mr Tiernan on the issue of payments to councillors, he had not appended an asterisk¹⁶ to his October 2000 statement in relation to Balheary, Balheary/CBS, or Balheary/Christian Brothers. Mr Dunlop refuted any suggestion that he ought to have done so, on the basis that there had been no discussion between himself and Mr Tiernan on the issue of paying councillors for their votes. Nevertheless, throughout his testimony concerning his dealings with Mr Tiernan in relation to Balheary, it remained Mr Dunlop's position that Mr Tiernan had an awareness that money would be paid to councillors.

8.08 Responding to the suggestion that Mr Dunlop's 'time' would be accounted for in the agreed success fee of IR£100,000 Mr Tiernan replied: 'well he has to..he has got to speculate ...to accumulate that.' Mr Tiernan refuted Counsel's suggestion that the costs in relation to lobbying had nothing to do with how much time Mr Dunlop would invest in his task.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS AS TO MR TIERNAN'S KNOWLEDGE AS TO WHETHER MR DUNLOP WAS LIKELY TO BE REQUESTED FOR OR PAY MONEY TO COUNCILLORS IN CONNECTION WITH THEIR SUPPORT FOR THE REZONING OF THE LANDS

9.01 There was no dispute but that Mr Tiernan retained Mr Dunlop in 1990 in connection with a material contravention issue which had it progressed, would have required a vote by councillors, and that Mr Dunlop was provided with a cash sum by Mr Tiernan at that time, be it IR£6,000 or IR£4,000.

9.02 The Tribunal was satisfied that the exchange as described by Mr Dunlop did take place between himself and Mr Tiernan in 1990, and that Mr Tiernan made reference to wanting to 'look after' Cllr Hand himself. The Tribunal did not accept Mr Tiernan's explanation for Mr Dunlop's repayment to him of IR£2,000 from the IR£4,000 which he claimed was given to him. The Tribunal was satisfied to accept Mr Dunlop's evidence that he was asked to return IR£2,000 of the initial cash sum given by Mr Tiernan. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop, in the context in which this exchange took place, reasonably inferred that Mr Tiernan intended to 'look after' Cllr Hand by the payment of money.

¹⁶In his October 2000 statement Mr Dunlop said 'the inclusion of an asterisk beside a particular development denotes that monies were given by me with regard to that development in the full knowledge that payments to councillors were required to achieve support.

9.03 The issue for the Tribunal was whether Mr Tiernan's utterance gave rise to an understanding on the part of Mr Tiernan and Mr Dunlop throughout their dealings in the period 1991 to 1994, that money would be paid to councillors to secure their support for the Balheary rezoning.

9.04 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Tiernan's utterance did give rise to the inference which Mr Dunlop took from it.

9.05 Accordingly, the Tribunal was satisfied that, while nothing may have been expressly stated in 1991 at the time of Mr Dunlop's initial engagement as a lobbyist for the Balheary rezoning effort, it was nonetheless understood, as between Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan, that certain councillors would seek money from Mr Dunlop and that he would accede to such requests.

9.06 The Tribunal was also satisfied of Mr Tiernan's belief that councillors would have to be paid, if the prospect of rezoning the Balheary lands was to stand a reasonable chance of success, and this was a factor in his decision to engage Mr Dunlop.

9.07 Equally, the Tribunal was satisfied, whether it was articulated or not in 1993 and/or 1994, that it was understood between Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan at the time they concluded their written agreements, that Mr Dunlop was likely to be requested for money by councillors.

9.08 The fact that Mr Tiernan and Mr Dunlop were sufficiently concerned about the 'costs relating to... lobbying' to have specifically included a provision relating to them in 1993, (later deleting it), and again in 1994, and in both instances imposed the liability for such costs on Mr Dunlop, was strongly suggestive that such costs were, potentially at least, considerable. It was unlikely, in the Tribunal's view, that a specific provision in the agreements would have been deemed necessary or appropriate for apportioning liability for out of pocket expenses. In this regard, the Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop's evidence that the costs referred to in the agreements represented 'entertainment', or 'other extraneous' costs.

9.09 It was probable that the clause in the 1993 Agreement was deleted at Mr Tiernan's instigation, and it may well have been the case that Mr Tiernan's concern to delete the obligation imposed on him to discharge print work invoices led to the whole clause, and not just the reference to Mr Tiernan's obligation for print work bills, being deleted erroneously.

9.10 The Tribunal rejected Mr Tiernan's suggestion that the reference in the written agreements to Mr Dunlop having to bear the costs of lobbying was the time and effort Mr Dunlop would have to spend on lobbying. In the view of the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop's time was provided for by the IR£100,000 agreed fee, (in the event that the lands were rezoned and planning permission obtained). Mr Dunlop himself did not contend that lobbying costs included the time and effort he would have to expend as a lobbyist. The height of his evidence, (rejected by the Tribunal), was that lobbying costs covered 'entertainment' or 'extraneous' costs.

9.11 Neither Mr Dunlop nor Mr Tiernan was in a position to provide a credible explanation as to what type of costs associated with lobbying were contemplated when the 1993 and 1994 agreements were entered into.

9.12 A factor which the Tribunal considered significant in its assessment of whether or not Mr Tiernan was likely to have an awareness that Mr Dunlop might make payments to councillors was the rather telling evidence of Mr Tiernan himself when he was questioned about the propriety of a developer making donations/contributions to councillors at times when councillors might be required to vote on projects associated with that developer. Mr Tiernan's evidence in that regard is considered elsewhere in this Chapter.

9.13 The Tribunal also took account of a certain action by Mr Tiernan in 1994 in the course of contact he had with Cllr Cathal Boland. This issue is considered later in this Chapter.

9.14 Having regard to all the circumstances, the Tribunal was satisfied that when Mr Dunlop was engaged by Mr Tiernan in 1991, and re-engaged in 1993, and 1994, to lobby councillors, Mr Tiernan had an awareness that Mr Dunlop might be requested for, and would make payments to councillors to secure their support for the Balheary rezoning.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS AS TO MR DUNLOP'S INVOLVEMENT WITH THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS

10.01 Neither Mr Tiernan nor Mr Dunlop suggested that the Brothers were at any time aware that Mr Dunlop was likely to pay councillors to support the rezoning of their lands in Balheary. The Brothers were adamant that they had no knowledge or suspicion that any such payments might be made, or were made, and in any event would not have condoned such activity. The truth of this evidence was accepted by the Tribunal.

10.02 The Tribunal also accepted the evidence of Brothers Heneghan, Gibson and Mullan, that when making their statements to the Tribunal, they believed that Mr Dunlop's involvement with the lands commenced in 1993, rather than 1991. The Tribunal accepted that this error was an innocent failure of recollection on their part.

MR DUNLOP'S ALLEGATIONS OF PAYMENTS TO COUNCILLORS

11.01 Mr Dunlop alleged that in the course of the Balheary lobbying work he paid four elected councillors IR£1,000 each in return for their support. Mr Dunlop identified these councillors as Cllrs Cyril Gallagher, Tom Hand, Liam T. Cosgrave and Tony Fox. Mr Dunlop contended that he agreed payment with each of the four prior to the vote on the rezoning motion on 21 May 1993, and that he paid them after they had voted in support of the motion.

11.02 Mr Dunlop initially made these allegations in a written statement furnished to the Tribunal in October 2000. He repeated the allegations in a further statement on 30 June 2006, prior to giving evidence at public hearing.

11.03 Mr Dunlop described Cllrs Hand and Fox as individuals who requested money regularly, or 'in virtually all instances'. Cllr Gallagher was someone to whom he gave money '...on quite a significant number of occasions'. Money was given to Cllr Cosgrave 'not as frequently'. He claimed to have a specific memory of each of the four councillors requesting money, when approached in relation to Balheary.

11.04 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he funded the IR£4,000 he paid to the four councillors from a 'confluence of funds' available to him at the time. Although Mr Dunlop stood to receive IR£100,000 from Mr Tiernan in the event of the Balheary rezoning project being successful, he claimed not to have been paid anything relating to Balheary, either at the time he said he bribed the four councillors, or subsequently.

CLLR TOM HAND (FG)

12.01 Mr Dunlop said that Cllr Hand requested money in return for his support, and that they had agreed the sum of IR£1,000. Mr Dunlop stated that he had a specific recollection of Cllr Hand requesting money from him because, at the time, he was suspicious that Mr Tiernan was also paying Cllr Hand for his support for the Balheary project and because of what Mr Tiernan had said to him in 1990.

12.02 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he paid Cllr Hand IR£1,000 in return for his support for the 21 May 1993 motion to rezone the Balheary lands. Cllr Hand voted in favour of the motion and reaffirmed his support in September 1993 by voting against the Ryan/Kelleher motion.

12.03 Mr Dunlop put it thus;

‘Well, in the context of Balheary, the Christian Brothers, Joe Tiernan, the outside influence that we’ve already talked about, the fact that Joe Tiernan was a Fine Gaeler in the context of the Fianna Fail people, that he was a Fine Gaeler. I had some doubts, I have to say, in relation to the payment to Mr. Hand. But he asked for it. Notwithstanding that I knew that Mr. Hand had a relationship with Mr. Tiernan, which I believed arising from a comment that Mr. Tiernan had made to me previously.’

and,

‘And the reason I put him [Tom Hand] first, is because of what I’ve just said. Is that I went to Tom Hand in the full knowledge that Tom Hand was, knew Joe Tiernan and was obviously a supporter of, or probably a supporter anyway, I’d already indicated that to the Christian Brothers in a note that I had sent in 1991. And he asked me for money for his support and I agreed, we agreed 1,000 pounds. And I either gave him that money in one of the locations that I met him normally, which was in the environs of Dublin County Council or at a restaurant where I had lunch with him or in his home. I specifically recall having a doubt about having to pay Tom Hand, in this particular instance, given the relationship he had with Mr. Tiernan and that’s how I recall him in particular.’

12.04 In the course of cross-examination Mr Dunlop said:

‘...In relation to your client [Cllr Hand], whom I knew to have an association with Mr. Tiernan, and was suspicious of the fact that I was being asked for 1,000 on the basis that he might also have been, though I have no evidence to this effect, being recompensed by Mr. Tiernan. These are the trigger points, as far as I’m concerned, in relation to developments and in relation to Balheary, that is the one that sticks out in my mind in relation to your client.’

12.05 Mr Dunlop rejected any suggestion that he had ‘deduced’ that he had paid Cllr Hand, as opposed to having a recollection of so doing, and he stated;

‘...Well I had a discussion with your client [Cllr Hand] in relation to Balheary, knowing full well that your client had an association with Mr. Tiernan, who was the main proposer of the land. He asked me for 1,000 pounds. I have a moment of hesitation in the context of how do I know that this guy is not double dealing me. He may well also have got money from Joe. I don't know whether he did or not, but I do know that Joe made a remark to me some years previous that he wanted money back, to go back to the, to one of the original points that you made earlier on, he wanted money back because he wanted to look after Tom himself, your client.'

12.06 Mr Dunlop was asked why, having regard to the close political connection between Cllr Hand and Mr Tiernan, he had approached Cllr Hand at all in relation to the Balheary project. Mr Dunlop said that he and Cllr Hand had an ongoing relationship in the context of the Development Plan review and were involved in a number of rezoning issues separate to Balheary. He said that Cllr Hand was 'on the books'.

12.07 With regard to his testimony as to the inference he took from the words used by Mr Tiernan in 1990, Mr Dunlop was asked by Counsel for Cllr Hand's estate as to why he would have been shy, in 1993, to ask Mr Tiernan straight out if he had taken care of Cllr Hand. Mr Dunlop replied that, he 'did not think it was a matter of shyness' being 'as brash as the next one'. Mr Dunlop stated that he had never '...discussed payments with Joe Tiernan, individually or collectively'.

12.08 While Mr Dunlop was satisfied that he had paid Cllr Hand a sum of IR£1,000 in relation to Balheary, he was unable to identify the date or location of the payment. It was his belief that the payment was made either in the environs of the County Council offices in O'Connell Street in Dublin, or in a restaurant in Sandymount, sometime after the 21 May 1993 Council meeting. There was no record or diary reference to any such meeting by Mr Dunlop in his diaries.

12.09 No documentary evidence was available to the Tribunal to support Mr Dunlop's evidence that he paid IR£1,000 in cash to Cllr Hand.

12.10 Inquiries made of Cllr Hand's estate revealed that, on 16 June 1993 he purchased a Post Office Savings Certificate for IR£5,000 in the name of a family member. The source of the funds used to purchase this Savings Certificate could not be accounted for by his family.

12.11 While not in any way determinative of the issue as to whether Cllr Hand was in receipt of money from Mr Dunlop, the Tribunal nevertheless noted Cllr Hand's IR£5,000 transaction in the context that it took place within the timeframe in which Mr Dunlop claimed to have paid Cllr Hand.

12.12 The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Hand sought money from Mr Dunlop in return for his support for the rezoning of the Balheary lands in 1993, and that Mr Dunlop paid him a sum of IR£1,000 in cash. The Tribunal was satisfied from Mr Dunlop's evidence that he had a clear recollection of making the payment to Cllr Hand, and that his recollection was aided by Mr Dunlop's recollected suspicion that Mr Tiernan had, on a previous occasion, paid money to Cllr Hand. This was a corrupt payment.

12.13 The Tribunal was satisfied that by the Spring of 1993, Mr Dunlop had an established relationship with Cllr Hand in relation to other rezoning projects, and that money had been sought by and paid to Cllr Hand by Mr Dunlop prior to May 1993. The Tribunal found that Mr Dunlop's evidence about his dealings with Cllr Hand in relation to Balheary was credible. The Tribunal was assisted in its conclusions in this regard by the fact that it had been established to the Tribunal's satisfaction, that prior to the Spring of 1993, Cllr Hand had made a corrupt demand (October 1992) in the presence of Mr Dunlop and a third party (Mr Owen O'Callaghan) for IR£250,000 in return for his ongoing support for the Quarryvale rezoning project. To that end had provided Mr Dunlop with the number of an offshore bank account in Australia into which he requested the money to be deposited. Cllr Hand's demand was not acceded to. The fact that Cllr Hand was capable of making such a demand lent credence to Mr Dunlop's testimony in this Module that he had requested money from Mr Dunlop in return for his support.

CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER (FF)

13.01 In his evidence Mr Dunlop recalled lobbying Cllr Gallagher for his support for the Balheary motion prior to 21 May 1993. Mr Dunlop said that Cllr Gallagher requested payment 'for his support' of the motion, and that a sum of IR£1,000 was agreed, and subsequently paid, in cash. Mr Dunlop was unable to recollect the precise date or location of payment, but believed that the payment was made some time after the May 1993 vote either, in the environs of Dublin County Council in O'Connell Street, or at a licensed premises in north Co. Dublin, or at Cllr Gallagher's home.

13.02 As previously referred to, Mr Dunlop had no recollection of obtaining Cllr Gallagher's signature, but he accepted that he may have done so.¹⁷ Cllr Gallagher voted in favour of the rezoning on both 21 May and 21 September 1993.

13.03 While Mr Dunlop and Mr Tiernan's written agreement was reduced to writing on the 23 March 1993, subsequent to the lodging of the rezoning motion, the Tribunal was satisfied that that fact, of itself, did not exclude the possibility that Mr Dunlop may have obtained Cllr Gallagher's signature. Both Mr Dunlop's and Mr Tiernan's evidence suggested that they were in discussion prior to the 23 March 1993 and it may well have been that Mr Dunlop had made an approach to Cllr Gallagher in the context of Balheary prior to, or on, 18 March 1993. Mr Dunlop agreed however, that if Cllr Gallagher had signed the motion before Mr Dunlop was retained by Mr Tiernan, he would have already nailed his colours to the mast (in the context of support for the motion) prior to Mr Dunlop approaching him. Mr Dunlop agreed that it would appear 'illogical' for Cllr Gallagher to have asked for financial support after he had signed the motion. However Mr Dunlop maintained;

'A. But that's at first sight. If we look, take the bird's-eye view of what's happening in relation to the Council. I've already given evidence, for example, in another module (Lissenhall), where Mr. Gallagher has signed a motion which is on the same day or virtually the same day that on the agenda that the Balheary motion is and I paid Mr. Gallagher for his signature on that occasion because I obtained his signature on that occasion and I have a recollection of obtaining his signature on that occasion. I think the answer in relation to Cyril Gallagher, looking for something for this in relation to Balheary, is consonant with the difficulties that were taking place in the local area and he was aware of the difficulties that there would be and that we had encountered.'

13.04 The Tribunal considered that Mr Dunlop may well have obtained Cllr Gallagher's signature, probably on 18 March 1993, having regard to the fact that he obtained Cllr Gallagher's signature to a motion to rezone the Lissenhall lands on the same date.

13.05 Mr Ray Burke (at that time the local Fianna Fail TD) had spoken out publically against the rezoning of the Balheary lands. Mr Dunlop recalled having a discussion with Mr Gallagher about Mr Burke's opposition and that of the Council officials and said that Mr Gallagher was fully aware of the difficulties Mr Dunlop was experiencing as a consequence. Mr Dunlop said that it was because of this context that he specifically recalled Mr Gallagher requesting something 'for his support.'

13.06 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he did not have a specific recollection of handing IR£1,000 cash to Cllr Gallagher. He stated '...To say specifically where and when I paid him, I cannot say that to you'. He believed that it was '...after the vote. Sometime after the vote' and that it could have occurred in late

May or in June 1993, in the environs of the Council, or at a variety of hostelries in North County Dublin.

13.07 Asked if he had ever paid Cllr Gallagher, or any councillor, in respect of a number of motions at any one time Mr Dunlop said he could not be absolutely sure. Mr Dunlop stated that Cllr Gallagher had received money from him for ‘a signature he put on a motion in relation to Lissenhall.’ While he could not say that he never gave Cllr Gallagher ‘...a composite amount in relation to a number of developments’, his arrangement with Cllr Gallagher ‘...usually was whatever payment was agreed, whatever he asked for and I agreed. That as soon as I could thereafter, it was paid.’

13.08 An analysis of Cllr Gallagher’s finances revealed that between the 25 and 28 May 1993 he made three round figure lodgements to accounts held in his name as follows: On 25 May 1993 he purchased savings certificates in An Post totalling IR£2,000, with IR£2,000 cash. He lodged IR£2,000 to an AIB deposit account, also on 25 May 1993, and some three days later he lodged IR£500 to an account held by him in Ulster Bank.

13.09 While these round figure lodgements of themselves could not be the sole determinant of whether Cllr Gallagher received IR£1,000 cash from Mr Dunlop following the Balheary rezoning vote of 21 May 1993, it was noteworthy that Cllr Gallagher was in possession of such round figure cash sums within days of the vote.

13.10 The Tribunal found Mr Dunlop’s evidence that Cllr Gallagher requested, and was paid, money by him to be credible. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop’s evidence that he recalled the request in the context of the discussion he had with Cllr Gallagher.

13.11 The Tribunal was thus satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid Cllr Gallagher IR£1,000 in cash in return for his support for the rezoning of the Balheary lands, and that this payment was made in response to the councillor’s request. This payment was a corrupt payment.

CLLR LIAM T. COSGRAVE (FG)

14.01 Cllr Cosgrave supported the Balheary rezoning motion in May 1993, and again supported the Balheary project by voting against the September 1993 Ryan/Kelleher motion.

14.02 Mr Dunlop testified that following a request for payment by Cllr Cosgrave in return for his support for the rezoning of the Balheary lands, he paid him a sum of IR£1,000 in cash. This was paid subsequent to the vote on 21 May 1993.

14.03 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that his memory of making the payment to Cllr Cosgrave was assisted by a view about Mr Tiernan he says was expressed to him by Cllr Cosgrave at the time. Mr Dunlop stated:

'...In relation to Liam Cosgrave. Liam Cosgrave and in fairness to Liam Cosgrave I would prefer that Liam Cosgrave give his evidence in relation to his views of Mr. Tiernan himself. It's relevant to what I'm saying is, Mr. Cosgrave had a view about Joe Tiernan even though he was a Fine Gael man. I'm not saying that they didn't get on or they didn't like one another but the fact of the matter is that Mr. Cosgrave did express a view to me about Mr. Tiernan. And that he said he would support it if I gave him something and we agreed 1,000 pounds...'

Mr Dunlop maintained that his recollection of the remark which Cllr Cosgrave had made had aided his memory of making the payment to Cllr Cosgrave.

14.04 Cllr Cosgrave, in the course of his evidence, acknowledged that it was possible he had been lobbied by Mr Tiernan in relation to the lands, although he had no recollection of same. Nor did he have a recollection of being contacted by the Brothers in that context. He had recollection of a letter sent to him by Brother Heneghan. The letter was sent on 3 May 1993, and Cllr Cosgrave replied to that correspondence confirming his support for the rezoning. He acknowledged that Mr Tiernan was well known to him for a number of years, but was unable to recall if Mr Tiernan had lobbied him in respect of the lands. In his written statement to the Tribunal, prior to his sworn evidence, Cllr Cosgrave said that it was his belief that 'representations' had been made to him 'on behalf of both the Christian Brothers and Tiernan Homes Ltd.'

14.05 Cllr Cosgrave vehemently rejected Mr Dunlop's evidence that he sought payment from him, and he stated that: '...Mr Dunlop never spoke to me about these lands'. He rejected Mr Dunlop's evidence of his having a 'view' of Mr Tiernan or that he had communicated to Mr Dunlop a 'view' of Mr Tiernan. Cllr Cosgrave's evidence was that Mr Tiernan was; '...a very good developer' and he had no other 'personal' view of Mr Tiernan or personal animosity towards him. Cllr Cosgrave told the Tribunal, that: 'Mr Tiernan is a good developer. He was a friend of mine, remains a friend of mine.'

RECORDED CONTACT BETWEEN MR DUNLOP AND CLLR
COSGRAVE IN MAY 1993

14.07 On 25 May 1993, some four days following the rezoning vote, Mr Dunlop's office recorded a telephone call from Cllr Cosgrave. Cllr Cosgrave was unable to say why he might have been contacting Mr Dunlop at that time, save to suggest that he may have been returning a call from Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop's diary for the 26 May 1993 recorded a meeting between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave thus; '3.30 L Cos Gresham.' Cllr Cosgrave did not recall the meeting but denied any suggestion that its purpose might have been to receive a payment to him by Mr Dunlop. The record of telephone contacts maintained by Mr Dunlop's office logged a call from Cllr Cosgrave at 10.15am on the 21 September 1993, (the day the Balheary rezoning issue was again scheduled for consideration), and noted a telephone number left by Cllr Cosgrave and the message, 'or will see you around O'Connell Street.' Cllr Cosgrave did not recall any meeting with Mr Dunlop on that date.

14.08 The Tribunal considered as unlikely Cllr Cosgrave's contention that Mr Dunlop had never lobbied him in relation to the Balheary lands. Mr Dunlop was well known to Cllr Cosgrave at this time, and Cllr Cosgrave had been lobbied by Mr Dunlop some months previously in relation to other projects including the Ballycullen/Beechill and Quarryvale rezoning projects. Mr Dunlop's office telephone records and his diary confirmed contact (or attempted contact) between himself and Cllr Cosgrave within days of the Balheary rezoning vote.

14.09 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's recollection of his lobbying, and of paying money to Cllr Cosgrave in relation to the Balheary lands was correct. The said payment of IR£1,000 to Cllr Cosgrave was a corrupt payment.

CLLR TONY FOX (FF)

15.01 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he paid Cllr Fox IR£1,000 in cash in return for his support for the Balheary rezoning motion. Mr Dunlop said that Cllr Fox requested money in return for his support. Cllr Fox voted in favour of the rezoning on both 21 May and 21 September 1993.

15.02 Mr Dunlop recalled Cllr Fox specifically raising Mr Tiernan's political affiliations when he approached him seeking his support for the Balheary lands rezoning.

15.03 Mr Dunlop stated:

'In relation to Tony Fox. When I approached Tony Fox about it, Tony Fox raised the issue of Joe Tiernan's affiliations. Notwithstanding the fact that he said that he was pro-development and would vote for anything that he felt deserved to be voted for but that it would require something. And again, the reason I am specific about Tony Fox, is in the context of the personality of Joe Tiernan, who was a Fine Gael man and here was Tony Fox being asked by me to vote for something, being promoted by a member, a strong supporter of Fine Gael in the knowledge of what was going on in the wider Fianna Fail party about supporting Joe Tiernan.'

15.04 In response to questions put in cross-examination by Counsel for Cllr Fox, Mr Dunlop stated that he had a 'vivid recollection' of lobbying Cllr Fox but while he insisted that he had paid him IR£1,000, he conceded that he was unable to say where or when he had given the IR£1,000 to Cllr Fox, save that as set out in his 2006 statement, it had been in the environs of the Council.

15.05 In the course of that cross-examination, he stated:

'...there is a trigger in the context of particular events. Sometimes it's more evident, more – not, evident is not the word, but more amplified in some cases than it is in others. I've already dealt with an issue in relation to your client vis-a-vis lobbying by another person in which he told me when I went to see him that he had been lobbied but he had gave me nothing. In this particular instance when I approached your client in relation to the Balheary development in 1993, and just for completeness, Mr. Gordon, I just want to say. I have no recollection at all of talking to your client in relation to Balheary vis-a-vis 1991. It is palpably obvious that I did but I have no recollection of it. But in relation to 1993, I approached your client and we had a discussion about this. And the circumstances were such that Mr. Tiernan was of Fine Gael persuasion and there were some comment about this fact, whether or not Fianna Fail people should support it and some of that comment was replicated in my conversation with your client at the time I approached him. However, your client consistently, and I've always said this, was in favour of development and said he would support it. On foot of the payment of 1,000 pounds.'

15.06 All of this had assisted his recollection that Cllr Fox had sought money from him for his support for Balheary, and that he had been paid money for that purpose.

15.07 Cllr Fox denied receiving money from Mr Dunlop in relation to the Balheary lands. He repeatedly denied receiving money from Mr Dunlop for any purpose whatsoever. His denial was consistent with his responses in a number of modules, to Mr Dunlop's allegations of having made payments to him. Cllr Fox told the Tribunal that he did not remember being lobbied by the Brothers in relation to Balheary, and did not recall a letter from Brother Heneghan on 3 May 1993 requesting his support, or a letter of thanks sent by Brother Heneghan in the aftermath of the May vote. Cllr Fox was again written to in September 1993. He did not recall being lobbied by Mr Dunlop in relation to the lands although he acknowledged that he would have come across Mr Dunlop at the relevant time. He had a vague recollection of being lobbied by Mr Tiernan in relation to the lands.

15.08 Cllr Fox described the evidence given by Mr Dunlop as 'Absolute rubbish. Fantasy ...Pure fantasy.' Cllr Fox denied that he would have known Mr Tiernan's political affiliations, or that such a political affiliation (if it had been known to him) would have influenced his vote on the Council. He confirmed that he was supportive of the Balheary rezoning both in May 1993 and September 1993.

15.09 Cllr Fox could not account for why Mr Dunlop's office recorded a telephone message from him on the 29 September 1993, leaving a telephone number and a message 'Frank Dunlop would know what it was about'. Questioned as to why Mr Dunlop would make allegations against him, Cllr Fox stated: 'Well I think I've been asked that question a number of times, Chairman. And I just haven't a clue. I don't know what was in his head in relation to it. Why he would be making these allegations against me because they are totally untrue.'

15.10 The Tribunal heard evidence of six telephone messages in the period January to March 1993, left by Cllr Fox for Mr Dunlop, and while all of these contacts may not have related to the Balheary rezoning issue they did indicate, to the Tribunal's satisfaction, that Mr Dunlop and Cllr Fox were in contact during this period. Cllr Fox was adamant that these were not related to the Balheary lands rezoning project.

15.11 The Tribunal was satisfied that, contrary to Cllr Fox's evidence to the Tribunal, he was in fact lobbied by Mr Dunlop in relation to the Balheary lands rezoning project, and that he had not forgotten about it at the time he gave his evidence.

15.12 The Tribunal found it inconceivable that Mr Dunlop would not have lobbied Cllr Fox in relation to the Balheary rezoning motion, given that Mr Dunlop saw fit to lobby Cllr Fox in relation to a number of other rezoning projects, (as ultimately accepted by Cllr Fox) including the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. The Tribunal was satisfied that, by the Spring of 1993, Mr Dunlop and Cllr Fox were in contact in relation to a number of matters including the Balheary lands.

15.13 Overall, the Tribunal preferred the evidence tendered by Mr Dunlop to that of Cllr Fox. In preferring Mr Dunlop's evidence, the Tribunal took into consideration the fact (as found by the Tribunal) that following the establishment of the Tribunal, an approach was made by Cllr Fox to Mr Dunlop, in the context of a history of dealings between himself and Mr Dunlop during the making of the 1993 Development Plan and the 1998 Dun Laoghaire/Rathdown Development Plan, whereby it had been agreed between them that monies provided to Cllr Fox would be designated by both as political donations. The extent to which this agreement influenced the Tribunal in assessing Cllr Fox's credibility is set out in the St. Gerard's lands Chapter in the Report.

15.14 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's recollection of a request by Cllr Fox for a payment connected to the Balheary rezoning was aided by his clear recollection of Cllr Fox raising Mr Tiernan's political affiliation with him when he lobbied Cllr Fox to support Balheary. The Tribunal rejected Cllr Fox's evidence that he would have been unaware of Mr Tiernan's political affiliations as unlikely in the extreme.

15.15 The Tribunal was satisfied that a request was made by Cllr Fox of Mr Dunlop for money, and that Mr Dunlop paid Cllr Fox IR£1,000 for his support for the rezoning of the Balheary lands. This payment was a corrupt payment.

MR DUNLOP'S PAYMENTS TO THE FOUR ABOVE NAMED COUNCILLORS – AN OVERVIEW

16.01 In arriving at its conclusions that Mr Dunlop made the payments in question the Tribunal considered whether, as a matter of probability, Mr Dunlop would have made payments totalling IR£4,000 in the circumstances claimed by him, given that Mr Dunlop's retention by Mr Tiernan was on a success fee basis.

16.02 The Tribunal was satisfied that, although Mr Dunlop was not put in funds by Mr Tiernan, by way of fees or otherwise, this was not a factor which undermined his credibility on this issue. The Tribunal was satisfied, from evidence adduced in other modules, that in the Spring of 1993, Mr Dunlop did have access to a confluence of funds from which to make payments to councillors.

EVENTS POST 23 MAY 1993

17.01 The successful vote of the 21 May 1993 meant that the Balheary lands were zoned A1 (residential) on the 1993 amendments to the 1991 Draft Development Plan, when publicly displayed in July/August 1993.

17.02 On 18 June 1991, within a month of the successful rezoning vote, the signatories to the rezoning motion, Cllrs Devitt and Gallagher, dined with Brothers Heneghan and Mullan and Mr Tiernan in Dobbins restaurant in Dublin. Cllr Devitt described this event as a ‘social dinner’, and she rejected any notion that the dinner was related to her work as a councillor, and indeed, she did not recall Council business being discussed during the evening.

17.03 Brother Heneghan told the Tribunal that it was his impression that the dinner at Dobbins was arranged by Mr Tiernan to reassure the Brothers that he had done everything possible to get the zoning through and that he was still working on it. Mr Tiernan told the Tribunal that it was his recollection that the dinner was held as a ‘thank you’ to Cllrs Devitt and Gallagher. Cllr Devitt rejected this suggestion, and said she merely understood that she: ‘was going out to dinner’.

17.04 Cllr Devitt earlier described how she met various parties in the course of her work as a councillor. Some of these meetings took place in hotels or other venues, and Cllr Devitt rejected any suggestion that she might have been influenced in the course of such contact to act otherwise than appropriately as a councillor.

17.05 Cllr Devitt stated:

‘...I think you have to go back to the role of a councillor. I was full-time, 1993, teaching. I was an apprentice solicitor. I was probably attending at Blackhall Place. I had, I was single, I was a single mother, rearing three teenage children. And I was a volunteer public representative. I had no office in which to carry out my duties as a public representative, I think that should be pointed out. So if you wanted to meet people you met them, either in your own home, at that stage I lived in a two bed apartment in Clontarf, so that inviting people to my home to meet them was out of the question. So therefore, we tended to meet them either in their offices or a hotel.’

17.06 Cllr Devitt acknowledged that she had signed the motion at the behest of Mr Tiernan but maintained that she had no recollection of being lobbied by Mr Dunlop. She stated that she was supportive of the proposal to rezone the lands. She voted in support of the rezoning on both 21 May and 21 September 1993.

17.07 Cllr Devitt acknowledged that she had a social engagement with Mr Dunlop on 24 March 1993 (the day following Mr Dunlop's conclusion of the written agreement with Mr Tiernan) as part of the 'four by two club'¹⁸ but could not recollect if the rezoning of the Balheary lands had been a matter of discussion between herself and Mr Dunlop at that time. If it had come up in conversation with Mr Dunlop, Cllr Devitt suggested that she would have extolled the merits of the proposal. She stated: 'And I was very concerned that we would get a linear park. So I would have wanted those things in the motion.'

And:

'And the important thing is that what I was looking for was additional lands over and above what you can normally get in recreational lands from a particular development.'

17.08 In the course of her evidence she acknowledged that, in 1991, she was the recipient of indirect financial assistance from Mr Dunlop when he paid for some leaflets she had printed. Her recollection was that this printing cost Mr Dunlop between IR£200 and IR£400. She regarded this as a political contribution. It was probable that this assistance was provided by Mr Dunlop at the time of the 1991 local elections.

THE REVERSAL OF THE 'A1' REZONING IN SEPTEMBER 1993

18.01 Between May and September 1993, there was a serious campaign of opposition mounted to the 'A1' zoning which had been achieved for the lands. This opposition culminated in a reversal of the 21 May 1993 vote at a Special Meeting of the Council on the 21 September 1993. A written attendance on Brother Heneghan by the Brothers' solicitor on the 23 September 1993 noted the reversal in the following terms:

'Attending Brother Heneghan on the telephone. He said he was just ringing to say that the Council had overturned the re-zoning of the Balheary lands so that the agreement with Tiernan was in effect dead. It was anticipated that it would probably be at least ten years before any new proposal could be brought forward. If another proposal is going to be brought forward it was hoped that it would be done on it's own merits and would not get mixed up with a whole lot of applications at a time when the whole issue was highly politicised.'

18.02 Notwithstanding this reversal, Mr Tiernan was intent on keeping alive the prospect of future success for a residential zoning for the lands, and to this end a supplemental agreement was concluded with the Brothers on 12 July

¹⁸ See reference to the 'four by two' club in Chapter Two.

1994. This provided that the 1991 agreement would be revived if the rezoning of the Balheary lands was achieved, on or before 30 September 1995. However, as already set out, notwithstanding Fingal County Council concluding a Variation of the 1993 Development Plan, the Balheary lands did not feature in their considerations. While Mr Tiernan and Mr Dunlop concluded a new agreement in 1994 (as previously referred to) there was no evidence that Mr Dunlop engaged in any meaningful way in lobbying councillors during the Variation process. Mr Dunlop testified that his agreement with Mr Tiernan effectively faded away in or about 1995.

18.03 Following the expiry of Mr Tiernan's 1994 agreement with the Brothers, no further agreement was concluded although it would appear Mr Tiernan made a subsequent approach in this regard in 1997. No further agreement was concluded. In December 1997, Mr Tiernan felt there was another opportunity to re-engage in the process to achieve rezoning of the Balheary lands. However, the Brothers did not wish to proceed and subsequently sold the lands to another party in 2003.

MR TIERNAN'S PAYMENTS TO COUNCILLORS

19.01 The Tribunal was advised that Mr Tiernan made the following payments to councillors:

- | | |
|------------------------------|--|
| • 1991 Cllr Liam T. Cosgrave | IR£500 |
| • 1992 Cllr Therese Ridge | IR£1,000 |
| • 1992 Cllr Finbarr Hanrahan | IR£1,000 |
| • 1992 Cllr Jim Fay | IR£250 |
| • 1994 Cllr Cathal Boland | IR£200 (cheque returned to Mr Tiernan by Cllr Boland) |
| • 1995 Cllr Tom Hand | IR£5,000 |
| • 1995/6 Mr Liam Lawlor | IR£7,000 (refurbishment work to Mr Lawlor's home to the value of IR£7,000) |
| • Undated; Mr Liam Lawlor | IR£8,000 (a payment of IR£5,000 and a payment of IR£3,000) |

19.02 Cllrs Liam T. Cosgrave, Ridge and Hanrahan acknowledged receiving money from Mr Tiernan. Cllr Fay denied receiving payment of IR£250 from Mr Tiernan.

CLLR LIAM T. COSGRAVE (FG)

20.01 Cllr Cosgrave told the Tribunal that he and Mr Tiernan were 'political friends'. He appeared to acknowledge that Mr Tiernan may have made representations to him in relation to the Balheary lands. Cllr Cosgrave also said that he was unable to recall if he knew of Mr Tiernan's association with the Balheary lands. Cllr Cosgrave was questioned as to his recollection of having been lobbied in relation to the Balheary lands, as follows:

'Q Can you recall whether, in the period early 1991, you are canvassed either by Mr. Dunlop or Mr. Tiernan in relation to these lands?

A. As far as I'm concerned, I can't remember. But I don't think Mr. Dunlop ever spoke to me in relation to these lands. It's possible that Mr. Tiernan, who I've known well and it's possible that I would have met him and he would have canvassed me but I can't honestly recall.

Q. Did you know that Mr. Tiernan had an interest in these lands at all?

A. Not that I can recall.'

20.02 While Cllr Cosgrave told the Fine Gael inquiry in 2000 that he received two payments from Mr Tiernan, in a statement to the Tribunal he stated that he received only one. In his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Cllr Cosgrave accepted that he had received one payment, but was unsure if he had in fact received a second. Cllr Cosgrave said he was prepared to accept Mr Tiernan's evidence that he had in fact received one payment.

CLLR M. J. COSGRAVE (FG)

21.01 Mr Tiernan claimed, in a letter to the Tribunal dated 27 June 2000, that he paid a sum of IR£500 to Cllr M. J. Cosgrave in 1991. He retracted this statement in a subsequent letter to the Tribunal of 14 May 2004. Mr Tiernan did not include Cllr M. J. Cosgrave's name in a list of elected representatives to whom he claimed he had made payments, (this list was contained in an affidavit sworn by Mr Tiernan on 2 October 2006). Mr Tiernan had earlier, in a letter dated 27 June 2000 claimed that he had made a payment to Mr M. J. Cosgrave, but later (14 May 2004) retracted that claim and apologised for the error.

21.02 In the course of his evidence on 16 November 2006 (Day 697), Mr Tiernan said that he 'could find no evidence' of any payment made by him to Cllr M. J. Cosgrave, and he was 'not now sure' that any such payment was made. Cllr M. J. Cosgrave denied receiving a payment of IR£500. Cllr Cosgrave said that he did not know Mr Tiernan personally, but knew him as a member of the Fine Gael party. Cllr Cosgrave voted in favour of the Balheary rezoning in May 1993, but did not vote in September 1993.

21.03 Having regard to the evidence of both Mr Tiernan and Cllr M J Cosgrave, the Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr M J Cosgrave was not a recipient of any payment from Mr Tiernan in relation to the Balheary lands.

CLLR THERESE RIDGE (FG)

22.01 Cllr Ridge told the Tribunal that she recalled receiving IR£1,000 from Mr Tiernan in 1991, and another IR£1,000 in 1992, a total of IR£2,000. This was contrary to Mr Tiernan's position, namely, that he had given her only one payment of IR£1,000, and that this was made in 1992. Cllr Ridge said she and Mr Tiernan knew each other very well over many years. Cllr Ridge was unable to recollect ever being lobbied in relation to the Balheary lands by Mr Dunlop or the Brothers. She said it was possible that Mr Tiernan had lobbied her. Cllr Ridge said that at the time she accepted a political donation from Mr Tiernan she was unaware of his involvement with the Balheary lands. The Tribunal considered it extremely unlikely that she would not have been lobbied, given Mr Tiernan's association with Fine Gael, and his evidence that he lobbied Fine Gael and, indeed, other councillors and other parties. Cllr Ridge voted in favour of the rezoning on both 21 May and 21 September 1993.

22.02 Having regard to Cllr Ridge's testimony, the Tribunal was satisfied that she had received two payments of IR£1,000 each from Mr Tiernan, one in 1991, and the other in 1992.

CLLR FINBARR HANRAHAN (FF)

23.01 Mr Tiernan told the Tribunal that he paid Cllr Hanrahan IR£1,000 in cash in 1992 because he was a councillor in the Lucan area where Mr Tiernan had a development project. Mr Tiernan saw nothing wrong with making a payment to Cllr Hanrahan in these circumstances.

23.02 Cllr Hanrahan acknowledged that he received a political donation from Mr Tiernan for the 1991 local elections, although he said it might have been paid in relation to the 1992 general election.

23.03 He maintained that he was unaware that Mr Tiernan was associated with the Balheary lands at the time he received the contribution from him, and had no recollection of being lobbied by him.

23.04 Cllr Hanrahan voted in support of the Balheary project in May 1993, but was absent from the September 1993 vote.

CLLR JIM FAY (FG)

24.01 Cllr Fay signed, and later withdrew the Balheary rezoning motion in 1991. Cllr Fay denied receiving a payment of IR£250 from Mr Tiernan in 1992. He said that he was not lobbied in relation to the rezoning of the Balheary lands. Cllr Fay left the County Council in 1991, and was not an elected councillor in 1992 when Mr Tiernan claimed that he paid him IR£250. Cllr Fay did not vote at the May and September 1993 meetings relating to the Balheary lands.

24.02 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Tiernan had not made a payment of IR£250 to Cllr Fay in 1992.

CLLR TOM HAND (FG)

25.01 In his letter to the Tribunal dated 27 June 2000, Mr Tiernan stated that he had paid a sum of IR£5,000 to Cllr Hand in 1995, following Cllr Hand's request for assistance in financing the purchase of a house in Co. Wicklow where he was proposing to move for health reasons. Mr Tiernan explained that as a friend of Cllr Hand for twenty years he felt obliged to support him, and gave him a cheque for IR£5,000. Mr Tiernan said that no favour of any kind was sought, or received, in relation to the payment.

25.02 In his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Tiernan repeated his statement that the reason he gave IR£5,000 to Cllr Hand in 1995 was to assist him in relation to a personal matter.

CLLR CATHAL BOLAND (FG)

26.01 Cllr Boland told the Tribunal that, on 28 May 1991, approximately three weeks prior to the local elections in 1991, in which he was a candidate, he attended at an opening of a residential project developed by Mr Tiernan at Mount Argus, Dublin. On that occasion Mr Tiernan gave him a donation of IR£500, in cash, towards election expenses.

26.02 Mr Tiernan accepted that he gave Cllr Boland IR£500 in cash in Mount Argus in 1991, but could not recall doing so. He also accepted that he had canvassed Cllr Boland in relation to Balheary, and that he was aware of Cllr Boland's opposition to the project. Cllr Boland acknowledged having been lobbied by Mr Tiernan to support the Balheary rezoning project, and stated that when lobbied he had emphasised his opposition to the rezoning proposal. In addition, the Brothers wrote to him on 14 September 1993, although he had no recollection of the letter. Cllr Boland voted against the Balheary rezoning at both the May and September 1993 meetings.

26.03 In 1994, Cllr Boland held a fundraising lunch. Mr Tiernan did not attend but told Cllr Boland on the telephone that he would send a donation. Cllr Boland duly received a cheque for IR£200, together with a compliments slip from Tiernan Homesteads Ltd dated 22 April 1994 stating: 'Cathal...as agreed On condition you do not vote against me, regards, Joe'.

26.04 Cllr Boland testified that when he received the cheque, and the attached note, he was unaware which particular motion or issue Mr Tiernan was referring to, but he took objection to a donation being made subject to any condition. He resolved to return the cheque, and to his credit, did so approximately one month later, accompanied by his own compliments slip stating: 'Joe, many thanks but I never accept conditions.'

26.05 Cllr Boland said he delayed returning the cheque for up to a month as he was inclined to put off dealing with an issue which he regarded as unpleasant.

26.06 Mr Tiernan acknowledged sending Cllr Boland a cheque for IR£200 in 1994, accompanied by the compliments slip, and he confirmed that it was returned soon afterwards by Cllr Boland. He did not accept that his payment constituted a bribe, or any attempt to bribe. Mr Tiernan appeared to distinguish between offering money to a councillor to vote in favour of something, and making a payment on condition that the councillor's vote would not be used against him. However, the Tribunal did not agree that any such distinction could reasonably exist. In its view, Mr Tiernan's letter to Cllr Boland constituted a clear attempt to bribe a councillor to abstain from exercising his vote as an elected councillor.

REASONS GIVEN BY MR TIERNAN FOR MAKING PAYMENTS TO COUNCILLORS

27.01 Mr Tiernan was himself actively involved in Fine Gael politics from 1973 to 1995 approximately. Mr Tiernan said he had a long and active involvement in politics over a number of years, and for that reason he was on friendly terms with a number of politicians, including councillors.

27.02 Mr Tiernan told the Tribunal that as a political activist, he knew of the costs associated with elections, and was anxious to support those councillors to whom he made payments. With the exception of the payment to Cllr Hand, Mr Tiernan maintained that his payments to councillors were bona fide political donations. Mr Tiernan also told the Tribunal that if requested, he would make a political donation outside of election time.

27.03 In response to the question: 'What is a developer doing making payments to councillors who within a year or two will vote on developments that will rezone the lands and make him a lot of money?', Mr Tiernan responded '...they might not vote. They might not vote on it. They don't necessarily vote.' He denied any suggestion that such payments might be 'corruption' and stated that they payments were made '...in the furtherance of democracy.' The Tribunal however was satisfied that, contrary to his claim that his payments to councillors had been motivated by his desire to promote democracy, Mr Tiernan's motivation, to a large extent, was his desire to ingratiate himself with councillors (including councillors of a different persuasion than his own) in anticipation of their favourable consideration of projects in which he had an interest which required, or might in the future require, their vote in the County Council.

27.04 Asked if he would do so around the time of a Council vote,¹⁹ Mr Tiernan stated: '...If it was close to a vote concerning me I would not'. In response to the question: 'Where is the date before which you would have said certainly councillor and after which you would have said certainly not councillors because that would be interfering with the democratic process?' Mr Tiernan replied '...I cannot visualise a situation that has arisen resembling your question. But I would say anytime up to a week or two before it. I would see nothing wrong with it.'

27.05 The Tribunal did not accept Mr Tiernan's contention that his motivation for making such payments was the 'furtherance of democracy.' While the Tribunal acknowledged that Mr Tiernan, particularly because of his own political background, may have been inclined towards supporting councillors financially at the time of elections, the Tribunal was satisfied that a significant motivating factor in making these payments was a desire or intention on his part to ensure that the recipients of such payments would be favourably disposed towards supporting his development projects at Council level. Indeed, Mr Tiernan himself admitted as much in the course of his explanation for the IR£1,000 cash he had provided to Cllr Hanrahan. The Tribunal was also assisted in its arrival at this conclusion having regard to the content of the compliment slip sent by Mr Tiernan with a cheque to Cllr Boland in 1994.

¹⁹ Mr Tiernan was questioned in this regard in the context of him having a rezoning proposal before the Council.

MR TIERNAN'S KNOWLEDGE OF CORRUPTION IN THE 1990S

28.01 Mr Tiernan stated that prior to 'about 1994 or 1995', despite being a successful developer, and having at that stage successfully undertaken a number of developments in the Dublin area, he was unaware of rumours or stories to the effect that some elected councillors in County Dublin were providing support for rezoning motions in return for payment.

28.02 When pressed as to whether or not he had heard rumours of corruption involving councillors, Mr Tiernan acknowledged that he had indeed heard of such rumours. When pressed on the issue, he said he heard nothing about it until it appeared in the newspapers. He recalled Minister Smith's phrase; 'debased currency' but said that he had; 'no knowledge of Minister Smith at the time talking about bribes or County Councillors seeking money for their votes.'

28.03 Mr Tiernan stated that he had; '... no knowledge of cash for votes. I had no experience of cash for votes. I saw no cash for votes.' Mr Tiernan told the Tribunal that he had not made any inquiry of Mr Dunlop in 1993, or subsequently, about whether he had paid councillors in relation to Balheary.

28.04 Having regard, in particular to its finding that in 1990 Mr Tiernan uttered words to the effect that he wanted to 'take care' of Cllr Hand himself, the Tribunal rejected Mr Tiernan's evidence that he was unaware of a situation where certain councillors were in receipt of money in return for their voting support for rezoning or other projects.

MR TIERNAN'S EVIDENCE AS TO HIS RELATIONSHIP WITH MR LIAM LAWLOR (FF)

29.01 Mr Tiernan told the Tribunal that Mr Lawlor introduced him to Mr Dunlop in early 1990, and that he was friendly with Mr Lawlor for many years. He stated that Mr Lawlor gave him 'political advice' (rather than business or property advice) which he explained was advice based on Mr Lawlor's knowledge of planning matters as a serving TD and councillor: 'for the area.'

29.02 Mr Tiernan believed that he paid Mr Lawlor two sums of money, one of IR£3,000 and the other of IR£5,000, following Mr Lawlor's requests to him for money. He classed these payments as political contributions, and as payments based on personal friendship and Mr Lawlor's personal needs, and emphasised that the payments had not been made for advice or in relation to any business matter.

29.03 Mr Tiernan also told the Tribunal that in 1995/6 he carried out building work at Mr Lawlor's home in Lucan, Co. Dublin at Mr Lawlor's request at a cost of approximately IR£7,000. He was not paid for this work, nor had he discussed payment with Mr Lawlor. Mr Tiernan said that he did not raise any invoice for the work. He stated: '...When the job was completed, I did not raise an invoice. I did not ask him for the money. And he did not make any effort or attempt to pay it by asking me. So it was just left.'

29.04 Mr Tiernan said that his decision to carry out this work for Mr Lawlor without payment was based on their friendship.

5th March, 1991

Dear Brother Mullan,

As you know the motion relating to Balheary will be taken on Thursday next, 7th March, 1991, at a meeting beginning at 2.30pm. It is the first item on the agenda and it is imperative that the maximum support for the motion be present in the chamber from the very start of the meeting. I will oversee much of the contact but I would like you to phone the attached list of Councillors seeking their support. I know Brother Gibson has phoned some of them already but another call won't go astray.

I will ring you this evening.

Kind regards,

FRANK DUNLOP

Dear Brother Mullen,

I have been unable to contact you this morning and as I am going away for the weekend I suggest the following course of action:

- (a) Draft letter to all Councillors enclosed for your consideration and signature. This letter to be posted pre-lunch on Tuesday next by my office.
- (b) List of Councillors, and their phone numbers, to be contacted by you over the next 5/6 days. Notes on each attached.

I will liaise with you first thing on Tuesday morning next and I strongly recommend that we meet with Mr. T. in the early afternoon on Tuesday, or at any other time on that day suitable to you.

19th March, 1991

Dear Councillor,

Further to my previous letter of 26th February last (copy attached) I am writing to you seeking your support for the first item to be discussed on the agenda of the Development Plan meeting scheduled for Thursday next, March 21st at 2.30pm.

In discussions with our Planning Advisors they inform us that Swords requires substantial infrastructural investment mainly in the upgrading of the foul-drainage system and our proposal would make a substantial contribution to this up-grading to ensure protection to the Broad Meadow Estuary and in particular, water quality. No proposal would be submitted until our technical advisors had liaised with the Council's Engineering Department to comply with environmental guidelines as well as with the good planning of the area.

We will continue our long association with the people of Swords and as you are aware we maintain a Retreat House at Balheary which is renowned both nationally and internationally.

We trust that when you have had time to consider our request you will see your way to giving us your vital support on Thursday next. Should you require any further information please do not hesitate to contact either Brother Gibson or myself at phone number 300247.

Yours sincerely,

CHAPTER THIRTEEN – ST GERARDS MODULE

INTRODUCTION

1.01 This module inquired into attempts during the reviews of the 1983 and 1993 Dublin County Development Plans to rezone approximately 22 acres of lands owned by St Gerard's School Trust at Old Connaught Avenue, Thornhill, Bray, Co. Wicklow. Although the lands had a Co. Wicklow address, until 31 December 1993, they were located within the functional area of Dublin County Council; thereafter they were located within the functional area of Dún Laoghaire -Rathdown County Council.

1.02 Sixteen witnesses gave evidence in public between 26 November and 4 December 2003.

1.03 Development of the lands was severely restricted because they were zoned B (agriculture) and G, (green belt) in the 1983 and 1993 Dublin County Development Plans. The Board of St Gerard's School was anxious to have the lands rezoned.

1.04 The attempts to have the lands rezoned, in both instances, were unsuccessful.

THE ATTEMPT TO REZONE THE ST GERARD'S LANDS IN 1992

2.01 The 1991 Dublin County Draft Development Plan adopted the 1983 green belt zoning for St Gerard's School. The plan was placed on statutory public display from 2 September to 3 December 1991. During this period 52 representations/objections were received by Dublin County Council. These included a representation made on behalf of St Gerard's on 27 November 1991 by Mr Fergal Kenny, Consultant Architect. He sought to have the lands to be zoned residential for low density housing, limited to 18 houses.

2.02 A motion in similar terms signed by Cllr Liam T. Cosgrave was lodged with Dublin County Council on 14 April 1992. It sought to have the land rezoned for residential development at a density of not more than two houses per hectare. This motion was proposed by Cllr Liam T. Cosgrave and seconded by Cllr Michael J. Cosgrave at a special meeting of the County Council on 30 April 1992. The County Council Manager had recommended that councillors reject the motion, as the proposed rezoning could lead to a proliferation of septic tanks. This was because the sewer serving St Gerard's School drained to Bray Urban District Council, where Dublin County Council had no jurisdiction. The motion was defeated by 22 votes to 19. St Gerard's lands therefore retained their green belt zoning when the Dublin County Development Plan 1993 was adopted on 10 December 1993.

THE REVIEW OF THE 1993 DEVELOPMENT PLAN BY DUN LAOGHAIRE-RATHDOWN COUNCIL

2.03 In 1996, Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Council began a review of the 1993 Dublin County Development Plan, and the 1991 Dún Laoghaire Borough Development Plan. The Draft Development Plan was put on display between 21 May and 22 August 1997. In the plan, the St Gerard's lands continued to be zoned B and G (green belt) 'to protect and enhance the open nature of lands between urban areas.'

MR FRANK DUNLOP'S RETENTION IN 1997 AND THE FURTHER ATTEMPT TO REZONE THE ST GERARD'S LANDS AT THAT TIME

3.01 In 1997, Mr Frank Dunlop was retained to promote the rezoning of the school's lands. He was engaged by Mr Marcus Magnier, a Dublin auctioneer, who had been associated with the school from the early 1990s, as a parent of a student at the school, and as a member of its Board of Governors. At all times, Mr Magnier was acting on the board's behalf, and in its interests.

3.02 The Tribunal was satisfied that it was in the context of this further opportunity to attempt to have the lands rezoned, that Mr Dunlop was retained by Mr Magnier on behalf of St Gerard's School in or about August/September 1997.

3.03 Initial contact between Mr Dunlop and Mr Magnier occurred in 1991, in relation to an unrelated matter, and at a time when St Gerard's was engaged in the process of seeking to rezone its lands. There were a number of meetings between Mr Dunlop and Mr Magnier in early 1991. Although Mr Dunlop was not at this time engaged by Mr Magnier as a lobbyist in connection with St Gerard's, it was probable that they discussed the steps necessary to achieve the rezoning of the lands. It was likely that at that time, Mr Dunlop explained to Mr Magnier in some detail, the process of lobbying councillors to support a rezoning vote¹. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop was not engaged as a lobbyist for St Gerard's in the period 1991 to 1992.

3.04 At the time of Mr Dunlop's retention in 1997, Auveen Byrne & Associates, Planning Consultants, had made submissions on behalf of the school to the County Council supporting a change of zoning of the lands to permit low density residential development limited to two dwellings per hectare. Mr Magnier provided Mr Dunlop with these submissions, and with the necessary additional documentation including a map of the lands.

3.05 Mr Dunlop expressed the view that Mr Magnier did not, at any time, believe or suspect that in the course of his lobbying work he, Mr Dunlop, would pay, or was likely to pay, councillors for their support for rezoning. Mr Magnier told the Tribunal that the subject of paying councillors never arose in the course of his discussions with Mr Dunlop.

3.06 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop did not, at any stage, advise Mr Magnier of the fact, or likelihood that councillors would be paid in return for their support for a rezoning motion relating to the St Gerard's lands. The Tribunal was also satisfied that neither Mr Magnier nor, at a later stage, Mr Jim Sherwin (Chairman of the school's Board), or anyone else representing the school's interests, suspected, or were aware, that any such payments were contemplated, or made by Mr Dunlop.

PAYMENTS TO MR DUNLOP BY ST GERARD'S

4.01 Mr Dunlop and Mr Magnier, representing St Gerard's, agreed a fee of IR£2,000 plus VAT for Mr Dunlop's lobbying services, to be paid immediately. A success fee of IR£3,000 plus VAT was to be paid, if and when the rezoning was achieved. A cheque for IR£2,420 was sent to Mr Dunlop by the school on 23 September 1997. This payment was fully accounted for in the school's accounts, and in the accounts of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd. The proposed success fee of IR£3,000 plus VAT was not paid, as the rezoning of the lands was not achieved.

MR DUNLOP'S LOBBYING EFFORTS ON BEHALF OF ST GERARD'S

5.01 On 12 February 1998, a motion signed by Cllrs Donal Lowry and Larry Butler, proposing that the St Gerard's lands be zoned for residential development with a density limitation of two dwellings per hectare (maximum 18) was put before a special meeting of the Council. The manager had again recommended that the lands retain their 1993 zoning because they formed part of a green belt area. The motion was defeated by 12 votes to 11. Accordingly, the lands retained their 1993 green belt zoning in the 1998 Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown Development Plan.

5.02 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he had lobbied the two councillors to support the rezoning, and that he had obtained their signatures on the motion. He maintained that his approach to Cllr Lowry was made at the suggestion of Cllr Liam Cosgrave, a claim denied by Cllr Cosgrave. He maintained that his approach to Cllr Butler was made in the wake of particular comments made to him by Cllr Tony Fox, a claim denied by Cllr Fox. The aforementioned four councillors were the only people whom Mr Dunlop lobbied in connection with St Gerard's.

5.03 Both Cllr Lowry and Mr Dunlop agreed, that Cllr Lowry's signature was obtained on 22 November 1997, when Mr Dunlop called to his home. Cllr Lowry queried whether the meeting was by prior arrangement, as claimed by Mr Dunlop, but the Tribunal was satisfied that it was, given the fact that Cllr Lowry acknowledged that this was the first time he met Mr Dunlop. Cllr Lowry was unable to say if Cllr Cosgrave had spoken to him in relation to the matter. When asked if he had any contact at all with Cllr Cosgrave in relation to this matter he replied; 'I can't recollect, I can't recollect at all. I used to meet Mr Cosgrave at County Council meetings. I don't recall him mentioning this particular proposal to me.'

5.04 Cllr Lowry told the Tribunal that he was happy to sign the motion as he had previously received correspondence from Mr Jim Sherwin, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the school, seeking his support. He had indicated that his support would be forthcoming in order to enable the school to sell the lands, and then invest the proceeds in the school's development.

5.05 Cllr Larry Butler had less recollection as to when or where he signed the rezoning motion than Cllr Lowry had, save that he accepted that he signed it at Mr Dunlop's behest. Mr Butler was unclear as to whether he signed the motion at the behest of Mrs Eileen Durkan (who was associated with the school) or Mr Dunlop. He did not dispute that, at a meeting in the Tara Towers Hotel on the 30 September 1997, with Mr Dunlop (in relation to another matter), the issue of the St Gerard's lands may have been discussed and he did not dispute Mr Dunlop's evidence that following that meeting, he agreed to meet Mr Dunlop again in relation to the St Gerard's lands. Mr Dunlop's diary recorded a meeting with Cllr Butler on the 24 November 1997 at Dún Laoghaire Town Hall, and Cllr Butler accepted that although he could not recollect when the motion was actually signed by him, he would not dispute Mr Dunlop's recollection that he had indeed signed the motion at that time. Cllr Butler told the Tribunal that he was happy to sign the motion as he had been contacted by many of the parents of students at the school, seeking his support for the rezoning, and which he was happy to give, notwithstanding the 'green belt' designation given to the lands in the draft plan. He told the Tribunal he would have told a meeting of his Fianna Fail colleagues that he would be supporting the motion, and that he felt that it was a reasonable proposal for the school in order to provide it with funding to develop the school, and its sports complex.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR LIAM T. COSGRAVE (FG)

6.01 Mr Dunlop testified that having been contacted in mid 1997 by Mr Magnier, and having been provided by him with the submission and Map, which had been furnished to Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown County Council by Ms. Auveen Byrne, Planning Consultant, he discussed the matter with Cllr Cosgrave. Mr Magnier had told him of Cllr Cosgrave's involvement in the earlier attempt in 1991 to have the lands rezoned. While Mr Dunlop could not be categorical about the date when the rezoning issue was first discussed with Cllr Cosgrave, he was satisfied that this had occurred prior to 18 September 1997. Mr Dunlop's diary for 16 September 1997, recorded a meeting with Cllr Cosgrave. Mr Dunlop testified that his primary purpose in meeting with Cllr Cosgrave on 16 September 1997, was unconnected with the St Gerard's rezoning issue, although he believed that on that occasion he may well have spoken to Cllr Cosgrave about the lands. In any event the thrust of his evidence was that he and Cllr Cosgrave discussed St Gerard's rezoning issue subsequent to Mr Magnier contacting him, and before he agreed to act, and certainly prior to 18 September 1997, the date on which he wrote to the Financial Officer of the school recording the terms of his engagement and enclosing his fee invoice.

6.02 Questioned by the Tribunal as to what Cllr Cosgrave had said about the St Gerard's lands in the course of their initial discussion, Mr Dunlop responded:

'well in relation to what Mr. Cosgrave said, my abiding recollection of what he said to me and the action that I took as a result was that he would not sign it: [the motion] that he recommended that I get somebody else to sign it and that he recommended Donal Lowry, whom I did not know was aware was a councillor but I did not know and had never met.'

6.03 Questioned as to what explanation Cllr Cosgrave had given for refusing to sign the motion, Mr Dunlop stated:

'well I don't know the answer to that. What reason he might have had – he did either on that occasion or on another occasion display an attitude to St. Gerard's which was that, which left me with the distinct impression that he had done his bit for St. Gerard's, it wasn't working and that he wasn't prepared to go up front on it again. And I read no more than what I have said into his remarks. He did say that he thought that St Gerard's, because of the nature of the establishment, he thought St. Gerard's had enough money anyway and what did they need their land rezoned for.'

6.04 Mr Dunlop testified that on the occasion, which was prior to 18 September 1997, when he spoke to Cllr Cosgrave about the St Gerard's rezoning, be that 16 September 1997 (when he and Cllr Cosgrave were discussing matters unrelated to St Gerard's), or another date, Cllr Cosgrave did not raise the issue of money in the context of St Gerard's. That conversation, Mr Dunlop maintained, took place on 5 November 1997. Mr Dunlop's diary for that date recorded a meeting with Cllr Cosgrave in the following terms: 'Davenport L Cosg'. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal:

'...there was quite a substantial amount of activities going on in Dun Laoghaire/Rathdown Council at that particular time but yes, as I said in my statement, I met him again on the 5th, and he on that occasion raised the question, he raised two matters in fact 1, he raised the question of money and 2, he mentioned another Councillors name, other than Councillor Donal Lowry. That he would have to talk to another Councillor and he mentioned that other Councillor....the discussion on the 5th was a reprise of what had taken place on the 16th; in other words this was Mr. Cosgrave telling me again, that demurring about signing the motion and the map recommending another Councillor, that I should go to another Councillor for the signature.'

6.05 Mr Dunlop also said that in terms of seeking a signature to the motion, Cllr Cosgrave had recommended Cllr Lowry. Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well we discussed the issue of the lands. He repeated what he had said, that he did not want to sign, would not sign. He recommended that I go to Donal Lowry. I went through the discussion with him - I didn't know Donal Lowry, I had never met Donal Lowry, I cant absolutely definitively say to you that he promised me that he would contact Donal Lowry in advance prior to my contacting him. Donal Lowry never indicated to me when I met him subsequently for the signature that he had actually been contacted by Liam Cosgrave....'

6.06 Another Councillor mentioned by Cllr Cosgrave was Cllr Pat Hand, but Mr Dunlop stressed that Cllr Pat Hand's name had only been raised by Cllr Cosgrave in the context of someone whom he, Cllr Cosgrave, would lobby in support of the rezoning motion.

6.07 In relation to his discussion with Cllr Cosgrave concerning money being paid in return for Cllr Cosgrave's support, Mr Dunlop stated:

'...he [Cllr Cosgrave] raised the question of money. He said he would need to be paid... he raised the question of money being paid. I cannot absolutely say to you definitively he nominated £1,000. But the end result of the conversation between us was that I agreed to pay him £1,000.'

6.08 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that he had received IR£2,000, plus VAT, which had been nominated by him to St Gerard's, and which he had been paid on 30 September 1997, by the time of his claimed conversation with Cllr Cosgrave. He said that he had told Cllr Cosgrave that he had arranged with the school for payment of a very small amount of money, and thus indicated that any payment to Cllr Cosgrave would have to take account of that fact.

6.09 Questioned as to whether he was optimistic about the rezoning prospects for the St Gerard's lands, Mr Dunlop responded:

'I knew from the report of Auveen Byrne, she had outlined fairly serious drawbacks in relation to the possibilities, while not definitively talking about that, she was raising technical issues in her report in relation to this with Marcus Magnier and with the Board of St Gerard's. That never really inhibited either me or councillors before in either supporting or voting for particular motions, notwithstanding the fact that the manager or the officials might recommend against it, which was almost as a given.'

6.10 He believed that the motion had a '50:50 chance', which he gleaned from his meeting with Cllr Cosgrave, who did not appear optimistic. His lack of optimism relating solely to the likely attitude to the proposal by his own Party colleagues.

6.11 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that, consequent on the agreement which he and Cllr Cosgrave had entered into on 5 November 1997, he duly paid Cllr Cosgrave the agreed IR£1,000. This payment, Mr Dunlop stated, was made on the 3 March 1998 in cash, at the Davenport Hotel, in an envelope. Mr Dunlop's diary recorded a meeting with Cllr Cosgrave on that date, and at that location. The entry read '10.45 LC @ Davenport'. Cllr Cosgrave had by then voted in favour of the St Gerard's rezoning motion, at the County Council meeting of the 12 February 1998.

6.12 Outlining what had occurred at the Davenport meeting, Mr Dunlop stated:
‘The meeting took place in the Davenport Hotel. We discussed what had occurred in relation to St. Gerard’s. I believed the meeting was organised by me.... And that I asked Liam Cosgrave for the list of people who had voted for, against or otherwise and he provided it to me on that day on the same day, I provided him with the £1,000 that I had promised him.’

6.13 Mr Dunlop also stated that the information (written and verbal) which Cllr Cosgrave provided him with on 3 March 1998, enabled him prepare a typed list, in his own office, which he duly furnished to Mr Magnier on 3 March 1998.

CLLR COSGRAVE’S RESPONSE TO MR DUNLOP’S ALLEGATION THAT HE PAID HIM IR£1,000

6.14 In the course of his testimony, Cllr Cosgrave vehemently denied Mr Dunlop’s allegation that he had sought, or had been paid IR£1,000, or any sum, in return for his support for the St Gerard’s rezoning motion in February 1998. He denied that Mr Dunlop had ever sought his signature on the motion, or that he had suggested that a colleague, Cllr Lowry, be approached with a request to sign the motion. In effect, there was a complete conflict between Cllr Cosgrave and Mr Dunlop on almost every aspect of Mr Dunlop’s evidence in relation to the St Gerard’s rezoning project.

6.15 Cllr Cosgrave conceded that he and Mr Dunlop met on 16 September 1997, as is indicated by the entry in Mr Dunlop’s diary, but he denied any discussion about the St Gerard’s lands on that occasion.

6.16 In the course of his evidence, Cllr Cosgrave was questioned as to how he could be so certain that there had been no discussion regarding the rezoning of the St Gerard’s lands, in the light of what had been put by his own Counsel to Mr Dunlop in another Module, in the context of Cllr Cosgrave and Mr Dunlop’s meeting on 16 September 1997, namely, that he, Cllr Cosgrave, had no memory of what had transpired at that meeting. Cllr Cosgrave said that he was as certain as he could be.

6.17 In relation to the alleged meeting on 5 November 1997, and the entry in Mr Dunlop’s diary, Cllr Cosgrave told the Tribunal that he had no recollection of meeting Mr Dunlop. He maintained that he was in the Seanad on that day, and that it was unlikely that he would have arranged a meeting with Mr Dunlop for 2:15pm, as the Seanad sat at 2:30pm. Cllr Cosgrave however did not deny that such a meeting had taken place. However, he was nonetheless adamant that if a meeting had occurred, the St Gerard’s lands were not discussed, as he did not know of Mr Dunlop's involvement with them, nor had he been requested to sign a motion on that date, or on any other occasion. Cllr Cosgrave maintained that had he been asked to do so, he probably would have signed the motion, given his support for the rezoning motion submitted in 1992. In the course of his testimony however, Cllr Cosgrave conceded that it was a 'possibility' that he had met with Mr Dunlop on the 5 November 1997, and that it was a 'possibility' that it had been the St Gerard's issue which had brought himself and Mr Dunlop together on that date. Notwithstanding this concession, Cllr Cosgrave continued to maintain that he had not been requested to sign a motion for the lands. Cllr Cosgrave acknowledged that a request by Mr Dunlop that he sign a motion was a matter which would have required a face to face meeting between them.

6.18 In his response to Mr Dunlop's evidence that he had met with him on 3 March 1998, Cllr Cosgrave did not dispute that such a meeting could have taken place, stating '...I can't say it definitely took place, can't say it definitely didn't take place.' He acknowledged that any such meeting was likely to have been in connection with the Development Plan review, then current in Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown Council, and he acknowledged that the vote on the St Gerard's lands motion had taken place by then. Cllr Cosgrave acknowledged that it was 'possible' that he had provided information to Mr Dunlop as to the way his fellow councillors had voted on 12 February 1998, but he did not 'necessarily' agree that Mr Dunlop's contact with him on 3 March 1998, with regard to the St Gerard's lands motion had taken place against a backdrop of previous dealings between them in relation to the matter.

6.19 On Day 438, the following exchange took place between Counsel for the Tribunal and Cllr Cosgrave:

'Q. But what is a fact Mr. Cosgrave, is when Mr. Dunlop came to seek information in March of 1998 about these lands, it was to you that he turned, isn't that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. And I am suggesting to you that it is unlikely that you would be the councillor he would go to, if you and he did not have a history in connection with these lands?

A. I reject that.

Q. Right. I am suggesting to you that he could equally have gone to Councillor Coffey with whom he was friendly or he could equally have gone to Councillor Fox or Councillor Lydon and sought the same information from them?

A. He could have gone to most councillors probably, if they knew him, would probably go off and get the – it's not, you know, rocket science, it wasn't a state secret, the information he was looking for.

Q. Exactly. Mr. Cosgrave, but he did not do any of those things, on your admission he went to you, isn't that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And you gave him the information?

A. That's correct.

Q. And I suggest that it is as a matter of logic that he would have gone to a person with whom he had a history in connection with dealing with these lands, do you agree with that?

A. I don't agree with the inference you are putting on it.

Q. All right. And I also want to put it to you Mr. Cosgrave that it would be unlikely for Mr. Dunlop not to have solicited your support for the St. Gerard's Bray lands, that it was part and parcel of what he did, was to look for support for his projects?

A. Well, I mean, I have read the evidence so far he, there was 28 councillors there, if you take me off the list it appears he only canvassed three people, so you begin to wonder what he actually did in relation to this project.

Q. If you just listen to the question Mr. Cosgrave and perhaps you just answer the question that I ask you, which is, in the light of your evidence, as to how Mr. Dunlop conducted his business with you, which was primarily concerned with the development plan and obtaining your support, I am saying that in the light of your evidence, that it is unlikely that Mr. Dunlop would not have sought your support in connection with the St. Gerard's Bray lands, unlikely?

A. It's possibly unlikely, but it's also, it's not – it's more than you, be unlikely when you see the evidence in relation to the 24 or 26 councillors that he didn't contact.

Q. That he didn't speak with?

A. Didn't speak with.

Q. Yes although –

A. That's not plausible.

Q. You don't accept that?

A. Well what I don't accept is that – I mean, if you want to ask I don't accept that a man who gets 2,000 in fees gives it all away and is working as a loss leader...'

THE INVOLVEMENT OF CLLR TONY FOX (FF)

7.01 Mr Dunlop alleged that he paid Cllr Tony Fox IR£1,000 in cash in return for his support for the February 1998 motion, and he claimed that he spoke to Cllr Fox concerning the St Gerard's lands in or around the month of September 1997. On Day 433, Mr Dunlop described his meeting with Cllr Fox in the following terms:

'Well, I spoke with Mr. Fox in relation to St. Gerard's. He said he would not sign the motion – sign a motion in relation to these lands, that he would support it. He raised the question of money, he recommended that I get Councillor Larry Butler to sign it, with words to the effect that Larry was signing nothing and he had signed quite a lot and the direct implication to me being that Councillor Larry Butler was manifestly in support for everything but would sign nothing and that Tony Fox wanted a situation where Larry was asked directly to sign something. The question of money was raised by Councillor Fox. He said he would have to talk to some of his colleagues, which is something that Councillor Fox had said to me on previous occasions. I took this to mean simpliciter that he would have to talk to his colleagues in relation to either ascertaining whether they were going to support this or that he could get them to support it. I make no imputation whatsoever other than that. It was agreed between us that I would pay him 1000 pounds.

I told him that this was a very small operation in the context of the fee from the School. I did not tell him the amount. And he agreed that he would support it. I, subsequently, having dealt with him on that issue, I subsequently took his advice and went and spoke to Councillor Butler.'

7.02 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that his meeting with Cllr Butler took place on 30 September 1997, and that they discussed the signing of the motion. Cllr Butler did not sign the motion on that date, but did so on 24 November 1997. Because Mr Dunlop was certain as to the dates he met with Cllr Butler, he was satisfied that the meeting with Cllr Fox occurred prior to 30 September 1997.

7.03 Mr Dunlop's diary for September 1997 indicated contact with Cllr Fox on 23 September 1997, in the form of a telephone call, and a meeting at Mount Argus in Dublin. The diary recorded the following for 23 September 1997, 'Call Tony Fox' and '11.45 Tony Fox at Mount Argus'. Mr Dunlop believed that his meeting with Cllr Fox took place at a public house in the vicinity of Mount Argus. Mr Dunlop stated that it was at this meeting that he and Cllr Fox discussed the St Gerard's lands, and other matters, and that the payment of IR£1,000 was requested by Cllr Fox, and agreed.

7.04 Mr Dunlop alleged that he had paid Cllr Fox IR£1,000, in cash, at the Davenport Hotel, two or three weeks after the vote on 12 February 1998. Cllr Fox had voted in favour of the motion.

7.05 There was no reference to Cllr Fox in Mr Dunlop's diary for the period January to June 1998, save for one entry on 16 January 1998, which, Mr Dunlop stated, related to a meeting he had with Cllr Fox unconnected to the St Gerard's lands.

CLLR FOX'S EVIDENCE

7.06 Cllr Fox's evidence to the Tribunal was in stark contrast with that of Mr Dunlop on every issue relating to the St Gerard's School lands. Cllr Fox vehemently denied that he ever discussed the rezoning of the lands with Mr Dunlop, or that he ever met him at Mount Argus. He denied ever receiving money from Mr Dunlop for any purpose, and specifically denied receiving money relating to the St Gerard's School lands, stating; 'I categorically refute that. I never asked or received any sum of money in relation to that lands or any other lands.'

7.07 Cllr Fox acknowledged that, the effect of his denial of meeting Mr Dunlop on 23 September 1997 at Mount Argus, was to suggest that Mr Dunlop had falsely recorded the relevant information in his diary. Cllr Fox however said that he did not have a 'clue' as to why Mr Dunlop might have falsified his diary in this manner. It was put to Cllr Fox that had he indeed falsified his diary, he ran the risk of Cllr Fox being in a position to refute the entry with a positive and provable assertion that he had been in a specific place, other than Mount Argus, on the date in question, thus undermining the diary information.

7.08 Cllr Fox accepted that he and Mr Dunlop met at the Davenport Hotel between 23 and 28 October 1997, but maintained that the only subject discussed was the signing of motions relating to rezoning issues unconnected to the St Gerard's lands. He agreed that he signed such motions at Mr Dunlop's behest. Cllr Fox maintained that these other motions were the only matters which he and Mr Dunlop discussed in the course of the making of the 1998 Dun Laoghaire/Rathdown Development Plan. He denied that he had any other meeting with Mr Dunlop in late 1997. Cllr Fox told the Tribunal that in September 1997, he was out of work, and therefore would not have been meeting Mr Dunlop at a location close to his workplace in Terenure. He acknowledged however, while he denied certain meetings with him, claimed by Mr Dunlop, that in previous years he had met Mr Dunlop at named locations specified in Mr Dunlop's diary.

7.09 Cllr Fox was adamant that he had not arranged to meet Mr Dunlop in a public house at Mount Argus on 23 September 1997. He stated that he knew only the Church in that area where he had attended funerals from time to time, and that Mount Argus was not a place where he would normally arrange to meet someone. He denied that, at that or any other meeting, he declined to sign a motion relating to the St Gerard's lands, or that he had suggested that Mr Dunlop should approach Cllr Larry Butler. Cllr Fox believed that he never attended any public house or hotel in the Mount Argus area, and maintained that in any event, had he arranged to meet with Mr Dunlop in a public house in that general area, he would have nominated Comans Public House in Rathgar for that purpose.

7.10 Together with all his Fianna Fáil colleagues who were present at the County Council meeting, and as they had previously done in 1992, Cllr Fox voted in favour of the rezoning of the St Gerard's lands on 12 February 1998. Cllr Fox told the Tribunal that he had been lobbied with correspondence from St Gerard's prior to the vote, urging him to support the proposal. He was generally 'pro development.'

THE SIMILARITIES OF MR DUNLOP'S EVIDENCE AS TO THE APPROACH TAKEN BY CLLRS COSGRAVE AND FOX IN RESPONSE TO HIS REQUEST FOR THEIR SIGNATURES ON A MOTION

7.11 On Day 433, the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Dunlop:

'Q. Now, do you find it unusual, Mr. Dunlop, that both Councillor Fox and Councillor

A. Yes is the simple answer.

Q. I want to draw to your attention, Mr. Dunlop, a number of similarities –

A. Yes.

Q. – about what you say occurred at the meeting with Councillor Cosgrave on the 5th November 1997 and the meeting that you say occurred with Councillor Fox on the 23rd September 1997. In both cases, these councillors, that is Councillors Fox and Cosgrave, refuse to sign the motion.

A. Correct.

Q. In both cases, these councillors recommended that you obtain the services of a different named councillor?

A. Correct.

Q. In the case of Councillor Cosgrave, that was Councillor Donal Lowry and in the case of Councillor Fox, that was Councillor Larry Butler?

A. Yes.

- Q. To both councillors, you told them, while not naming the specific amount, that the money you were getting was very small?*
- A. Yes.*
- Q. Both councillors ultimately agreed to accept 1,000 pounds each for their support?*
- A. Yes.*
- Q. That took care of your entire fee from St. Gerard's Bray?*
- A. Yes.*
- Q. Leaving you with a VAT liability and an income tax liability?*
- A. Correct.*
- Q. As of the date that you agreed to pay it?*
- A. Yes.*
- Q. In all of your experience, Mr. Dunlop, in dealing with councillors, had such a parallel set of circumstances occurred?*
- A. No is the answer.*
- Q. Yes.*
- A. The only parallel would be in the context of a development that might not have been profitable.*
- Q. Yes. Have you any reason to believe that Councillor Fox and Councillor Cosgrave were aware of your separate approaches to them?*
- A. I have no reason to believe.*
- Q. Did you tell Councillor Fox that you had discussed this matter with Councillor Cosgrave?*
- A. No, I don't believe I did.*
- Q. Did you tell Councillor Cosgrave that you had discussed it with Councillor Fox?*
- A. No, I don't believe I did.*
- Q. So, to the best of your information, neither Councillor Fox didn't know what you had discussed with Councillor Cosgrave and Councillor Cosgrave didn't know what you had discussed with Councillor Fox?*
- A. Correct.*
- Q. Yet both of them at their respective meetings embark on effectively almost parallel, according to you, approaches in relation to this motion?*
- A. Yes.*
- Q. Can you offer any explanation, Mr. Dunlop, as to how that might have occurred?*
- A. No, other than – no specific explanation, other than to say in each individual instance, the circumstances, as far as Liam Cosgrave were concerned, he had actually signed a motion previously and as I outlined to you this morning, the impression that he gave was that he had done his duty, as it were, in the context of St. Gerard's and that he was reluctant to do so again but that Councillor Donal Lowry, I should* approach Councillor Donal Lowry. In the case of Councillor Fox, while it is true to say in retrospect, I mean I am not saying I was aware of this at the time or took it into consideration, that Tony Fox had signed no such motion previously, albeit we now know he did support it in 1991 but that the circumstances were a little more acrimonious in the context of Tony Fox saying he was the only one signing motions and Larry Butler wasn't signing anything in his estimation. I didn't know whether that was true or not but he did recommend me to go to Larry Butler, which I did.

Q But the unusual features of these two separate meetings you say you had with councillors is that they both contain the same elements, neither of which is peculiar to one meeting; in other words you have the same sequence of events contended for in both meetings by you?

A. Yes.

Q. Yet you have no reason to suggest that either Councillor Cosgrave or Councillor Fox discussed, as far as you are aware, either of their respective meetings with you?

A. None whatever.

Q. Yet they both, according to you, take a similar approach to this venture?

A. Similar as you outlined it.

Q. And you agree, notwithstanding the fact that you have only got 2,000 pounds plus VAT and that your expectation of getting your success fee is not great?

A. Yes.

Q. Isn't that correct?

A. That is correct, yes.'

7.12 Questioned as to why he had agreed to pay two Councillors who informed him that they would themselves not sign the motion to rezone the St Gerard's lands, Mr Dunlop stated:

'Well, in the context of support, both of them had previously been very supportive and had been on-side in the context of support and garnering support in the context of their own parties and if they weren't, if neither of them were on board, as it were, there was very little hope at all that the matter would progress and I had already at that stage been commissioned by St. Gerard's and as I said to you prior to lunch, I believe that St. Gerard's deserved the same attention, notwithstanding the size of the fee, notwithstanding the fact that it was a professional arrangement, duly recorded in each of our books, that they deserve the same effort.'

7.13 Mr Dunlop agreed that his assessment of the situation was that without the support of Cllrs Cosgrave and Fox the proposed motion to rezone the lands had little prospect of success. In the course of his cross-examination by Counsel for Cllr Cosgrave, Mr Dunlop refuted the contention that the similarities in his evidence concerning the two Councillors, as set out above, suggested that his account was an invention. The Tribunal, however, accepted that Mr Dunlop's evidence in this respect had not been invented.

MR DUNLOP'S CLAIM THAT HIS PAYMENTS TO CLLRS COSGRAVE AND FOX WERE HIS LAST CORRUPT PAYMENTS

8.01 In the course of his testimony on Day 433, Mr Dunlop maintained that the payments he made to Cllrs Fox and Cosgrave in the aftermath of the vote on the St Gerard's lands were the last 'corrupt' payments he made 'ever', stating 'there have been no others; that is not to say that there has not been a request for others'. The thrust of Mr Dunlop's evidence was that the payments to Cllrs Cosgrave and Fox in relation to the St Gerard's lands stood out in his mind, because they had been the last payments he made '...to any politician in the context of any matter relating to planning or development or zoning in either Dublin County Council or Dun Laoghaire/Rathdown County Council.'

8.02 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that his meetings with Cllrs Cosgrave and Fox, in the final quarter of 1997, took place against the backdrop of the establishment of the Tribunal. On Day 433, Mr Dunlop was questioned as follows:-

'Q. That was something else, Mr. Dunlop, I wanted to take you back to deal with very briefly at your meetings in October and November of 1997 and one other fact that occurred around that time that might possibly, I put it no higher than that, have had a bearing upon the attitude of Councillors Fox and Councillor Cosgrave is that this Tribunal was established on the 7th November 1997.

A. Yes.

Q. And its remit from the start was planning corruption, isn't that right?

A. That's correct, yes.

Q. Do you remember ever discussing at that time in November 1997 or December 1997, considering the fact that you were meeting both Councillor Cosgrave and Councillor Fox, this Tribunal and its remit?

A. Specifically in relation to the specific question that you have just asked me, no, but I have already given evidence to the fact that I did discuss this Tribunal with quite a range of people, a list of whom I provided to the Tribunal at its request, both in relation to the establishment of the Tribunal in the first instance and subsequently to the extension of the remit of the Tribunal. And I qualify that in my evidence by saying that the attitude of everybody, and by everybody I include myself, so I'm not allocating responsibility in any specific regard, I am saying everybody regarded the establishment of the Tribunal as something that would be over and done with, done and dusted in a very short time because nobody would be able to prove anything because nobody would say anything.

Q. But certainly Mr. Dunlop, it is a fact that in October of 1997, when you were meeting with Councillor Cosgrave and Councillor Fox and indeed in late September 1997 when you were meeting with, I think, Councillor Fox, the main political story at that time and the main Dail debate in early October 1997 was the establishment of this Tribunal?

A. Correct.

Q. And this occurred at about the time that you were seeking to get signatures on a motion in connection with the rezoning of the lands in St. Gerard's, isn't that right?

A. Yes.'

THE FUNDS AVAILABLE TO MR DUNLOP IN THE PERIOD JANUARY TO MARCH 1998

8.03 On 29 January 1998, Mr Dunlop negotiated a cheque for IR£10,000, received by him in connection with another development, to the account of Shefran Ltd at AIB and retained IR£3,000 in cash. This was in accordance with Mr Dunlop's normal practice that when making lodgements, he retained portion of the funds in cash. On 10 February 1998, he withdrew IR£1,500 cash from the same AIB account. On 27 February 1998, he withdrew IR£3,000 from the account of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, IR£2,500 of which was lodged to a joint account of Mr Dunlop and his wife, and he retained the balance in cash.

8.04 In early February 1998, IR£300 cash was lodged to an account held in the name of Mr Dunlop and his wife and on 3 March 1998, there was a further lodgement of IR£300 to the same account. A further IR£300 was lodged to that account on 5 March 1998. Mr Dunlop was unable to reconcile any of these lodgements to withdrawals from other accounts, and thus acknowledged that the source of the monies remained unaccounted for. He testified that it was his normal practice to make lodgements from larger cash sums available to him at the time. The Tribunal was satisfied that at the times when Mr Dunlop claimed to have paid IR£1,000 each to Cllrs Cosgrave and Fox, namely within a couple of weeks of the St Gerard's vote in the case of Cllr Fox, and on 3 March 1998 in the case of Cllr Cosgrave, Mr Dunlop had sufficient cash resources available to him.

THE DISCREPANCIES CONTAINED IN MR DUNLOP'S STATEMENTS OF 13 SEPTEMBER 2001 AND 16 APRIL 2003.

9.01 In his first written statement to the Tribunal in October 2000, Mr Dunlop asserted that he had paid Cllrs Cosgrave and Fox a sum of IR£1,000 each for their support for the St Gerard's rezoning proposal. No details as to when and where such payments had been requested and/or paid were provided in this statement. In his 2001 statement, furnished by way of letter from Mr Dunlop's solicitors in response to queries raised by the Tribunal, it was asserted that, to the best of Mr Dunlop's recollection and belief, he made the payments to the two individuals at, or in the environs of, the Davenport Hotel prior to the rezoning motion. In a more detailed statement furnished and signed by him on 16 April 2003, he maintained that the payments he made to both councillors were made after the vote, the latter being also the position adopted by him, in his oral testimony to the Tribunal.

9.02 Mr Dunlop accounted for this inconsistency by stating that, in 2001, when his solicitors were responding to the Tribunal, the letter relating to the St Gerard's lands was one of a series of letters concerning a number of matters with which the Tribunal was concerned, and that the inclusion of the assertion that monies were paid prior to the St Gerard's vote in error.

9.03 While there were undoubtedly inconsistencies as between Mr Dunlop's statements and his sworn testimony to the Tribunal in relation to his allegation of having paid money to the two councillors, the Tribunal was satisfied that such inconsistencies were not sufficient to, of themselves, undermine Mr Dunlop's credibility in relation to his evidence concerning Cllrs Cosgrave and Fox.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS WITH REGARD TO MR DUNLOP'S ALLEGATION THAT HE PAID COUNCILLORS LIAM T. COSGRAVE AND FOX IR£1,000 EACH IN CONNECTION WITH THE ST GERARD'S LANDS.

CLLR COSGRAVE

10.01 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave met and discussed the rezoning of the St Gerard's lands and that they did so, in all probability, prior to 18 September 1997, and between then and February 1998 .

10.02 Insofar as Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave had met on 16 September 1997, albeit in relation to a matter unconnected with the St Gerard's lands, it was unlikely, in the Tribunal's view, that Mr Dunlop would have let that opportunity pass without referring to the St Gerard's lands. Thus, the Tribunal rejected Cllr Cosgrave's assertion that there had been no discussion as between himself and Mr Dunlop regarding the St Gerard's rezoning proposal, on that date.

10.03 As set out above, Cllr Cosgrave had no recollection of meeting Mr Dunlop in the Davenport Hotel on 5 November 1997, notwithstanding an entry in Mr Dunlop's diary to that effect. Insofar as Mr Dunlop claimed to have repeated his request to Cllr Cosgrave to sign the rezoning motion for St Gerard's, Cllr Cosgrave denied that he had been so requested and denied that he had recommended that Mr Dunlop approach Cllr Lowry.

10.04 The Tribunal was however satisfied that a meeting took place between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave on 5 November 1997. Such a meeting was listed in Mr Dunlop's diary, and while that fact of itself cannot be the determining factor, the Tribunal also noted that Cllr Cosgrave himself acknowledged to other meetings having taken place between himself and Mr Dunlop in the final quarter of 1997, and which were duly noted in Mr Dunlop's diary². The Tribunal also rejected Cllr Cosgrave's contention that the meeting of 5 November 1997, was unlikely to have taken place, because he was listed as being in attendance in the Seanad on that same date, having regard to the relative proximity of the Davenport Hotel to Leinster House.

10.05 The Tribunal was satisfied that the St Gerard's rezoning motion was likely to have been, inter alia, a topic of discussion between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave on 5 November 1997.

10.06 It was common case that in the context of the making of the Dún Laoghaire/Rathdown Development Plan 1997, Mr Dunlop had three projects on his books. By the end of October 1997 however, there remained just one matter on Mr Dunlop's books which required a signature or signatures to a rezoning motion. That matter was St Gerard's. For that reason, the Tribunal was satisfied that the St Gerard's lands were discussed with Cllr Cosgrave on 5 November 1997, and moreover, the Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that he requested Cllr Cosgrave to sign the necessary motion. The Tribunal accepted that Mr Dunlop approached Cllr Cosgrave in the knowledge that he had previously signed the motion to rezone the lands in 1992. Moreover, Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave had ongoing dealings in the final quarter of 1997 in relation to other lands, in respect of which Mr Dunlop was retained as a lobbyist. It was illogical therefore, that Mr Dunlop would not have approached Cllr Cosgrave in relation to St Gerard's.

² These meetings were the subject of inquiry in another module.

10.07 In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Cllr Donal Lowry agreed with Mr Dunlop that 22 November 1997, the day he signed the St Gerard's motion, was the first occasion on which he had ever met Mr Dunlop. While Cllr Lowry could not recollect if he had any contact with Cllr Cosgrave in relation to the St Gerard's lands, his evidence was that, it was possible that he did.

10.08 Cllr Cosgrave denied that he recommended Cllr Lowry as a possible signatory to the St Gerard's motion, to Mr Dunlop. With regard to the conflict of evidence between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave on this issue, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop had been pointed in the direction of Cllr Lowry, by Cllr Cosgrave. The Tribunal considered it unlikely that Mr Dunlop would have approached a Fine Gael Councillor, with whom he had no previous relationship, with a request to sign a motion for the St Gerard's lands at a time when he already had an ongoing relationship with another Fine Gael Councillor, namely Cllr Cosgrave, unless, for some reason, Cllr Cosgrave was unable or unwilling to sign the motion. The Tribunal was satisfied that, theretofore, he, Councillor Lowry had no previous relationship with Mr Dunlop. In those circumstances, the Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Cosgrave had recommended that Mr Dunlop approach Cllr Lowry.

10.09 Mr Dunlop alleged that in return for Cllr Cosgrave's support, a payment of IR£1,000 was agreed between them on 5 November 1997, and duly paid on 3 March 1998. Cllr Cosgrave categorically denied ever entering into such an arrangement, and denied that he was paid any such sum. Save for Mr Dunlop's testimony, and save for the fact that a meeting took place between the two men on 5 November 1997, there was an absence of documentary evidence of any such financial arrangement. That Cllr Cosgrave supported the rezoning motion could not, of itself, be the sole determinant in assessing whether or not there was a financial arrangement arrived at between himself and Mr Dunlop. Cllr Cosgrave supported and indeed signed the motion to rezone the lands in 1992 and it was therefore expected, even if he decided not to sign a motion in 1997, that he would have lent his support to the proposal to rezone the lands on the 12 February 1998, (even in the face of opposition from the County Manager).

10.10 The Tribunal considered other factors (in addition to Mr Dunlop's and Cllr Cosgrave's oral evidence) in order to ascertain whether or not Mr Dunlop was credible in his claim to have agreed, and paid, IR£1,000 to Cllr Cosgrave in connection with the rezoning of the St Gerard's lands.

10.11 One such factor was the fact that a meeting with Cllr Cosgrave was noted in Mr Dunlop's diary for the 3 March 1998.

10.12 It was common case that Mr Dunlop faxed information provided by Cllr Cosgrave, to Mr Magnier on 3 March 1998, the date on which Mr Dunlop claimed that he had received that information from Cllr Cosgrave, and claimed to have paid him IR£1,000 in cash. On the 16, 18 and 25 September 1997, Cllr Cosgrave faxed Mr Dunlop information concerning the closing date by which motions had to be lodged within Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown Council.

10.13 It was clear to the Tribunal therefore, that a physical meeting as between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave on 3 March 1998, was unnecessary, if its only purpose was to hand over County Council information.

TRANSACTIONS EVIDENT FROM CLLR COSGRAVE'S ACCOUNTS IN THE PERIOD MARCH TO APRIL 1998

10.14 In the period March to April 1998, five cash lodgements, all in round figure sums, were made to accounts held by Cllr Cosgrave with AIB and with An Post. These were, IR£100 to an AIB account on 4 March 1998, IR£80 to An Post on 12 March 1998, IR£500 to An Post on 14 March 1998, IR£500 to An Post on 15 April 1998, and a further IR£500 to An Post on 27 April 1998.

10.15 At the time of making such lodgements, Cllr Cosgrave told the Tribunal that his income came from his Oireachtas salary, drawings from his practice as a solicitor, expenses from Dún Laoghaire/Rathdown Council, and from the Seanad. An analysis of funds available to Cllr Cosgrave in the period February to April 1998, suggested that he had approximately IR£6,500. Cllr Cosgrave agreed that this sum represented an accumulation of staggered payments made to him in that time period by way of income and/or expenses. Cllr Cosgrave's Oireachtas salary³ was paid directly into his AIB account. He agreed in evidence that there were no withdrawals made by him from his AIB account, such as might account for the five An Post cash lodgements made on the dates referred to above.

10.16 An analysis of Cllr Cosgrave's Council expenses between 21 January and 8 April 1998, revealed that he received a sum in total of IR£667.55, broken down as follows: IR£134.97, IR£194.44, IR£194.44 and IR£278.68. Cllr Cosgrave acknowledged that he cashed these monthly cheques on their receipt. He said that, by and large, he met his day to day living expenses for himself and his family from his cashed expenses cheques, and his solicitor's practice drawings. When it was pointed out to him that none of the individual Council expenses cheques could have individually funded a lodgement of IR£500 to his

³ Approximately IR£1,800 net per month

An Post account on 14 March 1998, Cllr Cosgrave suggested that the IR£500 lodgement was an accumulation of encashed cheques by him.

10.17 With regard to the lodgement of IR£500 on 14 March 1998, Cllr Cosgrave said that he had received a County Council expenses cheque for the month of March of IR£194.44 on 4 March 1998, and that on the same date he was in receipt of an expenses cheque from the Oireachtas [Seanad] for IR£661.25. By 4 March 1998, he was also in receipt of IR£300 as drawings from his solicitor's practice. Thus in March 1998, Cllr Cosgrave was in receipt of approximately IR£1100 in total from the aforementioned sources. Cllr Cosgrave was asked to explain how, in those circumstances, he could have lodged IR£500 in cash from that sum on 14 March 1998 (a lodgement which comprised almost 50% of his available funds). Cllr Cosgrave said that he believed that the 14 March 1998 lodgement came from that source, in addition to unspent funds available to him from cheques cashed in previous months.

10.18 The examination carried out by the Tribunal, in relation to Cllr Cosgrave's finances, in the period February to April 1998, suggested that it was doubtful that Cllr Cosgrave, as he claimed, would have been in a position, based on his acknowledged sources of income, to fund cash lodgements, totalling IR£1,680, over a seven week period.

10.19 The Tribunal was cognisant of the close relationship which Mr Dunlop had with Cllr Cosgrave in 1998, a relationship which had developed over a number of years, largely in the context of the making of the 1993 Development Plan. Having regard to the fact that the Tribunal established, to its satisfaction, that during the course of the making of that plan money was paid by Mr Dunlop to Cllr Cosgrave in return for his support for rezoning issues, in all those circumstances, it was not persuaded to reject Mr Dunlop's evidence that he paid £1,000 to Cllr Cosgrave in relation to the rezoning of the St Gerard's lands. The Tribunal was therefore satisfied that Cllr Cosgrave solicited payment from Mr Dunlop in return for his support for the rezoning of the St Gerard's lands, and was paid IR£1,000 by Mr Dunlop on that basis. The said payment was corrupt. The Tribunal was satisfied that the primary purpose for their meeting on 3 March 1998, was to facilitate the payment of IR£1,000 cash to Cllr Cosgrave.

CLLR FOX

10.20 The Tribunal was satisfied that there was contact and discussion between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Fox in late 1997 relating to, inter alia, the seeking of Cllr Fox's support for the St Gerard's rezoning project. The Tribunal rejected Cllr Fox's assertion that no such contact or discussion took place. Cllr Fox was a senior member of the Fianna Fáil Party in Dún Laoghaire/Rathdown Council, and moreover, between 1996 and July 1997, was the Chairman of the Council. The evidence provided to the Tribunal in the course of a number of Modules, and indeed findings made by the Tribunal in those Modules, established that Mr Dunlop and Cllr Fox had dealings during the course of the making of the 1993 Development Plan in connection with a number of rezoning issues.

10.21 The Tribunal was satisfied that a meeting between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Fox took place on 23 September, in the vicinity of Mount Argus, as testified to by Mr Dunlop. The Tribunal was assisted in arriving at this conclusion because of the existence of the entry in Mr Dunlop's diary for the date in question, which the Tribunal was satisfied was authentic.

10.22 The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Fox was paid IR£1,000 for his support for the St Gerard's School lands rezoning motion on 12 February 1998, and that this sum was requested by him, and was paid on a date after 12 February 1998, in or close to the Davenport Hotel. This payment was a corrupt payment. A factor which led to the Tribunal's conclusions in this regard was the following:

10.23 In the course of this Module, the Tribunal heard evidence from Cllr Fox of 'an accidental' or 'chance' meeting between himself and Mr Dunlop in Dawson Street, Dublin, after the establishment of this Tribunal, sometime between January and June 1999, and shortly after Cllr Fox had been in contact with Tribunal Counsel in the course of its private inquiries. He had a meeting with Tribunal Counsel on 7 December 1998, and said that he received a telephone call some short time later from that Counsel. It was shortly after the telephone call when he had his chance meeting with Mr Dunlop. He appeared to settle on the meeting having occurred sometime between January and June 1999. Cllr Fox testified that in the course of his encounter with Mr Dunlop on that occasion, he asked Mr Dunlop to confirm that he, Cllr Fox, had never received any political contributions from him.

10.24 Mr Dunlop's account of this meeting, in effect, was that he and Cllr Fox had agreed that monies paid by Mr Dunlop to Cllr Fox over the years would be designated by each of them as political donations.

10.25 Mr Dunlop gave evidence that following the establishment of the Tribunal, in the course of face to face meetings and during telephone conversations between Cllr Fox and himself, it was mutually agreed that monies paid to Cllr Fox by Mr Dunlop would be classified as political donations, as there was no point in maintaining that Cllr Fox had not received any money from him. In the course of his testimony, Cllr Fox denied Mr Dunlop's evidence that they had made any such agreement. On Day 435, Cllr Fox advised the Tribunal that he had met Mr Dunlop 'by chance' around St Stephen's Green/Dawson Street, and that in the course of a discussion between them reference had been made to the Tribunal. Cllr Fox stated:

'...We discussed it walking down the street and the Tribunal came up and I said in relation to it and I just took the opportunity that had arisen in relation to, I confirmed to him that I had not received any contributions that is what happened...'

10.26 Cllr Fox maintained that he was merely double-checking with Mr Dunlop that he had not received any contributions from him, because of an inquiry which had been made of him by telephone by Tribunal Counsel (following his private interview with the Tribunal), as to whether he had received any money from Mr Dunlop. Cllr Fox told the Tribunal:-

'Yeah and I was confirming, double checking in relation to that and just in case there was the slightest possibility that if some of my workers or whatever during the campaign, I was working during the campaign, I wasn't out much in the daytime, very little, and just in case that may be there could have been the slightest possibility of some contribution given to one of my workers that might and that would have been used in relation to refreshments or lunch, sandwiches or whatever, that end of it. So, I don't know. And that is the fact in relation to it. So Mr. Dunlop said he'd check and what do you call it, he came back and rang me one Sunday morning in relation to it and he confirmed that what I believed to be true and that is exactly, Miss Dillon, what happened.'

10.27 Given the vehemence with which Cllr Fox asserted, in a number of Modules, including this Module, that he had never sought, or received, money from Mr Dunlop for any reason, it appeared strange that Cllr Fox should have found it necessary to have sought such confirmation from Mr Dunlop. When, in the course of his evidence, he was pressed as to why he would ask such a question of Mr Dunlop, (if he had never received anything from Mr Dunlop), Cllr Fox told the Tribunal that he wished to confirm what he believed to have been in fact the case, and to check that none of his election workers had received a contribution from Mr Dunlop on his behalf, but without his knowledge.

10.28 The Tribunal found that Cllr Fox's explanation for his approach to Mr Dunlop to lack credibility. In the circumstances, the Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Fox had a purpose, other than his claimed purpose, for the inquiry he made of Mr Dunlop in the immediate aftermath of the establishment of the Tribunal. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Fox's approach to Mr Dunlop was made in circumstances where Cllr Fox knew that he had received money from Mr Dunlop, and was anxious to ascertain the extent of disclosure (if any) of same made, or likely to be made by Mr Dunlop to the Tribunal.

10.29 Cllr Fox's complete denial of contact with Mr Dunlop in 1997/1998, in relation to the St Gerard's lands was largely consistent with the approach taken by him to claims made by Mr Dunlop in connection with the making of the 1993 Development Plan, and, more particularly, the extent of contact between the two men in that context.

COUNCILLORS LOWRY AND BUTLER

11.01 There was no allegation made by Mr Dunlop that Cllrs Lowry⁴ and Butler sought or received payment in return for their signatures to the rezoning motion. The Tribunal was satisfied that neither councillor sought money from Mr Dunlop in return for his support, nor was any money tendered or paid to either of them.

⁴ Mr Dunlop provided Cllr Lowry with a IR£250 cheque for 'Bosnia Aid' after becoming aware of his association with that Charity in the course of his visit to Cllr Lowry's home.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN – THE DUFF MODULE

INTRODUCTION

1.01 In this Module, the Tribunal inquired into the circumstances surrounding a planning application and subsequent grant of permission involving a material contravention vote by Dublin County Council in 1991, in relation to a proposed development of approximately 90 acres of land situated to the west of Jugback Lane, northwest of Swords, County Dublin.

1.02 Ten witnesses gave evidence when the Module was heard in public over six days, between 15 March and 5 May 2006. Information provided to the Tribunal by and on behalf of Cllr Cyril Gallagher was read into the record on Day 637 (5 May 2006).

1.03 Between the years 1988 and 1990 Mr Robert White, a Dublin based jeweller, and Nosaka Ltd acquired an interest in a number of land holdings in and around Swords, County Dublin, which were the subject of the aforementioned material contravention vote of Dublin County Council. Nosaka Ltd was incorporated in April 1989 and its directors and shareholders were Mr White and his wife Mrs Ann-Marie White.

1.04 The approximately 90 acres of land which were the subject of the ultimately successful planning permission (following the material contravention vote) included lands acquired by Mr White/Nosaka Ltd from the Duff family. The Duff lands were owned by Mr Joseph Duff, his wife Mrs Alicia Duff, and Mr Matthew Duff and at the time were being farmed, with part being used as a small equestrian centre and riding school.

1.05 In the first instance, Mr White/Nosaka Ltd purchased outright approximately 18 acres of lands (the 'purchased lands') from the Duffs in November 1989 and shortly thereafter acquired an option to purchase a further 66.6 acres of the lands (the 'option lands'), on foot of agreements which were signed on 18 December 1989 and 3 August 1990. These option agreements ran until 16 and 30 December 1991 respectively.

1.06 Pursuant to the terms of the agreements, and in consideration of the payment of IR£1.00, Mr White/Nosaka Ltd acquired the right to purchase the lands for a price of IR£30,000 per acre during the option period.

1.07 Prior to entering the aforementioned Agreements, Mr White, together with a third party, had already acquired, by public auction, approximately 18.5 acres of other lands adjoining the Duff lands, following which further lands (the Baker lands) were acquired by Nosaka Ltd. It would appear that, in part, the purchase of the 'Baker' lands was necessitated by the need to provide the public auction lands and the Duff lands with access to the main sewer and to the main road network in the locality. Mr White's plan for the lands he was acquiring was to develop them commercially. The lands acquired by public auction together with the 18 acres purchased from the Duffs and the Duff option lands comprised the subject matter of the planning application made by Nosaka Ltd in the period 1990 to 1991. For ease of reference these lands will be referred to hereafter as the 'Duff lands.' The 'Baker' lands were never part of the planning application made by Nosaka Ltd and they were ultimately sold to Motorola in 1990, subject to a way leave retained by Nosaka Ltd for roads and services for the Duff lands.

1.08 Mr White's/ Nosaka Ltd's options expired in December 1991 without any of the subject lands having been acquired. On 23 January 1992 a new agreement was concluded, this time between the Duffs and Mr White/Nosaka Ltd and a company, Emargrove Ltd, whereby, in consideration of a payment of IR£50,000 to the Duffs (which was paid on 23 January 1992), particular lands could be acquired for the sum of IR£2.2m pounds approximately if acquired by 31 May 1992. It was also provided in the January 1992 agreement, on payment of consideration of IR£1.00, that, in the event that the lands were not acquired by 31 May 1992, Mr White acquired the right to extend the option, with regard to certain of the lands, to 31 December 1993. However, none of the rights acquired on foot of this new agreement were exercised and ultimately the lands were sold by the Duff family to a third party.

1.09 During the currency of the various option agreements and following a material contravention vote of Dublin County Council, planning permission issued to Nosaka Ltd for a residential and hotel development and distributor road on the Duff lands.

THE NOSAKA PLANNING PERMISSION APPLICATION 1990 – 1992

2.01 Mr White retained the architectural firm Pilgrim Associates in connection with his proposal to develop the lands commercially. From evidence given to the Tribunal by Mr Tim Rowe, Architect, it was clear that his initial assessment of the development potential of the land was a negative one, given that the lands were zoned agriculture under the 1983 Development Plan and that access to the lands was restricted by the narrowness of Jugback Lane. Furthermore, there was no access to a foul sewer, all of which problems Mr Rowe anticipated would be a bar to securing the support of council officials for any proposed planning application. However, following the acquisition of the 'Baker' lands, Nosaka Ltd was in a position (at Mr Rowe's suggestion) to offer the council a 'planning gain'

(in the hope that same would be sufficient to assist in allaying any opposition on behalf of the planning authority to the material contravention procedure) by offering to construct, as part of its proposed development, a distributor road to ease traffic congestion, then a problem in the area. This and other issues were the subject of meetings between Mr Rowe and the planning officials over a period of time.

2.02 On 22 August 1990 Pilgrim Associates lodged a planning application with Dublin County Council seeking permission to build a residential development of 501 houses, a 110 bed hotel with related facilities, and a distributor road on the Duff lands.

2.03 The Nosaka Ltd planning application was considered by the Fingal District Committee of the County Council on 21 January 1991 and the Committee recommended that the procedure pursuant to Section 39(d) of the Local Government (Planning and Development) Act, 1976 (the material contravention procedure) be initiated. Notice of the council's intention to consider granting permission appeared in the Irish Press on 30 March 1991.

2.04 Dublin County Council duly convened to consider the matter on 22 April 1991. The Manager's Report, presented to the meeting on that date, stated that there would be no objection from the council officials in the event the council passed a resolution in favour of granting permission. The meeting recorded two written objections to the proposed development, one from Swords Community Council and the other from a named individual. On 22 April 1991 Cllr Cyril Gallagher proposed, and Cllr Anne Devitt seconded, a motion seeking that permission be granted to Nosaka Ltd to develop the lands subject to certain conditions. The motion was adopted when 37 Councillors voted in its favour, 13 voted against and one abstained.

2.05 On 11 May 1991, following this decision, planning permission issued to Nosaka Ltd for housing and a distributor road (subject to 33 conditions) as well as outline planning permission for the hotel and related facilities (subject to nine conditions). Following the withdrawal of a first party (Nosaka Ltd's) appeal to An Bord Pleanála, planning permission and outline planning permission was duly confirmed on 10 April 1992.

THE HISTORY OF THE DUFF LANDS IN THE CONTEXT OF THE 1983 DEVELOPMENT PLAN REVIEW

3.01 The 1991 Draft Development Plan which went out on first statutory public display between September and December 1991 showed the Duff lands as continuing to be zoned B (agricultural). Prior to such display no motion had been brought to the council proposing any change in the zoning of the lands. However the consequences of Nosaka Ltd's planning application, for a residential development and a hotel, on the population of Swords was referred to by the Manager in the course of a Report made in March 1991 in the context of the Manager's then objection to a rezoning motion being proposed in relation to lands at Balheary.¹

3.02 In the course of the first statutory display 8 objections and representations were received by the Council in relation to the Duff lands, including a representation made by the Ambrose Kelly Group, on behalf of the Duff family, seeking to have the lands zoned residential.

3.03 These representations were duly considered by the Council on 21 May 1993. No motion was put forward proposing what had been outlined in the submission made on behalf of the Duff family. However, a motion was received regarding a proposed link road affecting the Duff lands and other lands. This Motion was passed (after amendment) with the result (as far as the Duff lands was concerned), that during the second statutory public display (July – August 1993) the Duff lands continued to be displayed zoned agricultural, but with a proposed change outlining a five year road proposal. This change was confirmed on 24 September 1993 and when the 1993 Development Plan was voted on and passed on 10 December 1993 the lands retained their agriculture zoning but with the provision for a distributor link road.

THE INVOLVEMENT OF MR FRANK DUNLOP WITH THE DUFF LANDS

4.01 It was common case that for a period of time during the currency of the planning application/material contravention process concerning the Duff lands Mr Dunlop was retained by Mr White/Nosaka Ltd. However, in the course of evidence heard in this Module, it emerged that there was a very significant conflict of evidence between Mr Dunlop and Mr White as to the reason for Mr Dunlop's retention, the date or approximate date of their initial meeting, the number and frequency of their subsequent meetings and contacts, the duration of Mr Dunlop's retention and the financial arrangements arrived at between them. Moreover, there was conflict as to the timing of and the reason for the cessation of Mr Dunlop's involvement in the project. These issues are addressed by the Tribunal in the course of this Chapter.

THE SEQUENCE OF MR DUNLOP'S DISCLOSURE TO THE TRIBUNAL OF HIS INVOLVEMENT WITH THE DUFF LANDS

4.02 Mr Dunlop first made reference to the Duff lands on Day 148 when he listed 'Robert White/ Duff site in Swords £5,000?' as no 9² in his '1991 – 1993 (inclusive)' list as provided to the Tribunal on that date, in the course of his public testimony.

4.03 Subsequently, in the course of a private interview with the Tribunal on 19 May 2000, Mr Dunlop again made reference to having been given IR£5,000 by Mr White 'with the express intention and knowledge that I would ensure that people would be on side.' In the course of that interview, Mr Dunlop stated he believed his fee arrangement with Mr White had been for a payment of IR£10,000. He accounted for the question mark which accompanied the IR£5,000 figure, as appeared on the aforementioned list, on the basis that, while the agreement he had with Mr White had been for IR£10,000, he could not 'absolutely' say that he had received more than IR£5,000. In the course of the private interview Mr Dunlop made reference, inter alia, to having paid to Cllrs Cyril Gallagher and GV Wright in connection with the Duff lands.

4.04 In his written statement of October 2000, under the title 'Duff site in Swords' ³ Mr Dunlop stated as follows:

The land was in Swords and was owned by a family called the Duffs. A company called, I believe, Nosaka was formed with respect to this development. The proposal was to build a hotel in Swords.

I was approached by Mr Robert White representing the Nosaka consortium, in the latter part of 1990, early 1991. Mr White is a jeweller. He informed me that he had discussed the matter with Messrs Wright and Gallagher. He wanted my assistance to make sure that other people were looked after and remained supportive. He believed the rezoning could occur quickly. I informed him that I thought it would take some time.

It was agreed between Mr White and I that I would get £10,000 plus VAT and that £5,000 cash was paid to me in the corner of the lounge of the Shelbourne Hotel during a meeting with Mr White. Mr White gave me the money with express intention and knowledge that I would ensure that people remained supportive.

³ Mr Dunlop appended an asterisk to this title which, according to him, designated that there had been awareness on the part of the landowner that monies would be paid to councillors.

My agreement with Mr White was for a success fee of £4,000 cash to be paid on completion of the preliminary planning process (Appendix 1).

I gave Mr Gallagher the sum of £2,000 on the occasion of speaking to him in the Grand Hotel in Malahide.

While the agreement I had was that I was to receive £10,000 plus VAT I cannot say definitively if I got more than £5,000.

4.05 The Tribunal wrote to Mr Dunlop requesting a further detailed narrative statement and his attention was drawn to an apparent omission in his October 2000 statement of the allegation he had made against Cllr Wright in the course of his private interview in May 2000, namely his assertion that he had paid Cllr Wright money in connection to the lands, he having stated, inter alia, on that occasion, 'I am certain that it was just £1,000.' Mr Dunlop was called upon to explain the omission and advised that '(in) the event that such exclusion was an error' he 'should deal with his dealings with Mr G.V. Wright.'

4.06 On 27 May 2003 Mr Dunlop's solicitors advised the Tribunal that the detailed narrative statement was awaited but went on to address the Tribunal's query regarding Cllr Wright in the following manner:

'Mr Dunlop has asked me to bring to your attention that the reference to Councillor GV Wright (during the course of a private interview on May 19th 2000) was erroneous insofar as it was indicated during the course of that interview that Mr Dunlop had made a payment to Councillor GV Wright in relation to these lands. The payments made by Mr Dunlop in connection with these lands are as set out as narrative statement dated 9th October 2000.'

4.07 In the course of his testimony Mr Dunlop acknowledged the error he made in May 2000 in referring to his having paid Cllr Wright IR£1,000 in connection with the Duff lands. His explanation for this error was, he stated, based on his belief, in May 2000, of having done so, given Cllr Wright's close association with the project. Mr Dunlop claimed that having had subsequent sight of the Development Plan 'roadmap', this had assisted him realising that Cllr Wright had not been the recipient of money from him in relation to the Duff lands, hence the omission of any reference to Cllr Wright in that regard in Mr Dunlop's October 2000 statement.

4.08 On 23 January 2006 the Tribunal renewed its request for a narrative statement in response to which Mr Dunlop furnished a detailed statement on 9 March 2006, within days of commencement of the Tribunal's public hearings in the Duff Module, and following the circulation to him of a brief of documentation.

MR DUNLOP AND MR WHITE'S MEETINGS AND DEALINGS IN THE PERIOD 1990 TO 1991 AND RELATED MATTERS

5.01 An analysis of Mr Dunlop's 1990 and 1991 diaries revealed fourteen entries referable to Mr White between 30 May 1990 and 6 March 1991. Mr Dunlop claimed to have first met with him on 30 May 1990.⁴ According to Mr Dunlop, this meeting had come about through Mr Tim Collins. Mr Dunlop and Mr Collins had met by arrangement and Mr Dunlop was apprised that, Pilgrim Architects, with which Mr Collins was associated, had a client who had required Mr Dunlop's lobbying and public relation services. Mr Collins did not go into detail, other than referring to Mr White's planning application for a hotel development. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that on 9 May 1990, Mr Tim Collins called to his office, and advised him of his involvement with the Duff lands, and that he would introduce Mr Dunlop to Mr White in due course. Mr Dunlop's diary includes an entry for 9 May 1990 in relation to his meeting with Mr Collins.

5.02 In the course of his testimony Mr Collins acknowledged that he 'may have been the person who recommended Mr Dunlop to Mr White, and the person who had 'volunteered' to approach Mr Dunlop in advance of Mr White contacting him. The Tribunal was satisfied that he did so. Mr Collins did not discount 9 May 1990 as being the likely date of his meeting with Mr Dunlop in this regard.

5.03 While Mr Collins, in the course of his testimony to the Tribunal, acknowledged his role in effecting the meeting between Mr White and Mr Dunlop (and indeed acknowledged meeting Mr Dunlop in the company of Mr White, although unsure of when this occurred), his statement to the Tribunal on 23 May 2003 in connection with the matter did not give any hint of this role. The wording of Mr Collins' statement suggested that Mr Dunlop's involvement with Mr White in relation to the Duff lands was at a total remove from Mr Collins. The Tribunal believed that when preparing his statement Mr Collins made a deliberate decision (for whatever reason) not to acknowledge the role he had played in bringing Mr Dunlop and Mr White together. Throughout his evidence Mr Collins claimed to have no recollection of any dealings he had with Mr Dunlop in relation to the Duff lands.

5.04 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that following a telephone call from Mr White they met on 30 May 1990 in the Shelbourne Hotel at Mr White's suggestion. In the course of the meeting Mr White informed him that Nosaka Ltd had obtained or alternatively was about to apply for planning permission for a hotel and residential development, and Mr Dunlop was asked to act in a public relations and lobbying capacity in the context of the contemplated material contravention procedure which was necessary. Mr White had referred to Mr Collins' contact with Mr Dunlop and he had also stated that in discussions he had with Cllr GV Wright, Mr Dunlop had been recommended to him. Mr Dunlop was told that Mr White had already spoken to Cllrs Wright and Gallagher about his proposal for the lands and that 'GV Wright was 100% supportive, was on side' and also that 'Councillor Gallagher was enthusiastic.' Mr White made reference to Cllr Wright's belief that the issue could be progressed within a six week timeframe.

5.05 Mr Dunlop outlined the context in which Mr White had spoken about Cllrs Wright and Gallagher, as follows:

'...I think the issue in relation to Mr White was relatively simple, and that is that he had the absolute total 100% support of GV Wright. He had had discussions with Cyril Gallagher, but Cyril Gallagher while he was enthusiastic about the possibility of having a hotel in Swords, knew what the situation obtaining in Swords was in relation to all sorts of services, and he had a close contact with the planners and he was dubious about whether or not the planners would be supportive or would endorse it. And I think, and I had nothing other than my impression on this point, and I say that in advance, that my role in relation to this matter was to ensure that Cyril Gallagher was as much on side as GV Wright because the point was that Cyril was from Swords, GV was from Malahide, and that if other Councillors saw that Cyril wasn't on board or wasn't supportive, that could be disastrous.'

5.06 Later in his evidence Mr Dunlop explained the necessity for Cllr Gallagher to remain supportive of the project in the following terms:

'... if Cyril Gallagher was onside well then the system would fall into place, the Fianna Fail vote would fall into place. It would not be necessary if two people in the status in the Council of Cyril Gallagher and GV Wright at a meeting prior to a Council meeting said we are going to, we are for this.'

5.07 And also stated:

'If Cyril said he was supporting something, yes, the distinct possibility, unless there was something seriously wrong or that somebody could point to something serious either in a planning issue or otherwise. Yes, the possibility is that at a meeting of the Fianna Fáil Councillors when Cyril would indicate that he was supporting that. People would say we'll do this for Cyril.'

5.08 While Mr White, in the course of their discussions, had made reference to it being 'essential to make sure that other people were supportive', something which Mr Dunlop had taken to refer to councillors other than Cllrs Wright and Gallagher and in respect of which Mr Dunlop had gleaned that he would have a lobbying role, 'in the actuality' he had interpreted that comment as a reference to Cllr Gallagher and that he, Mr Dunlop, was required to look after him financially. Mr Dunlop testified that he told Mr White that he would speak to and 'look after Cyril', although the specifics of how he would do so had not been elaborated on.

5.09 It was Mr Dunlop's evidence that his initial discussion with Mr White had led him to understand that a financial arrangement had been arrived at between Mr White and Cllr Wright. His understanding had come from statements made by Mr White, to wit, 'GV is totally onside, fully supportive' and 'you needn't worry about GV, I am looking after GV.'

5.10 Other than Mr White having made the aforesaid comments, the prospect of Mr White paying either Cllr Wright or Cllr Gallagher had not been discussed. Nor had Mr Dunlop specifically discussed with Mr White any payments he himself might make to councillors.

5.11 With reference to his assertion that Mr White had alluded to the necessity 'of keeping people onside,' it was put to Mr Dunlop by Tribunal Counsel that this statement may have been a reference to the fact that councillors were to be lobbied, as opposed to 'looked after financially'. Mr Dunlop's response to this, in essence, was that he had taken a different interpretation, having regard to 'the total orientation of the approach, what was said, the nature of it and the culture of it.'

5.12 Asked how he could claim that Mr White knew of his intention to pay money to councillors for their support Mr Dunlop replied:

'I go back again to the context of that meeting that I had with Mr White, its origination, the language that was used, the very phraseology that I need not worry about GV he was looking after GV and he was leaving Cyril to me, as well as other Councillors. Now in, as matters eventuated as I said to you yesterday, I have no recollection of speaking to anyone else other than GV and Cyril Gallagher...'

5.13 On Day 623 Mr Dunlop was questioned as follows:

'Q. Is there any reason why you couldn't have told Mr White subsequently that you had paid Mr Gallagher?

A. There is no reason why I couldn't have, but I didn't.

Q. So could Mr White say that he had no knowledge of the fact that you either intended to or did in fact pay Councillors?

A. Well that's a matter for Mr White.

Q. I understand that is his position in fairness to him?

A. Fine. That is his position, I can only give you, Mr Quinn, the context of my meeting with Mr White and the arrangements with Mr White and what was said.

Q. Did you ever ask Mr White if he had paid Mr Wright?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Or how much he might have paid Mr Wright?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you ever ask Mr Wright if he had received money?

A. No.

Q. You knew Mr Wright quite well?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And you had given him money or you alleged to have given him money in other cases, isn't that right?

A. Correct.

Q. So a discussion in the context of receiving money wouldn't have been out of the question vis-à-vis yourself and Mr Wright?

A. It wouldn't have been out of the question but it did not take place.

Q. But you could have asked him?

A. Oh, I could have, yes.

Q. Did Mr Gallagher ask you if any other Councillor was being paid in relation to his support?

A. No, not on this occasion or ever.'

5.14 Mr Dunlop was questioned in relation to the 'commercial reality' of having agreed a fee of only IR£10,000 with Mr White, given his (Mr Dunlop's) understanding that the purpose of his retention was to keep councillors 'on side' by making payments to them, Mr Dunlop's response was:

'Well on the face of it you might suggest that there wasn't, but certainly in circumstances that no money was ever handed over by me to any elected representative unless I was asked and in those circumstances this was in the – this was in 1990, it was not in the context of the Development Plan, I didn't see it as uncommercial.'

5.15 Mr Dunlop claimed that on foot of his understanding that his principal function was to keep Cllr Gallagher 'on side,' he had duly approached him,⁵ as well as discussing the Duff lands with Cllr Wright. He restricted his lobbying endeavours to those two councillors. He stated that it was:

'...quite conceivable that people knew, via Robert White and/or G.V. and Cyril Gallagher that I was acting in some capacity and they may well have approached me or asked me about it, but I certainly had no contact with Councillors in the context of getting a Motion signed or getting an application in or whatever.'

5.16 Responding to cross examination by Cllr Wright's solicitor, Mr Dunlop explained his lobbying approach in the following terms:

'...in circumstances where you have two people of the status of GV Wright and Cyril Gallagher, particularly the latter because he came from the area in which the lands were located, who were supportive, that fact alone at a meeting of Fianna Fail Councillors prior to a Council meeting, it would be very odd in fact it would be completely unusual if any other Councillors showed any negativity towards it, once Cyril Gallagher was supportive.'

5.17 Mr Dunlop maintained that an absence of support from Cllr Gallagher would have been seen as 'a serious red flag' for the project and went on to state:

'Yes, so the fact that Cyril was in favour of it would in my view, combined with that of GV Wright, in a Fianna Fail meeting, prior to, as took place at Fianna Fail meetings to decide prior to Council meetings what way people would vote, that would have been enough if GV Wright and Cyril Gallagher were in favour of it. I do not recollect approaching anybody else in relation to this matter.'

5.18 Mr Dunlop testified that his fees had been discussed at the meeting with Mr White on 30 May but left in abeyance. It was his belief that he had asked for IR£15,000 in addition to a IR£5,000 success fee.

5.19 Mr Dunlop and Mr White next met, by arrangement, on 25 July 1990⁶ at Mr White's office premises on the North Circular Road. They agreed a fee of IR£10,000 plus VAT, with a success fee of IR£4,000, in cash, to be paid if, and when, the planning process concluded successfully.

5.20 Mr Dunlop claimed that, following this meeting he prepared a handwritten note on the agreed payment terms, and maintained that note on his files. He did not record the arrangement in any formal letter to Mr White, nor did he believe he ever submitted an invoice to him. Mr Dunlop was in a position, more than a decade later, to provide his handwritten note⁷ to the Tribunal, together with other documentation, comprising architectural drawings by Pilgrim Associates, which he stated he had been provided with during his retention as a lobbyist.⁸

5.21 In the course of his private interview in May 2000 Mr Dunlop appeared to suggest that a search of his offices and files (to that point in time) had yielded no material relevant to the Duff lands. However, at some point between 19 May and 23 October 2000 Mr Dunlop located the documents in question, although he could not specify the circumstances of their retrieval. Mr Dunlop refuted any suggestion (as put to him in cross-examination) that his handwritten note was otherwise than a contemporaneous account of the event which it detailed, and he was adamant that he had prepared it in the immediate aftermath of his meeting with Mr White on 25 July 1990.

5.22 Mr Dunlop explained why he made the note as follows: 'I took a view that having met this man, that it would be preferable for me to keep a note of what we agreed and shook hands on.'

5.23 On Mr Dunlop's account of events, less than two weeks later, on 7 August 1990,⁹ he again met Mr White at the Shelbourne Hotel, at the latter's request. Mr Dunlop stated that in the course of that meeting Mr White had outlined his preference to pay Mr Dunlop's fee in cash, and his presumption that Mr Dunlop would also so prefer. He had 'readily agreed' to this suggestion. Mr Dunlop described this conversation as having taken place in a corner of the tea room of the Shelbourne Hotel. It was agreed that Mr Dunlop's fee would be paid by an initial IR£5,000 in cash with the remainder of the fee to be paid within three months.

5.24 On 10 August 1990, once again in the Shelbourne Hotel, Mr White had given Mr Dunlop an envelope and he had advised that while he had hoped it would contain IR£5,000, the envelope contained only IR£3,000 but that he would give him the balance of the upfront cash payment (IR£2,000) shortly, a payment, Mr Dunlop maintained, was duly made, once again in the Shelbourne Hotel, on 15 August 1990.

5.25 Mr Dunlop's diary for the aforementioned five dates made reference to Mr White, although there was no reference to either the Shelbourne Hotel or to Mr White's North Circular Road premises as the location for the meetings. On 10 August 1990, the diary recorded as follows: 'Three R.White,' an entry Mr Dunlop attributed both to the fact of his having met Mr White on that date, and to his receipt of IR£3,000 in cash. His diary entry for 15 August 1990,¹⁰ being the date, on which he maintained he received the IR£2,000 cash, read '4pm R White.'

¹⁰ See Exhibit 6.

5.26 Cross-examined on Day 634, Mr Dunlop denied any suggestion that his diary was doctored or altered to indicate meetings with Mr White that had not in fact taken place. With regard to the entries of 7, 10 and 15 August 1990, he stated that he had a recollection, independent of such diary entries, of the events that occurred on those dates. Based on his diary entries, he testified to further meetings with Mr White, namely on 16 and 21 August 1990, 7, 18 19 and 27 September 1990, 24 October 1990, 22 November 1990, 7, 14 December 1990 and 6 March 1991. Mr Dunlop conceded that his recollection of those meetings was less clear, and he surmised that many of the meetings from 16 August 1990 onwards related to the exchange of information regarding the progress, or otherwise, of Nosaka Ltd's planning permission application, and Mr Dunlop's pursuit of his fees.

5.27 Mr White vehemently denied that he had meetings with, or that he retained, Mr Dunlop prior to the beginning of October 1990 and he denied ever meeting with Mr Dunlop in the Shelbourne Hotel. Insofar as there were entries referable to him in Mr Dunlop's diary for the period May to September 1990, he maintained that these were false and had been fabricated. With reference to the diary entry for 30 May 1990 specifically, Mr White stated that he had begun a two week holiday in the South of France on 17 May 1990 and therefore was not, and could not, have been, present for a meeting in Dublin on 30 May 1990 with Mr Dunlop. To this end Mr White produced a letter to the Tribunal from a travel company, Parker and Palmer Holidays, which indicated that Mr White booked a villa in France for a two week period commencing 17 May 1990.

5.28 Mr White specifically denied that he had ever made cash payments totalling IR£5,000 to Mr Dunlop stating 'I never gave Mr Dunlop one penny in cash.'

5.29 With regard to Mr Dunlop's belief, from discussions between them, that Mr White knew Mr Dunlop would have to pay councillors, Mr White totally disputed that any such belief on the part of Mr Dunlop could have arisen from their dealings. He told the Tribunal that he had never asked Mr Dunlop to lobby, pay or influence elected representatives and specifically denied that Mr Dunlop had ever been retained on that basis, although he acknowledged that in the course of their discussions Mr Dunlop could have referred to the fact that he knew councillors.

5.30 According to Mr White, Mr Dunlop's services were retained by Nosaka Ltd in order to interact with the media and with local residents in Swords, in the context of Nosaka Ltd's application for planning permission for the residential and hotel development. Mr Dunlop's brief, vis-a-vis the local residents, was to chair meetings and answer questions regarding the proposed development.

5.31 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that he attended a meeting with residents in the course of his retention as a lobbyist, but was unable to state when this had occurred, or whether an entry in his diary for 27 September 1990 indicated that it had taken place on that date (see below).

5.32 Mr White maintained that he had no need of Mr Dunlop's services in respect of the lobbying of councillors, as at the time of Mr Dunlop's retention he, Mr White, had made contact with local councillors (including Cllrs Wright,¹¹ Gallagher and Devitt) and with some councillors outside the locality. Mr White stated 'I'm clearly saying that the development was agreed to be proposed and seconded and it was agreed to be supported by Councillors before I went near Frank Dunlop.' Mr White had thus concluded that councillors were supportive because he had been told by Cllr Wright and by Cllr Gallagher and Devitt¹² (the local councillors) that they were supporting the proposal. Mr White claimed that it was 'not particularly' suggested to him that it would be a good idea to canvass all councillors for their support.

5.33 Mr White testified that, accompanied by Mr Collins, he first met with Mr Dunlop in early October 1990 at Mr Dunlop's offices in Mount Street.¹³ He acknowledged Mr Collins' role in recommending Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop's retention had commenced from early October 1990, and at their initial meeting a fee of IR£10,000 and Vat had been agreed for Mr Dunlop. Mr White maintained that the fee had been negotiated in Mr Collins' presence. Mr White denied having made any agreement for the payment of a success fee. He described to the Tribunal how, in late October 1990, approximately ten days after they first met, he called into Mr Dunlop's office unexpectedly whereupon he gave Mr Dunlop a cheque for IR£2,500, or perhaps IR£3,000, by way of a payment 'on account.' Mr White told the Tribunal that he was nearly certain that the cheque he gave Mr Dunlop was a Nosaka Ltd cheque.

5.34 Questioned by Mr Dunlop's Counsel why he had paid Mr Dunlop money 'on account', done so, Mr White stated 'I felt Frank Dunlop didn't know me. I had never done business with him.' And he said he had felt it was 'good practice' to pay him money on account.

¹¹Cllr Wright was not in fact local councillor, having been elected to the adjoining Malahide Ward.

¹²Cllr Devitt acknowledged that she may well have been approached but had no recollection nor a recollection of who asked her to sign the Motion put before the council in 1991

¹³Mr Dunlop had no recollection of meeting Mr White at the offices of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd.

5.35 In the course of Mr Dunlop's cross-examination by Mr White's Counsel it was suggested that he had received a cheque for IR£2,500 from Mr White, and that that cheque had been debited to Nosaka Ltd's account on 30 October 1990. On Day 637, in the course of his evidence, Mr White acknowledged that that debit referred to a payment to an individual unconnected to Mr Dunlop, as was apparent from the analysis of documentation pertaining to Nosaka Ltd's bank accounts for the relevant period and which was provided to the Tribunal between the date of Mr Dunlop's cross-examination and Mr White's testimony. The discovered documentation did not show another cheque of IR£2,500 drawn on the account in the relevant period. Nosaka Ltd's account showed a cheque debit of IR£3,000, on 14 August 1990, but, on Mr White's account of his dealings with Mr Dunlop, this could not have related to Mr Dunlop.

5.36 Thus, notwithstanding Mr White's sworn testimony that he was nearly certain that he had paid Mr Dunlop either IR£2,500 or IR£3,000 with a Nosaka Ltd cheque in late October 1990, there was no evidence of such a payment in the documentation (discovered to the Tribunal) which related to Nosaka's accounts.

5.37 An examination of the said bank statements did identify two large round figure withdrawals of IR£35,000 and IR£10,000 from Nosaka Ltd's current account on 30 April and 28 May 1990 respectively. Mr White claimed that these withdrawals (in cash) were made for his 'personal use' and rejected any suggestion that such withdrawals might have funded cash payments in August 1990 (which he denied) to Mr Dunlop. He was unable to state by what date these funds had been spent. In response to questioning by his own Counsel he stated that the withdrawal of IR£10,000 on 30 May 1990 would have been made by his wife, as on that date, on his account of events, he was not in the jurisdiction. Mr White attributed the withdrawal of these funds to the refurbishment of a house.

5.38 Notwithstanding having been a signatory to Nosaka Ltd's current account, Mrs Ann Marie White testified that she had no knowledge of either withdrawal. The thrust of Mrs White's evidence was that, although a director of Nosaka Ltd, the business of the company was largely conducted by her husband. The Tribunal accepted this to have been the case.

5.39 Insofar as there were recorded meetings with him in Mr Dunlop's diary during the months of November and December 1990, Mr White accepted that these took place. Although professing no recollection of the event, Mr White accepted that Mr Dunlop was his guest at the annual O'Donovan Rossa Cumann fundraising dinner in Kilmainham Hospital on 7 December 1990.¹⁴

¹⁴ Mrs White, in her evidence, recalled Mr Dunlop's presence at the dinner.

5.40 While Mr White denied that the Shelbourne Hotel had been the venue for his meetings with Mr Dunlop, he claimed to have met with Mr Dunlop at locations other than Mr Dunlop's office, one of which was the bar in Leinster House. Mr White claimed that by arrangement he, Mr Collins and Mr Rowe met Mr Dunlop at that location for a business meeting, during which there had been an 'accidental' meeting with Cllr Wright.

5.41 Asked to identify the reason for meeting his architect and his public relations advisor in the bar in Leinster House, Mr White stated that his recollection was that they had met there to discuss a forthcoming meeting with local people in Swords, and when pressed further on the matter, exclaimed as follows:

'Well, I don't know. That's where it took place. And Mr Dunlop was there. My memory of it, it probably lasted about half an hour. And it the reason I'm so clear about it is that Mr Dunlop had one of these mobile phones at the time which was quite new and he was jumping up and down looking for a signal trying to answer it. And I suppose we spent about five minutes talking about the whole thing and we were there for about twenty minutes. And to be quite blunt, I thought he was quite rude. And also the fact that GV Wright came into the bar, in company, and he called him over and mentioned the Nosaka development and GV said to me that he was aware of it and supported it. That's how I particularly remember that meeting.'

5.42 Mr White also stated:

'I assumed that Mr Dunlop is doing a lot of business there. As I say, he was jumping up and down and meeting various other people. Out of the 25 minutes or half an hour that we were there, I suppose we spent about five minutes talking.'

5.43 Mr Dunlop's diary for 27 September 1990 had an entry referable to Mr White and Cllr Wright noted as follows: '12.00 G.V. / Rob W'.

5.44 There was a further entry referable to Mr White for the same date, namely: '8.00 R.W. / Residents'

5.45 Although acknowledging the entry in his diary for 27 September 1990, Mr Dunlop did not have a recollection of meeting Mr White and Cllr Wright together but told the Tribunal that it was possible that he had done so. With regard to Mr White's evidence about a meeting in the Dáil bar, Mr Dunlop did not discount that that could have occurred, stating 'well I don't know if you have been in the Dáil bar. It is like the Clapham bus station. You could meet anybody there at any time.'

5.46 Because of his claim to have first met with Mr Dunlop in early October 1990, Mr White disputed the suggestion that he had met with Mr Dunlop on 27 September 1990, or that Mr Dunlop met with the residents of Swords on that date, as he believed that meetings between Mr Dunlop and residents took place in late 1990, or early 1991.¹⁵

5.47 Mr Collins told the Tribunal that it was his best recollection that he was never at a meeting with Mr White, Mr Rowe and Mr Dunlop together, in Leinster House. Mr Rowe likewise stated that he had not been at a meeting in Leinster House. It was his recollection that he met with Mr Dunlop twice on the same date. Mr Rowe testified that he first met with Mr Dunlop in the presence of Mr White in Mr Dunlop's office in the afternoon, on a date he could not recall, and that this meeting was followed by a meeting later that day with the residents of Swords in the 'Harp' bar (in Swords). Mr Rowe acknowledged that the 27 September 1990 entry in Mr Dunlop's diary could have been a reference to that meeting. He recalled only one such meeting. Insofar as he had met Cllr Wright in connection with the Duff lands, he had done so in the company of Mr White in a public house adjacent to Pilgrim's offices in Mount Street. Mr Collins also recollected meeting Cllr Wright at that location, and in the company of Mr White and Mr Rowe.

5.48 Cllr Wright recalled a meeting with Mr White, Mr Rowe and Mr Collins in O'Dwyer's pub when Mr Rowe briefed him on Nosaka Ltd's proposed development. Cllr Wright said he had no recollection of the meeting (accidental or otherwise) in Leinster House referred to by Mr White and he had no recollection of meeting Mr White and Mr Dunlop together, as Mr Dunlop's diary entry for 27 September 1990 had suggested.

5.49 However, it was common case that Cllr Wright and Mr White met during the currency of Nosaka Ltd's planning permission application. Mr White testified that, indeed, Cllr Wright was the first elected representative he had approached in relation to his proposed scheme for the Duff lands. Cllr Wright was also the person who advised Mr White to approach the 'local' councillors. The Tribunal was satisfied, based on Mr White's testimony, that the approach to Cllr Wright was likely to have been made at some point prior to the lodging of the planning application, and indeed may well have been as early as 1989.

¹⁵ Mr Matthew Duff, who gave evidence, believed that he met Mr Dunlop at a residents meeting in January 1991.

VISITS TO LEINSTER HOUSE

6.01 A log book maintained by Leinster House staff in 1991 and 1992 indicated that Mr White visited Cllr Wright (then a Senator) on 28 January 1991 (some three months prior to the material contravention vote), on 26 February 1992, on 3 March 1992 and on 19 May 1992. Mr White claimed that these were ‘social’ visits based on the friendship which had developed between them subsequent to Mr White’s first approach to Cllr Wright at the latter’s constituency office in Malahide, concerning the proposal for the Duff lands.

6.02 Cllr Wright acknowledged this friendship, and testified that on occasions Mr White had provided him with political support by purchasing tickets for fundraising events.

6.03 Cllr Wright told the Tribunal that once apprised of Mr White’s proposals for the Duff lands (of which he was supportive) he let his views be known to his colleagues within the Fianna Fail Party, although he maintained that he had not ‘promoted’ the project. He said he had impressed upon Mr White the need to approach ‘local’ councillors, such as Cllrs Gallagher and Devitt, and he recalled discussing the project with Cllr Gallagher following Mr White’s approach to Cllr Gallagher. Cllr Wright told the Tribunal that while Cllr Gallagher had recognised the merits of the proposal, he was concerned that the project would have the Council Planners’ support. Cllr Wright acknowledged, as indeed was also indicated by contemporaneous documentation provided to the Tribunal, that the Nosaka Ltd planning application, although ultimately successfully voted on and which had the approval of the council officials at the time of the vote, was on occasions met with opposition from both councillors and some council planning officials during the currency of the planning application and material contravention process.¹⁶

6.04 Cllr Wright acknowledged that he and Mr Dunlop discussed the Duff lands project but, nevertheless, was of the belief that Mr Dunlop had not spoken to other councillors in relation thereto. Cllr Wright testified that he understood Mr Dunlop’s role as a ‘public relations’ one. If this was so it was at odds with the lobbying role Cllr Wright acknowledged Mr Dunlop undertook in the years 1991 to 1993 during the review of the 1983 Development Plan.

6.05 While he acknowledged the fact that Mr Dunlop had withdrawn his allegation (made on 19 May 2000) that he had paid him IR£1,000, Cllr Wright

¹⁶ The record of the council vote of 22 April, 1991 indicated that there was not total support for the project. Moreover, a record of a meeting of the Fingal Committee of the Council in September, 1990 indicated that not all local councillors supported the planning application, Cllrs Owen and Boland opposing it.

nonetheless reiterated that he had not received any payment from Mr Dunlop in relation to the Duff project. However, he acknowledged that he was the recipient of money from Mr Dunlop, of political donations, in the years 1991 to 1993.¹⁷

6.06 Cllr Wright's description of Mr Dunlop's role in the Duff project (which suggested that Mr Dunlop did not have a lobbying function) was in contrast to Mr Dunlop's account of his contact with Cllr Wright in relation to the Duff lands. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that Cllr Wright, when approached by him in relation to the lands, was supportive but concerned that Mr Dunlop should speak to Cllr Gallagher, as he, Cllr Wright, was of the view the other Fianna Fail Councillors would not support the issue if Cllr Gallagher was not supportive of it. He could not recollect meeting Cllr Wright and Mr White together (as suggested by his diary entry for 27 September 1990).

6.07 Mr Dunlop described regular meetings with Cllr Wright, whom he described as an 'active manager of files,' (over the years) in the environs of the council, in Cllr Wright's office in Malahide and in the Dáil.

THE CESSATION OF MR DUNLOP'S RETENTION AS A LOBBYIST FOR NOSAKA LTD/MR WHITE

7.01 There was a conflict between Mr Dunlop and Mr White as to the basis upon which Mr Dunlop's retention by Mr White/Nosaka Ltd came to an end and the timing of that cessation. For a period of time during the currency of his public testimony in relation to this issue, Mr Dunlop placed reliance on what he claimed were diary entries in the period October to December 1991, to substantiate his claim that his contact with Mr White continued to the end of 1991. However, Mr Dunlop resiled from this position, in the course of cross examination by Counsel for Mr White.

7.02 Mr White maintained that Mr Dunlop's services were dispensed with in specific circumstances, namely when he, Mr White, became aware of Mr Dunlop's retention as a lobbyist by Mr Joe Tiernan in relation to lands at Balheary.¹⁸ Mr White perceived this association with Mr Tiernan as detrimental to his plans for the Duff lands because of his belief that Mr Dunlop's role in relation to the Balheary lands gave rise to a conflict of interest. Mr White testified that, subsequent to a meeting with Swords residents in the Harp public house, which Mr Dunlop attended, he had spoken to Cllr Gallagher who had advised him that Mr Dunlop was acting for Mr Tiernan. On receipt of this information Mr White said that he telephoned Pilgrim Architects to advise them that he did not want anything further to do with Mr Dunlop. Mr White claimed he left it to Pilgrim to communicate this to Mr Dunlop, as the recommendation to retain him had come from that party. Insofar as Mr Collins' evidence dealt with this issue, he stated that on an occasion which he could not date, he received a telephone call from Mr White informing him that Mr Dunlop's services had been dispensed with.

¹⁷ The total figure, the timing of certain of the payments and the circumstances in which they were given were issues of dispute between Cllr Wright and Mr Dunlop. These payments are addressed in Chapters Two, Seven and Nine.

¹⁸ See Chapter Twelve.

7.03 While he initially believed his association with Mr Dunlop terminated in February 1990, Mr White conceded that he may have contact with Mr Dunlop in as late as March 1991.

7.04 Mr Dunlop's diary for 6 March 1991 recorded a meeting with Mr White at the Shelbourne Hotel.¹⁹ In the course of his testimony Mr Dunlop was unable to say when exactly his association with Mr White had ended, but he acknowledged (ultimately) that the last recorded entry in his diary for a meeting with Mr White was 6 March 1991, some seven weeks or so prior to the Duff lands material contravention vote. Mr Dunlop stated that he could not 'categorically' state that he spoke to Mr White after 6 March 1991.

7.05 In his detailed narrative statement furnished to the Tribunal on 9 March 2006, Mr Dunlop had made reference, inter alia, to the meetings he had with Mr White between 30 May 1990 and 15 August 1990, as already outlined above and his statement²⁰ also maintained as follows: 'I met Mr White on approximately twelve (12) other occasions (between August 16th 1990 and 14th December 1991).'

7.06 On Day 623, while being examined by Tribunal Counsel in relation to Mr White's assertion that his arrangement with Mr Dunlop had terminated prior to the material contravention vote, and indeed terminated as early as February 1991, Mr Dunlop countered this assertion by reiterating what was in his 2006 statement, namely that he and Mr White continued to meet regularly until 14 December 1991, and moreover maintained that he had attended an annual fundraising function on behalf of Fianna Fáil in the Royal Hospital Kilmainham on 7 December 1991. When questioned as to the reason for contact between them after the material contravention vote, Mr Dunlop maintained that he was trying to extract the remaining fees owed to him by Mr White.

¹⁹ This is the first recorded reference to the Shelbourne Hotel as a location for meetings between Mr Dunlop and Mr White.

²⁰ See Exhibit 7

7.07 Mr Hayden SC (Counsel for Mr White), put it to Mr Dunlop that meetings which Mr Dunlop alleged took place in the final quarter of 1991, and for which he maintained he had diaried records, were in fact meetings which took place in late 1990. Mr Dunlop ultimately conceded this point when Tribunal Counsel indicated that Mr Dunlop's diary for 1991 commenced in October 1990 and that it appeared that Mr Dunlop had commenced using his 1991 diary in this period. When photocopied and added to the documentation circulated to witnesses in advance of public hearings, the entire 1991 diary which including that portion which covered the period from October to December 1990 was allotted a 1991 diary designation, thus leading a reader to erroneously conclude that they were extracts from Mr Dunlop's October to December 1991 diary, rather than extracts for the same period in 1990. When Mr Dunlop received the documentation from the Tribunal he read what appeared to be diaried meetings with Mr White in late 1991, and accordingly, in his statement, and again in his evidence, he relied on the erroneously compiled diary documentation as corroboration for his having met with Mr White in late 1991.

7.08 Mr Dunlop was challenged by Mr Hayden, given his claimed actual recollection of the event, why it was that he could not have identified, as erroneous, the reference to his having attended the Kilmainham dinner on 7 December 1991, when in fact he was Mr White's guest on 7 December 1990.

7.09 The Tribunal considered whether Mr Dunlop's initial reliance on diary entries for the last quarter of 1991 called into question his evidence concerning his recollection of meetings with Mr White generally. The Tribunal's considered opinion was that Mr Dunlop's erroneous reliance on what he believed were diary entries for meetings with Mr White for the months of October, November and December, 1991 did not undermine the general thrust of his evidence, given that in the course of his direct examination he himself had admitted that he had no great recollection of such meetings on dates subsequent to 15 August, 1990.

MEETINGS BETWEEN MR DUNLOP AND MR WHITE IN MAY – SEPTEMBER 1990

8.01 Having regard to the evidence as a whole the Tribunal was satisfied that the vast majority of meetings recorded in Mr Dunlop's diary for the timeframe outlined above, and in respect of which he gave evidence, did in fact take place. The Tribunal had some reservations about whether or not a meeting could have taken place on 30 May 1990, given the content of the letter from Parker and Palmer Holidays (even though that letter in itself was not conclusive proof as to whether Mr White himself was abroad for a full two weeks). However, the Tribunal took the view that Mr Dunlop and Mr White had certainly met by 25 July 1990, and it accepted that Mr Dunlop met Mr White at the latter's office in North Circular Road on that date.

8.02 In arriving at its conclusions that Mr Dunlop and Mr White met in the course of the Summer of 1990, the Tribunal took cognisance of Mr Collins' evidence on Day 624 that Mr Dunlop's diary entry for 9 May 1990 referred to a meeting involving himself and may have been the date on which he had advised Mr Dunlop that Mr White would require his assistance.

8.03 The Tribunal accepted that the handwritten note produced by Mr Dunlop to the Tribunal was compiled on 25 July 1990, following a meeting between them, and rejected the suggestion that the entry had been fabricated by Mr Dunlop. Equally, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's diary references to meetings with Mr White in May, July and August 1990 had not been fabricated by Mr Dunlop.

8.04 The Tribunal also did not accept, as being credible, Mr White's evidence that he and Mr Dunlop only met in October 1990. It was satisfied that they met in advance of the submission of the planning application that was made to the county council in mid August 1990. The Tribunal did not accept that there was any reality to Mr White's contention in that regard, even if the Tribunal were minded (which it was not) to find that Mr Dunlop was retained solely in a public relations capacity vis-a-vis the residents of Swords, and for media purposes. If this was so, then logic dictated that contact with residents would have been made at the time of the lodging of the planning application, or in its immediate aftermath (as opposed to January 1991, as contended for by Mr White).

8.05 In any event the Tribunal was satisfied that the purpose of Mr Dunlop's retention was to keep Nosaka Ltd's planning application (and the likely material contravention process) on track, and as part of that process, lobby councillors in that regard. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's function was not confined to media or public relations matters in connection with the residents of Swords.

8.06 Moreover, the evidence heard by the Tribunal, and the documentation seen by it in the course of the public inquiry, did not support Mr White's contention that it was his belief, at an early stage, that there was support for the planning application sufficient to guarantee a successful outcome of any material contravention vote that might ensue. It was apparent to the Tribunal that from the time of his retention as an architect to the project, Mr Rowe was alert to problems that might arise in the course of the planning application, given the agricultural zoning of the lands, the lack of access to either the main road network or to a foul sewer. While the offer of a 'planning gain' by the construction of a distributor road, in all probability, assisted the planning application, it was clear from Cllr Wright's evidence (notwithstanding Mr White's assertion that he was confident that the project was supported at an early stage) that Cllr Gallagher was less supportive than was Cllr Wright. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Wright's evidence, in that regard, corroborated Mr Dunlop's assessment of Cllr Gallagher's attitude to the project, namely that while generally supportive, he believed that Mr White's plans were too ambitious, both in the timeframe he envisaged for the completion of the project and its scope.

8.07 These factors led the Tribunal to conclude that in 1990 Mr White believed it necessary that someone, other than himself, had to ensure that the councillors would support his project, and that, in particular, local councillors would lead the way in providing that support. It was common case that it was Mr Collins, known to Mr White in 1990 and known to Mr Dunlop at that time also, who recommended Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist to Mr White. The Tribunal was satisfied, that insofar as Mr Collins recommended Mr Dunlop's services to Mr White, this was done in the context of an appreciation that Mr Dunlop's lobbying skills could be applied to councillors, in addition to any other function he might undertake, such as liaising with the residents of Swords and/or with the media.

DISCUSSIONS REGARDING CLLRS GALLAGHER AND WRIGHT AT MR DUNLOP'S AND MR WHITE'S INITIAL MEETING

9.01 There was a significant conflict of evidence on this issue. Mr White specifically denied that he voiced any concern about Cllr Gallagher's support to Mr Dunlop and he denied that there was any circumstances arising from his discussions with Mr Dunlop, from which Mr Dunlop could have been left with an impression that his role was to ensure that Cllr Gallagher remained supportive, either by payment of money, or otherwise. Mr White also totally rejected any suggestion that Mr Dunlop could have been left with an impression that Mr White had himself 'looked after' Cllr Wright.

9.02 Mr Dunlop's testimony was that other than the impression he had been left with from his discussions with Mr White, neither he nor Mr White had then or subsequently discussed or alluded to the issue of payments to councilors. Mr Dunlop maintained that his understanding of the task he was required to perform was prompted by Mr White use of phrases such as, it was 'essential to make sure that other people were supportive' and that Mr Dunlop 'needn't worry about GV' as Mr White was 'looking after GV.'

9.03 The Tribunal considered that if Mr White had indeed used such phraseology, then Mr Dunlop could reasonably have interpreted his function in the manner in which he maintained he had done. An issue for the Tribunal was to decide if in fact Mr White had uttered these statements attributed to him. The Tribunal concluded that it could not assess either Mr Dunlop's or Mr White's credibility in this regard, in the absence of a consideration of the financial arrangements which were agreed between them.

9.04 On that issue there was once again a substantial conflict between the evidence of Mr Dunlop and Mr White. They did however both agree that there was a concluded agreement whereupon Mr Dunlop's fee was to be IR£10,000 plus Vat. They disagreed as to the issue of the payment of a success fee, and more importantly, Mr White strongly rejected that their agreement had been subsequently varied, or that he made any cash payments to Mr Dunlop, as alleged by Mr Dunlop.

9.05 In the first instance the Tribunal accepted that there was an agreement for the payment of IR£10,000 (plus Vat) to Mr Dunlop and the payment of a IR£4,000 success fee in cash in the event that the planning process was successful. There was a documented record of this agreement dated 25 July 1990 available to the Tribunal.

DID MR DUNLOP RECEIVE IR£5,000 IN CASH FROM MR WHITE IN AUGUST 1990?

10.01 As a matter of probability, the Tribunal accepted that this sum was paid to Mr Dunlop. The Tribunal was satisfied that the entry in Mr Dunlop's diary for 10 August 1990, namely the words 'three: R White' did indicate a cash payment of IR£3,000 from Mr White on that date. While there was no similar entry in Mr Dunlop's diary documenting the receipt of IR£2,000 in cash, the Tribunal accepted that this sum too was paid by Mr White to Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop claimed that he received it on 15 August 1990 and he pointed to a diary entry meeting with Mr White on that date namely '4pm R White.' The Tribunal noted that for the same date Mr Dunlop's diary had an entry '10.00 London' and thus, there had to be a question mark as to whether or not Mr Dunlop would have been in a position to meet with Mr White at 4pm in Dublin on the same date. Mr Dunlop testified that he did not believe that he was in London on that date, and also suggested that it was possible that, if he had been in London on that date, he could have returned to Dublin late morning, and in time for a meeting with Mr White at 4 o'clock on that afternoon.

10.02 Notwithstanding the element of doubt concerning the London entry for 15 August 1990, the Tribunal was satisfied that there were sufficient meetings between Mr Dunlop in August and September 1990 to have allowed for Mr

Dunlop's receipt of IR£2,000 from Mr White. Therefore the Tribunal was satisfied that he did receive the balance of the upfront cash payment on a date close to 15 August 1990, if not on that date.

10.03 One factor which persuaded the Tribunal that there had been a revision of the earlier agreement whereby Mr Dunlop was to receive IR£10,000 (plus Vat) and his receiving his fee in cash (half initially with the balance within three months) was the inability of Mr White to substantiate his claim to have made a payment of IR£2,500 or IR£3,000 by way of a Nosaka Ltd cheque to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd 'on account', as maintained by him. There was no evidence of any such payment in the accounts of Nosaka Ltd, and even though certain cheques which underlined payments made out of Nosaka Ltd's account in the month of October 1990 were not available, the relevant Nosaka Ltd bank statements revealed no payment of IR£3,000. It was clearly established that a payment of IR£2,500 or IR£3,000 was not made on the account at the relevant time.

10.04 In these circumstances, the Tribunal was persuaded to accept Mr Dunlop's testimony that he had received a IR£5,000 payment in cash in two tranches, from Mr White.

10.05 The fact that Mr Dunlop received cash from Mr White in the circumstances outlined by Mr Dunlop led the Tribunal to prefer Mr Dunlop's evidence to the effect that their initial discussion centered on issues such as ensuring that councillors would be kept onside, and on Mr White's concern that Cllr Gallagher would remain supportive. Mr Dunlop had indeed been left with the impression that Mr White understood that in order for councillors to remain 'supportive' money might have to be paid to them.

10.06 There was however no evidence that Cllr Wright was the recipient of any money from Mr White in relation to the Duff lands.

10.07 The Tribunal was also satisfied that at the time of Mr Dunlop's claim to have received cash payments from Mr White, Mr White had access to sufficient funds to make such cash payments, having regard to the substantial sum of IR£35,000 cash he had available to him at the end of May 1990. Accepting that this cash had been withdrawn with other projects in mind, the Tribunal was nevertheless satisfied a portion of this cash was available to Mr White for payment to Mr Dunlop in August 1990. There was no evidence to suggest that Mr White was otherwise privy to any dealings Mr Dunlop subsequently had with Cllr Gallagher, nor indeed did Mr Dunlop suggest that to have been the case.

10.08 It was probable that Mr Dunlop's tenure as a lobbyist terminated as a consequence of Mr White learning that Mr Dunlop had been retained by Mr Joe Tiernan in relation to lands at Balheary,²¹ a situation which Mr White perceived as a conflict of interest on Mr Dunlop's part. The final entry for Mr White in Mr Dunlop's diary was 6 March 1991. Evidence heard by the Tribunal in the Balheary Module established that Mr Dunlop was retained by Mr Tiernan on or about 12 February 1991, and that Mr Dunlop lobbied councillors in relation to a Balheary lands rezoning Motion between late February and 21 March 1991. The Tribunal accepted Mr White's contention that he had learned of Mr Dunlop's association with the Balheary lands from Cllr Gallagher.

10.09 By the time their association ended Mr Dunlop had been paid just IR£5,000 by Mr White. Initially, when relying on diary entries referable to Mr White for the final quarter of 1991, (those entries in fact related to 1990), Mr Dunlop suggested that a possible reason for those meetings was that he was seeking the balance of his fees, notwithstanding having resiled from the aforesaid diary references, and acknowledging that he had no contact with Mr White after March 1991. Mr Dunlop nevertheless maintained that while retained by Mr White, he had pursued the issue of his outstanding fees. Although there may have been some discussion on this issue between them in the final quarter of 1990, the Tribunal did not hear any persuasive evidence which suggested that Mr Dunlop sought to pursue the balance of his fees in any meaningful way.

MR DUNLOP'S DEALINGS WITH CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER (FF)

11.01 In his March 2006 statement Mr Dunlop stated as follows:

'Sometime after my first meeting with Mr White I spoke to both GV Wright and Cyril Gallagher. GV Wright evinced confidence that the proposal would be acceptable to the planners but said that the lands lay in Cyril Gallagher's electoral area and that unless Cyril Gallagher was in favour, none of the other Fianna Fail members would support it. I spoke to Cyril Gallagher about the proposal and he was enthusiast while being dubious about the planners' agreement. He also said that Mr White was too ambitious with regard to timing. He believed it would take much longer than Mr White anticipated and a lot of support would be needed from others.

Cyril Gallagher asked me for money for his support. I said that I understood – perhaps wrongly – Mr White has already spoken to him, that is to Cyril Gallagher, and that whatever arrangement had been arrived at between them would cover his, Cyril Gallagher's, involvement and support. Cyril Gallagher said that he had indeed spoke to Mr White but that no arrangement had been arrived at. He said that Mr White had been in contact with him to let him know that I was involved. I paid £2,000 to Cyril Gallagher shortly after this meeting at one of our regular lunches in the Grand Hotel, Malahide, Co. Dublin. I collected Cyril Gallagher from his home, drove him to the hotel and drove him home afterwards. The money was specifically for his support for the Duff lands site proposal by Mr White/Nosaka.'

²¹ See Chapter Twelve

11.02 In the course of his evidence, Mr Dunlop essentially confirmed the contents of his 2006 statement, but clarified that the IR£2,000 payment he claimed that he made to Cllr Gallagher had occurred shortly after he himself had been paid cash by Mr White. He was unable to state with certainty which of the two cash payments made to him by Mr White had funded the payment to Cllr Gallagher.

11.03 When asked to explain why he had felt able, as he claimed, to enquire of Cllr Gallagher whether any arrangement had been arrived at between him and Mr White, yet had not specifically addressed with Mr White the issue of payments to Cllr Gallagher or to councillors generally, Mr Dunlop stated: 'Well I didn't, this is the first occasion that I met Mr White, I had never met Mr White before whereas Cyril Gallagher was a friend of mine.'

11.04 Mr Dunlop testified that on the basis of his relationship and friendship with Cllr Gallagher, the latter's confirmation to him that no arrangement had been arrived at with Mr White had been sufficient for him to accept that that was the case.

11.05 Mr Dunlop was unable to say absolutely how the figure of IR£2,000 had been arrived at, and in particular, whether or not Cllr Gallagher had sought a higher figure, Mr Dunlop believed at the time that the sum was 'a suitable arrangement.'

11.06 Mr Dunlop stated that he did not advise Mr White, in advance of his intention to pay IR£2,000 to Cllr Gallagher, nor did he advise him of the payment subsequently. But he said that he had 'assured Mr White Mr Gallagher was onside supportive.'

11.07 Responding to questions in cross-examination by the solicitor representing Cllr Gallagher's estate, Mr Dunlop suggested that his association and friendship with Cllr Gallagher arose in the context of the association of both with Fianna Fail, prior to any involvement on the part of Mr Dunlop with 'anything happening in Dublin County Council.'

11.08 Mr Dunlop believed that the Duff lands project was the first occasion in respect of which he gave Cllr Gallagher money, although he was unable to exclude the possibility that he contributed to Cllr Gallagher's fundraising events prior to that.

11.09 Mr Dunlop further maintained that he was not surprised to have been asked for money by Cllr Gallagher stating: 'well... it was an understanding on my part this was part of the culture that existed in Dublin County Council I think I have given evidence to that effect previously, I didn't invent it'.

11.10 Acknowledging that there were no entries in his 1990 diary relating to Cllr Gallagher, Mr Dunlop explained that the luncheon date in the Grand Hotel in Malahide, where he claimed that he paid the money to Cllr Gallagher was set up: 'either by telephone or face to face, that we would meet and I would come and collect him.'

CLLR GALLAGHER'S INVOLVEMENT IN THE PLANNING APPLICATION / MATERIAL CONTRAVENTION PROCESS

12.01 Following upon the lodging of Nosaka Ltd's planning permission application on 22 of August 1990, the planning file was discussed at a number of county council and Fingal Committee meetings between then and the ultimately successful material contravention vote which took place on 22 April 1991. The earliest written record which documented Cllr Gallagher's interest in this matter was a county council note dated 17 September 1990 which indicated that the planning file was discussed at a meeting of the Fingal Committee on that date. It was noted that Cllrs Wright, Gallagher, Devitt and Mulvahill were recommending that the planning application be granted. Cllrs Owen and Boland were noted as opposing the application. The planning file was next discussed at the Fingal Committee on 19 November 1990 where the records indicated that the issue was to be relisted at Cllr Gallagher's request. Cllr Gallagher again requested a relisting of the issue on 17 December 1990 'to allow time to assess additional information lodged 19/11/90.' This was a likely reference to the fact that between August 1990 and January 1991 county council officials had sought further information from Nosaka Ltd pertaining to the planning permission application. On 21 January 1991, as was evident from a note of yet another meeting of the Fingal Committee, the committee voted on and passed a proposal 'that MC procedures be initiated,' and noted that the 'manager may not accept rec of cmttee.' The attendees at that meeting were not recorded on the document. A record of a meeting of 18 February 1991 again noted a request from Cllr Gallagher to relist the matter. It recorded as follows: 'Discussions to be held with Applicant with a view to possible phased development of site.'

12.02 It was common case that Cllr Gallagher, and Cllr Devitt, respectively proposed and seconded the ultimately successful material contravention vote.

DID MR DUNLOP PAY CLLR GALLAGHER IR£2,000 IN CONNECTION WITH THE DUFF LANDS?

13.01 As was the case in other Modules which were the subject of public inquiry by the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop's evidence concerning Cllr Gallagher, on its face, was undenied, given the fact that Cllr Gallagher was deceased. It appeared from Mr Dunlop's testimony in this Module that the Duff material contravention proposal was the first occasion on which he was asked for money by Cllr Gallagher. The testimony of Mr Dunlop was to the effect that Cllr Gallagher's request for money, and Mr Dunlop's acceding to that request arose from the 'culture' or 'system' which Mr Dunlop said he was confronted with from the time he commenced the lobbying of elected representatives of Dublin County Council. The Tribunal has accepted that such a culture existed and that Mr Dunlop both embraced and enhanced it. Mr Dunlop has testified both in this Module, and in other Modules, as to his friendship and long association with Cllr Gallagher, which predated Mr Dunlop's career as a lobbyist.

13.02 Having regard to a number of land zoning matters which came before Dublin County Council during the period March to May 1993, and in respect of which Mr Dunlop claimed he paid Cllr Gallagher in return for his support, the Tribunal accepted as a matter of probability that such payments had been made, having regard in particular to, not only the fact that Cllr Gallagher was a signatory to motions prepared and/or promoted by Mr Dunlop but that in or around the time Mr Dunlop claimed he made payments to Cllr Gallagher, the latter's An Post and bank accounts revealed round figure lodgements which the Tribunal found, did not relate to any known or accounted for source of income available to Cllr Gallagher at the time.

13.03 In the case of this particular Module, the Tribunal established that Cllr Gallagher's bank accounts did not reveal any specific lodgement of sums equivalent to or equating to IR£2,000 in the period August to September 1990, the timeframe,²² on Mr Dunlop's account of events, in which he made the claimed payment to Cllr Gallagher. However the Tribunal did not believe that the failure to establish the existence or otherwise of specific unaccounted lodgements to his accounts should be the sole determinant of the issue of whether or not a payment was made by Mr Dunlop, given the fact that Mr Dunlop's claimed payment was in cash.

13.04 In the course of his evidence, Mr Dunlop acknowledged that his 1990 diary did not record any entries relating to Cllr Gallagher, in contrast to 1991 (three entries), 1992 (one entry), 1993 (two entries) and 1994 (two entries). On its face therefore the absence of diary entries for Cllr Gallagher in Mr Dunlop's diary for the relevant period in 1990, to some extent, called into question whether or not Mr Dunlop met with Cllr Gallagher in relation to the Duff lands. Mr Dunlop, in the course of his testimony, while acknowledging the absence of diary entries, nevertheless maintained that he had meetings with Cllr Gallagher on a regular basis at named locations, and the thrust of his testimony in this Module (and indeed in other Modules) was that Cllr Gallagher was accessible to him at those named locations as and when Mr Dunlop required.

13.05 An analysis of Mr Dunlop's diaries in a number of Modules (which related to the making of the Development Plan in the years 1991 to 1993) failed to reveal substantial entries for scheduled meetings with Cllr Gallagher (compared to such entries Mr Dunlop had diarised for other councillors). However, the Tribunal took the view that the absence of diaried entries should not of itself be the sole determinant of whether or not Mr Dunlop met with Cllr Gallagher in 1990. Moreover, given that the evidence over a number of Modules established that Mr Dunlop's involvement in the making of the 1993 Development Plan did not commence until the beginning of 1991, the absence of entries referable to councillors in Mr Dunlop's 1990 diary was not surprising.

13.06 It was accepted that Mr Dunlop did not procure either Cllr Gallagher or Cllr Devitt's²³ signature to the material contravention motion which was put to the council on 22 April 1991. The likely reason for this was that, by that stage, Mr Dunlop's involvement with the Duff lands had ceased.

13.07 Mr Dunlop testified that the location of his payment to Cllr Gallagher was the Grand Hotel, Malahide. He was unsure of the exact date of payment.

13.08 In the course of his cross-examination by the solicitor for Cllr Gallagher's estate, various motives were attributed to Mr Dunlop for the allegation he made against Cllr Gallagher, in the context of the Duff lands. It was suggested to Mr Dunlop that his assertion of a payment of IR£2,000 to Cllr Gallagher was in effect an attempt by Mr Dunlop to reduce a potential revenue liability on his part, having regard to the fact that he was admitting, over the course of evidence given to the Tribunal (in a number of Modules), that he had substantial unaccounted for cash reserves in the 1990s. The Tribunal did not consider this to have been a probable motive for exaggerating or inventing payments made by him to councillors.

13.09 It was also suggested to Mr Dunlop that he was unlikely to have paid Cllr Gallagher half of the total of IR£5,000 cash he claimed to have received from Mr White. Mr Dunlop rejected this suggestion. The Tribunal considered it probable that at the time of his claim to have paid over IR£2,000 to Cllr Gallagher, Mr Dunlop had the expectation of receiving the balance of his IR£10,000 fee from Mr White and had the expectation of a further success fee of IR£4,000 cash if the material vote was successful.

13.10 Mr Dunlop was questioned in relation to the fact that nowhere in his October 2000 statement had he attributed 1990 as a year in which he paid Cllr Gallagher IR£2,000. That statement did however, as already noted above, include his claim to having paid Cllr Gallagher IR£2,000 in relation to the Duff lands. In that portion of his October 2000 statement headed 'Cyril Gallagher,' Mr Dunlop made reference to his having paid him IR£18,000, in total, in various tranches (a total of IR£1,000 in 1991, a total of IR£4,000 in 1992, a total of IR£10,000 in 1993, together with an estimated undated IR£3,000 amount). Having regard to the fact that Mr Dunlop made reference, on 19 May 2000 (in private interview), to having paid Cllr Gallagher IR£2,000, and having regard to the fact that this claim was repeated in the October 2000 statement and in his later March 2006 statement, the Tribunal did not regard the absence of any reference to the year 1990 in Mr Dunlop's October 2000 statement as a significant credibility factor.

13.11 The Tribunal was satisfied, in all the circumstances, that Mr Dunlop paid IR£2,000 to Cllr Gallagher in return for his support for a positive outcome in the application for planning permission/material contravention in relation to the Duff lands, and that this payment had been, in effect, solicited by Cllr Gallagher for that purpose. The said payment was corrupt.

LK SHIELDS LITIGATION

agreed. He said he would pay me an initial £5,000 cash and the remainder within three months. Again, I agreed.

Mr. White and I met again in the Shelbourne Hotel on 10th August 1990. At this meeting he gave me an envelope which he said he had hoped would contain £5,000 cash but which contained only £3,000 cash. He said would give me the remainder shortly. He did so in the same location on Wednesday, 15th August when he provided me with an envelope containing £2,000 cash.

Thereafter I met Mr. White on approximately twelve (12) other occasions (between August 16th, 1990 and 14th December, 1991).

Sometime after my first meeting with Mr. White I spoke to both G.V. Wright and Cyril Gallagher. G.V. Wright evinced confidence that the proposal would be acceptable to the planners but said that the lands lay in Cyril Gallagher's electoral area and that unless Cyril Gallagher was in favour, none of the other Fianna Fáil members would support it. I spoke to Cyril Gallagher about the proposal and he was enthusiastic while being dubious about the planners' agreement. He also said that Mr. White was too ambitious with regard to timing. He believed it would take much longer than Mr. White anticipated and a lot of support would be needed from others.

Cyril Gallagher asked me for money for his support. I said that I understood – perhaps wrongly – that Mr. White had already spoken to him, that is to Cyril Gallagher, and that whatever arrangement had been arrived at between them would cover his, Cyril Gallagher's, involvement and support. Cyril Gallagher said that he had indeed spoken to Mr. White but that no arrangement had been arrived at. He said Mr. White had been in contact with him to let him know that I was involved.

I paid £2,000 to Cyril Gallagher shortly after this meeting at one of our regular lunches in the Grand Hotel, Malahide, Co. Dublin. I collected Cyril Gallagher from his home, drove him to the hotel and drove him home afterwards. The money was specifically for his support for the Duff lands site proposal by Mr. White/Nosaka.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN- MR FRANK DUNLOP¹

INTRODUCTION

1.01 In this Chapter, the Tribunal considered Mr Dunlop's early involvement with the Tribunal and other issues of particular relevance to his credibility as a witness. The individual Chapters relevant to the modules in which Mr Dunlop featured as a witness include the Tribunal's consideration of Mr Dunlop's evidence in those modules and findings made by the Tribunal. This Chapter should therefore be read in conjunction with those preceding Chapters.

1.02 In addition to Mr Dunlop's evidence to the Tribunal on Days 145-148 (April/May 2000), Mr Dunlop gave evidence in 14 of the modules which were the subject of the Tribunal's public hearings. Mr Dunlop gave evidence on 99 days, and was the Tribunal's longest witness. His last day of evidence was 4 March 2008.

THE TRIBUNAL'S EARLY INTEREST IN AND CONTACT WITH MR DUNLOP

2.01 Mr Dunlop initially came to the attention of the Tribunal in early 1998 (within a couple of months following the establishment of the Tribunal), when his name was referred to in a telephone conversation between Counsel for the Tribunal and Mr Tom Gilmartin (who was then living in the UK). In the course of that telephone conversation (the first of many between Counsel for the Tribunal and Mr Gilmartin) on 5 February 1998, (according to a note compiled by Counsel for the Tribunal at that time), Mr Gilmartin stated that: 'Frank Dunlop is a major bag-man for cash payments to Fianna Fail. He had a major input in relation to Council decisions and rezoning decisions.' In the course of his evidence, Mr Gilmartin repeated this claim on a number of occasions.

2.02 Notes taken in relation to a subsequent telephone conversation between Counsel for the Tribunal and Mr Gilmartin on 20 February 1998 indicated Mr Gilmartin as informing the Tribunal that:

'O'Callaghan then got money (£300,000) paid to Frank Dunlop (who was the 'bag man') and he paid off Councillors including Hanrahan, Lawlor and others. There had been meetings between Lawlor, O'Callaghan and Dunlop in Dail Eireann and elsewhere. The reason that he was forced out was that he would not pay off the corrupt politicians.' (The reference to 'the reason that he was forced out' was apparently a reference to Mr. Gilmartin).

¹ For Mr Dunlop's background see Part 5 of Chapter Two.

2.03 In the course of a further telephone conversation with Counsel for the Tribunal on 26 February 1998, Mr Gilmartin 'talked of his concern at the number of payments that were made out of the accounts of that company (an apparent reference to Barkhill), to Chevron (sic) and to Frank Dunlop.' This was the first occasion on which the Tribunal became aware of Mr Dunlop's company, Shefran (and which was mistakenly misspelt in the telephone discussion note as 'Chevron').

2.04 In the months that followed, the Tribunal's private inquiries focused almost exclusively on the circumstances relating to the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands.

2.05 On 4 October 1998 articles appeared in the Sunday Business Post newspaper written by one of its senior journalists, Mr Frank Connolly, under the heading 'Lawlor 'fees' now donations.' The articles were accompanied by photographs of Mr Lawlor and Mr Dunlop. This was apparently the first occasion on which Mr Dunlop was publicly identified in relation to matters then being investigated by the Tribunal. The articles suggested that Mr Dunlop had been paid IR£500,000 in fees for his assistance in obtaining rezoning and planning permission for the Quarryvale lands. It also claimed that Mr Dunlop had confirmed that part of that sum had been used by him to make political donations, which it was said were fully documented. In sworn evidence to the Tribunal subsequently, Mr Dunlop accepted that he may have confirmed the figure of IR£500,000 to Mr Connolly. The article also stated that Mr Dunlop had confirmed that part of his duty as a lobbyist was to make political contributions to a range of politicians and political parties over a number of years.

2.06 The Tribunal's first communication with Mr Dunlop was in the form of a letter addressed to him dated 6 October 1998 in which information was sought from him in relation to the articles which had been published in the Sunday Business Post on 4 October 1998 and other information relating to Quarryvale. Subsequently, all correspondence between the Tribunal and Mr Dunlop was conducted through Mr Dunlop's solicitors, LK Shields.

2.07 Mr Dunlop was aware from possibly late 1997, but certainly by May 1998, that his activities as a lobbyist during the review of the 1983 Development Plan were likely to be the subject of inquiry by the Tribunal. Having regard to his knowledge of Mr Gilmartin's antipathy towards him, Mr Dunlop knew that Mr Gilmartin's interaction both with the Tribunal and the media in September/October 1998 was likely to have adverse consequences for him. Accordingly, by September 1998 Mr Dunlop developed a strategy to deal with the likely fallout from the publicity being generated by Mr Gilmartin's disclosures, and the possibility of his (Mr Dunlop's) imminent involvement with the Tribunal. This strategy included: 1) instructing his accountant to make limited disclosure to the Revenue Commissioners to deal with his tax liability from the Shefran payments; 2) requesting Mr O'Callaghan to pay money which Mr Dunlop believed was due to him in order to deal with his tax liability, and 3) briefing journalists to counteract or minimise what was being written about him.

2.08 The Tribunal proceeded to seek discovery from Mr Dunlop and his companies. Mr Dunlop was invited to make written submissions to the Tribunal as to the terms of the proposed orders for discovery, on or before 24 November 1998 or alternatively make oral submissions through his Counsel on 25 November 1998. In due course, 9 December 1998 was fixed as the date for the hearing of oral submissions.

2.09 By letter dated 23 October 1998, Mr Dunlop was requested by the Tribunal to attend its offices for a private interview, as a means of providing the information which had been requested by the Tribunal. This invitation was declined by Mr Dunlop.

2.10 On 12 February 1999 the Tribunal ordered Mr Dunlop and his companies to make discovery on oath on or before 28 February 1999. Following Mr Dunlop's failure to comply with the Tribunal's Order, Mr Dunlop's solicitors were written to on 23 June 1999 and advised that unless he complied forthwith with that order for discovery, enforcement proceedings would be commenced in the High Court pursuant to the provisions of Section 4 of the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act 1921/1997.

2.11 Mr Dunlop's solicitors advised the Tribunal on 29 June 1999 that the documents sought (being documents dated between September 1991 and September 1993), were of a historic nature and that the extraction of banking information therefrom had caused difficulties. A further extension of time until the close of business on 2 July 1999 was then granted by the Tribunal. On 6 July 1999, a draft affidavit of discovery together with copy documentation referred to therein was delivered to the Tribunal. The Affidavit as sworn was subsequently provided to the Tribunal on 7 July 1999. On 15 December 1999 Mr Dunlop was requested to provide a statement setting out such information as he was in a position to provide to the Tribunal in connection with the rezoning of Quarryvale, and his role in relation thereto.

2.12 On 27 January 2000, the Tribunal informed Mr Dunlop's solicitors that it would consider on 3 February 2000 whether or not to make an order in relation to an extended period of discovery. Mr Dunlop's solicitors advised the Tribunal that their client wished to make oral submissions in relation to the making of that order and they were advised that such oral submissions could be made at a public sitting of the Tribunal. However, in advance of the date fixed for those oral submissions, Mr Dunlop's solicitors furnished written submissions under protest because of the insistence of the Tribunal that oral submissions would have to be made in public.

MR DUNLOP'S EVIDENCE IN PUBLIC IN APRIL AND MAY 2000

3.01 The Tribunal made the proposed discovery orders against Mr Dunlop, extending the period of discovery, on 27 March 2000. On 6 April 2000, the Tribunal wrote to his solicitors advising that in view of Mr Dunlop having declined to voluntarily provide a statement to the Tribunal, it had no option but to exercise its statutory powers to otherwise obtain the relevant information in order to progress its inquiries. In that regard, Mr Dunlop was served with a witness summons returnable for 12 April 2000 requiring him to attend at a public sitting of the Tribunal and to give evidence on his own behalf and on behalf of Shefran and Frank Dunlop & Associates. Mr Dunlop, having, through his solicitors, advised the Tribunal of travel arrangements to the United States already made by him, was facilitated by the Tribunal in bringing forward his appearance at the Tribunal's public hearings to 11 April 2000 (Day 145). On the eve of that date, the Tribunal was furnished with an affidavit of discovery sworn by Mr Dunlop, in purported compliance with the order made by the Tribunal on 27 March 2000.

3.02 While in his July 1999 affidavit of discovery Mr Dunlop had discovered accounts held in his and his wife's name, and in the name of Frank Dunlop & Associates, in AIB and accounts held in the name of Shefran in AIB and Bank of Ireland, no disclosure was made by him of other accounts he had in AIB, in the Irish Nationwide Building Society and in Midland Bank Trust in Jersey. This non-disclosure was to remain the position for almost a year save that in February 2000 Mr Dunlop disclosed the existence of the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account in particular circumstances. On 11 February 2000 Mr Dunlop's solicitors wrote to the Tribunal and informed it that Mr Dunlop had 'inadvertently' failed to disclose a number of other accounts held by him and his wife in AIB, namely a number of home loan accounts, a term loan account and a current account (the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account). It appeared to the Tribunal that Mr Dunlop's decision to disclose the existence, in particular, of the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account, was triggered by an order for discovery made against AIB, of which Mr Dunlop was a notice party. Indeed Mr Dunlop as much as acknowledged that, having become aware that AIB had disclosed the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account (and other accounts) to the Tribunal, he had then (through his solicitor) disclosed them himself.

3.03 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he could not recollect with certainty who had advised him about the extent of AIB's disclosure to the Tribunal. However, an entry in Mr Dunlop's diary for 27 January 2000 read as follows: 'spoke to John Hanafee AIB College St. re 'Flood contact' with Bank!'

3.04 Mr Dunlop appeared before the Tribunal on 11 April 2000 (Day 145). Limited legal representation was granted to Mr Dunlop's solicitors, LK Shields and his Junior and Senior Counsel.

3.05 This initial period of taking sworn evidence from Mr Dunlop was concentrated over three days in April 2000, namely 11 April 2000 (Day 145), 18 April 2000 (Day 146), 19 April 2000 (Day 147) and on 9 May 2000 (Day 148). Much of the inquiry being made of Mr Dunlop on those dates concentrated on his application of the Shefran payments received from Mr O'Callaghan, and the activity on his AIB 042 Rathfarnham account.

MR DUNLOP'S LISTS

4.01 On a number of occasions, in the course of his sworn evidence to the Tribunal in 2000, Mr Dunlop was requested to provide information to the Tribunal by means of writing information on sheets of paper for provision to the Tribunal via its Registrar. This exercise was conducted in this way in order to avoid or minimise unnecessary or premature public disclosure by Mr Dunlop of the identities of individuals or corporations, in the absence of prior notification to those concerned. Subsequent to such notification the content of those lists, and which were relevant to the Tribunal's public inquiries, was disclosed in the course of its public hearings.

4.02 The majority of Mr Dunlop's lists were provided in the course of his first few days of sworn evidence, namely on Days 145, 146, 147 and 148. While some of the lists contained innocuous information which was of little or no relevance to the Tribunal's inquiries, a number of them revealed important information in relation to alleged payments made to, and by, Mr Dunlop and which were of particular relevance to the Tribunal's Terms of Reference. In particular, in a number of the lists Mr Dunlop identified politicians to whom he paid money and politicians who solicited money from him within specific periods of time, as well as the identities of landowners/developers whom he alleged paid him money, some or all of which was subsequently allegedly paid to politicians.

4.03 Mr Dunlop's July 1999 affidavit of discovery included a document which he said listed legitimate political donations made by himself and Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd. The lists (entitled 'Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited Political Contributions 1.9.91 – 1.9.93' and 'Frank Dunlop Political Contributions 1.9.91 – 1.9.93') did not identify any political donations for 1991. Mr Dunlop's claimed expenditure by way of political donations and contributions to political fundraising events amounted to IR£18,250.

On Day 145 (11 April 2000) Mr Dunlop confirmed that apart from the information on the aforesaid lists, no other payments or political contributions of any kind had been made by his firm or on its behalf or on behalf of anyone else to elected representatives of Dublin County Council or to any other politician.

4.04 One of the nine lists prepared by Mr Dunlop on Day 145, contained just one name, that of Cllr Tom Hand (who was by that time deceased), who was identified by Mr Dunlop as the only elected public representative who had requested money from him in return for supporting the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. Mr Dunlop was to, controversially, subsequently, identify a number of other councillors whom he claimed also sought money from him in relation to Quarryvale and in relation to other land rezoning matters in County Dublin.

4.05 In the interval between Mr Dunlop's appearance at the public hearing of the Tribunal on Day 145 and his reappearance at the public hearing on Day 146, media reports suggested that Mr Dunlop would disclose to the Tribunal that Cllr Hand had sought a payment of IR£250,000 in connection with the rezoning of Quarryvale and that he had given Mr Dunlop an offshore account number to facilitate the payment of this money. Mr Dunlop denied that he was the source of those media reports relating to that allegation against Cllr Hand, although he acknowledged that the author of the article (the journalist Mr Sam Smyth), and himself had exchanged telephone calls and that Mr Smyth had attempted to contact him in New York in the period between those public hearings. Up to, and including Day 145, Mr Dunlop had identified Cllr Hand as the only member of Dublin County Council who had ever asked him for money in return for his vote in a rezoning matter.

4.06 On Day 146 Mr Dunlop explained that he had received requests for money, for what he described as legitimate electoral reasons, from councillors whom he identified in a list (described as the 'Preliminary List') entitled 'Members of Dublin County Council who requested monies from Frank Dunlop.'

4.07 At the time this list was created, Mr Dunlop did not state that he had ever made improper or corrupt payments. However, Mr Dunlop would go on to testify that the list included the names of individuals who had requested what he termed legitimate political contributions, and individuals who had requested money in connection with rezoning matters. This distinction, which Mr Dunlop would later make, was not apparent on Day 146.

4.08 Most of Mr Dunlop's evidence on Day 146 was taken up with him being questioned about withdrawals from his AIB 042 Rathfarnham account. This account had been opened with a lodgement of IR£30,600.88 on 9 April 1991, and was followed by a further lodgement on 29 May 1991 of IR£48,400. There were further lodgements of IR£80,000 on 5 June 1991 and IR£15,000 on 11 June 1991. Mr Dunlop was questioned in relation to a number of transactions on this account and in relation to the apparent coincidence in time between the level of activity in the account and the zoning motions affecting Quarryvale then being considered within Dublin County Council. Mr Dunlop stated:

'There is an undeniable coincidence in date, in date terms, Mr. Hanratty. That is undeniable. If you are suggesting to me, and I, having listened to the exchange, I do not think you are so suggesting given that you have now said that there are no allegations against me; if you are suggesting that any monies out of any account in my name were used for illicit or improper purposes, the answer to that is an emphatic 'No.'

4.09 When Mr Dunlop made the foregoing statement in the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Counsel for the Tribunal suggested that between then and the following day, Mr Dunlop should try to refresh his memory as to how the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account monies were applied by him. At this point, the Sole Member of the Tribunal addressed Mr Dunlop in the following terms:

'Well one thing I would like to know, it seems to me to be an unusual bank account. It doesn't have a cheque book, it's a current account. It doesn't have a cheque book. It has large sums of money in it and it must have been put to or designed for a purpose or purposes and perhaps you might reflect overnight and tell us what was the purpose of the bank account, as such. Because it seems to me to be...there is something unique about it. I don't know what it is by the way and I am not suggesting that I do. Perhaps you might think about that.'

4.10 On the resumption of the public hearings on the following day, Day 147, Mr Dunlop, when asked if he had considered matters further based on the comments from the Sole Member of the Tribunal made on the previous day, responded as follows: 'I will answer any question that you ask me, to the best of my ability, in relation to the lodgements and the disbursements.'

4.11 In the course of his evidence on Day 147 Mr Dunlop provided the Tribunal with a list - the ‘1991 Local Election Contributions’ list - purported to be Mr Dunlop’s explanation of a number of withdrawals made from his AIB 042 Rathfarnham account to fund disbursements to sixteen identified councillors in the course of the 1991 Local Election campaign, totalling IR£112,000. As set out elsewhere in this Report, the Tribunal established that Mr Dunlop’s disbursements to identified individuals at that time was not only funded by the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account withdrawals but was also contributed to from other sources, including Mr Dunlop encashing a number of Shefran cheques.

4.12 On Day 148 Mr Dunlop provided the ‘1992 List’, a list numbered 17 to 30, which was a continuation of the 1991 list. It was Mr Dunlop’s explanation for the disbursement of monies withdrawn from his AIB 042 Rathfarnham account in 1992.

4.13 Mr Dunlop created yet another list on Day 148, numbered 31 to 38, a continuation of the 1991 and 1992 lists, which he said at that time represented payments made to the individuals named on the 1991 and 1992 lists, on other occasions.

4.14 A further list entitled ‘1991 – 1993 \(inclusive\)’ provided to the Tribunal on Day 148 named developers/landowners whom, it was alleged had provided Mr Dunlop with money in connection with the review of the 1983 Development Plan.

4.15 Mr Dunlop was privately interviewed by members of the Tribunal’s legal team on eight occasions in May 2000, and on one occasion in June 2000.

4.16 In the course of his sworn evidence to the Tribunal between 2002 and 2008, Mr Dunlop was closely examined by Counsel for the Tribunal, and by other interested parties, in relation to the accuracy of the information provided in his various lists. In a number of instances, Mr Dunlop acknowledged that some of the information in his lists was inaccurate and he proceeded, in the course of his evidence to qualify, or otherwise alter some of that information.

MR DUNLOP’S CREDIBILITY AS A WITNESS

5.01 Mr Dunlop presented as a problematic witness for the Tribunal. As was the case with many witnesses to the Tribunal in the course of its public hearings, Mr Dunlop’s credibility was a subject of continuous scrutiny, both by the Tribunal itself and the parties (or their legal representatives) who exercised their right to have him cross-examined. Such scrutiny was understandable and appropriate having regard to the fact that in many instances certain individuals became the subject of inquiry by the Tribunal largely, or entirely, as a consequence of Mr Dunlop's allegations that they had been involved in corrupt activity with him. After a dramatic volte face, in April 2000, Mr Dunlop sought to present himself as a witness who, from that time, while acknowledging the role he played in receiving payments for disbursement to councillors and in making payments to councillors, implicated named individuals as having been involved in wrongful activity with him.

5.02 The dilemma for the Tribunal arose from the fact that, as referred to in the preceding paragraph, Mr Dunlop, having defied the Tribunal's efforts to obtain truthful information from him prior to April 2000, maintained that from that time and for the entire duration of the Tribunal's public hearings, he provided the Tribunal with truthful information and evidence. Mr Dunlop described this transition from his being a non-cooperate witness to a cooperative witness as 'crossing the Rubicon.' However, and regrettably, Mr Dunlop did not make the transition from being an untruthful witness to a truthful witness with any sense of completeness. The Tribunal was satisfied that in a number of instances, and in many and important and fundamental respects, Mr Dunlop continued, post April 2000, to actively and purposely mislead the Tribunal. This created an enormous difficulty for the Tribunal and rendered the issue of his credibility to be a persistent complicating factor in its deliberations.

5.03 Particular examples of occasions where the Tribunal found Mr Dunlop to have been an untruthful witness, included his attempts to conceal and/or obliterate information written in his diaries (see below), the assistance provided by him to Cllrs MJ Cosgrave and Liam Creaven in the preparation of their statements to the Tribunal in 2003 (see below) and, perhaps most significantly, his contention that Mr O'Callaghan was, to his knowledge, unaware of his corrupt activity in paying money to councillors in relation to Quarryvale whereas, as found by the Tribunal, the opposite was the case. This false position adopted by Mr Dunlop went to the core of the Quarryvale inquiry (Chapter Two). The Tribunal considered rejecting the entire of Mr Dunlop's evidence for the reasons stated above, on the basis that Mr Dunlop's credibility had been so diluted as to have rendered the reliability of any of his evidence questionable. The Tribunal decided not to take this course of action and was satisfied that in a number of respects and on a number of occasions Mr Dunlop did give truthful evidence which it could and should accept. In arriving at this approach to Mr Dunlop's evidence the Tribunal took account of a number of factors including a distinct lack of evidence of any animus on the part of Mr Dunlop towards any of the individuals against whom he gave evidence or who were the object of his allegations of wrongdoing. The Tribunal failed to identify any factors which might explain a motivation on Mr Dunlop's part to damage the reputation of others, with many of whom he had clearly shared a strong bond of friendship. The Tribunal rejected one particular suggestion put to Mr Dunlop in cross-examination, namely, that his reason for claiming that he paid money to councillors was to reduce the personal profit element of money provided to him by landowners/developers in order to minimise his ultimate tax liabilities. Likewise, it also rejected a reason suggested by some individuals, that he was targeting them with allegations of wrongdoing because of the negative outcome to the rezoning attempt relating to the Pennine Option lands (in which Mr Dunlop had an ownership interest) in April/May 1993. Nevertheless, the Tribunal's approach to Mr Dunlop's evidence was necessarily one of extreme caution, coupled with a determination (made at an early stage of its deliberations in the writing of this Report), to, where appropriate, make adverse findings against individuals based (or largely based) on Mr Dunlop's evidence only in circumstances where it was convinced on the balance of the strongest probability that such findings were justified.

5.04 To the extent that Mr Dunlop was motivated to provide the Tribunal with a mixture of truths and untruths, it was the Tribunal's belief that Mr Dunlop, from the outset of his dealings with the Tribunal, set a course for himself designed to protect the interests of certain parties, most evidently Mr O'Callaghan in the Quarryvale inquiry. It appeared to the Tribunal that this course, prior to April 2000, involved a determination on Mr Dunlop's part to mislead the Tribunal in order to thwart its inquiry into Quarryvale in the expectation that the Tribunal would never discover the truth. That course however became unstuck in April 2000 when Mr Dunlop had to contend with the Tribunal's probing of substantial financial transactions which theretofore had not been disclosed by him, and which required explanations from him, which were clearly in conflict with information theretofore provided by him to the Tribunal.

MR DUNLOP'S DIARIES

6.01 In the course of his business as a lobbyist/public relations representative, Mr Dunlop maintained diaries on an annual basis. His usual practice was to record in his diaries details of pre-arranged meetings and other information for his own use. Unexpected or unplanned meetings or events or meetings arranged at very short notice were not necessarily always recorded in his diaries. The diaries were maintained by Mr Dunlop personally.

6.02 On many occasions in the course of the Tribunal's public hearings, the Tribunal acknowledged that Mr Dunlop's diaries provided a useful record of Mr Dunlop's activities, particularly in relation to his contact with councillors, politicians and others. The Tribunal was however conscious of the possibility that the diaries, the originals of which were not provided to the Tribunal until 2001 and 2002 (at the request of the Tribunal) and which had been up to then maintained solely by Mr Dunlop might have been deliberately interfered with or otherwise altered for the purposes of misleading the Tribunal and might not therefore be a reliable record of information and activity which, on their face, they recorded. On occasion, in the course of the Tribunal's public hearings, witnesses against whom Mr Dunlop made allegations of corrupt payments questioned the authenticity of some of his diary entries.

6.03 On many, but not all occasions, Mr Dunlop's diary entries were corroborated by other evidence including, the sworn evidence of witnesses or information found in the diaries maintained by other individuals or by other information/evidence.

THE DISCOVERY OF MR DUNLOP'S DIARIES TO THE TRIBUNAL

6.04 On 12 February 1999 Discovery Orders were made against Mr Dunlop and against his companies, Shefran and Frank Dunlop and Associates. The Orders required Mr Dunlop to make discovery on oath of certain categories of documentation including all records relating to any business, dealings, or transactions between Mr Dunlop or his companies, and Barkhill, Riga and Mr Owen O'Callaghan, in respect of the period 1 September 1991 to 1 September 1993.

6.05 In purported compliance with the Tribunal's discovery order of 12 February 1999, Mr Dunlop swore an Affidavit of Discovery of 7 July 1999 in which, inter alia, he included in its first schedule, 188 extracts from his personal diaries in respect of the aforesaid 1991/1993 period.

6.06 Copies of pages from Mr Dunlop's diaries which included the relevant extracts were provided to the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop having first redacted information which, he claimed, was to his understanding not captured by the Discovery Order. Mr Dunlop explained to the Tribunal that the method of redaction used for the most part by him in this exercise, involved the application by him of, inter alia, 'post-it' type stickers to conceal the information to be redacted and then copying the diary page with the result that the redacted extract/entry could not be read.

6.07 On 27 March 2000, further Orders for Discovery were made by the Tribunal against Mr Dunlop and his companies, essentially in similar terms to the Tribunal's Orders made on 12 February 1999, but in respect of different periods. The Orders of 27 March 2000 covered the periods 1 January 1990 to 1 September 1991, and 1 September 1993 to 30 December 1993. In purported compliance with the Discovery Order of 27 March 2000, Mr Dunlop swore an Affidavit of Discovery on 10 April 2000. He alluded, inter alia, in its first schedule, to 85 diary extracts in respect of the two additional periods covered by the new orders. As had been done with his earlier discovery of diary material, Mr Dunlop again followed a similar process of redacting from view diary material which was not, in his view, captured by the Discovery Order.

6.08 The diary extracts referred to in Mr Dunlop's Affidavit were provided to the Tribunal on 17 April 2000 some days after he first gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal on Day 145.

6.09 On 25 October 2001 the Tribunal requested Mr Dunlop to provide the originals of his diaries for the period 1988 to 1997. The Tribunal was advised that Mr Dunlop was no longer in possession of his 1988 and 1989 diaries, and the Tribunal was provided with the originals of his diaries for the period 1990 to 1997 on 30 October 2001, and later on 24 October 2002, again at the request of the Tribunal, provided the originals of his diaries for the period 1998 to 2001. A number of diary entries, and their forensic analysis, were the subject of inquiry in the course of the Tribunal's public hearings.

THE ATTEMPTED OBLITERATION OR ALTERATION OF DIARY ENTRIES

6.10 It was not surprising that Mr Dunlop's revelation that, prior to 18 April 2000, his dealings with the Tribunal had been less than frank, called into question the authenticity of his diary entries.

6.11 The redaction of some diary information, (which ought not to have been redacted because it was related to Quarryvale), became evident to the Tribunal when, in 2001, in compliance with the Tribunal's direction, Mr Dunlop provided his original diaries for the period 1990 to 1997.

6.12 When the original diaries were duly provided, it became apparent that a number of diary entries (or parts of diary entries) had been subjected to very heavy overwriting of a nature which indicated that a deliberate attempt had been made to alter them, obliterate them altogether or render them indecipherable. In an effort to identify the concealed information, the Tribunal engaged, initially, a Birmingham, UK based company and subsequently the Federal Bureau of Investigation (the 'FBI') to conduct a forensic analysis of a number of diary entries. The FBI declined payment for this service. The Birmingham analysis and subsequent FBI analysis successfully and conclusively identified information which Mr Dunlop had sought to conceal in a significant number of these diary entries, although both failed to yield definite results in relation to others. The

FBI's efforts to decipher (regrettably unsuccessfully) obliteration attempts to diary entries for 17 and 18 September 1992 (which the Tribunal was satisfied related to dealings between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan) were aptly described by Mr Dunlop's Counsel as an effort akin to 'a Jackson Pollock painting.'

6.13 Mr Dunlop was questioned extensively about these diary entries, and particularly those which became apparent to the Tribunal subsequent to the provision of the diaries to the Tribunal in 2001, and after he had become (according to himself) a fully cooperating witness. The Tribunal endeavoured to ascertain both the content of the 'obliterated' diary entries and to establish when such attempted obliterations had been undertaken by Mr Dunlop, and more particularly, if such had occurred between 18 April 2000, and the dates of production to the Tribunal of the original diaries.

6.14 Mr Dunlop's explanations to the Tribunal for the reasons for his attempted (and on occasion, successful) obliterations of diary entries, from the time when such attempts took place, were distinctly evasive, vague and unsatisfactory. Suggestions by Mr Dunlop that his attempted obliterations were merely the consequence of his 'doodling' was rejected out of hand by the Tribunal. The Tribunal was satisfied that these attempts to obliterate information were deliberate and had been undertaken with considerable resolve. Their aim was, undoubtedly, to conceal certain information from the Tribunal which Mr Dunlop knew to be relevant to its inquiries.

6.15 It was apparent to the Tribunal that having regard to the nature and content of many of the obliterated or altered diary entries, two general facts were established in the context of the reason why the Tribunal believed Mr Dunlop sought to conceal them from the Tribunal. The first was a desire to conceal information which, on its face, established a frequency of contact between Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Lawlor, and the second was a desire to conceal information relating to, in particular, financial transactions involving Mr Dunlop and his clients (including Mr O'Callaghan).

6.16 The Tribunal was satisfied that in relation to a number of these obliterated/altered diary entries, Mr Dunlop undertook the task of rendering or attempting to render certain diary entries indecipherable subsequent to 18 April 2000, and that he did so with the sole aim of concealing information from the Tribunal.

MR DUNLOP'S INVOLVEMENT IN THE PREPARATION OF CORRESPONDENCE AND STATEMENTS PROVIDED TO THE TRIBUNAL BY CLLRS MJ COSGRAVE
(FG) AND LIAM CREAVEN (FF)

7.01 On 7 March 2003, the Tribunal wrote separately to Cllrs MJ Cosgrave and Creaven through their shared solicitor requesting from each a narrative statement in relation to issues relevant to the Fox & Mahony lands.

7.02 Cllr MJ Cosgrave responded through his solicitor to the Tribunal's request by providing to the Tribunal a copy of a letter from Cllr Cosgrave addressed to his solicitor, dated 28 March 2003, in which he answered a number of specific questions set out in the Tribunal's letter of 7 March 2003.

7.03 Cllr Creaven's response, through his solicitor, was to provide the Tribunal with a short letter dated 27 March 2003 addressed to Cllr Creaven's solicitor by Cllr Creaven. Both this letter, and the letter dated 28 March 2003 addressed by Cllr Cosgrave to the same solicitor, and also passed to the Tribunal, bore a striking similarity as to its content and layout.

7.04 On 1 April 2003, the Tribunal wrote to Cllr Cosgrave's solicitor expressing its dissatisfaction with the inadequacy of Cllr Cosgrave's response and again requesting a detailed narrative statement from him. On 11 April 2003, Cllr Cosgrave replied directly to the Tribunal with a detailed three page statement.

7.05 As in the case of Cllr Cosgrave, the Tribunal wrote on 1 April 2003 to Cllr Creaven's solicitor expressing its dissatisfaction with the inadequacy of Cllr Creaven's response dated 27 March 2003. On 11 June 2003, Cllr Creaven's solicitor furnished a detailed narrative statement to the Tribunal dated 5 June 2003. While Cllr Creaven's narrative statement of 5 June 2003 and Cllr Cosgrave's narrative statement of 11 April 2003 contained different information, there was nevertheless a clear similarity of style and format between both statements.

7.06 A further request for specific information was made by the Tribunal to Cllr Cosgrave's solicitors and to Cllr Creaven's solicitors on 30 September 2003. A response from Cllr Cosgrave was received dated 'October 2003' by letter from Cllr Cosgrave addressed to his solicitor. Cllr Creaven responded directly to the Tribunal on 8 October 2003. Cllr Cosgrave's response dated 'October 2003' and Cllr Creaven's response dated 8 October 2003 were broadly similar in style and format.

7.07 The Tribunal learned that in March and April 2003 Mr Dunlop met with Cllr Cosgrave and Cllr Creaven on more than one occasion. Struck by the similarity of the responses to the Tribunal's request for statements and information from Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven, the Tribunal sought to establish if there had been collusion between all three in their provision of information to the Tribunal, and if so, the extent of that collusion.

7.08 The Tribunal wrote to Mr Dunlop's solicitors on 28 October 2004. Mr Dunlop advised the Tribunal through his solicitors on 29 October 2004 that he had had a number of meetings with Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven in the period March/April 2003. In this letter, Mr Dunlop's solicitor stated that Mr Dunlop had told both councillors at these meetings that he could not discuss any Tribunal related matters following his appearance at the Tribunal in April 2000, and that he merely advised both to answer the Tribunal's questions to them as best they could. Mr Dunlop maintained that he repeated that advice to both men at a meeting in Cllr Cosgrave's home in March/April 2003.

7.09 Earlier, Mr Dunlop provided the Tribunal (at its request), with a handwritten list of names of councillors with whom he claimed he had had 'various discussions about the Tribunal subsequent to its establishment.' Both Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven were included in this list.

7.10 Throughout Mr Dunlop's sworn evidence to the Tribunal he never once implicated either Cllr MJ Cosgrave or Creaven in any allegations to the effect that either had corruptly demanded or received money from him.

THE EVIDENCE OF MS MARY MAGUIRE

7.11 The Tribunal heard sworn evidence from Ms Mary Maguire who in 2003 had been employed as Cllr MJ Cosgrave's secretary. Ms Maguire said that she had occasionally typed letters for Cllr Creaven in the period when she was employed by Cllr Cosgrave.

7.12 Ms Maguire told the Tribunal that she had never met Mr Dunlop prior to March 2003 but recognised him from television. She testified that on 26 March 2003, Cllr Cosgrave directed her to hold all calls and appointments on the following day because he was expecting a 'special visitor the next day', and did not wish to be disturbed. He did not otherwise identify the visitor.

7.13 Ms Maguire maintained that on 27 March 2003 Cllr Cosgrave requested her to, unusually, purchase sandwiches for him in a local supermarket. On her return, she noticed Cllr Cosgrave's car and a 'blue Mercedes jeep' parked in Cllr

Cosgrave's driveway, and also noticed Cllr Creaven's car parked across the road. Ms Maguire handed Cllr Cosgrave the sandwiches purchased by her. He remained in his apartment while she attended to her work in his constituency office. Sometime later, while at her desk in the constituency office, Ms Maguire said that she noticed, to her surprise, Mr Dunlop attempting to reverse the Mercedes jeep out of the driveway. Shortly afterwards Ms Maguire was asked by Cllr Cosgrave to prepare some correspondence. On entering Cllr Cosgrave's room, she noticed Cllr Creaven was present. Ms Maguire proceeded to type versions of letters in the names of Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven and was requested by Cllr Cosgrave to make the letters look different, using different typeface and wording. Ms Maguire also said that she had previously typed letters for both men, dictated to her by Cllr Cosgrave.

7.14 Ms Maguire identified the letters typed in the names of Cllrs Creaven and Cosgrave and provided to the Tribunal, as those dated 27 March and 28 March 2003 respectively, to be the letters which she had typed on 27 March 2003.

7.15 On a date in April 2003, Cllr Cosgrave again informed Ms Maguire that he was expecting a visit from his 'special visitor' on the following day, and to hold calls on that day. The 'special visitor' was not identified. Ms Maguire also said that she was instructed by Cllr Cosgrave not to record any reference to the visit in Cllr Cosgrave's diary.

7.16 On the following day, Ms Maguire witnessed Mr Dunlop arriving at the premises. He was wearing a sports cap and a fleece zipped to his chin. Ms Maguire said she only recognised Mr Dunlop when he removed his cap on entering the premises. Ms Maguire was unable to recollect, if Cllr Creaven was also present on the occasion of Mr Dunlop's visit on that occasion.

7.17 Following the meeting between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Cosgrave, Ms Maguire was instructed to write certain letters to the Tribunal as directed by Cllr Cosgrave. She did so, preparing the letters to the Tribunal from Cllr Cosgrave dated 11 April 2003 and from Cllr Creaven dated 5 June 2003. Ms Maguire told the Tribunal that Cllr Creaven was not present when she typed the first letter, and that when she typed the second letter (1 May 2003), both Cllrs Creaven and Cosgrave were present, but Cllr Cosgrave dictated the letter, that the third version of the letter was dated 15 May 2003, and the final version 5 June 2003. Ms Maguire recalled Cllr Cosgrave dictating Cllr Creaven's letter to the Tribunal which she described as 'just a version' of Cllr Cosgrave's letter of 11 April 2003.

7.18 Ms Maguire told the Tribunal that Cllr Cosgrave informed her on 8 October 2003 that his 'special visitor' (which she then understood to be a reference to Mr Dunlop), was expected to visit. She did not see him on this occasion as she was absent from Cllr Cosgrave's premises on that afternoon.

7.19 Ms Maguire confirmed that the letters from Cllr Creaven to the Tribunal dated 8 October 2003, and the letter from Cllr Cosgrave to his solicitor dated October 2003 (and which were then provided to the Tribunal) were typed by her having been dictated by Cllr Cosgrave. Cllr Cosgrave directed her not to date the letter from himself, as he intended to send it at a later stage.

7.20 Ms Maguire was cross-examined by Counsel for Mr Dunlop and by both Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven. None challenged Ms Maguire's evidence that she had witnessed Mr Dunlop's attendances at Cllr Cosgrave's premises on two occasions. Mr Dunlop accepted that he could have visited Cllr Cosgrave's premises dressed in the manner described by Ms Maguire but he disputed the dates of such visits.

7.21 At the time Ms Maguire left Cllr Cosgrave's employment (27 August 2004) she removed from his computer the disks which retained details of the correspondence in question including the dates and times that such correspondence was typed by her. This evidence established that the respective letters typed by Ms Maguire on behalf of Cllr Cosgrave and Cllr Creaven had been indeed typed within a short period of time between each (comprising multiples of minutes).

THE EVIDENCE OF MR DUNLOP

7.22 Mr Dunlop acknowledged that he met Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven very frequently in different locations over the years. He confirmed that he met the two councillors on three occasions in the period March/April 1993, but vehemently denied any such meetings in Cllr Cosgrave's premises in Baldoyle on either 27 March 2003 or 11 April 2003.

7.23 Mr Dunlop said that he met Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven on 26 March 2003 in the County Club, Dunshaughlin in Co Meath. He collected them from Cllr Cosgrave's premises and drove them to the venue in Dunshaughlin and drove them to their homes later. Mr Dunlop emphatically denied that he attended Cllr Cosgrave's premises on the following day, 27 March 2003.

7.24 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he again met Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven in the County Club in Dunshaughlin, Co Meath on 7 April 2003. He denied attending Cllr Cosgrave's premises on 11 April 2003.

7.25 Mr Dunlop did however acknowledge that, in March/April 2003, he did attend Cllr Cosgrave's premises in Baldoyle for a meeting but on a date other than the date stated in evidence by Ms Maguire. Mr Dunlop stated:

'There is absolutely no doubt, Ms. Dillon, in my mind, a meeting did take place in College Street (Baldoyle) on a date which unfortunately and sadness from your point of view and mine, I cannot give you the exact date and I cannot give you an explanation either why I didn't put it in. But that be that as it may, there is absolutely no doubt in my mind that I travelled to Mr. Cosgrave's home in College Street in the jeep that I currently possess. I can't actually recall, and it is with interest that I listen to the detail of this inquiry as to where the parking took place. I can't recall where I parked. She (Ms. Maguire) does attest to the fact that it's difficult to park in that street, that is correct, it's difficult to park in the street.

Secondly, there were sandwiches delivered. I don't know who bought the sandwiches. I don't know who delivered them. I do not know Ms. Maguire, never met her before in my life, wouldn't recognise her on the street if I had met her until I saw her photograph in the paper. So I don't know who took the sandwiches. The attestation that sandwiches were delivered is correct, there were sandwiches delivered.'

7.26 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that he was never requested to assist in drafting responses to Tribunal correspondence for Cllrs Cosgrave and/or Creaven. Mr Dunlop maintained that in the course of his acknowledged meetings with Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven in March/April 2003 there had been no discussion as to the detail in correspondence from the Tribunal or on the subject of information to be supplied to the Tribunal. Mr Dunlop said that he had simply advised them '...lads, just answer the questions.' Mr Dunlop also said that he reminded both councillors of his inability to discuss Tribunal matters following his April 2000 appearance at the Tribunal.

7.27 Mr Dunlop suggested that the fact that he had three meetings with both councillors in the period March/April 2003 at a time when they were in receipt of correspondence from the Tribunal was a mere coincidence. Mr Dunlop was certain that the contents of any such correspondence were not discussed, nor was there any discussion on evidence to be given by them at their future attendances in the Tribunal. Mr Dunlop dismissed the meetings as merely 'three old fogies enjoying themselves.'

THE EVIDENCE OF CLLR MJ COSGRAVE

7.28 Cllr Cosgrave denied dictating letters on behalf of Cllr Creaven to Ms Maguire. Cllr Cosgrave explained that Cllr Creaven did on occasion use Ms Maguire to type for him, but that such letters prepared by her for Cllr Creaven were done on the basis of instructions given to Ms Maguire directly by Cllr Creaven. Cllr Cosgrave also denied instructing Ms Maguire to make letters from himself and from Cllr Creaven to look different to each other.

7.29 Cllr Cosgrave agreed with Mr Dunlop that two meetings had taken place between himself, Cllr Creaven and Mr Dunlop in the County Club in Dunshaughlin, Co Meath on 26 March 2003 and 7 April 2003, and he also agreed that one meeting had taken place in his Baldoyle premises in the period March/April 2003. Cllr Cosgrave was unable to recollect what transpired at meetings between himself and Mr Dunlop in 2002 or 2004.

7.30 Cllr Cosgrave denied that meetings had taken place in his premises on 27 March 2003 and 11 April 2003, or in October 2003 as suggested by Ms Maguire. Cllr Cosgrave denied that he had ever used the term 'special visitor' in conversation with Ms Maguire.

7.31 Cllr Cosgrave said that he never discussed the content of Tribunal letters or responses to those letters with Cllr Creaven or with Mr Frank Dunlop.

THE EVIDENCE OF CLLR CREAVERN

7.32 Cllr Creaven's evidence was essentially in agreement with that given by Cllr Cosgrave and by Mr Dunlop. He recalled the County Club Dunshaughlin meetings in March and April 2003 but denied attending Cllr Cosgrave's premises for a meeting with Mr Dunlop on 27 March 2003 or 11 April 2003.

7.33 Cllr Creaven denied the suggestion that letters to the Tribunal were dictated or drafted by Cllr Cosgrave or by anyone else. In relation to his correspondence directly or indirectly with the Tribunal, Cllr Creaven said that he dealt directly with Ms Maguire.

7.34 Cllr Creaven recalled Mr Dunlop stopping him dead in his 'track' if he attempted to discuss anything in relation to the Tribunal.

7.35 Cllr Creaven also denied discussing the content of Tribunal correspondence with Cllr Cosgrave, or of discussing their responses to that correspondence.

THE TRIBUNAL'S CONCLUSIONS IN RELATION TO THE COSGRAVE / CREAVERN / DUNLOP ISSUE

- i. The Tribunal accepted in its entirety the evidence given by Ms Maguire and it therefore rejected, also in its entirety, the evidence of Mr Dunlop, Cllr MJ Cosgrave and Cllr Creaven to the extent that it conflicted with Ms Maguire's evidence.

- ii. The Tribunal was, in particular, satisfied that Ms Maguire's evidence to it in relation to occasions in March and April 2003 when she recalled witnessing Mr Dunlop attend at Cllr Cosgrave's Baldoyle premises was truthful, and it rejected the contention of Mr Dunlop, Cllr MJ Cosgrave and Cllr Creaven that such meetings did not take place.

- iii. The Tribunal was satisfied that the letters/statements provided to it by Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven on the 28 March, 11 April and October 2003 (for Cllr Cosgrave), and 27 March, 5 June and 8 October 2003 (for Cllr Creaven) were drafted/dictated by Cllr Cosgrave to Ms Maguire following upon detailed discussions between the two councillors and Mr Dunlop and that that correspondence together with correspondence in October 2003 was the result of discussions between the three men and more particularly, advice provided by Mr Dunlop.

- iv. The Tribunal rejected the evidence given by Mr Dunlop, and by Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven, that at meetings between them in April/May 2003, there did not take place detailed discussions as to the content of correspondence from the Tribunal to Cllrs Cosgrave and Creaven, and their responses to that correspondence.

- v. The Tribunal believed it as likely that the purpose of the meetings between the three men in April/March 2003 were primarily for the purpose of discussing such correspondence and the responses thereto.

- vi. The Tribunal was satisfied that there was collusion between the three men in relation to preparing responses/statements to the Tribunal during 2003.

MR DUNLOP'S ATTEMPTS TO CONCEAL FROM THE TRIBUNAL THE EXTENT OF HIS DEALINGS WITH MR LAWLOR AND THE EXTENT OF THE DEALINGS OF MR LAWLOR WITH MR O'CALLAGHAN

8.01 Prior to Mr Dunlop furnishing the Tribunal in 2001 with his entire unredacted diaries for the years 1990 to 1997, in 1999 he furnished copies of his redacted diaries for the period 1 September 1991 to 1 September 1993 and in April 2000 he gave the Tribunal copies of his redacted diaries covering the period 1 January 1990 to 1 September 1991 and the period 1 September 1993 to 30 December 1993.

8.02 Mr Dunlop was advised by the Tribunal that he could redact diary entries which did not relate to Quarryvale, then the subject of the Tribunal's inquiries.

8.03 On that basis, Mr Dunlop utilized 'post-it' stickers to redact portions of his 1990 to 1993 diaries which Mr Dunlop deemed not relevant to the Tribunal prior to providing copies of the redacted diary entries to the Tribunal.

8.04 Of the entire discovery made by Mr Dunlop, up to April 2000, of his diaries for the period January 1990 to December 1993, Mr Dunlop disclosed only three diary entries which related to Mr Lawlor, (namely 29 April 1992, 8 September 1992 and 21 December 1993).

8.05 Following the production of Mr Dunlop's original (and unredacted) diaries for the years January 1990 to December 1993, it was revealed that Mr Dunlop's 1992 and 1993 diaries contained references to a number of scheduled meetings with Mr Lawlor, either involving Mr Dunlop on his own or, on occasions, involving both Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan and, on other occasions involving Mr Dunlop, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Ambrose Kelly. Prior to October 2001 none of these entries, (save for the three diary entries referred to above), had been disclosed by Mr Dunlop to the Tribunal, notwithstanding their clear association with Quarryvale.

8.06 Mr Dunlop, when furnishing his 1992 and 1993 diaries in 1999/2000 redacted Mr Lawlor's name from entries made in his diaries on the following dates:

- 9 January 1992
- 14 January 1992
- 3 February 1992
- 20 March 1992
- 9 April 1992
- 23 June 1992

28 September 1992

1 October 1992

9 October 1992

14 October 1992

2 April 1993

10 May 1993

30 August 1993

31 August 1993.

8.07 Similarly, disclosure made by Mr Dunlop of his 1991 diary for the period 1 January 1991 to September 1991 failed to reveal a meeting with Mr Lawlor scheduled for 5 February 1991.

8.08 Furthermore, when the unredacted diaries were provided to the Tribunal in 2001, it was discovered that a number of diary extracts had been partly or entirely rendered illegible by being heavily and repeatedly written over (or, effectively painted over), with ink. It was clear to the Tribunal that a deliberate effort had been made to obliterate certain words or sentences in those diary entries, as other diary entries denoting, for example, cancelled meetings, were merely crossed out in a manner which left the crossed out words still legible.

8.09 Forensic analysis provided by a Birmingham, UK company and by the FBI enabled the Tribunal to identify (either fully or partially) many of the concealed entries.

8.10 The Tribunal was satisfied that some or all of these attempted obliterations were carried out by Mr Dunlop after he was requested by the Tribunal to provide his complete diaries and at a time when Mr Dunlop insisted that he was providing truthful evidence to the Tribunal.

8.11 The instances, in respect of which the Tribunal was satisfied, Mr Dunlop overwrote diary entries connected to Mr Lawlor included the following:

- A diary entry of 3 June 1992 which, the Tribunal was satisfied, in its original unadulterated state made reference to a meeting between 'AM K' (Mr Ambrose Kelly) 'L' (Mr Lawlor) and 'OOC' (Mr O'Callaghan) was presented in Mr. Dunlop's 1999 Discovery to the Tribunal in such format as suggesting that 'AMK', 'F', and 'OOC' were meeting in Mr Dunlop's office, Mr Dunlop having converted the 'L' to 'F.' The Tribunal established this after Mr Dunlop's diaries were forensically examined by a Birmingham, UK company in 2007, and by the FBI in 2008.
- Mr Dunlop overwrote and attempted to obliterate a diary entry for 25 August 1993 and which was subsequently found, on forensic analysis, to include a reference to Mr Lawlor. This diary entry was in 2001 presented to the Tribunal by Mr Dunlop as suggesting only a meeting between Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan when Mr Dunlop's retainer was being discussed. Mr Dunlop acknowledged to the Tribunal that the information he had attempted to obliterate was Mr Lawlor's name.

- Mr Dunlop also made a more dramatic attempt to conceal a diary entry for 10 November 1993. When in 2001 the Tribunal examined the 1993 diary, it noted that the entry for 10 November 1993 suggested the scheduled attendance of Mr O'Callaghan in Mr Dunlop's office from 9:30am to 1:00pm. To the right of this entry, the following appeared: 'GH5924688'
- There followed thereunder a heavily overwritten passage. Forensic analysis of this entry revealed that its original message read, 'LL1 and a half', '1 ready', 'half CHQ.'
- The Tribunal was satisfied that this diary entry related to a financial dealing concerning Mr Lawlor which took place or was discussed in Mr Dunlop's office on 10 November 1993 and probably when Mr O'Callaghan was present.

8.12 While Mr Dunlop, in evidence, acknowledged that the 10 November 1993 entry (and indeed the aforementioned 25 August 1993 entry) had been obliterated by him he professed to have no explanation as to why he had concealed the obliterated information.

8.13 Mr O'Callaghan said he could not offer any explanation as to why Mr Dunlop might have felt compelled to attempt to obliterate this information from his diaries.

8.14 The Tribunal was however satisfied that Mr Dunlop's primary purpose in so doing was to conceal from the Tribunal the extent of the close connection that existed, throughout the Quarryvale rezoning, between Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Lawlor. The Tribunal was also satisfied that it was for this purpose that Mr Dunlop chose in 1999 and 2000 to conceal from the Tribunal (by his 'post-it' redactions) the fact that his 1992 diary in particular was replete with references to Mr Lawlor, often in association with Mr O'Callaghan.

MR DUNLOP'S 'WAR CHEST' MONEY: AN OVERVIEW

9.01 In addition to two Shefran 'war chest' accounts, Mr Dunlop had three further such accounts, namely an account at Irish Nationwide Building Society ('INBS 910 account') and an account at the Terenure branch of AIB ('AIB 042 Rathfarnham account'). In November 1990 Mr Dunlop opened an offshore account in the name of his company Xerxes Consult (Jersey) Ltd at Midland Bank Trust, Jersey with a sterling deposit of IR£18,050, effectively, as conceded by Mr Dunlop, a 'war chest' account.

9.02 Insofar as Mr Dunlop utilised 'war chest' accounts in the years 1990 to 1993 in connection with rezoning proposals with which he was involved, his activities in this regard mainly concentrated on the INBS 910 account and the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account.

9.03 Over and above the opening and operation of his 'war chest' accounts, Mr Dunlop, on his own admission, had in the relevant years access to substantial cash reserves which he accumulated by encashing cheques received from his clients (including landowners/developers) and from cash payments made to him by his clients.

9.04 Mr Dunlop's INBS 910 account was opened on 3 August 1982 with a lodgement of IR£25. There was no significant activity on this account until in or about April 1991 when a number of small lodgements of between IR£700 to IR£2,300 were made, followed by a cash lodgement of IR£14,500 on 17 May 1991. Mr Dunlop said that this cash lodgement may have represented portion of a IR£25,000 Shefran cheque which Mr Dunlop received from Mr O'Callaghan on 16 May 1991 (see Part 5).

9.05 In tandem with his having recommenced activity on the INBS 910 account, Mr Dunlop opened the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account on 9 April 1991, with a lodgement of IR£30,600.88.

9.06 At the time he opened his AIB 042 Rathfarnham account Mr Dunlop was an established customer of AIB and held a number of accounts in his and his wife's names, and in the name of Frank Dunlop & Associates at AIB, 5 College Street, Dublin. Mr Dunlop had been a customer of AIB since 1985.

THE OPENING OF THE AIB 042 RATHFARNHAM ACCOUNT

9.07 On 5 April 1991 Mr John Aherne, Manager of AIB, College Street, Dublin (and the person within the branch who looked after Mr Dunlop's accounts) wrote to the Manager of AIB, Terenure enclosing certain documentation and requesting that a joint account opened in the names of Mr Dunlop and his wife in that branch. In the course of his correspondence with his colleague Mr Aherne advised as follows:

Mr. Dunlop is very well got in business circles and operates a very successful Public Relations Business. He trades under Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd. which is a highly satisfactory account connection at this Branch. A cheque book at this stage is not a reality and a Banklink Card in the name of Frank Dunlop will suffice.

9.08 In his evidence Mr Dunlop explained his rationale for opening the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account in the following terms:

'...AIB were able to look after clients who had large sums of money and they did not want to appear in their own account in their own bank or in another account in their bank. And he [Mr Aherne] suggested that he would contact, I see the name here, I wouldn't have been able to recollect it otherwise. He would contact the Manager in Rathfarnham, in a place called Rathfarnham and open an account.'

9.09 Mr Dunlop maintained that he had been advised by Mr Aherne that '...it would not be right or advisable to have large sums of money going through my account in his own, in that branch.' Mr Dunlop was not required to attend at the Terenure branch to conduct his business. The operation of that account was invariably conducted within AIB, College Street.

9.10 Mr Aherne did not take issue with the evidence that he had arranged and facilitated Mr Dunlop with regard to the opening of the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account although he denied Mr Dunlop's contention that he had advised Mr Dunlop in the manner described by him.

9.11 Mr Aherne acknowledged that Mr Dunlop '...was going to handle the account on a lodgement or a withdrawal basis' although he claimed that he could not recollect Mr Dunlop telling him that he anticipated substantial sums of money being lodged into the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account. An analysis of relevant bank documentation for the period 9 April 1991 to 21 August 1991 (when there was substantial activity on the account), revealed that all of Mr Dunlop's dealings on the account were conducted via College Street, and were, in the main, conducted with Mr Aherne.

9.12 As set out elsewhere in this Report, over the course of May/June 1991, during the Local Election campaign,² Mr Dunlop had access to a minimum of IR£165,000 in cash which was sourced to the encashment of four³ Shefran cheques and withdrawals from the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account.

9.13 On 9 September 1991 Mr Dunlop withdrew a further IR£10,000 in cash from the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account. The Tribunal was satisfied that this money was in all likelihood expended by him in connection with his then lobbying endeavours as was, in all probability, a IR£5,000⁴ INBS cheque encashed by Mr Dunlop at AIB, College Street on 27 September 1991 pursuant to his cheque cashing arrangement with Mr Aherne of AIB (see below). While Mr Dunlop could not account for how he utilised the IR£5,000 cash he stated that he:

‘withdrew money in the context of having cash available to me for purposes that is the matter of investigation here by the Tribunal and I may well have used that money in specific instances, with specific people.’

A further INBS cheque for IR£2,500 was cashed by Mr Dunlop on 3 October 1991, again at AIB, College Street.

9.14 In November 1992 it was the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account that was utilised by Mr Dunlop to receive a credit transfer of IR£70,000 from Mr O’Callaghan/Riga on 10 November 1992 and from which he withdrew IR£55,000 in cash⁵ on the same date.

9.15 Mr Dunlop made particular use of the INBS 910 ‘war chest’ account in 1993, when in the period between 19 February 1993 and 17 November 1993 he made a series of round figure cash lodgements of between IR£2,500 and IR£15,000 totalling IR£58,500 cash. The Tribunal was quite satisfied that on every occasion when Mr Dunlop made such cash lodgements, he at the same time retained, or had already in his possession, significant sums of cash.

9.16 The frenetic activity in relation to both the AIB 042 Rathfarnham account, and the INBS 910 account coincided with the making of the 1993 Development Plan and in particular with elections which took place during that period. With regard to the cessation of cash lodgements to his INBS 910 account, Mr Dunlop stated ‘At that time the Development Plan had concluded and the purpose for which this fund had been established was to have cash available.’ The accounts were effectively dormant after the adoption of the Development Plan in ³ Three Shefran payments from Riga (see Chapter Two) and one from interests associated with the Baldoyle rezoning proposal (see Chapter Nine).

December 1993, save for a couple of lodgements to the INBS account in August/September 1994. Both accounts were closed in October 1994.

9.17 Mr Dunlop's ability to maintain cash reserves was not only facilitated by the operation of the aforementioned 'war chest' accounts but also by an arrangement he had with AIB, College Street whereby cheques for large amounts presented by him could be cashed. Mr Aherne confirmed that Mr Dunlop used this facility between 1990 and 1993.

9.18 In the course of his evidence Mr Aherne initially suggested that he became aware of Shefran when an account was opened in the name of the company in April 1992, but then accepted that he had facilitated the encashment of Shefran cheques for Mr Dunlop for a period of two years prior to the setting up of any bank account in the name of Shefran.

9.19 The evidence established that independently of the Shefran cheques which Mr Dunlop presented for encashment at AIB, College Street, Mr Aherne also facilitated Mr Dunlop's requirement for substantial cash funds by encashing cheques drawn by Mr Dunlop on his INBS 910 'war chest' account, and encashing cheques for Mr Dunlop which, on their face, showed the payee to be otherwise than Mr Dunlop, or Frank Dunlop & Associates, or indeed Shefran.

9.20 Over the course of a period of several months (from September 1989 to May 1991), Mr Dunlop received seven cheque payments from companies associated with a then client, National Toll Roads (NTR), on foot of invoices from him in the names⁶ of 'Barry McCarthy', Shefran Limited and 'Shefran (Jersey) Limited.' In the period in question Mr Dunlop received seven cheque payments from NTR totalling IR£150,000. Five of these cheques were encashed at AIB, College Street. The value of the individual cashed cheques ranged from IR£5,000 to IR£60,000. In three instances the cheques presented by Mr Dunlop (on 9 February 1990, 25 May 1990 and 1 August 1990), were endorsed by him either in the name of 'Barry McCarthy' or 'Barry McCarthy Shefran Limited.' Mr Aherne accepted that he facilitated Mr Dunlop to negotiate the cheques, and while acknowledging that Mr Dunlop had presented cheques in the name of 'Barry McCarthy' for encashment, Mr Aherne claimed that he had 'never realised that he (Mr Dunlop) endorsed it accordingly.' He claimed not to recall the specifics of the cheque payees and professed himself 'intrigued by the endorsement[s]', saying 'I don't have any recall of the McCarthy connection and it would appear to me while it's the Barry McCarthy Shefran Limited, that endorsement as such would appear to be in Mr Dunlop's writing.' The Tribunal was satisfied that 'Barry McCarthy' was a fictitious entity, as was 'Shefran Jersey Ltd.'

⁶ One such cheque was paid to 'cash.'

9.21 Mr Aherne stated 'Any cheques I encashed for Mr Dunlop I would have done it on the basis that it was his money and that he was endorsing it and that was my recall. And that has always been my recall whether the payee is B McCarthy or whatever. Okay, it was irregular.' Mr Aherne advised the Tribunal that 'you do irregular things if you value your client and if you have a high regard for your client.' The Tribunal rejected Mr Aherne's claimed lack of knowledge regarding Mr Dunlop's endorsement of the cheques in question.

9.22 In the course of his testimony Mr Aherne maintained that he had no knowledge of Mr Dunlop's activities, that he had 'believed at all times he operated bona fide lobbying and PR business' and that he, did not know what Mr Dunlop did with the cash he was receiving from the cheque encashments. Mr Aherne agreed that Mr Dunlop's request for large sums in cash was 'over and above the norm', but he 'trusted Mr Dunlop implicitly.'

9.23 When queried whether, as a matter of banking responsibility, he should have satisfied himself as to why a customer, at fairly regular intervals, had a requirement for the withdrawal or lodgement of very large sums of cash, Mr Aherne stated 'yes, I would say to you on the one hand. On the other hand hindsight is a brilliant thing.' Mr Aherne stated that he had no recollection of discussing Mr Dunlop's requirement for large sums of cash with him, or of asking him what he was doing with the cash. He did not recall if he had made a connection between cash withdrawals of IR£25,000 and IR£35,000 Mr Dunlop had made on 7 and 11 June 1991 respectively, with the 1991 Local Election, stating 'It may well have been but I cannot say I recall.' Similarly, he had no recollection whether he had associated Mr Dunlop's cash withdrawal of IR£55,000 on 10 November 1992 with the General Election campaign then underway.

THE TRIBUNAL'S ANALYSIS OF MR DUNLOP'S LIKELY FINANCIAL RESERVES IN THE PERIOD FROM SEPTEMBER 1989 TO SEPTEMBER 1993 (OTHER THAN THOSE OF FRANK DUNLOP & ASSOCIATES)

9.24 The analysis conducted by the Tribunal, insofar as any such analysis was capable of being conducted in circumstances where Mr Dunlop, on his own admission, had access to cash resources which were not the subject of any documentary trail, established that in the period from February 1990 to September 1993 particularly, Mr Dunlop had at his disposal a sum in excess of half a million pounds cash (IR£535,501⁷) for the purposes, inter alia, of making disbursements to councillors. In 1991 Mr Dunlop had access to in excess of IR£230,000 cash, in 1992 he had access to IR£124,000 cash and in 1993

⁷ IR£5,000 of this fund was available to Mr Dunlop in September 1989

IR£50,000 cash. These sums did not take into account cash sums which came into Mr Dunlop's possession and which were not lodged to or withdrawn from bank accounts. In the course of his testimony in the Quarryvale module, Mr Dunlop advised that, on occasions, he had cash sums ranging between IR£25,000 and IR£100,000 in his briefcase.

9.25 The Tribunal was satisfied that a sum of in excess of half a million pounds available to Mr Dunlop for his lobbying endeavours in the period 1990 to 1993 was, as a matter of the strongest possibility, a conservative figure, and considerably less than the likely actual cash 'war chest' which Mr Dunlop had available to him during the making of the 1993 Development Plan.

9.26 The Tribunal's analysis of the manner in which Mr Dunlop conducted his financial affairs otherwise than through Frank Dunlop & Associates, and the manner in which he was facilitated by a number of clients with, effectively, the provision of cash payments, coupled with his use of 'war chest' accounts and cheque cashing facilities led the Tribunal to the inevitable conclusion that Mr Dunlop was easily able to make cash payments to councillors and politicians. Notwithstanding the evidence tendered by Mr Dunlop over the course of a number of modules as to who were the beneficiaries of payments from him in the years 1990 to 1993 particularly, the Tribunal was satisfied that significant disbursements of cash funds by Mr Dunlop remain unaccounted for.

9.27 The Tribunal was satisfied that payments made to Mr Dunlop by landowners/developers, although intended, in part at least, by some landowners/developers to be passed on in the form of corrupt payments (albeit in some instances in the form of contributions at election time) to councillors were not always directly or immediately used for such purposes by Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that the funds provided to him for such purposes, together with other funds (including the funds lodged to his 'war chest' accounts), constituted a 'confluence of funds', from which such payments were then made as required and when opportune. There was therefore, in practice, no ring fencing of funds for specific projects. Mr Dunlop, in making payments to councillors (including Mr Lawlor) did so not only using funds already provided to him but also contributed to such disbursements from his 'confluence' of funds, on the basis of an expectation of payments being made to him in the future by landowners/developers, often by way of a promised or agreed 'success fee.' At times, Mr Dunlop made disbursements to councillors out of this 'confluence of funds' in relation to particular developments prior to being put in funds by the landowner or developer concerned.

MR DUNLOP'S LOBBYING STRATEGY: AN OVERVIEW

10.01 Mr Dunlop, in the period particularly from late 1990/early 1991, adopted a simple and very successful strategy to achieve his undoubted success in persuading councillors in County Dublin to support a number of rezoning (and on occasion material contravention) proposals which, in order to succeed, required majority councillor approval. On occasion, that support also involved a willingness on the part of councillors to sign motions, and to actively influence fellow councillors to support particular proposals. When that strategy proved successful as it frequently did, the financial rewards for the relevant landowners/developers were enormous by any standards, and very substantial also for Mr Dunlop himself. While the potential financial gain was immeasurable, the outlay necessary to achieve the rezoning of the land in question (in the form of, in particular, payments to councillors) was in most instances, relatively modest, often involving sums of IR£1,000 or IR£2,000 being paid to a handful of councillors. It appeared to the Tribunal, that only rarely, if ever, did Mr Dunlop have to comprehensively brief councillors as to the merits (in planning or community terms), of a particular proposal for the purposes of persuading them to support that proposal. In reality, the money did the talking.

MR DUNLOP'S DESCRIPTION OF 'THE SYSTEM'

11.01 Mr Dunlop maintained that he immersed himself in the business of disbursing money to councillors by virtue of his participation in what he described as 'the system.'

11.02 In his October 2000 statement Mr Dunlop advised as follows:

A 'system' was in operation in Dublin County Council whereby a nexus of councillors –Fianna Fail, Fine Gael and certain Independents- proffered their support in terms of signing motions, for consideration during the course of the Development Plan, and in terms of support via votes in the Chamber, in return for cash. The money was requested. I did not invent the system. I was confronted by it and in the cases listed below I co-operated with it in the full knowledge that it was the only way in which to ensure that certain developments could take place in County Dublin. I believe that the system pre-dated any lobbying I did of councillors in Dublin County Council and, as will be evident from the dates of payments to certain councillors, it persisted after the break up of the old Dublin County Council into three separate County administrations.

11.03 In the course of his sworn testimony he elaborated on what he meant by 'the system' as follows:

‘Well, the system was such that contrary to what people understood was the legal position vis-à-vis reserved functions, such as the Development Plan, that there was a whip on. In other words, the legal position, as people understood it, was that because it was a reserve function, a whip could not be exercised. That was always a moot point with political parties representatives in Dublin County Council, but notwithstanding that there was a whip on. So, in other words, a particular development would be discussed by each of the political parties prior to that particular submission – sorry, that particular motion being discussed, debated and adjudicated on in Dublin County Council. Another element of the system was that it didn’t always necessarily follow that if a particular councillor of whatever political designation was in favour of something, that all of these or her colleagues would follow suit.

The third element of the system was akin to what I have outlined to you earlier this morning in relation to the necessity to make progress was to have the local councillors in the geographic area as part of the positive element. In other words, that they would be supportive of the system – would be—support the motion. Also because it was known among the parties in Dublin County Council who, in fact, would be culturally in favour of development and who would not be in favour of development, a cross party system developed to ensure that the relevant numbers were obtained and we are still talking, because it is Development Plan, which is a reserve function, we are still talking about simple majorities.’

11.04 According to Mr Dunlop, the requirement for cross party support for rezoning motions was essential. The thrust of his evidence in a number of modules was that cross party support became an essential requirement in the period 1991 to 1993, in the wake of the outcome of the Local Elections which left no party with a majority within the County Council.

11.05 A key element of ‘the system’ was money. Mr Dunlop testified as follows:

‘There were a number of councillors who – and let me put this in two ways – who, one, actively proffered themselves as signatories for motions for the purpose of getting the motion to the agenda, in other words getting to the ball, you couldn’t get to the ball unless you had the invitation and the invitation was the motion so you could put in as many submissions as you like for consideration but if you didn’t get a motion which transferred itself on to the agenda, you didn’t get to dance, so these people were proving themselves as signatories of the motion. Or alternatively, and this is the second part of it, when approached to sign the motion for the purpose of getting to the agenda for consideration during the course of the Development Plan, they asked for money.'

11.06 Mr Dunlop claimed that he had been directly apprised of the 'system' by Mr Lawlor 'probably sometime in early 1990.' He stated 'A discussion, or various discussions, took place about the system and what was required to operate the system, and he [Mr Lawlor] said that various people, naming some of them, not everybody, would require to be paid and it was the only way that matters would, could, be brought to success.'

11.07 The Tribunal accepted that Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor had such discussions, having regard, in particular, to the fact that Mr Lawlor from as early as 1988/1989 had himself made demands of Mr Gilmartin in connection with Quarryvale. While the Tribunal accepted that Mr Dunlop was introduced to the 'system' in this way, it was nevertheless satisfied that the so called 'system' was substantially perfected, expanded and exploited to a hitherto unachieved level by Mr Dunlop.

11.08 It is important to emphasise that Mr Dunlop could not have pursued his corrupt activity in relation to the planning process had it not been for, on the one hand, obliging landowners/developers who were prepared to lavish large sums of money (and in particular cash, and cheques payable to Mr Dunlop's company, Shefran) to Mr Dunlop, and, on the other hand, compliant councillors who were all too prepared to compromise the disinterested performance of their duties in the cause of personal gain.

MR LAWLOR'S EVIDENCE ON 'THE SYSTEM.'

11.09 Mr Lawlor said that he 'very strongly' disputed Mr Dunlop's evidence that Mr Lawlor had indicated to him that there was a 'system' which required to be operated to maximise the chances of obtaining rezoning, and that this system involved the payment of money to local politicians. Mr Lawlor stated that the fact that Mr Dunlop had secured the necessary planning permission for Citywest (having been introduced to the project by Mr Lawlor) by way of a material contravention vote before Dublin County Council without making any corrupt payments to councillors was in conflict with Mr Dunlop's contention that payments to councillors was an 'essential part of the system.' It was Mr Dunlop's own evidence that he secured the material contravention without the need to bribe any councillor.⁸

⁸ Mr Dunlop ultimately received a shareholding in Citywest in lieu of his professional fees. See Pennine Chapter.

11.10 Questioned as to his awareness of a practice whereby councillors received political donations from lobbyists and landowners and what, if anything, was done in return for such payments, Mr Lawlor stated:

'Well, there's two ways, if Frank Dunlop before a vote said look I'll pay you X pounds to make sure you turn up on Monday and vote for X motion, I don't believe that ever happened and I think if it did he would get short shrift. Afterwards if he gave a contribution to somebody who had supported something, well he certainly wouldn't have put it as contingent on them voting. If they had voted and he financially supported them, well that's what happened. And when I get back through the contributions over my period in public life, I think about two thirds of the people that financially supported me never owned a blade of grass in County Dublin. So, and all I can relate is that the final major planning matter that came before the Council for decision of the Citywest business park where it's seen as one of the greatest developments this country has ever seen and the planners were wholly opposed to it and Frank Dunlop, on behalf of the promoters, lobbied everyone and secured its proposal without supposedly having to pay a single penny to people and that was over 30 acres of the then County Development Plan which was a colossal matter.'

11.11 Asked if he was expressing surprise that the councillors had supported the Citywest project without the payment of money, Mr Lawlor stated:

'Not at all, I was the one that brought it forward, submitted documentation to this Tribunal. I thought it was visionary. Thousands of jobs out there now and the management were wholly opposed to it, because they owned land on the other side of the Naas dual carriageway and they didn't want the scheme to proceed in a commercial competition basis. The Minister for Science and Technology afterwards designated it as the National Science and Technology park. So the thing that surprised me was that Frank Dunlop related financially supporting elected members to how they had or would vote because he never suggested it to me and if he had, he would have got short shrift.'

11.12 Mr Lawlor maintained that Mr Dunlop's allegation that he had paid councillors shocked him because it was not something he had a detailed knowledge of 'the way he [Mr Dunlop] outlined it at all.' Asked if he had any knowledge of the practice alluded to by Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor stated:

'No, I mean my whole relationship to this issue would have been there was a political donation provided to elected members by whoever lobbied for them or wrote at various times and secured those contributions, and I was never aware and Dunlop wouldn't even dream of suggesting, or any other party, that you could secure somebody's vote by method of payment. I think it would be abhorrent and if anybody ever had suggested it to me, one man did and he got short shrift and the reason he did, he was in serious banking trouble. I didn't have the knowledge, Chairman, what Frank Dunlop said of the way he handled affairs throughout the 1990s and not being an elected member of that Council during that period, I really wasn't party to the detail as he has outlined it, ever.'

11.13 Asked if the identity of councillors who might sign a rezoning motion was discussed, in the course of the kind of discussions which might have taken place between himself and Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor said that Mr Dunlop would not have required that type of advice from him. Mr Lawlor again claimed that he was not familiar with the 'nitty gritty' of particular electoral wards in South Dublin, or who might or might not have signed a motion. Mr Lawlor acknowledged, however, that he and Mr Dunlop may have discussed the benefits of getting cross party signatories to a motion, but Mr Lawlor believed that Mr Dunlop himself had this knowledge from his experience with the Citywest material contravention project.

11.14 Mr Lawlor stated that he would be 'amazed' if any councillor would place himself in the position of having taken money from Mr Dunlop. When asked by the Tribunal to explain why he had not exercised his right to cross-examine Mr Dunlop in relation to his evidence that he had knowledge that monies were paid in relation to a motion which was drafted him, he responded:

'I wasn't being accused of accepting and receiving monies... I have to just say that Frank Dunlop's evidence was absolutely staggering and just by disbelief, I come in here and say why did you, what did he do, give money to these people, sure what had that to do with me? Those people were well capable of coming and representing themselves. If he had said he did it with me, I would have absolutely dealt with it.'

11.15 Mr Lawlor challenged Mr Dunlop's evidence and maintained that Mr Dunlop's lobbying represented, he estimated, only ten per cent of all the lands that had been rezoned at that time. Moreover, it was Mr Lawlor's contention that nobody else had to embark on the activities which Mr Dunlop claimed he had embarked upon. Mr Lawlor went on to state:

'The conclusions are, Frank Dunlop went to clients, claimed he needed these monies for various purposes and nobody was ever to know whether he did or he didn't. And the consensus is Frank Dunlop probably retained very substantial amounts of the monies he has now accredited to have given to elected members, because the amounts that he had received from people claiming that that's what he needed to do was a fallacy and he certainly never ever, to the best of my recollection, and it would have no impugning on my situation if he had told me these other people accepted or received or sought monies, but I have no recollection of him ever saying he gave any monies to any other elected member.'

MR DUNLOP'S POLITICAL INFLUENCE

12.01 One of the principal facilities Mr Dunlop was in a position to offer clients who sought his services in connection with rezoning matters was his close association with the Fianna Fáil party from his period as Government Press Secretary in the 1970s and 1980s. With this connection, and indeed also from his time spent in the public service, Mr Dunlop had easy access to the 'corridors of power.' There was no doubt but that some of Mr Dunlop's clients appreciated the benefits which attached to his close association with the Fianna Fail party. The Tribunal established that Mr Dunlop exercised his access to the 'corridors of power' on a regular basis in the course of his work as a lobbyist, in particular for Mr O'Callaghan (Quarryvale module) and Mr Michael McGuinness (Cargobridge module). As he testified to in the Quarryvale module, his ease of access to Mr Bertie Ahern and Mr Albert Reynolds was utilised, inter alia, to lobby for State financial support for the proposed Neilstown Stadium project (in which Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor, Mr Ambrose Kelly and Mr O'Callaghan had a vested interest). At the time of the November 1992 General Election, Mr Dunlop worked in Fianna Fail headquarters, at the invitation of the then Taoiseach Mr Reynolds, in order to oversee its General Election campaign. He described his role at that time as an 'apparatchik.' From 1993, Mr Dunlop provided assistance to Mr Des Richardson, in the latter's capacity as chief fundraiser for Fianna Fail, by drafting letters for Mr Richardson to send out to potential contributors to the party as part of fundraising endeavours, and by drafting speeches for Mr Richardson to deliver at fundraising events. By the mid to late 1990s Mr Dunlop was also involved with Mr Richardson (and others) in certain business dealings. Between 1997 and 1998 Mr Dunlop employed Mr Richardson as a consultant to Frank Dunlop & Associates. Mr Richardson's function as a consultant to the firm was to source clients for Mr Dunlop.

12.02 Insofar as Mr Dunlop's clients benefited from his political connection and influence, so too did Mr Dunlop himself. The evidence established that in a number of rezoning matters it was Mr Dunlop's connection with individuals who were members of, or who were associated with, Fianna Fáil which facilitated his retention as a lobbyist. For example, Mr Lawlor was the individual who facilitated Mr Dunlop's retention as a lobbyist to promote the Quarryvale, Ballycullen/Beechill and Pennine rezoning proposals. Similarly, it was Mr Tim Collins who effected Mr Dunlop's introduction to the individuals associated with the plans to rezone lands at Lissenhall, Cloghran and Walls Kinsealy.

OUR REF 992-001/HG/MOB/000210s2

YOUR REF PTB/56

11 February 2000

re: Our clients: Frank Dunlop Esq., Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited and Shefran Limited

Dear Madam,

We refer to previous correspondence and in particular to the second issue raised in your letter of the 2nd December last concerning the affidavit of discovery sworn on our clients' behalf on the 7th July, 1999.

As you are aware you have stated that the documents listed in our clients' affidavit, and produced to the Tribunal, do not include the following categories of documents which, you presume, contain reference to the transactions referred to at paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) of the Orders made on the 12th February, 1999:-

1. cheque stubs/ lodgment books
2. cheque payments journal books
3. nominal ledgers
4. creditors' and debtors' ledgers
5. minutes of meetings with the parties referred to in the Orders
6. correspondence with the parties referred to in the Orders.

Taking each category in turn we reply as follows:-

1. Cheque stubs/ lodgment books

In the affidavit of discovery sworn on their behalf our clients have made discovery of bank statements in respect of the following accounts:-

FD.CORR 1 - 175

- (a) an account in the names Frank Dunlop and Sheila Dunlop (account no. 12909-006) for the period from 1st September, 1991 to 1st September, 1993
- (b) an account in the name Shefran Limited (account no. 48181-083) for the period from 15th April, 1992 (the date the account was opened) to 1st September, 1993
- (c) an account in the name Frank Dunlop (account no. 13111-180) for the period from 8th October, 1992 (the date the account was opened) to 1st September, 1993
- (d) an account in the name Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited (account no. 11253-067) from 1st September, 1991 to 1st September, 1993
- (e) a loan account in the name of Frank and Sheila Dunlop (account no. 12909-279) for the period from 1st September, 1991 to 1st September, 1993.

In addition, as regards the bank accounts mentioned at (a) and (d), our clients have made discovery of various copy cheques, lodgment dockets etc. referred to in the bank statements in question. As you are also aware our clients' discovery discloses, from enquiries conducted with their bankers, that to the best of their knowledge and belief, the bank statements and transaction records discovered in their affidavit of discovery represent the totality of those documents as they currently exist.

In addition our clients have discovered cheque stubs for the account at (d) above and have stated, in their affidavit of discovery, that it has not been possible to locate any additional cheque stubs which, they believe, were destroyed routinely some years ago.

It has recently come to our clients' attention that they, inadvertently, omitted to make discovery in respect of the following bank accounts:-

- (a) home loan account in the name Frank and Sheila Dunlop (account no. 15995-188) for the period 1st September, 1991 to 1st September, 1993
- (b) home loan account in the name Frank and Sheila Dunlop (account no. 15995-261) for the period 1st September, 1991 to 1st September, 1993

- (c) term loan account in the name Frank J. Dunlop (account no. 1158-316) for the period 1st September, 1991 to 1st September, 1993
- (d) current account in the name Frank and Sheila Dunlop (account no. 03375-042) for the period 1st September, 1991 to 1st September, 1993
- (e) bridging loan account in the name Frank and Sheila Dunlop (account no. 12909-352) for the period 1st September, 1991 to 1st September, 1993
- (f) no. 2 loan account in the name Frank Dunlop (account no. 11158-662) for the period 1st September, 1991 to 1st September, 1993.

As stated above the previous non-disclosure of the aforementioned bank accounts occurred inadvertently for which our clients apologise. We enclose copies of the relevant bank statements as are currently within our clients' possession. When you have considered the bank statements referable to the aforesaid bank accounts you will readily appreciate that the substantial majority (all bar one) are loan accounts of one sort or another. We enclose a Supplemental Affidavit of Discovery sworn by our clients for the purpose of formally discovering the inadvertently omitted bank statements.

2. Cheque payments journal books

In the affidavit of discovery sworn on their behalf on 7th July, 1999 discovery has been made of 15 pages from the cheque payments journal of Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited. No cheque payments journal exists, or existed, in the case of Shefran Limited whether for the period specified in the Order of 12th November, 1999 or otherwise. As we have previously stated the aforementioned discovered extracts are the only extracts from those books that are relevant to the Orders for Discovery made by the Sole Member on 12th February, 1999.

3. Nominal ledgers

Such a document, if it existed, would have been prepared by and retained by our clients' auditors. Our clients have instructed their auditors to ascertain definitively whether such a document existed and, if so, whether it still exists. We understand that our clients' auditors believe it highly unlikely that this document would contain any information within the terms of the Sole Member's Orders of the 12th February, 1999. No equivalent document exists, or existed, in the case of Shefran Limited whether for the period specified in the Order of the 12th November, 1999 or otherwise.

FD.CORR 1 - 177

4. Creditors' and Debtors' ledgers

In light, inter alia, of the size and number of clients of Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited it was the practice of Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited, rather than having a separate creditors' and debtors' ledger, to use the actual invoices received from creditors and copy invoices sent to debtors for the purposes for which one might separately create and maintain a creditors' and debtors' ledger. In their Affidavit of Discovery (sworn on 7th July, 1999) our clients have made discovery of all relevant invoices, within their possession, power of procurement, falling within the terms of the Sole Member's Orders of the 12th February, 1999.

No creditors' or debtors' ledgers exist, or existed, in the case of Shefran Limited whether for the period specified in the Order of 12th November, 1999 or otherwise.

5. Minutes of meetings with the parties referred to in the Orders

The documents within this category are dealt with in the Second Schedule, Part II of the affidavit sworn on our clients' behalf in compliance with the Order for Discovery made by the Sole Member on 12th February. We draw your particular attention to the Second Schedule, Part II, and in particular to Section (a) thereof.

6. Correspondence with the parties referred to in the Orders

The documents within this category are dealt with in the Second Schedule, Part II of the affidavit sworn on our clients' behalf in compliance with the Order for Discovery made by the Sole Member on 12th February. We draw your particular attention to the Second Schedule, Part II, and in particular to Section (a) thereof.

Fee Invoices and Expenses Invoices relating to Quarryvale

You state that it appears that the fee invoices and expenses invoices relating to Quarryvale, discovered in our clients' Affidavit of Discovery, were incomplete and that there may have been further invoices. As we believe is clear from the Second Schedule Part II of our clients' Affidavit of Discovery, in the event that there were any additional fee invoices and/or expenses invoices relating to Quarryvale (other than those discovered in our clients' Affidavit of Discovery) those documents are no longer within our clients' possession, power or procurement.

We have dealt above with your observations with regard to the extracts discovered in our clients' Affidavit of Discovery.

We look forward to hearing from you if, having considered the foregoing, it remains the case that you wish to raise any issue concerning our clients' Affidavit of Discovery.

Dear Paraic

Re: O'Mahony Lands and Fox Lands

I enclose herewith the Tribunal Letter of 7th March 2003, Ref: PTB/169 regarding the above. To the best of my recollection my replies are as follows.

- a) I signed the motion referred to following lobbying by Mr Dunlop in order that the matter would be included in the Agenda for consideration by the Council.
- b) Mr Dunlop only.
- c) No further information.
- d) All Council meetings and meetings with Mr Dunlop to familiarize me with the motion.
- e) I had meetings and dealings with Mr Dunlop in relation to several re-zoning motions with which he was dealing. I was happy to help in instances where the motions and proposals merited my support. I received political donations of £1,000 in the 1993 Senate Election and £250 in the 1997 General Election. Details herewith. In this regard, I now understand that Msrs Ballymore Homes Ltd have purchased Mr O'Mahony's lands and on checking with Msrs Ballymore Homes Ltd, I understand that I received a political donation of £1000 in 1993.
- f) I received no monies or benefits to my recollection in 1989.

Yours sincerely

Cllr. Michael Joe Cosgrave.

Re: O'Mahony Lands and Fox Lands

Dear Paraic

I refer to your letter dated March 7th 2003 re the above lands and following to the very best of my recollection are my replies to the Tribunal of Inquiry.

- A) The motion was signed by me thus enabling the matter to come before the Council meeting. Mr Dunlop lobbied me to do so.
- B) Only Mr Dunlop.
- C) No further information.
- D) All Council meetings and 2/3 meetings with Mr Dunlop briefing me on the O'Mahony and Fox lands.
- E) Regarding Item E I had several dealings with Mr Dunlop in relation to the putting forward of this motion and other motions. Where appropriate, I was delighted to support motions that merited my support. Regarding the O'Mahony lands I now know that Mr O'Mahony sold these lands to Mr Mulryan and on checking with Mr Mulryan I understand that I received a political donation of £1,000.00 from him in 1993.
- F) Re Item F no monies or benefits were received to the best of my recollection.

Yours sincerely

Re: Lands at St. Gerards School, Bray

Dear Ms. Gribbin,

I refer to your letter of the 30th inst., addressed to my Solicitors, O'Sullivan & Associates requesting a more detailed narrative of the queries which were contained in your letter of the 28th March.

Accordingly, I now reply to same as follows :-

- (a) From my recollection, I was not involved nor was I approached or lobbied by any individual in relation to the proposed rezoning of the above lands. In that regard, it was not until I received the Dublin County Council Agenda which contained the proposed rezoning, was I aware of the fact that there was a Motion which proposed to rezone the said lands.
- (b) I seconded the Motion on the basis of the representations which had been submitted by St. Gerards School to Dublin County Council, as in my opinion, the representations merited a debate by the Council with regard to the proposed development. In particular, the fact that the development which was proposed by St. Gerards School, was a low density development and that the proceeds of the sale of the houses would be applied towards the refurbishment of the school buildings, was of particular appeal to me. In addition, a further attraction of the proposed development was that St. Gerards School had indicated that they would enter into a restrictive covenant with Dublin County Council whereby they would covenant to limit the development to 18 houses.

- (c) In addition to what has been pointed out at paragraph (a) above, at my meetings with Mr. Dunlop, he would have stressed to me the positive aspects of the development. I did not attend any meetings in relation to the proposed rezoning in 1993 and 1994, apart from the meetings with Frank Dunlop which are referred to in paragraph (e) below, and also the Dublin County Council meetings. As you are aware, I have already provided this information to you. With regard to the Council meeting, I am not in a position to advise you at this stage, exactly which meetings I attended, because as I cannot recall same, it would be necessary for me to obtain the Minutes of the Dublin County Council meetings for that period from the archives, which I have been advised by the Archive Section will take approximately 2 – 3 weeks.

Also, I would presume that you already have in your possession copies of the said Minutes of Meetings, which will indicate to you which meetings were attended by me. If you wish me to obtain copies of the Minutes from the archives, please let me know.

I met Mr. Dunlop on numerous occasions in 1992 and 1993, where we would have discussed the proposals in relation to the O'Mahony and Fox lands (and other proposed rezoning at the time. During this period, Mr. Dunlop attended at Dublin County Council offices very frequently where I would have met him. As Mr. Dunlop was very often in the vicinity of the Dublin County Council offices, the meetings were informal and I often simply met him by chance. On other occasions, Mr. Dunlop would have contacted me requesting that I meet him.

- (d) In addition, I also met Mr. Dunlop in the Royal Dublin Hotel, the Gresham Hotel and Conways of Parnell Street. I am not in a position to advise you of the time and place on which these meetings took place, because I do not and did not maintain a diary for that period. In such circumstances, I am sure that you will appreciate that it is impossible for me to advise you of specific information regarding the time and place of meetings, and I cannot put it any further.
- (e) The donations I received for this period were referred to in paragraph (e) of my letter of the 28th March last.

I recall discussing the political donation of £1,000.00 received from Mr. Dunlop in the Council Offices in O'Connell Street, in early November 1992. As far as I am aware, I received this cheque in February 1993 and to the best of my knowledge, I lodged this cheque to my special savings account towards the end of February 1993.

The £500.00 political donation from Monarch Properties was received sometime prior to the 1992 General Election. To the best of my knowledge, the political donation from Ballymore Homes was received in or around September/October 1993.

I may have received one further donation of £500.00 or £1,000.00 from Mr. Joe Tiernan at some stage in 1991.

The above is as detailed a response as I can possibly give to the queries which were raised by you. As I do not and did not maintain a diary, unfortunately, I cannot be anymore specific with regard to the date, times and locations of the lobbying by Mr. Dunlop.

I trust that the above is of assistance to you.

Dear Ms Gribbin

Re: O' Mahony Lands and Fox Lands.

I refer to your letter of the 1st April to my Solicitors wherein you requested a more detailed response to your letter of the 7th March last. Accordingly I now reply to same in the following terms:

- a) Whilst the development plan was in the course of being drafted by Dublin County Council, I met with Mr Frank Dunlop on numerous occasions with regard to the proposed rezoning. It was Mr Dunlop who furnished me with the proposed motion and map which indicated the lands which were involved in the proposed rezoning. To the best of my recollection, I signed the Motion for the proposed rezoning in Dublin County Council offices.
- b) I don't recall discussing these lands with anyone other than Mr Dunlop. I would have been very familiar with the lands, the subject matter of the rezoning, because they are situate nearby to where I have lived for the past 33 years. In the early 1970's, I worked as an estate agent and on occasions, I would have been asked for opinions on houses for sale in the Portmarnock area by people who were considering living in the area. As a result, I would have been familiar with the residential market in the area and as such in my opinion, I was of the view that it was suitable to rezone these lands for development.

c) While the development plan was in draft stage, I would have met Mr Dunlop on numerous occasions in Conway's Public House, The Royal Hotel and Dublin County Council offices. Unfortunately, I cannot be specific as to the exact dates and times on which I met him, because, as I did not have a diary for that period, I am sure that you will acknowledge that it is difficult to furnish specific information regarding same. During the Draft Development Plan, Councillors would gather in Conways Public House or the Royal Dublin Hotel for lunch or coffee before the meetings commenced and Mr Dunlop would meet me on these occasions.

d) I know Mr Dunlop for many years. I was introduced to him by my wife, who like Frank, grew up in Kilkenny city and their respective families would have known each other for many years. We would be family friends. Although I may have met Mr Dunlop in relation to other dealings, again, as I did not keep diaries for this period, unfortunately, I cannot be specific as to the dates and locations. Mr Dunlop made no donation of payments to me. I received a payment of £1,000.00 from Mr Mulryan by cheque and to the best of my knowledge, it was lodged into our joint account at the Bank of Ireland, Sutton Cross. In addition, there was a report in the papers some time ago, that Monarch Properties gave a contribution of £500.00. Although I do not recall receiving this money, I am currently trying to ascertain if in fact I received this donation and I have requested Monarch Properties to verify this for me.

Yours Faithfully

Re: Tribunal of Inquiry: Ref: PTB 169

Dear Páraic

With regard to the Tribunal's letter dated September 30, 2003, ref PTB 169, I enclose herewith my replies to the matters raised to the best of my recollection:

Item 1: I had no discussions with Mr Dunlop or any other party since November 4, 1997 regarding the items in this question.

Item 3: Please refer to my answer in Item 4.

Item 4: On three or four occasions per year I had an understanding to meet with Mr Dunlop and Liam Creaven for lunch. Mr Creaven usually contacted me by phone when such arrangements were made. The luncheon arrangements were usually in The Grand Hotel in Malahide or in the Country Club Dunsaughlin close to Mr Dunlop's home

Subsequent to the establishment of the Tribunal and after he had given evidence, Mr Dunlop felt that we should not meet as often as before. Eventually he agreed to meet whenever he was free to do so. We re-established contact for social meetings on the condition that matters relating to the Tribunal were not discussed. However, those matters that were of public knowledge were allowed for discussion.

Kindest regards

Cllr. Michael Joe Cosgrave.

Re: Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments

Dear Ms Gribbin

Regarding your letter dated 30th September 2003; the following is my reply to the best of my knowledge.

Q1: I did not have any discussions with Mr Dunlop or his agents since 4th November 1997 regarding matters raised in the question.

Q3: Please see my reply to Q4 below.

Q4: I had a social arrangement to meet Mr Dunlop and Michael J Cosgrave for lunch 3 or 4 times a year. Sometimes Mr Dunlop would ring me and on other occasions I would ring him and then I would contact Michael J Cosgrave about the venue and time for lunch.

After the Tribunal was established, and particularly when Mr Dunlop gave evidence to the Tribunal, on his insistence I met with him less frequently. However, after a period of time had elapsed, Mr Dunlop agreed to meet on occasions when he was available.

There meetings took place in public: the Grand Hotel in Malahide and on 1 or 2 occasions at least in the Country Club in Dunsoughlin. The latter venue was chosen because of its proximity to Mr Dunlop's home.

After his evidence to the Tribunal Mr Dunlop was reluctant to continue meetings but as time passed he agreed to continue our social occasions on the condition that matters relating to the Tribunal would not be discussed other than that which was in the public domain.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN - MR LIAM LAWLOR

INTRODUCTION

1.01 Mr Lawlor featured in a number of modules which were the subject of public inquiry by the Tribunal between 2002 and 2008. Within this period, Mr Lawlor gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal in the course of its public hearings on 21 days. On a minority of those occasions, Mr Lawlor was legally represented. Mr Lawlor, both by himself and through his solicitors, engaged in voluminous correspondence with the Tribunal between October 1998 and late 2005. Mr Lawlor died in a road traffic accident near Moscow in October 2005.

1.02 A detailed consideration by the Tribunal of evidence by and relating to Mr Lawlor is to be found in the Chapters relevant to the individual modules in which Mr Lawlor featured as a witness, as are findings made in relation to Mr Lawlor, relevant to those modules. In this chapter, Mr Lawlor's background and involvement in the Tribunal's inquiries are examined in summary format.

1.03 Mr Liam Lawlor was a member of the Fianna Fail Party until his resignation from the party in June 2000. He was a councillor on Dublin County Council representing the Lucan Ward, between 1979 and 1991. In 1991, Mr Lawlor lost his seat in the Local Elections of that year. Mr Lawlor was a TD representing the constituency of Dublin West between 1977 and 2002, with the exception of the periods June 1981 to February 1982, and November 1982 to February 1987. At various times during his political career, he held the positions of Chairman of the Board of the Eastern Regional Development Organisation (ERDO), Chairman of the Joint Committee on Commercial State-Sponsored Bodies, a member of the Committee on Members Interests in Dáil Eireann, Vice Chairman of the Finance and Public Services Committee. He was a salaried National Organiser for the Fianna Fail Party, between 1982 and 1987.

THE TRIBUNAL'S REQUESTS FOR INFORMATION FROM MR LAWLOR

1.04 Perhaps the most powerful inquiry tool available to a Tribunal established pursuant to the provisions of the Tribunal of Inquiry Acts 1921 (as amended) in its quest to establish facts, is its power to order discovery of documents. The Tribunal made in excess of 9,000 discovery orders in the course of its work, many of them directed to financial institutions as part of a process to identify the movement of funds into, and out of, bank accounts of individuals and corporations which were the subject of inquiry.

1.05 Eight discovery/production orders were made by the Tribunal against Mr Lawlor personally. Many more were made against financial institutions and individuals with whom Mr Lawlor was associated, as part of the Tribunal's inquiry into Mr Lawlor's activities, and more particularly, to assist it in establishing the source of the enormous sums of money which moved through Mr Lawlor's bank accounts, or bank accounts with which he was associated, or which were otherwise operated for his benefit.

1.06 Notwithstanding exhaustive research carried out by the Tribunal, the exercise of its power to make discovery and production orders, and the taking of evidence on oath from many witnesses, the Tribunal was provided with explanations for just 53% of the lodgements of over IR£1,000 totalling circa IR£1.4m which were identified in bank accounts controlled by, or for the benefit of Mr Lawlor in the period 1991–1997.

1.07 On 30 October 1998, Mr Lawlor's solicitor, Mr Brian Delahunt, was advised of certain orders the Tribunal proposed to make against Mr Lawlor including:

- i. An order requiring Mr Lawlor's attendance at the Tribunal's offices to answer questions to be put to him by Counsel for the Tribunal relating to certain payments to him.
- ii. An order for discovery and production of documentation relating to Mr Lawlor's finances.
- iii. An order for discovery and production of documentation relating to payments to Mr Lawlor by Arlington Securities PLC and/or Mr Tom Gilmartin.
- iv. An order for discovery and production of documentation relating to the negotiation of cheques given to Mr Lawlor by Arlington Securities PLC and/or Mr Tom Gilmartin.
- v. An order for discovery and production of documentation relating to the provision of services by Mr Lawlor to Arlington Securities PLC and/or Mr Gilmartin.
- vi. An order directing Mr Lawlor to furnish to the Tribunal an affidavit stating the names of companies with which he, Mr Lawlor is, or has since 20 June 1985 been, a shareholder or director or in which he had any beneficial interest, giving details of any such shareholding or directorship.

1.08 Following this request, Mr Lawlor’s solicitor sought the opportunity to make oral representations to the Tribunal in relation to the proposed orders.

1.09 On 24 November 1998, the Sole Member of the Tribunal sat in private to hear oral submissions by Mr Lawlor’s legal representatives, Mr Hardiman SC, Mr Delahunt BL and Mr Brian Delahunt solicitor, in relation to the said proposed orders.

1.10 Mr Lawlor’s Counsel submitted that the Tribunal lacked jurisdiction to make the proposed order directing Mr Lawlor to attend at the Tribunal’s offices and there be questioned by Tribunal Counsel. It was further submitted that it was ‘manifestly unjust’ that a request for discovery of all bank accounts and financial transactions on the basis of an allegation¹ against Mr Lawlor which his Counsel described as ‘bizarre’, ‘incredible’, ‘crazy stuff’, and ‘intrinsically unworthy of belief.’

1.11 On 27 November 1998, the Tribunal wrote to Mr Lawlor’s solicitors with its considered response to the oral submissions made to it on 24 November 1998. In that letter, the Tribunal provided additional information relating to the matters then under investigation by it for the purposes of enabling Mr Lawlor make representations to the Tribunal in relation to the proposed discovery orders, but it declined to disclose at that time, the ‘evidential base of the allegations’ concerning Mr Lawlor.

1.12 The Tribunal’s letter was responded to by Mr Lawlor’s solicitors on 3 December 1998. In that response Mr Lawlor offered to provide a narrative statement to the Tribunal subject to specified conditions, including a condition as to the confidentiality of any such statement, or any documentation he would provide to the Tribunal.

1.13 Ultimately, Mr Lawlor provided the Tribunal with a narrative statement dated 10 March 1999. Mr Lawlor made, in effect, a further statement to his solicitor on 21 April 1999, and this was provided to the Tribunal on 26 April 1999. The Tribunal informed Mr Lawlor’s solicitors that it intended to make certain orders against Mr Lawlor.

1.14 On 26 April 1999, the Tribunal made three orders directed to Mr Lawlor:

- An order for discovery and production of certain categories of documentation.

¹The allegation in question suggested that Mr Lawlor had, while demanding a share of a then proposed development, stated himself to be acting as a representative of the Irish Government. The Tribunal, in this Report, has essentially found that this allegation was in fact true.

- An order directing Mr Lawlor to attend at the offices of the Tribunal on a date to be agreed to answer questions by Counsel to the Tribunal in relation to matters which were the subject of inquiry by the Tribunal
- An order requiring Mr Lawlor to provide on affidavit the names of companies with which he was associated.

JUDICIAL REVIEW LITIGATION

1.15 Mr Lawlor instituted judicial review proceedings against the Tribunal on 19 May 1999 challenging the Tribunal's powers to direct his attendance at the Tribunal's offices for questioning by Tribunal Counsel, and to quash the Tribunal's proposed discovery orders directing Mr Lawlor to provide it with the names of the companies with which he was associated in the period 1987 – 1994.

1.16 While the High Court quashed the orders requiring Mr Lawlor to attend the Tribunal's offices for questioning, and directing him to provide an affidavit identifying the companies he was associated with, it upheld the Tribunal's order for discovery and production of documents.

1.17 The decision of the High Court was confirmed by the Supreme Court. In their judgments, Hamilton CJ and Denham J referred to the Supreme Court decision in the case of Haughey-v-Moriarty (1999) 3IR, 1, and reiterated with approval the following passage:

'A Tribunal of Inquiry of this nature involves the following stages:

- 1. A preliminary investigation of the evidence available;*
- 2. The determination by the tribunal of what it considers to be evidence relevant to the matters in which it is obliged to inquire;*
- 3. The service of such evidence on persons likely to be affected thereby;*
- 4. The public hearing of witnesses in regard to such evidence, and the cross-examination of such witnesses by or on behalf of persons affected thereby;*
- 5. The preparation of a report and the making of recommendations based on the facts established at such public hearing.'*

1.18 Hamilton CJ also quoted the following passage from the Salmon Commission (paragraphs 27 and 28):

'The exceptional inquisitorial powers inferred upon a Tribunal of Inquiry under the Act of 1921 necessarily expose the ordinary citizen to the risk of having aspects of his private life uncovered which would otherwise remain private, and to the risk of having baseless allegations made against him. This may cause distress and injury to reputation. For these reasons, we are strongly of the opinion that the inquisitorial machinery set up under the Act of 1921 should never be used for matters of local or minor public importance but always be confined to matters of vital public importance concerning which there is something in the nature of a nationwide crisis of confidence. In such cases we consider that no other method of investigation would be adequate.'

MR LAWLOR'S DISCOVERY

1.19 Following the Superior Court's confirmation of the Tribunal's power to make the discovery order of 26 April 1999, Mr Lawlor, in purported compliance with that order furnished the Tribunal with an unsworn document headed 'Statement of Liam Lawlor', in which Mr Lawlor revealed that ('to the best of my knowledge') he had bank accounts at ACC Bank, Hatch Street, the AIB branch at Crumlin Road, Dublin, the Bank of Ireland branch at Lucan, Co. Dublin in his own name and an account at the AIB branch in Lucan in the name of his wife, Mrs Hazel Lawlor, from which he said he derived some benefit. Mr Lawlor did not provide any further details of accounts or transactions, and more particularly, failed to swear an affidavit of discovery.

1.20 A further order for discovery against Mr Lawlor was made by the Tribunal on 8 June 2000. This Order required Discovery on Oath and production to the Tribunal of all documentation and records in Mr Lawlor's possession or power relating to any accounts held in any financial institution either within or outside the State, in Mr Lawlor's name (either individually or jointly) or for his benefit, or into which he made lodgements of money or into which he caused or procured lodgements of money to be made, or into which lodgements of money were made for his benefit.

1.21 On 10 July 2000, the Tribunal made 223 orders directed to financial institutions conducting business within the Republic of Ireland, requiring them to make Discovery on oath and production of any documentation in their possession, power or procurement relating to Mr Lawlor.

1.22 Mr Lawlor did not comply with the Tribunal order of 8 June 2000. Summonses were then issued by the Tribunal directing Mr Lawlor to attend before the Tribunal on 10 October 2000 for the purposes of giving evidence to the Tribunal and to produce and hand over to the Tribunal certain categories of documentation. Mr Lawlor failed to comply with these orders and on 10 October 2000 the Sole Member of the Tribunal directed that proceedings be instituted pursuant to Section 4 of the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act 1997.

1.23 The matter came before the High Court on 24 October 2000, whereupon Mr Lawlor was ordered to comply with the Tribunal's orders of 8 June 2000. This decision of the High Court was appealed by Mr Lawlor to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court upheld the order of the High Court in every respect, save that it extended the compliance period of one week to two weeks.

1.24 On 7 November 2000, Mr Lawlor attended before the Tribunal in the company of his solicitor Mr Brian Delahunt. Mr Lawlor confirmed that the documentation delivered to the Tribunal's offices on the previous day was the documentation required to be discovered and produced pursuant to the orders of the Tribunal and of the High Court.

1.25 The accompanying affidavit of discovery listed eighteen bank accounts all within the jurisdiction.

1.26 The Sole Member determined that Mr Lawlor had not complied with the discovery order, and details of that lack of compliance were conveyed by the Tribunal to Mr Brian Delahunt, solicitor. An examination of other documentation made available to the Tribunal revealed the existence of twelve additional bank accounts of which there had been no mention by Mr Lawlor.

1.27 Mr Lawlor swore a supplemental affidavit of discovery on 11 December 2000, in which he listed an additional ten bank accounts. None were outside the jurisdiction.

1.28 On 12, 13 and 14 December 2000, Mr Lawlor was examined on oath at the public sessions of the Tribunal in relation to his discovery and production of documentation. Mr Lawlor was questioned in relation to lodgements of approximately IR£4.6 million which appeared to have been made to his accounts and which were disclosed in documentation provided to the Tribunal.

1.29 There followed further hearings before the High Court and the Supreme Court. In the course of his judgment in the High Court, Smyth J stated:

'The blatant defiance of Mr. Lawlor to the Tribunal in his refusal to answer questions is failure to abide not only by the Order of the High Court of 24th October 2000, but much more importantly the Order of the Supreme Court, that Mr. Lawlor attend to give evidence to the Tribunal in relation to the documents and records to which the Orders related. That he did so as a citizen is a disgrace. That he did so as a public representative is a scandal...'

1.30 On 15 January 2001 the High Court ordered the attachment and committal of Mr Lawlor to prison for a period of three months commencing on 17 January 2001, the first seven days of which were to be served in Mountjoy prison, the balance thereof to be suspended until 23 November 2001 so as to enable Mr Lawlor to comply with the orders of the Court and to swear and file full and proper affidavits of discovery, and to produce and hand over documentation referred to in the order of the Tribunal being documents and records mentioned at paragraphs a, b and c of the order of the Tribunal dated 8 June 2000², such documentation to be furnished to the Tribunal at fortnightly intervals, with the final affidavit of discovery to be filed by 30 March 2001.

1.31 On 29 January 2001 Mr Lawlor delivered sixty-nine lever arch files numbered B1 to B69 inclusive together with an affidavit entitled 'First Affidavit of Liam Lawlor.' One of the files produced at that time entitled 'Schedule of receipts' (B42) reported to be a schedule of receipts prepared by Burke Burns Blake, Mr Lawlor's accountants, from information and explanations provided to them by Mr Lawlor. Item No. 2 in that schedule contained the heading 'Income including political contributions, donations and consultancy fees being approximate and as recollected by Liam Lawlor in respect of period 1973 – 2000.' This list revealed a total of IR£1,521,500 as having been paid by a number of entities including:

- National Toll Road (1990s)	IR£74,000
- Mr Frank Dunlop & Associates (1990s)	IR £60,000
- Green Property Company (1970s, 1980s)	IR £35,000
- Monarch Properties (1970s, 1980s, 1980s)	IR £40,000
- O'Callaghan Properties (1990s)	IR £25,000
- Davy Stockbrokers (1980s, 1990s)	IR £5,000
- Ganley International (1990s)	IR £30,000
- Arlington Securities plc (Tom Gilmartin) (1980s, 1990s)	IR £35,000
- Arlington Securities plc, (Direct) (1990s)	IR £100,000
- Mr Michael Quinn (1970s, 1980s, 1990s)	IR £46,000
- Political fundraisers (estimated over 26 years)	IR £300,000
- Mr Pat Murphy (1980s, 1990s)	IR £40,000
- Eleven local / General elections (estimated over 26 years)	IR £100,000
- Jones Group Ltd (1990s)	IR £5,000
- Captain Tim Rogers (1970s)	IR £10,000

² Mr Lawlor was also fined IR£10,000.

1.32 On 12 February 2001, Mr Lawlor delivered to the Tribunal a further eight folders of documents numbered B70 to B77 together with a sworn affidavit described as 'Second Affidavit of Liam Lawlor.'

1.33 On 26 February 2001 Mr Lawlor delivered to the Tribunal an additional ten folders of documents numbered B78 to B87 followed on 2 March 2001 by a sworn affidavit described as 'Third Affidavit of Liam Lawlor.'

1.34 On 12 March 2001, Mr Lawlor delivered to the Tribunal an additional four folders of documents numbered B88 to B91 together with his fourth and fifth affidavits of discovery.

1.35 On 27 March 2001, Mr Lawlor delivered to the Tribunal a further three folders of documents numbered B92 to B94 together with his sixth, seventh and eighth sworn affidavits of discovery. On 29 March 2001, further affidavits sworn by Mr Lawlor, accompanied by additional folders of documents (B95-97) were delivered to the Tribunal.

1.36 On 30 March 2001 Mr Lawlor delivered to the Tribunal a further fourteen folders of documents numbered B98 to B111 together with a sworn affidavit in respect of each one of these files, being Mr Lawlor's twelfth to twenty fifth affidavits of discovery.

1.37 On 18 April 2001 Mr Lawlor delivered an additional seventeen folders of documentation entitled B112 to B127, with seventeen sworn affidavits of discovery.

1.38 On 4 May 2001, Mr Lawlor delivered a further sixteen folders of documents to the Tribunal numbered B128 to B142 and B144, together with sixteen sworn affidavits of discovery.

1.39 On 11 May 2001, Mr Lawlor delivered five folders with five further affidavits of discovery.

1.40 By 10 July 2001, Mr Lawlor had furnished to the Tribunal a total of 157 folders of documentation and a large number of sworn affidavits of discovery. However, the Tribunal believed that Mr Lawlor had still failed to comply with the discovery orders, and the matter again came before the High Court on 31 July 2001 whereupon the High Court committed Mr Lawlor to prison for a further week for non-compliance, and directed him to make further and better discovery to the Tribunal. The Court also imposed a further fine of IR£5,000 on Mr Lawlor.

1.41 A stay of execution on the committal order was granted to Mr Lawlor while he appealed the High Court decision to the Supreme Court. In due course, the Supreme Court dismissed Mr Lawlor's appeal and directed that his period of imprisonment commence on 2 January 2002.

1.42 Mr Lawlor provided the Tribunal with a further affidavit of discovery together with an additional 7 folders of documents, on 7 September 2001, but this was also found to be deficient. This deficiency was brought to the attention of the High Court on 3 December 2001. On 1 February 2002 Mr Lawlor was again committed to prison by the High Court for non-compliance with the orders of the Court dated 15 January 2001 and 31 July 2001. The Court ordered that Mr Lawlor be committed to prison for a further 28 days of the (suspended) sentence imposed on him on 15 January 2001, to commence on 5 February 2002. Mr Lawlor was also ordered to pay a fine of €12,697.38, and to make further and better discovery by 9 April 2002.

1.43 Following his release from prison, there followed a further series of correspondence between Mr Lawlor and the Tribunal.

1.44 On 14 February 2003, Mr Lawlor was notified by the Tribunal of its intention to consider making an order for discovery and production of documentation relating to the sale by him and his wife Mrs Hazel Lawlor of one acre of land at Somerton, Lucan, Mr Lawlor's home address. On 11 March 2003 Mr Lawlor provided the Tribunal with a file of documentation relating to the sale of these lands by him.

1.45 The discovery order relating to this matter was then made against Mr Lawlor by the Tribunal on 12 March 2003 relating to the sale of one acre of lands at Somerton, Co. Dublin. In purported compliance with that order, Mr Lawlor's swore an affidavit on 31 March 2003, and provided two further files of documentation designated C54 and C55 to the Tribunal. A further affidavit of discovery was sworn by Mr Lawlor on 15 April 2003. Deficiencies in Mr Lawlor's discovery were identified by the Tribunal and notified to Mr Lawlor.

1.46 On 5 June 2003, Mr Lawlor took issue with the Tribunal's criticisms of his discovery affidavit of 31 March 2003. Mr Lawlor advised the Tribunal that it was his belief that he had complied with the Tribunal's order of 12 March 2003, to the best of his ability, and having regard to the absence of legal representation.

1.47 On 19 June 2003, Mr Lawlor was informed by the Tribunal that it intended to hear evidence from Mr Lawlor at a public hearing of the Tribunal on or after 8 July 2003.

1.48 On 3 July 2003, Mr Lawlor acknowledged to the Tribunal that some documentation properly discoverable by him pursuant to the order of the Tribunal of 12 March 2003 had in fact not been discovered. Mr Lawlor said that the reason for this was that the documentation in question was in the possession of a firm of lawyers in the Channel Islands who themselves were in turn represented by two London firms of solicitors and that the relevant documentation was in effect being withheld by these law firms because of the non-payment by Mr Lawlor of fees due, amounting to at least stg£60,000. Mr Lawlor sought payment of these fees by the Tribunal in order to effect the release of the said documentation. This application for payment of the fees was rejected by the Tribunal.

THE COMPLIANCE HEARING IN JULY/SEPTEMBER 2003

1.49 Evidence was heard from Mr Lawlor and others between 8 July 2003 and 23 September 2003 for the purposes of ascertaining if Mr Lawlor was in fact in breach of the discovery order made by the Tribunal on 12 March 2003 and, if he was, the extent of that breach.

1.50 Following these public hearings, the Tribunal gave its formal ruling in public on this compliance issue, on 24 September 2003. The ruling of the Tribunal was as follows:

'This ruling of the Tribunal and any findings expressed therein relates solely to evidence concerning the issue of compliance by Mr. Liam Lawlor with an Order of this Tribunal made on the 12th March 2003 and is particularly concerned with the close and detailed examination of the steps taken by him in purported compliance with that Order.

The Order of 12th March 2003 required Mr. Lawlor to make discovery on oath and produce all documentation in his possession or within his power and procurement concerning the sale by him, jointly with Mrs Hazel Lawlor, of approximately one acre at Somerton, Lucan, County Dublin in or about November 2001 and including, but not limited to, the receipt and application of the proceeds of sale of the said transaction. The Order further provided that the Affidavit of Discovery be made in the form provided for in Form 10, Appendix C of the Rules of the Superior Courts 1986 (as amended). Mr. Lawlor had been notified on the 14th February 2003 that the Tribunal had intended making an Order in these terms and was advised as to his entitlement to make submissions to the Tribunal before any such Order was made. No submissions were, in fact, made by Mr. Lawlor.

In purported compliance with the Order of the Tribunal of the 12th March 2003, Mr. Lawlor swore a number of affidavits commencing with an affidavit sworn on 31st March 2003. This affidavit was clearly deficient in both form and substance. An extension of time was granted to Mr. Lawlor for the swearing of further affidavits in the correct form. On 7th April 2003 Mr. Lawlor was informed that as he failed to comply with the Discovery and Production Order, the Tribunal would consider applying to the High Court pursuant to Section 4 of the Tribunal of Inquiry (Evidence) (Amendments) Act 1997 for an order compelling Mr. Lawlor to comply with the Tribunal Order.

A further warning letter was sent by the Tribunal to Mr. Lawlor on the 15th May 2003, once again elaborating on the deficiencies in his purported discovery to date. Mr. Lawlor was advised on 19th June 2003 that the Tribunal had decided to summon him to give oral evidence on the compliance issue not before the 8th July 2003.

Oral evidence has been taken from Mr. Lawlor between 8th July 2003 and the 31st July 2003 and again between 16th September and 23rd September 2003 with evidence from Mr. Tony Seddon, solicitor, on 17th and 18th September. During these periods, and with the leave of the Tribunal, Mr. Lawlor had discovered and delivered some 17,000 additional pages of documentation pursuant to the order of the 12th March 2003. The most recent delivery of a substantial amount of documentation by Mr. Lawlor occurred as late as 12th September 2003, some six months or so after the making of the initial Order.

Prior to the Order of 12th March 2003, Orders for discovery and production were made by the Tribunal to Mr. Lawlor, relating to other matters relevant to the Tribunal's Terms of Reference, the first one being made on the 8th June 2000. Arising from same, Mr. Lawlor was subsequently referred by this Tribunal to the High Court pursuant to Section 4 of the Tribunal of Inquiry (Evidence) (Amendment) Act 1997. On three occasions the High Court has found Mr. Lawlor not to have complied with the Tribunal discovery and production Orders resulting in Mr. Lawlor serving three terms of imprisonment.

Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Lawlor is not on this occasion legally represented, the Tribunal is satisfied that, because of Mr. Lawlor's previous dealings with the Tribunal on the question of discovery and consequent upon his appearance in the High and Supreme Court over the past three years, he has a detailed and thorough knowledge of the discovery process including the necessity to use the form of affidavit provided for in the Rules of the Superior Courts, and he is well aware as to what is required to comply with the Order of 12th March 2003.

Furthermore, the contention made by Mr. Lawlor that he has been unable to secure any legal advice relating to the discovery Order because of lack of funds is totally rejected by the Tribunal. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr. Lawlor has access to sufficient funds to pay for legal advice, if it was his wish so to do.

Having considered the documentation discovered and produced by Mr. Lawlor in purported compliance with the Order of 12th March 2003, and with the benefit of oral evidence of Mr. Lawlor together with that of Mr. Michael Whelan, Mr. John Barrett and Mr. Tony Seddon, solicitor, the Tribunal now makes the following findings and conclusions, solely in relation to this compliance issue:

- 1. Prior to the commencement of Mr. Lawlor's oral testimony on 8th July 2003, Mr. Lawlor had failed to comply with the order of 12th March 2003 to a degree that was very significant and which amounted to obstruction of the Tribunal in its work, and he persisted in doing so in spite of generous extensions of time granted by the Tribunal to enable him to comply. This failure to comply not only related to the persistent failure by Mr. Lawlor to use a format of Affidavit provided for in the Rules of the Superior Courts as he was directed to use, but also as to the substance and content of the affidavits actually sworn by him.*
- 2. Mr. Lawlor's non-compliance not only related to relevant documentation in his possession but also documentation within his power and procurement, including documentation physically held by Seddon solicitors in London and Prague. Much of this documentation was only identified and made available by Mr. Lawlor in September 2003, by which time the Tribunal had secured the agreement by Mr. Tony Seddon, solicitor, to attend and give evidence, which he did at considerable expense to the Tribunal and resulting in further additional delay to the Tribunal.*
- 3. Mr. Lawlor's non-compliance with the order of 12th March 2002 continued after the 8th July 2003 and throughout his oral testimony.*

4. The contention of Mr. Lawlor that he was unable to access or was in some way fettered in his access to certain relevant documentation held by his foreign solicitors because of lack of funds is rejected as being totally false and grossly exaggerated by him. The Tribunal takes this view only after close examination and consideration of the evidence given by Mr. Lawlor on this particular subject.

5. The Tribunal is, at this belated stage, reasonably satisfied that Mr. Lawlor has now complied with the Order of 12th March 2003 insofar as he may be able so to do at present. In arriving at this conclusion the Tribunal accepts that Mr. Lawlor's failure to procure documentation in the possession of Haynes & Trias, solicitors, Gibraltar, Nicholas Morgan, solicitor, Jersey and David Morgan deceased, Whitehead & Company, solicitors, Jersey may, on its face be as a result of the refusal of all or some of these parties, (who are outside the jurisdiction), to permit access to and production of such documentation to the Tribunal for reasons of solicitor/client confidentiality involving third parties or on the grounds of relevance. However, the Tribunal remains anxious to examine this documentation and will continue to seek its production by other means, including, if possible, securing the attendance of Nicholas Morgan, solicitor, to give evidence to this Tribunal. Therefore the Tribunal expressly reserves the right to revisit the question of Mr. Lawlor's compliance with the Order of 12th March 2003 in respect of this particular documentation at a date in the future should it be appropriate so to do.

6. The Tribunal is satisfied that apart from the other documentation referred to in paragraph 5 above, all other documentation furnished by Mr. Lawlor since commencement of this compliance module was within the possession, power and procurement of Mr. Lawlor at the time he swore his first Affidavit of Discovery. Having heard evidence from Mr. Lawlor the Tribunal is satisfied that the withholding of this documentation was a deliberate act on his part, and amounted to non-cooperation with the Tribunal.

7. Mr. Lawlor, over the course of his oral examination commencing on 8th July 2003, repeatedly lied to this Tribunal, was evasive, dismissive, unco-operative, obstructive and lacking in cooperation to a degree which can only amount to a very serious attempt to knowingly mislead, obstruct and hinder the Tribunal in its work and, more particularly, in its lawful pursuit of the documentation sought in the Order of 12th March 2003.

Section 4 of the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) (Amendment) Act 1997 is the statutory provision enabling the Tribunal to refer a person to the High Court in the face of that person's failure to comply with or his disobedience of an Order of (the) Tribunal whereupon the High Court is empowered to make such orders as it deems appropriate to give effect to such Order.

It is this section of the Act of 1997 which has been utilised by this Tribunal on previous occasions to compel Mr. Lawlor to comply with the Tribunal's Orders for Discovery and which has resulted in the imprisonment of Mr. Lawlor for contempt of Court arising from his failure to comply with discovery orders made by the Courts.

There is, however, no statutory provision enabling a Tribunal to refer a person to the High Court purely for punitive purposes where that person has complied with the relevant Tribunal order, however belated, as has occurred on this occasion.

The Tribunal could have chosen to stand down Mr. Lawlor on 8th July 2003 or soon afterwards, and to have then referred him to the High Court pursuant to Section 4 of the Act of 1977, but the Tribunal chose instead to attempt to exact the relevant documentation from him under examination on oath and with the aid of information obtained in the course thereof. In so doing, the Tribunal believes that the relevant documentation that has been now obtained by the Tribunal has been secured much earlier than would have been the case had it stood Mr. Lawlor down in July 2003 and referred the matter to the High Court.

In proceeding in this manner, the Tribunal was particularly mindful of its remit to conduct its areas of investigation in as an efficient and cost effective manner as possible.

In the course of its work the Tribunal has frequently to contend with evidence which, on its face appears less than truthful, but on many such occasions an actual finding that such evidence is in fact untruthful must await later evidence from others or evidence gleaned from a close perusal of documentation. It is for this reason that the Tribunal will only occasionally make a finding that particular evidence was given by a witness knowing it to be untrue until such time as all related evidence has been considered. On this occasion, however, and as the Tribunal concludes this compliance hearing, which is effectively a module in its own right, we deem it appropriate to express our deep concern at the evidence given by Mr. Lawlor in such circumstances where he knew that such evidence was false and untrue. There are a number of instances where the Tribunal is satisfied that untruthful evidence was knowingly given by Mr. Lawlor over this period. However, in respect of two particular instances given Mr. Lawlor's blatant disregard for the truth, the Tribunal hereby directs that the relevant transcripts of evidence together with the relevant documentation be referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions to enable him to decide if any further action was appropriate.

These two instances are:

- (1) Evidence given by Mr. Lawlor on 8th July 2003 and following days relating to an explanation for a payment for Stg100,000 pounds and Stg17,500 pounds by Mr. Michael Whelan/Maplewood Holdings/Lunar Sea Developments for himself or for his benefit; and*
- (2) Evidence given by Mr. Lawlor on the 8th July 2003 and following days relating to the source, preparation and delivery of an invoice of Stg100,000 pounds plus VAT of Stg17,500 pounds on a bill heading purporting to be from Seddons Solicitors, London and Prague.*

In both these instances the Tribunal is satisfied that Mr. Lawlor gave evidence under oath which he knew to be false and he did so for the purposes of obstructing or hindering the work of the Tribunal.

This referral of course in no way inhibits the DPP from examining other evidence given by Mr. Lawlor and others should he wish to do so.

That concludes the ruling of the Tribunal.'

1.51 The issue of costs arising from the completed compliance hearing was left in abeyance, until after the publication of the Tribunal's final Report.

OFFSHORE PAYMENTS TO MR LAWLOR

1.52 In the course of its public hearings (in July/September 2003) arising from compliance issues in relation to the discovery of documents by Mr Lawlor, the Tribunal heard sworn evidence from Mr Lawlor (over a period of 13 days) and from others including Mr Lawlor's then solicitor in London and Prague, Mr Tony Seddon. In the course of those hearings, it was established that very substantial sums of money running to many hundreds of thousands of pounds had been paid to Mr Lawlor from offshore sources.

1.53 Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal that he had engaged in business ventures in the Czech Republic. One company with which he said he was involved with in 7 or 8 projects was Long Water Investments Ltd (Long Water), a company registered in the Bahamas. Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal that during a period in the mid 1990s when he had very heavy personal bank debts in Ireland, he obtained loans from Long Water. Mr Lawlor said that in 1995 and 1998 respectively he received two sterling loans worth over IR£330,000 each from this company, which were guaranteed against his personal assets in Ireland. More specifically, in the period 1995 to 1999, IR£664,000 (being the total of the two 'loan' amounts, less IR£20,000 transferred into another account) was transferred from accounts sourced in Liechtenstein into accounts in Ireland and the United States for Mr Lawlor's use.

1.54 In the course of evidence given by Mr Lawlor to the Tribunal on Day 222, in response to a question posed to him by Tribunal Counsel seeking information as to his involvement with Long Water, Mr Lawlor stated:

'There is about 7 or 8 projects which I have an arrangement with that investment company. I had a lot of bank debts in the mid 90's and they advanced two loans and they are due for repayment, and they are also partners in a number of these property projects that are at various stages of negotiation.'

1.55 Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal that the loans were to himself, and that the agreements relating to them were in an office in Prague. Mr Lawlor named a Doctor Kavalak of Winchester Square in Prague as his lawyer in that location.

1.56 In the course of his evidence on that occasion, Mr Lawlor gave the Tribunal the following information:

- Mr David Morgan (Deceased) a solicitor in the Channel Islands made lodgements into a bank (Landesbank) in Liechtenstein.
- Mr Lawlor opened an account at a bank in Liechtenstein from which monies were transferred to Mr Lawlor into his Ulster Bank and National Irish Bank accounts in Dublin, as well as accounts in the US for himself and his children, and the accounts of his solicitor and a car dealership. The monies in the Irish banks were then drawn down by him.
- In order to trigger a withdrawal of funds, Mr Lawlor had to first contact Long Water to request a drawdown and then telephone a Mr Kieber at Landesbank to authenticate the instruction, whereupon the requested funds would then be transferred to Mr Lawlor in Ireland.

1.57 A number of documents were provided to the Tribunal in the course of Discovery. These included:

- i) A loan agreement dated 5 July 1995 and made between Long Water Investment Ltd C/O PO Box 302 Westaway Chambers, 39 Don Street, St. Helier, Jersey, Channel Islands, and Mr Lawlor whereby Long Water agreed to grant Mr Lawlor a loan facility of up to stg£500,000. The agreement provided that Mr Lawlor would provide introductory services to Long Water and its principals and their clients in the context of business in Prague and the Czech Republic generally.
- ii) A supplemental loan agreement made on 22 August 1998 between Long Water Investment Ltd of the same address and Mr Lawlor under which Long Water agreed to increase the amount of the facility set out in the original loan agreement by stg£400,000 to stg£900,000.
- iii) A letter dated 30 October 2000 from Andrew J. Haynes of 2/3b Horse Barrack Lane, PO Box 156 Gibraltar to Mr Lawlor at Somerton House, Lucan, Co. Dublin entitled 'Loan Repayment' which stated:

We act for the Directors of Long Water Investments Ltd ('the Company') and are instructed that the date for repayment of the loan to you from the Company has now passed. We are further instructed that the balance of capital and interest repayable as at the date of repayment, being 30th September 2000, amounts to Stg£1,111,023.81 (as per attached copy statement) and that interest continues to accrue at the rate of Stg£456.59 per day.

Please arrange for payment of the overdue amount together with interest thereon to be made forthwith to the following account: (Details of a Barclays Bank account in Gibraltar bearing the account name Andrew Haynes Client Account).

- iv) A letter dated 27 December 2000 from Haynes and Trias to Delahunt Solicitors (the Dublin firm of solicitors, then acting for Mr Lawlor) on behalf of their clients Long Water Investments Ltd which referred at paragraphs 5 and 6 to the loan to Mr Lawlor in the following terms:

We are instructed that a loan was granted to the said Mr. Lawlor during the period from 1995 to the present and that the capital and accrued interest is presently outstanding. The term of the loan expired on the 30th September 2000 and by letter dated 30th October 2000 we made a formal request for repayment of the principal and interest on the loan in the amount of Stg£1,111,023.81.

We were given to understand that following the sale of the lands in Ireland in or about September 2000, we would receive an initial payment of circa IR£690,000 (less any relevant deductions) in part settlement of the amount due to the company.

- v) A letter dated 20 March 2001 from C.I. Law Trust Group Ltd (formally [sic] Westaway Trust Company Ltd) PO Box 303 Chancery Chambers, St. Helier, Jersey.

1.58 This documentation indicated, on its face, that the loans in question were bona fide advances of monies to Mr Lawlor which required repayment with interest.

1.59 The Tribunal was informed by Mr Lawlor that he had, pursuant to a settlement of a dispute between himself and Mr John Caldwell, become entitled to a payment from Mr Caldwell amounting to IR£350,000 in 1995. Although Mr Caldwell agreed a settlement with Mr Lawlor, he denied any legal liability (save for the settlement terms) to Mr Lawlor. The Tribunal inquired as to whether there was a connection between Mr Caldwell's agreement to pay IR£350,000 to Mr Lawlor, and the lodgement at about the same time in 1995 of DM825,000 (circa IR£350,000) in the Landesbank account and which in turn funded the transfer of funds to bank accounts of Mr Lawlor in Ireland. The Tribunal engaged in correspondence with Mr Caldwell, and heard evidence from him in relation to the matter.

1.60 Mr Caldwell told the Tribunal that he met Mr Nicholas Morgan³ in London on 14 January 2002, and that he understood that following that meeting, Mr Morgan met Mr Lawlor on 16 January 2002. Following these meetings, it was disclosed to the Tribunal that the Long Water loans may not have been bona fide loans but rather had been used by Mr Lawlor as a means of repatriating income into Ireland which had been generated as a result of his business dealings relating to Irish property interests. From meeting notes taken by Mr Morgan and provided to the Tribunal, it appeared that Mr Morgan blamed Mr Lawlor for providing him with false information which had been furnished to the Tribunal. Mr Morgan attributed his own poor knowledge on the issue to the fact that his late father 'was an old school solicitor who kept most of the information in his head and was not a great believer in file notes' (Mr Morgan was here referring to his late father, who like Mr Morgan was a solicitor and who had previously dealt with Mr Lawlor's affairs in relation to Long Water). Mr David Morgan said that he had relied upon information provided by Mr Lawlor in 1999 and suggested that

Mr Lawlor had not been candid with him in relation to these financial arrangements.

1.61 Mr Caldwell told the Tribunal that shortly after lands at Coolamber (in West County Dublin) were sold to Mr Joe Tiernan in 1994, Mr Lawlor had made demands of Mr Caldwell for a share in the proceeds of the sale. In or around 1995, Mr Noel Smyth solicitor wrote on behalf of Mr Lawlor claiming an interest in the proceeds of sale of the property. Mr Caldwell said that it was his belief that he had denied any liability to Mr Lawlor and he was satisfied that there was no merit whatsoever in Mr Lawlor's claim to a share in the proceeds of sale. Mr Caldwell told the Tribunal that in an effort to avoid a public confrontation and association with Mr Lawlor which would have followed the issue of proceedings threatened by Mr Lawlor, and in spite of the fact that he felt he was being in effect blackmailed by Mr Lawlor, he agreed to make a payment to Mr Lawlor of DM825,000 (circa IR£350,000) through his Jersey lawyers (David Morgan Whitehead and Co.). Mr Caldwell claimed that he left the process by which the monies were paid to Mr Lawlor to his Jersey lawyers. In due course the proceeds of sale were used to fund two loans, one to Long Water Investments Ltd which was a company owned by a David Morgan Trust. The other was (based on Mr Caldwell's belief) an entity associated with the developer, Mr Jim Kennedy. The Long Water funds were then transferred to another trust company Drebbin Ltd (an Isle of Man company), and deposited in Landesbank in Liechtenstein. Mr Caldwell said that he understood that funds were then transferred to Mr Lawlor as a Long Water loan through the Liechtenstein bank account of Drebbin Ltd.

1.62 Bank statements provided to the Tribunal established that on 14 September 1995, DM825,000 was paid from a deposit account to the current account of Drebbin Ltd at Landesbank, Liechtenstein, and that on that day DM825,412.50 was debited from this current account. DM825,000 was in due course paid into Mr Lawlor's account.

1.63 Mr Caldwell claimed that in 1997, notwithstanding the earlier settlement made between himself and Mr Lawlor in 1995, Mr Lawlor made a further attempt through his solicitor Mr Noel Smyth to procure monies from him. Similarly as before, and in an effort to avoid any public dispute between himself and Mr Lawlor, and amid his concerns relating to his own health, and although he was again satisfied that he had no liability to Mr Lawlor, Mr Caldwell nevertheless agreed a further settlement with Mr Lawlor. Under the second settlement, Mr Lawlor was provided with a 2.5% interest in Pentagon Property Services Ltd and a 25% interest in Sabre Developments Ltd in relation to industrial lands at Baldoyle in County Dublin. This interest was ultimately reflected in a 25% shareholding in Trennery Investments Ltd. Mr Lawlor was also given a 25% shareholding in a company called Valley Holdings Ltd, which had an interest in pipes going through lands in Coolamber, in west County Dublin. Mr Caldwell said he left the implementation of this second settlement to his Jersey lawyers. A second payment, arising from those interests was in due course made to Mr Lawlor in October 1998, amounting to circa IR£335,000. This payment was structured as a loan to Mr Lawlor from Long Water.

1.64 Mr Lawlor claimed that he tried on many occasions to obtain copies of all relevant documentation from Landesbank in Liechtenstein, and he had signed an authority to enable the Tribunal obtain such documentation. Mr Lawlor said he himself travelled to Liechtenstein in January 2002 to retrieve documentation. He succeeded in obtaining some further documentation, and said he had been informed by Landesbank that it was the entire of the relevant documentation relating to the Landesbank account. The Tribunal was however not satisfied that it was provided with all relevant documentation relating to Mr Lawlor's offshore financial dealings.

MR LAWLOR'S INVOLVEMENT IN MODULES INQUIRED INTO BY THE TRIBUNAL

1.65 Evidence relating to Mr Lawlor was considered in 6 modules of inquiry concluded by the Tribunal. Of these, the sworn evidence of Mr Lawlor was taken in two. His untimely death in late 2005 deprived the Tribunal of the opportunity to hear evidence from Mr Lawlor in relation to all the Tribunal's public inquiries, and in particular in the Quarryvale module.

MR LAWLOR'S MONEY

1.66 When asked for details of his sources of income in the period 1977 to 2002/3, other than that derived from his position as an elected public representative (including the 1982-1987 period when he was not a TD but was paid the equivalent salary as a Fianna Fail official), Mr Lawlor was unable to provide specific information, other than to refer the Tribunal to documentation discovered to the Tribunal. However, on his own admission Mr Lawlor received income into a large number of bank accounts in his own name or in the names of others, representing many multiples of his state funded income.

1.67 In the course of its public inquiries in the Quarryvale, Cherrywood, Balheary, Baldoyle/Pennine and Ballycullen/Beechhill modules, the Tribunal established payments of approximately IR£400,000 as having been made to Mr Lawlor by individuals and/or entities associated with the lands which were the subject of inquiry by the Tribunal in those modules. Over 80% of this figure was found to have been paid within the period 1988 to 1993. The total found by the Tribunal to have been paid to Mr Lawlor, directly or indirectly, significantly exceeded the total payments which Mr Lawlor acknowledged receiving from those individuals/entities, in statements or in the course of information provided by him to the Tribunal during its private inquiry and on the occasions when he gave sworn evidence to the Tribunal. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor, at all times in his dealings with the Tribunal, failed to disclose to it the total payments received by him from the individuals/entities associated with the aforesaid lands.

1.68 In his dealings with the Tribunal, both in correspondence and in his sworn evidence, Mr Lawlor, to the extent that he acknowledged the receipt of money in relation to the Tribunal's inquiries in the aforementioned Modules, invariably described these payments as consultancy fees or political contributions (mostly the latter).

1.69 While the Tribunal did not always find it possible to determine the true purpose and reason for every payment to Mr Lawlor which was the subject of its inquiries, it was satisfied that the majority of the payments made to Mr Lawlor within the period 1988 to 1998 were payments which, having regard to Mr Lawlor's role as an elected councillor (until June 1991) and an elected TD (until 2002), were entirely inappropriate, improper and on occasion corrupt. The Tribunal was absolutely satisfied, that, with the possible exception of a few thousand pounds, none of the payments to Mr Lawlor could reasonably or accurately be described as political donations.

1.70 The bulk of the total amount found by the Tribunal to have been paid to Mr Lawlor by individuals/entities associated with the lands, the subject matter of inquiry in the aforementioned modules related to Mr Lawlor's involvement with Mr Gilmartin/Arlington Securities Plc, Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan. (See Chapter Two – Quarryvale)

1.71 In respect of the payments to Mr Lawlor investigated by the Tribunal, a clear and obvious link was established between many of those payments and the planning process (in particular the rezoning of land). The extent to which Mr Lawlor provided services in return for such payments was not always clear. Indeed the Tribunal was satisfied that on occasion money was paid to Mr Lawlor based solely on the perception on the part of a developer/landowner that it was necessary to keep Mr Lawlor 'on-side', for fear that not paying him would serve to negatively impact on a particular development or planning issue.

1.72 The fact that Mr Lawlor had an insatiable appetite for money was without doubt. His tendency to request or demand amounts of money from Mr Dunlop and others and to use his status as an elected public representative and on occasion as a member of the governing Fianna Fail Party was well established in the course of evidence heard by the Tribunal. The Tribunal was satisfied that on occasions, Mr Lawlor openly presented himself as a representative of the Irish Government as a means of extracting personal beneficial gain.

1.73 The methods often used by Mr Lawlor to obtain and receive money were occasionally ingenious. These methods included the use of third party bank accounts, false and bogus invoices, the use of third party payees, the false use of names to endorse cheques, and falsely claiming that his own off-shore funds were in fact repayable loans made to him. Significant features of the bulk of the payments were their clandestine nature and frequently a lack of comprehensive documentary trail in relation to them.

1.74 While the use of such secretive and devious means to seek and receive substantial sums of money did not of themselves prove wrongdoing or any improper motivation, the Tribunal was nevertheless satisfied that in most of the instances considered by the Tribunal such payments arose directly as a consequence of corrupt or improper activity associated, directly or indirectly with the planning system.

1.75 In reality Mr Lawlor engaged in a business which was inextricably linked to his positions as an elected county councillor and a TD and which in turn was inextricably linked to influence exerted by Mr Lawlor with fellow politicians and some public officials. Many of the 'services' provided by Mr Lawlor to those developers/landowners who so generously paid and sponsored him were of a category which an elected representative might reasonably be expected to have provided as an integral part of his public office and in the absence of personal gain (or an expectation of personal gain).

1.76 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor abused his public office by, in effect, charging enormous sums of money to perform the work of an elected representative. Mr Lawlor's abuse of his public office could not have occurred and he could not have used his position as an elected representative to produce substantial income for himself, without the willing participation of some landowners and developers who had access to substantial funds, and who recognised, appreciated and profited from strategic advice and other services provided by Mr Lawlor.

1.77 Both in the information provided to it in statements and correspondence and in his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Lawlor's evidence was on many occasions deemed by the Tribunal to have been untrue.

OTHER PAYMENTS MADE TO MR LAWLOR, AS DISCOVERED BY THE TRIBUNAL IN THE COURSE OF ITS INQUIRIES, AND HIS USE OF REAL AND FICTITIOUS BUSINESS NAMES IN ORDER TO FACILITATE SUCH PAYMENTS.

1.78 In the course of the Quarryvale module, the Tribunal heard evidence of payments made to Mr Lawlor some of which were not necessarily linked to the subject of the Tribunal's inquiries in the Quarryvale module. The Tribunal also heard evidence in relation to what might be described as the unconventional means adopted by Mr Lawlor to seek and obtain money from third parties, and in particular the use by him of both fictitious and real business or company names for the purposes of generating false invoices and concealing payments made to him, as well as the use of bank accounts in the names of his own family members and others for the purposes of processing payments to himself. The usefulness (and relevance) of the evidence adduced in relation to these matters assisted the Tribunal, to some extent at least, in understanding the manner in which Mr Lawlor conducted his activities while an elected representative and how he managed his financial affairs.

1.79 The Tribunal considered evidence relating to Mr Lawlor's dealings with:

- Green Property Plc
- Industrial Consultants International Ltd
- Mr Dunlop
- Ganley International Ltd
- Mr Seamus Ross
- Mr Louis FitzGerald/Palmerstown House
- Mr Ambrose Kelly

and, payments which were made to Mr Lawlor by such individuals and entities.

1.80 In relation to certain of the individuals/entities listed above, the payments made to Mr Lawlor were invoiced and/or made through real or fictitious entities, as listed below:

- Comex Trading Corporation (Comex)
- Industrial Consultants International Limited/Industrial Consultants Associates (Industrial Consultants)
- Economic Reports Limited
- Ganley International Ltd
- Baltic Timber Products Ltd
- Long Consultants/Long Associates

MR LAWLOR AND GREEN PROPERTY PLC.

1.81 Mr Lawlor in his 'B42' list, provided to the Tribunal on 29 January 2001, purported to provide to the Tribunal details of:

Income, including political contributions, donations and consultancy fees being approximate and as recollected by Liam Lawlor in respect of period 1973 – 2000.

1.82 In that list, Mr Lawlor stated that he received payments totalling IR£35,000 from Green Property plc during the 1970s and 1980s. Subsequently in his June 2003 'Political Contributions Schedule' Mr Lawlor, claimed the receipt by him of political contributions from Green Property totalling IR£42,000, broken down as follows:

1985 - IR£5,000

1986 - IR £5,000

1987 - IR £5,000

1988 - IR £5,000

1990 - IR £5,000

1.83 Prior to Mr Lawlor furnishing his June 2003 schedule, discovery made by him on 16 May 2002 revealed a lodgement of a cheque for IR£13,953.50 to a bank account in the name of Economic Reports Limited on 3 November 1988. The narrative accompanying Mr Lawlor's discovery of the Bank of Ireland statement which documented the lodgement stated 'this is a cheque received from Green Properties...'

1.84 In December 2000 Mr Lawlor's solicitors commenced correspondence with Green Property advising them of Mr Lawlor's claim to have had an 'involvement' with that company in 'his personal, political and business capacity' and requesting that they be furnished with any documentation in its possession, power, procurement or control relating to its dealings with Mr Lawlor. In January 2001 Green Property's solicitors advised Mr Lawlor's solicitors that it had no documentation which related in any way to Mr Lawlor. Corresponding personally with Green Property on 14 August 2001, Mr Lawlor advised the company that he had informed the Tribunal of his recollection of having received IR£35,000 from Green Property in political contributions since his entry into political life in 1977, and he advised them that, on foot of the Tribunal's request to him to provide details of the payments he claimed to have received from Green Property, he was now requesting Green Property to assist him in answering the Tribunal's queries.

1.85 On 24 August 2001 Green's solicitors advised Mr Lawlor, inter alia, that its clients were 'surprised' that Mr Lawlor recollected receiving IR£35,000 from it in political donations as its review of its political donations had not revealed any such payments to Mr Lawlor.

1.86 On 28 August 2001 Mr Lawlor sought to assist Green Property by advising them that the contributions he had received were made by cheque by its then Managing Director, Mr John Corcoran, on two or three occasions during the 1980s.

1.87 In February 2002 (Green Property being to that point in time apparently unable to trace any records of payments made to Mr Lawlor) Mr Lawlor, in an effort to further assist them in their endeavours, apprised Green Property, inter alia, of meetings he had had with Mr Corcoran in the lead up to the 16 May 1991 rezoning vote on Quarryvale.

1.88 Working back from that date Mr Lawlor advised them that his involvement with the company would have commenced some four years prior to 1991 and that this involvement would have been attending meetings to discuss the lobbying then being conducted by Green Property of the County Council in respect of planning applications which had been lodged in connection with the development of the Blanchardstown Town Centre.

1.89 It was in this general period that, Mr Lawlor maintained to Green Property, that he received IR£35,000 in total from Mr Corcoran, as contributions to his election campaigns and constituency office costs.

1.90 By way of postscript to his 18 February 2002 letter Mr Lawlor also reminded Green Property in an effort presumably to assist them as to the time frame in which payments had been made to him, that: 'documents may also exist in relation to efforts to secure tax designation for the Blanchardstown Town Centre site.'

1.91 Notwithstanding the aide memoires provided by Mr Lawlor in his February 2002 correspondence, Green Property wrote to Mr Lawlor on 4 March 2002 advising him that:

The current position is that Green Property's bankers have been unable to find any records of any payments made to you during the period to which you have referred. Whilst you have provided further narrative information in your recent letter, we do not believe that this will assist Green Property's bankers in identifying any payments allegedly made. On this basis and in order to assist Green Property, please could you provide us with the following information:

- a). Specific dates when such payments were allegedly made; and
- b). The payee of such alleged payments; and
- c). The specific amounts of such alleged payments.

1.92 On 6 March Mr Lawlor advised Green Property as follows:

The information you require is as follows:

- a) My recollection is from 1981 to 1989;
- b) Payee would have been Liam Lawlor;
- c) £17,000 cheque and the balance in varying amounts...

1.93 The Tribunal itself commenced correspondence with Green Property plc on 15 March 2002 as part of its inquiry into Mr Lawlor's claim that he had received IR£35,000 from Green Property.

1.94 The Tribunal requested Green Property to provide a narrative statement in respect of, inter alia,

...all dealings between Green Property and any political representative or political party, including Mr. Liam Lawlor TD, and it sought details of: all payments made to and/or benefits conferred upon any public representative, public official and political party whether made directly or indirectly, whether in the course of business dealings or otherwise and whether within the State or otherwise from 1975 to date.

1.95 In the course of this correspondence the Tribunal advised that:

arising from previous experience the Tribunal finds it necessary to state the following:

- Payments of the type under investigation by the Tribunal are not always easily identifiable in the books and records of the payor;
- Such payments may have been entered in the books of account as payments to a person other than the payee under inquiry;
- Such payments may have been made on foot of invoices for goods or services, whether in the name of the payee under inquiry or otherwise;
- Such payments may have been made through an offshore company, servant, agent, advisor or nominee associated with the payor and/or payee respectively or jointly;
- An alleged payor from whom the Tribunal seeks information is not entitled to limit his/her/it's investigation of his/her/it's own affairs to written records but must also inquire (while preserving the confidentiality of the work of the Tribunal) of such persons as it considers appropriate.

1.96 On 22 March 2002 the Tribunal alerted Green Property that Mr Lawlor had used the following entities to invoice third parties:

- Comex Trading
- Long Consultants
- Long Associates
- Industrial Consultants / Industrial Consultant Associates / Industrial Consultants International
- Demographic & Strategic Consultants
- King & Co.

In a letter to the Tribunal from Mr Lawlor's solicitor, Mr Dermot P. Coyne dated 1 May 2002, the Tribunal was advised of the names used by Mr Lawlor for the purposes of creating invoices. All of the above names (with the exception of King & Co, Industrial Consultants/Industrial Consultant Associates) were listed in the letter, in addition to Economic Reports, Eastern International and Advanced Proteins Limited.⁴ Also listed were a number of companies which may have received invoices under those names but Green Property plc was not one of them.

1.97 In an 'information statement' provided by Green Property to the Tribunal on 15 April 2002, the company dealt with its dealings with Mr Lawlor as follows:

Green are advised by Mr Corcoran, that he met Mr Lawlor on several occasions (as referred to by Mr Lawlor in his letters to the Tribunal) in the late 1980's/1990/1991. Mr Corcoran has advised Green that these meetings were at the behest of Mr. Lawlor and the purpose of such meetings was for Mr. Lawlor to reassure Green as to the extent of the proposed development at Quarryvale as Green feared this development would be adverse to its own proposed development at Blanchardstown. Mr. Corcoran has stated that at these meetings he was assured by Mr. Lawlor that the size of the lands proposed to be rezoned at Quarryvale amounted to no more than 300,000 square feet and that there was nothing for Green to be concerned with. It is Mr. Corcoran's opinion in hindsight that the purpose of these meetings was to prevent Green from going public in its objections to the proposed rezoning of lands at Quarryvale.

⁴ This letter also listed the entities whom Mr Lawlor believed received or may have received invoices which used one of the identified names. These entities were listed as National Toll Roads, Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, Monarch Properties, Ganley International, Lark Developments, Arlington Securities Plc, Menolly Homes Ltd, Ballymore Properties Ltd, Jones Group Ltd, Dwyer Nolan Ltd and Rotary.

1.98 And:

In relation to the specific issue of payment made to and/or benefits conferred upon Mr. Liam Lawlor TD, Green can find no records whatsoever of any payment made to Mr. Lawlor at any time, having carried out searches itself and having asked its Auditors and Bankers to carry out searches.

Mr. John Corcoran has informed Green that he did not make payments by cheque to Mr. Lawlor on behalf of Green totalling IR£35,000 (as has been alleged by Mr. Lawlor) either at the time of his aforementioned meetings with Mr. Lawlor in the 1980's or at any time. Mr. Corcoran has also advised Green that no cash payments were made by him to Liam Lawlor at any time. It is Mr. Corcoran's recollection that Mr. Lawlor approached him in the course of an election campaign in either the late 1970's or 1980's and asked Mr. Corcoran if Green would make a contribution to his election campaign by paying an invoice either for £3,600 or £6,300 issued by a printworks in Kilmainham for work done for Mr. Lawlor in the course of that election campaign. Mr. Corcoran's recollection is that he agreed to discharge this invoice and believes that Green did so. As Mr. Corcoran cannot recollect the identity of the payee or the date of the payment, Green is not in a position to trace such a payment.

1.99 An affidavit of discovery sworn by Mr David McDowell, the Company Secretary of Green Property plc, on 23 August 2002, did not refer to any payments by Green Property to Mr Lawlor directly or otherwise. Mr McDowell was the Financial Controller of Green Property plc from 1979, and a co-signatory of a cheque to Mr Lawlor which used the name Comex Trading Corp as payee.

1.100 Green Property's 'information statement' of 15 April 2002 listed the banking institutions with which the company held funds in the period 1980 to 1994 as:

- AIB, South Richmond Street, Dublin 2
- NIB, 138 Lower Baggot Street, Dublin 2
- Bank of Ireland, 177 Drimnagh Road, Walkinstown, Dublin 12
- AIB, 100 Grafton Street, Dublin 2
- AIB, 2 Lower Baggot Street, Dublin 2
- AIB, Bruton Street, London
- Bank of Ireland, Berkeley Square, London.

1.101 On 11 December 2003 the Tribunal wrote to Green Property's solicitors advising Green that:

The affidavit of discovery of your client sworn in purported compliance with the above order (22nd March 2002 Order for Discovery) does not disclose a cheque payment dated 3rd November, 1988 in the sum of IR£13,953 by your client to Economic Reports Limited, Mr Lawlor's company. The cheque was drawn on your client's account number 76757157 at Bank of Ireland, St. Stephen's Green, Dublin 2.

The Tribunal now requires that your client furnish all documents and records in its possession, power or control relating to the above payment and, in light of the deficiency in the affidavit of discovery, requires that your client file a Supplemental affidavit of discovery in conclusive compliance with the Order of 22nd March, 2002.

1.102 In a supplemental affidavit sworn by Mr McDowell, Green Property discovered the Economic Reports Limited cheque.

1.103 In the course of evidence provided to the Tribunal, Mr McDowell and Mr McKenna (a director of Green Property Plc and a co-signatory of the cheque to Mr Lawlor in which the payee was stated as Economic Reports), stated that the Bank of Ireland account on which the cheque had been drawn had been dormant since 1992 and for this reason it had been overlooked when they initially made discovery to the Tribunal.

1.104 Mr McKenna maintained that even if the dormant BOI, St. Stephen's Green account had been recollected, the Economic Reports Ltd cheque would still not have been disclosed by Green Property on the basis that they had, by August 2002, no reason or information which established any connection between this cheque to Economic Reports Ltd and Mr Lawlor. Mr McKenna maintained that the company had contacted Mr Corcoran in March 2002 in connection with the Tribunal's inquiries and while Mr Corcoran told them that he had met Mr Lawlor on several occasions between the late 1980s and 1991, at Mr Lawlor's request, Mr Corcoran had denied making payments totalling IR£35,000 to Mr Lawlor.

1.105 In his statement to Tribunal of 3 November 2004, Mr Corcoran effectively conceded to the Tribunal that he had made a payment to Mr Lawlor. He said that he could not recall the payment, and assumed that it was in respect of Mr Lawlor's services as a planning consultant.

1.106 Following upon the Tribunal providing Green Property, on 11 December 2003, with the copy of the Economic Reports cheque for IR£13,953.50 the Tribunal was informed by Green Property's solicitors that they no longer represented Mr Corcoran.

1.107 On 15 January 2004, the Tribunal were advised by Green Property's solicitors that with regard to its NIB, Baggot Street, account, a further number of cheques had been identified which were relevant to the terms of the Tribunal's March 2002 order for discovery. One such cheque, which was furnished to the Tribunal on 15 January 2004, was a Green Property cheque written to 'Comex Trading Corp' for IR£10,000 on 22 February 1991.

1.108 While in August 2002 Green Property may not have known that Economic Reports Ltd was one of the entities used by Mr Lawlor, it was nonetheless extraordinary that Green Property could have overlooked discovering to the Tribunal the bank account on which that cheque had been drawn.

1.109 It was equally extraordinary that Green Property had not, in August 2002, discovered the February 1991 Comex cheque, given the fact that Comex was one of the entities identified by the Tribunal to Green Property in March 2002.

1.110 Green Property's disclosure of this Comex cheque was only made after the Tribunal, in December 2003, had reminded Green Property that it had paid Mr Lawlor IR£13,953.50 via Economic Reports Limited.

1.111 Thus, by January 2004, the Tribunal's information of payments to Mr Lawlor was Mr Lawlor's claimed recollection of having received a total of IR£35,000 in the 1970s and 1980s, (later revised by him to IR£42,000 between 1985 and 1990), and a documentary trail which established that Green Property had made cheque payments to Economic Reports Limited in the sum of IR£13,953.50 on 3 November 1988 and in the sum of IR£10,000 to Comex Trading Corporation on 22 February 1991.

1.112 An examination of the Comex cheque for IR£10,000 indicated that it had been endorsed on the reverse as follows: 'Niall Lawlor' and 'M. Quinn for Comex TRD.'

1.113 It was established from bank records, that on 27 February 1991 Mr Niall Lawlor (Mr Liam Lawlor's son) made a cash lodgement of IR£10,000 (comprising IR£8,000 in IR£20 notes and IR£2,000 in IR£10 notes) to an account in his own name at NIB, South Circular Rd., Dublin.

1.114 While the Tribunal was unable to determine conclusively that the IR£10,000 cash lodged to the account of Mr Niall Lawlor represented the proceeds of the Comex cheque, it was probable that Mr Lawlor arranged to cash the Comex cheque for IR£10,000 and to have the cash lodged to his son's account. Mr Lawlor, in correspondence with the Tribunal, attributed the source of the IR£8,000 cash lodgement to Mr Niall Lawlor's account to 'Possibly Palmerstown House.'⁵ It was possible therefore that the Comex cheque was cashed by, or with the assistance of, personnel in the Palmerstown House licensed premises.

MR CORCORAN'S ACCOUNT TO THE TRIBUNAL OF HIS FINANCIAL DEALINGS WITH MR LAWLOR

1.115 Contrary to Mr Lawlor's assertions that he received political contributions from Green Property over a period of years, Mr Corcoran in his statement dated 13 November 2004, and in his evidence, claimed that, save for his recollection of having discharged a printing bill for Mr Lawlor during the course of an election campaign, any monies paid by Green Property to Mr Lawlor were for services rendered by him as a 'Consultant.' Mr Corcoran, in his statement to the Tribunal variously described Mr Lawlor's relationship with Green Property Plc as that of a 'consultant development advisor/planning consultant' and a 'planning consultant.' In his later evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Corcoran appeared to resile from his earlier stated position, namely, that Mr Lawlor had acted as a planning consultant, when he said the following:

'Not so much the planning. He was more involved in the, in the infrastructure and the roads and services. I may have mentioned planning but I mean it wasn't. He wasn't involved in that. That was a matter – and any planning problems we had, they were dealt with, with the planning authority. And Gareth May was our town planning consultant and he was up and down to the planning office every other day dealing with planning application.'

1.116 In his statement dated 3 November 2004 (in response to the Tribunal's letter dated 11 June 2004), Mr Corcoran said the following:

I found Liam Lawlor helpful and knowledgeable as to how to deal with planning applications and approaches to Local Authorities. He knew who

⁵Mr Lawlor's relationship with this entity, a public house, and its principal Mr Fitzgerald is dealt with later in this part of the Report to contact re road alignment, land acquisitions in Local Government and how generally to go about it.

1.117 Mr Corcoran said that he believed Mr Lawlor's 'consultancy services' were largely provided in the context of the provision of infrastructural advice to Green Property, in the course of its endeavours associated with the development of a shopping centre at Blanchardstown. Notwithstanding his recollection of Mr Lawlor's provision of such consultancy services to Green Property, Mr Corcoran was unable to recall the details of specific payments made to Mr Lawlor, save that he acknowledged that the payments made to Economic Reports Ltd and to Comex Trading Corporation were in fact payments to Mr Lawlor. Mr Corcoran professed to have no specific recollection of these payments. Mr Corcoran stated that Mr Lawlor had always been paid by cheque and never in cash. He was not in a position to state whether Mr Lawlor had received only the two payments in respect of which documentary evidence has been produced to the Tribunal.

1.118 Mr Corcoran's belief was that Mr Lawlor was solely paid on foot of invoices produced by Mr Lawlor. No invoice to Green Property, whether from Economic Reports Limited, Comex Trading Corporation or otherwise, was discovered to the Tribunal, either by Mr Lawlor or by Green Property plc.

1.119 According to Mr Corcoran, 'spasmodic' payments were made to Mr Lawlor. Mr Corcoran said that he, on behalf of the company, had no problem making the payments as Mr Corcoran believed that the company was getting 'good value' from Mr Lawlor for its money. Mr Corcoran said that at no time had he negotiated with Mr Lawlor on price.

1.120 Mr Corcoran testified that invariably, when seeking payment, Mr Lawlor would arrive at Green Property's office in a chauffeur driven car. Mr Corcoran described Mr Lawlor's requests for payments in the following terms: 'He'd say I want a few bob and he'd produce this invoice but there was nothing regular about it.' He described Mr Lawlor as: 'a very avaricious man and all he wanted was to get as much money as he could as quickly as he could whenever he could.'

1.121 Notwithstanding documentary evidence being available only in respect of two payments by Green Property to Mr Lawlor, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor received other monies from Green Property. Indeed Mr Lawlor asserted as much in his June 2003 correspondence with the Tribunal. It was also the thrust of Mr Corcoran's evidence that Mr Lawlor was in fact the recipient of more than two payments from Green Property, howsoever they were paid or received by him. Both Mr McDowell and Mr McKenna acknowledged that further payments could have been made given the fact that payments to Mr Lawlor were not documented in a transparent manner in the books of the company.

1.122 Contrary to Mr Corcoran's assertions that Mr Lawlor was remunerated as a 'consultant' for his expertise and for providing infrastructural advice, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor was in reality being remunerated for using his influence, as a county councillor and a TD, to advance the Green Property's Blanchardstown Town Centre development, and which included steps designed to thwart the Quarryvale development (a rival development to Blanchardstown) or reduce in size its retail element.

1.123 Furthermore, in the period 1987 to 1993/1994 in particular, Green Property conducted a very intensive campaign of lobbying, at governmental and ministerial level, for tax designation status for its Blanchardstown Town Centre development. As a matter of probability the Tribunal believed, despite Mr Corcoran's protestations to the contrary, that the IR£13,953.50 paid to Mr Lawlor on 3 November 1988, was probably associated with this campaign.

1.124 The Tribunal was also satisfied that the payment of IR£10,000 made to Mr Lawlor via Comex on 22 February 1991, at a time when Mr Lawlor was an elected Councillor, was directly connected to the campaign that was then ongoing to rezone the Quarryvale lands from industrial to town centre and which was a proposal which was fiercely opposed by Mr Corcoran.

1.125 On 15 February 1991 the formal process of the Quarryvale rezoning campaign had commenced with the lodging by Cllr McGrath of a motion to rezone Quarryvale to 'Town Centre.'

1.126 Mr Corcoran told the Tribunal that relations between himself and Mr Lawlor deteriorated following the successful Quarryvale rezoning vote of 16 May 1991.

1.127 The Tribunal rejected Mr Lawlor's assertion, made by him in correspondence with the Tribunal, that he was given 'political contributions' by Mr Corcoran. Equally the Tribunal rejected Mr Corcoran's evidence that Green Property retained Mr Lawlor as a consultant or that Mr Lawlor provided consultancy services to Green Property. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor simply sought financial recompense for the use of his political influence, both as a councillor and as a TD, on behalf of Green Property, a request readily acceded to by Mr Corcoran.

1.128 Both Mr McDowell and Mr McKenna claimed not to have been aware of the fact that Mr Lawlor had been paid by Green Property in 1988 and 1991. It was common case that Mr Lawlor did not appear as a named payee, either as a recipient of political contributions or otherwise, in the books of Green Property plc. When Green Property provided information to the Revenue Commissioners in 1998 in relation to political contributions made by it, Mr Lawlor's name was not mentioned. None of the invoices grounding these payments to Mr Lawlor were furnished to the Tribunal.

1.129 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Corcoran, as Managing Director, had the freedom to deal with Mr Lawlor in an unorthodox business manner, in that payments were made by Green Property plc on foot of false invoices, in order to ensure that Mr Lawlor's identity would not be disclosed. Mr McDowell acknowledged that he co-signed cheques on many occasions at the request of Mr Corcoran without necessarily seeking details as to the nature of the payments.

1.130 While the evidence of Mr Corcoran was that Mr McKenna and Mr McDowell should have been aware in 1988 and 1991 of the payments made to Mr Lawlor (a suggestion denied by both of them), the Tribunal accepted that they may not have had such an awareness. It appeared quite clear that dealings with Mr Lawlor were conducted by Mr Corcoran.

1.131 At the time (February 1991) when Mr Lawlor received the IR£10,000 'Comex' payment and at a time when, according to Mr Corcoran, Mr Lawlor assured Mr Corcoran that Green Property had nothing to fear from the plans then being proposed by the promoters of the Quarryvale lands for a town centre development, Mr Lawlor was, for all intents and purposes, retained as Mr O'Callaghan's principal strategist in relation to the Quarryvale project. Less than one week prior to the receipt of IR£10,000 from Green Property, Mr Lawlor drafted and secured Cllr McGrath's signature to a Motion to 'dezone' the Neilstown lands from Town Centre to Industrial and related uses, in an attempt to improve Mr O'Callaghan's /Barkhill's chance of securing Town Centre zoning status for Quarryvale.

1.132 Save for the IR£5,000 January 1991 'Comex' payment made by Mr Dunlop to Mr Lawlor supposedly in return for Mr Lawlor's promise to effect Mr Dunlop's introduction as the lobbyist for Quarryvale, Mr Lawlor, as of February 1991, had received no payments from Mr O'Callaghan. The Tribunal was nevertheless satisfied that Mr Lawlor at that time anticipated that his endeavours on behalf of Quarryvale would in time be rewarded by Mr O'Callaghan and/or Mr Dunlop (as proved to be the case).

1.133 The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor's primary objective in his dealings both with Mr Corcoran and with Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop was to secure as much financial gain for himself as was possible.

MR LAWLOR AND INDUSTRIAL CONSULTANTS INTERNATIONAL LIMITED

1.134 Industrial Consultants International Limited was a company with its registered address at Harcourt Road, Dublin 2. It operated the business of providing consultancy services outside the jurisdiction and principally in Nigeria. Its principals included Mr Michael Quinn and Mr Brendan Cahill, both Directors of the company.

1.135 Documentation provided to the Tribunal by Mr Tom Roche of National Toll Roads (NTR) established that on 6 July 1990 NTR wrote a cheque in favour of 'Industrial Consultants' for IR£44,150 on foot of an invoice dated 2 July 1990 by 'Industrial Consultant Associates' with an address at '22, Castle Road, Camberley, Surrey...'. The services for which the sum of IR£44,150 was invoiced were stated on the invoice to be as follows:

*'Brief: Strategic study of the greater Dublin West Area.
Analyse demographics for the 90's.
Overview study of the National Investment plans for Spain and Portugal, relative to Roads Investment Programs.'*

1.136 Some three months later, on 1 October 1990, 'Industrial Consultants International Limited' invoiced NTR for IR£30,000 in respect of 'advice provided in relation to Dublin Ring Road Project' – an invoice subsequently discharged by NTR.

1.137 The ultimate beneficiary of both of those payments was certainly Mr Lawlor.

1.138 The payments made by NTR to 'Industrial Consultant Associates' and 'Industrial Consultants International Limited' were noted in the minutes of a NTR board meeting of 18 April 1991 in the following manner:

Various expenditures related to planned consultancy and other services, in respect of further tolling of the Dublin Ring Road, had been authorised by the Board during 1990. It was noted that the following expenditures had been made by West-Link Toll Bridge Limited in this regard:

- 9th February 1990 B. McCarthy & Associates IR£20,000⁶
- 24th May 1990 B. McCarthy & Associates IR£20,000⁶
- 6th July 1990 Industrial Consultants Associates IR£44,150

- 1st August 1990 Shefran (Jersey) Limited IR£20,000⁶
- 10th October 1990 Shefran (Jersey) Limited IR£60,000⁶
- 1st November 1990 Industrial Consultants International Limited IR£30,000.

1.139 In the course of evidence given by Mr Lawlor on Day 223 he described the payments made to him by NTR via ‘Industrial Consultants’ as follows:

‘Well it was – they were political donations that I received and the late Tom Roche, when I was having trouble and bad publicity about difficulties with banks and so forth, offered to give me two contributions which the Tribunal is fully aware of. And as he wanted some invoices for the amounts and I had prepared feasibility studies for a cold storage project in Nigeria associated with a fish processing company in Killybegs and I issued two invoices because I had that company’s head bills to National Toll Roads and that has been discovered to the Tribunal..’

1.140 Asked by Tribunal Counsel on Day 223 as follows:

‘Yes now you have told us that you, as I understand it, at the request of the late Mr. Tom Roche, issued fake invoices using the notepaper of Industrial Consultants Limited of Middle Abbey Street in respect of two substantial payments that you received from Mr. Roche?’

1.141 Mr Lawlor replied:

‘What Mr. Roche said at the time was ‘Look I will give you these contributions and I need some paperwork for the accounts’ and I explained that I had been doing a feasibility study for Industrial Consultants and it was agreed that I would provide him with those two invoices.’

1.142 Mr Lawlor described the payments made by NTR to him as:

‘...political donations. I probably gave some general advice about the demographics of West Dublin and so forth at the time Tom Roche was looking at the feasibility of the West-Link bridge and so forth.’

1.143 Subsequently in an Affidavit sworn by him on 21 January 2002 in relation to High Court proceedings taken by the Tribunal against him, Mr Lawlor, in addressing the fact that invoices from ‘Industrial Consultant Associates’ and ‘Industrial Consultants International Limited’ had been furnished to the Tribunal by Mr Roche, provided the following explanation:

⁶The payments to ‘B. McCarthy & Associates’ and ‘Shefran (Jersey) Limited’ were payments to Mr Dunlop. This issue is dealt with elsewhere in this Report

In relation to these invoices from Industrial Consultants Associates and Industrial Consultants International Limited, the position is as follows. During 1990 I had agreed, at the request of a friend of mine, Michael Quinn, to provide certain advice relating to the possibility of designing, constructing and operating low temperature cold storage facilities at various locations in Nigeria to receive Irish frozen fish products. Mr. Quinn carried on business through a number of corporate entities which included Industrial Consultant Associates, Industrial Consultants International Limited and Comex Trading Corporation. These businesses all had a presence at 22, Castle Road, Camberley, Surrey and had other business addresses elsewhere, including within the State. As it was convenient for Mr. Quinn that I would prepare correspondence for these companies, Mr. Quinn provided me with letter headed paper for these companies. I used this letter paper to prepare cold storage proposals and the like. However, in some cases, when I received political donations or contributions, the donors sought to be furnished with a business invoice against which they could make the donations. In the case of Mr. Roche I was asked to make the invoices out to National Toll Roads PLC. To comply with this request I generated the invoices exhibited by Ms. Howard for the sums in question using the letter paper referable to Industrial Consultants Associates and Industrial Consultant International Limited.

1.144 In the course of his evidence on Day 732 Mr Michael Quinn told the Tribunal that Industrial Consultants International Ltd had never traded in Ireland nor had it a client base in Ireland to whom it issued invoices. Mr Quinn stated categorically that Industrial Consultants International Ltd had never provided services for or invoiced NTR, nor had the company received any payments from NTR. It was also stated that Industrial Consultants International had never used the name Industrial Consultant Associates.

1.145 Mr Quinn maintained that insofar as Mr Lawlor had used the name of Industrial Consultants International Ltd to invoice third parties he had done so without his knowledge or authority. Mr Quinn maintained that Mr Lawlor had never prepared correspondence for his company, nor had Mr Lawlor ever been provided with the company's letterhead. Mr Quinn professed to have no knowledge as to how NTR came to make payments to Mr Lawlor in the name of Industrial Consultants International Ltd.

1.146 Mr Quinn told the Tribunal that while he was unable to assist it as to the provenance of the two invoices furnished by Mr Lawlor to NTR, he could confirm that the English address on both invoices was an address associated with an employee of Industrial Consultants International Limited. Moreover, the Swiss address listed on the October 1990 invoice may have been a business address associated with a Nigerian General with whom Mr Quinn's company had done business.

MR LAWLOR'S FINANCIAL RELATIONSHIP WITH INDUSTRIAL CONSULTANTS INTERNATIONAL LIMITED

1.147 In his 'B42' list, as furnished to the Tribunal on 29 January 2001, Mr Lawlor listed payments totalling IR£46,000 from 'Mr Michael Quinn' in the 70s, 80s and 90s. In June 2003, in his Schedule 6 'Political Contributions' document, as provided to the Tribunal, Mr Lawlor attributed a total figure of IR£36,000 to 'Mick Quinn' broken down as follows: 1992 £16,000, 1993 £20,000.

1.148 In the course of their respective testimonies, both Mr Quinn and Mr Cahill agreed that in the period 1992 to 1993 payments totalling IR£36,000 had been made to Mr Lawlor. The 1992 payments were:

- 31 August - IR£6,000;
- 23 September - IR£5,000
- 2 November - IR£5,000.
- The two 1993 payments of IR£10,000 each were made on 4 February and 13 April 1993 respectively.

1.149 On the issue of his company's payments to Mr Lawlor, the thrust of Mr Quinn's evidence to the Tribunal was that the payments had been made as monetary compensation for work Mr Lawlor was to do for the company, in addition to assisting Mr Lawlor at a time of financial hardship for Mr Lawlor. Mr Quinn made reference to Mr Lawlor having carried out feasibility studies for his company. Mr Lawlor also referred to such a study himself in evidence to the Tribunal in December 2000 and again referred to it in his January 2002 Affidavit.

1.150 The Tribunal however was satisfied that the circumstances in which Mr Lawlor was paid substantial monies by Industrial Consultants International Ltd in 1992 and 1993 were probably more accurately described by the evidence of Mr Cahill. On Day 732 the following exchange took place between Tribunal Counsel and Mr Cahill:

'Q: Were you aware of – can I ask you first of all, did you have an association with Mr. Lawlor - other personal friendship with Mr. Lawlor?

A: I knew Mr. Lawlor from his occasional visits to the office, when he would come in, sometimes he would have spoken to Mick at home and would have mentioned the possibility of obtaining some money. He would then come into the office perhaps later on in the day and I would meet with him and talk with him then. Look forward to his visits, he was a very pleasant, very entertaining person indeed to come in, but he was always, in general, pushing for money.

Q: Yes. Is it the position that you would have – you would have regarded you and your company as not being obligated to pay any money to Mr. Lawlor?

A: Yes, yeah I would have thought so, yes.

Q: So is it fair to say then that the sums that you did pay Mr. Lawlor of IR£36,000 was as a result of requests for funding from Mr. Lawlor?

A: Yes. And the sequence of events there would have been – if I recall it right. First of all there would have been pressure for the money from Mr. Lawlor. The amounts, which would have been given on a particular date, would probably have been down to me because I'd have been trying to minimise, frankly, the exposure because our business is very cyclical and there can be great delays between receiving funds. It was then probably, at a later stage, that the actual allocation took place. In other words, the monies would have been paid and then the actual allocations probably arose when we'd have had somebody like Mr. Hender looking for invoices and so on, so as to know how to treat the payments properly in the accounts of the company. In the event those payments in both years were put down because I was able to check it out, as feasibility studies, both the initial amount of 16 and the second amount of 20.

Q: They were recorded as feasibility studies, is that right?

A: Both lots were recorded as feasibility studies and charged in that way.

Q: But they weren't recorded as political donations:

A: There was no mention of political donations whatsoever in the records of the company.

Q: But is it your evidence to the Tribunal that the monies were in fact paid following requests by Mr. Lawlor to assist him effectively?

A: That was the sequence of events. Yes, absolutely.

Q: Yes and insofar as Mr. Lawlor may have carried out some work for your company in terms of feasibility studies. That was really (irrelevant) to the main issue as to why you paid him?

A: Yes actually, there was only one feasibility study and that was in connection with cold storage. The other was actually to find a client or a company in Ireland who would be prepared to invest in a Nigerian company in mechanical and electrical work who wanted to expand their operations and he did come up with a suitable introduction and set up a meeting, which I attended. It didn't – in the end of it, it didn't develop into a transaction, but he did come up with a very good...

Q: Insofar as you have knowledge of the payments of the £36,000 to Mr. Lawlor, they relate to payments as a response to requests for funding from Mr. Lawlor, as opposed to payments for services rendered by Mr. Lawlor to your company?

A: Precisely. The sequence of events was that he was looking for the money in the first instance. There was a question then of allocating the fundings and the fact was that he had and did do both of those particular tasks for the company.'

COMEX TRADING CORPORATION/COMEX TRADING: (COMEX)

MR LAWLOR AND COMEX

1.151 Comex Trading Corporation featured on a number of occasions in the course of the Tribunal's public hearings, in relation to issues directly concerning Mr Lawlor (and Mr Niall Lawlor) and Mr Dunlop.

1.152 Mr Lawlor acknowledged using the name Comex/Comex Trading Corporation in the collection of money on a number of occasions and also acknowledged issuing bogus invoices in the name of that entity in order to facilitate the payment of money to him.

1.153 In the course of its public hearings, the Tribunal identified sums totalling IR£78,800, which were payments invoiced by and/or paid to Comex in circumstances where, in reality, the payments were sought by, and paid to Mr Lawlor. These included:

- Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd late January, 1991⁷ IR£5,000
- Green Properties Plc. 22 February, 1991 IR£10,000
- L & C Properties Limited 16 October, 1990 IR£56,300
 (part of the Monarch Group) (in two payments)
- The Jones Group 30 July, 1991 IR£7,500

1.154 The Tribunal was satisfied that in all these instances Mr Lawlor used Comex for the purposes of providing a bogus invoice and to facilitate the payments of funds to him.

MR DUNLOP AND COMEX

1.155 The payment of IR£5,000 to Comex Trading Corporation in January 1991, by Mr Dunlop (and which was in reality a payment to Mr Lawlor), was not the only occasion that the Tribunal established a connection between Mr Dunlop and Comex.

1.156 There were references to transactions with Comex Trading Corporation in the books and records of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd for the accounting years ending 31 October 1990 and 31 October 1999.

1.157 An analysis of the audit working papers of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd revealed that in its audit for the year ended 31 October 1990 the firm's auditors, Coyle & Coyle, documented in its list of 'creditors' amounts of stg£79,850 (in two tranches of stg£45,500 and stg£34,350) as being due to Comex Trading Corporation.

1.158 In their working papers for the year ended 31 October 1991 Mr Dunlop's accountants also attributed a lodgement of IR£86,605.21 made to the current account of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd on 31 October 1991 to Comex, and this attribution was recorded in the following manner:

Comex Trading Corporation stg £45,500 and £34,350 = 79850@ 92.2 £86,605.21.

1.159 Mr Dunlop was asked to explain these large transactions to the Tribunal and to identify people behind the entity Comex Trading Corporation Limited. Mr Dunlop claimed that he was unable to provide any definite explanation and in essence pleaded ignorance of these transactions. No relevant bank documentation (other than the bank statement showing a credit of IR£86,605.21) was available to the Tribunal.

⁷ Date in January 1991 unknown.

1.160 With regard to the lodgement of IR£86,605.21 made to the Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd current account on 31 October 1991, Mr Dunlop speculated that this lodgement may have been a re-lodgement of two tranches of money totalling IR£87,945.53 which had been withdrawn from Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd by way of two bank drafts in August of 1991. This explanation appeared to the Tribunal as unlikely to be correct given that the sum withdrawn by way of drafts in August of 1991 (IR£87,945.53) did not equate with what was lodged on 31 October 1991 (IR£86,605.21). The origins of the IR£86,605.21 lodged to the current account of FD & A remained a mystery, other than that in the books of the firm it was attributed to 'Comex.' Mr Dunlop was unable to assist the Tribunal as to whether contact between himself and Mr John Ahern of AIB on 31 October 1991 and again on 1 November 1991 (as noted in Mr Dunlop's diary) was connected with this transaction.

1.161 The Tribunal noted however the fact that Mr Dunlop's auditors recorded the IR£86,605.21 sum attributed to Comex under 'creditors' as having its origins in two sums of sterling of £45,500 and £34,350 – sterling sums which equated with what was recorded as having been received by Frank Dunlop & Associates for the year ended 30 October 1990.

1.162 Mr Dunlop claimed not to be able to assist the Tribunal as to how Frank Dunlop & Associates came to credit Comex as being owed by Frank Dunlop & Associates a sterling sum of £79,850 by year end October 1990 or in the event that the IR£86,000 odd sum carried in the books of Frank Dunlop & Associates as owing to Comex for the year end October 1991 was not a carryover of the first sum, his firm had again by year end 1991 incurred a second debt to Comex.

1.163 Asked on Day 764 of what he knew of Comex Mr Dunlop replied as follows:

'Well, I know very little about Comex, and it has been the source of ongoing investigation by my accountants and solicitors and otherwise in relation to Comex. But in general terms I understood, have always understood, Comex to be some type of international trading advisory grouping, located somewhere in the main continent of Europe, either Switzerland or Austria or somewhere like that...'

1.164 Previously, in the course of his private interview with the Tribunal Mr Dunlop stated that he had associated Comex with an individual 'Mick Quinn' who was a friend of Mr Lawlor's.

1.165 Mr Dunlop further stated that he had never engaged in any business with Comex, nor had Comex had any business with him. He stated that the extent of his association with Comex was his recollection of Comex 'in the context of headed notepaper' and of writing a cheque to Comex 'in the context of Mr Liam Lawlor.'

1.166 Mr Dunlop claimed that he did not know what Comex was or did. He claimed that he had never met anyone from Comex nor was he, Mr Dunlop, Comex. On Day 765 Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that in his mind he had always associated Comex with Mr Lawlor (notwithstanding his earlier assertion at private interview that he associated Comex with Mr Mick Quinn).

1.167 Mr Dunlop was adamant that notwithstanding the attribution in the books of Frank Dunlop & Associates of Comex as a creditor from the year 1990, Mr Lawlor had not 'personally, corporately or otherwise or through others or with others, made any investment in Frank Dunlop & Associates or pay money into Frank Dunlop & Associates.' According to Mr Dunlop, in respect of Mr Lawlor, 'the money was going the other way.'

THE EVIDENCE OF MR QUINN IN RELATION TO A CLAIMED CONNECTION BY OTHERS ON HIS PART TO COMEX

1.168 Mr Lawlor and indeed Mr Dunlop (in his initial dealings with the Tribunal at least) maintained that Mr Quinn was 'Comex', a suggestion vehemently denied by Mr Quinn. Save for Mr Lawlor's assertions and Mr Dunlop's evidence, no document or record was produced to the Tribunal which linked Comex to Mr Quinn.

1.169 Mr Quinn professed himself to have no idea as to how it was that Mr Lawlor or Mr Dunlop could inform the Tribunal that Comex Trading Corporation was a company in his ownership. Mr Quinn stated that he had no knowledge of Comex Trading Corporation.

1.170 Mr Quinn denied that the purported signature of 'M. Quinn for Comex Limited', as appeared on the reverse of the Green Property cheque to Comex, was his signature. The Tribunal was satisfied that this signature was not that of Mr Quinn.

1.171 Mr Quinn professed himself to have no knowledge as to the circumstances in which Comex Trading Corporation appeared as a 'creditor' in the books of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd from the year 1990, or of the circumstances in which a lodgement of IR£86,605.21 to the 067 Account of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd on 31 October 1991 came to be attributed to 'Comex' in the books and records of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd.

1.172 Mr Brendan Cahill similarly, in evidence, stated that he had no knowledge of or dealings with Comex.

DEALINGS BETWEEN MR QUINN AND MR DUNLOP IN THE YEARS 1990 TO 1993

1.173 Mr Quinn told the Tribunal that while he knew Mr Dunlop, neither he nor his company, Industrial Consultants International Limited, conducted any business with Mr Dunlop.

1.174 Mr Dunlop's diary for 16 October 1990 noted a scheduled meeting with Mr Quinn. There was a diaried meeting between the two men on 21 January 1991, eight days prior to the Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd payment of IR£5,000 to 'Comex Trading Corporation' having been lodged to Mr Niall Lawlor's account. A further meeting was diaried on 19 February 1991 between Mr Dunlop, Mr Quinn and 'KS' (the latter described as a friend of Mr Quinn's since deceased). Three days later, Green Property paid Mr Lawlor a IR£10,000 cheque made payable to Comex.

1.175 Mr Dunlop's office records of telephone messages indicated that a substantial number of messages were left by Mr Quinn for Mr Dunlop in late 1991 and in 1992. There was again similar telephone contact made towards the end of 1992 and into 1993.

1.176 Mr Dunlop's office noted a message from Mr Quinn's company's accountant on 14 September 1992 as follows: 'Jim Hender, - Michael Quinn's office looking for an invoice.' Mr Quinn suggested that this request probably referred to an invoice being sought in respect of a golf classic fundraising event. Mr Quinn reiterated that he had no commercial relationship with Mr Dunlop. Mr Quinn stated that Mr Hender's request to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd for an invoice was unconnected to payments of IR£6,000 and IR£5,000 which were made by Mr Quinn/his company to Mr Lawlor on 31 August and 23 September 1992 respectively and maintained that the invoice request had nothing to do with any reference to Comex in the books of Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd.

1.177 Notwithstanding Mr Quinn's assertion that his relationship with Mr Dunlop was one of friendship only and involved no commercial element, the Tribunal was satisfied that their relationship embraced matters of a political nature, as was evidenced by Mr Quinn on 13 November 1992 (during the currency of the 1992 General Election campaign) passing on documents to Mr Dunlop's office for transmission to Fianna Fail headquarters, and Mr Dunlop's subsequent note that Mr Quinn's documents had been 'passed by Taoiseach.' Mr Quinn was unable to recall the nature of the documents in question save that he surmised that it may have been a position paper on energy. Mr Cahill suggested that the documentation transmitted to Fianna Fail headquarters had been a position paper prepared by an employee of Industrial Consultants International Ltd although he was unaware that Mr Dunlop had been used as the conduit of that information to the then Taoiseach.

1.178 Discovery made by Mr Dunlop to the Tribunal indicated that on 19 February 1992 Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd invoiced 'Mick Quinn, Industrial Consultants' for IR£625.02 for services as follows: 'To type setting and design of headed paper for the candidate' and 'to hire of office facilities.' Mr Quinn did not recall the invoice nor the identity of 'the candidate' referred to therein.

1.179 The Tribunal accepted Mr Quinn's assertion that he had no association with Comex. The background to Comex therefore remained a mystery to the Tribunal, save it was satisfied that Mr Lawlor and Mr Dunlop were linked to Comex.

1.180 The Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop's denial of any knowledge on his part in relation to the substantial transactions in the accounts of his company Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd in 1990 and 1991. Given the substantial size of the sums involved, the Tribunal rejected as incredible Mr Dunlop's claimed ignorance of the sums in question or the reason for the use of 'Comex.'

MR LAWLOR AND GANLEY INTERNATIONAL LTD

1.181 British Company Office records established that Ganley International Ltd was a UK registered private limited company incorporated on 1 February 1994. The registered offices of Ganley International Ltd were located at 128 Mount Street, London. Its principals included Mr Declan Ganley and Mr Gary Hunter. In the course of his evidence to the Tribunal, Mr Ganley stated that in addition to being involved in Ganley International Ltd he was associated with two other companies – Anglo Adriatic Investment Company and Baltic Timber Products Ltd. Mr Ganley told the Tribunal that Baltic Timbers operated from the London address while Anglo Adriatic Investment Company was an Albanian company with a representative address at Mount Street, London.

1.182 Ganley International Ltd was a company involved in international business, primarily in the countries of the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

1.183 In the course of his compliance with a High Court Order in 2000, Mr Lawlor advised the Tribunal that he operated as ‘Long Associates’ (one of the entities used by Mr Lawlor to invoice companies / third parties) out of the offices of Ganley International Ltd and that he had used these offices extensively over a short number of years. Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal then that he would have discussed the matter with Mr Gary Hunter, a director of Ganley International Ltd, a claim denied by Mr Hunter in correspondence with the Tribunal. Mr Hunter, who was resident outside the jurisdiction, elected not to attend to give evidence to the Tribunal.

1.184 When asked in the course of his evidence if he knew that Mr Lawlor had carried on business from the Ganley Group offices in London, Mr Ganley replied ‘it’s news to me.’ Mr Ganley recollected only once meeting Mr Lawlor in London and that was on the occasion of a dinner hosted by Ganley International Ltd to which he had invited Mr Lawlor. It was his belief that this was the only occasion when Mr Lawlor was in his office.

1.185 Included in documents furnished to the Tribunal by Ulster Bank, on foot of discovery orders made by the Tribunal in respect of Mr Lawlor’s bank accounts, was a facsimile to Ulster Bank dated 24 November 1998, purporting to be from ‘Gary J. Hunter, Director’ of ‘Long Consultants’ which related to the subject of ‘Mr John Long.’ The faxed letterhead, as sent to Ulster Bank from ‘Long Consultants’, gave a UK office address as ‘26-28 Mount Row, London’ and gave also an Eastern European office address in the Czech Republic. The faxed letter was purportedly signed by ‘Gary J. Hunter.’ It read as follows:

This letter is to confirm that Mr. John Long has had a major role in the Long Consultancy business, which was taken over by the Ganley Group. Mr. Long retired to Ireland and various funds will transfer from time to time to his bank account at Ulster Bank, Palmerstown, Dublin, Ireland.

1.186 Mr Ganley told the Tribunal that he had never heard of ‘Long Consultants’ until he was presented with the aforesaid documentation by the Tribunal. Mr Ganley claimed that the purported signature of Mr Gary J. Hunter was not the true signature of Mr Hunter.

1.187 Mr Ganley also told the Tribunal that neither he nor his company had any knowledge of a ‘Long Consultants’ invoice provided to the Tribunal in Mr Lawlor’s discovery, which invoice, addressed to a named property company, claimed

IR£46,104 for consultancy services and requested payment be made to ‘Long Consultants, Ganley International Headquarters, 128 Mount Street, London...’

THE GANLEY INTERNATIONAL LTD/ LIAM LAWLOR FINANCIAL DEALINGS⁸

1.188 Mr Ganley told the Tribunal that he first encountered Mr Lawlor when the latter ‘gate-crashed’ the Ganley tent at the Galway Races. On becoming aware that Mr Lawlor was a Fianna Fail TD for Dublin, one of Mr Ganley’s group invited Mr Lawlor to Mr Ganley’s home on the following day for a post race-meeting function. Mr Lawlor told Mr Ganley that he was a member of the ‘Trilateral Commission.’⁹ According to Mr Ganley, Mr Lawlor’s membership of this body coincided with interests which he, Mr Ganley, had (via Anglo Adriatic Investment Company) in Albania. Mr Ganley told the Tribunal that on one occasion he and Mr Lawlor were in Albania at the same time and they met with members of the Albanian Cabinet. He said that Mr Lawlor had travelled on a number of occasions to Albania, at the behest of Ganley International Ltd, to lobby the Albanian Government to close certain ‘pyramid’ schemes. Mr Ganley also stated that Mr Lawlor, on the company’s behalf, had introduced international delegations to the IDA, Aer Rianta and ESB International.

1.189 Mr Ganley believed that his company had made total payments in the region of IR£25,000 to IR£30,000 to Mr Lawlor for his services and expenses.

1.190 In the course of correspondence with the Tribunal in January 2001 and again in 2003 Mr Lawlor acknowledged that he had received payments totalling IR£30,000 from Ganley International Ltd during the 1990s. Mr Lawlor’s discovery to the Tribunal included a communication from Mr Lawlor of 16 July 1996 to Mr Gary Hunter directing that IR£22,600.17 be transferred to an account held at the Naas branch of National Irish Bank, broken down as follows:

- (i) IR£20,000
- (ii) IR£2,423 described as balance due to Mr Lawlor of $10,000 owing
- (iii) Together with a further sum of IR£177.17 described as the balance of expenses due of IR£577.17.

⁸ The Tribunal also considered a ‘Ganley International Ltd’ invoice used by Mr Lawlor in Chapter Two (Part 9).

⁹ The Trilateral Commission was originally created in 1973 to bring together experienced leaders within the private sector to discuss issues of global concern at a time when communication and cooperation between Europe, North America and Asia were lacking.

1.191 On the document, as sent by fax to Mr Hunter on 16 July 1996, reference was made to ‘Declan’ having already paid US$6,100 of the US$10,000 owing and having paid IR£400 of the expenses sum owing to Mr Lawlor.

1.192 Included also in Mr Lawlor’s discovery, as furnished to the Tribunal, was an undated invoice headed ‘Eastern International Ltd’ with an address in Prague, Czech Republic which read as follows:

To consultancy work in Eastern Europe

To carrying out studies as requested.

The agreed fee of $10,000.

1.193 Mr Lawlor’s documentation also revealed that on 8 August 1996 he requested a transfer of IR£3,519.60 from Mr Gary Hunter of Ganley International Ltd by way of monies due in respect of the costs of an ‘Albanian delegation visit to Dublin July 29th to August 2nd.’

1.194 While Mr Ganley believed that the 16 July and 8 August 1996 communications from Mr Lawlor were the documents on foot of which Mr Lawlor was paid by Ganley International Ltd, he claimed that no invoice from ‘Eastern International Ltd’ had ever been produced to Ganley International Ltd by Mr Lawlor and that he knew nothing about it.

1.195 As already referred to, it appeared to the Tribunal that Mr Lawlor was possessed of an ability to utilise contacts he had with companies and businesses (including Mr Ganley’s) in such manner as to be in a position to ‘adopt’ certain details pertaining to these businesses and then apply that detail to facilitate financial reward for himself. Long before his use of the Ganley invoice, Mr Lawlor demonstrated this ability when he invoiced NTR in the name of ‘Industrial Consultants Associates’ and ‘Industrial Consultants International Ltd.’

MR LAWLOR AND ECONOMIC REPORTS LIMITED

1.196 Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal that Economic Reports Ltd was established with the intention that it be engaged in carrying out consultancy work. In fact it never engaged in any such activity. Its directors were Mr Lawlor and Mr Lawlor believed, his wife, Mrs Hazel Lawlor.

1.197 Mr Lawlor operated bank accounts in the name of Economic Reports Ltd, two with Bank of Ireland, Lucan, and two loan accounts with Bank of Nova Scotia, Dublin.

1.198 Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal that a loan advanced to Economic Reports Ltd by Bank of Nova Scotia was used ‘to discharge accounts and debts and so forth...’

FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING MR LAWLOR AND MR NIALL
LAWLOR WITH MR LOUIS FITZGERALD AND COMPANIES ASSOCIATED WITH MR FITZGERALD

1.199 In September 2002 Mr Lawlor furnished the Tribunal with documentation which purported to provide explanations as to the source of a series of lodgements (all in excess of IR£1,000) made to accounts held in the name of his son Mr Niall Lawlor.

1.200 In one document entitled ‘Niall Lawlor 1992 response to queries arising over £1,000’ the late Mr Lawlor attributed ‘Palmerstown House’ and/or ‘Bigger Staff Services Limited’ as the source of seven lodgements which had been made to the AIB Grafton Street account of Niall Lawlor in the months of February and March 1992. The lodgements ranged from IR£2,000 to IR£16,000.

1.201 Returned paid cheques provided to the Tribunal established that Mr Niall Lawlor wrote a series of cheques drawn on his AIB Grafton Street Account payable either to ‘Palmerstown House’ or ‘Bigger Staff Services Limited’ as follows:

- 7 February 1992 - IR£2,000
- 18 February 1992 - IR£4,000
- 20 February 1992 - IR£6,000
- 24 February 1992 - IR£7,000
- 27 February 1992 - IR£8,000
- 2 March 1992 - IR£16,000
- 4 March 1993 - IR£16,000

All of which sums were subsequently debited from Mr Niall Lawlor’s account. Mr Lawlor told the Tribunal that all of the cheques had been cashed at the Palmerstown House Public House and the proceeds then immediately lodged to Mr Niall Lawlor’s AIB Grafton Street account save that, with regard to three of the cheques, the sums lodged were IR£1,000 less than the encashed proceeds.

1.202 An analysis of Mr Niall Lawlor’s account established that with regard to each individual cheque written by him in the period in question there were insufficient funds in the account to meet the cheques, save for the lodgements (said to be the encashed proceeds of the cheques) made by him on the same days the cheques were written. In all, on the assumption that the lodgements to

Mr Niall Lawlor's account were the encashed proceeds of the aforesaid cheques, Mr Niall Lawlor cashed cheques to the value of IR£59,000 and lodged back to his account some IR£56,000 of the proceeds.

1.203 No explanation was furnished to the Tribunal as to why Mr Niall Lawlor cashed a series of cheques at Palmerstown House and then lodged the proceeds back to his account. It appeared to the Tribunal that this process had no logical purpose, and was suspicious.

1.204 Bank records available to the Tribunal established that none of the cheques payable to Palmerstown House or Bigger Staff Services Limited for which Mr Niall Lawlor had received value from Palmerstown House (according to Mr Liam Lawlor) were lodged to any account connected with these businesses.

1.205 Mr Louis Fitzgerald, the proprietor of the Palmerstown House, told the Tribunal that while he was aware that on occasions cheques were cashed for Mr Lawlor at his licensed premises, he, Mr Fitzgerald did not have any knowledge of the individual transactions queried by the Tribunal.

1.206 On 2 October 2007 Mr Fitzgerald's solicitors, in response to queries raised by the Tribunal provided the following explanation for the fact that in the accounts of Palmerstown House/Bigger Staff Services Limited there was no evidence of Mr Niall Lawlor's cheques having been lodged:

'Given the substantial value of cheques presented, there was frequently insufficient cash on the premises to match the amount on the cheques that were presented;

An arrangement was made with the local Ulster Bank branch whereby the Manager of the Palmerstown House – Mr. Luke Byrne – on being presented with a cheque to be cashed by Niall/Liam Lawlor would call to the local Ulster Bank branch and present this cheque to be cashed. Ulster Bank would then pay over the cash equivalent to Mr. Byrne who would return to the premises and hand over the cash to Niall Lawlor or Liam Lawlor. In these circumstances, the cheques were not lodged to a Palmerstown House Account.'

1.207 While such explanation was given for the absence of any reference to the Niall Lawlor cheque transactions appearing in the accounts of Palmerstown House, the Tribunal was left no wiser as to the reason why Mr Niall Lawlor engaged in the aforesaid transactions.

1.208 In his evidence to the Tribunal Mr Fitzgerald, who described Mr Lawlor as a good customer of his Palmerstown House Pub, restaurant, and off license business, claimed to have engaged in only one financial transaction with Mr Lawlor, namely the provision to him of a IR£15,000 loan in the early to mid 1990s, a time when Mr Lawlor, according to Mr Fitzgerald, was experiencing difficulties with his own bank. Mr Fitzgerald may also have given Mr Lawlor a donation of IR£500 in 1989.

1.209 According to Mr Fitzgerald, Mr Lawlor requested him to cash a cheque for IR£15,000 and as he did not have sufficient cash funds to hand he provided Mr Lawlor with a cheque for IR£15,000, in return for Mr Lawlor providing Mr Fitzgerald with a post dated cheque. Documentation discovered to the Tribunal by Mr Lawlor established that on 20 April 1992 Mr Fitzgerald wrote a cheque for IR£15,000 to 'cash' for which Mr Lawlor received value on 27 April 1992.

1.210 Mr Fitzgerald claimed that when he presented Mr Lawlor's post-dated cheque for payment in 1992 it was returned unpaid. No copy of this cheque was made available to the Tribunal.

1.211 The Tribunal had sight of a cheque dated 2 February 1995 for IR£15,000 payable to 'cash' drawn on an account of Mr Lawlor, said by Mr Fitzgerald to be Mr Lawlor's purported repayment of the IR£15,000 advance. On two occasions, probably in February 1995 and on 26 July 1995 this cheque was returned unpaid and marked 'refer to drawer.' Mr Fitzgerald claimed that, following correspondence having been initiated by his solicitors on 20 July 1995 with solicitors for Mr Lawlor, Mr Lawlor repaid the outstanding IR£15,000 on a piece meal basis. Mr Fitzgerald was unable to provide any evidence of Mr Lawlor's repayment.

MR LAWLOR AND LONG CONSULTANTS/LONG ASSOCIATES

1.212 Mr Lawlor informed the Tribunal in correspondence that he used invoices headed 'Long Consultants' or 'Long Associates' in order to raise funds.

1.213 According to Mr Lawlor, Long Associates was a consultancy business which operated from an address in England used by the Ganley Group. It was neither registered as a business or a company, nor was it registered for VAT. It did not operate a bank account. He maintained he used the company name to provide advices to three or four customers but could not recall the nature of those services.

1.214 Mr Lawlor advised that Long Consultants and Long Associates (along with Economic Reports and Eastern International) were interchangeable for invoicing purposes, and were deployed by him for the purposes of receiving a 'contribution.'

1.215 Mr Lawlor said he invoiced Mr Dunlop using these entities because it was 'convenient' and because he was 'using that office' and 'travelling back and forth through London to Prague and Tirana.'

BALTIC TIMBER PRODUCTS LTD

1.216 Mr Seamus Ross (of Menolly Homes Ltd) told the Tribunal that following efforts which he claimed were made by Mr Lawlor to persuade the postal authorities to extend a postal district to include lands on which Mr Ross was constructing houses in West County Dublin (and thereby, he believed, enhance their sale value), he agreed to pay IR£20,000 to Mr Lawlor. He duly paid the sum on foot of an invoice in the amount of IR£20,002.79 provided to him by Mr Lawlor in the name of the Baltic Timber Products Ltd. Mr Lawlor had no known connection to that company.

1.217 The invoice provided to the Tribunal by Mr Ross was headed Baltic Timber Products Ltd, with a London address. It was dated 26 June 1996 and was marked paid on 8 July 1996. The description on the invoice referred to a quantity of 'Latvian sawn softwood.' Mr Ross told the Tribunal that he never purchased timber from Baltic Timber Products Ltd, and had never heard of the company, save for its name on the invoice.

1.218 In a letter to the Tribunal dated 17 September 2004, Mr Lawlor took issue with the manner in which the Tribunal had examined Mr Ross in public. In the course of this letter, Mr Lawlor acknowledged that he did contact An Post in 1995 requesting confirmation that the proposed new parish of Lucan South would 'be served by the Lucan sorting office.' Mr Lawlor said that some weeks later An Post wrote to him and confirmed that the area in question would be served by the Lucan sorting office. Mr Lawlor denied that he requested An Post to alter its postal districts. Mr Lawlor maintained that the issue which led to his writing to An Post for the aforesaid confirmation arose as a result of him being approached by Mr Ross and other constituents in relation to the matter in the summer of 1995. Mr Lawlor contended that 'any payments made to me by Mr Ross were solely for political and constituency purposes.'

1.219 In a further letter from Mr Lawlor to the Tribunal dated 4 February 2005, he dealt specifically with Mr Ross's allegation (as summarised by Mr Lawlor in his letter) that: 'In July 1996. Menolly Homes cheque for IR£20,002.79 paid on a Baltic Timber Products Ltd invoice.' Mr Lawlor stated that it was his recollection that he had received approximately IR£25,000 from Mr Ross and that 'this could comprise the IR£20,000 + cheque from Menolly Homes and IR£5,000 cash.' The Tribunal understood this to have been an acknowledgement on Mr Lawlor's part that the Menolly Homes cheque for IR£20,002.79 paid on foot of a Baltic Timber Products Ltd invoice was indeed paid to and received by Mr Lawlor.

1.220 There was no allegation of impropriety on the part of An Post nor was there any allegation made that Mr Lawlor had offered or paid any money to An Post in relation to the matter. The relevance of Mr Ross's evidence related solely to the Tribunal's inquiries into the use of false or bogus invoices by Mr Lawlor to developers for the purposes of facilitating the payment of money to himself at a time when he was an elected public representative.

MR AMBROSE KELLY AND MR LAWLOR

1.221 According to Mr Kelly, he became acquainted with Mr Lawlor in or about September 1991 in relation to a matter which Mr Kelly claimed was unconnected to the Quarryvale project. Notwithstanding this evidence, it was common case that Mr Kelly was retained by Mr O'Callaghan in early 1991 relating to Quarryvale, at a time when Mr Lawlor was heavily involved with Mr O'Callaghan in the Quarryvale rezoning project. Whether or not Mr Kelly met Mr Lawlor in early 1991, it was the case that Mr Kelly's involvement in Quarryvale was certainly known to Mr Lawlor as early as February 1991, as was evidenced from communication passing between Mr Lawlor and Mr O'Callaghan at that time.

1.222 In the course of his evidence, Mr Kelly acknowledged the role played by Mr Lawlor in relation to the 'Stadium' project which had been envisaged for the Neilstown lands, a project in respect of which it had been proposed that Mr Kelly, together with Mr Lawlor, Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan was to have a shareholding.¹⁰

1.223 Mr Kelly described Mr Lawlor, both when he was a councillor and subsequently, as a person who exercised influence on councillors – influence which 'could be good or could be bad.' Mr Lawlor's influence could, according to Mr Kelly, manifest itself by Mr Lawlor disrupting the potential of getting a development scheme through the County Council. Equally, Mr Lawlor had the ability to exert his influence to promote a development scheme within Dublin

¹⁰ See Part Six of Chapter Two

County Council. Mr Lawlor, Mr Kelly claimed, had retained his position of influence even after he had lost his Council seat in 1991. Mr Kelly agreed with a suggestion from Tribunal Counsel that it was important to keep Mr Lawlor ‘on side at all times.’ Mr Kelly acknowledged that his client, Mr O’Callaghan, had also been conscious of the need to keep Mr Lawlor ‘on side.’

1.224 Asked to explain the way in which Mr Lawlor could be obstructive to a project Mr Kelly stated as follows:

‘He was a strong political machine. He produced a lot of documentation, a lot of paper and took a lot of meetings and met a lot of people and was quite articulate at speaking and could be quite a powerful force in just verbal conversation and debate.’

1.225 Mr Kelly said that Mr Lawlor, although no longer an elected member of the Council:

‘...still had the same ability to speak very well on subjects and put arguments up and debate subjects whether he was a member of the Council or not. And of course the fact that he wasn’t a member of the Council, he was still the elected TD for that district or for that area.’ Mr Lawlor ‘could turn the (political) machine for or against depending on his stance that he took on the project.’

FINANCIAL DEALINGS BETWEEN MR LAWLOR AND MR KELLY – THE PRAGUE CONNECTION

1.226 During the period in which Mr Kelly and Mr Lawlor worked together as part of Mr O’Callaghan’s strategic team for the progressing of the Quarryvale rezoning and the Neilstown lands Stadium Project, Mr Lawlor, independently of the foregoing, was engaged in a commercial relationship with Mr Kelly and/or companies associated with him.

1.227 In the early 1990s Mr Kelly said he started a small business in Prague with the intention of extending his business into Central Europe particularly in the development of shopping centres.

1.228 According to Mr Kelly, he told Mr Lawlor of his plans and Mr Lawlor volunteered to go to Prague to ‘motivate’ Mr Kelly’s team there. Mr Lawlor’s visits to Prague were on a fee paying consultancy basis.

1.229 Questioned as to what Mr Lawlor might have brought to Mr Kelly’s European venture, Mr Kelly stated that Mr Lawlor’s expertise was bringing people together. Mr Kelly told the Tribunal that he did not know whether Mr Lawlor had any other interest in Prague prior to his retention by Mr Kelly as a consultant.

1.230 Mr Kelly acknowledged that Mr Lawlor claimed an interest in his Prague project and that he claimed to have been entitled to a share in the business – an issue Mr Kelly described as a ‘hypothetical question’ as nothing had come of it because Mr Kelly’s Prague project ‘fell asunder.’

PAYMENTS MADE TO MR LAWLOR BY MR KELLY

1.231 Mr Kelly stated that following their agreement that Mr Lawlor would be remunerated for his consultancy work in Prague, Mr Lawlor received a series of payments from companies associated with Mr Kelly. Mr Kelly said that he could not recall any detail relating to these payments.

1.232 Documentation provided to the Tribunal by Mr Lawlor established that between December 1993, and April 1995, Mr Lawlor received a total of IR£50,083.22 from companies associated with Mr Kelly - IR£3,000 in 1993, IR£34,740.08 in 1994, and IR£12,343.14 in 1995. The majority of the payments made to Mr Lawlor were round-figure payments ranging from IR£1,000 to IR£2,500. While the documentation suggested that some cheque payments had been made to Mr Lawlor, the majority of the entries documenting the payments were non-specific as to the mode of payment. Mr Kelly said that he could not say if Mr Lawlor had been paid by cheque or in cash, although he claimed that Mr Lawlor had always signed for such payments.

1.233 While the Tribunal heard evidence of Mr Lawlor’s ability to produce invoices in other instances (unconnected to Mr Kelly) to facilitate money being paid to him by third parties, there was no evidence produced to the Tribunal that Mr Lawlor had invoiced Mr Kelly or his companies.

THE TRIBUNAL’S GENERAL CONCLUSIONS RELATING TO MR LAWLOR

These conclusions of the Tribunal should be read in conjunction with findings elsewhere in the Report relating to Mr Lawlor.

- i. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor abused his role as an elected public representative (in his capacity both as an elected councillor until June 1991, and as an elected TD representing the Dail Constituency of Dublin West) to a very significant degree, in that during the period of the late 1980s, and the 1990s, he provided services and advice to landowners/developers (including Mr Dunlop as their agent) in his capacity as an elected politician for personal gain. In effect, Mr Lawlor conducted a personal business in the course of which he corruptly sold his expertise, knowledge and influence as a councillor, and as a TD, for personal financial reward.

- ii. The Tribunal was satisfied that decisions were made, on occasion, by developers/landowners (or Mr Dunlop as their agent) to pay Mr Lawlor for ‘consultancy’ services, in relation to the rezoning or development of their lands. This was not simply to have the benefit of his undoubted knowledge of the planning process and the influence he undoubtedly exerted over councillors, both as a councillor and as a TD, but was also to allay concern on the part of developers that a failure to engage with Mr Lawlor in this manner might result in a failure to have their property rezoned, or otherwise dealt with in the course of the planning process.
- iii. Mr Lawlor’s close involvement with landowners/developers (and particularly with Mr Dunlop as their agent) and his frequent demands for and receipt of substantial sums of money from them in the late 1980s and throughout the 1990s, coupled with his propensity to use false and fictitious business names and/or invoices to facilitate such payments, rendered Mr Lawlor hopelessly compromised in the required disinterested performance of his public duties as an elected public representative.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN – SUMMARY¹ OF THE TRIBUNAL'S MAIN FINDINGS IN ITS FINAL REPORT

INTRODUCTION

1. In the course of this, its final Report, the Tribunal made findings of fact, based on the civil standard of proof, the balance of probability². In this Chapter, the Tribunal has compiled a summary of its main findings³, on a chapter by chapter basis for ease of reference. The evidence relevant to each finding is to be found in the transcripts of evidence (available on the Tribunal's website), which were considered and analysed by the Tribunal in the preparation of Chapters One to Sixteen of this Report, and of which a comprehensive understanding can only be achieved by reference to this material.

CHAPTER TWO - THE QUARRYVALE MODULE

THE GRANT OF IMMUNITY TO MR TOM GILMARTIN

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that the request for immunity from prosecution was made by Mr Gilmartin on the advice of his then solicitor, Mr Noel Smyth. Nothing in the Tribunal's Terms of Reference, and nothing stated by the Tribunal at any time, prohibited any party from requesting a similar grant of immunity to that granted to Mr Gilmartin.

2. The Tribunal rejected any suggestion that the grant of immunity to Mr Gilmartin in any way, of itself, facilitated Mr Gilmartin to lie to, mislead, or otherwise fail to cooperate with, the Tribunal in any way. The grant of immunity was conditional upon Mr Gilmartin's cooperation with the Tribunal and this requirement necessarily included giving truthful evidence to the Tribunal. The Tribunal was satisfied that the conditions under which the grant of immunity was made to Mr Gilmartin were met, and it has informed the Director of Public Prosecutions.

MR LIAM LAWLOR AND MR TOM GILMARTIN

1. The Tribunal accepted as accurate Mr Gilmartin's account of his first meeting with Mr Lawlor, and it accepted that it took place in its entirety in the Deadman's Inn, and not as claimed by Mr Lawlor, partially in the latter's clinic. The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that it was Mr Lawlor who introduced the topic of Bachelors Walk and Arlington at the meeting in the Deadman's Inn. The Tribunal also accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that Mr Lawlor claimed to be a representative of the Irish government and, also, that he told Mr Gilmartin that Bachelor's Walk was 'on his patch'.

² See Chapter One.

³ Additional findings have been made in Chapters One to Sixteen.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that on a date in early May 1988, Mr Lawlor attended, uninvited, at the London offices of Arlington plc, and that he, as maintained by Mr Gilmartin, claimed to be a representative of the Irish Government.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that, on the basis of Mr Lawlor's representations, Arlington believed that Mr Lawlor was so close to the government and the authorities in Dublin that a failure on their part to make significant payments to Mr Lawlor might result in a lack of support by the government, and those authorities, for the proposed development at Bachelor's Walk, rendering the aims of that project more difficult to achieve. The Tribunal believed that this aforesaid belief on the part of Arlington prompted it to expend the equivalent of almost IR£75,000 in payments to Mr Lawlor over an eleven month period. Having regard to the fact that he was a councillor and a TD at that time, Mr Lawlor's demands for payments, and his acceptance of money in these circumstances were entirely inappropriate and were corrupt.

4. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor was paid a sum of Stg £33,000 from Arlington Securities plc in April 1989, and that the payment was not, as claimed by Mr Lawlor, a political donation. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Ted Dadley and Mr Raymond Mould, executives of Arlington that they had no recollection of the reasons for the payment of Stg £33,000 to Mr Lawlor in April 1989, or of the circumstances surrounding the payment.

5. The Tribunal was satisfied that between June 1988 and January 1989, Mr Lawlor received approximately IR£32,200 in periodic payments from Arlington, through Mr Gilmartin, and a further Stg £3,500 around November 1988.

6. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor accompanied Mr Gilmartin to a meeting with Mr George Redmond, Assistant City and County Manager, in May 1988 and that in the course of the meeting corruptly requested payment of IR£100,000 for himself and a similar amount for Mr Redmond. The request was rejected by Mr Gilmartin and no money was paid to Mr Lawlor or Mr Redmond by Mr Gilmartin. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Redmond was aware of the request for money made on his behalf by Mr Lawlor, and was complicit in that request.

7. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor, as claimed by Mr Gilmartin, did seek a 20% stake of the Quarryvale project from him on two separate occasions. Such demands were corrupt, having regard to Mr Lawlor's position as an elected public representative.

MR TOM GILMARTIN AND CLLR FINBARR HANRAHAN

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that, at a meeting in Buswells Hotel in Dublin between Mr Gilmartin and Cllr Hanrahan in late January/early February 1989, Cllr Hanrahan corruptly sought a payment of IR£100,000 (of which IR£50,000 was to be paid upfront), from Mr Gilmartin, in return for his support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. (No money was paid by Mr Gilmartin to Cllr Hanrahan.)

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that, shortly after Mr Gilmartin's meeting with Cllr Hanrahan, Mr Owen O'Callaghan was made aware by Mr Gilmartin of Cllr Hanrahan's demand for IR£100,000. Furthermore, the Tribunal rejected Mr O'Callaghan's contention that he did not believe Mr Gilmartin's claim in relation to Cllr Hanrahan's request to be true.

THE LEINSTER HOUSE MEETING IN 1989

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that, in or about early February 1989, Mr Gilmartin, having emerged from a meeting in a room in Leinster House with the then Taoiseach Mr Charles J. Haughey and a number of Government Ministers, was confronted by an unidentified individual who proceeded to corruptly demand a payment of IR£5m from him, and that he was provided by that individual with details of an offshore account into which the money was to be paid. This demand (which was not acceded to by Mr Gilmartin), was corrupt.

THE 1989 GARDA CORRUPTION INQUIRY

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin received a telephone call from an individual who introduced himself as "Garda Burns" and that he was effectively warned away from the path that he had by then embarked on, namely, dialogue with the Gardai relating to allegations of corrupt practices and demands for money. It was common case that Mr Gilmartin's liaison with Gardai ended on 20 March 1989. The Tribunal was satisfied that the purpose of the telephone call (and indeed its effect) was to discourage, intimidate or warn Mr Gilmartin to desist from any further cooperation with the Garda inquiry. The Tribunal was also satisfied that prior to this telephone call, Mr Gilmartin had cooperated with the Garda inquiry, and had provided it with information which he believed to be true and accurate.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that complaints made to the Gardai by Mr Gilmartin about Mr George Redmond, Mr Liam Lawlor and Cllr Finbarr Hanrahan were not thoroughly investigated by the Gardai in the course of their inquiry. Notwithstanding Superintendent Burns' evidence to the contrary, the Tribunal believed it likely that Mr Lawlor's position as a TD was a factor in the decision taken by the investigating Gardai not to interview him in the course of their inquiry. The Tribunal was puzzled as to why the final Garda report went to such lengths to exonerate Mr Lawlor and Mr Redmond in the absence of a more comprehensive inquiry into complaints of corruption involving those two individuals.

MR TOM GILMARTIN'S CONTACT WITH CLLR JOE BURKE

1. The Tribunal accepted that Mr Gilmartin was driven by Cllr Burke to the airport, and that, en route, Cllr Burke stopped on two occasions in search of Mr Bertie Ahern. The Tribunal was satisfied that a discussion took place in the course of which Mr Gilmartin understood that Cllr Burke was, in a roundabout fashion, seeking money for himself, or for Mr Ahern, and that Mr Gilmartin's suspicion in this regard was fuelled by Cllr Burke's efforts to locate Mr Ahern in the course of that journey to Dublin Airport.

2. The Tribunal had insufficient evidence to enable it make a finding on the issue as to whether or not, Cllr Burke, directly or indirectly, sought money from Mr Gilmartin either for himself or for Mr Ahern. There was no evidence that Mr Ahern was aware of Cllr Burke's said discussion with Mr Gilmartin, or of Cllr Burke's attempts to locate him in the course of the journey to Dublin Airport.

MR TOM GILMARTIN AND MR PADRAIG FLYNN

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Padraig Flynn requested Mr Gilmartin to make a substantial donation to the Fianna Fáil party, most probably at their meeting on 19 April 1989, and that the request was made on the understanding that steps would be taken by Mr Flynn to ease or remove obstacles and difficulties then being faced by Mr Gilmartin in relation to Quarryvale, and which Mr Gilmartin perceived to have been improper or unlawful.

2. The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that it was his intention at all time that the cheque for IR£50,000 which was provided to Mr Flynn, would be passed on to the Fianna Fáil party, and that Mr Flynn was not given this money for his own personal use.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Flynn, at the time he accepted the cheque from Mr Gilmartin, was aware of Mr Gilmartin's belief and understanding that he, Mr Flynn, would proceed to pass on the cheque to the Fianna Fáil party.

4. Mr Gilmartin presented Mr Flynn with a cheque, in which the payee section of the cheque was left blank, at Mr Flynn's request. The Tribunal was satisfied that the word "cash" was written on the cheque subsequently by Mr Flynn (or a person on his behalf).

5. Mr Flynn, in his capacity as a Government Minister, and in that capacity alone, had contact with Mr Gilmartin and received information, including complaints of corruption involving individuals known to him (including members of his own political party), and proceeded to wrongfully and, in the circumstances, corruptly, seek the payment of money from Mr Gilmartin purportedly for the benefit of the Fianna Fáil party.

6. Mr Flynn, having wrongfully and corruptly sought a substantial donation from Mr Gilmartin for the Fianna Fáil party, and having been paid IR£50,000 by Mr Gilmartin for that purpose, proceeded to utilise the money for his personal benefit.

7. The decision on the part of Mr Gilmartin to make a payment to the Fianna Fáil party through Mr Flynn was misconceived and entirely inappropriate on his part. However, the Tribunal accepted that he did it in circumstances, which included an element of duress or coercion, where he believed he had no choice but to act accordingly in order to avoid obstructive and improper behaviour on the part of elected public representatives (and a senior public servant) and, in order (to use Mr Gilmartin's own words) to create "a level playing field", in relation to his plans to develop Quarryvale.

8. The Tribunal rejected the suggestion that Mr Gilmartin's motivation in making the payment was to promote or secure a Government decision to grant tax designation status to the Quarryvale lands (which was not in any event granted). There was no evidence to suggest that Mr Gilmartin, subsequent to the payment of the IR£50,000, complained that Mr Flynn had broken an agreement or understanding that, in return for the payment, Quarryvale would receive tax designation status.

9. The Tribunal was satisfied that, contrary to what was claimed by Mr Flynn, the IR£50,000 paid to him by Mr Gilmartin in late May/early June 1989, having followed a circuitous route of withdrawals, investments and reinvestments, ultimately funded at least a significant portion of the purchase of a farm at Cloonanass in County Mayo, in the name of Mrs Flynn and was not used (save to a minimal extent) for any expenditure associated with any political purpose associated with Mr Flynn.

10. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Flynn contrived, in his note taking of telephone conversations between himself and Mr Gilmartin in September / October 1998 (after the establishment of the Tribunal) to represent wrongfully that Mr Gilmartin had confirmed to him that the payment of IR£50,000 was intended for Mr Flynn personally, and not for the Fianna Fáil party.

THE KNOWLEDGE OF MR TOM GILMARTIN'S PAYMENT OF IR£50,000 TO MR PADRAIG FLYNN WITHIN FIANNA FAIL

1. The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's recollection of his discussion with Mr Bertie Ahern (then a Government Minister) in the course of a telephone conversation on the 20 June 1989, and, more particularly, Mr Gilmartin's claim that in the course thereof Mr Ahern raised with Mr Gilmartin the subject of him making a donation to the Fianna Fáil party (in a manner which suggested to Mr Gilmartin that Mr Ahern was seeking such a payment). The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin informed Mr Ahern, in the course of their telephone conversation of his then very recent payment to Mr Flynn of IR£50,000, and that it was intended as a donation to the Fianna Fáil party.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that at a meeting in or about October/November 1990, Mr Gilmartin informed Mr Sean Sherwin, the then National Organiser for the Fianna Fáil party, that he had paid IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn for Fianna Fail, and that Cllr Finbarr Hanrahan had demanded IR£100,000 from him.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin's claim to have paid IR£50,000 to Mr Flynn on behalf of the Fianna Fáil party was a matter about which Mr Sherwin informed Mr Paul Kavanagh, who was a senior Fianna Fail fundraiser involved in fundraising for the Party. The Tribunal also believed it likely that Mr Kavanagh was told of Mr Gilmartin's claim to have been asked by Cllr Finbarr Hanrahan for IR£100,000.

4. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Kavanagh, in turn, instructed Mr Sean Fleming, the then financial controller of Fianna Fáil, to conduct an examination of Fianna Fáil's records to determine if there was a record of any donation from Mr Gilmartin, and that none was found.

5. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Sherwin advised Mr Albert Reynolds of the IR£50,000 payment made by Mr Gilmartin to Mr Flynn, for Fianna Fáil, in February 1992 at a meeting in Mr Reynolds' home at a time when Mr Reynolds was in the process of identifying suitable individuals within his party to serve in his Cabinet.

6. Neither Mr Ahern, nor Mr Reynolds, nor Mr Sherwin, nor Mr Kavanagh, nor Mr Fleming contacted Mr Flynn in relation to Mr Gilmartin's payment of IR£50,000 at any time prior to the establishment of this Tribunal. The Tribunal considered it noteworthy that Mr Bertie Ahern's decision to contact Mr Flynn in 1998/1999 in relation to Mr Gilmartin's allegation that he had paid him IR£50,000 for Fianna Fail followed media speculation relating to that payment. When in October/November 1990 (and indeed in 1992) senior personnel within Fianna Fail had essentially the same information (effectively from 'the horse's mouth') the matter was not raised with Mr Flynn at that time.

AIB AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that commercial/banking considerations, in particular, AIB's fear of an inability on the part of Mr Gilmartin/Barkhill Ltd to repay its debts to the bank, prompted AIB to pressure Mr Gilmartin to enter into an agreement with Mr O'Callaghan so as to ensure that Mr O'Callaghan would be the driving force in the Quarryvale project from February 1991 onwards.

2. The Tribunal did not accept Mr O'Callaghan's evidence that as of 15 February 1991 he was ignorant of the fact that that date was the deadline for the lodging of a motion to rezone Quarryvale or that he was ignorant of the fact that a motion was lodged on that date. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan had been advised on or before 15 February 1991 (probably before) by Mr Lawlor of the necessity to lodge a motion to rezone Quarryvale. It appeared quite incredible to the Tribunal having regard to Mr O'Callaghan's own evidence and the content of Mr Lawlor's communication with him, that Mr O'Callaghan was not fully conscious of these matters at the time of his meeting in AIB on 15 February 1991. The Tribunal was thus satisfied that the issue of the Quarryvale rezoning motion was a subject of consideration at the meeting in AIB on 15 February 1991.

MR GILMARTIN'S EFFORTS TO CONTACT COUNCILLORS ON 17 DECEMBER 1992

1. The Tribunal heard evidence of attempts by Mr Gilmartin to make contact with Cllrs McGrath and Gilbride on the evening of 17 December 1992. It was established, to the Tribunal's satisfaction, that his attempts were not successful largely because the telephones in the Fianna Fail rooms in Dublin County Council were, on the evening in question, being manned by Mr John Deane in order to control contact by Mr Gilmartin with Cllrs McGrath and Gilbride.

MR TOM GILMARTIN AND MR OWEN O'CALLAGHAN

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that in or about the spring of 1991, Mr Gilmartin attended a meeting in licensed premises in Clondalkin, with Mr O'Callaghan, and that the meeting was also attended by a Sinn Fein activist, Mr John McCann, and by Mr Pat Jennings. Mr McCann and Mr Jennings were, respectively, the Secretary and Chairperson of the Quarryvale Residents Association. The Tribunal was satisfied that the meeting was conducted in a strained atmosphere and that while the Tribunal was unable to determine whether or not Mr Gilmartin was, as he alleged, threatened in the course of that meeting, it was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin genuinely believed himself to have been threatened and that such a belief may have arisen as a consequence of the negative tone of the meeting, and because of references made to Mr Gilmartin about his previous business dealings in Northern Ireland.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Christy Burke, who was then an elected Sinn Fein Dublin City Councillor whom Mr Gilmartin identified as the person with whom he spoke in the course of the said meeting had not attended the meeting, and had never met Mr Gilmartin.

3. In relation to the allegation by Mr Gilmartin (which was denied by Mr O'Callaghan), that when he and Mr O'Callaghan were sharing a taxi to Dublin Airport, Mr O'Callaghan informed him that he had Cllr McGrath "on his payroll", and had waved a cheque in front of him for either IR£10,000 or IR£20,000 which he intended paying to Cllr McGrath, the Tribunal was satisfied that such an incident occurred, and specifically, was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan informed Mr Gilmartin that Cllr McGrath was "on his payroll".

MR LIAM LAWLOR AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor was, by December 1990, aware of Mr O'Callaghan's increasing engagement with Mr Gilmartin and his involvement with the Quarryvale project, and by the time the second ‘heads of agreement’ were signed on 15 February 1991 by Mr O’Callaghan, Mr Gilmartin and AIB Bank, Mr Lawlor was proactively engaged with Mr O’Callaghan in promoting the project to have the Quarryvale lands rezoned.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor was paid IR£40,000 in cash by Mr Dunlop on a date in May/June 1991 and that this payment was funded by payments made by Mr O’Callaghan to Shefran Ltd (or Sheafra Ltd), totalling IR£80,000 between 16 May and 7 June 1991. It was also satisfied that Mr O’Callaghan was fully aware of the payment of IR£40,000 made to Mr Lawlor by Mr Dunlop, from his, Mr O’Callaghan’s, funds.

3. Mr Lawlor received in excess of IR£150,000 from Mr Dunlop in the period 1991 to 1998. Of this sum a large proportion represented payments arising directly from Mr Lawlor’s involvement in Quarryvale. In addition, Mr Lawlor received payments totalling IR£41,000 from Mr O’Callaghan between 1991 and 1996. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O’Callaghan was aware of Mr Dunlop’s practice of making substantial payments to Mr Lawlor relating to Quarryvale, including in particular, the payment of IR£40,000 paid to Mr Lawlor in May/June 1991. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor’s relationship with Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan was firmly based in corruption and that the bulk of funds paid by Mr Dunlop and by Mr O’Callaghan to Mr Lawlor, particularly in the period 1991 to 1996, were payments made directly in relation to Mr Lawlor’s activities concerning the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands, and were corrupt.

MR OWEN O’CALLAGHAN’S AND MR FRANK DUNLOP’S STRATEGY OF CORRUPTLY PAYING ELECTED POLITICAL REPRESENTATIVES AS PART OF THE CAMPAIGN TO REZONE THE QUARRYVALE LANDS

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that of the three cheque payments by Mr O’Callaghan to Shefran Ltd (or Sheafra Ltd), between 16 May 1991 and 7 June 1991, amounting to in total IR£80,000, at least IR£65,000 was retained by Mr Dunlop in cash, and that Mr Dunlop paid most, or all, of this money, in addition to other funds available to him at the time, to councillors at, or close to, the time of the 1991 Local Elections, for the purposes of securing the support of those councillors for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. Such payments were corrupt.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that the arrangement arrived at between Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop, most probably on 26 April 1991, was that Mr Dunlop would be put in funds by Mr O’Callaghan for the purposes of making disbursements to councillors and that he would be facilitated in this regard by payments made to him otherwise than to his public relations company, Frank Dunlop & Associates. The Tribunal was satisfied that because of the imminent local elections, the likelihood, as appreciated by Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan, was that certain councillors would seek money from Mr Dunlop in the course of his lobbying and that both knew Mr Dunlop would need funds for this purpose. Moreover, the Tribunal was satisfied that by 26 April 1991, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop knew of a demand then being made by Mr Lawlor (then a councillor and T.D.) for a substantial payment in connection with the assistance he had provided and was likely to render in the future to Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop in connection with securing support for the Quarryvale rezoning.

3. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop that the IR£80,000 paid to Mr Dunlop through Shefran Ltd in 1991 was for professional fees as a lobbyist. The payment was never intended to have been Mr Dunlop's fee as understood in the ordinary sense of that word. The Tribunal was satisfied that the primary purpose of the funding of IR£80,000 over a three week period in May/June 1991 was to provide Mr Dunlop with money from which disbursements would be made to councillors in the course of the Local Election campaign. The Tribunal was satisfied that such funds were used by Mr Dunlop to make payments to elected councillors in the period May / June 1991 for the purposes of ensuring their ongoing support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands.

4. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan provided these funds to Mr Dunlop in the full knowledge that they would be used by him for the purposes of corruptly paying councillors to ensure their support for Quarryvale. This known purpose was part of an agreed strategy involving Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop to ensure that councillors standing for election in the local elections of 1991 would receive substantial sums of money in order to ensure, or copper-fasten, their support for Quarryvale related motions in respect of which they would exercise their vote in the review of the County Dublin Development Plan. In some instances, and to some extent, such payments were made also in recognition of the councillors' then recent support for the Quarryvale project, and to ensure that they were well disposed in relation to that project, and the future confirmation of its then recently rezoned status.

5. The Tribunal was satisfied that payments made by Mr O'Callaghan to Shefran Ltd totalling IR£70,000 in 1992 and IR£25,000 in early 1993 were used in part for the purposes of making payments to councillors.

6. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Gilmartin's knowledge of a link between Shefran Ltd and Mr Dunlop was learned by him on an incremental basis. The probable timeframe regarding Mr Gilmartin's awareness of Shefran Ltd and its link to Mr Dunlop was as follows. In January 1992, Mr Gilmartin was made aware through AIB of three payments to Shefran Ltd totalling IR£80,000 in 1991. Mr Gilmartin understood these to have been the discharge of monies claimed by professional experts employed by Mr O'Callaghan. On 5 June 1992, Mr Eddie Kay of AIB telephoned Mr Gilmartin in relation to the 30 April 1992 Shefran Ltd invoice for IR£30,000, which was then about to be paid. Mr Kay at that time was aware of the Dunlop / Shefran Ltd connection. It was likely that Mr Kay apprised Mr Gilmartin, to some extent at least, of a link between Mr Dunlop and Shefran Ltd at that time.

7. It was likely that by the time Mr Kay of AIB wrote to Mr Gilmartin on 10 June 1992, Mr Gilmartin knew of payments to Shefran Ltd totalling IR£110,000 and of a link between Shefran Ltd and Mr Dunlop.

8. The Tribunal was satisfied that AIB was aware that Shefran Ltd was Mr Dunlop's company; that round figure sums were being paid by Mr O'Callaghan to Shefran Ltd; that there were no invoices available in respect of the three 1991 Shefran Ltd payments; and that the IR£80,000 paid to Mr Dunlop over the course of a three to four week period in 1991 related to the 1991 local election campaign and was "for purposes associated with the 1991 local election".

9. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop advised Mr O'Callaghan that he required an immediate transfer to himself of IR£70,000, on 10 November 1992, in order to facilitate payments of money to politicians in the course of the November 1992 General Election.

10. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan was aware, based on information provided to him by Mr Dunlop, coupled with his own knowledge and experience of paying money to councillors, and to other politicians, that Mr Dunlop intended to expend a large portion of the IR£70,000 in substantial payments to councillors to secure and consolidate their support for the then imminent Quarryvale vote in Dublin County Council.

11. The Tribunal was satisfied that while the IR£70,000 paid to Mr Dunlop may have included an element of fees, its primary purpose, and the greater percentage of it, was intended to fund payments to politicians, associated with the Quarryvale project.

12. Having regard to the intention on the part of Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop that the IR£70,000 was to be largely used to fund disbursements to councillors who were likely to be candidates in the November 1992 General Election and the related Seanad Election, the Tribunal was satisfied that both men were involved in an endeavour the purpose of which was to compromise the required disinterested performance by councillors of their duties in the making of a development plan, and as such, the Tribunal was satisfied that the activities of Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop in relation to the said IR£70,000 were corrupt.

13. The Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop’s claim that he was unable to recollect the amounts of the payments and the identities of all those to whom he disbursed funds from the IR£55,000 withdrawn in cash from the IR£70,000 (paid into his account on Mr O’Callaghan’s instructions on 10 November 1992, and withdrawn by Mr Dunlop on the same date), in addition to cash available to him at that time from other sources.

14. The Tribunal was satisfied that the “big one” references in Mr Dunlop’s diaries was, in fact, a reference to Mr Dunlop’s proposed 25% shareholding in Leisure Ireland / Leisure West Ltd, the entity which was to create and run the proposed Stadium at Neilstown.

15. Mr O’Callaghan was aware of, and actively engaged in, facilitating the corrupt disbursement of substantial sums of money to politicians by Mr Dunlop in the period 1991 to 1993.

16. The Tribunal rejected the often repeated evidence of Mr O’Callaghan that he was unaware of Mr Dunlop’s corrupt activity in paying councillors to support the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands in the period 1991 to 1993, prior to Mr Dunlop’s disclosure to the Tribunal of such activity in April 2000.

17. The Tribunal rejected the often repeated evidence of Mr Dunlop that prior to April 2000 Mr O’Callaghan was, to his knowledge, unaware that he, Mr Dunlop had corruptly paid councillors to support the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands.

18. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O’Callaghan personally made corrupt payments totalling IR£119,950 (or otherwise authorised such payments through his companies) to certain politicians for the purposes of ensuring their continued support and assistance for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands: IR£17,250 paid to Cllr Sean Gilbride in 1992 / 1993; IR£5,000 paid to Cllr GV Wright in November 1992; IR£5,000 paid to Cllr O’Halloran in November 1993; IR£10,000 paid to Mr Lawlor (a TD and an elected councillor until June 1991) in September 1991, IR£10,000 to Mr Lawlor in September 1994, IR£20,000 paid to Mr Lawlor in March 1995, IR£1,000 paid to Mr Lawlor in 1996; IR£10,000 to Cllr McGrath in October 1991, IR£1,000 to Cllr McGrath in May 1992 (via Tower Secretarial Service), IR£10,700 on behalf of Cllr McGrath in May 1992, IR£20,000 to Cllr McGrath in November 1993, IR£10,000 to Cllr McGrath in May 1997 (via Essential Services).

19. Furthermore, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan was aware of a payment made by Mr Dunlop to Mr Lawlor in May/June 1991, amounting to IR£40,000.

20. The Tribunal was satisfied that the process of paying councillors to ensure and copper-fasten support for the project to rezone the Quarryvale lands during the course of the review of the County Dublin Development Plan (in the period 1991 to 1993) was strategic. This strategy was planned, promoted and organised by Mr O'Callaghan, together with, and based on advice from, Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor.

21. The Tribunal recognised the possibility that Mr O'Callaghan may have been, initially, a reluctant participant in the corrupt activity in which both he and Mr Dunlop engaged. However the Tribunal was also satisfied that if such was the case, Mr O'Callaghan nevertheless readily embraced and adopted the strategy of corruptly engaging with councillors, as espoused by Mr Dunlop and Mr Lawlor.

22. The Tribunal was satisfied that the IR£85,000 referred to in the AIB memorandum of 1 December 1992 was comprised of IR£70,000 hurriedly paid to Mr Dunlop on 10 November 1992, in addition to the IR£10,000 paid to Mr Batt O'Keefe on 7 November 1992 and IR£5,000 paid to Cllr GV Wright in Malahide on 11/12 November 1992, when Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop visited Cllr Wright in his constituency office in Malahide.

23. The Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop's claimed lack of recollection in relation to his requirement in September 1993 for IR£25,000 cash. Neither did it accept Mr Dunlop's claimed lack of recollection about the identity of the person or persons he met in Powers Hotel on 17 September 1993. The Tribunal did not accept as credible that Mr Dunlop could have forgotten the use to which he applied such a substantial sum, in circumstances where, shortly after receiving the cheque, he proceeded to encash it. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop chose not to disclose either the purpose for which he received a sum of IR£25,000 from Mr O'Callaghan which he effectively treated as cash or the name(s) of the individual or individuals to whom he probably paid money on 17 September 1993, probably in Powers Hotel (a premises close to Leinster House).

24. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan to the effect that the IR£25,000 paid to Mr Dunlop in September 1993 was a payment to Mr Dunlop for work done by him in relation to the Neilstown Stadium project.

25. The Tribunal believed it probable that Mr Dunlop disbursed either the entire, or a significant portion of, the IR£25,000 cash to whoever he met in Powers Hotel on 17 September 1993, and that almost certainly the beneficiaries were one or more politicians.

26. Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan in effect acknowledged that the September 1993 cheque for IR£25,000 from Riga Ltd was the final large round figure payment without VAT paid to Mr Dunlop by Riga Ltd/Barkhill Ltd, through Shefran/Sheafran or Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd.

27. The Tribunal noted that the payments of these large, round, effectively cash sums to Mr Dunlop ceased at around the same time as the zoning of the Quarryvale lands was confirmed by Dublin County Council. The Tribunal also noted that Mr Dunlop was paid the IR£25,000 in September 1993, the same general timeframe in which Cllrs McGrath and O’Halloran were paid IR£20,000 and IR£5,000 respectively by Mr O’Callaghan. The Tribunal also noted that this, in effect, cash payment of IR£25,000 was paid to Mr Dunlop at a time when he was actively lobbying in support of the All Purpose National Stadium.

28. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan’s necessity for a cash payment system for councillors ceased in September 1993 because to all intents and purposes, the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands, the objective for which Mr Dunlop had been retained as a lobbyist in the context of the Development Plan review, had effectively been achieved.

29. The Tribunal was satisfied that by January 1996, Riga Ltd, possibly Mr O’Callaghan, and certainly Mr Deane, were aware that the existence of a number of round figure payments, for which there were no invoices and on which VAT had not been charged or paid, in the Riga/Barkhill intercompany loan balance would be likely to present difficulties in the course of any due diligence process embarked upon by potential investors in Barkhill Ltd. At this time, Barkhill was actively seeking outside investors in a bid to develop the Quarryvale lands as a district/town centre.

30. The entire contemporaneous documentary trail examined by the Tribunal and which referred to, or touched upon, the issue of the three 1991 Shefran payments, on the face of them, indicated that invoices for the three payments of IR£25,000, IR£40,000 and IR£15,000 had not been issued in 1991. Mr

O'Callaghan's handwritten notations on the AIB document of January 1992, and his handwritten notations on Mr Fleming's schedule as recopied by Mr Fleming to Riga on 3 May 1993, indicated, in the Tribunal's view, that no invoices had issued in 1991.

31. The Tribunal took the view that if the invoices had been available to Mr O'Callaghan from 1991, he would have provided them to Mr Lucey to be forwarded to Deloitte & Touche at the time when their production was requested. Moreover, the Tribunal did not see why, if copies of the original invoices were made in (or prior to) 2000, the originals were subsequently maintained in storage in Mr O'Callaghan's personal office until furnished to the Tribunal in July 2008. The Tribunal believed that a likely explanation for the foregoing was that the invoices were not generated at all until many years after 1991.

32. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop that invoices referable to the said payments totalling IR£80,000 made to Shefran Ltd (or Sheaftran Ltd), were generated at or close to the time when the said payments were made, or indeed at any time prior to the establishment of this Tribunal.

33. The Tribunal was satisfied that the agreement reached between Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop for the provision of funds to Mr Dunlop through Shefran was for the purposes of keeping the scale of the payments to be made to Mr Dunlop by Mr O'Callaghan secret from Mr Gilmartin. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payments made to Mr Dunlop through Shefran allowed Mr Dunlop, at all relevant times, to have sufficient funds for the purposes of complying with requests or demands which he anticipated would be made of him by councillors.

34. The Tribunal was satisfied that Shefran was nominated by Mr Dunlop to Mr O'Callaghan as the vehicle whereby Mr Dunlop was to receive large, VAT free, round figure payments from Mr O'Callaghan for utilisation in connection with the agreed purpose. The happenstance of Mr Dunlop having available to him such a company coupled with the cheque cashing arrangements which Mr Dunlop had negotiated with Mr John Aherne of AIB, College Green, provided Mr Dunlop with an effective mechanism to shield from the scrutiny of Mr Gilmartin the fact that he was the recipient of large round figure sums in connection with his Quarryvale lobbying endeavours.

35. It was patently clear from the evidence of Mr Dunlop, Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Gilmartin, that Mr Gilmartin in the course of the meeting which took place between Mr Mr Dunlop, Mr O'Callaghan, Mr Gilmartin and Mr Lawlor on 25 April 1991 was made privy to Mr O'Callaghan's intention to retain Mr Dunlop as a lobbyist, something which, Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan agreed, Mr Gilmartin was objecting to from the outset. There was no dispute but that by 2 May 1991, Mr Dunlop's involvement as a lobbyist for Quarryvale was made known to Mr Gilmartin in a direct fashion, when Mr Dunlop faxed to Mr Gilmartin certain information connected with the Quarryvale rezoning proposal. By 16 May 1991, the day of the Quarryvale rezoning vote, and the day when Shefran received the first payment from Riga, Mr Dunlop's involvement in the lobbying campaign for Quarryvale was known to all concerned, including Mr Gilmartin. Thus, the Tribunal gave no credence to Mr O'Callaghan's contention that the purpose of using Shefran was "...to protect whatever Councillors (who) would support Quarryvale, Tom Gilmartin's Councillors that would support Quarryvale, protect them and make sure that they stayed inside with me. That's the reason the whole thing was set up".

36. The Tribunal was satisfied that at least some of the payments made by Mr Dunlop on the part of Mr O'Callaghan to, or for the benefit of, councillors by the mechanism of invoices generated by Frank Dunlop & Associates were an attempt to influence those councillors in the performance of their public duties and were therefore corrupt. The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan was aware that some of these payments were made for this corrupt purpose.

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S OCTOBER 1998 PAYMENT OF IR£300,000 TO MR DUNLOP

1. The Tribunal believed that Mr Dunlop had not, as claimed by him, simply "called in" his "success" fee on 1 October 1998. Rather, the Tribunal believed it likely that Mr Dunlop approached Mr O'Callaghan on that occasion and requested payment of the sum which then remained outstanding, as part of the arrangement entered into on 22 May 1998, namely the "300,000 pounds remaining" as noted in Mr Dunlop's diary on that date. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop requested payment of this money in the context of the inquiries he anticipated the Tribunal would make of him. It was further satisfied that Mr Dunlop's disclosures to the Revenue in October 1998 were precipitated by his anticipation that his activities as a Quarryvale lobbyist, especially his use of Shefran to receive substantial round sum amounts from Mr O'Callaghan, would be a matter that was likely to be focused on by the Tribunal and likely to be the subject of ensuing publicity, as in fact occurred.

MR O'CALLAGHAN'S PAYMENT OF MR DUNLOP'S LEGAL FEES EXCEEDING IR£300,000 IN THE PERIOD 1998/2000

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that the question of Mr O'Callaghan's undertaking to discharge Mr Dunlop's legal fees could not have been predicated on Mr O'Callaghan's belief that Mr Dunlop had not engaged in making payments to councillors/politicians, given that the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop had engaged in making a series of payments to election candidates in 1991 and 1992 respectively, with the imprimatur of Mr O'Callaghan, and had been funded by Mr O'Callaghan to enable him to do so. Moreover, as found by the Tribunal, Mr Dunlop paid Mr Lawlor IR£40,000 in or about May/June 1991, with Mr O'Callaghan's knowledge.

MR DUNLOP'S DIARIES

1. In purported compliance with Tribunal orders for discovery, Mr Dunlop had provided his "redacted" diaries for specific years (1 January 1990 to 30 December 1993). In the course of his evidence, Mr Dunlop conceded that a number of matters recorded in his diaries and which were relevant to meetings relating to Quarryvale had been concealed by him, on occasion with the use of "post-it type stickers", when he made discovery to the Tribunal. These became apparent to the Tribunal when, subsequently, Mr Dunlop's entire unredacted diaries were furnished to it at its request. When these diaries were provided to the Tribunal in 2001, however, it was noted that they contained many heavily obliterated entries. The Tribunal also noted other diary references which had been wrongly redacted by Mr Dunlop when he had previously provided his redacted diaries to the Tribunal. The Tribunal was satisfied that some, if not all, of these heavy attempted obliterations were made by Mr Dunlop prior to his furnishing the diaries to the Tribunal in 2001, with some made prior to his having sworn his first Affidavit of Discovery. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's objective in this regard was to conceal certain information from the Tribunal (including references to meetings which Mr Dunlop had with a number of politicians and others), and particularly concerning financial matters, including financial matters relating to himself and Mr O'Callaghan, and on occasions Mr Lawlor.

MR OWEN O'CALLAGHAN'S DONATIONS TO THE FIANNA FAIL PARTY

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that at the time Mr Albert Reynolds (the then Taoiseach), and Mr Bertie Ahern (the then Minister for Finance) wrote, in their capacities as senior officers of the Fianna Fail Party, their September 1993 letter to Mr O'Callaghan, seeking a substantial donation to the Fianna Fail Party, and which culminated in the following year in a payment of IR£80,000 to the Fianna Fail Party, it was against the backdrop of consistent lobbying by Mr O’Callaghan and Mr Dunlop at Government level, for State subvention for the “All Purpose Stadium” project at Neilstown.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O’Callaghan felt himself compelled to make this substantial payment to the Fianna Fail Party in circumstances where his company was obliged to use borrowed funds in order to do so, because of his concern (be that perceived or real), that a failure on his part to so contribute would impact negatively on his efforts to secure government support and financial assistance for the Stadium project.

3. Having regard to the evidence heard by it in relation to the request for, and the payment of, the substantial donation to the Fianna Fail Party, the Tribunal did not deem it appropriate in the circumstances to determine this payment was corrupt. The Tribunal nevertheless considered that the concept whereby senior members of a government would seek a financial contribution to their political party, with the assistance of a former government Minister and EU Commissioner closely associated with that party, and would actively engage in (what amounted to in reality) pressurising a businessman, then involved in lobbying the government to support a commercial project, to pay a substantial sum of money to that political party, was entirely inappropriate, and was an abuse of political power and government authority.

4. The similarity noted by the Tribunal to have existed in many important aspects as between, on the one hand, the request made of Mr Gilmartin by Mr Flynn, then a government Minister, for a substantial donation to the Fianna Fail Party in 1989, and on the other hand the request made of Mr O’Callaghan by Mr Reynolds and Mr Ahern in 1993 were, the Tribunal believed, remarkable. In both instances individuals who were engaged quite legitimately in promoting their interests with members of government, were subjected to requests for substantial financial donations to the political party with whom those Ministers were affiliated, and in circumstances where those individuals felt themselves to have had little choice but to comply (albeit for different reasons and in markedly different circumstances) with such requests.

5. On 17 November 1992, Mr O’Callaghan wrote to the then Taoiseach Mr Albert Reynolds enclosing a cheque for IR£5,000 as a political donation for the Fianna Fail Party in relation to the General Election campaign which was then underway. In the course of that letter, Mr O’Callaghan referred to his “policy over the years to support individual candidates, and in particular this time, both in Dublin and Cork”, and that his total support in that context was “in excess of six figures”. Mr

O'Callaghan told the Tribunal that the "in excess of six figures" sum was a reference to the approximate total expenditure on his part in political donations to the Fianna Fail Party over a number of years up to that time. Mr O'Callaghan was adamant that the reference could not reasonably be interpreted as suggesting that he had spent in excess of IR£100,000 in political donations in the context of the 1992 General Election campaign then underway. In particular, Mr O'Callaghan denied that the "in excess" of IR£100,000, included the IR£70,000 which Mr Dunlop had been paid by Mr O'Callaghan on 10 November 1992. However the Tribunal was satisfied that the "in excess" of IR£100,000 did in fact include this IR£70,000 which had been used (or at least most of it) by Mr Dunlop to make disbursements to politicians. The Tribunal was also satisfied that the "in excess" of IR£100,000 also included the IR£10,000 paid to Mr Batt O'Keeffe on 7 November 1992, IR£5,000 paid to Cllr GV Wright on 11 / 12 November 1992, IR£3,500 paid to Cllr Gilbride (out of a total of IR£17,250 eventually paid to Cllr Gilbride), IR£10,700 paid on behalf of Cllr Colm McGrath in May 1992, and the IR£5,000 cheque included with the letter to Mr Reynolds. The Tribunal has found that the payments to Cllrs Wright, Gilbride and McGrath were corrupt.

MR BERTIE AHERN AND QUARRYVALE (EXCLUDING THE INQUIRY INTO HIS FINANCES)

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Ahern was probably aware, prior to his trip to Los Angeles on 11 March 1994, of Mr Niall Lawlor's association with Chilton & O'Connor (Investment Bankers based in LA) having regard to the specific reference to that connection in the documents faxed from the Irish Consulate in Los Angeles to Mr Ahern's private secretary on 4 March 1994. The Tribunal believed it most unlikely that Mr Ahern would not have been fully advised on the content of the Consulate's memorandum of 4 March 1994, including the specific reference to Mr Lawlor's son, and his expected attendance at the planned reception for Mr Ahern.

2. The Tribunal rejected Mr Ahern's evidence that the 'All Purpose National Stadium' project had not been a principal topic of discussion between himself and Mr O'Connor on 11 March 1994. Mr Ahern sought to maintain this position, notwithstanding the clear and unambiguous terms of Mr Burke of Chilton O'Connor's letter of 3 March 1994 to the Irish Consulate.

MR O'CALLAGHAN AND MR BERTIE AHERN

1. The Tribunal rejected as not credible Mr O'Callaghan's evidence that although probably aware of the fact that Mr Ahern was meeting Chilton & O'Connor on 11

March 1994 in Los Angeles, he remained unaware of the outcome of such a meeting. The Tribunal was satisfied that in all probability Mr O'Callaghan was briefed on this meeting by either Chilton & O'Connor, or by Mr Lawlor, and perhaps by Mr Ahern himself on 24 March 1994.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that the topics discussed at a meeting between Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Ahern at a meeting between them on 24 March 1994, were Mr O'Callaghan's concerns regarding the Blanchardstown tax designation issue, and his plans for the 'All Purpose National Stadium'. The Tribunal was satisfied that in all probability, Mr O'Callaghan lobbied Mr Ahern for government support and funding for the stadium project. It was inconceivable that such discussion would not have taken place, having regard to Mr Dunlop's letter of 1 December 1993 to Mr Ahern wherein a meeting was sought for Mr O'Callaghan with Mr Ahern regarding the stadium, and having regard to the fact that as of 1 December 1993, Mr Ahern was in possession of documentation relating to the stadium project which had been enclosed by Mr Dunlop in correspondence with him. Moreover, it appeared to the Tribunal extremely unlikely that the issue of the stadium project and its funding would not have been discussed between Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Ahern having regard to the fact that Mr Ahern had met with Chilton & O'Connor on 11 March 1994.

3. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop that on 10 November 1994, Mr O'Callaghan's stadium proposal was dismissed or rejected by Mr Ahern in the manner described by them. The Tribunal rejected their evidence notwithstanding the fact that the Department of Finance had given the stadium proposal a negative appraisal on 7 September 1994. In arriving at this determination, the Tribunal took particular note of the contemporaneous documentation relating to the meeting of 10 November 1994 which was made available to the Tribunal, and which suggested that, subsequent to his 10 November meeting with Mr Ahern, Mr O'Callaghan had spoken of the project as if it were clearly still live.

4. The Tribunal was satisfied that as of 10 November 1994, contrary to evidence given by Mr O'Callaghan and Mr Dunlop (and also notwithstanding Mr Ahern's evidence) there remained on the part of Mr O'Callaghan and Mr O'Connor and indeed of Mr Dunlop, every expectation that they would further progress their stadium proposals in subsequent contact with Mr Ahern.

THE INQUIRY INTO MR BERTIE AHERN'S FINANCES

THE LODGEMENT OF IR£22,500 TO MR AHERN'S SPECIAL SAVINGS ACCOUNT
ON 30 DECEMBER 1993

1. The Tribunal rejected the evidence that in December 1993, there had been a collection organised by Mr Des Richardson and / or Mr Gerry Brennan from friends of Mr Ahern, or that IR£22,500 was provided to Mr Ahern, in the manner claimed, on 27 December 1993. Equally, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Ahern did not receive any such sum, either as a gift or as a loan, from the identified individuals.
2. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Ahern, Mr Richardson, Mr Charlie Chawke, Mr Michael Collins, Mr David McKenna, and Mr Jim Nugent in relation to their involvement in a collection for Mr Ahern of IR£22,500 in December 1993.
3. The Tribunal accepted Mr Padraic O'Connor's contention that he and Mr Ahern were not close personal friends in 1993, and that such friendship as did exist between them at that time was based on an occasional, albeit close working or professional relationship in the course of which Mr Ahern, in his capacity for Minister for Finance, received professional advice from Mr O'Connor on economic and currency issues.
4. The Tribunal accepted Mr O'Connor's evidence that Mr Des Richardson requested a donation towards the expenses of Mr Ahern's constituency office, St. Luke's, and that he had not been requested to make a donation to Mr Ahern personally.
5. Contrary to what had been claimed by Mr Des Richardson, the evidence to the Tribunal did not establish that a bank draft for IR£5,000 (which was included in the IR£22,500 provided to Mr Ahern in December 1993), had been funded, directly or indirectly, by the payment of IR£6,050 which had been paid by NCB Stockbrokers, on Mr O'Connor's instructions, following the request for a donation to Mr Ahern's constituency office made by Mr Richardson. Nor, contrary to Mr Ahern's claim, did it come from Mr O'Connor personally.
6. The Tribunal accepted Mr O'Connor's evidence that, contrary to what Mr Ahern had claimed, Mr Ahern never acknowledged to him, either formally or informally, that he had received a contribution of IR£5,000 from Mr O'Connor, and had also accepted Mr O'Connor's evidence that Mr Ahern had never offered to repay money to Mr O'Connor

7. Because the Tribunal was not provided with a truthful account as to the source of the said lodgement of IR£22,500 to Mr Ahern's bank account on 30 December 1993, it was unable to determine the original source of such funds.

MR AHERN'S CLAIM TO HAVE ACCUMULATED SAVINGS OF CIRCA IR£54,000 IN THE PERIOD 1987 TO 1993

1. While the Tribunal accepted that Mr Ahern's usual practice in the period 1987 to 1993, was to cash salary and expenses cheques, and to generally pay bills, living expenses and other disbursements with cash, rather than using a bank account, it rejected Mr Ahern's evidence that over this period of time, he had accumulated approximately IR£54,000 in cash savings.

THE LODGEMENTS TOTALLING IR£30,000 MADE ON 25 APRIL 1994

1. The Tribunal rejected Mr Ahern's evidence as to the funds which sourced these lodgements, and was satisfied that most, if not all, of the said IR£30,000 cash came into the possession of Mr Ahern between 23 December 1993 and 25 April 1994.

2. Because Mr Ahern failed to disclose the true source of these lodgements to the Tribunal, the Tribunal was unable to determine the source of these funds.

THE LODGEMENT OF IR£20,000 MADE ON 8 AUGUST 1994

1. The Tribunal rejected Mr Ahern's evidence as to the source of the IR£20,000 cash which funded the lodgement to his account on 8 August 1994. The Tribunal was satisfied that, contrary to what Mr Ahern had stated, a significant portion, if not the entire, of the said funds came into Mr Ahern's possession between 25 April 1994 and 8 August 1994.

2. Because Mr Ahern failed to disclose to the Tribunal the true source of the said lodgement, the Tribunal was unable to determine the source of those funds.

THE LODGEMENT OF IR£24,838.49 TO A BANK ACCOUNT OF MR AHERN ON 11 OCTOBER 1994

1. Mr Ahern maintained that this lodgement was comprised of approximately IR£16,500, collected for him by identified friends and then accepted by him as a repayable loan, together with Stg £8,000 approximately, presented to him following a dinner engagement in Manchester. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Ahern, and of others, to the effect that such collections had taken place and were the source of the funds lodged to Mr Ahern's account on 11 October 1994.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that the said lodgement of IR£24,838.49 on 11 October 1994 had in fact been funded by Stg £25,000 cash.

3. Because of Mr Ahern's failure to account to the Tribunal for the source of the funds which comprised this lodgement, the Tribunal was unable to determine the source thereof.

THE LODGEMENT OF IR£28,772.90 TO A BANK ACCOUNT OF MS CELIA LARKIN ON 5 DECEMBER 1994

1. Mr Ahern claimed that the source of this lodgement on 5 December 1994 was approximately Stg £30,000 cash provided to him by his friend Mr Michael Wall (as a fund for use in connection with 44 Beresford Avenue, Drumcondra), and which, in turn, he provided to Ms Larkin for lodgement to an account in her name. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Ahern and Mr Wall to the effect that Mr Wall paid approximately Stg £30,000 cash to Mr Ahern for the said, or any, purpose.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that the source of the foreign currency which funded the lodgement of IR£28,772.90 on 5 December 1994 was not, as contended by Mr Ahern, approximately Stg £30,000 cash, but was in fact US$45,000, cash.

3. Because of Mr Ahern's failure to account to the Tribunal as to the true source of the foreign currency which funded the said lodgement, the Tribunal was unable to determine the source of these funds.

THE LODGEMENT OF IR£11,743.74 TO A BANK ACCOUNT OF MS CELIA LARKIN ON 15 JUNE 1995

1. This lodgement was comprised of two separate sums, namely IR£9,743.74 from an exchange of Stg £10,000 cash, and IR£2,000 cash. Mr Ahern maintained that the Stg £10,000 cash element of the lodgement represented part of a purchase of Stg £30,000 cash by him (or by others on his behalf), which in turn had been funded by some of the IR£50,000 cash withdrawn by Ms Larkin from the Larkin 015 account on 19 January 1995 (which had originally been lodged on 5 December 1994) following Mr Ahern's request that she return these monies to him. The Tribunal rejected Mr Ahern's evidence that he had purchased Stg £30,000 cash, and therefore rejected his evidence that the said lodgement of IR£11,743.74 on 15 June 1995 had been part funded by sterling purchased, as claimed, by Mr Ahern.

2. Because Mr Ahern failed to account to the Tribunal as to the true source of the said Stg £10,000 cash element in the lodgement on 15 June 1995, the Tribunal was unable to determine its actual source.

THE LODGEMENT OF IR£19,142.92 TO A BANK ACCOUNT OF MR AHERN ON 1 DECEMBER 1995

1. This lodgement was funded entirely by Stg £20,000 in cash. The Tribunal rejected Mr Ahern's evidence that the Stg £20,000 was purchased by him (as part of the Stg£30,000 purchase referred to above). It followed therefore that the IR£19,142.92 lodgement was unrelated to the IR£50,000 which had been withdrawn in cash by Ms. Larkin from the Larkin 015 account on 19 January 1995.

2. Because Mr Ahern failed to truthfully account to the Tribunal as to the source of the sterling used to fund the IR£19,142.92 lodgement on 1 December 1995, the Tribunal was unable to pronounce as to its source.

THE IRISH PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY ACCOUNTS

1. The Tribunal rejected Mr Ahern's contention that he had no recollection of lodging or causing to be lodged, the Irish pound equivalent of Stg £15,500 in cash over a period of approximately seven months in 1994, to his own account and to those of his daughters with the Irish Permanent Building Society.

2. The Tribunal rejected Mr Ahern's explanation as to the sources of the said Stg £15,500, including his claim, that having cashed salary cheques and expenses cheques, he intermittently conveyed that cash to the UK, and there converted the proceeds into sterling cash, then bringing the sterling amounts back to Dublin and there holding the sterling cash in his safe. The Tribunal also rejected Mr Ahern's evidence that he had saved sterling towards the purchase of an investment property in Manchester.

3. Because Mr Ahern failed to truthfully account as to the true source of the Stg £15,500 cash, the Tribunal was unable to determine the source of those funds.

THE B/T ACCOUNT

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that the B/T account was opened by Mr Tim Collins in 1989 for purposes, other than the upkeep and maintenance of St. Luke's, Drumcondra. The Tribunal entirely rejected the evidence of Mr Collins, Mr Joe Burke and Mr Ahern as to the claimed purpose of this account.
2. The Tribunal rejected in its entirety the evidence of Mr Collins and Mr Burke (and the belief expressed by Mr Ahern) as to the reason and purpose for the withdrawal of IR£20,000 from the B/T account in August 1994. The Tribunal was satisfied that the purpose for which this cash sum was withdrawn in August 1994 was unconnected with any intended repair or refurbishment of St. Luke's. The true purpose of this IR£20,000 cash withdrawal remains unexplained.
3. The Tribunal was satisfied that the IR£20,000 lodged to the B/T account on 26 October 1994 (and exchanged into Irish punts from a sterling sum of £20,000) was not a refund of monies earlier withdrawn from that account. The source of the Stg £20,000 which funded this lodgement remains unexplained.
4. The Tribunal believed that Mr Ahern and Mr Collins were in a position to accurately account for the origins of substantial lodgements of IR£19,000 (being the bulk of the proceeds of an IR£20,000 cheque) and the IR£10,000 cash made to the B/T account on 25 August 1992 and 18 July 1995 respectively but did not do so.
5. The Tribunal believed that the B/T account was operated (at least until 1997) for the personal benefit of Mr Ahern and Mr Collins.

44 BERESFORD AVENUE, DRUMCONDRA

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Beresford was never beneficially owned by Mr Wall or intended to be beneficially owned by him. The property was beneficially owned by Mr Ahern between 1995 and 1997, and was legally and beneficially owned by Mr Ahern from 1997 onwards. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Ahern and Mr Wall which indicated otherwise.
2. The Tribunal was satisfied that the Will executed by Mr Wall on 6 June 1996, and which bequeathed Beresford to Mr Ahern (and in the event that Mr Ahern pre-deceased Mr Wall, to Mr Ahern's daughters) was a mechanism designed to provide Mr Ahern with a degree of asset protection in respect of the property. The Tribunal was satisfied that the Will was, in all the circumstances, evidence of Mr Ahern's beneficial ownership of the property and it believed that Mr Ahern was aware of its existence from its date of execution by Mr Wall, contrary to the position maintained by Mr Ahern in his evidence to the Tribunal.

MR TOM GILMARTIN'S ALLEGATION THAT MR OWEN O'CALLAGHAN INFORMED HIM THAT HE HAD PAID IR£80,000 (IN TOTAL) TO MR BERTIE AHERN, AND THE EVIDENCE OF MR EAMON DUNPHY.

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunphy gave his evidence honestly, and in the belief that it was true and accurate. It rejected any suggestion (to the extent that it was made) that Mr Dunphy embellished or otherwise altered his evidence to the Tribunal.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunphy, in his sworn evidence to the Tribunal, accurately described the words and terminology used by Mr O'Callaghan in discussions between the two men relating to Mr Ahern, Mr Reynolds, and the issue of the granting of tax designation for the Golden Island development in Athlone.

3. The Tribunal accepted that the inferences taken by Mr Dunphy in relation to information provided to him by Mr O'Callaghan were, as described by Mr Dunphy, honestly drawn, and were, in the Tribunal's view, reasonable inferences for him to have taken, having regard to the words spoken by Mr O'Callaghan and the context in which they were spoken.

4. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan made verbal statements to Mr Dunphy which by their ordinary meaning conveyed the following:

- That Mr Ahern had been given an inducement and was "taken care of" by Mr O'Callaghan in return for a promised favour.
- That Mr O'Callaghan gave inducements to politicians
- That Mr O'Callaghan found it necessary to engage in corrupt activity in order to successfully develop property in Dublin.

5. The fact that Mr O'Callaghan was found to have disclosed information to Mr Dunphy which, at least implied or inferred that Mr O'Callaghan had corruptly paid money to Mr Ahern was corroborative of Mr Gilmartin's allegations that Mr O'Callaghan had, likewise, disclosed information to him in which he stated or implied that he, Mr O'Callaghan, had paid money to Mr Ahern in return for favours from Mr Ahern in connection with matters associated with the Quarryvale project.

6. The Tribunal was satisfied from its consideration of the evidence of Mr Gilmartin and of Mr Dunphy, that Mr O'Callaghan was prepared to divulge, and did indeed divulge, to third parties, with whom he was at the time closely associated in the Quarryvale project (and which included the Neilstown Stadium project), information which expressly or by implication suggested that he, Mr O'Callaghan, had made corrupt payments to politicians, including Mr Ahern.

7. The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that he had been informed by Mr O'Callaghan that he had paid sums of IR£30,000 and IR£50,000 to Mr Ahern. The Tribunal also acknowledged that Mr Gilmartin did not offer this evidence to the Tribunal as proof that any such money had in fact been paid by Mr O'Callaghan or received by Mr Ahern.

8. The Tribunal accepted Mr Gilmartin's evidence that following a Barkhill board meeting in AIB, Mr O'Callaghan advised him that he had paid IR£30,000 to Mr Ahern in return for an assurance that the Blanchardstown development would not receive tax designation status. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr O'Callaghan had indeed been advised by Mr Ahern, the then Minister for Finance, at a meeting on 24 March 1994 that neither the Blanchardstown or Quarryvale developments would receive tax designation. The Tribunal also believed it to have been quite possible that Mr O'Callaghan received a similar assurance on an unknown date considerably prior to 24 March 1994, and that the reason for Mr O'Callaghan's again raising the issue with Mr Ahern on 24 March 1994 arose from a concern on his part that Mr Ray MacSharry's then imminent appointment to the board of Green Property plc (the developers of Blanchardstown) might precipitate a reversal of Mr Ahern's earlier stated position that Blanchardstown would not receive tax designation.

9. While Mr Gilmartin's evidence in relation to his allegation that Mr O'Callaghan had informed him that he, Mr O'Callaghan, had paid Mr Ahern IR£50,000 in order to ensure that the corporation owned lands in Quarryvale were not sold to Green Property plc, was considerably less specific than his evidence in relation to the alleged IR£30,000 payment, and was probably mistaken in terms of aspects of its detail because of poor recollection on Mr Gilmartin's part, the Tribunal was nevertheless satisfied that Mr Gilmartin was provided with information by Mr O'Callaghan which led him to understand that Mr O'Callaghan had indeed advised him that he had paid IR£50,000 to Mr Ahern.

ADDITIONAL FINDINGS RELATING TO THE TRIBUNAL'S INQUIRY INTO MR BERTIE AHERN'S FINANCES

1. Those findings of fact which are adverse to Mr Ahern (and on occasion to others) clearly demonstrated that important aspects of Mr Ahern's evidence (and the evidence of others) were rejected by the Tribunal. Much of the explanation provided by Mr Ahern as to the source of the substantial funds identified and inquired into in the course of the Tribunal's public hearings was deemed by the Tribunal to have been untrue.

2. The purpose of the Tribunal's inquiries into Mr Ahern's finances was to identify the sources of substantial lodgements and movements of funds into Mr Ahern's bank accounts, and other accounts associated with him, within a specific time period, and by so doing establish or exclude a connection between any of these funds, and Mr O'Callaghan, either directly or indirectly. Regrettably, the Tribunal's inquiries were rendered inconclusive for the reasons stated in the preceding paragraph. Because the Tribunal has been unable to identify the true sources of the funds in question, it could not therefore determine whether or not the payment to Mr Ahern of all or any of the funds in question were in fact made by, or initiated or arranged, directly or indirectly by Mr O'Callaghan, or by any other identifiable third party or parties.

CLLR LIAM T. COSGRAVE AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Cosgrave solicited, and was paid, IR£2,000 in May/June 1991, and that the payment was improper having regard to Cllr Cosgrave's role as a councillor.

2. The Tribunal found that Cllr Cosgrave solicited, and was paid, a sum of IR£5,000 by Mr Frank Dunlop on 11 November 1992 at Newtownpark Avenue, Blackrock, Co. Dublin in relation to his support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. The payment was corrupt.

3. In relation to the Frank Dunlop & Associates cheque payment of IR£1,000 on 12 January 1993 to Cllr Cosgrave's Seanad campaign, Cllr Cosgrave had knowledge of Mr Dunlop's role as a lobbyist in relation to zoning proposals which remained before the Council for consideration, not least of which was Quarryvale. Thus the acceptance of this payment compromised Cllr Cosgrave in the performance of his duties as a councillor, and was improper.

CLLR PAT DUNNE AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Dunne solicited, and was paid, a sum of IR£15,000 by Mr Dunlop between 16 May 1991 and 27 June 1991 in the context of his support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. The said payment was corrupt.

CLLR SEAN GILBRIDE AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Gilbride solicited, and was paid, a sum of IR£12,000 by Mr Dunlop in 1991 in the context of Cllr Gilbride's support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. The payment was corrupt.

2. In the period September 1992 to April 1993 Mr Owen O'Callaghan, directly or indirectly, paid Cllr Gilbride a total of IR£17,250. The Tribunal was satisfied that this money was paid in the context of Cllr Gilbride's support, as a councillor, for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands, and was corrupt. The Tribunal was satisfied that the disinterested performance of Cllr Gilbride's role and duty as an elected representative was entirely negated by his position as a paid employee of Mr O'Callaghan from September 1992 to April 1993. The agreement entered into between Mr O'Callaghan and Cllr Gilbride and the payments made on foot of this agreement clearly constituted corruption.

CLLR TOM HAND AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that within a period of weeks in May/June 1991, he paid Cllr Hand a total of IR£20,000 in two amounts of IR£10,000 each. The first cash payment was made when Cllr Hand signed the Quarryvale amending motion and the second cash payment was made at Cllr Hand's home following the Quarryvale 16 May 1991 vote. The Tribunal was satisfied that this money was paid in the context of Cllr Hand's support, in his capacity as a councillor, for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. The said payment was corrupt.

2. The Tribunal were satisfied that in 1992 Cllr Hand corruptly sought payment of IR£250,000 initially from Mr Dunlop and subsequently from Mr O'Callaghan, in return for his support, in his capacity as a councillor, for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. The money was not paid to Cllr Hand.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Hand received money from Mr Dunlop on 11 November 1992 in the context of for his support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. The Tribunal was unable to determine the amount paid. Such money as was paid to Cllr Hand on that occasion was corrupt.

CLLR FINBARR HANRAHAN AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied, notwithstanding Cllr Hanrahan's and Mr O'Callaghan's denials, that in the course of their "walk around the block" on 17 December 1992, Cllr Hanrahan corruptly solicited money from Mr O'Callaghan in return for his voting support for Quarryvale. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that on his return from his walk with Cllr Hanrahan, Mr O'Callaghan appeared angry. The Tribunal believed it likely that Mr O'Callaghan's anger stemmed, not from the fact that Cllr Hanrahan had made a demand for money from him, but rather because of the size of that demand.

2. The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr Dunlop, in the course of the 1992 General Election, in all probability paid Cllr Hanrahan a sum of either IR£2,000 or IR£2,500 in the circumstances, and for the reasons, outlined by Mr Dunlop. The Tribunal was satisfied that the primary purpose of the payment was an attempt by Mr Dunlop to compromise Cllr Hanrahan's disinterested performance as a councillor in the context of providing future voting support for Quarryvale. The acceptance by Cllr Hanrahan of this money from Mr Dunlop in circumstances where he knew of Mr Dunlop's role as a lobbyist in relation to rezoning matters, was improper.

CLLR COLM MCGRATH AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr McGrath solicited a payment of IR£10,000 from Mr O'Callaghan, and that Mr O'Callaghan paid that sum to Cllr McGrath in October 1991. The payment was made in the context of Cllr McGrath's support, in his capacity as a councillor, for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. The said payment was corrupt.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that a payment made in the sum of IR£1,000 in April 1992 to Tower Secretarial, a business operated by Cllr McGrath, by Frank Dunlop & Associates on behalf of Riga Ltd, and in respect of which Riga Ltd subsequently reimbursed Frank Dunlop & Associates, was not a payment for bona fide secretarial services but was in fact a corrupt payment made in the context of Cllr McGrath's support, in his capacity as a councillor, for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that a payment of IR£10,700 made by Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd, on the authority of Mr O'Callaghan (and which sum was subsequently reimbursed to Frank Dunlop & Associates Ltd) in discharge of a debt due to a third party by Cllr McGrath, was corrupt, it having been paid in the context of Cllr McGrath's support, in his capacity as a councillor, for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. This financial assistance was solicited by Cllr McGrath. This payment was not (as claimed), a loan, nor was it ever intended to be, or treated as, a loan.

4. The Tribunal was satisfied that a payment of IR£20,000 made by Mr O'Callaghan to Cllr McGrath in November 1993, which had been solicited by Cllr McGrath, was a payment made in the context of Cllr McGrath's support, in his capacity as a councillor, for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands, and was corrupt.

5. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment of IR£10,000 (to Essential Services Ltd) by Riga Ltd was not as claimed, a payment for the provision of office accommodation. The Tribunal believed that the payment, which was a fifth substantial round figure payment to Cllr McGrath from Mr O' Callaghan in the period 1991-1997, was in reality a payment made in connection with Cllr McGrath's ongoing supportive role in Quarryvale and was corrupt.

6. The Tribunal was satisfied that, as alleged by Mr Dunlop, cash donations of IR£2,000 were paid to Cllr McGrath at the time of the Local Elections in 1991 as well as during the course of the General Election campaign in 1992 totalling IR£4,000. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's contention that Cllr McGrath solicited both payments. Also, given the key role played by Cllr McGrath in the Quarryvale rezoning process from as early as February 1991 and given his role as a Quarryvale strategist Mr Dunlop's payments to Cllr McGrath were in all the circumstances corrupt.

COUNCILLOR JOHN O'HALLORAN AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr O'Halloran indicated to Mr Dunlop that he would, or would have, supported rezoning proposals being promoted by Mr Dunlop in return for money. The Tribunal was satisfied, that Cllr O'Halloran did on occasion receive small payments in the region of IR£500 each from Mr Dunlop in the course of the making of the Development Plan 1991-1993. The Tribunal could not determine which of Mr Dunlop's development projects these payments related to. The Tribunal considered these payments improper.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr O'Halloran solicited and was paid IR£5,000 in November 1993 by Mr O'Callaghan, in the context of Cllr O'Halloran's support, in his capacity as a councillor, for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. The said payment was corrupt.

3. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that Cllr O'Halloran solicited a payment from him in 1996 in the context of earlier assistance provided by him in his capacity as a councillor to, in particular, the Quarryvale rezoning project. In those circumstances, the Tribunal was satisfied that both the request for, and the receipt of the sum of IR£2,500 were corrupt, being in reality an attempt by Cllr O' Halloran to personally financially benefit from the exercise of his duties as an elected councillor.

CLLR GV WRIGHT AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop corruptly paid IR£2,000 to Cllr Wright in mid 1991 in order to ensure Cllr Wright's support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands and Cllr Wright's acceptance of the payment was improper having regard to Cllr Wright's role as a councillor.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that on 11 or 12 November 1992, Mr Dunlop and Mr O'Callaghan travelled together to Cllr Wright's Malahide constituency office, and there, each paid IR£5,000 to Cllr Wright. These payments were paid in the context of Cllr Wright's support, in his capacity as a councillor, for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands, and were corrupt.

CLLR DONAL LYDON AND QUARRYVALE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Lydon sought an election contribution from Mr Dunlop in or about May 1991 and that IR£1,000 was paid to him on a date between 16 May 1991 and 6 June 1991, in the context of Cllr Lydon's support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands. Cllr Lydon's soliciting and acceptance of a payment in the circumstances in which he did compromised the requirement on him as councillor to act in a disinterested fashion in making a Development Plan. This payment was improper.

CHAPTER THREE - THE CHERRYWOOD MODULE

THE LOBBYING OF COUNCILLORS

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that within six days of the Dublin County Council vote of 24 May 1991, Monarch began an intensive lobbying campaign of councillors to support its rezoning objectives in relation to its lands in the Carrickmines Valley. The Tribunal was satisfied that within Monarch there was a belief or perception that the support of certain councillors could be secured in exchange for financial payments, and that a decision was made by the board of Monarch Property Services Ltd (MPSL) in 1991 to make payments to councillors in advance of the June 1991 Local Elections. It began a series of payments to a number of identified candidates standing in those Local Elections, amounting to IR£23,450.

MONARCH AND MR BILL O'HERLIHY

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that a discussion did indeed take place between Mr O'Herlihy and Mr Richard Lynn (of Monarch) on 27 May 1992 in the Royal Dublin Hotel, and that Mr O'Herlihy's account of that discussion, and in particular his recollection of the information provided to him by Mr Lynn, was accurate. In particular, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lynn conveyed information to Mr O'Herlihy to the effect that Monarch had paid substantial sums to councillors in an effort to secure support for the rezoning of the Cherrywood lands, and that Mr Lynn had informed Mr O'Herlihy that Cllr Don Lydon was the lead councillor involved in this activity, on Monarch's behalf.

2. The Tribunal was conscious of Mr O'Herlihy's personal discomfort in revealing the details of a private discussion between himself and Mr Lynn, and accepted that Mr O'Herlihy imparted those details honestly and in good faith, albeit with reluctance, and with the benefit of a clear recollection of the event. The Tribunal was also satisfied that at all relevant times Mr O'Herlihy carried out his functions for Monarch in an entirely proper and professional manner.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that at the time of his discussion with Mr O'Herlihy, Mr Lynn was aware of substantial payments already having been made to identified councillors by Monarch, and he was also aware that Monarch was contemplating and planning further such payments.

MONARCH'S KNOWLEDGE OF MR DUNLOP'S INTENTION TO MAKE CORRUPT PAYMENTS TO COUNCILLORS

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop was retained by Monarch in the knowledge that, as part of his lobbying function, it was likely that he would pay money to certain councillors in return for their support. Factors which led the Tribunal to this conclusion included the following:

- (i) The nature of the financial arrangements entered into between Monarch and Mr Dunlop, particularly the manner in which a payment of IR£15,000 was made to him on 2 November 1993, and
- (ii) The culture and attitude towards rezoning which, the Tribunal was satisfied, existed within Monarch by 1993 and thereafter, as evidenced by the Tribunal's findings in relation to the Lynn / O'Herlihy issue, and, as evidenced by findings made by the Tribunal regarding substantial cash expenditure by Monarch in the years 1992 to 1996.

- (iii) The Tribunal believed it likely that Mr Lynn did indeed comment to Mr Dunlop that Monarch was making payments to elected councillors in connection with the review of the County Dublin Development Plan. Having regard to the Tribunal's finding that Mr Lynn confirmed similar activity to Mr O'Herlihy in May 1992, it was understandable that such candour would likewise have been a feature of discussions between himself and Mr Dunlop.

MONARCH'S CHEQUE PAYMENTS TO COUNCILLORS, 1991 TO 1997

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that payments made to elected and "would-be" elected councillors by Monarch were made as an important feature of a systematic, organised and concerted operation designed to ensure the greatest possible level of councillor support for its project to rezone the Cherrywood lands, and were not, as contended by Monarch, bona fide political donations to individuals standing for election as part of the democratic process. On the contrary, the system adopted by Monarch was the antithesis of democracy, and was in reality intended to corrupt councillors by way of inducement, to compromise the disinterested performance of their public duty to consider rezoning applications on their merit, and with due regard to proper planning and the common good.
2. The purpose of this financial campaign, from Monarch's perspective, was to garner support for the rezoning proposals that were underway or imminent at the time of payments, and which would be presented to councillors in the course of the review of the two Development Plans. There was a direct and identifiable association between the payments to councillors (or would-be councillors), and the pending or expected proposals to the County Council relating to the rezoning of the Cherrywood lands.
3. While the extent of lobbying of individual elected councillors by Monarch (including lobbying conducted by its agents, such as Mr Dunlop), varied from councillor to councillor, the Tribunal was satisfied that most, if not all, of the recipients of Monarch's financial largesse would have known, and probably did know, in 1991, and almost certainly knew in 1992, that it was Monarch which was funding the payments to them, and that at the same time Monarch was closely and actively associated with the proposed rezoning of a substantial portion of the lands in Carrickmines, and that accordingly, it would require and would be seeking their voting support at County Council meetings, in order to ensure its zoning objectives.

4. Many of the recipients of payments from Monarch protested that there was no link (and that there could never be any link) between the payment(s) made to them, and the exercise by them of their vote at relevant County Council meetings, and that the payments did not influence them in their voting on motions relevant to Monarch's lands. The extent to which such payments did in fact induce councillors to consider the rezoning applications (and related motions) in a manner which would or might benefit the Cherrywood lands was impossible to determine in most instances. The Tribunal was satisfied that some of the councillors who received payments from Monarch and who proceeded to exercise their votes in support of motions favourable to those lands, did so solely or primarily on the merits of the proposals, and with due regard to proper planning considerations and the common good. Notwithstanding that this may have been the case with regard to certain of the recipients of Monarch's political donations, the fact of the matter was that, viewed objectively, the acceptance of such donations by a politician from a landowner / developer who was seeking the rezoning of his lands, an aspiration which usually required the votes of individual councillors, served only to negate the required disinterested exercise by a councillor of that voting duty.

MONARCH'S CASH PAYMENTS, 1992 TO 1996

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that a significant portion of Monarch's cash expenditure of IR£162,885 in the period 1992 to 1996, consisted of secret payments to certain elected councillors as part of its campaign to secure support for its rezoning project. While the Tribunal was unable to establish the identity of such individuals, it was satisfied, as a matter of probability that such payments were indeed made. Such expenditure was almost certainly corrupt. Those persons likely to have participated in this activity, or to have known of it, within Monarch included Mr Phil Monahan, Mr Richard Lynn, Mr Dominic Glennane and Mr Eddie Sweeney.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Monarch maintained their books and records in a manner designed to conceal the true nature and identity of the ultimate recipients of these payments.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that, at all relevant times, Mr Monahan, Mr Lynn, Mr Glennane, and Mr Sweeney were parties to the deliberate concealment of the identity of the recipients of these funds in Monarch's books. In particular, the Tribunal found Mr Glennane's claimed ignorance of the purpose of these cash payments to have been unconvincing, given his role as financial director for Monarch.

4. In relation to the IR£41,885 cash payments recorded in Monarch's books between 11 October and 7 December 1993, the Tribunal rejected as completely implausible Mr Glennane's evidence that the probable purpose of these payments was to put Mr Monahan in funds to buy cars or antiques, or to have cash at Christmas time. Not a single documentary record, memorandum or otherwise to underpin Mr Glennane's belief in this regard was provided to the Tribunal.

5. Equally implausible to the Tribunal, was Mr Glennane's contention that postings to the books of MPSL were done "willy-nilly" and that any errors in such postings were corrected at year's end. There was no documentary evidence to suggest that any "error" in posting the IR£41,885 cash expenditure to the "sponsorship" or "general promotions" account was ever detected or sought to be corrected by Monarch personnel. The Tribunal was also satisfied that by posting the payments in this way in MPSL's books, Monarch recorded expenditure that had in fact been incurred by it in connection with the Cherrywood lands.

6. The Tribunal was satisfied that in all likelihood, a substantial portion of the cash obtained by Monarch from its bank accounts in 1994 (totalling IR£42,500) was paid to certain elected councillors in Dun Laoghaire / Rathdown County Council. In particular the Tribunal was satisfied that Monarch used the cash amounts obtained in June and October 1994 for making payments to certain councillors in return for their vote and support in Monarch related proposals coming before the Council.

7. In relation to the 1995 / 1996 cash withdrawals, the Tribunal was likewise satisfied that all, or a substantial proportion of this expenditure (IR£49,000 in 1995 and IR£11,500 in 1996) was incurred by Monarch in making payments to certain councillors in Dun Laoghaire / Rathdown County Council and / or other politicians.

MONARCH'S PAYMENTS TO MR FRANK DUNLOP

1. The sum of IR£85,000 was recorded in Monarch's books as the total amount paid to Mr Dunlop, of which IR£80,000 was paid between March and December 1993, with a balance of IR£5,000 being paid in August 1995. Payments made by Monarch to Mr Dunlop were miscalculated by both parties in information they provided to the Tribunal prior to the relevant oral evidence being heard in the course of the Tribunal's public hearings.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Monahan, Mr Glennane, Mr Sweeney and Mr Lynn knew of the primary purpose of Mr Dunlop's engagement (that is, the lobbying of County councillors and making corrupt payments in order to ensure their support for motions promoting the rezoning of the Monarch lands in Cherrywood). The Tribunal was satisfied that the IR£85,000 paid to Mr Dunlop in the period from 1993 to 1995 had the dual objective of, firstly, remunerating and rewarding him for his efforts in promoting the Cherrywood project, and, secondly, providing him with funds for disbursement to councillors in the course of the Cherrywood project, in order to ensure their support for that project.

MONARCH AND MR LIAM LAWLOR

1. The Tribunal was satisfied, that from Monarch's perspective, Mr Liam Lawlor was remunerated in October 1990 for services already provided by him in relation to Monarch's Tallaght development, and in contemplation of future services that he might provide in respect of ongoing developments, including Cherrywood. For reasons better known to Monarch, and which no Monarch witness has shared with the Tribunal, Monarch went to considerable efforts in its books to conceal the nature of the services provided by Mr Lawlor, when it used the term "strategy plan". Mr Glennane suggested that the term may have been taken from Mr Lawlor's invoice.

2. The Tribunal believed that there was no justification for the payment by Monarch, or the acceptance by Mr Lawlor, of a sum of IR£56,300 in 1990 in circumstances where the Tribunal was satisfied, both Monarch and Mr Lawlor knew that Dublin County Council (of which Mr Lawlor was an elected member in October 1990) had embarked on its consideration of rezoning proposals for the Carrickmines valley. The timing of the two payments of IR£28,000 and IR£28,300 (comprising the total of IR£56,300), coupled with their designation in Monarch's books and records under the heading "Professional and Consultant Fees" as "strategy plan" (a term akin to that used by Monarch in 1992 to describe payments it had made to local Election candidates in 1991), led the Tribunal to conclude that the payments were, in part at least, connected to Mr Lawlor's role as a member of Dublin County Council. In all the circumstances, these payments were corrupt.

3. Mr Lawlor was paid IR£10,000 by Monarch between November and December 1993. While Mr Lawlor was not a councillor at that time, the Tribunal was nevertheless satisfied that in the run up to the November 1993 Cherrywood votes in Dublin County Council, Monarch perceived Mr Lawlor as a person with influence over certain Fianna Fáil councillors within the Council. Consequently the Tribunal concluded that the payments made to Mr Lawlor in November / December 1993 were likely to have been made in this context.

4. Although Mr Lawlor dealt mostly with Mr Phil Monahan in connection with Monarch related matters, Messrs Glennane, Sweeney and Lynn were at all times fully aware of Mr Lawlor's involvement with Monarch, and were probably aware of the extent of the payments made to him in the period 1990 to 1996.

5. The Tribunal was satisfied from documentation it examined, that between October 1990 and 1996, Mr Lawlor received payments amounting to at least IR£72,800 from Monarch. Save in the case of three of these payments (IR£3,000 paid in 1994, IR£2,500 paid in 1995 and IR£1,000 paid in 1996) and a further IR£3,000 identified as being to Hazel Lawlor, Monarch's books and records did not identify Mr Lawlor as the recipient of the payments.

CLLR TONY FOX AND CHERRYWOOD

1. The Tribunal rejected Cllr Fox's evidence that he was unaware that Mr Dunlop had been retained by Monarch. The Tribunal was satisfied to accept Mr Dunlop's evidence that he had lobbied Cllr Fox in relation to Cherrywood, and it preferred Mr Dunlop's evidence that the question of money arose in the course of such lobbying endeavours. The Tribunal was assisted in reaching this conclusion by Mr Dunlop's clear recollection of Cllr Fox's reference to Monarch as being "mean".

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop did in fact pay IR£2,000 in cash to Cllr Fox shortly after the Dublin County Council vote on the 11 November 1993, that he did so at Cllr Fox's request and that the payment was corrupt.

3. Cllr Fox received cheque payments of IR£600 on the 5 June 1991 and IR£1,000 on the 29 January 1993, from Monarch. The Tribunal was satisfied that these payments were made to Cllr Fox to ensure his support for Monarch's rezoning plans for their lands in Cherrywood.

4. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Fox probably solicited the payment of IR£1,000 from Monarch made in late January 1993, although he had not been a candidate in either the November 1992 General Election or the subsequent Seanad Election. His probable soliciting of the IR£1,000 payment in late 1992 arose in circumstances where some six months previously, he had done Monarch's bidding by lodging a motion, the objective of which was to enhance Monarch's chances of having a greater portion of its lands rezoned.

5. Cllr Fox's receipt and acceptance of a payment of IR£1,000 on 29 January 1993, was improper having regard to his knowledge of Monarch's interests in the Cherrywood lands, and the fact that, in his capacity as an elected councillor, he would be called upon to exercise his duty and power to vote on rezoning related motions associated with the Cherrywood lands.

6. The Tribunal was satisfied that the true purpose of these two payments to Cllr Fox from Monarch was to copper-fasten Cllr Fox's support for its project to rezone its lands at Cherrywood. These payments were intended to compromise the disinterested performance by Cllr Fox of his duty as a councillor and were made corruptly by Monarch.

CLLR COLM MCGRATH AND CHERRYWOOD

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop did pay Cllr McGrath a sum of IR£2,000 in cash after the Special Meeting of Dublin County Council on the 11 November 1993, and that he did so in response to a request for payment by Cllr McGrath. This payment was solicited and paid in the context of the provision of support by Cllr McGrath for the rezoning of the Cherrywood lands. This payment was corrupt.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that on those occasions when Cllr McGrath received cheque payments from Monarch of IR£600 on the 5 June 1991 and IR£500 on the 17 November 1992, he was aware of Monarch's interest in the Cherrywood lands, and of the fact that those lands were the subject of rezoning proposals, and that motions to facilitate that end would come before the County Council of which he, Cllr McGrath, was a member, and that he would be called upon to exercise his vote in relation to such proposals. Until January 1994, Cllr McGrath was in a position, by virtue of the casting of his vote, to assist Monarch in its rezoning ambitions for the rezoning of the Cherrywood lands. Thus, his acceptance of payments, and the possibility of he having solicited the payments made to him in 1991 and 1992, compromised him in the required disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor in the making of a Development Plan.

3. While Monarch maintained that the payments it made to Cllr McGrath and in particular the payments of IR£600 and IR£500 (in 1991 and 1992 respectively) were bona fide political contributions, the Tribunal was satisfied that this was not the case. The Tribunal believed that the purpose of these payments was to ensure and copper-fasten Cllr McGrath's support for Monarch's project to rezone its Cherrywood lands and that accordingly Monarch's purpose in making these payments was corrupt.

CLLR TOM HAND AND CHERRYWOOD

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Hand knew, both on the occasion in 1991 when he was paid IR£5,000 and the occasion in 1992 when he was paid IR£1,000 by Monarch, that Monarch had an interest in lands which were the subject of rezoning proposals which had come, or were likely to come, before the County Council of which he, Cllr Hand was a member, and that he would be called upon to vote on those proposals. The acceptance by Cllr Hand of sums of IR£5,000 and IR£1,000 in 1991 and 1992 respectively, compromised the requirement that he discharge his duties as an elected representative in a disinterested manner. The scale of the payment made by Monarch to Cllr Hand in 1991 can only be regarded as having been extraordinarily large, particularly when compared to the amounts other local election candidates received from Monarch. While the Tribunal has rejected Mr Lynn's evidence that the provision of IR£5,000 to Cllr Hand was intended for disbursement among local Fine Gael election candidates (including Cllr Hand himself), it was satisfied, given the general thrust of Mr Lynn's evidence, that a discussion took place between them prior to the provision of the IR£5,000. It was therefore probable that Cllr Hand sought this amount of money and that his request was readily acceded to by Monarch. The Tribunal was also satisfied that when seeking such a large payment, Cllr Hand was aware of Monarch's rezoning ambitions for its lands.

2. Although the Tribunal did not identify evidence sufficient to link the payments to Cllr Hand totalling IR£6,000 specifically to any particular agreement by him to support County Council motions relating to Cherrywood, it was satisfied that Monarch, in making these payments to Cllr Hand in 1991 / 1992, and Cllr Hand in receiving these payments, did so expressly or by implication on the understanding that Cllr Hand would provide that support. As such, the payments were corrupt.

CLLR G.V. WRIGHT AND CHERRYWOOD

1. The acceptance by Cllr Wright of sums totalling IR£3,300 from Monarch between 1991 and 1992 compromised the required disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor in the making of the Development Plan, particularly in circumstances where, from at the latest May 1992 he was in no doubt about Monarch's rezoning ambitions for its lands. IR£3,000 of the IR£3,300 was paid after this date.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Monarch's payments to Cllr Wright totalling IR£3,300 within an eighteen month period were not bona fide political contributions, particularly having regard to the substantial total sum involved. On the contrary, the payments were part of a systematic financial assault by Monarch on elected councillors/candidates designed to secure support and favouritism in respect of proposals coming before the Council seeking the rezoning of Monarch's lands in Cherrywood, are proposals which, if successful, would facilitate the rezoning of its lands. As such, the making of these payments was corrupt.

CLLR DON LYDON AND CHERRYWOOD

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Lydon was considered by Monarch to have been an important councillor, particularly in 1992/1993, in the context of its proposals to rezone their lands at Cherrywood, and that he facilitated Monarch at crucial stages within that period and when requested to do so by Monarch.

2. The receipt by Cllr Lydon of sums totalling IR£3,100 (whether or not they were solicited by him) within an eighteen month period in 1991 / 1992, and in circumstances where he knew that lands in which Monarch had an interest were to be the subject of proposals coming before Dublin County Council seeking the rezoning of those lands for development, and in respect of which Cllr Lydon would be called upon to exercise his vote, compromised the requirement incumbent on Cllr Lydon that he exercise his functions as an elected representative in a disinterested fashion. The acceptance by him of a sum of IR£2,500 in December 1992, in the wake of the role he played as an active promoter of Monarch's interests within the County Council (by virtue of his actions in May 1992 in both signing and promoting motions supportive of Monarch), emphasised the extent of Cllr Lydon's abuse of his role and duty as an elected representative in the course of the review of the Development Plan.

3. The Tribunal rejected Monarch's contention that the payments of IR£600 in June 1991 and IR£2,500 in December 1992 were bona fide political contributions, whether or not one or both had been solicited. Monarch's primary purpose in making the payments was to ensure Cllr Lydon's support for its proposals relating to the Cherrywood lands and to ensure that he would do their bidding in that regard. As such, the said payments were made corruptly.

MR RICHARD LYNN

1. The Tribunal was satisfied, that in the course of his extensive lobbying activities, that Mr Lynn tapped into the very considerable financial resources made available to him by Monarch and used them to influence many of the elected councillors to promote and support Monarch's ambition to rezone as much of its land bank at Cherrywood as was possible. The emphasis was on residential development, and increasing the density of housing to the greatest possible extent.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lynn masterminded the Monarch strategy of making generous payments of money to large numbers of councillors at election time for the purposes of ensuring their support for the Monarch project to rezone its Cherrywood lands. Moreover, the Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lynn was instrumental in the disbursement of cash payments to certain unidentified councillors, which were funded from the substantial cash withdrawals made from accounts associated with Monarch in the years 1992 to 1996, while Monarch's campaign to rezone its lands was ongoing and was part of Monarch's corrupt campaign to bestow councillors with generous cash payments either on the basis of their express agreement to support that campaign within the County Council, or in the expectation that they would do so. Such payments were a cynical and corrupt attempt to compromise the required disinterested performance of the duties of elected representatives.

3. The Tribunal considered that this blatant use of money constituted, in reality, an abuse of the democratic system in that it facilitated Monarch in its bid to influence the voting patterns of elected councillors while exercising their public duty to make decisions in the course of the review of the Dublin County Development Plan. More particularly, the Tribunal considered that it was a means of influencing or persuading significant numbers of elected councillors to support rezoning proposals favouring the Cherrywood lands, and, in consequence, enormously increase their market value.

CLLR SEAN BARRETT

1. The Tribunal accepted Mr Michael Smyth's evidence that in the course of a heated exchange of words with Mr Monahan in 1992, Mr Monahan made serious allegations against Cllr Barrett to the effect that Monarch had paid, or was paying, money to Cllr Barrett to ensure that Fine Gael councillors supported the Monarch proposals to develop the Cherrywood lands, and that Mr Monahan had favoured Cllr Barrett with his bloodstock insurance business for the same reason.

2. The Tribunal was however satisfied that neither of these allegations was true and that Mr Monahan's motivation in making them was to goad Mr Smyth.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Barrett at the material time was a genuine opponent of Monarch's proposals to develop the Cherrywood lands and that he did not seek to persuade or influence his fellow Fine Gael councillors to support those proposals in any way.

CHAPTER FOUR - THE BALLYCULLEN / BEECHILL MODULE

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN MR FRANK DUNLOP AND MR CHRISTOPHER JONES SNR AND MR DERRY HUSSEY

1. Mr Christopher Jones Snr, at the time of Mr Dunlop's retention as a lobbyist in relation to the attempts to rezone the lands at Ballycullen and Beechill, had an awareness of the need for and intention on the part of Mr Dunlop to make payments to councillors in order to ensure support for the rezoning of the Ballycullen and Beechill lands.
2. The Tribunal accepted that Mr Hussey did not possess a similar degree of knowledge/awareness of Mr Dunlop's actual or intended practice of paying councillors to that of his business colleague, Mr Jones.
3. Although Mr Dunlop expressed his belief to be that both Mr Jones and Mr Hussey were aware of the perceived need to pay particular councillors in order to secure their support for rezoning proposals and of both having acquiesced when he stated that the "ways of the world" would have to apply, the Tribunal was satisfied that only Mr Jones had a full awareness of this perceived need.
4. The Tribunal was not satisfied on the balance of probability that Mr Hussey possessed the degree of knowledge and awareness of Mr Dunlop's actual or intended practice of paying councillors to support the rezoning of land, which Mr Dunlop suggested he had.

CLLR DON LYDON AND BALLYCULLEN / BEECHILL

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payments made to Cllr Lydon by Mr Christopher Jones Snr., amounting to IR£9,000, over a 20 month period in 1992/1993 were inextricably linked to Cllr Lydon's support for, in particular, the rezoning of the Ballycullen lands. The Tribunal was satisfied that these payments were, in reality, solicited by Cllr Lydon at a time when Mr Jones was engaged in a process which required councillors to exercise their vote in relation to specific motions relating to lands in which Mr Jones had an interest. The Tribunal was satisfied that the three payments totalling IR£9,000 were solicited and paid in connection with the rezoning of the Ballycullen lands, and were intended to influence, by inducement, the disinterested performance by Cllr Lydon of his public duties as an elected councillor. The said payments were corrupt.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid Cllr Lydon IR£2,000 in return for Cllr Lydon's support for the rezoning of the Ballycullen / Beechill lands. The said payment constituted an inducement intended to compromise the disinterested performance of public duties on Cllr Lydon's part, and was corrupt.

3. In total, Cllr Lydon received corrupt payments of IR£11,000 in connection with his support for the rezoning of the Ballycullen / Beechill lands in 1992 / 1993.

CLLR GV WRIGHT AND BALLYCULLEN/BEECHILL

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that the primary motivation in Mr Christopher Jones IR£5,000 payment to Cllr Wright in November 1992 was not a desire to assist him in relation to his political expenses associated with the General Election at that time, but was in fact paid in recognition of the support previously given by Cllr Wright to Mr Jones in relation to the Ballycullen/Beechill lands rezoning projects, and for the purposes of ensuring Cllr Wright's support in the confirmation vote in the following year in relation to the Ballycullen lands, and also to ensure that Cllr Wright would exert influence on his Fianna Fail councillors colleagues to support that rezoning project. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment was an attempt to influence by inducement, Cllr Wright's disinterested performance of his public duties. The payment was corrupt.

CLLR TOM HAND AND BALLYCULLEN / BEECHILL

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Hand corruptly sought two payments of IR£1,000 each from Mr Derry Hussey/Beechill Properties Limited, through Mr Frank Dunlop. Cllr Hand solicited these payments on the basis of his past support for the rezoning of the Beechill lands. Payment of the first IR£1,000 was authorised by Mr Hussey, while the payment of the second IR£1,000, having been refused by Mr Hussey, was subsequently paid by Mr Jones from his personal bank account through Mr Dunlop. The cheque was probably made out to cash.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid IR£2,000 in cash to Cllr Hand at Cllr Hand's request in return for his signature on two motions which came before Dublin County Council on 16 and 29 October 1992, relating to the Beechill and Ballycullen lands respectively. This payment was a corrupt payment.

CLLR TONY FOX AND BALLYCULLEN / BEECHILL

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Fox was paid IR£1,000 by Mr Dunlop in 1992 in return for his support for the rezoning of the Ballycullen lands. This payment was corrupt.

CLLR COLM MCGRATH AND BALLYCULLEN / BEECHILL

1. The Tribunal believed it likely that Cllr McGrath received a payment of IR£1,000 from Mr Dunlop sometime in October / November 1992. The Tribunal found that this payment was corrupt.

CLLR SEAN GILBRIDE AND BALLYCULLEN / BEECHILL

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid Cllr Gilbride IR£1,000 in return for his support for the rezoning of the Ballycullen/Beechill lands, and that the payment was solicited by Cllr Gilbride. This payment was corrupt.

CLLR LIAM T. COSGRAVE AND BALLYCULLEN/BEECHILL

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that a sum of IR£1,000 was paid by Mr Dunlop to Cllr Cosgrave and that this was paid in connection with the Ballycullen / Beechill rezoning project, and more specifically Cllr Cosgrave's support for it. The payment was corrupt.

MR LIAM LAWLOR AND BALLYCULLEN/BEECHILL

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that the primary reason for four payments to Mr Lawlor amounting to IR£17,500 in 1991/1992 was in recognition of Mr Lawlor's role as an advisor to Mr Christopher Jones. None of the four payments to Mr Lawlor amounting to IR£17,500 bore the hallmarks of legitimate political donations as they were claimed to have been.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that the said payments were made by Mr Jones to Mr Lawlor on account of Mr Lawlor's position, at all material times, as a public representative (including an elected councillor at the time of the first payment). In that capacity, Mr Lawlor was in a position to exercise his vote and to influence fellow councillors up to June 1991 and continued thereafter to be in a position to exercise influence over councillors in his capacity as a TD. These payments were corrupt.

CLLR PAT RABBITTE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Frank Dunlop paid Cllr Rabbitte IR£2,000 in Cllr Rabbitte's home in 1992 at the time of the 1992 General Election. The Tribunal was satisfied that shortly thereafter the said donation was returned by way of cheque from the Democratic Left Party, because of an appreciation on the part of Cllr Rabbitte and his Democratic Left colleagues of the inappropriateness of retaining the money in circumstances where they were aware of Mr Dunlop's active involvement as a lobbyist for landowners engaged in pursuing land rezoning. This decision was both commendable and correct.

CHAPTER FIVE - THE PYE LANDS MODULE

MR AIDAN KELLY

1. The Tribunal accepted as essentially accurate the evidence of Mr Aidan Kelly in relation to his meeting with an unidentified County Council official and of the request by that individual for money in 1988. This request was corrupt. The Tribunal was also satisfied that Mr Kelly communicated the allegation to Mr Al Smith, a senior County Council official, albeit in a vague and unspecific manner.

2. The Tribunal did not accept that there was a common intention between Mr Dunlop and Mr Kelly that Mr Dunlop's assignment to lobby Cllrs Hand and Lydon would involve the payment of money to these councillors.

3. There was no evidence to suggest that Mr Kelly paid money or attempted to pay money to any elected councillor in relation to the Pye lands rezoning project. Indeed, there was evidence from Mr Kelly that he had himself rejected one explicit demand for money, and another implicit request, in the past. Both requests were planning related.

MR GEORGE REDMOND AND MR AIDAN KELLY

1. The Tribunal rejected Mr George Redmond's contention that he had no memory of any contact or meetings in 1988 relating to the Pye lands, and believed it probable that Mr Redmond withheld information from the Tribunal on the subject of such contact or meetings.

2. The Tribunal believed it likely that Mr George Redmond's admonishment to Mr Aidan Kelly for bringing a third party to a meeting arranged with Mr Redmond in February 1988 was, as suggested by Mr Kelly, linked to the fact that Mr Kelly had not attended the meeting alone, and that it was reasonable for Mr Kelly to infer (having regard to his previous experiences) that the motivation for such a request was to facilitate a demand for payment by Mr Redmond.

CLLR. TOM HAND AND PYE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied, having regard to the evidence given by Cllr Donal Marren, that from his exchanges with Cllr Hand in the 1991/1992 period relating to the Pye lands, Cllr Marren understood Cllr Hand to have linked such support as Cllr Marren might give for the rezoning of the lands to the prospect of financial reward for Cllr Marren. (There was no finding that Cllr Marren sought, or received money in relation to the Pye lands.)

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that following “negotiation” between Mr Dunlop and Cllr Hand, Mr Dunlop paid Cllr Hand IR£2,000 in cash in return for Cllr Hand’s continued support for the rezoning of the Pye lands. The purpose of the payment was to compromise Cllr Hand in the disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor. The said payment was corrupt.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that as of September/October 1992, Mr Dunlop had an established relationship with Cllr Hand, and had dealings with him in relation to the rezoning of the Ballycullen/Beechill lands at this time. Moreover, on 6 October 1992, Cllr Hand had made a demand for IR£250,000 in the presence of Mr Dunlop and Mr O’Callaghan in return for his support for the rezoning of Quarryvale, and had prior to that date, provided Mr Dunlop with the number of a bank account in Australia into which the money demanded was to be deposited. While the Tribunal accepted that Cllr Hand’s demand for payment of a sum of IR£250,000 was not acceded to, what had taken place prior to, and on 6 October 1992 in this regard, rendered entirely credible Mr Dunlop’s evidence that Cllr Hand had indeed requested money in return for his continuing support for the rezoning of lands, including the Pye lands. In all of those circumstances, the Tribunal was satisfied to accept Mr Dunlop’s testimony that in the course of his approach to Cllr Hand, pursuant to the basis on which he, Mr Dunlop, was retained, namely on the basis to ensure Cllr Hand’s continuing support for the rezoning of the Pye lands, Mr Dunlop was requested by Cllr Hand for money, a request duly acceded to by him.

CLLR DONAL LYDON AND PYE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Donal Lydon was paid IR£1,000 in cash by Mr Dunlop, and that Cllr Lydon solicited the payment in return for his continued support for the rezoning of the Pye lands. The purpose of the payment was to compromise Cllr Lydon in the disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor. The said payment was corrupt.

CLLR. TONY FOX AND PYE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Tony Fox solicited from Mr Dunlop, and was paid, the sum of IR£1,000 in cash in return for his continued support for the rezoning of the Pye lands, and that the purpose of the payment was to compromise Cllr Fox in the disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor. The said payment was corrupt.

CHAPTER SIX - THE LISSENHALL MODULE

MR DUNLOP'S RETENTION AS A LOBBYIST

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's practice of making payments to councillors to support rezoning projects was known to those who met with him in November 1992 at the time of his retention as a lobbyist in relation to the Lissenhall lands, namely Mr Tim Collins, Mr Michael Hughes and Mr Colm Moran. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence of what occurred at the November meeting and concluded that Messrs. Hughes, Collins and Colm Moran acquiesced in the contemplated corrupt activity on the part of Mr Dunlop in relation to the lobbying he was to undertake to secure the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that the primary purpose and motivation for the initial payment of IR£12,500 to Mr Dunlop personally, rather than to his company, and in the absence of an invoice and provision for VAT, was designed to facilitate easily accessible funds for the purpose of making payments to councillors in order to secure their support in the planning process.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that both Mr Hughes and Mr Colm Moran knew at all relevant times that the manner by which Mr Dunlop was to be paid IR£12,500 in January 1993 followed upon the understanding which had been articulated at the meeting in November 1992, that he would require funds for payments to councillors.

CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER AND LISSENHALL

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Gallagher received a sum of IR£1,000 from Mr Dunlop in or about 18 March 1993, in return for his signature on, and his support for, the motion lodged with Dublin County Council on 18 March 1993, which was the subject of a successful vote in Dublin County Council on 21 March 1993. This payment was a corrupt payment.

CLLR TONY FOX AND LISSENHALL

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Fox in return for his support for the rezoning of the Lissenhall lands, and that this was paid in the circumstances as indicated by Mr Dunlop in the course of his evidence, and was corrupt.

CLLR ANN DEVITT AND LISSENHALL

1. The Tribunal took the view that the actions of Cllr Devitt in acting as a consultant to Rayband Ltd, with the promise of payment, and her acceptance of a payment of IR20,000, were entirely inappropriate, having regard to the positions she then held both as an elected councillor in Fingal County Council, and as chairperson of the northern area of the Eastern Health Board.

CHAPTER SEVEN - THE CARGOBRIDGE MODULE

MR MICHAEL MCGUINNESS

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that letters written by or on the instruction of Mr McGuinness to the Minister for Transport, and to Dublin County Council dated 12 and 13 March 1992, were written in an attempt to stop rumours circulating at the time concerning the involvement of Celtic Helicopters and/or Mr Haughey and/or Mr Barnicle in the Cargobridge consortium. The rumours had the potential to damage the consortium's efforts to obtain planning permission and/or rezoning and an upgraded right of way for its lands.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that in paying IR£10,000 cash to Mr Dunlop, Mr McGuinness anticipated that Mr Dunlop might pay councillors in the course of his lobbying and / or counter lobbying activity. Given that Mr Dunlop stated in evidence that the possible payment of councillors was raised by Mr McGuinness, the Tribunal believed that Mr McGuinness was aware, from whatever source, that Mr Dunlop engaged in the practice of making corrupt payments to councillors. The Tribunal was therefore satisfied that Mr McGuinness' payment of IR£10,000 to Mr Dunlop was made, in part at least, for corrupt purposes.

MR CIARAN HAUGHEY AND MR JOHN BARNICLE

1. Abervanta Ltd sold its interest in the consortium in 1994 realising a gain after the repayment of interest of IR£164,000. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Messrs. Haughey and Barnicle to the effect that, they believed, when initially giving sworn evidence to the Tribunal on 3 October 2006, that they each had received only IR£10,000 from the proceeds of the sale of Abervanta Ltd's interest in the Cargobridge lands, and that they had forgotten or were otherwise unaware of the disbursement details of the great bulk of those funds. The Tribunal was satisfied that this evidence was given with the full knowledge that it was false, and that it was given for the purpose of concealing from the Tribunal the fact that Mr Haughey and Mr Barnicle had received between them, directly or indirectly, approximately IR£164,000 in total of those proceeds. Their false and misleading information necessitated their recall to give additional evidence to the Tribunal in relation to the disbursal of the proceeds of sale.

CLLR TONY FOX AND CARGOBRIDGE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid IR£1,000 in cash to Cllr Fox in return for his support for the Cargobridge lands rezoning, and that Cllr Fox solicited the payment. This payment was intended to ensure that Cllr Fox would act otherwise than in the disinterested performance of his public duties as a councillor. This payment was corrupt.

CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER AND CARGOBRIDGE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid IR£1,000 in cash to Cllr Gallagher in return for his support for the Cargobridge lands rezoning, and that Cllr Gallagher solicited the payment. This payment was intended to ensure that Cllr Gallagher would act otherwise than in the disinterested performance of his public duties as a councillor. This payment was corrupt.

CLLRS COLM MCGRATH AND DONAL LYDON AND CARGOBRIDGE

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop erroneously identified councillors McGrath and Lydon as recipients of money in relation to the Cargobridge lands, in the course of his private interview with members of the Tribunal's legal team on 18 May 2000.

CLLR ANN DEVITT AND CARGOBRIDGE

1. The Tribunal was of the view that Cllr Devitt's actions in taking on a role in the Cargobridge planning application process between 1994 and 1997, together with the agreement she reached with Mr Michel McGuinness that she would be paid for her role, compromised the requirement on her as an elected representative to perform her duties in a disinterested manner. In effect, Cllr

Devitt, a local councillor, in anticipation or expectation of reward, assisted the Cargobridge Consortium in its ultimately successful planning application. The Tribunal took the view that Cllr Devitt's actions, in agreeing to act for financial reward, for the advancement of matters, the outcome of which rested in the decision making powers of the Council of which she was a member, were entirely inappropriate.

2. The Tribunal believed that Cllr Devitt permitted herself to become engaged in the Cargobridge project in circumstances where there was a clear conflict of interest with her role and her duty as a councillor. This conflict arose by her intermingling two clearly separate and distinct aspects of her work; that of a councillor on the one hand, and that of a lawyer/advisor on the other.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied as a matter of probability that Mr McGuinness' motivation in engaging Cllr Devitt's services related to her role as a councillor, and the positive influence which she would bring to bear in that capacity on his interests in relation to the Cargobridge.

CHAPTER EIGHT - THE CLOGHRAN MODULE

MESSRS. JOHN BUTLER, NIAL KENNY, TOM WILLIAMS AND TIM COLLINS

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that, in the course of their first meeting, Mr Butler and Mr Collins indicated to Mr Dunlop their awareness that payments by him might be required to obtain the support of certain unnamed councillors. It was satisfied to accept that the words attributed by Mr Dunlop to Mr Collins and Mr Butler were so stated on 13 January 1993, and that the words led Mr Dunlop to conclude that both men were au fait with Mr Dunlop's "system", and that all three left the meeting on 13 January 1993 in the knowledge that Mr Dunlop might well engage in corrupt activity in the course of his retention as a lobbyist for the rezoning of the Cloghran lands.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that neither Mr Michael Kenny nor Mr Tom Williams were privy to the fact that at the time of his retention as a lobbyist for the rezoning of the Cloghran lands, Mr Dunlop contemplated making corrupt payments to councillors to ensure their support for that rezoning.

CLLR GV WRIGHT AND CLOGHRAN

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Wright solicited a payment of IR£1,000 from Mr Dunlop in return for his support of the rezoning of the Cloghran lands, including his signature on the rezoning motion which was passed by Dublin County Council on 1 April 1993. The Tribunal believed that this payment was also intended to provide for Cllr Wright's future support for relevant motions, up to and including the confirmation motion in relation to the Cloghran lands in October 1993. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Wright, in these circumstances, did not perform his duties as a councillor in a disinterested fashion, as he was required to do. It was satisfied that the payment of IR£1,000 was corrupt.

CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER AND CLOGHRAN

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid Cllr Gallagher a sum of IR£1,000 between 10 and 12 March 1993, in return for his signature on the Cloghran rezoning motion, and also for his support for the rezoning process thereafter. This payment, the Tribunal believed, constituted an inducement to Cllr Gallagher to perform his duty as a councillor otherwise than in a disinterested fashion, and was corrupt.

CLLR TONY FOX AND CLOGHRAN

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop lobbied Cllr Fox in relation to the Cloghran lands, particularly in the period leading up to the confirmation process in late September/early October 1993, and that in the course of that process, Cllr Fox solicited a payment of money from Mr Dunlop in return for his support, and, that Mr Dunlop duly paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Fox in or about this time. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment represented an inducement to Cllr Fox to ensure that he would act other than in the disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor. The said payment was corrupt.

CHAPTER NINE - THE BALDOYLE PENNINE MODULE

THE INTERESTS OF MR BRENDAN HICKEY, MR DAVID SHUBOTHAM AND MR FRANK DUNLOP IN AN OPTION RELATING TO THE BALDOYLE LANDS

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Brendan Hickey (a property developer), Mr David Shubotham (a stockbroker in Davy Stockbrokers) held a beneficial interest in an option (the "Pennine Option") to purchase up to 250 acres of approximately 400 acres of land (the "Baldoyle Lands") during the period from 4 November 1991 to 25 January 1996 from Mr John Byrne. In arriving at this conclusion the Tribunal rejected the evidence of Messrs Hickey and Shubotham that in this period neither they nor Davy Hickey Properties Ltd, the corporate vehicle used by them (and others) to invest in and develop property, had any beneficial interest in the Pennine Option.

2. The Tribunal rejected Mr Dunlop's claim that he had no beneficial interest in the Pennine option between January 1991 and May 1993. Notwithstanding the absence of evidence of any concluded partnership arrangement or agreement, the Tribunal was satisfied that he had, in that period, an arrangement, whether formalised or otherwise, whereby it was understood that he had a beneficial ownership in the Pennine option.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Lawlor had the original idea of the Pennine Option and that he brought Mr Byrne, Mr Dunlop, Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham together. While there was no documentary or oral evidence before the Tribunal that Mr Lawlor would have been entitled to any benefit which might have accrued had the Pennine option lands been rezoned and the option exercised, the Tribunal could not rule out the possibility that had this occurred under the stewardship of Messrs Hickey, Shubotham and Dunlop, Mr Lawlor, would, in some shape or form, have received recompense from the assistance he rendered.

4. The Tribunal was satisfied that in the period January 1991 to May 1993 there was ongoing and significant involvement on the part of Messrs Hickey and Shubotham in the attempt to rezone the Pennine Option lands. Mr Byrne, who did not give evidence to the Tribunal because of ill health, involved himself in the rezoning process and to this end liaised with Mr Hickey, Mr Dunlop, Mr Lawlor and with his own solicitor on an ongoing basis.

5. The Tribunal was satisfied that Messrs Hickey and Shubotham, in the course of their evidence, went to considerable lengths to distance themselves from the Baldoyle rezoning project. The Tribunal believed they did so in order to distance themselves from actions in respect of which Mr Dunlop had appraised the Tribunal, and had testified to, namely, his contention that he made payments to a number of councillors in connection with the Baldoyle rezoning project. Moreover, the Tribunal concluded that the cut off point testified to by Mr Hickey and Mr Shubotham (namely, October/November 1992) as the date of cessation of their involvement in the Option lands and their rezoning was in no small way connected to their resolve to distance themselves from payments that were made to Shefran (Mr Dunlop's company) in the period June 1991 and March 1993 totalling IR£62,500.

PAYMENTS MADE TO MR DUNLOP THROUGH SHEFRAN.

1. The following five round figure sums totalling IR£62,500 were received by Shefran in the period 1991 to 1993 from Davy Hickey Properties and or entities or individuals associated with that company including the Eastview Partnership account and from companies associated with Citywest;

- (i) IR£20,000 on 6 June 1991 from Newlands Industrial Park Ltd
- (ii) IR£10,000 on 6 January 1992 drawn on an Eastview Partnership bank account
- (iii) IR£2,500 on 6 August 1992 drawn on Newlands Industrial Park Ltd
- (iv) IR£10,000 on 11 November 1992 drawn on Newlands Industrial Park Ltd, and
- (v) IR£20,000 in March 1993 drawn on the account of Mr Shubotham.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that the primary reason for the provision of IR£20,000 on 6 June 1991 was to enable Mr Dunlop make payments to councillors to court their support for the Baldoyle rezoning project which Mr Dunlop knew he would in due course be promoting in the course of the review of the County Dublin Development Plan. The Tribunal was satisfied that he added this IR£20,000 to his confluence of funds from which he made payments to councillors over the course of the May /June 1991 Local Election campaign.

3. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment of IR£10,000 on 6 January 1992 was intended to enable Mr Dunlop to have access to funds, in the course of the ongoing review of the Dublin County Development Plan, from which he could make payments to councillors, in the event of requests by councillors of him for the payment of money.

4. The Tribunal was satisfied that a payment of IR£2,500 to Shefran on 6 August 1992 was a payment to Mr Dunlop to be expended by him in connection with the Baldoyle rezoning project.

5. The Tribunal was satisfied that a payment of IR£10,000 made to Shefran on 11 November 1992 was to provide funds to Mr Dunlop from which he could make payments to councillors/politicians during the course of the 1992 General Election campaign. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop's purpose in seeking the money and Mr Hickey's purpose in providing it was in the context of Mr Dunlop' lobbying endeavours for the Baldoyle Option lands.

6. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment of IR£20,000 in March 1993 was made in order to provide funds to Mr Dunlop from which payments to councillors could be made in relation to the Baldoyle rezoning project. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Shubotham that this payment related to work done by Mr Dunlop for Citywest.

7. The Tribunal was satisfied that all of the above payments were corrupt.

CLLR LIAM T. COSGRAVE AND THE BALDOYLE LANDS

1. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Dunlop that he paid IR£1,000 in cash to Cllr Cosgrave in relation to the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands.

CLLR JACK LARKIN AND THE BALDOYLE LANDS

1. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Dunlop that he paid IR£1,000 in cash to Cllr Larkin in relation to the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands.

CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER AND THE BALDOYLE LANDS

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Gallagher in return for his support for the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands. The payment was corrupt.

CLLR TOM HAND AND THE BALDOYLE LANDS

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Hand in return for his support for the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands. The payment was corrupt.

CLLR TONY FOX AND THE BALDOYLE LANDS.

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Fox in return for his support for the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands. The payment was corrupt. The Tribunal rejected Cllr Fox's contention that he had never been lobbied by Mr Dunlop in relation to the lands.

CLLR DONAL LYDON AND THE BALDOYLE LANDS.

1. The Tribunal rejected the evidence of Mr Dunlop that he paid IR£1,000 in cash to Cllr Lydon in relation to the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands.

CLLR JOHN O'HALLORAN AND THE BALDOYLE LANDS.

1. The Tribunal was satisfied (from evidence in this and other modules) that Cllr O'Halloran did on occasion receive small payments in the region of IR£500 each from Mr Dunlop in the course of the making of the Development Plan 1991-1993, although it could not determine which of Mr Dunlop's development projects these payments related to. The Tribunal was however satisfied that insofar as Cllr O'Halloran solicited and or accepted such payments, he did so improperly in the knowledge that Mr Dunlop was a lobbyist in relation to rezoning issues then current in Dublin County Council including the Baldoyle lands.

CLLRS M. J. COSGRAVE AND LIAM CREAVERN AND THE BALDOYLE LANDS

1. Although from opposing political parties Cllrs M. J. Cosgrave and Liam Creaven were closely involved in the project to rezone the Baldoyle lands. Both were signatories to two crucial motions drafted by Mr Dunlop with assistance from Mr Lawlor in relation to the lands though they claimed to be unaware of Mr Lawlor's involvement with these motions.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that they consented to correspondence (addressed to the acting chairperson Dublin County Council, Cllr Ridge and designed to ensure that the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands would remain a live issue in the Council) being prepared and sent in their names by Mr Dunlop. Almost certainly, and contrary to what was stated by them, they had a clear recollection of those events which led to that correspondence being sent. It was unlikely that they were directly involved in the strategy or preparation of the correspondence.

3. The Tribunal believed that both councillors acted to promote the rezoning of the Baldoyle lands in the absence of any individual or independent assessment on their part of the merits of that proposal.

4. It appeared to the Tribunal that both Cllr M. J. Cosgrave and Creaven permitted themselves to be controlled and used for the purposes of promoting the private interests of Mr Dunlop (and others) and that this amounted to an abuse of their role, duty and obligations as councillors. The Tribunal rejected their claimed ignorance of the extent to which they permitted themselves to be used and manipulated by Mr Dunlop.

CHAPTER TEN - THE FOX & MAHONY MODULE

CLLR GV WRIGHT AND FOX & MAHONY

1. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence that he paid Cllr Wright IR£2,000 in cash, on either 25 March or 19 April 1993, and that the payment was wrapped in a newspaper and was given to Cllr Wright in the visitors' bar in Leinster House. The Tribunal was satisfied that the payment was made following a request for payment from Cllr Wright in return for his support for the rezoning of the Drumnigh lands. In requesting and receiving the said payment, Cllr Wright was compromised in the disinterested performance of his duties as a councillor in relation to the rezoning of the Drumnigh lands. The Tribunal found that the payment was corrupt.

CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER AND FOX & MAHONY

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop obtained Cllr Gallagher's signature for the Drumnigh rezoning motion on 11 March 1993. As a matter of probability, the Tribunal believed that money was solicited by Cllr Gallagher in return for his signature and support for the Drumnigh land rezoning, and that IR£1,000 was duly paid to him on that day by Mr Dunlop. This payment constituted an inducement to Cllr Gallagher to perform his duty as a councillor otherwise than in a disinterested fashion, and was corrupt.

CLLR SEAN GILBRIDE AND FOX & MAHONY

1. The Tribunal accepted Mr Dunlop's evidence in relation to the alleged payment of IR£2,000 to Cllr Gilbride, in respect of this and two other rezoning proposals, and was satisfied that it was solicited by, and paid to, Cllr Gilbride, essentially as claimed by Mr Dunlop. This payment compromised the disinterested performance of Cllr Gilbride's duties as a councillor in relation to his involvement in the review of the 1983 Dublin County Development Plan, and was corrupt.

CHAPTER ELEVEN - THE WALLS KINSEALY MODULE

CLLR SEAN GILBRIDE AND WALLS/KINSEALY

1. The Tribunal was not satisfied that Mr Dunlop had, as he alleged, paid IR£1,000 to Cllr Gilbride in relation to the Walls Kinsealy lands, or that Cllr Gilbride had sought money from Mr Dunlop in relation thereto.

CHAPTER TWELVE - THE BALHEARY MODULE

MR JOE TIERNAN

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that, at the time Mr Tiernan retained the services of Mr Frank Dunlop to assist in the project to have the Christian Brothers lands at Balheary rezoned for development, in 1991 and subsequently, he was aware of, and understood that, in the course of that undertaking, Mr Dunlop intended to make payments to councillors in order to secure support for the project.

THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS

1. The Tribunal accepted that the Christian Brothers were unaware that Mr Dunlop, when retained to lobby for support for the rezoning of their lands at Balheary, intended to make corrupt payments to councillors as part of that process or that he made any such payments in the course of the project.

CLLR TOM HAND AND BALHEARY

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Hand sought money from Mr Dunlop in return for his support for the rezoning of the Balheary lands in 1993, and that Mr Dunlop accordingly paid him IR£1,000 in cash. This payment was corrupt.

CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER AND BALHEARY

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Gallagher requested a payment of money from Mr Dunlop in return for his support for the rezoning of the Balheary lands, and that Mr Dunlop duly paid Cllr Gallagher IR£1,000 in cash for that purpose. This payment was corrupt.

CLLR LIAM T. COSGRAVE AND BALHEARY

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Cosgrave sought payment from Mr Dunlop in return for his support for the rezoning of the Balheary lands in 1993, and that Mr Dunlop duly paid Cllr Cosgrave IR£1,000 in cash. This payment was corrupt.

CLLR TONY FOX AND BALHEARY

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Fox sought money from Mr Dunlop in return for his support for the rezoning of the Balheary lands in 1993, and that Mr Dunlop duly paid Cllr Fox IR£1,000 in cash for that support. This payment was corrupt.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN - THE ST. GERARD'S SCHOOL MODULE

MR DUNLOP'S RETENTION

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that neither Mr Marcus Magnier (a member of the Board of Governors of St. Gerard's School) nor Mr Jim Sherwin (Chairman of the school's Board) nor anyone else representing the school's interests, suspected, or was aware, that payments to councillors were contemplated or made by Mr

Dunlop in the course of his retention of a lobbyist on behalf of St. Gerard's School.

CLLR LIAM T. COSGRAVE AND ST. GERARD'S

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Cosgrave solicited from and was paid IR£1,000 by Mr Dunlop in return for supporting the rezoning of the St. Gerard's School's lands in 1998. The said payment was corrupt.

CLLR TONY FOX AND ST. GERARD'S

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Fox solicited, and was paid, a sum of IR£1,000 on a date after 12 February 1998, by Mr Dunlop, in return for his support of the motion to rezone the St. Gerard's School's lands on 12 February 1998. This payment was corrupt.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that Cllr Fox's approach to Mr Dunlop in Dawson Street, Dublin in 1999, after the establishment of this Tribunal, was made in circumstances where Cllr Fox was concerned about the monies he had received from Mr Dunlop, and was anxious to ascertain the extent of disclosure (if any) of same made, or likely to be made, by Mr Dunlop to the Tribunal.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN - THE DUFF LANDS MODULE

CLLR CYRIL GALLAGHER AND THE DUFF LANDS

1. The Tribunal was satisfied that Mr Dunlop paid IR£2,000 to Cllr Gallagher in return for his support for a positive outcome in the application for planning permission/material contravention in relation to the Duff lands, and that this payment had been, in effect, solicited by Cllr Gallagher for that purpose. This payment was corrupt.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN - MR FRANK DUNLOP

1. The analysis conducted by the Tribunal, insofar as any such analysis was capable of being conducted in circumstances where Mr Dunlop, on his own admission, had access to cash resources which were not the subject of any documentary trail, established that, in the period from September 1989 to September 1993 particularly, Mr Dunlop had at his disposal a sum in excess of half a million pounds cash (IR£535,501) for the purposes, inter alia, of making disbursements to councillors. In 1991, Mr Dunlop had access to in excess of IR£230,000 cash, in 1992, he had access to IR£124,000 cash, and in 1993,

IR£50,000 cash. These sums did not take into account cash sums which came into Mr Dunlop's possession and which were not lodged to, or withdrawn from, bank accounts. In the course of his testimony in the Quarryvale Module, Mr Dunlop advised that, on occasions, he had cash sums ranging between IR£25,000 and IR£100,000 in his briefcase.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that a sum of in excess of half a million pounds available to Mr Dunlop for his lobbying endeavours in the period 1990 to 1993 was, as a matter of the strongest possibility, a conservative figure, and considerably less than the likely actual cash "war chest" which Mr Dunlop had available to him during the period of the 1993 Development Plan.

3. The Tribunal's analysis of the manner in which Mr Dunlop conducted his financial affairs otherwise than through Frank Dunlop & Associates, and the manner in which he was facilitated by a number of clients with, effectively, the provision of cash payments, coupled with his use of "war chest" accounts and cheque cashing facilities, led the Tribunal to the inevitable conclusion that Mr Dunlop was easily able to make cash payments to councillors and politicians. Notwithstanding the evidence tendered by Mr Dunlop over the course of a number of modules as to who were the beneficiaries of payments from him in the years 1990 to 1993 particularly, the Tribunal was satisfied that significant disbursements of cash funds by Mr Dunlop remain unaccounted for.

4. The Tribunal was satisfied that payments made to Mr Dunlop by landowners/developers, although intended, in part at least, by some landowners/developers to be passed on in the form of corrupt payments to councillors (albeit in some circumstances in the form of contributions at election time) were not always directly or immediately used for such purposes by Mr Dunlop. Mr Dunlop told the Tribunal that the funds provided to him for such purposes, together with other funds (including the funds lodged to his "war chest" accounts), constituted a "confluence of funds" from which such payments were then made as required and when opportune. There was therefore, in practice, no ring fencing of funds for specific projects. Mr Dunlop, in making payments to councillors (including Mr Lawlor) did so not only using funds already provided to him, but also contributed to such disbursements from his "confluence" of funds, on the basis of an expectation of payments being made to him in the future by landowners/developers, often by way of a promised or agreed "success fee". At times, Mr Dunlop made disbursements to councillors out of this "confluence of funds" in relation to particular developments before he was put in funds by the landowner or developer concerned.

5. Mr Dunlop, in the period particularly from late 1990/early 1991, adopted a simple and very successful strategy to achieve his undoubted success in persuading councillors in County Dublin to support a number of rezoning (and on occasion material contravention) proposals which, in order to succeed, required majority councillor approval. On occasion, that support also involved a willingness on the part of councillors to sign motions and to actively influence fellow councillors to support particular proposals. When that strategy proved successful, as it frequently did, the financial rewards for the relevant landowners/developers were enormous by any standards and very substantial also for Mr Dunlop himself. While the potential financial gain was immeasurable, the outlay necessary to achieve the rezoning of the land in question (in the form of, in particular, payments to councillors) was, in most instances, relatively modest, often involving sums of IR£1,000 or IR£2,000 being paid to a handful of councillors. It appeared to the Tribunal that only rarely, if ever, did Mr Dunlop have to comprehensively brief councillors as to the merits (in planning or community terms) of a particular proposal for the purposes of persuading them to support that proposal. In reality, the money did the talking.

6. The Tribunal emphasised that Mr Dunlop could not have pursued his corrupt activity in relation to the planning process had it not been for, on the one hand, obliging landowners/developers who were prepared to lavish large sums of money (and in particular cash and cheques payable to Mr Dunlop's company Shefran) on Mr Dunlop, and, on the other hand, compliant councillors who were all too prepared to compromise the disinterested performance of their duties in the cause of personal gain.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN - MR LIAM LAWLOR

1. The Tribunal found that Mr Lawlor abused his role as an elected public representative (in his capacity as a councillor until June 1991 and as an elected TD representing the Dáil constituency of Dublin West until 2002) to a very significant degree. In the period of the late 1980's and the 1990's, Mr Lawlor provided services and advice to landowners/developers (including to Mr Dunlop as their agent) in his capacity as an elected politician, for personal gain. In effect, Mr Lawlor, while an elected public representative, conducted a personal business in the course of which he corruptly sold his expertise, knowledge and influence as a councillor and as a TD for personal financial reward.

2. The Tribunal was satisfied that decisions were made, on occasion, by developers/landowners (or by Mr Dunlop as their agent) to pay Mr Lawlor for 'consultancy' services in relation to the rezoning or development of their lands. This was not simply to have the benefit of his undoubted knowledge of the planning process and the influence which he undoubtedly exerted over councillors, both as a councillor and as a TD, but was also to allay their concern that a failure to engage with Mr Lawlor in this manner might result in a failure to have their property rezoned, or otherwise dealt with advantageously in the course of the planning process.

3. Mr Lawlor's close involvement with landowners/developers (and particularly with Mr Dunlop as their agent) and his frequent demands for, and receipt of, substantial sums of money from them in the late 1980's and throughout the 1990's, rendered Mr Lawlor hopelessly compromised in the disinterested performance of his public duties as an elected public representative. The Tribunal also noted Mr Lawlor's propensity to use false and fictitious names and/or invoices to facilitate many of these substantial payments.

4. Mr Lawlor failed on many occasions to give truthful information and evidence to the Tribunal and was found by the Superior Courts in 2001 and 2002 to have failed to comply with the Tribunal's discovery requirements.

CHAPTER 18 - RECOMMENDATIONS

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

1.01 Corruption, and in particular political corruption, is a deeply corrosive and destructive force. While frequently perceived as a victimless crime, in reality its victims are too many to be identified individually. Political corruption diverts public resources to the benefit of the few and at the expense of the many. It undermines social equality and perpetuates unfairness. Corruption in public office is a fundamental breach of public trust and inherently incompatible with the democratic nature of the State.

1.02 In accordance with its terms of reference, the Tribunal is making a number of recommendations which it considers will assist in combating corruption in Irish political life. These recommendations are informed by its inquiries. However, while those inquiries focused on corruption in planning, its recommendations are not and cannot be limited to this issue. Corruption is a multi-faceted phenomenon capable of manifesting itself in countless ways. Efforts to combat it must therefore take a holistic approach. The corrupt and the corruptible will inevitably gravitate to the weakest link in the chain of anti-corruption measures. Consequently, to combat corruption in planning it is necessary to combat corruption generally.

1.03 Although the Tribunal recognises that corruption is most obviously a failing of individual morality, it believes that it is also a problem of systemic failure. There will always be individuals who are tempted to use their public office to further their own interests rather than those of the public. The task therefore is to ensure that there are systems in place which greatly reduce both the incentive and opportunity to engage in corrupt activity. While anti-corruption measures may vary considerably in their detail, their underlying principles are the same. Corruption thrives in shadows and darkness. Consequently anti-corruption measures must focus on ensuring transparency and accountability in public life. Ignorance and apathy are both corruption catalysts. Therefore, anti-corruption measures must be supported from the top-down and from the bottom up. The pathways of corruption are ever-changing, therefore, measures to fight corruption must be kept under constant review to ensure that they do not become irrelevant to that fight.

1.04 However, the Tribunal recognizes that combating corruption is not an end in itself: it is simply a means to an end. Ultimately, anti-corruption measures seek to ensure the existence of the necessary conditions for the effective functioning of democratic government. As a result, the overall aim of those measures is not necessarily the complete elimination of all corruption. Rather it is to ensure that corruption is reduced to a level consistent with that end.

1.05 The Tribunal's recommendations affect the following areas: planning; conflicts of interest; political finance; lobbying; bribery; corruption in office; money laundering; asset confiscation; as well as a number of miscellaneous measures.

PLANNING

1.06 The Tribunal's inquiries focused on corruption in the area of planning and development. During the period at the focus of those inquiries, the Development Plan was the primary instrument for regulating that area. In particular, that plan zoned land for development purposes and the relevant zoning was capable of having significant implications for the value of that land. The elected members of the local planning authorities (the "elected members") played a key role in adopting that plan and enjoyed significant powers in this respect.

1.07 In the intervening years, enormous changes have occurred in the planning system. Specifically, while the Development Plan remains a key element of that system, it is now part of a hierarchy of plans. In the context of that hierarchy, long term strategic policies are determined in national instruments, namely, the National Development Plan (the "NDP") and the National Spatial Strategy (the "NSS") as well as in regional instruments in the form of the Regional Policy Guidelines (the "RPGs"). The role of the Development Plan is to provide for the detailed implementation of those policies.

1.08 Other changes have also impacted on the role of the elected members in regulating planning and development. Overall, this role has been significantly curtailed and is subject to considerably more checks and balances than was the case in the period inquired into by this Tribunal. However, while the gaps in transparency and accountability at local level have been reduced, they have not been eliminated. Moreover, others have emerged at regional and national level. The Tribunal's recommendations seek to plug those gaps. They also aim at ensuring the more effective enforcement of the existing planning provisions.

1.09 As is clear from the above, at national level, both the NDP and the NSS play a key role in the planning system. However, neither has a statutory basis and the Minister for the Environment, Community and Local Government (the “Minister for the Environment”) enjoys considerable discretion in determining their scope and content. The Tribunal recommends that both of those instruments be placed on a statutory footing. The relevant statutes should specify the procedure for adopting and/or reviewing those instruments and make provision for public consultation when carrying out those procedures. In addition, the Oireachtas should approve the adoption of both the NDP and NSS.

1.10 At regional level, the Regional Authorities are responsible for adopting the RPGs. The National Transport Authority (the “NTA”) also plays a role. The Tribunal is concerned that the Regional Authorities are insufficiently accountable given the importance of their role in the planning system and that their role is insufficiently transparent. It is consequently recommending that those authorities be directly elected. It is also recommending a number of changes in the procedure for adopting the RPGs in order to ensure increased accountability and transparency in that procedure.

1.11 The NTA performs several functions which have direct implications for planning and development. Members of that Authority are appointed by the Minister for the Environment. The Tribunal is recommending that, in future, those Members should be appointed by an Independent Appointments Board.

1.12 At local level, the Tribunal’s recommendations are largely aimed at ensuring transparency over the way in which the elected members exercise their powers. They include measures to promote the role of the public consultation process, in particular by providing that both submissions received in the course of that process and the Manager’s Report dealing with those submissions be available on the internet. In addition, the Tribunal is recommending that where the elected members decide to depart from the recommendations made in the Manager’s Report, they should be required to state their reasons for doing so.

1.13 The Tribunal’s recommendations also contain a number of other measures designed to promote transparency and accountability in the grant of planning permission. Specifically, where the elected members use the material contravention procedure to grant planning permission, they should be required to give at least one month’s notice of their intention to do so to the relevant Regional Authority and to the Minister for the Environment. The power of the elected members to direct the Manager to grant planning permission in a specific case should be subject to increased restrictions. Specifically, where the elected members disagree with the advice of the professional planners and intend to issue a direction to the Manager to grant planning permission, they should be required to state their reasons for doing so. In addition, both that advice and those reasons should be sent to An Bord Pleanála which should have the power to veto that direction. Other recommendations include requiring that interventions made by elected members in respect of specific planning applications be noted on the file and that applicants for planning permission be required to disclose if they have made a political donation to a member of that authority within a specified period when making the planning application, as well as the identity of the donation's recipient.

1.14 Finally, with regard to enforcement, the Tribunal is concerned that recent changes in the planning system have resulted in an over-centralisation of power in the hands of the Minister for the Environment which is not subject to sufficient checks and balances. Consequently, the Tribunal is recommending that the Minister for the Environment's ability to give directions to Regional Authorities and Local Planning Authorities should be entrusted to a Planning Regulator. However, the Minister for the Environment should continue to play a key role in adopting the NSS and NDP.

1.15 While the Planning Regulator should assume some of the Minister for the Environment's existing role in relation to enforcement, the Tribunal considers that his or her role should not be confined to this. In particular, the Tribunal is recommending that the Regulator should also be entrusted with the power to investigate possible systemic problems in the planning system, including those raising corruption risks, with the aim of making recommendations to address those problems. The Regulator should also be responsible for providing training to members of both local and regional authorities on planning and development to enable them to discharge their functions in this area more effectively. The Regulator should have sufficient powers to carry out his or her functions effectively, including the power to question witnesses and compel the production of documents.

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

1.16 Conflicts of interest are a root cause of corruption. A conflict of interest arises where an elected or appointed public official has a private interest which is likely to be affected by the exercise of his or her public powers. Logically, a public official is less likely to exercise those powers in the public interest when he or she is in a position to use them for his or her own personal benefit. Moreover even where a public official does not use his or her public powers to further his or her own interests, the mere appearance that he or she has done so is in itself problematic. In particular, apparent conflicts of interest weaken the public's faith in democratic institutions and distract its attention from substantive policy issues focusing it instead on scandals. Several of the inquiries conducted by this Tribunal involved such apparent conflicts of interest.

1.17 Controlling conflicts of interest is therefore a central element in an effective anti-corruption strategy and plays an essential role in promoting transparency and accountability in public life. Generally measures aimed at controlling conflicts of interests seek to ensure that those interests likely to give rise to such conflicts are identified and, if necessary, subject to further regulation.

1.18 Currently, conflicts of interest at national level are regulated by the Ethics Acts 1995 and 2001 (the "Ethics Acts") and their related codes of conduct, while those at local level are regulated by Part 15 of the Local Government Act 2001 (the "LGA") and its related codes of conduct (collectively, "the conflict of interests measures"). These acts and codes essentially require the disclosure of interests likely to give rise to a conflict of interest as well as the supplementary regulation of certain types of conflicts. Enforcement of the conflict of interest measures is in the hands of the Standards in Public Office Commission (SIPO), the Dáil and Seanad Select Committees on Members Interests and Local Authorities.

1.19 The Tribunal is concerned that the existing conflicts of interests measures do not sufficiently identify or otherwise regulate certain types of conflicts of interests. Consequently, it is making a number of recommendations which are designed to ensure the full disclosure of all interests likely to give rise to an actual or apparent conflict of interest. It is also recommending that certain types of interests which pose particular risks of corruption be subject to increased regulation. Other recommendations seek to make the enforcement of the conflict of interest measures more effective, mainly through increasing the role of SIPO. In this respect, the Tribunal believes that there are significant problems with the existing enforcement provisions which greatly weaken the ability of the conflict of interest measures to control corruption in politics. This is also true of sanctions for breaches of the Ethics Acts which are also the subject of a recommendation.

DISCLOSURE

1.20 The conflict of interests measures provide for two types of disclosure, periodic and ad hoc. Under the periodic disclosure provisions, public officials must make an annual disclosure of certain categories of interests to a register of interests. This helps both the public official him or herself and others to determine in advance whether a particular interest is likely to give rise to a conflict of interest. It can also be used by the criminal investigating authorities for the purpose of investigating corruption offences. In contrast, ad hoc disclosure is made if and when a conflict of interest arises. Typically, it covers a far broader range of interests than periodic disclosure.

1.21 One of the problems with the current disclosure requirements is that they predominantly apply to interests held by the public official him or herself. Specifically, in the case of periodic disclosure, only certain public officials are required to disclose interests held by family members and/or dependent persons and only to a very limited extent. Moreover, they are not required to disclose interests held by corporate entities or other legal arrangements, even those entities/arrangements in which they have a controlling interest. While the ad hoc disclosure requirements have a broader personal scope, they do not, for example, cover interests held by friends, employers, electoral donors, business associates or certain legal arrangements. In the course of its inquiries, the Tribunal inquired into several conflicts arising from interests held by such persons and arrangements. For the disclosure requirements to be effective, it is therefore imperative that these interests be covered. Consequently, the Tribunal is making a number of recommendations aimed at extending the personal scope of the periodic and ad hoc disclosure requirements.

1.22 The Tribunal is further concerned that the material scope of both the periodic and the ad hoc disclosure requirements is too narrow and that a number of types of interests capable of giving rise to conflicts of interests are not covered by those requirements. Consequently, in so far as periodic disclosure is concerned, the Tribunal is recommending the removal of several exceptions and limitations contained in the existing requirements. It is also recommending that those requirements be extended to cover a number of interests which they do not currently cover, including liabilities and assets as well as any non-pecuniary interest capable of being reasonably perceived to give rise to a conflict of interests.

1.23 With regard to ad hoc disclosure, the Tribunal is recommending that the disclosure requirements be extended to cover those interests which could reasonably be seen to be capable of influencing a public official in the performance of his or her public functions. In certain instances, this will mean that public officials will be under a new obligation to disclose the following interests: apparent conflicts of interests; non-material interests; electoral donations; interests enjoyed by a public official as part of a class of persons; as well as those interests already disclosed in the context of a periodic disclosure.

1.24 The Tribunal's recommendations also affect the timing of periodic disclosure. Currently, public officials are required to make a periodic disclosure of interests on an annual basis. Consequently, in some instances, a significant period may elapse between the time a person becomes a public official and his or her first disclosure of interests. Moreover, where there is a material change in those interests in the course of a year, a public official is not required to disclose this change until the following year. The Tribunal is concerned that both of these issues may seriously and adversely affect the accuracy of the register. It is consequently recommending that public officials be required to make a periodic disclosure of interests within 30 days of entering public office and to update any interest contained in such disclosure within 30 days of a significant change in that interest, or after the acquisition of a new interest.

1.25 Other recommendations focus on extending the disclosure requirements to interests in the form of gifts or income which either pre-date or post-date the public official's time in public office. Gifts or income which pre-date that time may be as likely to give rise to conflicts of interest as those received while in public office. Moreover, the disclosure of gifts or income received after the public official has retired from public office can be important for the purpose of uncovering undeclared conflicts of interest while in office, or even actual corruption.

1.26 As part of the purpose of disclosing interests likely to give rise to a conflict of interest is to promote transparency in public decision-making, the Tribunal is also recommending that both periodic and ad hoc disclosures of interest be more widely published and disseminated. This should have the added benefit of increasing the likelihood of non compliance with those requirements being drawn to the attention of the relevant authorities.

REGULATION

1.27 Certain types of interests pose particular risks from an anti-corruption perspective including in particular: gifts; access to inside information; and ancillary and post-term employment. The Tribunal considers that merely requiring the identification of these interests is not sufficient to control the risks of corruption which they present. Consequently, several of its recommendations seek to further regulate such interests. In this respect, the Tribunal is recommending that public officials be prohibited from accepting any gift in excess of a stipulated amount where that gift could reasonably be considered to be connected with their public office. In addition, it is recommending that the Officeholders' Code of Conduct further regulate conflicts of interests arising from the use of insider information.

1.28 With regard to ancillary employment, the Tribunal is recommending that each public official who falls within the scope of the Ethics Acts be prohibited from entering into a contract for the provision of goods or services to a public body while a public official and for a period of one year thereafter. Similarly, at local level, it is recommending that public officials falling within the scope of the LGA be prohibited from entering into such contracts with the local authority of which he or she is a member/employee. It is also recommending that an elected member who is engaged in ancillary professional activities involving the sale and/or development of land should be prohibited from dealing with any land which has been the subject of a decision changing its planning or rezoning status during that Member's term of office and for two years thereafter, unless he or she has recused him or herself from voting on that decision. Furthermore, public officeholders should be required to obtain permission before accepting employment or a consultancy position after leaving public office where the nature or terms of that employment or position could be reasonably perceived to give rise to a conflict of interest.

ENFORCEMENT

1.29 Successful enforcement of the conflict of interest provisions is clearly a key element in ensuring their effectiveness. Currently, SIPO is largely responsible for enforcing those provisions in respect of public officials who are officeholders. The provisions covering Oireachtas Members are enforced by the members themselves. Similarly, local authority members have a role in enforcing the conflict of interest measures applicable to them, in conjunction with local authority management.

1.30 The Tribunal is of the view that there are a number of problems with the existing enforcement mechanisms. In this regard, the Tribunal believes that the self-regulatory approach to enforcement of the conflict of interest provisions is a matter for concern. In particular, it is questionable whether either Oireachtas Members or Local Authorities enjoy the requisite independence or resources to carry out effective investigations. More generally, the public tends to view self-regulation as a soft option and to lack credibility. Consequently, the Tribunal is recommending that SIPO be given an increased role in the enforcement of the conflict of interest measures in so far as both Oireachtas Members and local councillors are concerned. It is also making a number of other recommendations designed to improve SIPO's effectiveness. Specifically, it is recommending the introduction of simplified complaint procedures, that anonymous complaints be permitted, and that SIPO be given increased powers of investigation. At local level, the Tribunal is recommending that the LGA be amended so as to provide for a formal complaint procedure regarding possible non-compliance with the conflict of interests provisions, make provision for whistleblower protection and require local authorities to provide information regarding the enforcement of the conflicts of interests measures in their annual reports.

1.31 It is also recommending that increased emphasis be placed on the prevention of conflicts of interest, at both national and local level, through training, education and research. .

SANCTIONS

1.32 The Oireachtas may either suspend or fine an Oireachtas Member who has breached the conflict of interest provisions. In contrast, a local councillor who breaches the conflict of interest provisions at local level may be the subject of a criminal prosecution. The Tribunal considers that in some instances at least, a breach of the Ethics Acts by an Oireachtas Member should be a criminal offence and it is consequently making a recommendation to this effect.

POLITICAL FINANCE

1.33 Money plays a key role in politics and makes a vital contribution to a healthy democracy. However, if insufficiently regulated it can also have a corrupting influence and lead to distortions in the democratic process. Bribes may be made in the guise of political donations and large donations may in themselves exert a corrupting influence even absent the quid pro quo characteristic of bribery. The challenge for political finance regulations therefore is to distinguish between funds which positively contribute to the political process and those which undermine it.

1.34 Money in politics is regulated by the Electoral Act 1997, as amended and the Local Elections (Disclosure of Donations and Expenditure) Act 1999, as amended, (the “LEA”). Those acts largely seek to balance the competing roles of money in politics through: prohibiting donations from certain sources and in excess of specified amounts; regulating electoral expenditure; requiring the public disclosure of both donations and electoral expenditure; and providing for some degree of exchequer funding for political activity. The government sponsored Electoral (Amendment)(Political Funding) Bill 2011, (the “2011 Bill”) will, if enacted in its current form, modify those two acts significantly.

1.35 The Tribunal is concerned that the Electoral Act 1997 and the LEA (collectively, “the political finance acts”) suffer from several deficiencies which adversely affect their ability to adequately control money in politics and the corruption risks which it poses. It is consequently making a number of recommendations designed to remedy those deficiencies, which affect the provisions on political donations, electoral expenditure, disclosure, enforcement and sanctions.

POLITICAL DONATIONS

1.36 The recommendations on political donations affect: the definition of a donation, restrictions on the sources of donations; and restrictions on donation amounts:

Definition of a donation

1.37 There are several difficulties with the way the political finance acts define the term “donation” namely as “any contribution given for political purposes”. In particular, whether or not a contribution is a political donation is dependent on the reasons the contribution was made rather than on the uses to which it is put. Moreover, several types of contributions fall outside this definition including, for example commercial loans. The Tribunal is therefore recommending that the definition of the term “donation” be amended in both the political finance acts so as to define a donation as “any contribution given, used or received for political purposes.”

Source Restrictions

1.38 The existing political finance acts permit all donations except those made by non-resident individuals who are non Irish citizens and from foreign corporations or unincorporated bodies. Donations from domestic corporations are permitted as are indirect donations, cash donations and anonymous donations of less than €127. The Tribunal believes that some of these types of donation sources pose corruption risks and should consequently be more strictly regulated. For example, donations may be made indirectly in order to distance the donor and recipient from each other and disguise its true source and/or destination. Consequently, the Tribunal is recommending that indirect donations be prohibited.

1.39 Anonymous and cash donations also pose corruption risks in that they make the tracing and monitoring donations more difficult. Currently, anonymous donations in excess of €127 are permitted and cash donations are not specifically limited. The Tribunal is recommending that both anonymous or cash donations of above a certain value be prohibited, namely, €55 in the case of a donation to an individual electoral candidate or elected representative and €175 for donations to a political party.

1.40 In order to avoid the possibility of multiple anonymous or cash donations being made in order to circumvent the donation amount restrictions, the Tribunal is also recommending that an overall limit be placed on the amount which an individual, political party or third party may receive by way of anonymous donations, namely €2,000 for an individual and €5,000 for a political party or third party.

Donation amounts

1.41 The political finance acts limit the amount of money which either an individual politician, a political party or a third party may accept from an individual donor. The Tribunal is concerned that the existing limits are too high and notes that this concern is also reflected in the 2011 Bill, which lowers those limits to €2,500 in the case of donations to a political party, “accounting unit” and “third party” and to €1,000 in the case of donations to an individual electoral candidate or elected representative. While the Tribunal welcomes this proposal, it notes that at the moment, there is nothing to prevent an individual donor from giving a donation to each member of a political party and the political party itself. This could amount to a significant amount of money capable of giving rise to corruption or the appearance of corruption. Consequently, the Tribunal is recommending that an overall limit be placed on the amount which an individual may give to a political party and electoral candidates or elected representatives who are members of that party.

POLITICAL EXPENDITURE

1.42 Political finance expenditure rules essential seek to reduce the incentive for political parties or politicians to accept corrupt funding by restricting the amount which may be spent for political purposes. The political finance acts limit the expenditure which may be incurred in the electoral period on the part of electoral candidates in Dáil, Local, Presidential and European elections.

1.43 The Tribunal is of the view that the existing expenditure rules suffer from a number of deficiencies from an anti-corruption perspective. First, they only cover expenditure during the electoral period. As there are no restrictions on expenditure outside that period, they do nothing to reduce the incentive to accept corrupt funding in respect of that expenditure. Secondly, few candidates meet the expenditure limits, which suggests that they are too high and therefore ineffective. Thirdly, those limits do not apply to expenditure by third parties which may serve to undermine the limits applicable to electoral candidates. Finally, they do not apply to Seanad elections.

1.44 The Tribunal is therefore recommending that the existing expenditure rules be extended to cover all political expenditure, that the permitted amount of expenditure be sufficiently low to be an effective ceiling on expenses and that the rules be extended to cover third parties and candidates running in Seanad elections.

DISCLOSURE

1.45 Disclosure provides transparency over the sources, amounts and use of money in politics. It is the bedrock of all attempts at controlling that money and preventing corruption and several of the Tribunal's recommendations affect the existing rules. First and foremost, the Tribunal is recommending that political parties and elected representatives be required to disclose their annual (audited) accounts. It is the Tribunal's view that there cannot be any true transparency in political finance in the absence of such a requirement. In addition, the Tribunal considers that the existing disclosure thresholds for political donations are too high and that donations below this threshold could have a corrupting influence. Consequently, it is recommending that individuals be required to disclose the receipt of a donation in excess of €55 and that political parties be required to disclose the receipt of a donation in excess of €175. It is also recommending that those making disclosure be required to provide more detailed information regarding both the source and nature of the donations disclosed. Finally, the Tribunal considers that the information provided through disclosure should be available to the electorate prior to an election so that they can take it into consideration when voting. It is therefore making a recommendation to this effect.

ENFORCEMENT

1.46 To be effective, the political finance rules must be actively enforced. However, enforcement itself depends at least in part on transparency regarding who is receiving political donations or incurring political expenditure. While political parties are currently required to provide information to SIPO regarding their subsidiary organisations and branches, this requirement is honoured as much in the breach as in the observance. The Tribunal therefore considers that it should be strengthened and is recommending that political parties be required to provide details of their organisational structure, including the above information, as a condition of registration under the Electoral Act 1992. The Tribunal also considers that there should be restrictions regarding who can accept a political donation and/or lodge such a donation and is making a recommendation to this effect.

1.47 SIPO is responsible for enforcing the political finance measures at national level, however the Tribunal is concerned that it does not have sufficient powers to carry out this task with maximum efficacy. It is therefore recommending that those powers be increased. Enforcement of those measures at local level is in the hands of the local authorities. The Tribunal has serious concerns about the ability of those authorities to play an active enforcement role. Consequently, it is recommending that that enforcement should be entrusted to an external independent body.

SANCTIONS

1.48 For the most part, breach of the political finance measures is a criminal offence. However, the Tribunal does not believe that all breaches of those measures necessarily warrant a criminal conviction, in particular where the breach is minor or inadvertent. It therefore recommends that provision also be made for administrative sanctions, for example, fines, which may be imposed in the case of those types of breaches. As certain breaches of the political finance acts are not subject to sanction, the Tribunal is also recommending that those acts be amended to provide for such sanctions. The Tribunal is also concerned that political actors maybe able to find loopholes in the political finance acts which enable them to act within the letter of the law while undermining its spirit. It is consequently recommending the introduction of a new provision sanctioning those who deliberately circumvent the requirements set down in the political finance acts.

LOBBYING

1.49 Lobbying is an important part of the process of government and provides policy makers with important information and feedback thereby contributing to better and more effective policy outputs. However, it is clear from this Tribunal's inquiries, that lobbying is also associated with certain risks and in particular may play a key role in corruption. It can also result in unfair advantages for vested interests if there is insufficient transparency over lobbying activities.

1.50 Lobbying is not currently regulated. However, the Tribunal is of the view that regulating lobbying is likely to decrease the corruption risks associated with that activity by increasing transparency and accountability in the policy making process. Such regulation would not however, adversely affect the positive role played by lobbyists in the political system. On the contrary, it could well help promote a more positive perception of that role.

1.51 The Tribunal's recommendations affect both professional lobbyists and the public officials who are the subject of their lobbying activity. Regarding the former, they essentially seek to ensure that lobbyists are required to register as well as to adhere to a statutory Code of Conduct. Lobbyists should also be required to disclose information regarding the persons for whom they are lobbying, the public officials and public institutions being lobbied and the objects of that lobbying activity. In so far as public officials are concerned, the Tribunal recommends that officials be given clear guidance on conducting relationships with lobbyists, and in particular those who are themselves former public officials. Moreover, in order to ensure that the public are aware of the role played by lobbyists in the policy process, senior officeholders should be required to record and publish details of their contacts with lobbyists in the development of legislative initiatives.

BRIBERY, CORRUPTION IN OFFICE, MONEY LAUNDERING AND MISUSE OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

1.52 A number of the Tribunal's recommendation concern the offences of Bribery, Corruption in Office, Money Laundering, as well as the misuse of confidential information.

BRIBERY

1.53 Bribery is the classic form of political corruption and, in the past, efforts to control corruption have largely focused on the criminalization of bribery. Bribery is now criminalized by both common law and statute and the main statutory offences are to be found in the Prevention of Corruption Acts 1889 – 2010 (the “PCA”) and the Criminal Justice (Theft and Fraud) Offences Act 2001 (the “CJ(TFO)A 2001”). Generally, the bribery offences set out in those acts are relatively robust. However, the Tribunal has concerns regarding their effectiveness in criminalizing those who engage in bribery through an intermediary or bribery involving commercial undertakings. Specifically, intermediaries play a key role in many corrupt transactions and, in some instances, the use of an intermediary may enable the person who engaged that intermediary to successfully distance themselves from such a transaction, even when there were clear signs of that intermediary’s involvement in bribery. Similar concerns arise in relation to commercial undertakings who may claim that they were unaware of bribery engaged in by their employees or other business associates on their behalf. Consequently, the Tribunal is recommending the introduction of two new offences. The first of these criminalizes the making of payments to a third party in instances where the payer (“P”) knows or is reckless as to whether that party uses that payment as a bribe to further P’s interests. The second criminalises a lack of supervision or control on the part of a commercial entity which facilitates the commission of bribery to the benefit of that entity by one of its employees or other business associates.

1.54 Bribery is a notoriously difficult crime to prosecute successfully and the PCA contain three presumptions of corruption which facilitate its prosecution by providing that, once certain facts are established, the burden of proof shifts to the defendant who must then rebut that presumption of corruption. One of these presumptions arises where an individual fails to disclose a donation which he or she was required to disclose under the political finance acts. The other two both focus on the payment of gifts or other advantages to public officials. Given the importance of presumptions of corruption in successfully prosecuting a corruption offence, the Tribunal is recommending that two of the existing presumptions be extended. Specifically, under the existing legislation a presumption of corruption does not arise in instances where a political party fails to disclose a donation which it is required to disclose under the Electoral Act 1997, as amended. It may also be the case that such a presumption will not arise where an individual or a political party fails to disclose a prohibited donation. The Tribunal considers that a presumption of corruption should arise in both these cases.

1.55 With regard to the payment of gifts or other advantages to a public official, the Tribunal is recommending that a presumption of corruption should generally arise where an advantage is conferred, directly or indirectly, on a public official who is an Officeholder, Oireachtas Member or Local Elected Member where that public official does or fails to do an act in connection with his or her public office thereby benefiting the person who conferred that advantage. This presumption should be subject to the restriction that the payment must be one which the public official fails to disclose as required under the conflicts of interests acts.

1.56 Other recommendations focus on the sanctions for bribery. The Prevention of Corruption Act 1889 (the “1889 Act”) does not apply to the bribery of Oireachtas Members. While the Prevention of Corruption Act 1906 (the “1906 Act”) does cover that form of bribery, it does not provide for the same sanctions as the 1889 Act. Specifically, under the earlier Act, the court may prohibit a public official from holding public office and/or order that he or she forfeit any pension rights arising from that office. As these sanctions appear particularly appropriate in the case of bribery involving Oireachtas Members, the Tribunal is recommending that the 1889 Act be extended to cover them. It is also recommending strong sanctions for those who engage in commercial bribery. Specifically, where an undertaking is convicted of bribery, that undertaking should be banned from tendering for public contracts for a 7 year period. Moreover, a person who pays bribes for the purpose of influencing a public official in the performance of his or her public functions in the area of planning or development should be prohibited from applying for planning permission for that same period, save in respect of his or her own private residence.

1.57 Finally, the Tribunal is also of the view that whistleblower protection plays an important role in the detection of corruption offences and that the protection offered to prospective whistleblowers should be as robust as possible. While those who blow the whistle on corruption are protected to a certain extent under the Prevention of Corruption Act 2010 and the Criminal Justice Act 2011, the Tribunal believes that this protection could be made more robust. In particular, it is recommending that that protection be extended to protect independent contractors from penalization where they blow the whistle on a person to whom they are providing services and that the limits on the amount of compensation which may be awarded to those penalized for whistleblowing be removed.

CORRUPTION IN OFFICE

1.58 Not all corruption is in the form of bribery. In particular, even in the absence of a bribe, a public official may exercise his or her official functions to further his or her own private interests or the private interests of another person, instead of in the interests of the public. This form of corruption is generally criminalized by the offence of corruption in office. This offence was first introduced in 2001 and is obviously a very essential weapon in the arsenal of anti-corruption measures. However, as currently formulated, that offence appears too narrow to cover all instances where a public official uses his or her public office to further private interests. Specifically, it is doubtful whether it covers instances where a public official fails or omits to perform his or her public functions in order to further private interests. Moreover, it does not appear to cover situations where a public official mis-uses confidential information for his or her own benefit or for the benefit of another person. The Tribunal is recommending that the corruption in office offence be extended to cover both these situations.

UNDUE PAYMENTS

1.59 Under the Ethics Acts 1997 and 2001, officeholders must surrender all gifts received by them to the State where the value of the gift is in excess of €650 and where it is received by them in their capacity as officeholders.

1.60 Gifts raise particular difficulties from a corruption perspective. Most obviously, they may be bribes disguised as gifts. However, even if this is not the case, gifts tend to engender a feeling of reciprocity. Moreover, they easily give rise to apparent corruption. For these reasons, the Tribunal is recommending a stricter approach to the receipt of gifts by holders of ministerial office. Specifically, it believes that it should be a criminal offence for a holder of ministerial office to retain a gift of above a nominal value which he or she receives in connection with that office and where that gift or benefit is not lawfully due.

MONEY LAUNDERING

1.61 Money laundering controls are set out in the Criminal Justice (Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing) Act 2010 and are an important element in an effective anti-corruption policy. In particular criminalizing the handling of the proceeds of crime makes it more difficult for those involved in corruption to profit from their corrupt activities. Moreover, the requirement that certain “designated bodies” monitor the activities of their customers increases the likelihood that those activities will be uncovered. In recognition of this fact, the money laundering provisions specifically require those bodies to pay particularly close attention to the activities of their customers who are considered to be “politically exposed persons”, including persons holding prominent public positions, for the purposes of the money laundering legislation.

1.62 The Tribunal fully endorses this approach to politically exposed persons. However, it is concerned that the manner in which the term “politically exposed persons” is defined under the relevant legislation exclude domestic politically exposed persons. It is also concerned that a person ceases to be considered to be so exposed within 1 year of leaving public office. It is consequently recommending that the definition of a politically exposed person be extended to cover domestic persons and that a person continue to be considered to be politically exposed for 10 years after leaving public office

CASH TRANSACTION REPORTING

1.63 A cash transaction reporting requirement essentially requires those institutions that carry out such transactions to report those involving significant sums of money. Like money laundering controls, such requirements can help alert the authorities to instances where the financial system is used to transfer corrupt funds. On the other hand, requiring financial institutions to monitor cash transactions may impose extra costs on those institutions. In view of this, the Tribunal is recommending that a cost benefit analysis be carried out with a view to considering the imposition of such a reporting requirement.

ASSET RECOVERY

1.64 Corruption is primarily a financial crime and asset recovery can assist in preventing corruption by ensuring that those who engage in it cannot hope to retain their corrupt profits if they come to the attention of the relevant authorities. Asset recovery can be either conviction based or non-conviction based and both forms of recovery are available in this jurisdiction.

1.65 Generally the asset recovery mechanisms are very robust. However, the Tribunal is making a number of recommendations which affect conviction based recovery provided for under the Criminal Justice Act 1994. For the most part these involve permitting a court to determine whether a convicted person has benefited from his or her crime of its own motion and restricting its discretion regarding the amount of the confiscation order where such a benefit is found to have occurred. However, the Tribunal is also of the view that there would be some merit in having a single conviction based asset recovery regime, rather than three separate regimes (for drug-trafficking, terrorist financing, and for other indictable offences) as is currently the case.

MISCELLANEOUS RECOMMENDATIONS

1.66 The Tribunal's other recommendations concern corruption prevention, the ownership of corporate vehicles, including corporations, companies, trusts, partnerships and foundations, as well as the powers of Tribunals of Inquiries.

CORRUPTION PREVENTION

1.67 With regard to corruption prevention, the Tribunal considers that considerably more attention should be focused on this issue as it is a key element in an effective anti-corruption strategy. Preventing corruption from occurring in the first place has several key benefits which are not associated with punishing those involved once it occurs. Moreover, public education and awareness raising form an important part of any preventative strategy: there is no realistic possibility of successfully combating corruption without the public support and involvement which is usually dependent on that education and awareness raising.

TRANSPARENCY OVER CORPORATE VEHICLES

1.68 In the course of its inquiries, this Tribunal witnessed first hand the way in which corporate vehicles, including corporations, companies, foundations, trusts and partnerships, can be used for corrupt purposes and in particular to hide the source and/or destination of corrupt funds. It is very concerned about the lack of transparency over the beneficial ownership of those vehicles and is recommending that this be addressed as a matter of priority, including that it be referred to the Law Commission for further study and recommendations.

TRIBUNALS OF INQUIRY

1.69 Over the past number of years, Tribunals of Inquiry have played a key role in inquiring into and revealing corrupt activities. For the most part, as is clear from those inquiries, the powers contained in the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act 1921 – 2004 are sufficient for these purposes. Nevertheless, the Tribunal believes that conferring on such Tribunals three additional powers would considerably enhance those powers and enable it to carry out its inquiries more efficiently and more expeditiously. It is consequently recommending that Tribunals of Inquiry be conferred with the power to: require a person to attend the Tribunal for private interview; order the discovery of documents without prior notice; and to seize documents. It also recommends that the Tribunals of Inquiry Acts be amended so as to provide that a Tribunal's terms of reference be drafted as precisely as possible, again in the interests of a speedy and effective inquiry.

1.70 The Tribunal is convinced that if the above recommendations are adopted, they will do much to prevent a repeat of the corruption which necessitated its establishment.

INTRODUCTION

2.01 Corruption is universally condemned and for good reasons. It undermines the equality of individuals before the law, produces unfairness in public policies and distorts the allocation of resources. Corruption is also inimical to democratic government. It alienates the public from those who are supposed to represent it and instills in it the belief that the political system is there to serve vested interests rather than those of the public which it is supposed to serve. It also discourages individuals from becoming engaged in politics and, more generally, from participating in the democratic process. Moreover, by focusing attention on scandals, corruption distracts public attention from substantive public policy issues thereby weakening public debate on these issues. Where political corruption is pervasive it calls into question the very legitimacy of a country's political institutions:

A well functioning democracy cannot survive without citizen trust and confidence in those who govern. Thus, behaviours or acts by officials that diminish citizen trust and confidence are a direct threat to democratic governance. While trust is a renewable resource, 'it is much easier to destroy than to renew' (....). Many factors can destroy trust in government. However, none may destroy trust easier or faster than unethical behaviour or blatant corruption of public officials.

Donald C. Menzel (2007)

2.02 Corruption is also self-perpetuating. Unless unchecked, a corrupt system is likely to become ever more corrupt as the existing moral standards are progressively eroded. Political corruption is a form of social rust which corrodes and delegitimises the political and institutional systems in which it takes root.

2.03 The Tribunal's recommendations affect each of the following areas: planning; conflicts of interest; political finance; lobbying; bribery; corruption in office; money laundering; asset confiscation; as well as a number of miscellaneous areas. In making them, the Tribunal has taken into consideration the very significant developments which have taken place in these areas since the period which formed the focus of its inquiries. While prior to the 1990's, anti-corruption legislation consisted primarily in the common-law and statutory bribery offences, since 1994 a number of other laws have been adopted. These have not only updated the existing bribery offences but introduced a number of new measures, several of which affect the above areas. For obvious reasons, these recommendations focus on the now existing legislative framework.

2.04 In formulating these recommendations, the Tribunal was influenced by a number of considerations regarding the purpose and content of anti-corruption measures.

2.05 Specifically, as is widely known, this Tribunal was established in response to grave public disquiet regarding corruption in the planning system. While actual corruption in public life is itself deeply problematic, it is clear that the mere appearance of corruption also gives rise to serious problems. Specifically, the rumours and allegations in which that disquiet manifested itself were in themselves sufficient to seriously undermine the public's faith in politicians and the political system and to call into question the democratic legitimacy of this State. It follows therefore, that anti-corruption measures must have a dual purpose. First, to control the abuse of public power for private gain and secondly, to promote public confidence in the fact that public power is being exercised in the public interest.

2.06 This dual purpose has evident implications for the scope and content of anti-corruption measures which must be capable of combating not only actual corruption but, also and almost as importantly, apparent corruption. Specifically, in order to restore the public's faith in the political system, anti-corruption measures must take into account the fact that instances of apparent corruption can undermine that faith as effectively as instances of actual corruption. This is not least because the appearance standard is the only standard by which the public can judge the behaviour of public officials. Consequently, anti-corruption measures must ensure that apparently corrupt behavior is either controlled or explained: such behavior cannot be simply ignored if those measures are to fulfill their purposes.

2.07 While traditionally corruption has been viewed as an issue of individual morality, in recent years, advances in understanding both its causes and its consequences mean that it is now also viewed as a problem of systemic failure. In other words, where an individual behaves corruptly, then the problem lies as much with the system which permitted or failed to prevent that behavior as with that individual. Specifically, corruption is most likely to occur where there is a combination of low ethical standards, incentive and opportunity. There will always be individuals tempted to use public power for their own personal profit and the task therefore is to devise a system which substantially reduces both the opportunity and, if possible, the incentives for doing do. This is not to absolve the individual of responsibility for his or her behavior, but merely recognises that institutional factors may play a role in facilitating that behavior.

2.08 Although an effective anti-corruption strategy includes a criminal component, as corruption itself is often rooted in deeper social, cultural and economic factors, these must also be addressed if the fight against corruption is to succeed. Consequently that strategy must also embrace preventative measures as well as supporting measures such as asset recovery. However, this division between the different types of measures is relatively fluid as some preventive measures may have criminal sanctions and criminalisation and asset recovery can be expected to have preventative effects.

2.09 Despite corruption's destructive nature, the Tribunal is conscious of the fact that anti-corruption measures are not an end in themselves. Rather they are a means to an end, namely that of ensuring public power is used as efficiently and effectively as possible in order to promote the welfare of society as a whole. Consequently, in considering these recommendations, the Tribunal did so from the premise that the overall objective of any anti-corruption measure should be to maximize the efficacy of government rather than the complete elimination of any sort of corruption, a goal which may not be achievable without seriously compromising that efficacy. To the extent that corruption can be eliminated, then this depends on the public adopting a zero tolerance approach to all instances of corruption and, in particular, corruption in public office.

2.10 Although the Tribunal acknowledges that some of its recommendations may require a constitutional amendment, it does not consider that this should constitute a barrier to their full implementation, subject to public approval.

2.11 The following chapters describe both this Tribunal's recommendations and the reasons for them in more detail. Overall, these recommendations are rooted in the Tribunal's inquiries and in the vast amount of information contained in the numerous letters which it received from the public concerning corruption. However, the Tribunal has also considered the lessons to be learned from experiences overseas and evolving best practice standards in combating corruption. In addition, it has identified five fundamental principles which have guided and informed these recommendations.

2.12 The Tribunal is convinced that if its recommendations are adopted and actively implemented they will do much to prevent a repetition of the type of corruption which necessitated its establishment in the first place.

2.13 The Tribunal considers that the following five high level principles are key components to combating corruption: a) transparency; b) accountability; c) top-level commitment; d) public involvement; and e) monitoring and review.

The Five Anti-Corruption Principles

Transparency

The decisions and actions of holders of public office must be subject to public scrutiny and the public must have access to the information necessary to make that scrutiny effective

Accountability

Holders of public office must take responsibility for their decisions, provide information about their decisions and justify the correctness of those actions

Top-Level Commitment

Anti-corruption measures must be visibly and consistently supported from the top

Public Support

The public must be fully engaged in and committed to combating corruption

Monitoring and Review

Anti-corruption measures must be constantly monitored and reviewed so that they can be quickly adapted to meet changing corruption risks

TRANSPARENCY

2.14 Transparency is a fundamental principle in combating corruption which is a disease that flourishes in the shade. As U.S. Justice Lewis Brandies, who would later become a member of the U.S. Supreme Court, famously observed, “Sunshine is said to be the best of disinfectants”.

2.15 Transparency requires that the decisions and actions of those in government are open to public scrutiny and that the public has a right of access to the information necessary to make that scrutiny effective. It helps to prevent the misuse of public power for private gain by ensuring that where public power is exercised it is possible to identify the person who authorised that exercise and the reasons for it. This constrains that person’s ability to exercise public power on illegitimate grounds. It also increases the likelihood that a decision made on such grounds can be overturned, thus reducing the motive for making such a decision in the first place. On a related point, transparency facilitates the retrospective scrutiny of decisions made, thus providing an incentive for people to behave in a principled manner. As such, transparency is also a necessary corollary to accountability.

2.16 More broadly, transparency is fundamental to a functioning democratic society which depends on both the consent of the people and their participation in the democratic process. Both consent and effective participation turn on the public being able to scrutinise the actions of government and having the knowledge to do so effectively:

A popular Government without popular information or the means of acquiring it, is but a Prologue to a Farce or a Tragedy or perhaps both. Knowledge will forever govern ignorance, and a people who mean to be their own Governors must arm themselves with the power knowledge gives.

James Madison (1822)

ACCOUNTABILITY

2.17 While accountability can be defined in a number of ways, central to all definitions is the idea that one person or institution is obliged to give an account of his, her, or its activities to another. Accountability has two significant contributions to make to combating corruption. First, it is a necessary means of ensuring the identification of malfeasance in office and those individuals or organisations that perform corruptly. In this respect, the concept of accountability includes that of responsibility.

2.18 Secondly, and perhaps more significantly, accountability ensures answerability. In other words, it ensures that public officials are required to both provide information about their actions and justify their correctness. Ideally, it means that public officials must not only reason their decisions but fully disclose the evidentiary basis upon which those decisions were taken. Such disclosure makes it more difficult for public officials to use their public powers for private gain because it requires them to justify why that use is in the public interest. In addition, it increases the likelihood that those who engage in corrupt conduct will be found out:

As political accountability increases, the costs to public officials of taking decisions that benefit their private interests at the expense of the broader public interest also increase, thus working as a deterrent to corrupt practices.

Kaufmann and Dininio (2006)

2.19 Accountability is also central to the process of detecting and correcting errors, which in turn contributes to the monitoring and review of anti-corruption programmes. Moreover, like transparency, it is essential for the legitimacy of democratic government as it provides a means of assessing just what government has actually produced for its citizens. It also contributes to good governance through promoting informed debate and more effective public participation in the political process:

Poor governance is often associated with a culture of impunity where public officials feel little obligation to be accountable to citizens, and citizens have limited expectations that their elected leaders should be accountable to them. This situation reinforces monopolies on power, which undermine the operation of institutional checks and balances, and create an atmosphere of tolerance for corrupt practices. In such an environment, officials face few pressures for changed behaviour. The power of vested interests remains strong, while reformers find little traction to build coalitions to address corruption problems. Further, poor governance constrains the emergence of a strong civil society and disempowers citizens who would become advocates for anti-corruption policies and programmes.

U4 Brief (2010)

TOP-LEVEL COMMITMENT

2.20 The third of the Tribunal's anti-corruption principles emphasises that if anti-corruption measures are to succeed and high ethical standards are to prevail, then the example must come from the top. Conversely, corruption at the top tends to repeat itself throughout the entire governance system. Anti-corruption measures have little point absent top level support for and commitment to those measures.

2.21 Top-level commitment to combating corruption can manifest itself in a variety of ways. These include strong support for transparent, accountable, corruption free government. They also include the adherence to and effective implementation of international anti-corruption efforts and a commitment to the monitoring and review of anti-corruption efforts on a longer term basis. Also significant is the depoliticisation of anti-corruption inquiries and in particular ensuring that authorities at the front line of corruption prevention and control are sufficiently politically and financially independent to carry out their tasks.

PUBLIC INVOLVEMENT

2.22 Top down initiatives to combat corruption while necessary are in themselves insufficient for combating corruption. To be successful, such initiatives must be mirrored by bottom up demands coming from a public which is fully engaged in and committed to combating corruption. These demands help to strengthen and reinforce political will to confront corruption. In addition, the willingness of the public to engage in anti-corruption efforts through whistleblowing as well as voicing concerns and demands is likely to greatly enhance attempts to uncover corruption when it occurs and to undo its effects.

MONITORING AND REVIEW

2.23 There is no magic cure for corruption and anti-corruption measures which work well in one context or at one time may work badly or not at all in another. Consequently, to be effective, anti-corruption measures must be constantly monitored and reviewed so that they can be quickly adapted to meet changing corruption risks. In the absence of such a monitoring and review function, anti-corruption measures may quickly become obsolete as those to whom they apply learn to exploit loopholes or because new areas of corruption risks emerge. Ideally, those carrying out those functions should receive regular feedback from all authorities involved in combating corruption so as to ensure that they have the information necessary to carry out those functions effectively.

PLANNING

The Tribunal recommends:

- 1. Both the National Development Plan (the “NDP”) and the National Spatial Strategy (the “NSS”) should be placed on a statutory footing and the relevant statute should:
 - state when, how and by whom these measures are to be adopted and reviewed
 - provide for public involvement in adopting those measures including the involvement of local elected members
 - require that the adoption of the NDP and the NSS be subject to Oireachtas approval
 - include equivalent provisions to those that currently apply in relation to development plans for material variations to the NDP or NSS
- 2. Consideration should be given to providing for the direct election of the members of the Regional Authorities
- 3. Each Regional Authority should be required to:
 - compile a report summarising observations, submissions or recommendations made by a local planning authority or the Minister for the Environment, Community and Local Government (the “Minister for the Environment”) when making the draft Regional Planning Guidelines (the “RPGs”) or the RPGs
 - Inform the relevant local authority(s) or Minister for the Environment in writing if it decides to reject a recommendation made by that authority in that report, giving reasons for its decision

The Tribunal recommends:

- 4. The Chairman and the Ordinary Members of the National Transport Authority should be appointed by an Independent Appointments Board
- 5. Further efforts should be made to increase transparency in the planning process. In particular:
 - submissions and observations received in the context of public consultation should be published on the relevant planning authority's website as should the Manager's Report drafted on the basis of any such submissions or observations
 - where the elected members of a planning authority decide to depart from the Manager's recommendations as made in that report, they should be required to give reasons for that decision
 - motions submitted when making the draft development plan or the development plan should be published on the relevant planning authority's website
- 6. Where the elected members intend to grant planning permission in material contravention of the development plan they should be required to give advance notice of at least one month of this intention to the relevant Regional Authority and to the Minister for the Environment and be required to invite and consider submissions in relation to the same
- 7. The use of the procedure set out in s. 140 of the Local Government Act 2001 should be restricted in the case of planning decisions
- 8. Interventions made by elected members in respect of specific planning applications should be noted on the file and that file should be available for inspection on the relevant planning authority's website

The Tribunal recommends:

- 9. Applicants for planning permission should be required to indicate on their application whether they have made a political donation in excess of €55 to an elected member of the planning authority and, if so to identify the member to whom the donation was made

- 10. The Minister for the Environment's enforcement powers should be transferred to an Independent Planning Regulator who should also be charged with carrying out investigations into systemic problems in the planning system as well as being conferred with educational and research functions

3.01 The Tribunal's inquiries have primarily focused on corruption in planning and related matters. While these inquiries have necessarily centred on the activities of specific individuals, it is the Tribunal's belief that in many cases those activities were facilitated by systemic weaknesses in the planning system. Removing those weaknesses and establishing a system which prevents new systemic weaknesses from arising in the future is central to preventing the reoccurrence of corruption in that system.

3.02 The Tribunal recognises that enormous changes have been made in the legislative framework regulating planning and development since the period at the focus of the Tribunal's inquiries, in particular by the Planning and Development Acts 2000 - 2011. It also recognises that the corruption into which it inquired was largely fuelled by the significant profits which were to be made in land development at that time. Because of the collapse in property prices in recent years, such profits are not currently a significant issue in planning. Moreover, the introduction of an 80% windfall tax on profits/gains attributable to land rezoning by the National Asset Management Agency Act 2009 is likely to dramatically reduce incentives to make corrupt payments to influence land zonings should the opportunity to make such profits return.

3.03 Nevertheless, despite these changes, planning and development is likely to continue to pose corruption risks which need to be effectively countered. These recommendations seek to eliminate the existing corruption risks identified by the Tribunal. In broad terms, they seek to improve transparency and accountability in planning and development as well as to ensure that sufficient checks and balances exist to provide a bulwark against the corrupt exercise of public power in this area. They affect all levels of the planning and development system, including the NDP and the NSS, as well as the role of Regional Authorities, the National Transport Authority, the Planning Authorities and the Minister for the Environment in that system.

3.04 In making these recommendations, the Tribunal has taken account of views expressed publicly by the Irish Planning Institute and An Taisce, as well as by several legal commentators. It has also carried out a survey of planning among the planning authorities and taken into consideration various reform proposals contained in the responses to that survey. While the Tribunal notes that the current programme for government proposes further changes in the planning and development system it has based its recommendations on the existing system.

3.05 The Tribunal is aware that a number of commentators have called for the abolition or significant curtailment of the role of the elected members of the planning authorities (“elected members”) in the development process. The Tribunal does not support these calls, for a number of reasons. First, as mentioned, the system for regulating planning and development has changed substantially since the period which formed the focus of this Tribunal’s inquiries and these changes have significantly restricted the role of elected members in that system. Specifically, during that period, the development plan was the key instrument for regulating planning and development. The elected members were responsible for adopting that plan and enjoyed considerable latitude in this respect. Under the current system, the development plan plays a less significant role in that it is subordinate to the NDP, the NSS and the RPGs. Moreover, in making the plan, the planning authorities must take into account submissions made by the Minister for the Environment as well as have regard to guidelines and comply with policy directives issued by him or her.

3.06 In addition, the role of the elected members in the planning process is subject to more checks and balances than was previously the case. For example, when making the development plan they must now engage in a broad consultative process involving the Minister for the Environment, the Regional Authorities and the general public. If those members decide not to comply with a recommendation made by the Minister for the Environment, the relevant planning authority must so inform the Minister and give reasons for its decisions. In addition, the Minister for the Environment may issue directions to planning authorities regarding the content of the development plan. A planning authority cannot exercise a power or perform a function conferred on it by the Planning and Development Acts 2000 – 2011 in a manner that contravenes such a direction.

3.07 Other changes in the role of elected members in the planning and development system have occurred as a result of the reforms introduced by Better Local Government as well as those resulting from laws regulating conflict of interests and political finance. Overall, elected members now have a reduced role in that system, that role is more transparent and they are more accountable for their actions than during the period which formed the focus of this Tribunal’s inquiries.

3.08 Secondly, there are convincing reasons for supporting the continuing role of elected members in the development process and the Tribunal does not consider it appropriate to make recommendations which would undermine or erode that role unless this is absolutely necessary. In particular, the elected members provide the link between local government policy in the area of planning and development and the people most affected by that policy. Over the past years, there has been a growing recognition of the importance of the role played by democratically accountable representatives in local government both domestically and internationally. This is now expressly recognised by Article 28A of the Constitution which provides:

The State recognises the role of local government in providing a forum for the democratic representation of local communities, in exercising and performing at local level powers and functions conferred by law and in promoting by its initiatives the interests of such communities.

It is also recognised in s. 63(1)(a) of the Local Government Act 2001, according to which:

The functions of a local authority are to provide a forum for the democratic representation of the local community and to provide for civic leadership for that community.

3.09 On an international basis, the Council of Europe's European Charter of Local Government is based on the premise that the safeguarding and reinforcement of local self-government makes an important contribution to the construction of a Europe based on the principles of democracy and the decentralisation of power. According to that Charter:

This entails the existence of local authorities endowed with democratically constituted decision-making bodies and possessing a wide degree of autonomy with regard to their responsibilities, the ways and means by which those responsibilities are exercised and the resources required for their fulfillment.

3.10 Thirdly and finally, the Tribunal is unconvinced that further restricting the role of democratically elected members in the development process would necessarily alleviate corruption risks. There is no reason to suppose that these members are more prone to corruption than other individuals. Rather, planning and development are areas which are particularly likely to give rise to corruption because of the financial opportunities which can be created by the rezoning or development of land and because of the fact that land is a finite resource. Corruption risks in planning must be properly managed irrespective of the identity of the decision making authority and the Tribunal considers that the best way to do so is through ensuring transparency and accountability in the planning system.

NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT PLAN AND NATIONAL SPATIAL STRATEGY

The NDP and the NSS should be placed on a statutory footing and the relevant statute should:

state when, how and by whom these measures are to be adopted and reviewed provide for public involvement in adopting those measures including that of local elected members require that the adoption of the NDP and the NSS be subject to Oireachtas approval, and include equivalent provisions to those that currently apply in relation to the development plan for material variations to the NDP or NSS

3.11 Both the NDP and the NSS play a key role in the planning system. The NDP “sets out the roadmap to Ireland’s future”. It anticipates future socio-economic needs and identifies the measures necessary to meet those needs. It has four basic objectives, namely: 1) to continue sustainable national economic and employment growth; 2) to strengthen and improve Ireland’s international competitiveness; 3) to foster balanced Regional Development; and 4) to promote Social Inclusion.

3.12 The NSS seeks to guide “future infrastructural, industrial, residential and rural development in Ireland while providing protection for our culture, natural and environmental heritage”. It aims at achieving a more balanced regional development and identifies a framework of Gateways, Hubs and other urban and rural areas to drive that development. It also provides for a framework for the development of effective transport, communications, energy and linkages which will be necessary to support those Gateways, Hubs, etc, if they are to achieve their objectives. In this respect, it sets down indicative policies in relation to the location of industrial development, residential development, services, rural development, tourism and heritage. The detailed implementation of the NSS is entrusted to the RPGs, the Development Plan and Local Area Plans.

3.13 Despite their importance in the planning hierarchy, neither the NDP nor the NSS have a specific statutory basis. In particular, there are no provisions providing for or requiring their adoption or stipulating the relevant adoption procedure. Nor are there any provisions regulating the variation of either instrument, despite the fact that there may be substantial socio-economic changes during the period covered by those instruments which may necessitate revisiting some of their objectives.

3.14 The Tribunal is also concerned that the planning and development system introduced pursuant to the Planning and Development Act 2000 adversely affected the role of democratically elected members in the development process without providing for an increased role for national elected representatives to counter balance this effect. Moreover, it conferred more extensive powers on the executive in the planning process without providing for effective Oireachtas supervision over the exercise of those powers.

3.15 The Tribunal recommends that both the NDP and the NSS be placed on a statutory footing. The relevant provisions should specify when and how the relevant instruments are to be adopted/varied. They should also provide for a public consultation process involving the elected members as well as the broader public. This should help ensure increased transparency in the process for adopting these instruments and also ensure that local interests are taken into consideration. Once drafted, the adoption of the NDP and/or the NSS should be subject to Oireachtas approval in order to increase the accountability of the executive and to ensure increased transparency in the adoption of those measures.

REGIONAL AUTHORITIES AND REGIONAL PLANNING GUIDELINES

Consideration should be given to providing for the direct election of the members of the Regional Authorities

Regional Authorities should be required to:

- compile a report summarising observations, submissions or recommendations made by a local planning authority or the Minister for the Environment when making the draft RPGs or the RPGs

- Inform the relevant local authority or Minister for the Environment in writing if it decides to reject a recommendation made by that authority in that Report, giving reasons for its decision

3.16 The regional authorities were established by the Local Government Act, 1991 (Regional Authorities) (Establishment Order), 1993 and came into existence in 1994. There are 8 such authorities and their size varies from 21 Members to 37 Members. Members of the regional authorities are not directly elected but are nominated from among the elected members of the local authorities in the region.

3.17 The regional authorities play an important role in the planning process both as regards the adoption of the RPGs and as regards the adoption of Development Plans within the relevant regions.

3.18 The regional authorities are responsible for adopting the RPGs. Their principal function is “to link national strategic spatial planning policies to the planning process at City and County Council level by co-ordinating the Development Plans of these 34 local authorities through the Regional Planning Guidelines.” As previously mentioned, each development plan must demonstrate its consistency with the regional development objectives set out in the relevant RPGs. In addition, when making a development plan or a local area plan, a planning authority must ensure that it is consistent with any RPGs in force for its area.

3.19 Regional authorities also have a strong input in the making of the Development Plan. Specifically, each planning authority must notify the relevant regional authority when making a draft development plan, a development plan or when varying an existing plan. That authority must then make written submissions or observations. In the case of the draft plan, these must contain a report on matters which the regional authority thinks require consideration by the planning authority concerned in making the development plan. In the case of the development plan or a variation to the plan, the submissions or observations must contain a report setting out whether the regional authority considers the plan or variation to be consistent with the RPGs in force in the area affected by that plan or variation. Where the regional authority considers the plan or variation of it to be inconsistent with the RPGs, it must indicate the amendments required to ensure consistency in this respect. The regional authority must also send a copy of these submissions or observations to the Minister for the Environment.

3.20 In exercising their functions under the planning acts, the regional authorities are primarily accountable to the Minister for the Environment who may issue directions to the regional authorities regarding compliance with their responsibilities under those acts.

ELECTED MEMBERS

3.21 The increased role of the regional authorities in the planning process has largely been at the expense of the planning authorities despite the fact that the regional authorities do not have a direct democratic mandate for that role. The lack of such a mandate is an important lacuna in ensuring the accountability of those authorities for their role in the planning process.

3.22 In addition, members of the regional authorities are drawn from local elected representatives nominated from amongst the members of the local planning authorities in the relevant region. The Tribunal is concerned that individuals who are members of both a planning authority and a regional authority may have a disproportionate impact on the planning process. These individuals can influence the content of RPGs as well as that of the relevant planning authority's Development Plan and Local Area Plan. They also play a role in monitoring the compliance of their own local authority with the requirements of the Planning and Development Acts 2000 – 2011. Moreover, while accountable to their own constituents, regional authority members are not accountable to the broader electorate of the relevant local area, whom they also represent. Further, on a practical note, it is questionable whether regional authority members have the necessary time to devote to their regional tasks given that they are also members of planning authorities, and given that regional issues may be of, at most, peripheral interest to their constituents. This may detract from their optimal performance of those tasks.

3.23 Overall, the Tribunal is concerned that the importance of the role played by the regional authorities in the planning process is not adequately reflected in the manner in which their members are appointed and that this has adverse implications both for their accountability and for the transparency of their decision making processes. The Tribunal is also concerned that the regional authorities are relatively invisible players from a public perspective and believes that their activities may not be subject to the intensity of public scrutiny which their powers would appear to warrant.

3.24 The Tribunal believes that the direct election of the members of the regional authorities would counter many of these risks mentioned above and therefore recommends that consideration be given to providing for such elections.

3.25 In the event that members of the regional authorities are to be directly elected, the Tribunal recommends that a certain percentage of those members should be elected by the entire electorate of the relevant region. In the course of its inquiries, the Tribunal came across instances where developments which were unpopular in their own locality were rejected by the specific members of those localities but then supported by their political colleagues. In at least some instances this was a deliberate and cynical ploy to ensure that the members of those constituencies could repudiate responsibility for the development and thus avoid any ensuing electorate consequences. In turn those members voted for developments which were unpopular in other localities. The Tribunal considers that making at least a proportion of the members directly accountable to the entire regional electorate might contribute to some extent to preventing such practices.

INCREASED ROLE OF LOCAL PLANNING AUTHORITIES AND MINISTER FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

3.26 The Tribunal considers that the planning authorities should have an increased role in the adoption of the RPGs, largely through amendments in the consultation process. In addition, the Minister for the Environment should play a more active role in supervising the adoption of those guidelines.

3.27 Under the existing provisions, regional authorities are required to consult with various persons including the Minister for the Environment and planning authorities when drafting and making RPGs. However, they are simply required to consider any submissions received, following from that consultation.

3.28 This contrasts sharply with the obligations placed on planning authorities when they receive submissions or observations from the regional authorities regarding the draft Development Plan or the Development Plan. Specifically, as well as being obliged to consult with those authorities, the planning authority Manager must issue a report summarising the issues set out in those submissions or observations. The Manager must also outline his or her recommendations regarding the manner in which those issues and recommendations should be addressed in the development plan. Moreover, when making the development plan, if a planning authority decides not to comply with a recommendation made by a regional authority it must so inform that authority in writing as soon as practicable setting out reasons for its decisions.

3.29 The Tribunal is recommending that the existing provisions requiring regional authorities to consult with planning authorities and/or the Minister for the Environment when drafting the RPGs be amended so as to mirror more closely those which apply to those planning authorities when consulting with the regional authorities, albeit with some differences. Specifically each Regional Authority should be required to write a report on the submissions or observations received following on from the consultation process indicating its views on any issues raised and that report should be publicly available. Moreover, where the Minister for the Environment or a planning authority makes a recommendation regarding the RPGs, the regional authority should be required to give written reasons if it decides not to comply with that recommendation and to communicate those reasons to the Minister for the Environment or planning authority, as the case may be.

THE NATIONAL TRANSPORT AUTHORITY

The Chairman and the Ordinary Members of the National Transport Authority should be appointed by an Independent Appointments Board

3.30 The National Transport Authority is a statutory body established in 2009, the Members of which are appointed by the Minister for Transport. The NTA performs a number of different functions, several of which impact directly and significantly on planning and development. Specifically, the NTA has a role in the adoption of the RPGs, the Development Plan as well in the adoption of Local Area Plans.

3.31 With regard to the RPG's, a regional authority in the Greater Dublin Area (GDA) must consult with the NTA when it intends to draw up RPGs. The NTA must then prepare a report for that authority on the issues it considers pertinent to those RPGs. Subsequently, when preparing the draft RPGs the regional authority must explain how those guidelines intend to address the matters identified in the NTA's report. It must also give reasons if it does not intend to address those matters, or to only address them partially. On completion of the draft RPGs, the NTA must make a written submission indicating whether or not they are consistent with its transport policy and any amendments necessary to achieve such consistency. It must also indicate what amendments it considers necessary to the RPGs to ensure effective integration of transport and planning. The NTA must send copies of these submissions to the Minister for the Environment and the Minister for Transport. The Minister for the Environment may issue binding directions to the authorities for the Greater Dublin Area to take measures to review the draft RPGs to ensure consistency with the transport strategy of the NTA.

3.32 A regional authority outside the GDA must also consult with the NTA when it intends to make RPGs or to review existing guidelines. The NTA must then prepare a report for that regional authority indicating the issues which it thinks should be addressed by that regional authority in making those RPGs.

3.33 With regard to the Development Plan, the planning authorities in the GDA must ensure that their plans are consistent with the NTA's Transport Strategy. In addition, all planning authorities must consult with the NTA when making either a draft development plan or a development plan. In the case of the draft plan, the NTA must then prepare a report on the issues which, in its opinion, should be considered in the review of its existing development plan and the preparation of a new development plan. In the case of the development plan, the NTA must prepare written submissions indicating whether the draft is consistent or inconsistent with its transport strategy, indicating what amendments it considers necessary to achieve such consistency. The NTA must then send a copy of its submissions to the Minister for the Environment and the Minister for Transport. Similar provisions apply to the variation of a development plan. Where the Minister for the Environment receives a submission from the NTA indicating that a plan of a planning authority in the GDA is not consistent with its transport strategy, the Minister may direct that planning authority to take such specified measures as he or she may require in relation to the plan.

3.34 Planning authorities are required to consult with the NTA when making, amending or revoking a Local Area Plan. The NTA must prepare a written report setting out its opinion on issues which should be considered in relation to that Plan.

3.35 In view of the considerable powers exercised by the NTA in the planning and development system, the Tribunal is of the opinion that its members should be appointed by an Independent Appointments Board.

THE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Submissions and observations received in the context of public consultation should be published on the relevant planning authority's website as should the Manager's Report drafted on the basis of those submissions or observations

Where the Elected Members of a planning authority decide to depart from the Manager's recommendations as made in his or her report they should be required to give reasons for this decision

Motions submitted when making the draft development plan or the development plan should be published on the relevant planning authority's website

3.36 In recent years, public consultation has become a far more significant part of the process of making the draft development plan, the development plan and/or varying that plan than was previously the case. The Tribunal fully supports this development and considers public involvement in the planning and development process to be an important factor in promoting transparency and accountability in that process. The Tribunal believes that strengthening the public consultation process could bring further gains in this respect.

3.37 Under the current system, when making the draft development plan, the development plan and/or when varying the development plan, the planning authority must engage in public consultation. The public is thereby given the opportunity to make its views known to that authority. At the end of each public consultation period, the Manager must summarise the submissions or observations made by outlining the issues raised and giving his or her response to those issues and the reasons for rejecting certain views, if this be the case. This report is then given to the elected members for their consideration.

3.38 The Tribunal believes that the public should have the opportunity to verify that the Manager has in fact addressed each of those issues in his Report and that it should kept fully informed of the Manager's views of and responses to these issues. Consequently, it recommends that the submissions and observations made in relation to the development plan should be made routinely available to the public at large as should the Manager's Report.

3.39 While, as mentioned, the Manager is currently required to give reasons if he or she rejects views raised in the public consultation process, the elected members are not subject to an equivalent requirement. Nor are those members required to give reasons for rejecting the Manager's recommendations. The Tribunal considers that requiring the elected members to collectively agree and give reasons in both these instances, would help promote the transparency of the decision-making process and the accountability of those members to the electorate. In addition, such reasons are crucial for ensuring that those members comply with their obligation to base their decisions on the proper planning and sustainable development of the area to which the plan relates. Moreover, the Tribunal is of the view that requiring reasons in these instances could promote public involvement in the consultation process. Specifically, members of the public maybe more likely to engage in that process if they are assured that their views will be subject to reasoned consideration on the part of the elected members.

3.40 Finally, the Tribunal notes that some local authorities already publish motions submitted by the elected members during the course of the preparation, consideration and making of the draft development plan and the development plan on their website. The Tribunal considers such publication to make an important contribution to transparency in the planning process and recommends that this practice be followed by all planning authorities.

PLANNING PERMISSION

Where Elected Members intend to grant planning permission in material contravention of the development plan they should be required to give notice, of at least 1 month, of this intention to the relevant Regional Authority and the Minister for Environment and to invite and consider submissions in relation to this intention

3.41 The purpose of the development plan is to set out an overall strategy for the proper planning and sustainable development of the area of the development plan. Planning permission which is in material contravention of that development plan can only be given if the elected members pass a motion granting that permission using the material contravention procedure. Under this procedure the relevant planning authority must first engage in a process of public consultation with regard to the proposed decision. The Manager must then prepare a report for the planning authority on any submissions or observations received in the context of that consultation as well as on the compatibility of the proposed development with relevant ministerial policies or objectives or with the RPGs. Finally, a decision to grant permission in material contravention of the development plan must be passed by three quarters of the total number of the members of the planning authority.

3.42 The material contravention procedure ensures an important element of flexibility into the planning system. However, the Tribunal is concerned that the current discretion enjoyed by elected members to grant planning permission in material contravention of the development plan undermines the system of checks and balances which applies when making and/or varying that plan. For example, the consultation procedures which apply when making or varying the development plan are more onerous than those applicable under the material contravention procedure. Moreover, whereas the development plan must be consistent with the RPGs, there is no equivalent requirement where planning is granted in material contravention of that plan.

3.43 The Tribunal recognises that it is more difficult for the elected members to pass a motion which is in material contravention of the plan than to either adopt or vary that plan. Nevertheless, it considers that increased measures are necessary to ensure that the material contravention procedure does not undermine the overall system for regulating development. The measures being recommended by the Tribunal largely affect the consultation procedures which apply when making or varying a development plan.

3.44 With regard to public consultation, the making of a development plan usually attracts considerable publicity. This is not always the case when it is proposed to make a decision to grant planning permission in material contravention of a development plan. Moreover, the existing requirement to give public notice where it is intended to grant such permission is confined to publishing notice of that intention in a newspaper circulating in the area and giving copies of the notice to those who have made a submission or observation in writing in relation to the application for planning permission. The Tribunal considers that increased efforts are needed to draw such proposed decisions to the attention of the section of the public most likely to be affected by them. The Tribunal is therefore recommending that those in the area who will be directly affected by a decision to grant planning permission in material contravention of the development plan should be specifically informed about the proposed decision.

3.45 In addition, the Tribunal is recommending that the consultation procedure applicable to decisions to grant planning permission in material contravention of the development plan should be amended so as to mirror that applicable to the procedure to vary a development plan. Under the material contravention procedure, the planning authority is only required to specifically notify a prescribed body which has been notified of the application of the planning authority. In contrast, when a planning authority is intending to vary a development plan, it must give notice of its intention to do so to both the relevant regional authorities and the Minister. Once such a notice is received, those regional authorities must make written submissions and observations including a report stating whether the proposed variation is compatible with the RPGs in force for the area of the development plan. If the Minister makes submissions, the Manager must specifically address the issues raised in those submissions in the Manager's Report. The Tribunal considers that incorporating these requirements into the procedure for granting planning permission in material contravention of the development plan would increase the accountability of planning authorities when granting that planning permission. It should also mean that that procedure cannot be used as a means of undermining the role of RPGs, the NDP and the NSS in the regulation of planning and development.

3.46 The Tribunal is aware that some commentators have proposed applying the same voting requirements to the procedure for varying the development plan as currently apply to the material contravention procedure. This would mean that a motion to vary the development plan would have to be passed by three quarters of the total number of the members of the planning authority rather than by a majority of those members, as is currently the case. The reason for this proposal is that, in many instances either procedure can be used to the same effect. For example, where permission is sought for planning in material contravention of the plan, the elected members may be able to vary the plan so that the permission sought is no longer in material contravention of it. This obviously by-passes the requirements of the material contravention procedure.

3.47 While the Tribunal has considered making a recommendation requiring decisions to vary the development plan to be passed by three quarters of the total number of a planning authority's elected members, in the end it has chosen not to do so. In this respect, the Tribunal was concerned that imposing such a voting requirement carries its own risks in that it could confer on a minority of elected members a disproportionate amount of power in the planning process. It is also aware that in its original form the Planning and Development Bill 2009 proposed such a voting requirement but it was subsequently amended after substantial objections were raised to it on a number of compelling grounds.

The use of the procedure set out in s. 140 of the Local Government Act 2001 should be restricted in the case of planning decisions

3.48 Section 140 of the Local Government Act 2001 empowers the elected members of a local authority to direct the Manager to do “any particular matter or thing specifically mentioned in the resolution and which the local authority or the manager concerned can lawfully do or effect to be done or effected in the performance of the executive functions of the local authority”. Section 140 is the successor to s. 4 of the City and County Management (Amendment) Act, 1955.

3.49 While s. 140 is not confined to planning, members may use their powers under this section to direct the Manager to grant or refuse planning permission. As in the case of other decisions on planning permission, when deciding whether to direct the Manager to grant permissions, the Members are restricted to considering the proper planning and sustainable development of the area.

3.50 Section 140 is an important tool in establishing the primacy of the elected members in local affairs. However, insofar as planning is concerned, the use of the power conferred by s. 140 and, previously, its predecessor, s. 4 has long been the subject of severe criticism. In particular, there is a widespread view that the elected members have used that power to instruct the Manager to grant planning applications against the advice of the professional planners in the local authority planning departments and to the general detriment of planning and development in the relevant area. Moreover, it is considered to introduce an unacceptable subjective element into the planning process in that who you are or who you know can determine the outcome of a planning application. There is also a view that in some instances at least some elected members have used their powers under s. 140 corruptly.

3.51 The use of s. 140 in planning is a clear source of corruption risks. Consequently, the Tribunal considered whether or not planning should be excluded from the s. 140 procedure or whether the use of that section should be restricted in the case of planning decisions. The Tribunal is reluctant to recommend that planning be excluded from the s. 140 procedure given that the changes brought about by the Planning and Development Act 2010 and those which will result from the implementation of these recommendations may be sufficient to counter the corruption risks to which that procedure gives rise. However, it is recommending that its use be subject to a number of restrictions.

3.52 Generally, s. 140 should only come into play when there is some disagreement between the professional planners and the elected Members regarding the proper planning and sustainable development of the area. The Tribunal considers therefore that when a s. 140 motion is being proposed, the elected members should be required to give written reasons specifying precisely why they disagree with the recommendations of the professional planners. The Tribunal also recommends that in the event the motion is passed, notice of it together with the reasons justifying it and the advice of the professional planners should be sent to An Bord Pleanála who should have the power to veto the direction within a specified period, having heard submissions from the elected members, objectors or affected persons and the Manager.

3.53 The use of s. 140 motions in planning should be kept under on-going review in order to determine whether these measures are sufficient to minimise the actual and apparent corruption risks arising from those motions.

PLANNING APPLICATIONS

Interventions made by elected members in respect of specific planning applications should be noted on the file and that file should be made available for inspection on the relevant planning authority's website

Applicants for planning permission should be required to indicate on their application whether they have made a political donation in excess of €55 to an elected member of the planning authority and, if so, to identify the member to whom that donation was made

3.54 Elected members have an important representative role in local communities. In some instances this role requires an elected member to liaise between members of the public and the planning department. However, this representative role may be in conflict with that member's role in the overall planning process and give rise to certain corruption risks, both actual and apparent.

3.55 While the Code of Conduct for Councillors (2004) gives some guidance to councillors in respect of their planning functions, it is quite general in this respect. The Tribunal recommends that more specific guidance be given on this issue.

3.56 The Tribunal is also aware that some planning authorities keep a written note on representations made on the relevant file. In the interests of transparency, the Tribunal recommends that this practice should be followed by all planning authorities and cover both oral and written representations. In addition, the relevant file should be made available for inspection via the internet. The Tribunal notes that this will contribute to the attainment of one of the goals of the Code of Conduct for Local Government Councillors, according to which the involvement of elected members in planning matters should be carried out in a transparent fashion, including input by individual councillors in relation to planning applications.

3.57 The Tribunal also recommends that where an elected member has made a representation on behalf of a planning applicant, that member should be required to make an ad hoc declaration to that effect prior to voting on a matter before the planning authority pertaining to that application or the lands to which it relates. Similarly, members should be required to declare on an ad hoc basis whether or not they have received a political donation in excess of the disclosure thresholds specified in the Local Elections Acts by a person likely to be affected by the council's decision in respect of the relevant planning application. This recommendation is set out in more detail in the chapter of conflicts of interest.

3.58 In addition, in order to ensure maximum transparency over the role of elected members in the planning process, the Tribunal recommends that applicants for planning permission should be required to indicate on their application whether they have made a political donation in excess of €60 to an elected member of the planning authority and to identify that member.

THE PLANNING REGULATOR

The Minister for the Environment's enforcement powers should be transferred to an Independent Planning Regulator who should also be charged with carrying out investigations into systemic problems in the planning system as well as educational and research functions

3.59 Under the current system, the Minister for the Environment plays a dual role in the planning system. First, he or she is responsible for issuing planning guidelines and policy directions. Secondly, he or she plays a significant role in enforcement and in particular in ensuring that the national hierarchy of plans is observed. This is in itself a key element in ensuring the existence of effective checks and balances in the planning system.

3.60 In so far as enforcement is concerned, the Minister's powers affect both regional authorities and planning authorities. Specifically, in both cases, the Minister may direct the relevant authority to take such measures as he or she may require in relation to either the RPGs or the development plan, as the case may be. In both cases, the Minister may issue such directions when: the authority has ignored submissions made by the Minister or failed to take sufficient account of them; the plan or guidelines are not in compliance with the requirements of the PDA 2000 – 2011; and where they are not consistent with the NTA's transport strategy in circumstances where they are required to be consistent with that strategy. Where the Minister issues a direction the relevant authority must comply with it and must not exercise a power or perform a function conferred on it by the PDA 2000 – 2011 in a manner that contravenes that direction. With regard to the development plan, the Minister's power to give directions also arises where the plan fails to set out an overall strategy for the proper planning and sustainable development of the area. Similarly, in the case of RPGs, that power arises where the guidelines fail to provide a long-term strategic planning framework for the development of the region in respect of which they are made, in accordance with the principles of proper planning.

3.61 The Tribunal is concerned at the extent of the Minister's powers in the planning system as a whole. Specifically, the Minister is heavily involved in the making of both the NDP and the NSS. He or she also plays a significant consultative role in the making of the RPGs and development plans and may also play a significant role in determining some of the contents of those guidelines and plans.

3.62 Moreover, there appear to be significant gaps in the enforcement system. In particular, ensuring that the development plan and/or the RPGs actually comply with the NSS and the NDP as well as the terms of the PDA 2000-2011 appears largely dependent on the Minister. However, it is far from clear that the Minister has either the necessary time or the resources to monitor compliance with the PDA 2000 – 2011. If the Minister chooses not to exercise his or her powers, the only other option for challenging the plan or guidelines appears to be a judicial review action, the costs of which may be prohibitive for either individuals or groups.

3.63 Another difficulty with the current system is that no provision is made for continuing professional education or the on-going review of that system. However, there appears to be a broad-based need for such provisions. For example, while in exercising some of their powers under those Acts the elected members are restricted to considering the proper planning and sustainable development of the area to which the development plan relates, they may have little awareness of what constitutes such “proper” planning and development. Consequently educating members as to best practice in planning and development appears essential to a well functioning planning system.

3.64 On-going research into best practice in the area of planning and development as well as systematic monitoring of the existing provisions in order to identify any issues or problems arising would also provide an important bulwark against corruption. Again, however, under the current system no one is entrusted with these functions.

3.65 In view of the above, the Tribunal is recommending the creation of a new post, to be known as the Independent Planning Regulator, and that the Minister’s current role in enforcement be conferred on that Regulator. Provisions currently requiring regional authorities and planning authorities to notify and consult with the Minister regarding RPGs and Development Plans should be extended to cover the Planning Regulator. The Regulator should have the power to issue directions to local and regional planning authorities to ensure compliance with the planning hierarchy, along with the overall responsibility for ensuring that the decisions of planning authorities take account of the proper planning and sustainable development of the relevant area. Moreover, he or she should have the power to investigate instances where there appear to be systemic problems in the planning system, including possible corruption. As part of this process, the Regulator should be empowered to conduct reviews (including spot-checks) of any aspect of the work practices and/or procedures of planning authorities, including those relating to applications for, refusals of, and grants of planning permissions, and to do so without advance notice to a planning authority, or any other party. In addition, he or she should provide the elected members with ongoing guidance and education as to what constitutes proper planning and development as well as providing updates on all matters to which they are obliged to have regard. He or she should also keep the planning system under review and carry out relevant research activities in order to ensure that corruption risks are identified and corrected as they arise and more broadly, that the planning and development system is functioning optimally. Finally, the Regulator should prepare and publish a report annually, relating to all aspects of the Regulator’s work carried out within the previous 12 month period, and to make in that report (or at any time) recommendations for legislative or other change in the planning system.

3.66 The Regulator should be appointed by an independent board following an open application procedure and should have a good knowledge of both planning and development law and best practice in planning and development. He or she should have wide powers of investigation, including the power to question witnesses and to compel the production of documents.

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

The Tribunal recommends:

(1) Each person falling within the scope of the Ethics in Public Office Acts 1995 and 2001 (the “Ethics Acts”) or Part 15 of the Local Government Act 2001 (the “LGA”), (collectively “public officials”) should be required to disclose periodically his or her own specified interests as well as those held by:

- his or her family members, or any other person who is wholly or substantially dependent on that public official or whose affairs are so closely connected with that official’s affairs that a benefit derived by the person, or a substantial part of it, could pass to the public official (a “related person”)
- corporate entities and/or other legal arrangements in which the public official or one of the above mentioned persons has a controlling legal or beneficial interest as well as any other entities or arrangements in which the former entities/arrangements have a controlling interest

(2) In addition, to the interests which currently require disclosure, each public official should be required to disclose periodically the following categories of interests:

- assets
- liabilities
- sources and amounts of income
- any company in which the person has a legal or beneficial interest
- all company offices held by the person and all company management positions
- the person’s legal and beneficial interests in land including the family home

- all gifts and benefits of more than a specified amount received by the person in the relevant period which reasonably appear to be unconnected with that person's public office
- non-pecuniary interests in so far as those interests are capable of being reasonably perceived to give rise to a conflict of interests

(3) each public official should be required to:

- Make a periodic disclosure of interests within 30 days of entering public office and update any interest disclosed in the context of a periodic disclosure within 30 days of a significant change in that interest
- disclose the source of any income in excess of €1,000 and gifts/benefits in excess of €250 received either within the twelve months prior to assuming public office or subsequent to leaving it

(4) Each public official should be required to disclose on an ad hoc basis any interest which could be reasonably seen to be capable of influencing him or her in the performance of his or her public functions ("ad hoc disclosure")(5) Both periodic and ad hoc disclosures should be made more widely available. In particular:

- Periodic disclosures made under the LGA should be published on the relevant local authority's website as should minutes of local authority meetings and documents debated in the course of those meetings
- Ad hoc disclosures made by both elected and senior non elected public officials should be published, including those made at cabinet meetings

The Tribunal recommends:

- (6) Both the Members' and Officeholders' codes of conduct should be amended so as to define a conflict of interest to include all interests which could be reasonably considered to influence a Member's or Officeholder's performance of his or her public functions
- (7) Each Public official should be prohibited from receiving any gift or benefit which could be reasonably perceived to be connected with the performance of his or her public functions other than gifts of a nominal value provided in the course of the performance of those functions
- (8) Further measures should be introduced to regulate conflicts of interest arising out of the use of inside information by Officeholders
- (9) Each public official falling within the scope of the Ethics Acts ("national public official") should be prohibited from entering into a contract for the provision of goods or services to a public body both while a public official and for a period of one year following the end of his or her term in office. Equivalent restrictions should be placed on a public official falling within the scope of the LGA ("local public official") from entering into such contracts with the local authority of which he or she is a member/employee
- (10) Each local elected representative should be prohibited from dealing with land both during his or her term of office and for a period of two years thereafter where the Local Authority of which that representative is a member has made a decision changing the planning or zoning status of that land during that representative's term of office, where he or she has voted on that decision and where he or she is engaged in an outside activity which primarily involves the sale and/or development of land
- (11) Conflicts of Interest on the part of Officeholders arising from post-term employment should be subject to increased and more effective regulation

The Tribunal recommends:

(12) The enforcement provisions applicable to conflicts of interests at national level should be modified so as to:

- Give the Standards in Public Office Commission (SIPO) a supervisory role over the Select Committees
- Permit SIPO to: (i) accept an anonymous or oral complaint (ii) sit with a quorum of three members; (iii) appoint an inquiry officer when carrying out its own investigations; and (iv) seize documents
- Place increased emphasis on the prevention of conflicts of interests through training, education and research

(11) The system for enforcing the conflict of interests provisions in the LGA should be modified so as to:

- Give SIPO a supervisory role over enforcement at local level
- Provide for a formal complaint procedure
- Provide for whistleblower protection for complainants
- Require each local authority to include information on the application and enforcement of the conflict of interests measures in its annual report
- Place increased emphasis on the prevention of conflicts of interests through training, education and research

4.01 In the public sphere, a conflict of interests occurs where a person exercising a public power has a private interest which could reasonably be seen to be affected by the exercise of that power. Such conflicts can arise from both pecuniary and non pecuniary private interests. This Tribunal inquired into several conflicts of interests in the course of its inquiries.

4.02 Conflicts of interests pose an interesting challenge from an anti-corruption perspective. On the one hand, they are inevitable and a public official may have any number of private interests capable of giving rise to a conflict of interests. On the other, they are a root cause of corruption as a public official is more likely to abuse his or her public powers when he or she benefits directly or indirectly from doing so. Eliminating all interests likely to give rise to a conflict of interests is neither possible nor necessarily desirable. The challenge therefore is to ensure that conflicts of interests are appropriately identified and controlled.

4.03 Meeting this challenge is crucial to ensuring transparency and accountability in the exercise of public power. Specifically, the effective identification and control of conflicts of interests plays a significant role in ensuring that public power is exercised legitimately in the public interest rather than for the private gain of those public officials entrusted with its exercise. The willingness of public officials to open up their affairs to public scrutiny also expresses their strong commitment to combating corruption in public office and demonstrates that they are worthy of the trust placed in them by the public.

4.04 Conflicts of interests are currently regulated at national level by the Ethics Acts and at local level by the LGA (collectively, “the conflict of interest acts”), together with their related codes of conduct. These acts largely ensure the identification and regulation of conflicts of interests through disclosure. The Tribunal is aware that the efficacy of disclosure in dealing with such conflicts has been questioned. Nevertheless, it is not aware of any alternative proposal for dealing with them more effectively. The Tribunal’s recommendations therefore focus on ensuring that the existing conflicts of interests acts ensure the effective identification and, in some instances, further regulation of all interests capable of giving rise to a conflict of interests. These recommendations can be broadly divided into four categories, namely, those relating to: 1) the disclosure of conflicts of interests; 2) the further regulation of conflicts of interests; 3) the enforcement of the conflicts of interests measures; and 4) sanctions.

4.05 Currently, there are a number of differences between the rules applicable to conflicts of interest at national level, on the one hand, and at local level on the other. Overall, those at local level are stricter than those which apply at national level and the consequences of infringing them are more severe. This appears illogical: generally, the more senior the public official the more significant the existence of a conflict from a corruption perspective. In particular, there does not appear to be a convincing rationale for controlling conflicts of interests at local level more strictly than at national level. Consequently, the Tribunal's recommendations apply equally to conflicts of interests at both national and local level. However, the Tribunal recognises that there maybe some justification for attenuating the strict implementation of some of these recommendations at local level.

4.06 In formulating these recommendations the Tribunal has taken into account the corruption risks posed by both actual and apparent conflicts of interest. Actual conflicts of interests essentially arise where a public official has a private interest which is likely to be affected by the exercise of his or her public powers. Such interest give rise to risks of actual corruption as a public official is more likely to exercise his or her powers other than in the public interest when he or she gains personally from doing so.

4.07 Apparent conflicts of interests arise where a public official has an interest which could be reasonably perceived to be capable of influencing him or her in the exercise of those powers but it cannot in fact do so. While apparent conflicts of interest do not pose risks of actual corruption, they pose other corruption risks. Specifically, if unregulated, apparent conflicts of interest can give rise to a perception of corruption which can be as damaging to the public's faith in the democratic institutions of the State as actual corruption. Moreover, like actual conflicts of interest, apparent conflicts of interest focus the public's attention on scandals, thereby distracting it from substantive policy issues and weakening public participation in debates on those issues. Apparent conflicts of interests can also make instances of corruption arising from actual conflicts of interests appear less reprehensible on the basis of a mistaken assumption that "everyone is doing it".

4.08 The Tribunal considers the regulation of apparent conflicts of interest to be vital to an effective conflict of interests policy. It notes that this view is widely shared in conflict of interests literature as well as in the conflict of interests measures recommended by various international organisations.

perceived conflicts of interest even when the right decisions are made, can be as damaging to the reputation of an organisation and erode public trust as an actual conflict of interest.

Pope (2000)

One of the axioms of our system of government is that public officials should subordinate to the interests of the public their own personal interests and those of their associates. Few things are more subversive of public confidence in government than the appearance that officials might not be doing so.

Royal Commission into Commercial Activities of Government (1992)

4.09 In considering these recommendations, the Tribunal consulted with a number of third parties including, in particular, SIPO and TASC. It also took into account conflict of interest measures adopted by a number of international organisations, namely the U.N. the OECD and the Council of Europe as well as those applied in the U.K., Canada, and Australia. Annex 1 gives a brief overview of some of these measures.

4.10 Ultimately, however, each recommendation arises from the deficiencies which the Tribunal has identified in the existing domestic conflict of interest measures and the need to remedy those deficiencies.

DISCLOSURE

4.11 The identification of interests likely to give rise to a conflict of interests is a key element in ensuring their effective regulation and disclosure is the main way of ensuring that identification. The conflict of interests acts provide for two types of disclosure, namely periodic and ad hoc, each of which fulfils slightly different objectives.

4.12 Periodic disclosure is made at specified intervals and normally concerns defined interests. It permits the advance identification of those interests most likely to give rise to a conflict of interests. It is made to a Register of Interests which can be consulted before an issue arises and which enables others to take a view as to the existence and nature of a conflict of interests. Where the periodic disclosure requirements are sufficiently comprehensive, they can assist in the detection of illicit enrichment and contribute to investigations and disciplinary procedures. They may also improve public confidence in public officials by demonstrating that the vast majority of them live within their means.

4.13 In contrast to periodic disclosure, ad hoc disclosure is made if and when a conflict of interests arises. It is generally more effective than periodic disclosure at identifying interests likely to give rise to such a conflict as the nature of the private interest to be disclosed can be defined in more general terms. Consequently, it is also better at bringing such interests into the public arena.

4.14 While the two forms of disclosure do not necessarily cover the same types of interest, to be effective, they should collectively cover all interests capable of giving rise to an actual or apparent conflict of interests.

PERIODIC DISCLOSURE – PERSONAL SCOPE

Each public official should be required to disclose periodically his or her own specified interests as well as those held by:

- his or her family members

- a related person, and

- corporate entities or other legal arrangements in which the public official or one of the above mentioned persons has a controlling legal or beneficial interest as well as any other entities or arrangements in which those former corporate entities/legal arrangements have a controlling interest

4.15 Public officials falling within the scope of the conflict of interests acts (“public officials”), including Officeholders, high level public servants, Oireachtas Members, local elected representatives and local authority employees (“public official(s)”) must disclose specified pecuniary interests on an annual basis. The term “Officeholder” includes both Ministers and Ministers of State.

4.16 All public officials must disclose their own interests. However, only an Officeholder or public servant is required to disclose interests held by his or her spouse and/or children. Moreover, this requirement only arises once two conditions are fulfilled. First, the Officeholder/public servant must have actual knowledge of the relevant interest. Secondly, that interest must be capable of exerting a material influence on him or her in the performance of his or her public duties.

4.17 The Tribunal is concerned that the personal scope of the periodic disclosure requirements is too limited to ensure the effective disclosure of all interests likely to give rise to a conflict of interests. Clearly, interests held by a public official’s close family members or dependents are as likely to influence that official in the exercise of his or her public powers as that official’s own interests. This is also true of interests held by other persons closely linked to a public official including those held by corporate entities and other legal arrangements in which the official has a controlling interest or entities/arrangements in which those entities/arrangements have controlling interests. Moreover, the limited disclosure required of interests held by persons close to a public official may encourage at least some public officials to divest interests to these persons in order to avoid the disclosure requirements.

4.18 The Tribunal is conscious that in so far as natural persons, including family members, are concerned extending the personal scope of the periodic disclosure requirements may raise certain privacy concerns. However, it considers that the need to ensure that public power is exercised in the public interest outweighs these concerns. Moreover, if necessary such disclosures could be subject to more limited publication than those of public officials themselves. For example, they could be made on a confidential basis to the relevant supervisory authority and then be published in summary form by that authority.

4.19 Clearly, the same privacy concerns do not arise in the case of interests held by corporate entities and, in the event that they did, the Tribunal would again consider them to be outweighed by the public interest in combating corruption.

4.20 The OECD has published a generic law on the registration of interests in its Toolkit for Managing Conflicts of Interest in the Public Service. The Tribunal notes that under that law a parliamentarian must disclose interests held by his or her spouse, dependent child or any other person who is wholly or substantially dependent on the parliamentarian or whose affairs are so closely connected with his or her affairs that a benefit derived by that person, or a substantial part of it, could pass to the parliamentarian. That law also requires each parliamentarian to make extensive disclosure of interests held by corporate entities in which he or she has a controlling interest.

4.21 The Tribunal further notes that a number of the other jurisdictions considered in preparing these recommendations require the disclosure of interests held by family members, including, in particular: England, Canada, and Australia. Several of the jurisdictions considered also require the periodic disclosure of interests held by corporate entities.

4.22 In the event that limitations are imposed on the publication of disclosures of interests held by family members, the Tribunal recommends that the full disclosure remain available to other anti-corruption authorities including, in particular, the Garda Síochána. This is necessary to ensure that periodic disclosure can fulfill some of its subsidiary goals such as providing information regarding possible illicit enrichment.

PERIODIC DISCLOSURE – MATERIAL SCOPE

In addition, to the interests which currently require disclosure, each public official should be required to disclose periodically the following categories of interests:

- assets
- liabilities
- sources and amounts of income
- any company in which the person has a legal or beneficial interest
- all company offices held by the person and all company management positions
- the person's legal and beneficial interests in land including the family home
- all gifts and benefits of more than a specified amount received by the person in the relevant period which reasonably appear to be unconnected with the person's public office
- non pecuniary interests in so far as those interests are capable of being reasonably perceived to give rise to a conflict of interests

4.23 Both of the conflict of interests acts specify a range of interests which must be disclosed on a periodic basis. These interests are largely the same for both acts although there are some key differences. They are essentially pecuniary in nature and fall broadly into the following categories: remunerated occupations; certain investments; company directorships; interests in land; gifts, property and services; travel facilities, living accommodation, meals or entertainment; remunerated positions as a political or public affairs lobbyist, consultant or advisor; and public contracts in which the public official has a direct or indirect interest. Several of these categories are subject to exceptions and/or limitations.

4.24 The Tribunal is concerned that the range of interests subject to the periodic disclosure requirements is too narrow to ensure the effective disclosure of all those interests capable of giving rise to a conflict of interests and which are suitable for periodic disclosure. Specifically, key pecuniary interests, namely assets and liabilities are not covered by the disclosure requirements. In addition, the categories of interests are themselves too narrowly defined as they are subject to a number of restrictions and limitations. Moreover, the periodic disclosure requirements do not cover non-pecuniary interests.

Assets

4.25 The conflict of interest acts require public officials to disclose certain assets. However, those acts do not require them to disclose their overall assets. This prevents the periodic disclosure requirements from giving a comprehensive overview of a public official's pecuniary interests. It also inhibits those requirements from fulfilling some of their subsidiary objectives, namely demonstrating that public officials live within their means and providing a basis for identifying assets that may have been acquired through corruption.

4.26 The Tribunal notes that under the OECD's generic law, a parliamentarian must disclose assets which exceed a specified value, subject to certain exceptions. Moreover, Canada and Australia each require the disclosure of assets under their conflict of interests measures.

Liabilities

4.27 The conflicts of interests acts do not require public officials to disclose their liabilities. However, these are also a ripe source of conflicts of interests. Where a public official has a liability which could be affected by the exercise of his or her public functions, it could clearly induce him or her to perform those functions other than in the public interest, or at least create the appearance of doing so.

....indebtedness can easily give rise to conflicts of interest and even corruption as at times, legislators, ministers and officials may be tempted to enjoy a lifestyle similar to that enjoyed by financially successful constituents when their own incomes are insufficient to support this. When debt accrues ethical problems arise.

Gerard Carney (1998)

a politician who is hugely indebted is perhaps more likely to try to use their official position to secure additional sources of funding.

Greg Power (2008)

4.28 Liabilities are particularly likely to give rise to an apparent conflict of interests as many will assume that the creditors of a person in public office can exert influence over him or her. The converse is also true. Where a debtor holds a public office and is given more favourable terms than other debtors, this may give rise to the appearance that those terms are attributable to that office.

4.29 Because of the risks which liabilities pose from a conflict of interests perspective, the Tribunal considers that each public official should be required to disclose his or her liabilities when making a periodic disclosure of interests. This should include the disclosure of loans received from credit or financial institutions in their ordinary course of business. The mere fact that the creditor is such an institution does not prevent the existence of a loan from giving rise to an actual or apparent conflict of interest. Moreover, the inclusion of such loans in the pecuniary disclosure requirements is necessary to ensure that those requirements can fulfill some of their ancillary functions including alerting the relevant authorities to the possibility of illicit enrichment.

4.30 The Tribunal notes that under the OECD's generic law, a parliamentarian must disclose his or her liabilities, including the liabilities of a trust of which a Member or a related person is a beneficiary or a private company of which a Member or a related person is a shareholder. Liabilities must also be disclosed in Canada and Australia, subject to certain exclusions.

Sources and amounts of income

4.31 Both the conflict of interests acts require public officials to disclose remunerated occupations exercised during the period to which the disclosure applies. However, neither act requires a public official to disclose the remuneration received by virtue of that occupation nor the precise source of that income if self-employed.

4.32 These limitations may make it difficult to decide whether the occupation in question gives rise to a conflict of interests. Specifically, the financial significance of a public official's occupational income is likely to be relevant in determining the existence or extent of such a conflict. Moreover, the fact that a public official who is also self-employed need not disclose his or her principle clients means that he or she could be substantially dependent on a single client or a very restricted number of clients and would not have to disclose this fact. This is undesirable even where the relationship is a bone fide one involving an independent contractor and his or her clients. However, it also provides an incentive to those who wish to keep their relationships from the public view to structure what may in reality be an employment relationship to one involving independent contractors.

4.33 As both the source and amount of income received by a public official are important indicators as to the existence and extent of a conflict of interest, the Tribunal recommends that this information should be disclosed. In the case of public officials who are independent contractors, this disclosure should include information regarding the identity of specific clients. Nevertheless, it would appear sufficient to restrict this obligation to those who provide a substantial amount of income to the public official, for example in excess of €1000 or over 1% of his or her total earnings, whichever is the less.

4.34 The Tribunal notes that other jurisdictions require the disclosure of remuneration arising from secondary occupations, including, in particular, the U.K. and Canada.

Companies

4.35 Both the conflict of interests acts require the disclosure of investments in companies or undertakings where the aggregate value of that investment exceeds €13,000. A public official is not obliged to disclose the existence of a substantial interest or even a controlling interest in a company as long as the value of that interest is less than this amount. Nor is a public official required to disclose the existence of a beneficial interest in such investments. Moreover, where a public official holds an interest in a company and that company itself holds an interest in another company, the public official is not required to disclose this latter interest.

4.36 The Tribunal is of the view that merely requiring public officials to disclose legal interests in excess of €13,000 is insufficient. Specifically, other types of corporate interests, including in particular those mentioned above, are equally likely to give rise to a conflict of interests and should be disclosed. In the course of its inquiries this Tribunal inquired into a significant number of conflicts of interests which originated in corporate interests, both legal and beneficial.

4.37 As explained above, the Tribunal is generally of the view that where a public official has a controlling interest in a company, then he or she should be required to make a periodic disclosure of that company's interests. However, as any corporate interest is capable of giving rise to a conflict of interests the Tribunal considers that public officials should be required to disclose all such interests. It therefore recommends that public officials be required to disclose periodically all of their legal and beneficial interests in companies and undertakings irrespective of the actual value of those interests.

4.38 The Tribunal notes that the OECD's generic law on the registration of interests requires parliamentarians to disclose any company in which the Member or a related person is a shareholder. Similar requirements apply in Canada and Australia.

Company Offices and Management Positions

4.39 Currently, a public official who is a director or a shadow director of a company must disclose this fact. However, he or she need not disclose other offices held in a company, despite the fact that those offices are equally likely to give rise to a conflict of interest. Nor is a public official required to disclose the fact that he or she is on a company's board of management although such a position is similarly capable of giving rise to such a conflict. While in many cases such a position will be remunerated and will consequently require disclosure under another category, this may not always be the case.

4.40 Consequently, the Tribunal is recommending that public officials be required to disclose any offices held in a company and any position held on a company's board of management.

4.41 The Tribunal notes that under the OECD's generic law on the Registration of Interests, parliamentarians must disclose all offices held in a company. Similar disclosure requirements apply in Canada and in New South Wales, Australia.

Family home and beneficial land interests

4.42 Both the conflict of interests acts require the disclosure of certain interests in land. However those contained in the LGA are considerably more extensive than the equivalent provisions in the Ethics Acts. Consequently, our recommendations with respect to this category of disclosure are confined to the Ethics Acts.

4.43 The Ethics Acts require those falling within their scope to disclose a legal interest in land held during the previous year where the value of that interest exceeds €13,000 as well as interests in any contracts for the purchase of land and interests in options to purchase land.

4.44 Those acts do not require public officials to disclose interests in land consisting of the family home or holiday homes. Nor is there any requirement to disclose land that is subsidiary or ancillary to the private home as long as it is required for its amenity or convenience and is not being used or developed primarily for commercial purposes. It appears that those who intend to use or develop such land primarily for such purposes need not disclose the land in their periodic disclosure statement. Moreover, the Ethics Acts do not require a public official to disclose interests or dealings with lands in the hands of a company of which the public official or his or her nominee is a member. Nor is a public official obliged to disclose beneficial interests.

4.45 These constitute potentially significant lacunae. Clearly, where a public official performs a public function which may have implications for his family home or for land in which he has a beneficial interest, this is likely to influence that performance. In addition, the fact that periodic disclosure does not cover the family home or beneficial interests limits its usefulness as a method for monitoring the assets of public officials, which, as discussed, is one of the subsidiary goals of periodic disclosure.

4.46 While the Tribunal is of the opinion that public officials should be generally required to disclose their assets, including the family home and beneficial interests in land, even in the absence of such a general requirement, they should be obliged to declare these interests in particular, due to the specific risks they pose from a conflict of interests perspective.

4.47 The Tribunal notes that the LGA requires local public officials to disclose an interest in the family home as well as beneficial interests in land in excess of a specified threshold including interests held by a company of which the representative or his or her nominee is a member. The OECD's Generic Law on the Registration of Interests and Assets also requires the disclosure of the family home as do several of the other jurisdictions considered, including Canada and Australia. However, in Canada this disclosure is not published.

Gifts and Benefits

4.48 Both the conflict of interests acts require the periodic disclosure of gifts in excess of €650. However, both acts exclude gifts given by friends or relatives for purely personal reasons from this disclosure requirement. In the case of the Ethics Acts, to be excluded such gifts must fulfill the supplementary condition that the acceptance of the gift could not materially influence the public official in the performance of his or her public functions.

4.49 The current provisions suffer from a number of defects. Specifically, determining whether or not a person is a “friend”, whether or not the gift was given for personal reasons, and whether or not it is capable of giving rise to a “material influence” is likely to give rise to difficulties. More significantly however, those provisions ignore the fact, which was also recognised by the McCracken Tribunal, that gifts in excess of a certain threshold are always suspect from a conflict of interests perspective. At the very least such gifts are capable of giving rise to an appearance of corruption, irrespective of the identity of the gift-giver or his or her personal relationship with the recipient.

4.50 As discussed below, the Tribunal considers that a public official should be prohibited from receiving gifts of more than a token value given, or which could reasonably appear to be given in connection with his or her public office.

4.51 Where a gift is not actually or apparently connected to that office, the Tribunal recommends that a public official should nevertheless be required to disclose that gift, once it exceeds a specified amount.

Travel, Accommodation, Meals and Entertainment

4.52 The Ethics Acts treat benefits provided in the form of travel, accommodation, meals and entertainment as a distinct category of disclosure. As in the case of gifts, such benefits need not be disclosed under either act if given for personal reasons as long as they may not be reasonably seen to be capable of influencing the public official in the performance of his or her official functions. That act also excludes from the disclosure requirements benefits received within the State and those connected with a public official’s public functions or secondary occupation.

4.53 As in the case of gifts, the Tribunal considers that a public official should be generally prohibited from accepting any benefit received from a non-public source which is in excess of a certain amount and which could reasonably appear to be connected to the exercise of his or her official functions.

4.54 Moreover, a public official should be required to disclose all other benefits received which are in excess of a specified amount.

4.55 Travel and accommodation provided in the context of secondary occupations may be excluded from this requirement but only in so far as that travel and accommodation is disclosed as income under the relevant category.

Non Pecuniary Interests

4.56 The existing periodic disclosure requirements focus exclusively on pecuniary interests. However, conflicts arising from non-pecuniary interests pose many of the same risks from a conflict of interests perspective and may be even more difficult to deal with:

to ignore such interests increases the likelihood of distortion in government decision-making.

Gerard Carney (1998)

4.57 Non pecuniary conflicts likely to give rise to a conflict of interests include, in particular those arising from friendships and/or professional associations.

Yet legislative judgment can be compromised in many ways, apart from conflict of financial interests. There is after all the intricate web of friendships and relationships which involve the giving and receiving of favours.

Andrew O Brien (1998)

A conflict of interest may involve otherwise legitimate private-capacity activity, personal affiliations and associations and family interests, if those interests could reasonably be considered likely to influence improperly the official's performance of their duties.

OECD (2003)

The source of COI is any kind of personal bias based on personal relationships (community, ethnic, or religious), material interests, personal interests and political or personal affiliations. Any interest is relevant if it could be reasonably considered to improperly influence a public official's performance of duties in the relevant circumstances or context.

OECD (2007)

4.58 While it is difficult to provide for the periodic disclosure of each specific type of non pecuniary interest, both unremunerated offices and positions as well as membership of organisations should be listed as disclosure categories. Moreover, the disclosure of other non-pecuniary interests could be ensured, at least to some extent, by requiring each public official to disclose any interest which could reasonably be considered to be capable of influencing the performance of his or her public functions.

4.59 Consequently, the Tribunal recommends that public officials be required to disclose: unremunerated offices and positions; memberships of organizations; as well as other non-pecuniary interests which could reasonably be seen to give rise to a conflict of interests.

4.60 The Tribunal notes that the OECD's generic law specifically requires parliamentarians to disclose memberships of any political party, trade or professional organisation or the name of any other organisation of which the Member is an officeholder or a financial contributor donating more than a specified amount in a single calendar year to that organisation. It also requires parliamentarians to disclose other interests which might reasonably be seen to give rise to a conflict of interests.

4.61 Moreover, a number of the other jurisdictions considered require public officials to disclose non pecuniary interests which might be thought by a reasonable member of the public to influence the public official's performance of his or her public duties. These include, in particular, England and Australia.

TIMING OF DISCLOSURE

Each public official should be required to:

- Make a periodic disclosure of interests within 30 days of entering public office and update any interest disclosed in the context of periodic disclosure within 30 days of a significant change in that interest
- disclose the source of any income in excess of €1,000 and gifts/benefits in excess of €250 received either within the twelve month period prior to assuming public office or subsequent to leaving it

4.62 As discussed, the purpose of periodic disclosure is to ensure the advance identification of those interests most likely to give rise to a conflict of interests. Currently, under the Ethics Acts, a public official must make his or her periodic disclosure of registrable interests by the 31st of January each year. Under the LGA, a local public official must normally furnish his or her disclosure of interests by the last day of February. These disclosures are then compiled in a Register of Interests.

4.63 The provisions relating to the timing and updating of disclosures suffer from several weaknesses. Specifically, the fact that a public official is not required to make a disclosure of interests upon assuming public office means that there may be a considerable time lapse between the date of a public official's election/appointment to that office and his or her first declaration of registrable interests. This may adversely affect the ability of the register to accurately reflect those interests capable of giving rise to a conflict of interests on the part of that public official. This is also true of the fact that a public official is not required to update the register during the course of the year in cases where there is a material change in his or her registrable interests during that year, including where he or she acquires new registrable interests.

4.64 Two other weaknesses stem from the fact that under the current provisions public officials are not required to disclose interests arising prior to assuming public office or after ceasing to hold that office. Specifically, upon assuming public office, a public official must only declare registrable interests which existed during the registration period. He or she is not required to disclose interests which existed prior to that period although such interests may also be capable of giving rise to a conflict of interest. For example, where someone receives a valuable gift within the 12 month period prior to assuming public office, that gift could clearly give rise to a conflict of interest on the part of the public official but would not have to be registered under the existing provisions.

4.65 Regarding post-term disclosures, the requirement to make a periodic disclosure ceases to apply once the public official leaves public office. However, payments received post-term can be an important indicator of the existence of an undeclared conflict of interests while in public office. They can also assist in ensuring that the registration requirements fulfill some of their subsidiary functions, in particular by alerting the relevant authorities to the possible occurrence of a corrupt transaction.

4.66 In view of the above, the Tribunal recommends that public officials should be required to disclose their registrable interests within 30 days of taking public office and to update that disclosure within 30 days of a material change in those interests.

4.67 The Tribunal notes that in a number of the jurisdictions considered for the purposes of these recommendations, public officials are only required to make a declaration of interests upon taking up public office and to notify any material changes: they are not required to make annual disclosure. This would appear to have the advantage of lessening the burden of disclosure on public officials while keeping the register up to date. While the Tribunal does not consider it necessary to make a recommendation to this effect, it is a matter which the relevant authorities themselves may wish to consider.

4.68 The Tribunal also recommends that on assuming public office, each public official should be required to disclose the source of income, gifts and benefits received in the previous twelve month period and which are in excess of a stipulated threshold, for example, €1000 in the case of income and €250 in the case of gifts. Similar requirements should apply in the twelve month period following a public official's retirement from public life.

AD HOC DISCLOSURE

Each public official should be required to disclose on an ad hoc basis any interest which could be reasonably seen to be capable of influencing him or her in the performance of his or her public functions

4.69 Both the conflict of interests acts provide for the ad hoc disclosure of certain interests likely to give rise to a conflict of interests. Under both acts a public official must make an ad hoc disclosure once two conditions are fulfilled. First, the public official must propose to perform a function of his or her public office. Secondly, that official must have actual knowledge that he or she or various other specified persons have an interest in a matter to which that function relates.

4.70 While the acts differ both as to their personal scope and the type of interests covered, the Tribunal is concerned that neither act ensures the effective disclosure (and hence identification) of all those interests likely to give rise to a conflict of interest.

4.71 The Ethics Acts require a public official to make an ad hoc disclosure of his or her own interests as well as those of a "connected person". According to those acts, a person is connected with another person in the following circumstances:

- If those persons are relatives of each other. The term “relative” means a brother, sister, parent, civil partner or spouse of the person or a child of the person, civil partner or of the spouse.
- Where a person is the trustee of a trust and the other person is a beneficiary of the trust or any of whose children or company is a beneficiary of the trust;
- Where one person is in a partnership with another;
- Where one person is a company and another controls that company or if that other person and any person connected with that person together have control of it;
- Any persons acting together to secure or exercise control of a company and any person acting on the directions of any of those persons to secure or exercise control of the company are connected with each other in relation to that company;

4.72 As is clear from the above, the term “connected person” does not include interests held by employers, business clients, friends, electoral donors, or bodies of which the public official is a member. Furthermore, a public official must only disclose an interest in a corporate entity if he or she controls that entity either individually or jointly. This means that a public official may have a significant interest in a corporate entity which is likely to be affected by that official’s exercise of his or her public powers and will not have to declare this interest as long as it is not a controlling interest.

4.73 Some of these shortcomings are also relevant to the LGA. Under that act, a duty to make an ad hoc disclosure arises in respect of interests which include those held by local public officials, “connected persons” and other specified persons. The term “connected persons” is defined differently under the LGA than under the Ethics Acts. For the purposes of the LGA it means “a brother, sister, parent or spouse of the person or a child of the person or of the spouse (including co-habitees). However, that act also requires the ad hoc disclosure of interests held by a: body of which the person or a connected person is a member either directly or through a nominee; partnership in which the person or a connected person is a partner or by such a person’s employer; trust in which the person or a connected person is either a trustee or a beneficiary; company in respect of which the person or a connected person is acting with another person to secure or exercise control.

4.74 As is clear from the above, unlike the Ethics Acts, the ad hoc disclosure requirements set out in the LGA apply to interests held by employers and bodies of which the relevant public official is a member. However, as in the case of those acts, the LGA does not apply to interests held by business associates, friends and/or electoral donors. Moreover, it only applies to interests held by corporate entities where the public official exercises control over those entities.

4.75 As mentioned, the material scope of the ad hoc disclosure provisions in the Ethics Acts also differs from the scope of the corresponding provisions in the LGA. Under the Ethics Acts, a public official must make an ad hoc disclosure where he, she or a connected person has a “material interest” in a matter related to that official’s public functions, if the public official is proposing to perform those functions. According to that act, such an interest exists where the consequence or effect of a public official’s exercise of his or her public functions could be to confer on those persons falling within the scope of the disclosure requirements a substantial benefit or impose on them a substantial liability without also conferring it on, withholding it from or imposing it on persons in general or a class of persons which is of significant size. However, public officials are not required to disclose interests already disclosed in the context of periodic disclosure even if those interests constitute a material interest.

4.76 There are four principle problems with the definition of a material interest under the Ethics Acts. First, it does not cover apparent conflicts of interest despite the corruption risks posed by such conflicts. Specifically, that definition refers to interests which “could” confer a benefit or impose a liability rather than one which could be reasonably perceived to do so.

4.77 Secondly, the disclosure obligation is confined to interests likely to incur significant benefits or liabilities resulting from the public official’s exercise of his or her public functions. It therefore excludes some interests which, although not capable of giving rise to significant benefits or liabilities, are still such as to be sufficiently affected by the public official’s exercise of those functions as to be capable of influencing that exercise.

4.78 Thirdly, public officials are not required to disclose interests enjoyed as a general class of persons. However, it is not at all evident that such interests are less likely to give rise to a conflict of interests than individual interest. Moreover, even if this is the case, requiring their disclosure still permits others to more accurately judge any contribution made or the reasons for any position taken by the public official making the disclosure.

Are parliamentarians which belong to a class of large landowners say, or shareholders in oil, pharmaceutical or medical companies, any less disinterested when legislating in a manner that benefits these grounds than if they are acting to advance an individual private interest? The distinction may not seem too obvious to the public.

Inter-Parliamentary Union, Parliament and Democracy in the 21st Century (2006)

It is desirable that there be a wider obligation to disclose any interest which may benefit from legislation whether or not this occurs simply as one of a class of beneficiaries.

Gerard Carney (1998)

4.79 Fourthly and finally, registrable interests are excluded from the disclosure requirements. There does not appear to be any convincing rationale for this exclusion. Moreover, periodic disclosure is best viewed as complementary to ad hoc disclosure rather than a substitute for it. Ad hoc disclosure is clearly more effective at identifying conflicts of interest than disclosure made to a register months earlier. There is no reason to expect officials to have such an in-depth knowledge of the register of interests as to obviate the need for the ad hoc disclosure of interests contained in that register when a conflict of interests situation arises. Exempting such interests makes it more difficult for those concerned to identify relevant conflicts of interest and to take them in to consideration when and if the need arises.

4.80 In contrast to the Ethics Acts, the LGA requires the ad hoc disclosure of pecuniary and other beneficial interests. The LGA does not define the term “beneficial interests” but it does provide that it includes all interests covered by the periodic disclosure requirements of which the relevant public official has actual knowledge and which are material to the matter which arise from or which regard the performance of the local authority’s functions. It is not clear what other interests are covered by the ad hoc disclosure requirements, and in particular, the extent to which non pecuniary interests is covered. Nor does the act give guidance as to when an interest will be “material” to a matter.

4.81 It is the Tribunal’s view that, to be effective, both the personal and material scope of the conflict of interest acts should be extended. The Tribunal considers that the most effective way of ensuring that the ad hoc disclosure requirements cover all those whose interests are capable of giving rise to a conflict of interests and all such interests is simply to require public officials to disclose all interests capable of being reasonably perceived to give rise to a conflict of interest. In appropriate circumstances, such a provision would require the ad hoc disclosure of apparent interests, interests disclosed in the context of periodic disclosures, interests enjoyed as part of a class of persons and both pecuniary and non pecuniary interests. It would also cover certain political donations. Obviously, such an obligation could only apply in respect of interests of which the public official is aware.

4.82 SIPO has voiced the concern that a provision such as the one proposed by the Tribunal may lack precision and could lead to difficulties in interpretation by persons who may have to comply with it and by SIPO in providing advice to such persons. It also observes that once a disclosure is made some non elected public officials must withdraw from performing the relevant function and thus the categories of disclosure should be precisely defined. It suggests that the Commission broaden the scope of the definition of a “connected person” to include well-defined persons whose interests could create a conflict.

4.83 While the Tribunal appreciates SIPO’s concerns, for the reasons expressed above, it is reluctant to confine the scope of ad hoc disclosure requirements in this way. Moreover, it considers that enumerating in advance the precise categories of persons whose interest could influence a public official’s performance of his public functions presents considerable difficulties. Any attempted categorisation will undoubtedly exclude certain persons whose interests are capable of exerting such an influence. The Tribunal notes that other jurisdictions have similarly broad ad hoc disclosure provisions.

4.84 The Tribunal recognises that requiring public officials to make ad hoc disclosure of interests which could be reasonably perceived to affect their performance of their public duties could result in some donations being disclosed on an ad hoc basis as well as under the Electoral Act 1997 as amended or the Local Elections (Disclosures of Donations and Expenditure) Act 1999. Nevertheless, it considers that elected representatives should be required to disclose donations received in excess of the disclosure threshold stipulated in those acts whenever they are proposing to exercise their public functions in a way which could reasonably be perceived to be capable of affecting the donor.

4.85 Currently, under the LGA, local elected representatives who make an ad hoc disclosure of interest are prohibited from either taking part in the discussion or voting in relation to the matter in question and must withdraw from any meeting at which the matter is being discussed for the duration of that discussion. The Tribunal does not consider that these prohibitions should apply to disclosures regarding electoral donations. In particular, at least in the case of non-pecuniary interests, a better approach might be to permit each local authority to determine whether a declared interest is such as to warrant the recusal of the relevant local authority members. Similarly, in the case of public servants under the Ethics Acts, it may be sufficient to declare a non-pecuniary interest without that interest necessarily leading to the recusal of the relevant public servant.

PUBLICATION OF DISCLOSURES

Both periodic and ad hoc disclosures should be made more widely available. In particular:

- Periodic disclosures made under the LGA should be published on the relevant local authority's website. In addition, minutes of local authority meetings and documents debated in the course of those meetings should be available on that website
- Ad hoc disclosures by both elected and senior non-elected public officials should be published, including those made at cabinet meetings.

4.86 Under the Ethics Acts, disclosures of periodic interests by Members are entered into the Register of Member's Interests which is published in Iris Oifigiúil and is also available on-line. Ad hoc disclosures made by Oireachtas members in Oireachtas proceedings are also published. Other disclosures of interest are not published. Under the LGA, disclosures of periodic interests by local elected representatives are entered into a public register which is available for public inspection. Ad hoc disclosures made by those representatives are published in the minutes of the meeting and in the Register of Interests.

4.87 As discussed, the purpose of disclosure is to ensure the identification of those interests which could reasonably appear to influence a public official's performance of his or her public functions. Consequently, the Tribunal considers that disclosures should be widely published in the interests of both transparency and accountability. This is particularly true in the case of elected representatives as the electorate should be in a position to take conflicts of interest into consideration when voting. In addition, the widespread publication of declarations of interests is likely to assist in the enforcement of the conflict of interest provisions. Specifically, it is likely to lead to increased information being provided by the general public, regarding possible instances of non-compliance with those provisions.

4.88 The Tribunal considers that the extent to which both periodic and ad hoc disclosures are currently published is too restricted to fulfill the purposes outlined above. While it appreciates that there are privacy arguments against the widespread disclosure of private interests and particularly those held by persons other than the public official him or herself, it believes that a compromise must be found between the need for disclosure and the right to privacy.

4.89 The Tribunal is recommending that all disclosures made by elected and senior appointed public officials be published in full. It further recommends that those furnished by public officials regarding their family members and other related persons be published in summary form. The Tribunal considers this to be an appropriate compromise between the need to ensure the control of conflicts of interest and the right to privacy. It notes that, in Canada, a similar approach is adopted to periodic disclosures of interest. Obviously all disclosures should be available to investigative authorities, including in particular the Garda Síochána.

4.90 With regard to the LGA specifically, the Tribunal recommends that local authorities publish disclosures of interest as well as minutes of public meetings and papers relevant to those meetings on their websites. The Tribunal notes that SIPO has recommended that minutes of council meetings be published on council websites.

REGULATION OF CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

Both the Members' and Officeholders' codes of conduct should be amended so as to define a conflict of interests include all interests which could be reasonably considered to influence a Member's or Officeholder's performance of his or her public functions

Each Public official should be prohibited from receiving any gift or benefit which could reasonably be perceived to be connected with the performance of his or her public functions other than gifts of a nominal value provided in the course of the performance of those functions

Further measures should be introduced to regulate conflicts of interests arising out of the use of inside information by officeholders

National public officials should be prohibited from entering into a contract for the provision of goods or services to a public body both while a public official and for a period of one year following the end of his or her term in office

Equivalent restrictions should be placed on a local public official from entering into such contracts with the local authority of which he or she is a member/employee

Each local elected representative should be prohibited from dealing with land both during his or her term of office and for a period of two years thereafter where the Local Authority of which that representative is a member has made a decision changing the planning or zoning status of that land during that representative's term of office, where he or she has voted on that decision and where he or she is engaged in an outside activity involving the sale and/or development of land

Conflicts of interest on the part of Officeholders arising from post-term employment should be subject to increased and more effective regulation

CODES OF CONDUCT

4.91 As well as assisting in the identification of conflicts of interests, disclosure also plays a role in their regulation. Specifically, it ensures that others are informed about the existence and nature of a conflict of interest thus providing them with a corrective lens with which to assess the public official's performance of his or her public functions. However, in some cases, disclosure does not sufficiently regulate a conflict. This is particularly true of certain types of interests which pose increased dangers from a corruption perspective. Such interests include those arising from: gifts; inside information and ancillary or post-term employment.

4.92 While the Ethics Acts do not regulate conflicts of interests on the part of members and/or officeholders, the codes of conduct adopted pursuant to those acts do contain provisions regulating such conflicts. According to the codes for Oireachtas Members, Members must endeavor to arrange their financial affairs so as to avoid conflicts of interests and take all reasonable steps to avoid such conflicts should they nevertheless arise. In addition, they must refuse gifts that may pose a conflict of interests.

4.93 In themselves, these provisions are both desirable and necessary. However, the definition of a conflict of interests in these codes has a number of shortcomings which undermine their effectiveness. Specifically, the Oireachtas codes define a "conflict of interest" as follows:

A conflict of interest exists where a Member participates in or makes a decision in the execution of his or her office knowing that it will improperly and dishonestly further his or her private financial interest or another person's private financial interest directly or indirectly.

A conflict of interest does not exist where the Member or another person benefits only as a Member of the general public or a broad class of persons.

4.94 This definition does not cover apparent or non-pecuniary conflicts of interests. Moreover, it excludes interests enjoyed by the Member as part of a class. For the reasons explained above the Tribunal considers it imperative that the members' codes cover these types of conflicts and these types of interests.

4.95 The Officeholders' code does not define the term "conflict of interests".

4.96 The Tribunal recommends that each of the codes be amended so as to recognise that a conflict of interests exists where a member/officeholder has an interest which could be reasonably perceived as capable of influencing him or her in the performance of his or her public functions.

GIFTS/BENEFITS

4.97 As mentioned, public officials are currently required to disclose certain gifts/benefits under the conflicts of interest acts. Specifically, a public official must disclose gifts in excess of €650, including all gifts whose acceptance could materially influence the recipient in the performance of his or her public functions. A public official must also disclose a benefit in excess of €650 including all benefits whose acceptance could reasonably appear to influence him or her in the conduct of his public functions.

4.98 In addition, the Ethics Acts regulate gifts to an Officeholder which are received by him or her by virtue of his or her public office. The various codes of conduct also contain provisions regulating the receipt of gifts/benefits. In particular, both the codes for Oireachtas Members as well as the councillors' code, which applies to local elected representatives, prohibit the receipt of gifts that may pose a conflict of interests.

4.99 Although a normal part of life, a gift or other benefit can easily give rise to a conflict of interests. Specifically, any gift and especially a valuable cash gift can create a sense of obligation or indebtedness on the part of the recipient and engender expectations of reciprocity. This is also true of most benefits. Moreover, whether or not such a gift or benefit does actually influence the recipient public official's behaviour it is at the very least likely to give the appearance of doing so.

4.100 The Tribunal considers the existing measures regulating gifts and benefits to be inadequate in view of the dangers they pose from a corruption perspective. Rather than requiring a public official to disclose the receipt of gifts/benefits in excess of €650 which could materially influence that official's performance of his or her public office, or reasonably appear to do so, the Tribunal considers that such gifts/benefits should be banned. The Tribunal does not see any justification for permitting public officials to receive gifts/benefits which could materially influence the performance of their public office or indeed any gift/benefit connected with that office, with the exception of gifts or benefits of a very nominal amount.

4.101 The Tribunal therefore recommends that each public official be prohibited from accepting gifts/benefits which could materially influence that official's performance of his or her public office, or which could reasonably be perceived as being connected to that office. An exception should be provided for gifts and benefits of nominal amounts provided in the course of and for the performance of the recipient's official functions.

4.102 As previously discussed, the Tribunal is also of the view that each public official should be required to disclose the receipt of any gifts/benefits in excess of a stipulated amount where that gift/benefit does not reasonably appear to be connected with his or her public office.

INSIDE INFORMATION

4.103 The use or abuse of confidential information is not regulated by either of the conflicts of interest acts. However, the matter is dealt with by the Oireachtas Members' Codes and the Councilors' code. These effectively prohibit a public official from using official information which is not in the public domain or which the official obtained in confidence in the course of his or her official duties for his or her own personal gain or for that of others.

4.104 The Tribunal is concerned at the lack of guidance given to Officeholders regarding the disclosure of confidential information. In particular, Officeholders enjoy very powerful positions in the context of which they have access to confidential and other valuable and privileged information. The potential for abusing such information is significant. The Tribunal notes that both it and other Tribunals have inquired into situations involving the disclosure of confidential information by Ministers and other senior officials.

4.105 The Tribunal therefore recommends that the use of confidential and/or other privileged information by Ministers be appropriately regulated.

CONTRACTS

4.106 An apparent conflict of interest readily arises when a public official enters into a contract with a public entity for the provision of goods or services in the context of his or her ancillary occupational activities. In such instances, the majority of the public will reasonably believe that the individual's position as a public official assisted directly or indirectly in obtaining that contract. Moreover, such contracts also give rise to a significant number of corruption risks. Specifically, a public official may use his or her public position to obtain such a contract, for example, by using the influence given to him by that position and/or the access it gives him or her to decision makers to lobby for the contract. There is also the related risk that a public official may agree to do something in his or her public capacity in exchange for the contract. Overall, such contracts present a significant number of corruption risks.

4.107 In view of these risks, the Tribunal recommends that a national public official be prohibited from entering contracts for the provision of goods or services to public bodies while holding public office other than in his or her public capacity. This prohibition should continue to apply for a one year period after that official ceases to hold such office. Moreover, it should apply both to the public official him or herself, his or her family members and any corporate entity in which that public official or those members has a controlling interest.

4.108 Similar risks apply to contracts between a local public official and the local authority of which he or she is a member/employee. Consequently, a local public official should also be prohibited from entering such contracts with that local authority.

4.109 The Tribunal does not believe it necessary to extend either of these prohibitions to contracts entered into by a public official before entering public office as the reasons underlying this recommendation do not apply to such contracts.

DEALING WITH LAND

4.110 As discussed in the previous chapter, elected members exercise relatively significant powers in the area of planning and development. In particular, they are responsible for deciding on the zoning of land in the context of the development plan, a decision which may have significant consequences for the value of that land, and also influence planning decisions.

4.111 Many elected members also carry out ancillary activities which may include those connected with land, for example in the capacity of an estate agent. In some instances this can result in that member benefitting professionally from decisions made by the planning authority of which he or she is a member. The Tribunal considers this to be inappropriate as, at the very least, it is likely to give rise to a reasonable perception that the member's professional activities may have influenced the performance of his or her functions as an elected member.

4.112 Consequently, the Tribunal recommends that where an elected representative is engaged in an outside activity whose principal focus involves the sale and/or development of land, he or she should be prohibited from dealing professionally with land which has been the subject of a decision changing its planning or rezoning status by the relevant planning authority of which he or she is a member, both during the elected member's term of office and for two years thereafter if he or she has voted on that decision. The feasibility of extending this restriction to all planning decisions should be considered.

POST-TERM EMPLOYMENT

4.113 Currently, post-term employment on the part of both members and councilors is unregulated. However, the Officeholders' Code of Conduct regulates post-term employment on the part of officeholders. It advises officeholders to be careful to avoid any real or apparent conflicts of interest with their former public office in taking up employment on leaving office. It also states:

Officeholders should act in a way which ensures it could not be reasonably concluded that an officeholder was influenced by the hope or expectation of future employment with the firm or organisation concerned or that an unfair advantage would be conferred in a new appointment by virtue of, for example, access to official information the officeholder previously enjoyed.

4.114 Post-term employment may give rise to several different types of conflicts of interest. For example, a public official may use information or contacts acquired in government to benefit him or herself or another party after leaving government:

The horizontal movement of personnel between the public and private sectors known as the “revolving door” phenomenon has supported labour market dynamism and the development of skills and competencies. However, it has also raised the risk of post public employment conflict of interest situations. These may result in the misuse of commercially sensitive information or privileged access, for example, when ex officials lobby their former government institutions.

OECD, Post-Public Employment (2010)

4.115 Moreover, in some instances, the issue of post-term employment may give rise to a conflict of interest while a public official still holds public office. For example, a public official may give preferential treatment to a particular individual in the hopes of obtaining employment or business from that individual after leaving that office:

Whole networks of corruption can be constructed by outside suppliers, not only through cash bribes and expensive overseas holidays, but also through the promise to officials of lucrative employment when they retire.

Transparency International (2000)

4.116 Furthermore, even where the issue of post-term employment does not give rise to an actual conflict of interest it is a ready source of apparent conflicts:

The appearance of impropriety exacerbates public distrust in government, ultimately causing a decline in civic participation. It also demoralises honest government workers who do not use their government jobs as a stepping stone to lucrative employment government contractors or lobbying firms.

Revolving Door Working Group (2005)

4.117 The Tribunal is concerned that given the corruption risks posed by post-term employment it is not sufficient to regulate it through codes of conduct. The Tribunal is of course cognisant of the very positive role played by codes of conduct in promoting ethical principles. It also believes that the control of conflicts of interest through a combination of rules and principles provides the most desirable framework for the regulation of such conflicts. Nevertheless, they tend to be less effective at regulating post-employment conflicts, mainly because the codes of conduct no longer apply to individuals who have ceased to hold public office, one of the key moments when post-term employment becomes an issue.

4.118 Consequently, the Tribunal recommends that post-term employment be regulated by legislation. That legislation should stipulate that, both while an officeholder and for a specified period thereafter, a person is required to obtain approval from an independent board before any remunerated position, including but not limited to employment or a consultancy position where the nature and terms of that employment could lead to a conflict of interests. This mirrors the provisions contained in the Ethics Acts in respect of civil servants holding designated positions for the purposes of those acts.

4.119 The Tribunal notes that Article 12(2)(e) of UNCAC suggests that State Parties prevent conflicts of interest by imposing restrictions, as appropriate and for a reasonable period of time, on the professional activities of former public officials or on the employment of public officials by the private sector after their resignation or retirement, where such activities or employment relate directly to the functions held or supervised by those public officials during their tenure.

4.120 The Tribunal does not consider it necessary at this stage to regulate post-term employment on the part of Oireachtas members or local elected representatives. However, this issue should be kept under review as such regulation may become necessary in the future. The Tribunal notes that the Government has already committed to regulating post-term employment in its Programme for Government.

ENFORCEMENT

The enforcement provisions applicable to conflicts of interests at national level should be modified so as to:

- Give SIPO a supervisory role over the Select Committees

- Permit SIPO to: (i) accept an anonymous or oral complaint, (ii) sit with a quorum of three members; (iii) appoint an inquiry officer when carrying out its own investigations; and (iv) seize documents
- Place increased emphasis on the prevention of conflicts of interests through training, education and research

The system for enforcing the conflict of interests provisions at local level should be modified so as to:

- Give SIPO a supervisory role over enforcement at local level
- Provide for a formal complaint procedure
- Provide for whistleblower protection for complainants
- Require each local authority to include information on the application and enforcement of the conflict of interests measures in its annual report.
- Place increased emphasis on the prevention of conflicts of interests through training, education and research

4.121 Provisions requiring public officials to disclose conflicts of interest serve as a useful guide to and reminder of the dangers of such conflicts. However, they are unlikely to be truly successful in controlling conflicts of interests in the absence of an effective enforcement regime.

4.122 There are substantial differences between the enforcement regimes applicable at national and at local level. Consequently, these recommendations deal first with the Ethics Acts and then with the LGA.

THE ETHICS ACTS

4.123 Currently, the supervision and enforcement of the Ethics Acts is split between the Select Committees on Members Interests of Dáil and Seanad Éireann (collectively, the “Select Committees”) and SIPO. The Select Committees exercise advisory and investigative functions in relation to Members’ compliance with the Ethics Acts. SIPO is primarily responsible for the application of the Ethics Acts to Officeholders and high level public servants, although it also has certain functions relevant to Oireachtas Members.

4.124 The Tribunal has a number of concerns regarding the enforcement of the Ethics Acts. These principally relate to the enforcement of the conflict of interests provisions applicable to Oireachtas Members, SIPO's investigative powers, and the lack of provisions dealing with prevention.

Oireachtas Members

4.125 As is clear from the above paragraph, Oireachtas Members essentially self-regulate the application of the conflict of interests provisions. In the Tribunal's view, self regulatory systems lack the requisite independence to ensure the robust investigation of possible breach of those provisions. Specifically, self-regulatory bodies tend to be more vulnerable to political interference. There is also a risk that members of a self-regulatory body will act so as to protect their own colleagues and will be less vigilant in investigating suspected breaches and more lenient when imposing sanctions than an independent body. In addition, self regulatory bodies lack the appearance of independence and an inquiry conducted by politicians into the behaviour of another politician is likely to be seen by many people, rightly or wrongly, as partial and lacking in objectivity and independence. Moreover, in instances where corruption is deep rooted and pervasive, self regulation tends to be particularly ineffective. In other words, there is an inverse relationship between the seriousness of corruption and the effectiveness of self regulation. Finally, it is questionable whether legislators have the necessary time or skill to carry out an investigative role.

4.126 The Tribunal considers that the introduction of an independent element in the enforcement of the conflict of interest measures applicable to the Houses of the Oireachtas is vital to respond to the concerns outlined above and to promote public confidence in those provisions.

4.127 There are a number of ways of introducing such an independent element to the enforcement of the conflicts of interest provisions. For example, an ethics officer could be appointed for each of the Houses of the Oireachtas on a statutory basis as is the case in some of the other jurisdictions considered. Alternatively, SIPO could be given a supervisory role over the existing Select Committees, including the ability to take over an investigation involving a member and to commence an investigation should it deem such an investigation necessary.

4.128 The Tribunal's preference is for the second of these two options. The Tribunal is of the view that concentrating investigative powers in one institution will promote the development of more in-depth investigative expertise than is possible where there is a proliferation of ethics institutions. The Tribunal therefore recommends that SIPO be given a supervisory role over the existing Select Committees. This role should include empowering SIPO to commence an investigation into an Oireachtas Member on its own initiative and to take over such an investigation should it deem this to be necessary.

Powers of the Standards Commission

4.129 SIPO has wide ranging investigative powers under the Ethics Acts and under the LGA. It is empowered to initiate an investigation either on the basis of a complaint or, in certain circumstances, on its own initiative. When carrying out an investigation, SIPO can order the production of documents and statements, hold private and public hearings, compel the attendance of parties and witnesses and administer an oath. Moreover, it can appoint an inquiry officer to make a preliminary inquiry into a matter which is the subject of a complaint.

4.130 Nevertheless, the Tribunal considers that SIPO lacks a number of powers which would enable it to play a more effective role in the enforcement process. Specifically, it may only accept written complaints and there are a number of restrictions and limitations as to who can make a complaint. In addition, all six members of SIPO must participate in an investigation. Furthermore, SIPO may not appoint an inquiry officer when carrying out investigations on its own initiative. Finally, it does not have the power to seize documents.

4.131 Under the complaints procedures for breach of the conflicts of interests' provisions, complaints must be in writing. In addition, SIPO may not accept anonymous complaints. The Tribunal believes that the public interest in uncovering infringements of the conflict of interest provisions warrants a much broader and more flexible approach to complaints than that which currently applies. Complaints are an integral part of an effective enforcement mechanism. They are a principal means of alerting the enforcement authorities to possible non-compliance with the conflicts of interest measures and also play an important role in promoting public confidence in those measures. Effective complaint mechanisms also promote the perception that information regarding possible contraventions of those provisions is welcome and will be properly investigated.

4.132 The Tribunal does not see any reason for prohibiting SIPO from accepting complaints made orally. In addition, it is of the view that there are strong arguments in favour of permitting complaints to be made anonymously. In particular, fear of reprisals is one of the main reasons why individuals do not complain about possible infringements of which they are aware and anonymity offers the ultimate protection against such reprisals. While the Ethics Acts do provide for protection for complainants, it is likely that at least some of those who truly fear retaliation may prefer anonymity. The Tribunal recognises that permitting anonymous complaints may increase the number of frivolous or vexation complaints made, however, it is also likely to increase the number of valid complaints.

4.133 The Tribunal notes that SIPO is not in favour of anonymous complaints. It considers that complainants should be required to identify themselves when making a complaint but should then be able to request anonymity. While this would clearly be more permissive than the current complaints system, it may still deter some complainants. Moreover, the important issue in any disclosure is whether or not it is true. This does not necessarily turn on the identity of the person making the disclosure. While the Tribunal acknowledges that investigating anonymous complaints may pose increased difficulties it notes that the Competition Authority, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Health and Safety Authority each accept anonymous complaints. Moreover, SIPO would retain its current powers not to pursue an investigation including in situations where it is unable to do so because it has insufficient information.

4.134 At present, the Ethics Acts require that all members of SIPO be present for investigations. The Tribunal is concerned that this compromises the efficacy of those investigations. Specifically, SIPO comprises six members, only two of whom are full time. The requirement that all six members be present for investigations is likely to present difficulties in coordinating and scheduling hearings. Moreover, the Tribunal does not see any rationale for requiring each member to be involved in every investigation. Several other investigative bodies sit with three or even sole members. The Tribunal considers that empowering the Standards Commission to sit with three members would contribute to the efficiency of its investigations and is therefore making a recommendation to this effect. The Tribunal notes that SIPO supports this recommendation.

4.135 The appointment of an inquiry officer to carry out a preliminary investigation enables SIPO to take an initial view as to whether or not a case merits a full blown investigation. In particular, it permits SIPO to determine whether or not to conduct a full investigation on the basis of more information than would otherwise be available to it and to thereby use its resources more effectively. However, currently, SIPO may not appoint an inquiry officer when carrying out an investigation on its own initiative. The Tribunal does not see any rationale whatsoever for restricting SIPO's powers in this way. In fact, arguably it is particularly important to permit SIPO to appoint an inquiry officer in the case of such investigations. Specifically, a complaint may contain relatively significant information regarding the alleged infringement whereas SIPO must rely on its own inquiries when commencing an investigation on its own initiative. Consequently, the Tribunal recommends that SIPO be given the power to appoint an inquiry officer to investigate possible instances of non-compliance with the Ethics Acts and related codes of conduct as and when it sees fit. The Tribunal notes that SIPO has also requested that it be permitted to appoint an inquiry officer in the absence of a complaint.

4.136 Finally, while SIPO currently enjoys relatively extensive powers of investigation, it does not have the power to seize documents. While it may order the production of documents, production orders take time to implement and the relevant documentation may be destroyed in the intervening period. Consequently the Tribunal recommends that SIPO be permitted to seize documents, subject to appropriate safeguards, where there is a real risk of documents being destroyed, altered or concealed.

Prevention

4.137 The Ethics Acts place relatively little emphasis on the prevention of conflicts of interests. While the existing measures confer an advisory role on both SIPO and the Select Committees, they do not provide for training on conflicts of interest, for promoting public awareness of the conflict of interest measures or for on-going research on sound management practices for dealing with such conflicts.

4.138 The Tribunal is of the view that the prevention of conflicts of interest through promoting awareness of the conflict of interest measures and of ethical standards generally is a vital aspect of an effective enforcement policy. In particular, a policy which places strong emphasis on prevention has several advantages over one which relies exclusively on investigations and sanctions. Specifically, preventative measures help promote conflict of interest resolution as a key component of sound administration and good governance rather than a mere bureaucratic formality. Moreover, such measures can help the evolution of a common ethical standard within public bodies and assist public officials in making informed decisions as to whether a conflict of interest exists and the steps needed to resolve it. Additionally and crucially, prevention can help conflicts of interests from impacting on public decisions in the first place, thus avoiding the reputational damage associated with investigation and sanctions.

4.139 Training, promoting public awareness and on-going research into the management of conflicts of interest are all essential components of an effective preventative strategy. Training promotes awareness of the conflict of interests measures and helps public officials to recognise such conflicts and resolve them appropriately. It can also assist in developing an agreed understanding as to what constitutes proper and/or what constitutes improper behaviour. Furthermore, training may help ensure that officials understand the importance and role of conflict of interests measures and help combat the tendency to view such measures as paper exercises or bureaucratic annoyances with little practical effect.

4.140 Measures promoting public awareness can help clarify to the public what sort of behaviour they can legitimately expect from public officials. Moreover, such measures are necessary to inform the public of the existence of the conflict of interests measures and to promote confidence in them. They are also a crucial element of an effective complaints procedure.

Mobilizing public opinion in support of strong anti-corruption measures also entails mobilizing popular support for high standards of integrity and performance in public and private administration and opposition to corrupt practices wherever they occur. If this is done, anti-corruption strategies are unlikely to fail. If it is not, they are unlikely to succeed.

U.N. (2003)

4.141 Finally, the type of interest likely to give rise to a conflict of interest may change over time as may public expectations regarding appropriate behaviour for public officials. Consequently, to be effective, conflict of interest measures must be continually adjusted to meet the needs of a changing environment. This requires on-going research, the ability to take account of lessons learnt and to use them to modify those measures as the need arises.

4.142 The Tribunal therefore recommends that provision be made for: conflict of interests training; promoting public awareness on conflicts of interests and the measures controlling them; and carrying out on-going research in conflict of interest prevention and management. While the Tribunal is aware that SIPO frequently makes recommendations regarding reforms to the conflict of interest provisions, it considers that this role should be formalised, expanded and given a specific statutory basis.

THE LGA

4.143 Principle responsibility for the implementation of the conflicts of interests provisions in the LGA rests with the relevant Local Authority. That act provides for the appointment of an ethics register as well as conferring various supervisory and enforcement functions on local authority managers, the Cathaoirleach of a local authority council and the council itself. While investigations are primarily the responsibility of the local authority manager and/or Cathaoirleach, they may refer a complaint to SIPO which can use its powers under the Ethics Acts to investigate and report on possible breaches of ethics at local level. The LGA does not confer any specific investigative powers on either the local authority manager or the Cathaoirleach. Nor does it make provision for the acceptance of complaints or whistleblower protection.

4.144 The Tribunal is concerned that the manner in which the LGA is currently implemented lacks independence, credibility and effectiveness. Many of the concerns the Tribunal has about self-regulatory systems expressed above also apply in this context. Specifically, it is unlikely that either the Manager or the Cathaoirleach possesses either the actual or apparent independence necessary for credible enforcement. Moreover, the lack of a formal complaint system suggests that facilitating complaints under the act is of low priority while the lack of information as to how complaints should be made is likely to deter at least some complainants. This is also true of the fact that no provision is made for whistleblower protection. In addition, it is extremely doubtful as to whether either the Cathaoirleach or the manager has the necessary experience and/or resources to carry out an investigation into a possible infringement. Nor do they appear to have the necessary investigative powers to carry out such an investigation. Furthermore, the lack of preventative measures belies the importance of such measures in an effective conflict of interest policy.

4.145 Finally, the Tribunal is concerned that there is an overall lack of transparency regarding the application and enforcement of the conflicts of interests provisions at local level. In order to promote public confidence in the system, the public need to know about the measures being taken to ensure the integrity of local government and little information of this type is currently available to it.

4.146 Given the inadequacies of the current system for enforcing the conflicts of interest measures at local level, the Tribunal believes that this system needs to be radically overhauled. Specifically, it recommends that SIPO be given a supervisory role in the enforcement process with the power to initiate an investigation into a possible infringement of those measures as well as to take over an investigation being conducted at local level should it consider this to be necessary. In carrying out its role under the LGA, SIPO should be able to use its full panoply of powers.

4.147 In addition, explicit provision should be made for the making of complaints, including anonymous complaints under the LGA and for whistleblower protection. Local authorities should also be conferred with extensive powers of investigation. Moreover, far greater emphasis should be placed on the prevention of conflicts of interests including through increased training, education and on-going research.

4.148 The Tribunal also recommends that local authorities be required to include information on the enforcement of the conflicts of interests provisions in their annual reports, including in particular, information regarding ad hoc disclosures, complaints made, investigations undertaken and sanctions imposed.

4.149 In this respect, the Tribunal notes that the Electoral (Amendment) (No. 2) Act 2009 requires local authorities to publish the aggregate election expenditure of each candidate, designated person, third party and national agent in its annual report in respect of the year in which the election is held.

SANCTIONS

The failure of a public official to make a disclosure required under the Ethics Acts should be a criminal offence as should the making of disclosure which is false or misleading in a material respect

4.150 Where an elected representative breaches the Ethics Acts the primary sanction is suspension. Certain allowances may also be withheld. Once a breach of those acts is established, the decision as to whether or not to impose a sanction in respect of that breach is a matter for the relevant House of the Oireachtas.

4.151 The Tribunal is not convinced that these sanctions are such as to provide an effective deterrent against breaching the Ethics Acts. Specifically, it is deeply concerned by the fact that a decision as to whether or not to impose a sanction is a matter for the relevant House of the Oireachtas. The Tribunal considers it to be highly unlikely that the Dáil would ever agree to impose a sanction on, for example, a Minister or the Taoiseach. Moreover, even in the case of ordinary members it is likely that the relevant House would, as often as not, divide along political party lines when determining whether or not to suspend a member for breach of the Ethics Acts.

4.152 The Tribunal is also concerned that the fact that failure to make a disclosure or making a false/misleading disclosure are not offences has repercussions for the civil recovery of assets obtained through corrupt conduct. Specifically, under the Proceeds of Crime (Amendment) Act 2005, the High Court has the power to make a corrupt enrichment order ordering the confiscation of a person's assets where that person has been corruptly enriched. According to that act, a person is corruptly enriched if he or she derives a pecuniary advantage or other benefit as a result of or in connection with corrupt conduct. The term "corrupt conduct" is defined to include any conduct which at the time it occurred was an offence under the Ethics Acts. However, as the failure to make disclosure under the Ethics Acts is not an offence under those Acts nor is the making of a false or misleading disclosure, these do not fall within that definition of corrupt conduct.

4.153 The Tribunal therefore recommends that the breach of the disclosure requirements in the Ethics Acts should be a criminal offence. Specifically, it should be a criminal offence to fail to make a disclosure under the Ethics Acts or to intentionally make a disclosure which is false or misleading in a material respect.

4.154 The Tribunal notes that under Part 15 of the Local Government Act 2001, it is already an offence to fail to make the requisite declarations or to make a declaration containing particulars which are false or misleading in a material respect.

POLITICAL FINANCEThe Tribunal recommends:

- 1. The definition of the term “donation” should be amended to cover all donations, given, received or used for political purposes
- 2. The following types of donations should be prohibited:
 - Indirect donations
 - anonymous or cash donations to an electoral candidate or elected representative of more than €5 and to a political party or third party of more than €175
 - the receipt by an electoral candidate or elected representative of more than €2,000 in total by way of anonymous or cash donations and of more than €5,000 by a political party or third party
- 3. The thresholds for permitted political donations should be lowered to €1,000 in the case of donations to an electoral candidate or an elected representative and €2,500 in the case of donations to political parties or third parties
- 4. An overall limit should be placed on the aggregate amount which an individual can donate to an electoral candidate or elected representative who is a member of a political party and the party itself
- 5. The existing expenditure restrictions should be:
 - extended to cover all political expenditure
 - lowered to an amount which constitutes an effective ceiling on political expenditure
 - extended to cover Seanad electoral candidates and third parties.

The Tribunal recommends:

- 6. Political Parties, elected representatives and electoral candidates should be required to disclose their audited annual accounts
- 7. The level at which donations must be disclosed should be lowered to:
 - €55, in the case of a donation received by an electoral candidate or elected representative
 - €175, in the case of a donation received by a political party or third party
- 7. Donation recipients should be required to provide more detailed information regarding the source and nature of donations which they have received
- 8. Political parties, third parties and electoral candidates should be required to disclose donations received prior to elections
- 9. Political parties should be required to supply details of their organisational structure including their subsidiary organisations and branches as a condition of registration under the Electoral Act 1992
- 10. Restrictions should be placed on the persons entitled to receive donations on behalf of a political party, third party, elected representative or electoral candidate
- 11. The Standards in Public Office Commission should be given increased resources for the purpose of enforcing the political finance acts
- 12. The enforcement of the Local Elections (Disclosure of Donations) Act 1999, as amended (the “LEA”) should be entrusted to an external, independent body
- 13. Sanctions for breaching the political finance acts should include administrative sanctions

The Tribunal recommends:14. The following acts or omissions should be subject to sanction:

- Failing to open a donations account

- Making a prohibited donation

- Deliberately circumventing the requirements set down in the political finance acts.

5.01 Bribes and political donations differ from each other in fundamental ways. In particular, bribery involves an element of exchange of official power for the receipt of money which is absent from a political donation. In the case of such a donation, the payer merely gives the donation and the recipient merely accepts it without requesting, offering or agreeing anything in return. Moreover, in contrast to bribes, political donations serve important legitimate functions. Electoral candidates and electoral representatives (collectively “politicians”) as well as political parties need funding in order to survive, compete and perform their democratic functions. In addition, contributing money is an important form of political participation and may also be a component of political expression. Furthermore, the need to fundraise may make both politicians and political parties more responsive and accountable to their electoral base.

5.02 Despite these differences, at times the distinction between bribes and political donations may become blurred. For example, political donations may be given in anticipation of or in return for the recipient’s stance on a particular issue. The more specifically the recipient and the donor exchange views on future issues to be voted upon, the more clearly the recipient falls within the scope of the bribery offence. In some such instances, the differences between a bribe and a donation may effectively disappear and it may become almost impossible to distinguish one from the other.

5.03 Moreover, even in the absence of such an exchange of views, a political donation may be based on an implicit acknowledgement that one day the benefit will be returned. That return may take any number of forms. At one extreme, the recipient may reward the donor with lucrative government contracts or even introduce legislation and/or policies favourable to the donor’s interests. At the other, the donation simply guarantees the donor increased access to policy makers as politicians may listen more to those who finance their campaigns than to those who voted for them or their party. In such cases, politicians may become overly compliant with the wishes of large contributors thus enabling them to exercise undue influence over or even to capture the political process. Even entirely legitimate donations can have undesirable consequences by fostering overly close relationships between donors and their recipients.

5.04 Aside from actual corruption, large donations almost inevitably give rise to an appearance of impropriety and may in themselves be damaging to the political process even in the absence of any type of quid pro quo, whether express or implied.

The familiar maxim that he who pays the piper calls the tune is widely believed to operate in the sphere of politics: whether or not the suspicion is justified, the ordinary voter is apt to suspect that a very large gift to a political party must be made with some objective in view.

Fifth Report of the Committee for Standards in Public Life (1998)

Leave the perception of propriety unanswered and the cynical assumption that large donors call the tune could jeopardise the willingness of voters to take part in democratic governance.

Nixon v Shrink Missouri PAC (2000)

5.05 Aside from corruption risks, ineffectively regulated political finance can also have other adverse repercussions on the political process. For example, the ability of major contributors to have access to and influence that process means that where the electorate have unequal levels of income, this inequality is imported into the political process. On a related point, those who are in power are more likely to attract funding than those who are not and unequal access to and the unequal distribution of finance may have an adverse effect on the equality of political participation and competition.

5.06 Political finance is currently regulated by the Electoral Act 1997, as amended and the LEA, (the “political finance acts”). These acts largely seek to balance the competing roles of money in politics through: prohibiting donations from certain sources and in excess of specified amounts; regulating electoral expenditure; requiring the public disclosure of both donations and electoral expenditure; and providing for some degree of exchequer funding for political activity.

5.07 The issue of political finance featured frequently in the inquiries conducted by this Tribunal and it is concerned that the existing acts do not sufficiently combat the corruption risks to which this issue gives rise. Consequently, it is making a number of recommendations designed to make those acts more effective. These can be loosely divided into five main categories, namely: (1) the regulation of donations; (2) the regulation of electoral expenditure; (3) disclosure; (4) enforcement; and (5) investigations and sanctions.

5.08 In making these recommendations, the Tribunal has taken into account the fact that any attempts to regulate political finance must take into consideration both its positive and negative aspects. Specifically, the goal of any such regulation must be to safeguard as far as possible those positive aspects while minimising the extent to which political finance can be used as a cloak for corruption or to otherwise undermine the democratic process.

5.09 The Tribunal has also taken into account the recommendations made by the Moriarty Tribunal upon the conclusion of its inquiries. Those which directly relate to the recommendations made below are discussed in the relevant section of these recommendations.

5.10 In formulating these recommendations, the Tribunal consulted with SIPO, TASC, Transparency International and other bodies. It also took account of political finance measures adopted by a number of international organisations, including, in particular, the U.N. and the Council of Europe, several NGOs as well as that of a number of other jurisdictions, namely the U.K., Canada, Australia and the U.S. Annex 2 gives a brief overview of some of these measures. Obviously, the decision to make any particular recommendation was based on deficiencies in the existing domestic conflict of interest provisions and the need to remedy those deficiencies.

5.11 The Tribunal notes that the Government has published draft legislation in the form of the Electoral (Amendment) (Political Funding) Bill 2011 (the “2011 Bill”) which will, if enacted in its current form, introduce several significant amendments to the political finance acts. The Tribunal welcomes this proposed legislation. However, for obvious reasons, these recommendations focus on the existing political finance acts.

THE REGULATION OF POLITICAL DONATIONS

The definition of the term “donation” should be amended to cover all donations, given, received or used for political purposes

The following types of donations should be prohibited:

- Indirect donations
- anonymous or cash donations to an electoral candidate or elected representative of more than €55 and to a political party or third party of more than €175
- the receipt by an electoral candidate or elected representative of more than €2,000 in total by way of anonymous or cash donations and of more than €5,000 by a political party or third party

The thresholds for permitted political donations should be lowered to €1,000 in the case of donations to elected representatives and elected candidates and €2,500 in the case of donations to political parties or third parties

An overall limit should be placed on the aggregate amount which an individual can donate to each electoral candidate or elected representative who is a member of a political party and that party itself

5.12 The political finance acts regulate political donations in two ways. First, they prohibit political parties and politicians from accepting donations from certain sources (“source restrictions”). Secondly, they limit the overall amount which politicians or political parties may accept by way of political donation (“amount restrictions”).

5.13 Both types of rules play an important role in combating corruption. Specifically, source restrictions may prevent politicians or political parties from accepting donations from sources which are considered particularly likely to give rise to corruption risks. For their part, amount restrictions seek to prevent the actual corruption associated with large financial contributions. In this respect, they are premised on the belief that large donations are more likely to be given with the expectation or promise of some sort of return, whether this is in the form of a specific outcome, increased access to policy makers or some other advantage. Amount restrictions also seek to combat apparent corruption recognising that, whatever the reality of the situation, large donations tend to give rise to an appearance of impropriety, thus eroding public confidence in the democratic process. In this respect, the familiar maxim that he who pays the piper calls the tune is thought to apply in politics, as in other areas.

5.14 The Tribunal is concerned that the existing rules governing the permitted sources and amounts of political donations suffer from several deficiencies which adversely affect their ability to combat the actual and apparent corruption associated with these issues. Consequently, it is making a number of recommendations affecting the definition of a political donation, as well as the permitted source and amount restrictions.

DEFINITION OF “DONATION”

5.15 The existing political finance acts define the term “political donation” in slightly different ways. According to the Electoral Act 1997 as amended, a donation comprises “any contribution given for political purposes by any person whether or not a member of a political party.” Generally, according to that Act, a contribution is given for political purposes if it promotes or opposes the interests or policies of a political party, politician or third party or otherwise influences the outcome of a relevant election, referendum or campaign. The LEA, defines a donation as “any contribution given for political purposes to a candidate at an election, or a member of a local authority, political party or third party in connection with an election, plebiscite or campaign.”

5.16 The Tribunal considers both these definitions to suffer from a number of short-comings. Specifically, they do not cover contributions given for a non political purpose but used for political purposes. For example, they do not cover personal gifts, loans and/or payments for professional services received by a recipient which he or she subsequently uses for political purposes. On a related point, they do not cover contributions given by a politician to him or herself: a politician can use an unlimited amount of his or her personal funds to finance his or her political activities. The fact that such contributions are not covered appears to provide both an incentive and a relatively easy way to circumvent the donations restrictions, through gift giving, the advancement of loans or the acceptance of professional payments.

5.17 Nor do loans given at commercial rates constitute political donations. As a consequence, the political finance acts do not regulate either loans provided by financial institutions where normal commercial rules apply or loans where the lender is not a financial institution once the terms and conditions of the loan are clearly stated in writing and the interest charged reflects that charged by financial institutions. However, evidently such loans may be given for corrupt purposes or at least give rise to the appearance of corruption. Moreover, the exclusion of these types of loans from the definition of a donation may facilitate donors and donees in circumventing the provisions of the political finance acts either completely or partially. For example, a lender could write off part of the loan. Pursuant to the current provisions of the acts, the recipient could claim that such a decision was made in the normal course of business and consequently the relevant sum of money does not constitute a donation. At the very least the fact that such loans are excluded enables the recipient to manipulate the time at which the loan must be disclosed.

5.18 More practically, whether or not a contribution falls within the definition of a donation is dependent on the donor’s intention and it is not clear how the recipient is meant to ascertain this.

5.19 The definition of the term “donation” under the LEA raises supplemental difficulties. Specifically, for the purposes of that act, a contribution will only constitute a political donation where two conditions are satisfied. First, the donation must be given for political purposes and secondly it must be given in connection with an election, plebiscite or campaign. This latter condition may well exclude some donations given for broader political purposes from the scope of the LEA.

5.20 It is not entirely clear whether or not the definition of the term “donation” in the Electoral Act is similarly restricted. As mentioned, that act applies to donations given for “political purposes”. It then gives a list of such purposes which finishes with the words “otherwise to influence the outcome of the election or a referendum or campaign”. It is therefore unclear whether, like the LEA, the Electoral Act imposes a dual condition before a contribution will be considered to be a political donation or whether the various purposes outlined in the list are all deemed to influence the outcome of the election, without it being necessary to actually establish such an influence.

5.21 These problems raise serious questions regarding the adequacy of the definitions of the term “donation” in each of the political finance acts. Moreover, the primary purpose of regulating donations is to regulate the sources and amounts of money contributed and/or used for political purposes. From this perspective, it matters little whether a contribution is given directly for political purposes or whether it is a loan, gift or other payment which is not given for such purposes but is used for them.

5.22 The Tribunal therefore recommends that the definition of the term “donation” in both the political finance acts be amended so as to focus as much on the purposes for which the money is used as on the donor’s motivation for giving it. Consequently, it recommends that a “donation” be defined as any contribution given, received or used for political purposes.

5.23 The Tribunal notes that in the U.K., the Political Parties, Election and Referendums Act 2000 (the “PPERA”) defines a “controlled donation” as a donation in excess of £200, which is received by a “regulated donee” and which is offered to him or accepted or retained by him for his use or benefit in connection with the any of the recipient’s political activities. The term “regulated donee” includes Members of Parliament but not political parties. A donation to a political party includes any donation of money or property irrespective of its purpose. In Canada, the Canada Elections Act (the “CEA”) defines a contribution simply as a monetary or non-monetary contribution. This includes both loans given on a commercial basis and self-contributions. These are also covered by the Federal Election Campaign Act 1971 as amended (“FECA”) in the U.S.A.

5.24 The Tribunal is aware that, if adopted, this recommendation will have consequences for third parties who also fall within the scope of the Electoral Act 1997. That act defines a “third party” as:

Any person, other than a political party registered in the Register of Political Parties under Part III of the Electoral Act 1992, or a candidate at an election who accepts, in a particular year, a donation the value of which exceeds €127.

Defining the term “donation” to cover any contribution given, received or used for political purposes could lead to certain parties falling within those rules who should not do so. The Tribunal therefore considers it advisable that the definition of a third party be amended to focus exclusively on those parties who incur expenditure for political purposes. In this respect, the legislature may wish to give further consideration to the suggestion made by SIPO in a submission made to the then Minister for the Environment, Heritage and Local Government in 2003. In that submission, SIPO highlighted the difficulties which it was encountering in supervising the existing legislation in relation to third parties and suggested:

that, instead of concentrating on the receipt of a donation, an alternative approach might be to focus as in the case of elections, on spending by individuals or groups and to regard them as third parties if they intend to incur expenditure over a certain threshold, say €5,000, in relation to a campaign which is for political purposes as defined in the legislation.

SIPO (2003)

SOURCES RESTRICTIONS

5.25 The existing political finance acts prohibit donations from non-resident individuals who are not Irish citizens and from foreign corporations or unincorporated bodies. Donations from all other sources are permitted, including domestic corporate donations, indirect donations, anonymous donations, and cash donations. The Tribunal is concerned that some of these sources pose clear corruption risks and consequently require increased regulation. Specifically, it considers that indirect donations should be prohibited as should anonymous and/or cash donations of above a minimum amount.

Indirect Donations

5.26 As discussed, both the political finance acts limit the sources and amount of donations as well as requiring the disclosure of donations above a specified threshold. However, neither of the acts regulates indirect contributions, namely contributions made by a person on behalf of another, in any detail. More specifically, it is clear from those acts that indirect contributions are permitted if the recipient knows the name and address of the person on whose behalf the donation is made. It is not however an offence to fail to inform the recipient of that person's true name and address.

5.27 Indirect contributions raise specific risks from a corruption perspective. For example, an individual may channel donations through a diverse number of persons in order to circumvent the donation limitations and/or to conceal the true identity of the donor. The Tribunal considers that these risks can be best combated by prohibiting this type of donation and making it an offence for a person to make a donation in his or her own name with resources given for those purposes by another person. It therefore makes recommendations to this effect.

Anonymous or Cash donations

5.28 The existing political finance measures prohibit the acceptance of anonymous donations in excess of €127. They do not prohibit the offer or acceptance of cash donations.

5.29 Anonymous donations give rise to a number of corruption risks. Specifically, they may be used to circumvent restrictions on the source and/or amount of donations as they are difficult to trace and monitor. This is also true of cash donations and it is noteworthy that a hall mark of several of the payments found to be corrupt payments by this and other Tribunals is the fact that they were made in cash. Where a donation is routed through a bank account this increases its transparency and is of significant assistance should it require subsequent investigation.

5.30 The Tribunal considers that the corruption risks posed by anonymous and cash donations justify increased regulation of these types of donations and that both should be regulated in the same way. While from the perspective of corruption prevention it would be preferable to prohibit all such donations the Tribunal accepts that in so far as low value donations are concerned, the advantages of such a prohibition may be disproportionate to the potentially severe administrative costs associated with its implementation. Even more significantly, the Tribunal considers that individuals should be permitted to make small value donations without having to declare their political allegiances. Nevertheless, the Tribunal is concerned that the current threshold of €127 for anonymous donations is too high. It consequently recommends lowering the threshold for anonymous and cash donations to €55 where the recipient is an electoral candidate or elected representative and €175 in the case of political parties. The Tribunal notes that in Canada, electoral candidates are prohibited from receiving an anonymous donation or a cash contribution of more than $20.

5.31 In addition to lowering the thresholds at which anonymous and cash donations are permitted, the Tribunal considers that there should be an overall limit on the total amount which political parties, electoral candidates, elected representatives and third parties can accept by way of anonymous or cash donations. Such a limit is necessary to ensure that these types of donations are not used to circumvent the amount restrictions. It is also necessary from an appearance perspective as, where a party or person is largely funded by anonymous or cash donations this is likely to give rise to conjecture and concern about the sources of those donations.

5.32 The Tribunal therefore recommends that the total amount which an individual may accept by way of anonymous or cash donation should not exceed €1,500 whereas a political party should be prohibited from accepting a total amount in excess of €5,000.

DONATION AMOUNTS

5.33 Each of the political finance acts limit the amount of money which either an individual politician, a political party or a third party may accept from any individual donor. Specifically, both electoral candidates and elected representatives are prohibited from accepting a donation in excess of €2,539.48 directly or indirectly from any one source in a particular year. The existing threshold for permitted donations to political parties is €6,348.69.

5.34 Restrictions on the amount which may be given by way of a political donation should be set at a level which permits those donations which are a legitimate expression of political support to continue to be made while simultaneously preventing those donations capable of giving rise to actual or apparent corruption. One striking feature which emerged from this Tribunal's inquiries was the extent to which relatively small sums of money could give rise to both actual and apparent corruption. In view of this, the Tribunal is concerned that the existing threshold for donations to politicians is too high.

5.35 In this respect, the Tribunal notes that the 2011 Bill proposes reducing the above-mentioned limits to €2,500 in the case of donations to a political party, accounting unit and third party and to €1,000 in the case of donations to an individual politician. The Tribunal fully endorses these proposed reductions.

5.36 However, the Tribunal is also concerned by the fact that there is no limit on the overall amount which an individual can give to a political party and to the electoral candidates and/or elected representatives who are members of that party. Specifically, under the current provisions an individual could give €2,539.48 to each member of a political party as well as €6,348.69 to the party itself. Nor does the 2011 Bill propose introducing such a limit, although, as mentioned, it will, if enacted in its existing form, reduce the individual amounts which can be given to a political party or politician. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the lack of an overall limit on contributions means that an individual could give a significant amount of money to a political party and its individual politicians. This gives rise to evident corruption risks, both actual and apparent.

5.37 Consequently, the Tribunal recommends that an overall limit be placed on the aggregate amount which an individual can give by way of political donation. The relevant amount should strike a balance, on the one hand, between the important, legitimate role played by political finance in democratic systems and the importance of permitting individuals to participate in those systems through financial contributions, and, on the other, the need to combat actual and apparent corruption.

5.38 In this respect, the Tribunal notes that Canadian citizens are prohibited from making political contributions exceeding more than $1,000 in total in any calendar year to the candidates of a political party.

THE REGULATION OF ELECTORAL EXPENDITURE

The existing expenditure restrictions should be:

- extended to cover all political expenditure
- lowered to an amount which constitutes an effective ceiling on political expenditure
- extended to cover Seanad electoral candidates and third parties

5.39 Both the political finance acts limit the amount of expenditure which may be incurred during the electoral period, namely the 50 – 60 day period immediately prior to the election. These limits apply to electoral candidates in Dáil, European, Presidential and local elections and cover expenses incurred during the electoral period or for use at the election during that period. In the case of Dáil elections, expenditure limits vary depending on the number of seats in the constituency in which the candidate is running. They range between €30,150 and €45,200. In the case of local elections, the applicable limits range between €7,500 and €15,000.

5.40 A political party may only incur electoral expenditure if an electoral candidate assigns some or his or her limit to that party. Consequently, there are no separate limits for political parties. Moreover, neither electoral candidates at Seanad elections nor third parties are subject to electoral expenditure limits.

5.41 Expenditure limits play an important role in combating corruption. In particular, they are the natural counterpart to donation restrictions in that they obviate the need for politicians or political parties to have large sums of money to spend thus reducing their need to seek out large donations. Such limits may also pursue objectives other than controlling corruption, including ensuring equality of opportunity in the political process.

5.42 However, if the goal of expenditure limits is to reduce the need for funds, it is doubtful whether the existing expenditure limits are having their desired effect. In particular, those limits may be undermined by electoral expenditure occurring outside the electoral period, as this expenditure is unregulated. Moreover, few candidates reach the existing limits which raises doubt as to whether they are set at an effective level. Specifically, in order to reduce the need for funds, expenditure limits should be set at a level below that of the expenditure which candidates would otherwise incur. However this does not seem to be the case. Furthermore, the limits do not apply to all those involved in elections, namely candidates at Seanad elections and third parties. Finally, the fact that the controls only apply to electoral expenditure rather than, more generally, to political expenditure, means that the limits only affect one source of expenditure and do not affect the drive for funds in other areas. Specifically, both politicians and political parties incur political expenses on an on-going basis and those expenses may drive them into the arms of large contributors in much the same way as the need for electoral funding. Consequently, to be effective expenditure limits should cover all expenditure for political purposes.

5.43 In view of the important role played by expenditure limits in combating corruption, the Tribunal considers that the existing limits should be made more effective. First and foremost, those limits should be extended to cover all political expenditure rather than merely electoral expenditure. While the Tribunal is aware that SIPO has suggested that consideration should be given to imposing accountability in the context of spending limits to a specified period prior to the commencement of that period, the Tribunal considers that this suggestion suffers from two infirmities. First, where expenditure limits are confined to a specified period, there will inevitably be some front loading of expenditure to avoid those restrictions. Secondly, expenditure incurred for political purposes is also incurred for electoral purposes as most political activities are ultimately aimed at improving a politician's or political party's chances in future elections. Consequently, as mentioned, confining expenditure limits to electoral funds fails to help counter the corruption risks raised by expenditure for broader political purposes.

5.44 Limits on expenditure could take the form of a single limit for both electoral and non electoral political purposes or, alternatively, two separate limits. In the event that a separate limit is imposed for electoral expenditure, the Tribunal recommends that it apply for a substantial period prior to the election. Moreover, it should be set at such a limit as to constitute a realistic ceiling on electoral expenditure. Ideally, limits on all types of expenditure, both political and electoral, should be high enough to enable effective political participation but low enough to reduce the incentive to accept corrupt or apparently corrupt funding.

5.45 The Tribunal also considers the fact that the existing expenditure restrictions do not apply to third parties or Seanad elections to be problematic. Specifically, if the aim of expenditure restrictions is to curtail the costs of elections then this aim may be undermined by unlimited third party expenditure. Moreover, the fact that Seanad elections are not covered by expenditure restrictions means that such restrictions are unable to play any role in combating corruption in the context of those elections. While this is significant in and of itself, corruption in the context of Seanad elections may also impact on other areas of life as it is not unusual for members of the Seanad to stand for election to the Dáil or for the Presidency. Consequently, the Tribunal recommends that expenditure restrictions should also apply to third parties and Seanad members.

DISCLOSURE

The rules regulating disclosure of political finance should be amended so as to

- require political parties, elected representatives and electoral candidates to disclose their annual accounts
- lower the level at which donations must be disclosed to a) €55, in the case of a donation received by an electoral candidate or elected representative and b) €175, in the case of a donation received by a political party or a third party
- require those making disclosure to provide more detailed information regarding the source and nature of the donations which they have received
- ensure that donations are disclosed prior to elections

5.46 Pursuant to the political finance acts, elected representatives must disclose annually political donations in excess of €634.97 received from an individual donor either as a single sum or in aggregate. For their part, political parties must disclose donations exceeding €5,078.95. The person making the disclosure must state, in respect of each donation received: its value and the name, description (whether an individual or company, trade union, political party etc) and postal address of the person by or on whose behalf the donation was made. Under the Electoral Act, he or she must also disclose the nature of the donation, for example, whether in the form of cash, cheque, use of property or services etc.

5.47 Disclosure is the most fundamental of all the measures aimed at controlling political finance. It is widely regarded as an effective precaution against the improper influence and favouritism which may result from some political donations. Disclosure is also necessary to combat perceptions of corruption linked to political finance even where no actual corruption exists. Secrecy and lack of transparency easily foster an appearance of impropriety and transform innocent transactions into dangerous scandals. As such, the need for comprehensive fully effective disclosure cannot be overemphasised: it is the cornerstone upon which all other attempts to control political finance rest.

Disclosure allows the government and the public to keep score on the amounts, sources and destinations of money in politics. Disclosure reports are to politics what profit and loss statements are to business. Without them, governments and citizens risk never knowing the price tag of their democracy or the identity of the major influences behind it, whether corporate, union, ordinary citizen, special interest groups, drug lords or other criminal elements.

USAID (2003)

5.48 The Tribunal is concerned that the disclosure requirements in the political finance acts suffer from a number of deficiencies which seriously compromise their effectiveness in combating corruption. Specifically: (1) there is no requirement for political parties, elected representatives or electoral candidates to disclose their annual accounts; (2) the current disclosure thresholds are too high; (3) the information provided on donations disclosed is insufficient; and, (4) at times, disclosure is made too late for optimal effectiveness.

Annual Accounts

5.49 The Tribunal views the fact that political parties are not required to disclose and publish their accounts is one of the most serious deficiencies in the existing rules governing political finance. Limiting a political party's disclosure obligation to donations received and electoral expenditure restricts the public's view of that party's finances and makes it difficult for it to place those donations or that expenditure in its general financial context or to correlate that party's sources of income with its expenditure. It also means that the public has no oversight over potentially significant sources of income and expenditure. As observed by SIPO, in its 2008, in respect of the disclosure requirements:

However, if the purpose of the Act is to demonstrate transparency in how political parties are funded and in particular how political parties and their candidates fund election campaigns, then this part of the legislation is not achieving that purpose.

5.50 The Tribunal notes that the 2011 Bill provides that political parties must furnish an audited annual statement of accounts to SIPO. Failure to comply with this obligation will result in the funding made available to political parties by the State under Part 3 of the Electoral Act 1997 being withheld. The Tribunal fully supports the introduction of this provision and notes that it will bring Irish political finance law more fully in line with international best practice.

5.51 However, the Tribunal is of the view that there would also be considerable merit in requiring both electoral candidates and elected representatives to furnish their accounts to SIPO. This would ensure increased transparency over the funding of political activity. Moreover any discrepancies between stated income and assets and actual income and assets could be used as a basis for investigations.

5.52 The Tribunal notes that the Council of Europe's Recommendation (2003) recommends that electoral candidates be required to make their full accounts publicly available. The International Foundation for Electoral Systems also recommends that electoral candidates be required to disclose their assets and liabilities as well as their income and expenditure.

Disclosure Thresholds

5.53 Under the existing provisions, politicians must disclose political donations in excess of €634.97 and political parties must disclose donations exceeding €5,078.95. Donations below those amounts need not be disclosed. The Electoral Bill proposes reducing these limits to €600 and €1,500 respectively.

5.54 As discussed above, transparency plays a vital role in combating corruption in political finance. In determining the appropriate level for disclosure, therefore, the question is whether that level ensures that all donations capable of affecting or being reasonably perceived to affect the recipient's behaviour are disclosed. The Tribunal is of the view that neither the existing nor the proposed disclosure thresholds will necessarily ensure the disclosure of such donations.

5.55 In this respect, the Tribunal notes that it inquired into several payments which would not fall within these disclosure thresholds. Moreover, it is of the view that almost any donation is capable of affecting the recipient's behavior. The Tribunal notes that this is also the view of the Moriarty Tribunal which has recommended that all donations whether individual or corporate should be disclosed to SIPO. Consequently, from a pure anti-corruption perspective, it might be better to require the disclosure of all donations.

5.56 However, the Tribunal considers that there are two important objections to such a comprehensive disclosure requirement. First, the administrative costs of such disclosure could outweigh its benefits. Secondly, and importantly, the secrecy of the ballot is of considerable significance in a functioning democracy and there are a myriad of reasons why an individual is and should be entitled to keep his or her political views private. Permitting an individual to offer financial support to a political party or politician without requiring that support to be publicly disclosed appears to be an important corollary to this entitlement.

Free choice and participating in politics is likely to be inhibited if donors are forced to declare themselves openly, since the disclosure of political donations would effectively compel private donors to declare their political allegiances.

Van Biezen (2003)

(..) the argument can be made that an individual's political affiliation is an important aspect of his or her private life and as such should not be the subject of compulsory disclosure merely because he or she has made a contribution to a political party.

Committee on Standards in Public Life (1998)

5.57 In view of these objections, this Tribunal recommends that the current disclosure thresholds be lowered to €55 in the case of donations to elected representatives/electoral candidates and €175 in the case of political parties.

More detailed information

5.58 Currently, when disclosing donations under the Electoral Act 1997 recipients must provide information regarding: the value of the donation received; the nature of the donation, for example whether in the form of cash, cheque, use of property or services etc; and the name, description (whether an individual, company, trade union, political party etc) and postal address of the person by or on whose behalf the donation was made. Donation statements provided by donors must also disclose whether or not the donations are subject to inclusion in a donation statement to be furnished by any of the persons to whom they were made. Donations statements made pursuant to the LEA must provide much the same information save that they are not required to disclose the nature of the donation.

5.59 The Tribunal is concerned that in its current form, disclosure does not provide sufficient information regarding the source and nature of the donations disclosed and recommends that more extensive information be required by those making disclosure.

5.60 In this respect, the Tribunal fully supports the Moriarty Tribunal's recommendation to the effect that when a donation exceeds a certain threshold, the donor should be obliged to identify any relevant financial, commercial or other interests including Government contracts received within a certain period of the making of the donation, any contracts pending and any involvement in the procurement process, subject only to a limited temporary protection of confidentiality, which may be required to safeguard the legitimate commercial interests of the donor. This Tribunal recommends adding to this list any commercial planning applications made in the previous year, as well as any involvement in proposed commercial planning applications.

5.61 The Tribunal also recommends requiring recipients to disclose the following information which it considers would be of assistance in distinguishing between contributions which are true political donations and those which are bribes disguised as such, namely: whether the donation was solicited and, where applicable, the name of the person who solicited the donation; whether the recipient of the donation issued a receipt or an acknowledgment to the donor; the date the donation was made and, if different that on which it was received; and whether there is any link between the donor and any other institution or corporation for example by way of an employment relationship, or where the donor is an officeholder or substantial shareholder in a company.

Timing

5.62 The political finance acts generally require donation recipients to disclose those donations on an annual basis. This effectively means that it is not always possible to take these disclosures into account prior to an election. In some instances, information about the sources of monies used to fund a particular election may not be available until several months after that election has been held. This is unsatisfactory. The electorate should be the ultimate arbiter of whether or not the manner in which a political party or individual is financed is suspect on anti-corruption grounds and, in instances where information regarding those financial sources is unavailable until months after an election, they are effectively deprived of that role.

Where disclosure requirements are imposed, it is usually important that timely disclosure be required. Unless information about contributions, which may affect the outcome of an election, is made public before the election, any real political accountability is deferred until the next election.

UN Anti-Corruption Toolkit (2004)

Reporting on election activities should more or less follow the electoral cycle. Ideally reports should be available in time to allow a candidate's opponent, the authorities or the public to investigate and publicise any questionable transactions before the elections. Reports that can be delayed long after interest in the election has waned are unlikely to be of much deterrent value.

Van Biezen (2003)

5.63 The Tribunal recommends therefore that political parties, electoral candidates, and third parties be required to make regular disclosures of donations received in the electoral period. Consideration should be given to increasing the regularity of the disclosure required in light of the proximity of the election.

ENFORCEMENT

Political parties should be required to supply details of their organisational structure including their subsidiary organisations and branches as a condition of registration under the Electoral Act 1992

Restrictions should be placed on the persons entitled to receive donations on behalf of a political party, third party, elected representative or electoral candidate

SIPO should be given increased resources for the purpose of enforcing the political finance acts

The enforcement of the LEA should be entrusted to an external, independent body

5.64 Enforcement of the Electoral Act is currently entrusted to SIPO which is conferred with advisory, supervisory and investigative functions in this respect. The Electoral Act set out SIPO's powers of investigation in a somewhat cursory fashion. Specifically, it provides that SIPO may make such inquiries as it considers appropriate for the purpose of its duties under that Act. In addition, it may require any person to furnish any information, document or thing in the possession or procurement of the person which it requires when carrying out those duties. Enforcement of the LEA is in the hands of the relevant local authorities which carry out similar functions to those carried out by SIPO.

5.65 Both the political finance acts also contain a number of provisions designed to facilitate the task of the enforcement authorities, largely by ensuring transparency regarding persons receiving donations, and/or incurring expenditure. Specifically, political parties must register their "accounting units", a concept which includes a branch or other subsidiary organisation of the party which in any particular year receives a donation valued at in excess of €126.27. Donations made to branches or subsidiary organisations are deemed to be made to the relevant political party and that party is responsible for disclosing them. In addition, all those in receipt of a political donation must set up a donations account, and all donations must be lodged to that account. With regard to electoral expenditure, each candidate and political party must appoint an election agent/national agent and only those agents or persons duly authorised by them can incur electoral expenditure. Finally, when making disclosure, both individuals and political parties must provide an account transaction statement from the donations account.

5.66 Despite these provisions, the Tribunal is concerned that there are a number of areas where there is a lack of transparency over political finance which adversely affects the monitoring and enforcement of the political finance acts. Specifically, there is insufficient transparency regarding the activities of branches and subsidiary organisations of political parties and over those in receipt of political donations. In addition, there appears to be a number of problems with the institutional arrangements regarding the enforcement of both the political finance acts.

Transparency

5.67 As mentioned, under the Electoral Act, political parties must register their accounting units. However, this requirement is one which is widely disregarded and there are no penalties for failing to register such units. Indeed, it appears that political parties themselves are unaware of the precise number and/or whereabouts of their accounting units, a fact which raises clear questions as to their ability to comply with the donation disclosure requirements.

5.68 Moreover, while the political finance acts restrict those entitled to incur electoral expenditure there are no corresponding provisions applicable to those entitled to accept political donations.

5.69 The Tribunal considers that more transparency is needed over the organisational structure of political parties. This view is shared by SIPO which has highlighted the difficulties which it is experiencing in supervising the provisions of the legislation relating to accounting units, most recently in its Annual Report, 2010.

5.70 The Tribunal notes that the Preliminary Study on the Establishment of an Electoral Commission recommends that it should be a condition of registration of a political party that it adopts a scheme setting out the arrangements for regulating its financial affairs for the purposes of the legislation and identifying any accounting units within that party that will have separate reporting requirements. The Tribunal fully endorses this recommendation. Moreover, it recommends that political parties be required to update these details on a periodic basis as a condition of continued registration.

5.71 With regard to the acceptance of donations, the Tribunal is of the view that where donations can be accepted by a wide variety of individuals this is likely to make it more difficult to ensure that donations are lodged to the donation accounts as required, or that the source prohibitions and value thresholds are respected. Consequently, it recommends that, political parties, electoral candidates and elected representatives be required to nominate a specific donation agent for the receipt of donations and that the receipt of donations by other persons be prohibited.

Institutional Arrangements

5.72 The effective enforcement of the political finance acts depends on the existence of politically independent institutions with sufficient resources to carry out their investigative functions effectively.

5.73 The Tribunal is concerned that neither SIPO nor local authorities constitute such institutions. Specifically, while SIPO enjoys considerable political independence, it lacks the financial resources necessary to carry out its investigative functions effectively and in particular the ability to access specialist expertise in carrying out financial investigations. While, the Tribunal notes that the 2011 Bill proposes giving SIPO a role in supervising the proposed requirement for political parties to submit their annual accounts, it does not appear to envisage SIPO taking an investigative role in this respect.

5.74 With regard to local authorities, it is doubtful whether they enjoy either the political independence or the financial resources necessary to carry out their work effectively. It is equally doubtful as to whether local authorities have either the capacity or the experience necessary to either detect signs of irregularities or to conduct the in-depth financial investigations necessary when such signs are detected.

5.75 In view of the above, the Tribunal is recommending that SIPO be given increased financial resources and in particular, sufficient resources for the purpose of carrying out financial investigations into possible non-compliance with the electoral acts.

5.76 The Tribunal notes that a number of international instruments recommend that states provide for the independent monitoring of political finance laws by a body capable of carrying out the auditing of accounts. Moreover, the UK Electoral Commission has emphasized the need for a proactive approach to monitoring campaign spending, including “employing individuals with skills in the key areas of audit, investigation and enforcement.”

5.77 With regard to the enforcement of the LEA, the Tribunal is of the view that a root and branch reform is necessary and that investigations into possible non compliance with the requirements of the LEA should be entrusted to an independent body. This could involve establishing an independent body for conducting such investigations or, alternatively, entrusting those investigations to SIPO either entirely or on a call-in basis.

5.78 The Tribunal notes that both SIPO and the Group of States against Corruption (GRECO) have also made recommendations to similar effect. According to SIPO:

.... where a valid complaint concerning non-compliance with spending limits at local elections is received, the matter should be investigated by an independent body and not by the local authority concerned. That independent body should also have the power to conduct inquiries or investigations in the absence of a complaint and on its own initiative.

SIPO (2007)

According to GRECO, Ireland should

[b]etter harmonise the monitoring and funding at local level, in particular (i) by reinforcing its independence and the control performed, as necessary; and (ii) by considering the advisability of entrusting the Standards in Public Office Commission (...) with an additional oversight role in this field.

GRECO (2009)

SANCTIONS

Sanctions for breaching the political finance acts should include administrative sanctions

The following acts or omissions should be subject to sanction:

- Failing to open a donations account
- Making a prohibited donation
- Deliberately circumventing the requirements set down in the political finance acts.

5.79 Breach of a number of the requirements contained in the political finance acts is a criminal offence under those acts, most of which are prosecuted summarily and are punishable by a fine not exceeding €1,300 under the Electoral Act or €1,900 under the LEA.

5.80 Effective, persuasive and proportionate sanctions play a key role in the effective enforcement of the political finance acts. Again, however, the Tribunal is proposing a number of measures designed to increase the effectiveness of that role, including introducing administrative sanctions for breaches of those acts as well as a number of new offences.

Administrative Sanctions

5.81 The political finance acts do not provide for administrative sanctions. The Tribunal is concerned that relying exclusively on criminal offences may well render the enforcement of those acts less rather than more effective. Specifically, the enforcement authorities may be reluctant to engage the extreme option of the criminal law in instances where an infringement is inadvertent and/or minor. On the other hand, such infringements should be sanctioned. The Tribunal believes that giving the investigative authority an option of imposing an administrative sanction could well be useful in such cases. Consequently, it is recommending the introduction of such sanctions.

5.82 In this respect, the Tribunal fully endorses the recommendations made in 2008, in the Preliminary Study on the Establishment of an Electoral Commission in Ireland regarding administrative sanctions, according to which:

the body responsible for regulating political and election funding should have a discretionary power to direct the partial or total withholding of public funds to which parties or candidates would otherwise be entitled, where in the opinion of the body the party or candidate has failed or substantially failed to comply with a statutory duty under any enactment, to the extent which the body considers proportionate to the non-compliance which occurred.

5.83 Moreover, it notes that, in an evaluation report in 2009, GRECO suggested that “the current system of criminal investigations and enforcement measures could be combined with a more flexible and graduated approach when dealing with less serious violations of the political financing rules.” More generally, according to the Venice Commission in its Guidelines on the Financing of Political Parties (2001):

[a]ny irregularity in the financing of an electoral campaign shall entail, for the party or candidate at fault, sanctions proportionate to the severity of the offence that may consist of the loss or the total or partial reimbursement of the public contribution, the payment of a fine or another financial sanction or the annulment of the election.

5.84 The Tribunal also notes that an inquiry into political funding in the UK conducted by Sir Hayden Phillips concluded that a comprehensive graduated system of fines would be a more effective deterrent to breaches of the political finance requirements than a system of criminal penalties which it considered “all but unusable in any but the most serious cases.”

Additional Sanctions

5.85 As mentioned, those in receipt of a political donation must open a political donations account. However, there is no sanction for failing to open such an account. Moreover, while the political finance acts sanction the receipt of donations from prohibited sources or in excess of the permitted amounts, they do not sanction donors who make such donations. Nor do those acts sanction the deliberate circumvention of the requirements governing donations and electoral expenditure.

5.86 The Tribunal considers that each of these types of behaviour should be subject to sanctions. Specifically, there is little point in requiring recipients of political donations to open donations accounts if there are no sanctions for failing to do so. Moreover, the infringement of a number of other similar requirements in the political finances acts is the subject of sanction, and there appears to be little reason to treat the donations account requirement any differently.

5.87 In confining offences to donation recipients, the political finance acts fail to take into account that there are two parties to any transaction involving unauthorised political funding. Moreover, as those offering what is in reality a bribe will frequently describe it as a political donation, sanctioning the offer of illicit donations should also help combat bribery.

5.88 Finally, the Tribunal is of the view that sanctioning deliberate efforts to circumvent the requirements in the political finance acts is necessary given the ingenuity which may be employed by those prepared to observe the letter of the acts but undermine their spirit. It also notes the Council of Europe suggestion that States adopt measures to prevent established donation ceilings from being circumvented. Moreover, the political finance laws of the UK, Canada and the U.S. each contain anti-circumvention provisions.

LOBBYING

The Tribunal recommends that:

1. Professional lobbyists should be subject to registration requirements
2. Professional lobbyists should be regularly required to disclose at a minimum:
 - the identity of their clients
 - the objects of their lobbying activity
 - details of the public institutions and public officials being lobbied
3. Professional Lobbyists should be required to adhere to a statutory based code of conduct
4. Public officials should be given clear guidance on how they are expected to engage with professional lobbyists with specific reference to lobbyists who are former public officials
5. Senior Officeholders should be required to record and publish details regarding their contacts with professional lobbyists

6.01 Lobbying essentially comprises oral or written communication with a public official for the purpose of influencing legislation, policy or administrative decisions. It may take place either on a personal or professional basis.

6.02 Lobbying plays an important and positive role in governance. Specifically, it may help provide decision makers with valuable insights and data, thus improving government decisions and policy making. It may also strengthen accountability in government and promote public participation in policy making:

Lobbyists serve an invaluable function in democratic governance. They provide useful information and expertise to government officials on any given matter. They represent interests that may be adversely and unintentionally impacted by a poorly deliberated public policy. And they translate into understandable terms everything from scientific data to public opinions. Just as importantly, lobbyists then inform their employers and clients of the actions of government officials, helping hold the government accountable and assisting to effectuate compliance with the laws.

6.03 However, lobbying, and in particular paid or professional lobbying, also raises a number of different types of corruption risks. Fundamentally and paradoxically, bribery is a crime which demands a basic form of trust on the part of those engaged in it. First and foremost, the payer must know or have reason to believe that the person offered the bribe will be amenable to that offer, or at the very least will not report it to the relevant authorities. Secondly, the payer must be reasonably sure that that person will not only take the bribe but also confer on the payer the benefit sought by him or her. Thirdly, the recipient of the payment must be reasonably sure that the payer will not inform those authorities of his or her willingness to accept the bribe and/or to barter the use of his or her official power.

6.04 The trust necessary for bribery to occur can be considerably facilitated by the involvement of a third party willing to vouch for the sincerity of both the payer and the recipient of the bribe. Moreover a third party can also act as an informal enforcer of bribery contracts by sanctioning those who fail to fulfill their side of a corrupt bargain by, for example, excluding them from participating in such bargains in the future. As lobbyists tend to have frequent contacts with public officials they are well positioned to fulfill the role of a trusted third party. They may thus act as a catalyst for corrupt transactions. As importantly, by acting as an intermediary, they may also permit their clients to distance themselves from involvement in a corrupt bargain thus mitigating any associated legal risks. This Tribunal inquired into corrupt transactions which were either facilitated or made possible by the involvement of a lobbyist.

6.05 Bribery is not the only form of corruption risk associated with lobbying. For example, a lobbyist may seek to establish “good relations” with a public official through gifts of minor value, and/or the offer of meals or entertainment. Although, unlike bribes, such benefits are not conferred in exchange for a quid pro quo, they may ultimately have a similar effect to bribes by engendering a sense of obligation or reciprocity on the part of the public official.

6.06 Other corruption risks stem from the fact that, having left public office, public officials are frequently engaged as lobbyists. Consequently, in some instances, a public official’s behaviour in office may be influenced by the promise of a lucrative career as a lobbyist on leaving that office. Moreover, former public officials who are engaged as lobbyists may obtain privileged access from their former colleagues and may be privy to inside information which is not available to their competitors. This raises questions regarding both the fairness and the transparency of government decisions.

6.07 More generally lobbying can erode the legitimacy of democratic governance by undermining political equality between citizens.

When lobbying becomes an excessively elite profession exclusively serving well-financed special interests, it can become quite damaging to the citizen’s perception of political legitimacy.

OECD (2009)

6.08 It can also give rise to public concern about the role of vested interests in policy making and in particular their ability to contort public policy to suit their own private agendas to the overall detriment of the community at large.

6.09 In view of the positive and negative aspects of lobbying, the Tribunal believes that it is vital to ensure a maximum degree of transparency over the lobbying process and the conduct of lobbyists. This would help inform the public of the identity of those attempting to influence public decisions as well as assist in holding both public officials and lobbyists accountable for the manner in which they conduct their relationships. Consequently, the Tribunal is making a number of recommendations designed to ensure increased transparency over: the identity of those offering professional lobbying services; the activities carried out by those lobbyists; and the degree of contact between those lobbyists and senior officeholders. The Tribunal is also recommending that public officials be given clear guidance on how to conduct relations with lobbyists in order to safeguard against some of lobbying's more insidious negative aspects as well as the risks of apparent corruption. It is further recommending that public officials keep a record and public details of their contacts with lobbyists.

6.10 The Tribunal is aware that the detailed implementation of its recommendations will require further analysis and consultation with a wide variety of stakeholders. Nevertheless, these recommendations should help identify the needs to be met when regulating lobbyists and the minimum content of those regulations.

REGISTRATION

Professional lobbyists should be subject to registration requirements

6.11 Professional lobbyists are not currently required to register as such. The Tribunal considers this to be unsatisfactory given the corruption risks associated with lobbying and the consequent need to ensure that the public is able to make informed judgments about the extent to which different groups have input into the legislative process. In addition, regulating lobbying is an essential component in following the trail of money in politics.

6.12 One of the first and most fundamental steps in combating those corruption risks and meeting those needs is to impose a registration requirement on professional lobbyists. The Tribunal is consequently recommending the introduction of such a requirement which should, at a minimum, apply to all those who receive compensation for representing the interests of a third party to national and/or local public officials, including consultant lobbyists and in-house lobbyists. In the case of lobbyist firms, the registration requirement should apply not only to the firm itself but to the individuals employed by that firm and who are engaged at least partially in lobbying. When registering, a lobbyist should also be required to identify any positions he or she has previously held in the public sector.

6.13 The requirement to register should be introduced on a legislative basis. Specifically, the Tribunal does not believe that a voluntary registration scheme would be as effective as a legally binding scheme at combating corruption and ensuring transparency over lobbying activities. In particular, a voluntary scheme is unlikely to be as widely applied and evenly balanced as one required by legislation. Moreover, voluntary schemes enable those who wish to hide the nature and extent of their activities to do so. Most importantly, in the last resort, the success or failure of a registration requirement will often depend on its enforcement. Voluntary schemes are usually accompanied by weak enforcement and sanctions. In contrast, a requirement imposed on a legislative basis can be subject to far more rigorous enforcement as well as effective, proportionate and dissuasive sanctions.

DISCLOSURE

Professional lobbyists should regularly be required to disclose, at a minimum:

- The identity of their clients

- The objects of their lobbying activity

- details of the public institutions and public officials being lobbied

6.14 While registration identifies lobbyists themselves, it does not identify either the targets or the beneficiaries of their lobbying activities. However, the Tribunal considers this information to play an equally important role in ensuring the transparency of those activities. Consequently, the Tribunal is recommending that lobbyists be subject to a number of disclosure requirements. The overall purpose of these requirements is to provide the public with sufficient information regarding the role of lobbyists in the decision making process to assess the nature and extent of that role and to re-assure the public that it is in the public interest. They should also enable the public, and in some instances, the enforcement authorities to follow the money trail in politics. However, the Tribunal also recognises that the public's interest in realising these purposes must be balanced against the need to avoid placing excessive demands on lobbyists, to the possible detriment of comprehensive disclosure and effective enforcement.

(...) meaningful disclosure should provide pertinent but parsimonious information on key aspects of lobbying activities in order to shed light on how public decisions were influenced by stakeholders or vested interests.

OECD (2009)

6.15 The Tribunal therefore recommends that disclosure should encompass asking lobbyists to disclose: the identity of their clients; the objective of their lobbying activity; and the public institutions and public officials being lobbied.

6.16 Specifically, information regarding the identity of a lobbyist's clients is an important element in ensuring that the public is aware of who is paying to influence government policies. It is also important to enable public officials to place information communicated by a lobbyist in respect of a given policy in its proper context and to know whether it reflects broad domestic concerns or specific narrow interests. In order to ensure that these objectives are met, lobbyists should be required to disclose not only the identity of the nominal client but also that of any person that directs a client and/or has a direct interest in the outcome of the lobbying activity. In the case of corporations, this should include the name of holding companies or subsidiaries.

6.17 Both the public itself as well as public officials need to be informed of the broad objectives of the lobbying activity in order to put the information received from lobbyists into its appropriate context. Obviously, the level of information which must be disclosed should be sufficient to meet this goal.

6.18 Information regarding the public officials who are the targets of lobbying activity is useful in determining the overall purpose of lobbying activity. In addition, it helps in assessing the impact of lobbying on policy making by identifying the points in the decision-making process where lobbyists have attempted to exert influence. Moreover, it may serve to alert officials to the need to ensure that other interests are also taken into consideration.

6.19 Disclosure should be made on a timely basis, including initial reporting on registering as a lobbyist and regular updates. Information disclosed should be made widely disseminated and be electronically available.

6.20 Clearly measures to require the registration of lobbyists and lobbying activities and the disclosure of information should also be effectively enforced. In particular, the relevant enforcement authorities should have sufficient powers to require the expansion of the information filed by registrants and powers of investigation, including the power to compel the production of information and witnesses. Sanctions should include administrative sanctions but in any event should reflect the gravity of the offence.

CODES OF CONDUCT

Lobbyists should be required to adhere to a statutory based code of conduct

Public officials should be given clear guidance on how they are expected to engage with lobbyists with specific reference to lobbyists who are former public officials

6.21 Many of those engaged in lobbying are members of organisations which have agreed codes of conduct to which all their members must adhere. The Tribunal considers that such codes play an important role in regulating lobbying. However, it also considers that it would be advantageous to introduce an agreed statutory code of conduct applicable to all registered lobbyists, including those who are not members of such organisations. The aim of the code should be to establish proper norms of behaviour for lobbyists and to set the principles of professional conduct. At the very least it should include a prohibition on attempting to improperly influence a public official; ban gifts (or other compensation) of more than a de minimis amount from a lobbyist to a public official; and require the information conveyed to public officials to be accurate and honest.

6.22 However, measures regulating lobbying must recognise that it takes two to lobby. Consequently such measures cannot focus exclusively on lobbyists to the exclusion of those who are the subject of lobbying activities. Perhaps in recognition of this fact, the existing Code of Conduct for Officeholders contains the following guidance on lobbyists:

It is an integral part of a functioning democracy that particular sections of society will endeavour to highlight issues of sectoral importance with office holders. In this respect contact between officeholders and lobbyists is to be expected. However, as guidance, such dealings should be conducted so that they do not give rise to a conflict between a public duty and private interest.

However, this issue is not addressed in any of the other codes of conduct adopted pursuant to the conflicts of interests acts.

6.23 Consequently, the Tribunal recommends that public officials, including officeholders should be provided with more detailed guidelines for dealing with lobbyists. In particular, these guidelines should give advice on maintaining proper and transparent relationships with lobbyists. In addition, public officials should be required to conduct themselves with impartiality, only share authorised information and avoid conflicts of interests. Public officials should also be expected to keep records of their contacts with lobbyists. Importantly, the guidelines should also contain advice for public officials regarding how to deal with former public officials who are now involved in lobbying.

RECORD KEEPING

Senior Officeholders should be required to record and publish details regarding their contacts with professional lobbyists

6.24 In the interests of transparency and integrity, the Tribunal recommends that information regarding ministerial and other high level official meetings with outside interest groups should be routinely recorded and published. Moreover, Government should try to be more open and transparent about how it formulates policy and the grounds for the policies ultimately adopted.

6.25 The Tribunal notes that the OECD, in its Recommendation on Principles for Transparency and Integrity in Lobbying, recommends that governments consider facilitating public scrutiny by indicating who has sought to influence legislative or policy making processes, for example, by disclosing a “legislative footprint” that indicates the lobbyists consulted in the development of legislative initiatives. The Tribunal considers that such a measure has much to recommend it in terms of promoting transparency and accountability in the relationship between public officials and lobbyists.

BRIBERY, CORRUPTION IN OFFICE, MONEY LAUNDERING AND MISUSE OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION*The Tribunal Recommends:

- 1. Amending the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act 1889 (the “1889 Act”) to cover Oireachtas Members
- 2. Introducing a specific offence of making payments to a third party where the payer (“P”) knows or is reckless to the fact that that party intends to use some or all of those payments to pay bribes for the purpose of furthering P’s interests
- 3. Introducing a new offence criminalising a commercial entity for failing to take adequate measures to supervise or control individuals carrying on activities on its behalf where that individual commits bribery in the context of those activities and that bribery is to the benefit of the entity
- 4. Extending the existing presumption of corruption contained in Section 3 of the Prevention of Corruption (Amendment) Act 2001 (the “2001 Act”), which arises in respect of political donations, to cover a) donations which a political party should have disclosed under the Electoral Act 1997 but failed to disclose and b) the acceptance of prohibited donations
- 5. Extending the presumption of corruption set out in s. 4 of the 2001 Act to cover consideration and advantages:
 - conferred on Officeholders, Oireachtas Members and Local Elected Members or to a third party connected to such a person including a family member or corporate entity
 - where the relevant public official has done any act or made any omission in relation to his or her office or position, or any matter arising therefrom, and
 - where that act or omission is to the benefit of the person making the payment or on whose behalf the payment is made, and

The Tribunal Recommends:

- where the relevant public official was required to disclose the interest under either the Ethics Acts 1995 and 2001 or the Local Government Act 2001, but failed to do so
6. New, additional sanctions to apply where a person is convicted of bribery, namely:
- Undertakings convicted of bribery should be banned from all public tenders for a 7 year period on first offence and indefinitely thereafter
 - A person convicted of bribery where the purpose of the bribe was to influence a public official in performing his or her public functions in relation to planning or development should be prohibited from applying for planning permission in respect of any land owned by him or her or under his or her control for a 7 year period other than planning permission in respect of changes to his or her own private dwelling
7. Introducing a pan-sectoral whistleblower protection act protecting all those reporting suspected offences and/or breaches of regulatory measures from any form of liability, relief and/or penalization arising from that report
8. Extending existing whistleblower protection under the Prevention of Corruption (Amendment) Act 2010 to a) protect independent contractors who report suspicions of corruption from penalization and b) remove the existing limit on the amount of compensation which may be awarded to those penalised for whistleblowing
- and
- under the Criminal Justice Act 2011 to cover those reporting or giving evidence on offences under the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices 1889

The Tribunal Recommends:

- 9. Amending the offence of corruption in office contained in s. 8 of the Prevention of Corruption (Amendment) Act 2001 to:
 - Cover situations where a public official fails or omits to do an act in relation to his or her office or position for the purpose of corruptly obtaining a gift, consideration or advantage for himself, herself or any other person
 - Cover any situation where a public official uses confidential information obtained as a result of his or her office for the purpose of corruptly obtaining a gift, consideration or advantage for himself, herself or any other person
 - Define the term “corruptly” so as to cover any acts or omissions on the part of a public official for the purposes of obtaining an unlawful or improper advantage for himself, herself or any other person
- 8. Introducing a new offence for holders of ministerial office of accepting and retaining a gift or other advantage in connection with that office where that advantage is of above a nominal value and is not lawfully due to the officeholder
- 9. Requiring designated persons for the purpose of the Criminal Justice (Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing) Act 2010 (“the CJ(MLTF)A”) to apply enhanced due diligence to domestic elected public officials and senior office holders
- 10. Defining the term “politically exposed persons” so as to apply to senior public officeholders for a minimum of ten years after they have ceased to hold office
- 11. Considering the introduction of a cash transaction reporting requirement obliging designated bodies to alert the authorities to cash transactions in excess of a specified sum

BRIBERY

7.01 Bribery is the quintessential form of political corruption and, traditionally, the criminal law has viewed political bribery and corruption as synonymous. Bribery is universally condemned for several reasons. Specifically, bribery has overwhelmingly negative economic effects. In particular, it may lead to resource misallocation as resources are diverted into those areas where bribes can be easily collected. In addition, it may increase the cost of doing business because of the necessity to factor in bribes. More fundamentally, bribery is inimical to social justice. It undermines the equality of individuals before the law, involves a fundamental betrayal of trust and, at least in democracies, may seriously undermine public faith in democratic government.

7.02 In this respect, the Tribunal views the bribery offences as being part of a triad of provisions aimed at regulating payments to public officials, including elected representations. The other two provisions regulate political donations and conflicts of interest, particularly those in the form of gifts and professional payments. The Tribunal considers that the overall purpose of these provisions must be to ensure that there is a comprehensive scheme for regulating payments to public officials so as to minimise the risks of corrupt payments being made, the abuse of public office and/or the appearance of corruption. However, the specific purpose of the bribery offences is to capture payments made with the intent of securing an improper benefit or advantage for the payer or soliciting or accepting such a payment.

7.03 Bribery is an offence at common law and statute. The main statutory bribery offences are set out in: the Prevention of Corruption Acts 1889 – 2010 (the “PCA”), and in particular in the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act 1889 (the “1889 Act”) as amended and the Prevention of Corruption Act 1906 as amended (the “1906 Act”); and the Criminal Justice (Theft and Fraud Offences) Act 2001 (the “CJ(TFO)Act 2001”). The Tribunal notes that the statutory bribery offences contained in the Prevention of Corruption Acts have been significantly amended and extended over the last number of years, most recently by the Prevention of Corruption (Amendment) Act 2010 (the “2010 Act”). The Tribunal welcomes these efforts to strengthen the bribery offences.

7.04 While the PCA cover both corruption in the public and in the private sphere, the Tribunal is of the view that public corruption is more reprehensible and poses greater dangers than its private counterpart. In addition, holders of public office have opportunities for corruption which have no equivalent in the private sphere. By and large the bribery offences apply to public and private corruption in the same way. Specifically, while some of the offences are restricted to public officials those offences are not substantially different to the offences contained in the 1906 Act which cover both private and public corruption. The Tribunal does not consider it necessary to change this approach. It considers that the more serious nature of public corruption can best be reflected in shifting the burden of proof in some instances where the defendant is a public official and through the severity of sentencing.

7.05 The main bribery statute is the 1906 Act. That act defines the offence of corruption in terms of the agent principal relationship. This focus suggests that it views the wrong of bribery as being the breach of the duty of loyalty owed by an agent to his principal. The Tribunal considers that this view risks excluding some payments which should otherwise fall within the bribery offences. However, it is not making any recommendations aimed at changing this view as it appears to adequately cover the type of corruption at the heart of this Tribunal's inquiries. Nevertheless, in the context of these recommendations, the Tribunal has endeavoured to avoid using either the term "agent" or the term "principal".

7.06 More generally, the Tribunal considers that the existence of several, partially overlapping, bribery offences is undesirable. Together the common law and above mentioned statutes provide for at least eight bribery offences, four of which criminalise the offering or giving of a bribe ("active bribery") and four of which criminalise its solicitation or acceptance ("passive bribery"). There are also a number of other sectoral bribery offences. There is clearly an urgent need for a consolidation of the law in this area. However, the Tribunal has not considered it necessary to make a recommendation to this effect, given that such work is already underway. Specifically, it is the Tribunal's understanding that current government intends consolidating the statutory bribery offences in the coming year.

7.07 In formulating these recommendations, the Tribunal took into consideration a number of Conventions to which Ireland is a party, namely the OECD Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions (1997); the Council of Europe's Criminal Law Convention on Corruption (1998); the United Nations Convention Against Corruption (2003) (“UNCAC”); the EU’s Convention on the Protection of the European Communities Financial Interests (1995) together with its three protocols; and the EU Convention on the Fight Against Corruption involving officials of the European Communities or Officials of the Member States of the European Union (1997). It also considered bribery laws in other jurisdictions, including in particular the UK and the U.S. The Tribunal also benefitted from the extensive work of the UK Law Commission and other bodies in the context of reforming the UK’s bribery law. This work culminated in the recent enactment of the UK Bribery Act 2010.

THE PUBLIC BODIES CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT 1889

The 1889 Act should be amended to cover Oireachtas Members

7.08 The 1889 Act criminalises the bribery of certain types of public officials. Specifically, it criminalises the giving, promising, offering, solicitation or receipt of any advantage on account of “an officeholder or his or her special advisor or a director of, or occupier of a position of employment in, any public body as in this Act defined” doing or forbearing to do anything in respect of any matter or transaction whatsoever in which such officeholder or public body is concerned.

7.09 The terms, “officeholder”, “special advisor”, “director of a position of employment in a public body”, and “occupier of a position of employment in a public body” have the meanings assigned to them in the Ethics Acts 1995 and 2001. It is clear from the definitions contained in those acts that Oireachtas members do not fall within the scope of the 1889 act. In contrast, those members do fall within the 1906 Act (and the CJ(TFO)A 2001).

7.10 While the Tribunal recognises that the bribery of Oireachtas Members is adequately criminalised by the 1906 act, there is a difference in the sanctions applicable depending on the act infringed. Specifically, penalties for breaching the later act are largely confined to imprisonment and/or fines. While similar penalties may be imposed for breaching the 1889 Act, it also provides for other sanctions. In particular, where a person is convicted under the 1889 act, the court may adjudge him or her incapable of being elected or appointed to any public office for seven years on a first conviction and permanently thereafter. In addition, it may order that a public official forfeit any public office held by him or her at the time of his or her conviction and/or forfeit any pension rights arising from that office.

7.11 The additional sanctions provided for in the 1889 act are clearly of relevance in all situations where an elected public official is convicted of bribery and are also particularly appropriate in such instances. Consequently, the Tribunal considers that these sanctions should also apply in cases where an Oireachtas Member is convicted of bribery. It therefore recommends that the scope of the 1889 act be extended to cover Oireachtas members.

7.12 The Tribunal notes that UNCAC requires State Parties to criminalise bribery, including the bribery of domestic public officials. It also requires those parties to Consider establishing procedures for the disqualification, by court order or any other appropriate means, for a period of time determined by its domestic law, of persons convicted of offences established in accordance with this Convention from:

- (a) Holding public office; and*
- (b) Holding office in an enterprise owned in whole or in part by the State*

BRIBERY THROUGH INTERMEDIARIES

A new offence should be introduced criminalising the making of payments by a Payer (“P”) to a third party where P knows or is reckless to the fact that the third party intends to use some or all of those payments to pay bribes for the purpose of furthering P’s interests

7.13 Under both the 1889 act and the 1906 act, a person may be convicted of bribery either when he or she is directly involved in that bribery or when he or she engages in bribery through an intermediary. In both cases, in order to obtain a conviction, it is necessary to establish that that person had the necessary intention to bribe. Generally, a result is intended if it is either the defendant’s purpose to cause it, or the defendant foresees that his act will certainly cause it.

7.14 The Tribunal is concerned that under the existing bribery provisions it may be difficult to convict someone of bribery where that person uses an intermediary, particularly where that person adopts a “head in the sand” approach to the intermediary’s activities. Specifically, in order to obtain such a conviction the prosecution must prove that that person intended the intermediary to make such payments or that he or she foresaw that the intermediary will certainly make them. Merely proving that that person made significant payments to an intermediary which he or she then used for paying bribes, or that the individual failed to make reasonable inquiries in circumstances where such inquiries were clearly warranted is unlikely to be sufficient to establish the requisite intent.

7.15 As previously discussed, intermediaries played a key role in facilitating several of the corrupt transactions inquired into by this tribunal. In a number of those transactions, the person who engaged the intermediary either was, or claimed to be, unaware of the fact that the intermediary paid bribes on his or her behalf.

7.16 The Tribunal is deeply concerned about the role played by intermediaries in corrupt transactions. It is also of the view that an individual should not be able to successfully avoid prosecution for bribery by adopting a head in the sand approach to the activities of intermediaries which he or she has engaged to act on his or her behalf in respect of a particular matter or transaction.

7.17 Consequently, the Tribunal is recommending the introduction of a new offence of bribing through an intermediary. Specifically, if an intermediary commits an offence under the PCA, then the person who has engaged that intermediary (“P”) should also be guilty of an offence under those acts once two conditions are fulfilled. First, the intermediary must have committed the act of bribery either with P’s consent or in circumstances where P was reckless as to whether or not the intermediary committed that offence. Secondly, that act must either benefit P or be intended to benefit P.

7.18 The Tribunal also considered whether recklessness should be the requisite intention in all cases involving bribery. In this respect, it notes that recklessness is already sufficient intent in several serious offences including in particular money laundering under the CJ(MLTF)A 2010. However, the Tribunal is of the view that the purpose of criminalising the bribery of a public official is to criminalise payments made to or solicited by such an official with the intention of influencing the performance of his or her public functions. It does not consider it necessary to criminalise payments made or solicited where the parties do not intend to exert such an influence but are reckless as to whether or not such an influence results from the payment. This is particularly so as, as discussed further below, the Tribunal is recommending the introduction of a new offence criminalising payments to senior public officials.

FAILING TO PREVENT BRIBERY

A new offence should be introduced criminalising a commercial entity for failing to take adequate measures to supervise or control individuals carrying on activities on its behalf where that individual commits bribery in the context of those activities and that bribery is to the benefit of the entity

7.19 As previously discussed, the Tribunal is very concerned at the frequency with which commercial entities featured in the corrupt transactions into which it inquired. Specifically, funds were frequently routed through such entities in order to obfuscate the existence of those funds, their source and/or their destination.

7.20 Under both the PCA and the CJ(TFO)A 2001, corporate and unincorporated bodies (“undertakings”) may be held criminally liable for bribery. Both acts also provide for a form of derivative managerial liability whereby a company’s officer may be convicted of bribery in circumstances where the company itself commits bribery and that bribery is proved to have been committed with the officer’s consent or connivance or to be attributable to “any neglect” on his part. Furthermore persons who engage in bribery on behalf an undertaking may themselves be prosecuted for bribery, independently of the culpability of the undertaking itself.

7.21 The Tribunal is concerned that these provisions are not sufficiently comprehensive to effectively criminalise the corrupt conduct of commercial entities. Specifically, while it is clear that corporate bodies may be prosecuted for corruption, the basis for imposing criminal liability on such bodies under Irish law is not clear. For example, it is as of yet undecided whether the identification doctrine, pursuant to which a corporate body may be held liable for crimes committed by its controlling officer(s), applies in criminal cases. If that doctrine is the basis for imposing criminal liability on corporate bodies, it suffers from a number of inadequacies. In particular, identifying the controlling officer responsible for a specific corrupt act may not always be possible.

[i]t is a fact that legal persons are involved in corruption offences, especially in business transactions, which practice reveals serious difficulties in prosecuting natural persons acting on behalf of these legal persons. For example, in view of the largeness of corporations and the complexity of structures of the organisation, it becomes more and more difficult to identify a natural person who may be held responsible (in a criminal sense) for a bribery offence. Legal persons thus usually escape liability due to their collective decision-making process. On the other hand, corrupt practices often continue after the arrest of individual members of management, because the company as such is not deterred by individual sanctions.

Council of Europe (1998)

7.22 Again, the extent to which a corporate body can be convicted of corruption which is not attributable to an individual officer but to a number of individuals collectively or to a lower level employee does not appear to have been decided in Irish law.

7.23 The provisions imposing derivative managerial liability on company officers for bribery committed by undertakings do not alleviate the problems with imposing liability on corporate bodies. First, for those provisions to apply, it is necessary to establish that the undertaking itself has committed an offence. Secondly, those provisions are themselves confined to company officers. In any event, individual liability is best viewed as a supplement to liability on the part of the undertaking rather than as a substitute for it. Specifically, imposing liability on an undertaking itself is likely to have different deterrent effects from those which arise where liability is restricted to individuals. In particular, a criminal indictment risks the market imposing what is in effect a corporate death penalty. Perhaps even more significantly, the ability to confiscate the proceeds of corruption obtained by an undertaking in the context of criminal confiscation procedures depends on the undertaking itself being convicted of an offence.

7.24 The complementary nature of individual and corporate liability is evidenced by the fact that several of the international anti-corruption conventions to which Ireland is party require State Parties to provide for corporate liability as well as the personal liability of high level persons within the corporation.

7.25 In view of the above, the Tribunal has considered ways of ensuring that undertakings are themselves held liable for corrupt activities carried out for their benefit. One option involves introducing a specific basis for imposing liability on corporations which is broader than the so-called identification doctrine and which ensures that a corporation can be held liable for the collective actions of a number of individuals, including those of lower level employees and for independent contractors working on its behalf. The Tribunal is of the view that there is an urgent need to clarify the basis for imposing criminal liability on corporations in bribery cases. However, as this need also arises in respect of other types of offences, the Tribunal considers that it would be best to deal with this issue on a pan-sectoral basis. An alternative approach could well lead to a proliferation of statutes each with different basis for imposing corporate liability which would be clearly undesirable. The Tribunal therefore advises that consideration be given to clarifying the basis for imposing criminal liability on corporate entities as a matter of urgency.

7.26 Another option for ensuring that undertakings are held criminally liable for bribery committed on their behalf involves the introduction of a new offence of lack of supervision. Such an offence would make an undertaking criminally liable where the lack of supervision or control by a person who has a leading position in the undertaking has facilitated the commission of the offence and the offence has been committed for the benefit of that undertaking.

7.27 The Tribunal considers that a failure to supervise offence has much to recommend it in that it would prevent corporate entities from avoiding liability for bribery by remaining deliberately ignorant of the activities of their employees or associates. It therefore recommends the introduction of a specific offence criminalising a commercial undertaking for failing to take adequate measures to supervise or control individuals carrying on activities on its behalf where that individual commits bribery in the context of those activities and that bribery is to the benefit of the undertaking.

7.28 The Tribunal notes that both the Second Protocol to the Convention on the Protection of the European Communities Financial Interests and the Council of Europe's Criminal Law Convention against Corruption require State Parties to ensure that legal persons can be held liable for the omission by a person in a leading position to exercise supervision over the acts committed by a person acting under his or her authority where that lack of supervision had made possible the commission of an act of active corruption for the benefit of that legal person. Moreover, the UK Bribery Act 2010 has recently introduced an offence of this nature which is likely to apply to many Irish undertakings because of its extensive extra-territorial scope.

POLITICAL DONATIONS: PRESUMPTION OF CORRUPTION

The existing presumption of corruption contained in Section 3 of the Prevention of Corruption (Amendment) Act 2001 and which arises in respect of political donations should be extended to cover a) donations which a political party should have disclosed under the Electoral Act 1997 but failed to disclose and b) the acceptance of prohibited donations

7.29 According to Section 3 of the Prevention of Corruption Act 2001, where a defendant is being prosecuted for bribery under either the 1889 Act or the 1906 Act, a presumption of corruption arises once the prosecution establishes two things. First, that that defendant failed to disclose a donation which he or she was required to disclose under the political finance acts. Secondly, that the donor had an interest in the defendant doing any act or making any omission in relation to his or her office or position or his or her principal's affairs or business. Once a presumption of corruption arises, it is presumed that the donation is a corrupt payment, unless the defendant proves the contrary on the balance of probabilities.

7.30 A presumption of corruption can play an important role in successfully prosecuting corruption offences. Specifically, in the absence of such a presumption it may be very difficult, if not impossible, for the prosecution to establish that the payment in question was made with the corrupt intent of influencing any official matter or transaction, as required by the bribery offences. This is particular so given the fact that both parties to the transaction are equally guilty of an offence, there is usually no identifiable victim and the transaction will almost always be carried out in great secrecy. Moreover, there is unlikely to be any evidence of an express agreement between the parties and, consequently, the intent to influence will have to be inferred from circumstantial evidence.

7.31 Given the importance of a presumption of corruption in facilitating the effective prosecution of corruption cases, the Tribunal is concerned that the scope of the presumption applicable in the case of political donations is too narrow. Specifically, as is clear from the above, for that presumption to apply it is necessary to prove that the defendant personally received a political donation which he or she was required to disclose under the relevant section of the political finance acts but failed to do so. Consequently, the presumption does not apply to undisclosed payments made to political parties. However, political parties can exert considerable influence over their members and in some respects paying a bribe to a political party may be more effective than paying it to an individual politician. Both this and other Tribunals have inquired into instances of corrupt payments being made to political parties where the payer had an interest in a member of that party, such as, in particular, a Minister doing something or failing to do something in relation to his or her office or position or his or her principal's affairs or business.

7.32 Another problem with the presumption is that it may not apply to a donation from a prohibited source. Specifically, as such a payment should not be accepted it seems at least arguable that even if it is accepted there is no obligation to disclose it as the disclosure obligations only apply to permitted donations.

7.33 In view of the above, the Tribunal is recommending extending the Section 3 presumption in two respects. First, by providing that that presumption also arises where a donation is made to a political party once the following conditions are fulfilled. Specifically, the political party must be required to disclose the donation under the political finance acts but fail to do so. In addition, the donor must have an interest in an elected representative who is an Officeholder and a member of that party doing any act or making any omission in relation to his or her office or position or his or her principal's affairs or business.

7.34 Secondly, the presumption should be extended to cover the acceptance of a prohibited donation under the political finance acts and not merely a failure to disclose a permitted donation. In other words, where an elected representative, electoral candidate or a political party accepts a donation which he, she or it is prohibited from accepting under the political finance acts there should be a presumption that the donation constituted a bribe, unless the contrary is proved.

CONSIDERATION AND ADVANTAGES: PRESUMPTION OF CORRUPTION

The presumption of corruption set out in s. 4 of the 2001 Act should be extended to cover consideration and advantages:

- a. Conferred on Officeholders, Oireachtas Members and local Elected Members or to a third party connected to such a person including a family member or corporate entity

- b. where the relevant public official has done any act or made any omission in relation to his or her office or position, or any matter arising therefrom and
- c. where that act or omission is to the benefit of the person making the payment or on whose behalf the payment is made and
- d. where the relevant public official was required to disclose the interest under either the Ethics Acts 1995 and 2001 or the Local Government Act 2001, but failed to do so

7.35 In addition to the presumption of corruption which applies to political donations, the PCA provide for two rebuttable presumptions applicable to consideration or advantages conferred on specified public officials.

7.36 Specifically, the Prevention of Corruption Act 1916 (the “1916 Act”) contains a presumption that any money, gift or other consideration given to or received by an officeholder or special advisor or a director of, or occupier of a position of employment in, a public body by or from a person holding or seeking a contract from a Minister or a public body is given or received as a bribe.

7.37 The presumption of corruption under Section 4 of the 2001 Act arises once a payment is made to a specified public official, including an Officeholder, an Oireachtas Member, or a person performing functions on behalf of the State, and the payer had an interest in that official performing or omitting to perform certain functions. The payment may be in the form of a gift, consideration or an advantage. The functions covered comprise: the grant, refusal, withdrawal or revocation by or under any statute of any licence, permit, certificate, authorisation or similar permission; the making of any decision relating to the acquisition or sale of property; and/or the performance of functions under the Planning and Development Act 2000 – 2011.

7.38 The presumption set out in Section 4 of the 2001 Act applies to a broader range of public officials than that contained in the 1916 Act. Moreover, it applies to a wider range of benefits, including but not limited to contracts. However, it only covers functions falling within the public official’s own competencies. This is in contrast to both the presumption which arises under the 1916 act as well as the bribery offences themselves. Specifically, for the purpose of both that presumption and those offences, while the payment must be intended to influence the recipient, that influence may relate to either the recipient's functions or those of his or her principal or relevant public body.

7.39 Neither of the presumptions covers certain types of benefits including, for example, a decision to grant an area tax designation or the grant, renewal, revocation or withdrawal of licences etc other than by or under statute. Moreover, in both cases the payment must be made to the public official or person carrying out public functions. Neither appears to cover cases where payments are made to an official's spouse, relatives, or even corporate entities under his or her control.

7.40 As mentioned, presumptions of corruption play a particularly important role in bribery prosecutions in facilitating the identification of any nexus between corrupt payments and an official act. In view of the above-mentioned limitations on the scope of the existing presumptions of corruption applicable to gifts and other payments, the Tribunal is recommending that the presumption in Section 4 of the 2001 Act be extended to cover payments made to Officeholders, Oireachtas Members and local councillors or to a third party connected to such a person including a family member or corporate entity where the relevant public official has done any act or made any omission in relation to his or her office or position, or any matter arising there from and where that act or omission is to the benefit of the person making the payment or on whose behalf the payment is made.

7.41 However, the Tribunal is also recommending that this presumption should only arise in relation to payments to public officials, where the payment is one which that public official was required to disclose under the conflicts of interest acts but failed to do so. This then reflects the position under s. 3 of the 2001 Act in respect of political donations. It is based on the premise that where a public official openly and transparently discloses the receipt of a payment as required by law, then the payment is unlikely to be a corrupt one and in fairness to that official, no presumption of corruption should arise in respect of that payment.

SANCTIONS

Undertakings convicted of bribery should be banned from all public tenders for a 7 year period on first offence and indefinitely thereafter

A person convicted of bribery where the purpose of the bribe was to influence a public official in performing his or her public functions in relation to planning or development should be prohibited from applying for planning permission in respect of any land owned by him or her or under his or her control for a 7 year period other than planning permission in respect of his or her own private dwelling

7.42 A person convicted of an offence under the Prevention of Corruption Acts may be sentenced and/or fined. Moreover, as mentioned the 1889 act provides for specific sanctions for public officials convicted of offences under that act. Significantly, in certain instances a person convicted of a corruption offence may also be excluded from certain public procurement contracts under the European Communities (Award of Public Authorities Contracts) Regulations and/or the European Communities (Award of Contracts by Utility Undertakings) Regulations 2007. The offences in question are essentially those provided for under the CJ(TFO)Act 2001. As mentioned, those offences focus on bribery which damages or is likely to damage the European Communities Financial Interests.

7.43 The Tribunal considers that the ability to exclude an undertaking from a public contract is a significant sanction, which, in particular in the case of commercial bribery, may well have a strong deterrent effect. The Tribunal therefore recommends the introduction of such a sanction for bribery offences under the PCA.

7.44 The Tribunal is also recommending the introduction of an equivalent sanction in the case of bribery for the purposes of influencing decisions relating to planning or development. The rationale for this recommendation is similar to the one regarding exclusions from public contracts. Specifically, this Tribunal inquired into a significant number of instances of planning corruption with regard, in particular, to commercial developments. Clearly the expected profit from such development was a potent factor underlying that corruption. As bribery is largely an economic crime, it is to be expected that an increase in the financial risks involved in engaging in corrupt activities will lead to a corresponding reduction in bribery. Implementation of this recommendation will mean that developers who engage in corrupt activity risk being prevented from developing further properties for a considerable period of time.

WHISTLEBLOWING PROTECTION

A pan sectoral whistleblower protection act should be introduced protecting all those reporting suspected offences and/or breaches of regulatory measures from any form of liability, relief and/or penalisation arising from that report

Pending the introduction of that act, whistleblower protection should be extended

- under the Prevention of Corruption (Amendment) Act 2010 to:
 - Protect independent contractors who report suspicions of corruption from penalisation
 - remove the existing limit on the amount of compensation which may be awarded to those penalised for whistleblowing
- under the Criminal Justice Act 2011 to cover those reporting or giving evidence on offences under the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices 1889

7.45 Protection for those who blow the whistle on corrupt transactions is an important element in ensuring their detection and sanctioning. Corruption is frequently an offence committed by wealthy and/or powerful members of the Community and those reporting it may well fear the consequences of doing so for their own careers and employment prospects. Whistleblower protection may help alleviate those fears, thus facilitating the reporting of corruption offences.

7.46 There is no pan-sectoral protection for whistleblowers in Ireland. However, the 2010 Act introduced whistleblower protection for those reporting offences under the prevention of corruption acts. That act protects all person reporting suspected offences under those acts to an “appropriate person” from any liability in damages or any other form of relief, once the report is made in good faith. An “appropriate person” includes a member of the Garda Síochána or an employer, where that suspicion is formed in the course of the person’s employment. The 2010 Act also prohibits an employer from penalising or threatening to penalise an employee for reporting suspected bribery under the PCA, or from permitting anyone else to do so. Penalising an employee in contravention of this act is an offence. In addition, the employee may be awarded compensation in such amount as is just and equitable having regard to all the circumstances, but not exceeding 104 weeks remuneration.

7.47 The Criminal Justice Act 2011 (the “2011 Act”) is also relevant. According to s. 19 of that act, where a person has information which he or she knows or believes might be of material assistance in securing the prosecution or conviction of a “relevant offence” under that act that person must disclose that information to a member of the Garda Síochána, “as soon as practicable”. Where an employee discloses such an offence or gives evidence in relation to that disclosure, that act prohibits an employer from penalising or threatening to penalise him or her for doing so. As in the case of the 2010 Act, it is an offence to penalise an employee in contravention of this act and the employee may be awarded such compensation as is just and equitable but not exceeding 104 weeks remuneration. A “relevant offence” includes bribery under the 1906 Act and the CJ(TFO)A 2001, corruption in office under the 2001 Act and certain offences under the CJ(MLTF)A 2010.

7.48 Clearly, the new whistleblower protection provisions included under the 2010 Act and the 2011 Act are a welcome addition to the anti-corruption laws. However, as a general observation, the Tribunal is not convinced that this sectoral approach to whistleblowing protection which has been so favoured by successive governments is the most effective way of providing this protection. In particular, it has led to a very complex and opaque system for protecting whistleblowers which is likely to deter at least some from reporting corruption offences.

7.49 In so far as the existing legislation is concerned, there are also a number of deficiencies in the scope of whistleblower protection under both the 2010 Act and the 2011 Act. Specifically, both acts confine protection from penalisation to employees. Consequently, independent contractors fall outside the scope of that protection. The Tribunal considers this to be deeply unsatisfactory, in particular because a contractor may be just as vulnerable to penalisation as an employee, particularly when engaged by an undertaking on a long-term basis. Moreover, in some instances, an independent contractor may be more likely to identify corruption than an employee. Specifically, where corruption is pervasive and becomes part of a corporate culture, employees may lose sight of its inherent illegality. In contrast, an independent contractor who is not tainted by that culture may be quicker to recognise it and report it.

7.50 The fact that compensation under both acts is limited to two years remuneration is also a matter of concern. Specifically, the Tribunal is of the opinion that those who are penalised for reporting possible occurrences of corruption should be given such compensation as is just and equitable, irrespective of whether or not that amount exceeds two years remuneration. Those with the courage and conviction to report corruption offences should not suffer financially for doing so.

7.51 In view of the above, the Tribunal urges the government to reconsider its approach to whistleblower protection and to bring in a general law protecting all whistleblowers at the earliest opportunity. Pending the introduction of such a law, the Tribunal recommends that the whistleblower protection in the 2010 Act and the 2011 Act be extended to cover independent contractors. In addition, those acts should be amended so as to remove the limitation on compensation to two years remuneration. The Tribunal also recommends that the 2011 Act extended to those reporting or giving evidence on offences under the 1889 Act.

CORRUPTION IN OFFICE

The offence of corruption in office contained in s. 8 of the Prevention of Corruption (Amendment) Act 2001 should be amended so as to:

- Cover any situation where a public official fails or omits to do an act in relation to his or her office or position for the purpose of corruptly obtaining a gift, consideration or advantage for himself, herself or any other person
- Cover situations where a public official uses any confidential information obtained as a result of his or her office for the purpose of corruptly obtaining a gift, consideration or advantage for himself, herself or any other person
- Define the term “corruptly” so as to cover any acts or omissions on the part of a public official for the purposes of obtaining an unlawful or improper advantage for himself, herself or any other person

7.52 The offence of corruption in office is committed where a public official does any act in relation to his or her public office for the purpose of corruptly obtaining a gift, consideration or advantage for himself, herself or any other person. Unlike bribery, the commission of this offence is not dependent on a payment being made to a public official to induce him or her to act corruptly. Instead, it covers situations where the public official acts purely out of his or her own volition. As such, this offence makes an important contribution to the fight against corruption and criminalises behaviour which falls outside the scope of the bribery offences.

7.53 However, the offence also suffers from a number of limitations, which the Tribunal considers restrict its ability to effectively criminalise certain forms of corrupt behaviour on the part of public officials. Specifically, it is not clear from the wording of that section whether it covers situations where a public official fails or neglects to do something in relation to his or her public office.

7.54 Moreover, it does not appear to cover situations where a public official uses confidential information obtained by reason of his or her public office, for his or her own private benefit. Nor is such use necessarily covered by the Official Secrets Act 1963. In particular that Act is concerned with situations where such information is communicated or disclosed to other persons rather than when it is simply used for the public official's own benefit. However, this Tribunal investigated several instances where it was concerned that a public official had used confidential information obtained by that official in his or her official capacity, to his or her own benefit.

7.55 Finally, while the offence only covers situations where a public official does any act in relation to his or her public office for the purpose of "corruptly" obtaining a gift, consideration or advantage, it does not define that term. Moreover, the manner in which that term is defined in s. 1 of the 1906 Act as inserted by the 2010 Act is not particularly useful when applied to this offence. Specifically, that section defines "corruptly" as follows:

"corruptly" includes acting with an improper purpose personally or by influencing another person, whether by means of making a false or misleading statement, by means of withholding, concealing, altering or destroying a document or other information, or by any other means.

As is clear from the above, this definition defines "corruptly" as acting with an improper purpose. However, in the context of the corruption in office offence the purpose of the term “corruptly” is to distinguish between situations where a public official performs his official functions in the public interest in return for a proper benefit (such as his or her salary) from situations where he or she performs those functions in order to obtain a benefit to which he or she is not legally entitled.

7.56 In view of the above, the Tribunal recommends that Section 8 of the 2001 Act be amended so as to ensure that it covers situations where a public official fails or omits to do any act in relation to his or her office or position for the purpose of obtaining a corrupt advantage. It also recommends that the offence be extended to cover situations where a public official makes unauthorised use of confidential information for his or her own benefit. Finally, the term “corruptly” should be defined so as to cover any acts or omissions on the part of a public official for the purposes of obtaining an unlawful or improper advantage for himself, herself or any other person.

ILLEGAL GIFTS

It should be an offence for a holder of ministerial office to accept and retain a gift or other advantage, of above a nominal value, given to him or her in connection with that office where the gift or advantage is not lawfully due.

7.57 As in the case of political donations, gifts pose an interesting dilemma from the perspective of anti-corruption measures. On the one hand, they are a normal part of social interaction and public officials may be the recipients of entirely legitimate gifts in both their private and public lives. On the other hand, bribes are frequently made under the guise of a gift. Moreover, whether or not that is their purpose, all gifts tend to engender a feeling of reciprocity on the part of the recipient which may also undermine the disinterested performance of his or her public office. Furthermore, even entirely legitimate gifts may easily give rise to an appearance of corruption.

7.58 As discussed above, in certain instances the fact that a public official receives a gift is sufficient to raise a presumption of corruption. Moreover, under the Ethics Acts, an Officeholder is required to surrender to the State a gift received in his or her capacity as an Officeholder where the value of that gift exceeds €650.

7.59 As set out in the part dealing with conflicts of interests, this Tribunal is recommending that a public official should be prohibited from receiving any gift which could be reasonably perceived to be connected with that office. It is also recommending that public officials be required to disclose other gifts received by them once the value of a particular gift exceeds a specified threshold.

7.60 In view of the risks which gifts pose from an anti-corruption perspective, this Tribunal is recommending, in addition to the above, that it should be an offence for a Minister to retain a gift given in connection with their public office where that gift exceeds €650.

MONEY LAUNDERING

Designated persons should be required to apply enhanced due diligence measures to domestic “politically exposed persons”

The term “politically exposed persons” should be defined so as to apply to senior public officeholders for a minimum of ten years after they have ceased to hold office

7.61 Money laundering is criminalised by the CJ(MLTF)A 2010. That act sets out three money laundering offences which essentially criminalise all acts which either conceal the proceeds of criminal conduct and/or distance those proceeds from their criminal origin. It also contains a number of provisions designed to ensure the prevention and detection of money laundering offences (Anti-money laundering measures, or AML). By and large these provisions impose obligations on those bodies most likely to be used for money laundering purposes (“designated persons”). They require such persons to: identify and monitor their customers (“customer due diligence” or “CDD” measures); have in place procedures to prevent and detect money laundering; report suspicious transaction; keep records; and provide education and training to their staff on money-laundering risks and prevention.

7.62 CDD requirements are one of the main strands of an effective anti-money laundering and counter terrorist financing system. They aim at ensuring that those persons most likely to be used for money laundering activities maintain adequate knowledge of their customers and their customer’s financial activities to detect any transactions that may involve money laundering. There are two strands to CDD requirements. First, designated persons must ensure that they adequately identify and verify the identity of all their customers. Secondly, where the designated person has a business relationship with a customer (i.e. an on-going relationship) it must obtain reasonably warranted information on the purpose and intended nature of that relationship and subject it to on-going monitoring. The objective of this second strand is to ensure that designated persons are in a position to identify activities of customers during the course of the business relationship which are not consistent with the designated person's knowledge of the customer and/or which give rise to a suspicion of money laundering.

7.63 There are various levels of CDD, namely simplified, ordinary and enhanced. Enhanced CDD essentially requires designated persons to subject relationships with certain types of clients to extremely close scrutiny. The CJ(MLTF)A 2010 requires designated persons to apply enhanced due diligence measures to, among others, foreign politically exposed persons (PEPs), their immediate family members and their close associates.

7.64 PEPs are essentially persons in prominent public positions. Such persons are widely considered to pose a particular risk of money laundering because of the possibility that they may be involved in corruption and/or theft of State assets. Specifically, they:

Represent a greater money laundering risk because of the possibility that such individuals may abuse their positions and influence to carry out corrupt acts, such as accept and extort bribes and misappropriate state assets, then use domestic and international financial systems to launder the proceeds.

(World Bank, 2009)

7.65 The Tribunal's own inquiries provide considerable insight into money laundering by PEPs. It therefore fully endorses applying enhanced CDD measures to such persons. However, the Tribunal is of the view that the existing measures suffer from two fundamental defects from an anti-corruption perspective which considerably erode the ability of the CDD measures to combat the type of corruption inquired into by this Tribunal.

7.66 As mentioned, under the CJ(MLTF)A 2010, designated persons are only required to apply enhanced due diligence to PEPs who are resident abroad. Clearly, this limitation very much undermines the usefulness of due diligence for uncovering corruption on the part of domestic PEPs. The Tribunal therefore recommends that the CJ(MLTF)A 2010 be amended so as to extend the requirements to apply enhanced CDD to domestic PEPs.

7.67 In making this recommendation the Tribunal is aware that the existing provisions reflect the requirements of Directive 2005/60/EC, usually referred to as the EU's Third Money Laundering Directive which the CJ(MLFT)A 2010 transposes into Irish law. However, that directive only sets a minimum standard and there is nothing to prevent the State from introducing higher AML standards. Moreover, the Tribunal notes that, the Financial Action Task Force, one of the most prominent international bodies in combating money laundering recommends the imposition of enhanced CDD in the case of domestic PEP's as best practice. Moreover, Article 52 of UNCAC states that each State Party:

shall take such measures as may be necessary, in accordance with its domestic law to require financial institutions within its jurisdiction to conduct enhanced scrutiny of accounts sought or maintained by or on behalf of individuals who are, or have been, entrusted with prominent public functions and their family members and close associates.

7.68 Similarly, according to the World Bank Stolen Asset Recovery Initiative ("StAR"):

Laws and Regulations should make no distinction between domestic and foreign PEPs. (...) The distinction between foreign and domestic PEPs in existing standards lets prominent domestic public officials, their families and close associates "off-the-hook". There is no justifiable basis for this distinction at this time. All PEPs are exposed to the opportunity to misuse their position for personal gain; therefore, this distinction omits an important risk area.

(Greenberg, 2009)

7.69 The Tribunal is of the view that had designated persons been required to apply enhanced CDD to domestic PEPs during the period at the focus of its inquiries, much of the corruption which occurred during that period might never have happened or at the very least would have been discovered much earlier. Moreover, it considers that requiring designated bodies to apply CDD measures to domestic PEPs is likely to increase the credibility of the government's commitment to combating corruption and is an important component in a Top-Down approach to this issue.

7.70 In the Tribunal's view, a second defect stems from the definition of a "PEP" in the CJ(MLTF)A 2010. That act defines a PEP as "an individual who is, or has at any time in the preceding year, been entrusted with a prominent public function." It therefore applies to both individuals who are current holders of such a function and those who have held such a function in the previous year.

7.71 The Tribunal considers that designated persons should apply enhanced due diligence to persons formerly entrusted with a prominent public function for a significantly longer period of time than is currently required. Specifically, it is altogether possible that payments resulting from corrupt agreements will only be paid to a public official once he has ceased to be entrusted with those functions in order to reduce the likelihood of those payments being identified. There is no reason to believe that such payments are likely to be confined to the year after this happens. According to the Stolen Asset Recovery Initiative:

Evidence suggests that corrupt PEPs do not cease to move illicit funds after leaving office and some may continue to receive payments. Indeed public officials, their families and close associates may wait until after leaving to move the funds. This problem is intensified the shorter the time period the PEP continues to be treated as a PEP.

(Greenberg, 2009)

7.72 The Tribunal considers that a PEP should be subject to enhanced due diligence requirements for a 10 year period after they cease to be entrusted with public functions. While any pre-determined period of time is inevitably arbitrary, the Tribunal believes that the majority of corrupt payments to PEPs are likely to emerge in this time. Moreover, obviously, after the expiry of the ten years, it would still be open to a designated body to continue to apply enhanced CDD to their dealings with that person on a risk assessment basis.

CASH TRANSACTION REPORTING

Consideration should be given to imposing a cash transaction reporting requirement obliging designated bodies to alert the authorities to cash transactions in excess of a specified sum

7.73 The advantage of requiring designated bodies to report all cash transactions exceeding a specified threshold is that it would mean that where a designated bodies CDD measures fail to uncover the true client, that there is still an alert system in place to ensure that significant transactions are subject to enhanced scrutiny.

7.74 The Tribunal notes that Rec. 19(b) of the FATF's Forty Recommendations, which is a key international instrument for combating money laundering, recommends that countries consider:

the feasibility and utility of a system where banks and other financial institutions and intermediaries would report all domestic and international currency transactions above a fixed amount, to a national central agency with a computerised data base, available to competent authorities for use in money laundering or terrorist financing cases, subject to strict safeguards to ensure proper use of the information.

7.75 Moreover in Article 14(2), UNCAC also suggests that States Parties consider imposing cash reporting obligations:

States Parties shall consider implementing feasible measures to detect and monitor the movement of cash and appropriate negotiable instruments across their borders, subject to safeguards to ensure proper use of information and without impeding in any way the movement of legitimate capital. Such measures may include a requirement that individuals and businesses report the cross-border transfer of substantial quantities of cash and appropriate negotiable instruments.

7.76 A number of countries have implemented cash transaction reporting requirements, including the U.S. and Australia. Both these countries require financial institutions to record and report to designated authorities all transactions involving currency or bearer instruments in excess of $10,000.

7.77 The Tribunal considers that cash transaction reporting requirements could prove an important tool in combating corruption. The Tribunal inquired into several transactions involving the movement of large sums of money which would have triggered such requirements had they existed at the relevant time. Nevertheless, the Tribunal is aware that such requirements can have significant privacy and resource implications. It is for this reason that it is confining its recommendations to asking the authorities to consider implementing such a system. The ultimate decision as to whether or not to implement such a requirement must evidently rest on a thorough cost-benefit analysis.

ASSET RECOVERYThe Tribunal recommends:

- 1. Consideration should be given to introducing a single procedure for conviction based asset recovery measures
- 2. Where a person has been sentenced or otherwise dealt with by a court in respect of one or more corruption offences of which he or she has been convicted on indictment, the court may proceed to determine whether that person has benefitted from those offences
- 3. Where the D.P.P. makes an application to the court to determine whether a convicted person holds funds subject to confiscation, the court should be required to conduct an inquiry for the purposes of making that determination
- 4. Once a court determines that a person has benefitted from a corruption offence, that court should be required to make a confiscation order to the value of that benefit or the person's realisable assets, whichever is the less

8.01 The seizure and confiscation of funds and/or other assets derived from the proceeds of crime comprises a key element in combating corruption. Specifically, as previously mentioned, corruption is primarily motivated by profit. In the case of bribery, the public official (or third party) profits as a result of the bribe and the briber may profit by being awarded a benefit to which he or she may not be otherwise entitled. For example, the quid pro quo for the payment of the bribe may be the award of a profitable public procurement contract, the rezoning of land, a job or other similar benefit. The fact that the bribe and/or any benefits derived from the payment of the bribe may be confiscated is likely to constitute a deterrent to at least some individuals who would otherwise be prepared to engage in such activity. Moreover, confiscation may also reduce the ability of persons involved in bribery to pay the bribes. Specifically, where the benefits of bribery are confiscated, this clearly prevents those benefits from being used to fund other bribes.

8.02 Generally, conviction based recovery is concerned with the recovery of the benefits derived from a crime after a conviction on indictment has been secured. In contrast, civil recovery allows the restraint and recovery of assets suspected of having criminal origins without the necessity of securing a criminal conviction. In so far as corruption is concerned, non-conviction based recovery has several advantages over recovery which is dependent on the existence of a conviction. In particular, there is no requirement for a conviction, which, as previously discussed, may be difficult to obtain in corruption cases.

8.03 In Ireland, confiscation may be ordered either following a criminal conviction or on a civil basis. The provisions regulating conviction based recovery are contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1994 (the “1994 Act”). Those regulating non-conviction based recovery are set out in the Proceeds of Crime Acts 1996 and 2005. Overall, these provisions are relatively robust. However, the Tribunal is making a small number of recommendations affecting the criminal confiscation provisions which it believes will improve their overall effectiveness as a tool for combating corruption.

THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT 1994

Consideration should be given to introducing a single procedure for conviction based asset recovery measures

8.04 The 1994 Act provides for three distinct confiscation regimes which focus, respectively, on confiscation in respect of: drug trafficking offences; financing terrorism offences; and other offences for which a person has been convicted on indictment. There are significant differences between the three regimes. Overall, the provisions applicable to drug trafficking offences are considerably more stringent than those which apply to other indictable offences.

8.05 The Tribunal doubts the wisdom or necessity of having three separate procedures for conviction based recovery depending on the classification of the conviction offence. In particular, it considers that the existence of the three procedures makes the law in this area needlessly complex and obtuse. Moreover, the Tribunal does not consider drug trafficking offences to be so different from other types of offences to warrant a separate, more stringent confiscation procedure.

8.06 Overall, the Tribunal believes that there would be considerable merit in combining the three existing procedures in order to provide for one single procedure governing all conviction based recovery and recommends the introduction of such a procedure.

DISCRETION TO INQUIRE

The court of sentencing should be permitted to determine whether or not a person convicted of corruption on indictment has benefitted from an indictable offence where it considers it appropriate to do so

Where the D.P.P. makes an application to the court to determine whether a convicted person holds funds subject to confiscation, the court should be required to conduct an inquiry for the purposes of making that determination

8.07 Under the now existing legislation, where a person is convicted of an indictable offence such as corruption, the court can only inquire into whether or not that person has benefitted from that offence on application by the D.P.P. It is clear from that legislation that the D.P.P. has a discretion as to whether or not to make such an application. Moreover, once an application is made, the court has a discretion as to whether or not to conduct the inquiry.

8.08 The Tribunal is concerned that entrusting the power to initiate an inquiry as to whether or not a convicted person has benefitted from a corruption offence exclusively to the D.P.P. results in an over concentration of power in the hands of the D.P.P. Moreover, the Tribunal does not see any rationale for so restricting that power.

8.09 Consequently, the Tribunal recommends that where a person has been convicted of an offence on indictment, the court should have a discretion as to whether to conduct an inquiry into whether or not the convicted person has benefitted from an offence in any case where it considers it appropriate to do so. Moreover, where the D.P.P. applies to the court for a determination as to whether or not a person has benefitted from an offence, the court should be required to conduct such an inquiry.

8.10 The Tribunal notes that in the case of drug trafficking offences, once a person is convicted on indictment of a drug trafficking offence, the court must then proceed to inquire as to whether that person has benefitted from drug trafficking.

VALUE OF ORDER

Where a person has benefitted from a corruption offence, the court should be required to make a confiscation order to the value of that benefit, subject to certain restrictions

8.11 Currently, if a court determines that a convicted person has benefitted from a corruption offence, then that court has a discretion as to whether or not to make a confiscation order and as to the amount of that order. However, the court may not make a confiscation order where the value of that order is greater than the amount of that person's realisable assets. In addition, in making the order it may take into account any information placed before it showing that a victim of an offence to which the proceedings relate has instituted or intends to institute civil proceedings against the defendant in respect of loss, injury or damage sustained in connection with the offence.

8.12 The courts broad discretion in the case of such offences contrasts with the situation applicable in the case of both drug trafficking offences and terrorist financing offences. Specifically, where a court determines that a person convicted of drug trafficking offences has benefitted from drug trafficking, it must make a confiscation order to the value of that person's proceeds from drug trafficking once that value does not exceed his or her realisable assets. Similar provisions apply in instances where the court determines that a person convicted of a financing terrorism offence holds funds that are the proceeds of such an offence or which are used or allocated for use in connection with an offence of financing terrorism.

8.13 Again, the Tribunal does not see any justification for treating corruption offences differently from drug trafficking offences in this way. Like drug trafficking offences, offences like bribery, corruption in office and money laundering are primarily motivated by profit. Consequently, confiscating that profit is likely to have the same deterrent effect for those offences as for drug trafficking offences.

8.14 The Tribunal therefore recommends that once a person is convicted of a corruption offence and a court determines that that person has benefitted from that offence, then the court must make a confiscation order in that amount as long as that amount does not exceed the value of that person's realisable assets. In addition, in making the order, the court may take into consideration any information placed before it showing that a victim of an offence to which the proceedings relate has instituted or intends to institute, civil proceedings against the defendant in respect loss, injury or damage suffered in connection with the offence.

OTHER RECOMMENDATIONSThe Tribunal recommends:

- 1. Placing increased focus on corruption prevention, including: the provision of advice and training; public awareness raising; researching and reviewing the effectiveness of the anti-corruption measures; and emerging trends in corruption prevention
- 2. Providing for increased transparency over the ownership of corporate vehicles
- 3. Amending the Tribunals of Inquiry Evidence Acts 1921 – 2004 so as to empower a Tribunal of Inquiry to:
 - require any person to attend to answer questions at private interview and to provide a written statement setting out those answers
 - order the discovery of documents without prior notice
 - enter business premises and inspect and seize documents relevant to its inquiries and to obtain a warrant for the purpose of entering other premises for these purposes
- 4. Amending the Tribunals of Inquiry Evidence Acts 1921 – 2004 to stipulate that the terms of reference of a Tribunal of Inquiry should be drafted as precisely as possible

9.01 While the previous chapters each dealt with specific subject-matters, this chapter contains a number of recommendations covering a number of miscellaneous topics. As in the case of the recommendations contained in those other chapters, the Tribunal is convinced that, if adopted the recommendations in this chapter will make an important contribution to combating corruption.

9.02 The Tribunal is aware that several commentators have called for the establishment of an anti-corruption commission with the specific mandate of monitoring and investigating corruption. The Tribunal itself has given extensive consideration to whether to recommend the establishment of such a commission. Ultimately, however, it has decided not to make a recommendation to this effect.

9.03 The Tribunal is cognisant of the fact that where an anti-corruption commission enjoys sufficient political and financial independence it can make an important contribution to combating and uncovering corruption. It is also aware of several anti-corruption commissions in other jurisdictions, including in particular Hong Kong and Australia, which have made a significant contribution to combating corruption.

9.04 Nevertheless, the Tribunal does not believe that the establishment of an anti-corruption commission is a pre-requisite for combating corruption. Specifically, it is of the view that the tasks which would normally be entrusted to such a commission, namely, prevention, monitoring and investigation, can just as effectively be dispersed among a number of different institutions. In the Tribunal's opinion, while it is crucial that each of these tasks be performed, it is not necessary that they be performed by a single institution.

9.05 The Tribunal notes that its view on this issue is well-supported. Specifically, it is generally agreed that a multiple agency approach to corruption can be as effective as a uni-agency approach and the experiences of countries such as New Zealand and Canada appear to bear this out.

9.06 Obviously, however, an effective multi-agency approach is dependent on the various agencies involved in anti-corruption co-operating with each other and adopting a coordinated approach to combating corruption. The Tribunal urges the existing agencies to ensure the co-operation and co-ordination necessary to make Ireland's fight against corruption fully effective.

PREVENTION

Increased focus should be placed on corruption prevention, including: the provision of advice and training; public awareness raising; researching and reviewing the effectiveness of the anti-corruption measures; and emerging trends in corruption prevention

8.01 Prevention is a vital component in the fight against corruption and a mechanism which places strong emphasis on prevention is likely to have several advantages over one whose main emphasis is on investigating and sanctioning breaches. Moreover, in contrast to enforcement, prevention helps avoid the cynicism and disillusionment which almost inevitably accompanies corruption:

In one sense, a prosecution for public corruption is an admission of systemic failure. Large numbers of arrests and prosecutions do nothing to reinforce the public's belief in the fairness and legitimacy of government institutions

Amy Comstock (2007)

8.02 Key components of preventative action include: providing advice and training to elected representatives; educating the general public regarding the dangers of corruption and the measures being take to combat it; and research.

8.03 To some extent these functions are already carried out by existing anti-corruption institutions. For example, SIPO provides advice regarding the conflicts of interests acts and the political finance acts. Nevertheless, there is currently no institution empowered to educate the public regarding the dangers of corruption, a key element of corruption prevention. Moreover, the Tribunal is not aware of any specific efforts in the public sector as a whole aimed at training public officials on corruption and anti-corruption measures.

8.04 The Tribunal is of the view that far greater emphasis needs to be put on corruption prevention, both by strengthening the existing functions and by providing for the performance of functions which are not currently performed. Amongst the most striking features of the corruption inquired into both by this and other Tribunals of Inquiry were the widespread public knowledge and/or belief in its existence at the time it occurred. That, for the most part, this knowledge or belief did not translate into public disapproval at the ballot box or elsewhere, or indeed any sort of sanction is in our view particularly disquieting. Until we, the electorate, are prepared to take corruption seriously and sanction those elected representatives who use their public office for private gain then all other measures are likely to be ineffective. If morality and ethics are not a priority for the electorate then they will not be a priority for its representatives. Public education has an important role to play in reminding the public of the dangers of corruption and the importance of combating it.

8.05 Placing more emphasis on corruption prevention does not necessarily require the establishment of a specialised corruption prevention agency. Specifically, there appears to be nothing to prevent these functions from being distributed among existing institutions and indeed this may be the more effective approach.

8.06 The Tribunal therefore recommends that increased focus be placed on corruption prevention, including advice, training, public awareness raising, research and reviewing the effectiveness of the anti-corruption measures and emerging trends in corruption prevention.

8.07 In doing so, the Tribunal notes that UNCAC requires State Parties to ensure the existence of a body or bodies that prevent corruption including by implementing the policies set out in Article 5 of that convention, and increasing and disseminating knowledge about the prevention of corruption.

CORPORATE ENTITIES

There should be increased transparency over the ownership of corporate vehicles

8.08 Corporate vehicles are an essential part of the economy. As well as playing a central role in economic activity, they are also the instruments through which some individuals may choose to manage their wealth and collect funds for charitable activities.

8.09 However, it is also clear from the inquiries conducted by this and other Tribunals of Inquiry that corporate vehicles frequently play a central role in concealing corruption. Such vehicles include, in particular, companies and trusts. From a corruption perspective, the attraction of such vehicles is doubtlessly the fact that they afford a relatively easy method of concealing the identity of the individuals who either own or control them. This in turn enables those individuals to distance themselves from their involvement in corrupt transactions and impedes attempts by both investigators and prosecutors to either identify or prosecute those individuals.

Almost every economic crime involves the misuse of corporate entities – money launderers exploit cash-based businesses and other legal vehicles to disguise the source of their illicit gains, bribe-givers and recipients conduct their illicit transactions through bank accounts under the names of corporations and foundations, and individuals hide or shield their wealth from tax authorities and other creditors through trusts and partnerships, to name but a few examples.

8.10 The problems posed by corporate entities arise from the fact that the person with legal title to those entities is not necessarily the person with beneficial ownership, namely the person who ultimately owns or controls that entity. For investigators, therefore, the challenge is to identify the beneficial owner.

8.11 There are various ways of identifying the beneficial owner of a corporate entity in this jurisdiction most of which depend on an application being made for a court order for the disclosure of beneficial interest. These include applications under the Companies Acts 1990 and under the Proceeds of Crime Act 2005. In addition, to these types of orders, directors and secretaries of companies incorporated under the Companies Acts must notify the company of their interests in shares or debentures held in that company or its subsidiary. Moreover, under the Criminal Justice (Money Laundering and Financing Terrorism Act) 2010, designated persons are under relatively extensive obligations to identify the beneficial ownerships of their clients or customers.

8.12 Despite these provisions, the Tribunal is concerned that there is a marked lack of transparency over the beneficial ownership of many types of corporate vehicles operating in this jurisdiction. Moreover, one of the problems with relying on a disclosure order to obtain information regarding beneficial ownership is that they are likely to be sought at precisely the time when the beneficial owner has the most incentive to ensure that he or she distances him or herself from the company as much as possible.

8.13 In the course of its inquiries, the Tribunal encountered significant problems in identifying beneficial owners. The Tribunal notes that the Financial Action Task Force has also expressed concern regarding the lack of transparency concerning beneficial ownership or control of legal persons or entities in this jurisdiction.

8.14 Given the extent to which corrupt activities tend to feature corporate entities and the general lack of transparency over the beneficial ownership of such entities, the Tribunal urges that measures be introduced to address this lack of transparency as a matter of priority. The Tribunal is aware of the immense complexity of the problem of ensuring transparency in this area and that the most effective way of doing so has been the subject of considerable debate at international level. Nevertheless, it does not believe that this complexity should in itself be an excuse for failing to address this pressing problem.

TRIBUNALS OF INQUIRY

A Tribunal of Inquiry should be empowered to:

- require any person to attend to answer questions at private interview and to provide a written statement setting out the answers to those questions
- order the discovery of documents without prior notice
- enter business premises and inspect and seize documents relevant to its inquiries and to obtain a warrant for the purposes of entering other premises for these purposes.

The Tribunals of Inquiry Evidence Acts 1921 – 2004 should be amended so as to stipulate that the terms of reference of a Tribunal of Inquiry should be drafted as precisely as possible

8.15 Throughout the 1990's, Tribunals of Inquiry conferred with the statutory powers set out in the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Acts 1921 – 2004, were the method of choice for investigating allegations of political corruption. Tribunals conferred with those powers are established to inquire into "definitive matters of public importance". As observed by the High Court in Bailey v Flood, the usual impetus for their establishment is "urgent matters causing grave public disquiet need to be investigated in order to either root out the wrongdoing or to expose the concerns as misplaced."

8.16 Over the course of its inquiries, this Tribunal gained considerable experience in the strengths and weaknesses of conducting investigations by way of a Tribunal of Inquiry. Based on this experience, the Tribunal is making the following recommendations which are principally designed to improve the efficacy and/or speed of a Tribunal's investigation. The Tribunal is aware that the Moriarty Tribunal has also made a number of recommendations regarding Tribunals of Inquiry. The Tribunal endorses these recommendations wholeheartedly.

8.17 The powers conferred on Tribunals of Inquiry under the Tribunal of Inquiry Acts are relatively robust and include the power to: compel persons to furnish information; order the discovery or production of documents; require the attendance of witnesses and examine witnesses on oath. Nevertheless, the Tribunal is also recommending that Tribunals be given the power to direct any person to attend for private interview in order to answer questions that it believes to be relevant to a matter under investigation and to provide a written statement setting out the answers given by that person while being interviewed. The Tribunal believes that such a power would significantly reduce the length of both a Tribunal's private and public inquiries, and consequently, its costs.

8.18 The Tribunal also recommends that the powers conferred by the Tribunals of Inquiry Acts be extended so as to provide for the power to make Orders for Discovery without prior notice and seize documents on foot of a court order. While those acts permit Tribunals to order the production of documents, they do nothing to prevent the risk of documents being destroyed once a Tribunal's interest in them becomes apparent. This Tribunal believes that documents material to its inquiry were put beyond the Tribunal's reach either through concealment or destruction on more than one occasion and that at times this occurred after the relevant parties were put on notice of the Tribunal's intention to make a production order regarding those documents. The Tribunal consequently recommends that those acts be amended so as to enable a Tribunal of Inquiry to enter business premises for the purpose of inspecting and seizing documents relevant to its inquiries. The Tribunal also recommends that a Tribunal of Inquiry be empowered to apply to the District Court, in camera, for a warrant authorising entering to a private dwelling where a Tribunal has reasonable grounds for suspecting that there are any documents in that dwelling which are relevant to its inquiries and required by it for the purposes of its investigation.

8.19 The Tribunal notes that similar powers to some of the ones which it is recommending are already conferred on Commissions of Investigation under the Commissions of Investigation Act 2004. As appears clear from that Act, a Tribunal of Inquiry may be established to inquire into a matter which has already been investigated by a Commission of investigation, consequently, it appears logical that a Tribunal's powers of investigation should be at least as extensive as those of such a Commission.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN – RECOMMENDATIONS

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

1.01 The purpose of this section is to give an overview of measures aimed at regulating conflicts of interest both internationally and in the following jurisdictions: Australia, Canada, and the United Kingdom. Rather than giving a comprehensive overview of those measures, it focuses on those which are of most relevance to this Tribunal's recommendations. It should be noted that these are not the only measures which the Tribunal considered for the purpose of its recommendations.

INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS

1.02 The U.N., the OECD, and the Council of Europe have each adopted measures aimed at ensuring the proper management of conflicts of interest on the part of public officials.

THE OECD

1.03 Measures adopted by the OECD include: Recommendation on Principles of Managing Ethics in the Public Service (1998) (the "OECD's 1998 Principles"); Trust in Government Ethics Measures in OECD Countries (2000); The OECD Guidelines for Managing Conflicts of Interest in the Public Service (2003) (the "OECD Guidelines"); and Managing Conflicts of Interest in the Public Sector – A Toolkit (2005) (the "OECD Toolkit). Of these, the latter two are of particular importance.

1.04 The OECD Guidelines seek to help member countries to consider existing conflict of interest policy and practice relating to public officials who work in the national public administration at central government level. They also provide general guidance for other branches of government, sub-national level government and state-owned corporations. The Guidelines comprise four sections. The first of these identifies four core principles for managing conflicts of interest, namely: serving the public interest; supporting transparency and scrutiny; promoting individual responsibility and personal example; and engendering an organisational culture which is intolerant of conflicts of interest. These principles include: exercising public functions without regard for personal gain or preferences; disposing of interests giving rise to conflicts of interest; refraining from the exercise of public functions likely to affect private interests; controlling the use of inside information; disclosure; and compliance. The second section focuses on the development of a conflict of interest framework. Pursuant to the Guidelines, a Conflict of Interest framework should: identify relevant conflict of interest situations; and establish procedures for their identification, management and resolution. The other two sections focus on implementation and enforcement.

1.05 The OECD Toolkit provides a set of practical solutions for developing and implementing ways to manage conflicts of interest in accordance with the OECD Guidelines for Managing Conflict of Interest in the Public Service. It focuses on specific techniques, resources and strategies for identifying, managing and preventing conflict of interest situations more effectively and increasing integrity in official decision-making which might be compromised by conflicts of interest. It contains 15 tools in all. The first three deal with key concepts, including how to define, identify and manage actual, apparent and potential conflicts of interest. Tool 6 is related to those first three in that it sets out a self-test for diagnosing conflicts of interest. Meanwhile, Tool 4 contains a generic check list for identifying “at risk” areas for conflicts of interest for an organisation. In addition, Tool 8 sets out a gifts and gratuities checklist to be used for identifying whether acceptance of a gift could give rise to a conflict. A number of other provisions contain model laws for adaptation by State Parties. In this respect, Tool 5 sets out draft model law/ethics code clauses in respect of key principles for a modern code of ethics or anti-corruption law for the public sector. Tool 7 consists of a suite of generic draft clauses for enforcing the fundamental definition of a conflict of interest. It also sets out a model form contract for the purpose of encouraging compliance with ethical standards by former officials. Tool 9 comprises a model generic law on gifts for officials. Tool 10 and 11 both relate to the registration of assets. The former is a short form for the registration of personal interests and assets while the latter comprises a model law on the registration of interests and assets.

The UN

1.06 The UN has adopted two instruments dealing with conflicts of interest: the UN International Code of Conduct for Public Officials (1996) and the United Nations Convention against Corruption (2003).

1.07 The International Code is recommended to UN Member States as a “tool to guide their efforts against corruption” and applies to those holding “public office” as defined by national law. It comprises a basic set of recommendations that national public officers should follow when performing their duties. In this respect, it sets out three general principles regarding the exercise of public office as well as specific provisions dealing with conflicts of interest. The three general principles are that public officers should be: loyal to the state's institutions; act efficiently, effectively and with integrity in the performance of their duties; and be attentive, fair and impartial in the performance of their functions. The specific provisions cover matters such as conflict of interest; disclosure of assets; acceptance of gifts or other favours; use of confidential information and involvement in political and other activity.

1.08 Chapter 2 of UNCAC focuses on preventive measures against corruption and related standards and procedures. That Chapter recognises that provisions dealing with conflicts of interest on the part of public officials are instrumental to the achievement of transparency in the public sector. The term “public official” is defined to include any person holding a legislative, executive, administrative or judicial office of a State Party, whether appointed or elected, whether permanent or temporary, whether paid or unpaid, irrespective of that person's seniority.

1.09 Chapter 2 addresses conflicts of interest specifically in two Articles: Articles 7 and 8. Pursuant to Article 7(4) State Parties are required, in accordance with the fundamental principles of their domestic law, to adopt, maintain and strengthen systems that promote transparency and prevent conflicts of interest. For its part, Article 8 is entitled “Codes of Conduct for public officials” and comprises a mixture of mandatory and optional provisions. With regard to the former, each State Party is required to promote integrity, honesty and reliability among its public officials. In pursuing this objective, State Parties must, where appropriate, take account of other relevant initiatives, including the aforementioned 1996 code. In so far as the optional provisions are concerned, Article 8 provides that State Parties must endeavour to apply codes or standards of conduct for the correct, honourable and proper performance of public functions. They must also endeavour to establish measures and systems requiring public officials to make declarations to appropriate authorities regarding, inter alia, their outside activities, employment, investments, assets and substantial gifts or benefits from which a conflict of interest may result with respect to their functions as public officials.

1.10 The United Nations has also published a number of documents which provide further clarification on these provisions and recommended best practice. These include, in particular: the UN Guide on Anti-Corruption Policies (2003); the UN (Draft) Manual on Anti-corruption Policy (2001) and the UN Anti-Corruption Tool Kit (2004).

THE COUNCIL OF EUROPE

1.11 The Council of Europe has adopted a number of instruments which impact on conflicts of interest, in particular; Resolution (97) 24 on the twenty guiding principles for the fight against corruption (the “twenty guiding principles”); Recommendation (2000)10 on Codes of Conduct for Public Officials (“Recommendation (2000)10”), which includes a Model Code of Conduct for Public Officials; and the Council of Europe’s Parliamentary Assembly Resolution 1214(2000) on the Role of Parliaments in Fighting Corruption (“Resolution 1214”). In addition, the Council of Europe’s Congress of Local and Regional Authorities of Europe has adopted Recommendation 60(1999) on Political integrity of local and regional elected representatives, which contains in its appendix the European code of conduct for the political integrity of local and regional elected representatives. The Council of Europe’s Steering Committee on Local and Regional Democracy has also published a Model Initiatives Package on Public Ethics at local level (2004)

1.12 The twenty guiding principles contain a number of principles relevant to conflicts of interest. Principle 15 recommends, inter alia, that national authorities encourage the adoption, by elected representatives, of codes of conduct. Other principles stipulate, in particular, that States must take effective measures for the prevention of corruption and to raise public awareness and promote ethical behaviour. Moreover, they must ensure that the organisation, function and decision-making of public administrations takes into account the need to combat corruption, in particular by ensuring as much transparency as is consistent with the need to achieve effectiveness.

1.13 Recommendation (2000)10’s model code has three objectives: to specify the standards of integrity and conduct to be observed by public officials; to help them meet these standards; and to inform the public of the conduct it is entitled to expect of public officials. It contains a series of general principles dealing with, inter alia, conflicts of interests, incompatible outside activities; offers of undue advantage and gifts, misuse of official position, use of official information and public resources for private purposes and post-term employment.

1.14 Resolution 1214 provides, inter alia, that Parliamentarians should declare their own and their families financial interests annually and recognises that the proper declaration of sources of income and of potential conflicts of interest is particularly important.

1.15 Pursuant to the European Code of Conduct, elected representatives must disclose conflicts of interest and abstain from deliberating or voting on matters in respect of which they have such a conflict. They are also prohibited from exercising their public powers so as to benefit their own or a third party's private interests.

1.16 The model initiatives package is a collection of good practice ideas to be taken into account when states are considering the implementation of policies aimed at giving assurance that appropriate ethical behavior is being followed at local level.

SELECTED JURISDICTIONS

1.17 As mentioned, the Tribunal also considered measures regulating conflicts of interest in a number of selected jurisdictions, namely Australia, Canada, and England.

AUSTRALIA

1.18 The Australian Parliament comprises a Senate and a House of Representatives, both of which are subject to a number of conflict of interest measures contained in standing orders and resolutions. In addition, a code of conduct entitled Standards of Ministerial Ethics (2007), which applies to Ministers, contains a number of conflict of interest measures. There is no code of conduct for senators or members of the House of Representatives.

1.19 Members of the Senate and House of Representatives must each make periodic disclosures of interest. In the case of Senate Members, this obligation arises pursuant to a resolution of the Senate of 17 March 1994, as amended on 21 June 1995, 13 May 1998, 22 November 1999, 15 September 2003 and 10 August 2006. In the case of Members of the House of Representatives, the obligation is set down in a resolution of that House of 9 October 1984, which has been amended by the resolutions of the House of 22 October 1986, 30 November 1988, 9 November 1994, 6 November 2003 and 13 February 2008. Members of the Australian Parliament are not required to make ad hoc disclosures. Ministers must make both periodic and ad hoc disclosures. Certain interests are also subject to further regulation.

Periodic Disclosure

1.20 A Member of either the House of Representatives or the Senate must disclose his or her own registrable interests and those of his or her spouse and dependent children of which he or she is aware (collectively "relevant persons").

1.21 Interests which must be disclosed include, inter alia: equitable and legal shareholdings in public and private companies; family and business trusts and nominee companies in which a relevant person holds a beneficial interest or is a trustee; real estate, including the family home; liabilities, indicating the nature of the liability and the creditor concerned; the nature of any bonds, debentures and like investments; saving or investment accounts, indicating their nature and the name of the bank or other institutions concerned; any other assets valued at over $7,500 excluding household and personal effects; any other substantial sources of income; and any other interests where a conflict of interest with a Member's public duties could foreseeably arise or be seen to arise.

1.22 Each Member must make disclosure to the Registrar of Members' Interests within 28 days of becoming a Member of either the House of Representatives or the Senate. In addition, a member of the House of Representatives must notify the Registrar within 28 days of any alteration to the interests disclosed, while a member of the Senate must disclose this information within 35 days of the alteration occurring. In both cases, the Register of Interests is laid before the relevant House. In both cases details of a Member's own interests are also made available for public inspection. However, in the case of the Senate, statements of the registrable interests of a senator's spouse or partner or of any dependent children are kept confidential except where the Committee of Senators' Interests considers that a conflict of interest arises, at which time that committee may table a declaration.

1.23 Any Member of either House who fails to provide a required statement of interests or to notify an alteration in those interests or who knowingly provides false or misleading information to the Registrar of Members' Interests is guilty of a serious contempt of the House of Representatives or the Senate, as the case may be, and is dealt with by the House accordingly. The House's power to punish includes reprimand and suspension from the service of the House for a period of time.

Ad Hoc Disclosure

1.24 As mentioned, Australian Parliamentarians are not obliged to make an ad hoc declaration of interests. However they are advised to declare at committee meetings any interests where there may be, or may be perceived to be, a possible conflict of interest.

1.25 Ministers must ensure that they declare any private interests held by them or members of their families which give rise to, or are likely to give rise to, a conflict with their public duties. In particular, Minister must, in relation to the matters under discussion in Cabinet or a committee of the Cabinet, declare any private interests, pecuniary or non-pecuniary, held by them or members of their immediate family of which they are aware, which give rise to, or are likely to give rise to, a conflict with their public duties.

Further Regulation

1.26 A Member may not vote on a matter in which he or she has a direct pecuniary interest, other than matters of public policy. While the term “pecuniary interest” is not defined it appears to be restricted to a pecuniary interest which is personal to the Member and is not shared with the general public. A member is not permitted to sit on a committee if he or she has a direct pecuniary interest in a matter before that Committee.

1.27 Interests held by Ministers are subject to relatively strict regulation pursuant to the Standards of Ministerial Ethics (2007).

CANADA

1.28 At federal level, Canadian efforts to regulate conflicts of interest are rooted in particular in the Conflict of Interest Act which applies to public officeholders. Members of the Canadian House of Commons are regulated by the Conflict of Interest Code for Members of the House of Commons, while Members of the Senate are regulated by the Conflict of Interest Code for the Senate.

PUBLIC OFFICEHOLDERS

1.29 For the purpose of the Conflict of Interest Act, the term “public officeholder” includes: Ministers, members of ministerial staff, ministerial advisors, Governor in Council appointees serving on Crown corporations, agencies, boards and commissions; and some ministerial appointees. That act provides for the identification of conflicts of interest through disclosure as well as a number of other measures designed to further regulate such conflicts.

Disclosure

1.30 A “reporting public office holder” must provide a confidential report to the Conflicts of Interest and Ethics Commissioner setting out details of various interests specified in the Conflict of Interest Act.¹ A reporting public office holder must also make a number of other disclosures relating to; certain assets, liabilities, outside activities, gifts and offers of outside employment as well as the acceptance of such offers. In addition, a public office holder is required to recuse him or herself in situations where he or she has a conflict of interest and must then disclose the reason for his or her recusal.

1.31 The term “reporting public office holder” refers to, inter alia: a public office holder who is a minister of the Crown, minister of state or parliamentary secretary; a ministerial advisor or staff member; as well as certain Governor in Council or ministerial appointees.²

Confidential Report

1.32 All reporting public office holders must provide a confidential report setting out certain interests specified in the Conflict of Interest Act.³ A minister of the Crown, minister of state or parliamentary secretary must also make reasonable efforts to include in that report information relating to interests held by his or her family members.⁴

1.33 The confidential report must contain a description of:⁵ all the reporting public officeholder’s assets and an estimate of their value; all his or her direct and contingent liabilities, including the amount of each liability; all income received by the reporting public office holder during the 12 months before the day of appointment and all income he or she is entitled to receive in the 12 months after the day of appointment; any employments or occupations in which the reporting public officeholder was engaged in the two-year period prior to the day of appointment; a description of his or her involvement in philanthropic, charitable or non-commercial activities in the two year period before the day of appointment; and all of the reporting public officeholder’s activities as trustee, executor or liquidator of a succession or holder of a power of attorney in the two year period prior to the day of appointment. It must also contain any information that the Commissioner considers necessary to ensure that the reporting public officeholder is in compliance with the Conflict of Interest Act.

1.34 In addition, the reporting public officeholder must include in the report a description of all benefits that he or she, any member of his or her family or any partnership or private corporation in which he or she or a member of his or her family has an interest is entitled to receive during the 12 months after the day of appointment, as a result of a contract with a public sector entity and the report must include a description of the subject-matter and nature of the contract.⁶

⁶ Conflict of Interest Act, s. 22(4)

1.35 A reporting public office holder must submit his or her confidential report to the Commission within 60 days of being appointed as a public office holder.⁷ If there is any material change in any matter covered in the report, the reporting office holder must report that change within 30 days.⁸

Public Declarations

1.36 A reporting public office holder must publicly declare certain types of interests within 120 days after the day he or she is appointed as public officeholder, namely; certain assets, liabilities and outside activities.

1.37 A reporting public officeholder must make a public declaration of all his or her assets save those that are either controlled assets or exempt assets.⁹ Controlled assets are essentially assets whose value could be directly or indirectly affected by government decisions or policy. Generally, reporting public officeholders must divest such assets. Exempt assets are assets and interests in assets for the private use of public officeholders and the members of their family and assets that are not of a commercial character. Although a reporting public officeholder need not declare controlled or exempt assets he or she must disclose those assets to the Conflict of Interest and Ethics Commissioner.

1.38 Where a reporting public officeholder is a director or officer in a Crown corporation or in an organization of a philanthropic, charitable or non-commercial character, he or she must publicly declare that fact.¹⁰ However, a public officeholder may only hold such a position if the Conflict of Interest and Ethics Commissioner is of the opinion that it is not incompatible with his or her public duties as a public office holder.¹¹

1.39 A reporting public office holder must also make public disclosure of gifts valued at more than $200 received from someone other than a relative or friend, within 30 days of accepting the gift or advantage.¹² Similar rules apply to the acceptance of travel save that there is no minimum value threshold.

1.40 A minister of the Crown, minister of state or parliamentary secretary must make a public declaration with respect to all his or her liabilities of $10,000 or more that provides sufficient detail to identify the source and nature of the liability, but not the amount.¹³ The declaration must be made within 120 days of the person's appointment.

1.41 In addition to the above disclosures, public officeholders must also provide the Commissioner with a summary statement setting out, inter alia, information regarding the reporting public office holder's controlled assets and each matter in respect of which the Commissioner has order a reporting public office holder to recuse him or herself.¹⁴

1.42 The Conflict of Interest Act also contains a number of provisions designed to regulate conflicts of interest. Specifically, public officeholders are prohibited from using insider information for improper purposes or from using their official position to seek to influence a decision of another person for such purposes. In addition, both a public officeholder and his or her family members are prohibited from accepting any gift or other advantage that might reasonably be seen to have been given to influence the officeholder in the exercise of his or her official duties. Moreover, a minister of the Crown, minister of state, or parliamentary secretary may not knowingly be party to a contract with a public sector entity under which he or she receives a benefit. Similarly, such persons are prohibited from having interests in a partnership or private company that is party with a public sector entity under which the partnership or corporation receives a benefit. A public officeholder is also prohibited from entering into a contract or employment relationship with his or her spouse, common-law partner, child, sibling or parent, in the exercise of his or her official powers, duties and functions. However, this prohibition does not apply to the appointment of ministerial staff or advisors. Moreover, public officeholders who are responsible for a particular public entity may not permit that entity to enter in a contract or employment relationship with such persons.

1.43 The Conflict of Interest Act contains a number of rules regulating post-employment on the part of former public office holders including a prohibition on taking improper advantage of a previously held public office as well as disclosure requirements.

1.44 Infringements of the Conflict of Interest Act are investigated by the Conflict of Interest and Ethics Commissioner appointed under the Parliament of Canada Act. The Commissioner has extensive powers of investigation including the power to compel the attendance of witness and the production of documents and other things. On conclusion of an investigation, the Commissioner must provide the Prime Minister with a report setting out the facts in question as well as the Commissioner's analysis and conclusions. A failure to comply with the various reporting requirements may also result in an administrative monetary penalty.

SENATORS

1.45 As mentioned, conflicts of interest on the part of Senators are by and large regulated by the Conflict of Interest Code for Senators. That code provides for both periodic and ad hoc declarations of interest as well as containing a number of provisions designed to further regulate conflicts of interest.

Periodic Disclosure

1.46 Each Senator must file a confidential statement disclosing information including the following:¹⁵ any corporations, income trusts and trade unions in which the Senator is a director or officer and any partnerships in which the Senator is a partner; any associations and not-for-profit organizations in which the Senator is a director, officer or patron, including memberships on advisory boards and any honorary positions; the nature but not the amount of any source of income over $2,000 that the Senator has received in the preceding 12 months and is likely to receive during the next 12 months; the source, nature and value of any contracts or other business arrangements with the Government of Canada or a federal agency or body that: (a) the Senator has directly, or through a subcontract; (b) the Senator has by virtue of a partnership or a significant interest in a private corporation that the Senator is able to ascertain by making reasonable inquiries; and (c) a member of the Senator's family has, directly or through a subcontract, or by virtue of a partnership or a significant interest in a private corporation that the Senator is able to ascertain by making reasonable inquiries; information regarding the nature but not the value of any assets and liabilities over $10,000 and any additional information that the Senator believes to be relevant to the conflicts of interests code.

1.47 Senators are not obliged to disclose; properties used by the Senator or family members as residences; mortgages or hypothecs on such residences; household goods; personal effects; deposits with a financial institution; guaranteed investment certificates; financial instruments issued by any Canadian government or agency; and obligations incurred for living expenses that will be discharged in the ordinary course of the Senator's affairs.

1.48 A Senator must file the confidential statement within 120 days of being summoned to the Senate and thereafter annually.¹⁶ In addition, a Senator must report in writing any material change to the information relating to the confidential disclosure statement to the Senate Ethics Officer within 60 days after the change.¹⁷

¹⁶ Conflict of Interest Code for Senators, s. 27(1) and (3)

¹⁷ Conflict of Interest Code for Senators, s. 28(4)

1.49 The Senate Ethics Officer prepares a public disclosure summary based on each Senator's confidential disclosure statement which that officer submits to the Senate for review.¹⁸ Much of the above information is included in that statement.¹⁹ However, a Senator's income, assets and liabilities are only disclosed in so far as the Senate Ethics Officer has determined that it could relate to that Senator's parliamentary duties and functions or could otherwise be relevant. Moreover, the value of contracts or other business arrangements with the Government of Canada or a federal agency or body is also excluded from the public disclosure statement.

1.50 As well as containing details from a Senator's confidential disclosure statement, the public disclosure summary also lists any ad hoc declarations of interest made by a Senator, any disclosure statements filed in relation to gifts and sponsored travel and any statements of material change relating to the contents of the summary.

Ad Hoc Disclosure

1.51 The Conflict of Interest Code for Senators provides for three forms of ad hoc disclosure relating to: 1) private interests; 2) gifts; and 3) other benefits.

1.52 A Senator must declare any private interest held by the Senator or a family member where that interest might be affected in any circumstances involving the Senator's parliamentary duties and functions.²⁰ The term "private interests" includes: assets; liabilities, the acquisition of a financial interest; income from a contract, a business or a profession; employment income; a directorship or holding an office in a corporation, association, trade-union or not-for-profit organization; a partnership.²¹

1.53 As mentioned above, the declaration is published and filed with the Senator's public disclosure summary. Where a Senator makes a declaration of private interests, he or she may not participate in debate or any other deliberations with respect to that matter.²² In addition, where the declaration regards a matter which is before a committee, the Senator must withdraw from the committee for the duration of the proceedings.²³ Where a Senator makes an ad hoc disclosure in relation to a matter, he or she may not vote on that matter.²⁴

²² Conflicts of Interest Code for Senators, s. 13(1)

²³ Conflicts of Interest Code for Senators, s. 13(2) and (3)

²⁴ Conflicts of Interest Code for Senators, s. 14

1.54 A Senator must also disclose gifts or other benefits. Specifically, while a senator and a family member may accept a gift of other benefit received as a normal expression of courtesy or protocol, or within the customary standards of hospitality that normally accompany the Senator's position, he or she must file a disclosure statement with the Senate Ethics Officer where the gift exceeds $500 in value.²⁵ That statement must disclose the nature and value of the gift or other benefits, their source and the circumstances under which they were given. It must be filed within 30 days of receipt of the gift or benefit. A Senator must similarly disclose sponsored travel that arises from or relates to the Senator's position if the costs exceed $500 and are not paid either personally by the Senator or by other specified bodies.²⁶ That statement must disclose: the name of the person or organization paying for the trip; the destination or destinations; its purpose and length of the trip; whether or not any guest was also sponsored; and the general nature of the benefits received.²⁷

Further Regulation

1.55 The Conflict of Interest Code for Senators also contains a number of other provisions which further regulate conflicts of interest. Specifically, a Senator, when performing parliamentary duties and functions, must not act or attempt to act in any way to further his or her private interests or those of a family member, or to improperly further another person's or entity's private interests.²⁸ In addition, a Senator must not use his position as Senator to influence a decision of another person so as to further those private interests.²⁹ Moreover, a Senator may not use confidential information or convey that information to other persons for such purposes.³⁰

1.56 The term "furthering private interests" is defined to mean any actions taken by a Senator for the purpose of achieving, directly or indirectly any of the following: an increase in, or the preservation of, the value of the person's or entity's assets; the elimination, or reduction in the amount, of the person's or entity's liabilities; the acquisition of a financial interest by the person or entity; any increase in the person's or entity's income from a contract, a business or a profession; an increase in the person's income from employment; the person becoming a director or officer in a corporation, association, trade union or not-for-profit organization; or the person becoming a partner in a partnership. However, a Senator is not considered to further his own or another's private interests if the matter in question is of general application or affects the Senator or the other person or entity as one of a broad class of the public.³¹

1.57 Gifts and other benefits are also subject to further regulation. Specifically, a Senator and/or his or her family members is prohibited from accepting, directly or indirectly, any gift or other benefit, that could reasonably be considered to relate to the Senator's position, except compensation authorized by law.³² Gifts or other benefits received as a normal expression of courtesy or protocol, or within the customary standards of hospitality that normally accompany the Senator's position are excepted from this prohibition, but as mentioned above, must be disclosed.³³

1.58 Furthermore, a Senator must obtain the written permission of the Senate Ethics Officer to be party to a government contract or any federal agency or body under which the Senator receives a benefit.³⁴ Such permission will only be forthcoming where the contract or other business arrangement is: a) due to special circumstances, in the public interest; or b) unlikely to affect the Senator's obligations under the Code. Similar obligations apply where a Senator has an interest in a partnership or in a private corporation that is a party to such a contract.³⁵

1.59 These rules do not apply to a contract or other business arrangement that existed before a Senator's appointment to the Senate, but they do apply to its renewal or extension.³⁶

1.60 A Senator is also prohibited from taking any action that has as its purpose the evasion of his or her obligations under the Code.³⁷

Enforcement

1.61 The Conflicts of Interest Code is enforced by a Senate Committee designated or established for the purposes of the Code and the Senate Ethics Officer.³⁸ That Officer is an independent officer and while he or she carries out his or her duties and functions under the general direction of the Committee, he or she is independent in interpreting and applying the Code as it relates to an individual Senator's particular circumstances.³⁹

1.62 The Senate Ethics Officer is responsible for carrying out investigations into possible instances of non-compliance with the Code, either at the Committee's request or on receipt of a complaint from a Senator but subject to the Committee's approval.⁴⁰ In carrying out an inquiry, the Senate Ethics Officer may send for persons, papers, things and records.⁴¹ Once the inquiry is complete, the Senate Ethics Officer reports confidentially in writing to the Committee.⁴² That Committee must then consider the report and, in doing so, may conduct an investigation or, direct that the Senate Ethics Officer's inquiry be continued. Once the Committee has considered the report and finds that the complaint is founded, it must then report to the Senate and may recommend that the Senator be ordered to take specific action or be sanctioned.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

1.63 Conflicts of Interests in the Canadian House of Commons are regulated by the Conflict of Interest Code for Members of the House of Commons. Like the Conflicts of Interest Code for Senators, it requires Members to make both periodic and ad hoc disclosures of interest as well as further regulating certain types of conflicts. There are strong similarities between the two codes.

Periodic Disclosure

1.64 Each Member must make an annual confidential disclosure statement setting out his or her private interests and those of his or her family members.⁴³

1.65 In that statement, the Member must;⁴⁴

- identify the value of each asset or liability which exceeds $10,000;
- state the amount and indicate the source of any income greater than $1,000 that the Member and his or her family members have received during the preceding 12 months and are entitled to receive during the next 12 months;
- disclose every trust known to the Member from which he or she could, currently or in the future, either directly or indirectly, derive a benefit or income;
- list the directorships or offices in a corporation, trade or professional association or trade union held by the Member or a member of his or her family or partnerships in which such persons or partners

- state all benefits that the Member and/or his or her family members have received during the previous 12 months or are entitled to receive in the next 12 months as a result of being a party, directly or through a sub-contract, to a contract with the Government of Canada and describe the subject-matter and nature of each such contract or subcontract.
- State all such benefits that any private corporation in which the Member or a member of his or her family has an interest has received in the previous 12 months or is entitled to receive in the next 12 months. The statement must include: information about the corporation's activities and sources of income; the names of any other corporations with which that corporation is affiliated; the names and addresses of all persons who have an interest in the corporation; and the real property or immovables owned by that corporation

1.66 The member must file a periodic disclosure statement within 60 days after being elected to the House of Commons and annually thereafter.⁴⁵ A member must file a statement reporting any material change in the information contained in that statement within 60 days of that change.⁴⁶

1.67 After receiving the confidential disclosure statements, the Conflict of Interest and Ethics Commissioner prepares a public disclosure statement which includes much of the information set out in the confidential disclosure statement.⁴⁷ Information which is not included in that statement includes; the value of the income, assets and liabilities disclosed in the confidential statement; real property or immovables that the Member uses as a principal residence or uses principally for recreational purposes; personal property or movable property that the Member uses primarily for transportation, household, educational, recreational, social or aesthetic purposes; cash on hand or on deposit with a financial institution that is entitled to accept deposits.

1.68 The public disclosure statement also includes certain ad hoc disclosures made by a Member.⁴⁸

Ad hoc Disclosure

1.69 As in the case of Senators, a Member of the House of Commons who has a private interest that might be affected by the Member's parliamentary duties and functions must disclose that interest at the first opportunity. He or she must also file a notice of that interest with the Commissioner.⁴⁹ The term “private interest” is defined in the same way for the purposes of this Code as it is for the Conflict of Interests Code for Senators.

1.70 Similar provisions apply to the disclosure of gifts, benefits and sponsored travel by Members of the House of Commons as apply for Senators.⁵⁰

Further Regulation

1.71 As well as requiring the disclosure of certain types of interests, the Conflicts of Interest Code for Members of the House of Commons also contains provisions further regulating such interests.

1.72 A Member is generally prohibited from participating in a debate or voting on a question in which he or she has a private interest.⁵¹ Each member, as well as his or her family members, is prohibited from accepting, directly or indirectly, any gift or other benefit, except compensation authorized by law, that might reasonably be seen to have been given to influence the Member in the exercise of a duty or function of his or her office.⁵² This is subject to the exception that a Member or a member of his or her family may accept gifts or other benefits received as a normal expression of courtesy or protocol, or within the customary standards of hospitality that normally accompany the Member’s position.

1.73 In addition, Members are prohibited from being knowingly a party to contracts with the Canadian Government or any federal agency or body under which the Member receives a benefit.⁵³ They are also prohibited from having an interest in a partnership or in a private corporation that is a party to such a contract. These prohibitions do not apply to a contract that existed before the Member’s election to the House of Commons but they do apply to its renewal or extension.⁵⁴

1.74 Like Senators, Members must not, when performing their parliamentary functions, act in such a way as to further their own private interests or to improperly further those of another person or entity.⁵⁵ They are also prohibited from using their position as a Member to influence a decision of another person so as to further those interests.⁵⁶ Similarly, they may not

1.75 Members are also prohibited from taking any action for the purpose of circumventing their obligations under the Code.⁵⁸

Enforcement

1.76 The Code of Conduct for Members of the House of Commons is enforced by the Conflict of Interest and Ethics Commissioner who is appointed under the Parliament of Canada Act (the Commissioner). The Commissioner has an advisory, educative and investigative function under the Code.

1.77 The Commissioner may give advice to Members on the operation of the Code and is also charged with undertaking educational activities for Members and the general public regarding the Code and the Commissioner's role.⁵⁹

1.78 The Commissioner may commence an inquiry either on foot of a complaint or pursuant to a direction by the House.⁶⁰ The inquiry is carried out in private and the Commissioner reports to the Speaker of the House who then presents the report to the House.⁶¹ In the report, if the Commissioner considers that a Member has infringed the Code, he or she may recommend appropriate sanctions.

England

1.79 Ethical conduct in both the Houses of Parliament is governed by resolutions passed by those Houses, codes of conduct and guides to those codes. These codes and guides include: the Code of Conduct for Members of Parliament (2005); the Guide to the Rules relating to the Code of Members (2009)⁶²; the Code of Conduct for Members of the House of Lords (2009); the Guide to the Code of Conduct (2011).⁶³

1.80 The Code of Conduct for Members of Parliament and the Guide to the Rules relating to the Code of Members (2009) apply to Members of Parliament including Ministers of the Crown who are Members of the House of Commons.

However, those Ministers are also subject to further guidelines and requirements laid down in The Ministerial Code.

1.81 Members of Parliament are required to make both periodic and ad hoc disclosures of interest. Certain activities are also subject to further regulation.

Periodic Disclosure

1.82 Members must disclose their own interests on a periodic basis. In the case of certain interests they must also disclose interests held by a family member.

1.83 Interests subject to periodic disclosure are largely financial, and indeed the purpose of the Register of Interests “is to give public notification on a continuous basis of those financial interests held by Members which might be thought to influence their parliamentary conduct or actions.”⁶⁴

1.84 There are 12 categories of interests which must be disclosed, namely: (1) directorships; (2) remunerated employment, office, profession, etc; (3) clients; (4) sponsorships; (5) gifts, benefits, and hospitality; (6) overseas visits; (7) overseas benefits and gifts; (8) land and property; (9) shareholdings; (10) controlled transactions (loan and credit arrangements relating to political activities and the provision of security); (11) miscellaneous; (12) family members employed and remunerated through parliamentary allowance.

1.85 Directorships: Members must registered remunerated directorships in public and private companies.⁶⁵ A Member must also register any unremunerated directorships where the company or companies in question are associated with, or subsidiaries of, a company in which he or she holds a remunerated directorship. The term “remuneration” includes not only salaries and fees, but also the receipt of any taxable expenses, allowances, or benefits, such as the provision of a company car. Members must register the name of the company in which the directorship is held and give a broad indication of its business. They must also declare: the precise amount of each individual payment made in relation to any directorship; the nature of the work carried on in return for that payment; the number of hours worked during the period to which that payment relates; the name and address of the person, organization or company making that payment (except where disclosure of the information would be contrary to any legal or established professional duty of privacy or confidentiality).

⁶⁴ The Guide to the Rules relating to the Conduct of Members 2009, p. 10; see also p. 11

⁶⁵ The Guide to the Rules relating to the Conduct of Members 2009, p. 14

1.86 Remunerated employment, office, profession, etc: Under this category, Members must register the precise amount of each individual payment made, the nature of the work carried on in return for that payment, the number of hours worked during the period to which that payment relates and (except where disclosure of the information would be contrary to any legal or established professional duty of privacy or confidentiality) the name and address of the person, organization, or company making that payment.⁶⁶ The duty to disclose is subject to a de minimis requirement. This is set at 0.1% of a Member's salary for individual payments (£66) and 1% of a Member's salary for the cumulative total of payments from the same source in the same year (£666).

1.87 Shareholdings: Members must disclose shareholdings held by the Member, either personally, or with or on behalf of the Member's spouse or partner or dependent children, in any public or private company or other body which are: (a) greater than 15 per cent of the issued share capital of the company or body; or (b) 15% or less of the issued share capital, but greater in value than the current parliamentary salary. In each case, the Member must disclose the company's name, indicate briefly the nature of its business and make clear which of the registration criteria applies.⁶⁷

1.88 Miscellaneous: Under this category, Members must disclose any interest which does not fall within one of the other disclosure categories but are nevertheless relevant to the Register's purpose.⁶⁸

1.89 Members of Parliament are required to complete a registration form and submit it to the Commissioner within one month of their election to the House (whether at a general election or a by-election). After the initial publication of the Register, each Member must notify changes to their registrable interests within four weeks of each change occurring.

1.90 The Register is published under the authority of the Committee on Standards and Privileges in printed form after the beginning of a new Parliament and approximately annually thereafter. There is also an electronic version of the register which is updated regularly and is available on the House of Commons web-site.⁶⁹

⁶⁹ The Guide to the Rules relating to the Conduct of Members 2009, p. 18

Ad Hoc Disclosure

1.91 Members of the House of Commons must make ad hoc declarations of interest in the course of debate in the House as well as in other contexts.⁷⁰ The main purpose of such a declaration is:

*to ensure that Members of the House and the public are made aware, at the appropriate time when a Member is making a speech in the House or in Committee or participating in any other proceedings of the House, of any past, present or expected future financial interest, direct or indirect, which might reasonably be thought by others to be relevant to those proceedings.*⁷¹

1.92 The duty to make disclosure arises where a Member has any relevant financial interest in a matter at issue in a debate or proceeding of the House or its Committees or in transactions or communications which a Member may have with other Members or with Ministers or servants of the Crown. A financial interest is relevant if *“if might reasonably be thought by others to influence the speech, representation or communication in question.”*⁷² As well as current interests, Members are also required to declare both relevant past interests and relevant interests which they may be expecting to have.⁷³

1.93 Certain interests are excluded from the ad hoc disclosure requirements. Specifically, Members are not required to declare interests which have already been declared in the Register of Interests.⁷⁴ Nor must they declare interests common to all Members. For example, *“in a debate on employment law, Members are not required to declare any interest as employers of staff in relation to those employed wholly in connection with their parliamentary duties.”*⁷⁵

1.94 Certain interests are subject to further regulation. Generally, according to the Code of Conduct, Member must “base their conduct on a consideration of the public interest, avoid conflict between personal interest and the public interest and resolve any conflict between the two, at once, and in favour of the public interest.”⁷⁶

1.95 That code also regulates paid advocacy and the use of confidential information. Specifically, Members are banned from acting as a paid advocate in any proceedings of the House.⁷⁷ In addition, they must “bear in mind that information which they receive in confidence in the course of their parliamentary duties should be used only in connection with those duties, and that such information must never be used for the purpose of financial gain.”⁷⁸

ENFORCEMENT

1.96 The Code of Conduct and associated rules are enforced by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards.

1.97 Enforcement is complaint driven and both Members and Members of the public may make a complaint regarding possible non-compliance with the rules. Complaints must be in writing and may not be made anonymously.⁷⁹ However they may concern both present and past Members.

1.98 If after enquiry, the Commissioner finds that there has been a breach of the rules of the House, or that the complaint has raised issues of wider importance, he will normally report the facts and his conclusions to the Committee. On specific complaints for which the Commissioner has concluded that there has been a breach of the rules, and the Committee agrees with that conclusion, it may make recommendations to the House on whether further action is required.

HOUSE OF LORDS

1.99 As in the case of Members of Parliament, Members of the House of Lords are required to make both periodic and ad hoc disclosures of interest. Certain activities are also subject to further regulation.

Periodic Disclosure

1.100 Members of the House of Lords must declare their own “relevant interests”. In certain instances they must also declare interests held by their spouse and/or dependent children.⁸⁰

1.101 “Relevant Interests” may be financial or non-financial. The overall purpose of the Register of Lords’ Interests is

⁷⁷ Code of Conduct for Members of Parliament Para 10; see also The Guide to the Rules relating to the Conduct of Members 2009, p. 34

⁷⁸ Code of Conduct for Members of Parliament, Para 13

⁷⁹ The Guide to the Rules relating to the Conduct of Members 2009, p 40

⁸⁰ Code of Conduct for Members of the House of Lords, paragraph 10

To assist in openness and accountability by enabling Members to make clear what are the interests that might be thought by a reasonable Member of the public to influence their actions, speeches or votes in Parliament, or actions taken in their capacity as Members of the House of Lords.⁸¹

1.102 The registration form specifies 10 categories of registrable interests which Members must disclose. Generally, interests below £500 in value need not be registered unless: a) they fall into a category of non financial interests for which registration is mandatory; or b) they could be thought by a reasonable member of the public to affect the way in which a Member of the House of Lords discharges his or her parliamentary duties.⁸²

1.103 The 10 categories of mandatory registrable interests are: (1) directorships; (2) remunerated employment etc; (3) public affairs advice and services to clients; (4) shareholdings; (5) land and property; (6) sponsorship; (7) overseas visits; (8) gifts, benefits and hospitality; (9) miscellaneous financial interests; and (10) non-financial interests. There is a significant overlap between these categories of disclosure and those which apply to Members of the House of Parliament, albeit there are also some differences.

1.104 Members of the House of Lords must complete a registration form and submit it to the Registrar of Lords' Interests within one month of taking their seat. Thereafter, Members must notify any changes to those interests within one month of any such change occurring.⁸³

1.105 Members must also declare when speaking in the House, or communicating with ministers or public servants, any interest which is a relevant interest in the context of the debate or the matter under discussion.⁸⁴ As is clear from its wording, the duty to make an ad hoc disclosure only arises where a member decides to speak in the House or communicate with a Minister or public servants. It is therefore ultimately subject to the member making such a decision.

1.106 The term "speaking in the House" covers Members' participation in the work of Select Committees. The term "public servants" includes: servants of the Crown, civil servants, employees of government agencies or non-departmental public bodies, and Members, officers and employees of local authorities or other governmental bodies.⁸⁵

1.107 The test for relevant interest is whether the interest might be thought by a reasonable member of the public to influence the way in which a Member of the House of Lords discharges his or her duties in respect of the particular matter under discussion.⁸⁶ Relevant interests include future interests, namely *“interests where a Member’s expectation has passed beyond vague hope or aspiration and reached the stage where there is a clear prospect that the interest will shortly arise.”*⁸⁷

1.108 According to their Code of Conduct, Members of the House of Lords must base their actions on consideration of the public interest and resolve any conflict between that interest and their personal interest(s) in favour of the public interest.⁸⁸

1.109 While Members are not required to recuse themselves from proceedings in which they have a conflict of interest, their Code of Conduct advises them to be *“especially cautious in deciding whether to speak or vote in relation to interests that are direct, pecuniary and shared with few others.”*⁸⁹ Where a Member has an interest which goes to the heart of the subject of an inquiry being conducted by a Select Committee, they must *“consider carefully whether to take part in that inquiry.”*⁹⁰

1.110 The House of Lords Commissioner for Standards is responsible for the independent and impartial investigation of alleged breaches of the House of Lords Code of Conduct, including the conflict of interest provisions. The first Commissioner was appointed in 2010, as part of the wider reforms of governance structures in the House of Lords to ensure they meet public expectations of clarity, transparency and integrity. The Commissioner is an officer of the House of Lords.⁹¹

1.111 The Commissioner may commence an investigation either on the basis of a complaint or on its own initiative. Complaints must be made within 4 years of the conduct complained of and must be supported by sufficient information to establish a prima facie breach of the Code of Conduct.⁹² They must be in writing and the Commissioner does not accept complaints submitted by telephone or email.⁹³ He or she will only consider either anonymous or confidential complaints where he or she considers there to be good reason to do so.⁹⁴

1.112 The Commissioner may only commence an investigation on his or her own initiative with the agreement of the Sub-Committee on Lords' Conduct.⁹⁵

1.113 When conducting an investigation, the Commissioner must establish the facts of a case and report these, along with his conclusions as to whether or not there has been a breach of the Code to the Sub-Committee on Lords' Conduct.⁹⁶ The Committee for Privileges and Conduct and its Sub-Committee on Lords' Conduct have the power to send for persons, papers and records and may exercise this power as necessary in support of any investigation by the Commissioner.

1.114 The Sub-Committee considers the Commissioner's report and must report it without amendment to the Committee for Privileges, with or without comments. If the Commissioner finds that there has been a breach of the Code, the Sub-Committee must recommend any appropriate action that the Member should take to regularize the position and any sanction that the House should apply.⁹⁷ This may include suspension from the House for a specified period of time not longer than the remainder of the current parliament.⁹⁸

1.115 The Member, but not the complainant, has a right of appeal from the Commissioner and Sub-Committee, first to the Committee for Privileges and Conduct and then to the House.⁹⁹

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN – RECOMMENDATIONS

Political Finance Law

1.01 The purpose of this section is to give an overview of measures aimed at regulating political finance both internationally and in the following jurisdictions: Canada, England and the U.S.A. As in the case of the annex on conflicts of interests, it focuses on those measures which are of most relevance to the Tribunal's recommendations. Again, these are not the only measures considered by the Tribunal for the purpose of its recommendations

INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS

1.02 The UN and the Council of Europe as well as several NGOs have developed either minimum or best practice standards for dealing with political finance.

THE UN

1.03 Article 7 of the United Nations Convention against Corruption ("UNCAC") requires each State Party to:

consider taking appropriate legislative and administrative measures, consistent with the objectives of this Convention and in accordance with the fundamental principles of its domestic law, to enhance transparency in the funding of candidatures for elected public office and, where applicable, the funding of political parties.

1.04 Although this provision is both optional and vague, further guidance as to what is envisaged by the UN is given in a document published by the International Foundation for Electoral Systems entitled "Political Finance Regulation: the Global Experience" (the "IFES document"). This document seeks to clarify and define the provisions in UNCAC which address transparency in political finance both within the context of that Convention and the emerging set of global standards and best practice in political finance. Its development was supported by the UN. The UN's Guide for Anti-Corruption Policies (2003) and its Anti-Corruption Toolkit (2004) also contain guidance on regulating political finance.

THE COUNCIL OF EUROPE

1.05 The Council of Europe has adopted several measures setting out comprehensive standards for the regulation of political finance. Of these the most extensive are those contained in Recommendation (2003)⁴ of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on common rules against corruption in the funding of political parties and electoral campaigns. This instrument is:

the culmination of extensive exploratory, analytical and political work of different Council of Europe bodies, which has progressively led to the adoption of common standards for the setting up of transparent systems for the funding of political parties in an effort to prevent corruption.¹

1.05 Moreover, the Council of Europe's view of best practice in the area of political finance is further clarified by a key document, published by the Council of Europe, entitled "Financing Political Parties and election campaigns – guidelines" (the "Council of Europe Guidelines"). These guidelines are predominantly based on Council of Europe documents and are to be thought of as a compendium of Council of Europe instruments on the financing of political parties and public control of political finance.²

1.06 Other relevant measures include: the Council of Europe's Parliamentary Assembly's Recommendation on the Financing of Political Parties (2001); the Congress of Local and Regional Authorities Resolution 105(2000) on the financial transparency of political parties and democratic functioning at regional level; and Recommendation 86(2000) on the financial transparency of political parties and democratic functioning at regional level. The Council of Europe's advisory body on constitutional matters, the European Commission for democracy through law (the "Venice Commission") has also published a number of documents dealing with political finance and in particular: Guidelines and Report on the Financing of Political Parties (2001); and Opinion on the prohibition of financial contributions to political parties from foreign sources (2006).

SELECTED JURISDICTIONS

1.07 As mentioned, the Tribunal also considered measures regulating political finance in a number of selected jurisdictions, including Canada, England and the U.S.A..

CANADA

1.08 In Canada, at federal level, campaign finance is regulated by the Canada Elections Act (CEA), as amended. The CEA restricts both the source and amount of “contributions”, imposes electoral expenditure limits; requires the disclosure of both contributions and expenditure and provides for public funding.

1.09 This overview focuses on the application of the campaign finance provisions to political parties and candidates in federal elections. A person becomes a candidate from the time he or she accepts a contribution or incurs an electoral campaign expense.³

1.10 Both political parties and candidates must appoint an agent and an auditor under the CEA. Specifically, a political party must appoint a chief agent and may also appoint one or more other registered agent(s). A candidate must appoint an official agent and auditor.⁴ In both cases, the chief agent or official agent, as the case may be, is responsible for administering the party’s or candidate’s financial transactions.

Registration

1.11 Political parties may register with Elections Canada. While registration is voluntary, it brings a number of benefits. These include; the right to have the party name printed on the ballot next to the name of their candidates; the reimbursement of up to 50% of election expenses and an entitlement to free and paid broadcasting time.

1.12 Candidates entering the electoral competition must register locally with returning officers. Once registered, they have access to similar benefits as registered parties including the right to accept contributions and to have up to 60% of their election expenses reimbursed.

Contribution restrictions

1.13 The Canada Elections Act (the “CEA”), restricts both the source and amount of both monetary and non monetary contributions. Only a registered agent (or authorised person) may accept a contribution to a registered political party⁵ and only an official agent is authorised to accept a contribution to a candidate.⁶ An agent must issue a receipt for each contribution of more than $20 that he or she accepts.⁷

⁵ Canada Elections Act, s. 416(1)

⁷ Canada Elections Act, s. 404.4(1)

1.14 Only individuals who are Canadian citizens or permanent residents may make contributions to a candidate or registered party.⁸ A contribution made by a trust fund is treated as a contribution from the trustee, who must therefore be a citizen or permanent resident.

1.15 Where a political party or candidate receives an anonymous contribution the relevant agent must forward it to the Chief Electoral Officer.⁹ An anonymous contribution is: a) a contribution exceeding $20 for which a registered agent does not have the contributor's name; or b) a contribution exceeding $200 for which the agent does not have the contributor's name or addressor. Cash donations in excess of $20 are also prohibited.¹⁰

1.16 In general, an individual may contribute $1,200 (adjusted for inflation) in a calendar year to each registered party and the same amount to a candidate or candidates of a registered party.¹¹ This is an aggregate cap. In other words, an individual may not contribute more than $2,400 to a registered party and its candidates in any given year. An individual may give up to $1,200 per election to a candidate who is not a candidate of a registered party.

1.17 Money used by a candidate which comes from his or her own funds is considered to be a contribution for the purposes of the CEA, although a higher cap applies.¹² Specifically, a candidate may contribute to his or her own campaign as an individual and may also donate extra money as long as the sum donated does not exceed $1,000 (this sum is not adjusted for inflation).¹³ In sum, therefore, a candidate may contribute up to $2,200 to his or her own campaign.

1.18 The individual making the contribution is responsible for complying with the controls on contributions. An individual who either fails to take reasonable care not to make a contribution when ineligible to do so, or who knowingly (which includes acting recklessly) makes a contribution when ineligible, has committed an offence.¹⁴ It is also an offence for an individual to wilfully make a contribution larger than permitted.¹⁵

1.19 Where a political party or candidate receives an ineligible contribution, the party's chief agent or the candidate's official agent, as the case may be, must either return it or forward it to the Chief Electoral Officer.¹⁶ It is an offence for the agent to fail to comply with these requirements. It is also an offence for an agent to fail to issue a receipt for a contribution.

1.20 Indirect contributions are prohibited.¹⁷ Specifically, it is an offence for an individual to make a contribution to a registered party or to a candidate from the money, property or services of another person or entity if that other person or entity gave it to the individual to make a political contribution. It is also an offence for a person or entity to conceal the source of a contribution.

1.21 The CEA prohibits circumventing or attempting to circumvent the eligibility requirements for making contributions, the contribution limits for cash donations or the contribution limits established for individuals.¹⁸ Acting in collusion with another person or entity for the purpose of circumventing a limit or prohibition, or concealing the source of a contribution is also prohibited by the CEA.¹⁹

1.22 These anti-avoidance provisions are aimed at preventing schemes or arrangements that, although not expressly prohibited, are intended to avoid contribution or disclosure rules or will have that effect.

1.23 Specific rules regulate the receipt of gifts during the electoral period. In particular, a candidate is prohibited from accepting any gift or other advantage that might reasonably be seen to have been given to influence him or her in the performance of his or her duties and functions as a member, were the candidate to be elected.²⁰ However, candidates may accept a gift or other advantage that is given by a relative as a normal expression or courtesy or protocol, subject to disclosure requirements.

Expenditure

1.24 Canada restricts electoral expenditure on the part of political parties and election candidates. The CEA defines an election expense to include any cost incurred, or non-monetary contribution received, by a registered party or a candidate, to the extent that the property or service for which the cost was incurred, or the non-monetary contribution received, is used to directly promote or oppose a registered party, its leader or a candidate during an election period.²¹

²⁰ Canada Elections Act, s. 92.2

1.25 Only a candidate's official agent is entitled to pay expenses in relation to the candidate's electoral campaign.²²

1.26 Electoral expenditure limits are based on factors which include the number of electors and the population density of constituencies in which they are running.

1.27 Limits on election spending by registered political parties are determined by multiplying $0.70 (adjusted for inflation) by the number of electors in a particular electoral district.²³

1.28 Limits on election spending by candidates are also determined on the basis of the numbers of electors in a particular district. The limit is calculated according to a sliding scale and determined by multiplying: $2.07 (adjusted for inflation) by the first 15,000 electors, $1.04 for each of the next 10,000 electors; and $0.52 for each of the remaining electors.²⁴

1.29 Where an expense of $50 or more is incurred under the CEA by or on behalf of a registered party or candidate, the person authorised under the act to pay that expense must keep a copy of the invoice to which it relates and proof that it was paid.²⁵ Where an expense of less than $50 was incurred in this way, the person who made the payment must keep a record of the nature of the expense together with proof that it was paid.²⁶

1.30 It is an offence to fail to document payment, exceed election expense limits or for a registered party or candidate to collude with a third party to circumvent election expense limits.²⁷

Disclosure

1.31 The CEA imposes extensive financial disclosure requirements on registered parties and election candidates.

Registered Parties

1.32 Within 6 months of the date of its registration, a registered party must file a statement of the party's assets and liabilities and the auditor's report on that statement with Elections Canada.²⁸

1.33 In addition, within 6 months of the end of its fiscal period, a registered party must file the Registered Party Financial Transactions Return, together with the auditor's report.²⁹ That information disclosed in that return includes:³⁰

- The total contributions received by the registered party and the number of contributors
- the name and address of any contributor who makes an aggregate contribution to the registered party in excess of $200 and the amount and date on which the contribution was received
- any anonymous contributions accepted by the party
- A statement of the registered party's assets and liabilities
- A statement of the registered party's revenue and expenses
- the source of any loan received by the party and the amount of the principal, including the name and address of the lender, the name of the guarantor and any conditions on the loan
- A statement of contributions received by the registered party but returned in whole or in part to the contributors or otherwise dealt with in accordance with the CEA.

1.34 Registered parties that are eligible for quarterly allowances must file a Registered Party Financial Transactions Quarterly Return within 30 days at the end of the fiscal quarter to which it relates.³¹ That return must contain the same information regarding contributions as that listed above.

1.35 Within 6 months of election day for a general election, the chief agent of a registered party must send to the Chief Electoral Officer: a Registered Party Return in Respect of General Election Expenses; an auditor's report on the return; and a declaration by the chief agent concerning those election expenses.³² The election expenses return must set out each of the election expenses incurred by the registered party for the general election.

1.36 A registered party which fails to provide statement of assets and liabilities or related documents maybe deregistered.³³

1.37 It is an offence of the chief agent of a registered party to fail to provide or to provide an incomplete financial transactions return, quarterly return, election expenses return or related documents.³⁴

Candidates

1.38 Candidates must file a Candidate's Electoral Campaign Return, a Candidate's Statement of Personal Expenses and a Candidate's Statement of gifts or other advantages.³⁵

1.39 The Candidate's Electoral Campaign Return must be sent within 4 months of an election day.³⁶ It includes information on both contributions and expenses.

1.40 In so far as contributions are concerned, it must list all contributions received from individuals including:

- the date each contribution was received
- the individual's name and address
- the amount of all aggregated money and non-monetary contributions over $200
- the amount and number of all monetary and non-monetary contributions of $200 or less
- the amount and approximate number of anonymous monetary and non-monetary contributions of $20 or less
- details of operating loans including the lender's name and address, the date, the interest rate and the principal of the loan
- the names and address of contributors, and the amount of the contribution which were returned to the donor or remitted to the Chief Electoral Officer

1.41 The return must also list all the candidate's electoral campaign expenses by date including: the supplier's name; the cheque and voucher numbers; the amount paid; the non-monetary contribution received or the amount unpaid; a classification of the expense by nature and its commercial value.

1.42 The candidate must submit his or her Candidate's Statement of Personal Expenses to his or her official agent within three months of the election day.³⁷ This statement must include all personal expenses and expenses of representatives present at polling stations that were paid by the candidate and not reimbursed by the official agent. The agent then files that statement.

³⁷ Canada Elections Act, s. 456

1.43 If a candidate accepts gifts or other advantages during the period of his candidacy, he or she must provide a statement to the Chief Electoral Officer concerning those gifts or other advantages if their benefit to the candidate exceeds $500.³⁸ A candidate is not required to report gifts or other advantages given by a relative. The candidate must set out:

- The nature of each gift or other advantage, its commercial value, and cost, if any, to the candidate
- The name and address of the person or entity giving the gift or other advantage
- The circumstances under which the gift or other advantage was given.

1.44 The statement must be provided to the Chief Electoral Officer within 4 months after election day.³⁹

1.45 It is an offence for a candidate to fail to provide a statement within the required period, to provide an incomplete statement or to provide a statement which contains false or misleading information.⁴⁰

Public Funding

1.46 There are three forms of public funding in the Canadian political finance regime: tax deductions for contributors; reimbursement of election expenses for candidates and political parties; and political party allowances.

1.47 Those who contribute money to political parties are entitled to tax credits as follows: 75% of the first $400; 50% of the next $350 and 33.33% of the amount over $750

1.48 A candidate who receives 10% of the vote is entitled to be reimbursed 60% of his or her election expenses. A political party which receives 2% of the national popular vote or at least 5% of the votes in the electoral districts in which it endorsed candidates is entitled to be reimbursed 50% of its election expenses.⁴¹

1.49 Political parties which qualify for reimbursement of election expenses also qualify for a quarterly allowance determined by the number of votes cast for the party in the last general election.⁴²

Monitoring and enforcement

1.50 Enforcement of the campaign finance laws falls to the Chief Electoral Officer, who is appointed by the Cabinet following a resolution of the House of Commons and can only be removed by a joint resolution of the House of Commons and the Senate. The CEO heads Elections Canada, which is an independent non-partisan agency of Parliament and whose tasks include oversight of the campaign finance laws.

1.51 The Chief Electoral Officer appoints the Commissioner of Canada Elections, an independent officer whose role includes ensuring that the Canada Elections Act is complied with and enforced. The Commissioner may commence an investigation pursuant to a complaint.

1.52 During an election period, if there is evidence that a serious breach of the CEA may compromise the fairness of the electoral process, the Commissioner may, taking into account the public interest, apply to a court for an injunction ordering the person in question to comply with the law. The Commissioner may also conclude a compliance agreement with anyone the Commission has reasonable grounds to believe has committed, is about to commit or is likely to commit an offence. This is a voluntary agreement between the Commissioner and the person, in which the person agrees to terms and conditions necessary to ensure compliance with the Act. The Commissioner makes a summary of the compliance agreement public.

1.53 The Commissioner may also ask a court to order the deregistration of a political party. The Commissioner must have reasonable grounds to suspect that the party's fundamental purposes do not include participating in public affairs by endorsing one or more of its members as candidates and supporting their election. In addition, it must give the party a reasonable opportunity to clarify its fundamental purposes before requesting the order.

1.54 If the Commissioner has reasonable grounds to believe that an offence under the CEA has been committed, he or she may refer the matter to the D.P.P. who decides whether to initiate a prosecution

1.55 The CEA provides for a number of strict liability offences which may be prosecuted on a summary basis. Other offences require intent and may be prosecuted either summarily or on indictment.

ENGLAND

2.01 In England, political finance is regulated by four acts of Parliament, namely: the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act (2000), as amended (PPERA); the Electoral Administration Act 2006, as amended (EEA); the Political Parties and Elections Act 2009 (PPE) and the Representation of the People Act 1983, as amended (RPA).

2.02 The first three of these apply to, inter alia: political parties; members of registered political parties; and holders of certain elective offices, including members of the House of Commons and members of any Local Authority in the U.K. For its part, the RPA applies to electoral candidates.

2.03 The rules governing political finance can be broken down into four types of measures, namely: donation source restrictions; electoral expenditure restrictions, disclosure requirements and exchequer funding. There are currently no restrictions on the amount which may be given by way of a political donation.

Registration

2.04 A political party must be registered in order to field candidates at elections.⁴³ As part of the registration process, political parties must send details of the party's structure, including branches. It must also supply details of the party's financial scheme, demonstrating how the party will comply with the legal requirements of party and election finances under the PERA.⁴⁴ This scheme must be approved in writing by the Electoral Commission.

Donation source restrictions

2.05 The PERA provides for donation source restrictions which apply to donations to political parties as well as to specific individuals, including members of registered political parties, members of the House of Commons and Members of any Local Authority in the UK (collectively, "regulated donees").⁴⁵ The RPA contains donation source restrictions applicable to electoral candidates.⁴⁶ There are also specific provisions applicable to loans, credit facilities and the provision of security or a guarantee, where any part of the money will be used in connection with the political party's or individual's political activities.⁴⁷ These provisions apply to political parties and regulated donees. At present loans to candidates are not regulated.

⁴³ PERA, s. 22

2.06 For the purposes of the donation source restrictions, the definition of the term “donation” varies, depending on whether it is made to a political party, a regulated donee or an electoral candidate. A donation to a political party comprises any payment of more than £500 which falls within one of a number of categories, including: gifts of money or other property; sponsorship provided to a party; subscription fees; and money spent in paying expenses incurred by the party.⁴⁸ In so far as regulated donees are concerned, a donation is any gift of more than £500 offered to them, or where the donation has been accepted retained by them for their use as an MP in connection with their political activities.⁴⁹ Finally, a donation to a candidate is any money provide by any person other than the candidate or his election agent for the purpose of meeting election expenses incurred by or on behalf of the candidate.⁵⁰

2.07 Only a “permissible” donor or lender may make a donation or loan to a political party or regulated donee where that donation is in excess of £500.⁵¹ In the case of electoral candidates, the limit is £50.⁵² Donations or loans of more than the relevant threshold cannot be accepted if the donor is an impermissible donor or cannot be identified. A permissible donor or lender is one of the following:

- An individual registered in a UK electoral register
- A UK registered company which is incorporated within the European Union and carries on business in the UK
- A Great Britain registered political party
- A UK registered trade union, building society or friendly society
- A UK registered limited liability partnership that carries on business in the UK
- A UK based unincorporated association that carries on business or other activities in the UK⁵³

2.08 In certain cases a trust may make a donation, generally, once its beneficiaries are themselves permissible donors.

2.09 Where a donor makes a donation on behalf of him or herself and one (or more) other donors, each individual contribution of more than £500 (or £50 in the case of electoral candidates) is treated as a separate donation from each person.⁵⁴ The principal donor must ensure that the recipient has the relevant information about the donor.⁵⁵ A donation may also be made through an agent and the agent must ensure the recipient is given all the relevant information.⁵⁶

2.10 Where a political party or individual receives a donation above £500, the recipient must take all reasonable steps to satisfy themselves that the source of the donation is permissible.⁵⁷ If a donation is received from an impermissible source, it must be returned within 30 days⁵⁸ or forwarded to the Commission.⁵⁹ After this time, it is a criminal offence to retain the donation and, additionally, a sum equivalent to the value of the donation may be forfeited.⁶⁰

2.11 The 30 day period does not apply to loans. Entering a loan with an impermissible lender is a criminal offence and the transaction is void.⁶¹

2.12 It is an offence to: facilitate the making of donations by impermissible donors; knowingly give false information about donations; withhold information with intent to deceive; or to fail to provide the recipient with required information about the donee.⁶² Each of these offences may be prosecuted summarily or on indictment. It is also an offence to evade the restrictions on donations.⁶³

2.13 As mentioned, the UK does not currently place limits on the amount of a donation which may be made or received. However, this is the subject of much controversy and a recent report by the Committee on Standards in Public Life.

Electoral expenditure

2.14 Both political parties and electoral candidates are subject to campaign expenditure restrictions. In the case of political parties these restrictions are set out in the PPERA. Those for candidates are set out in the RPA, in the case of candidates contesting elections to the UK Parliament and local government elections in England and Wales. Other enactments impose parallel controls in the case of elections to the: Northern Ireland Assembly; National Assembly for Wales; Scottish Parliament; and European Parliament.

2.15 The PPERA defines “campaign expenditure” as expenditure incurred by a registered political party for electoral purposes, namely: promoting the party or its candidates at a relevant election, or in promoting the standing of the party or its candidates in connection with future relevant elections.⁶⁴ The RPA defines the term as “any expenses incurred in respect of: a) the acquisition or use of property; or b) the provision by any person of any goods, services or facilities which is or are used for the purposes of the candidate’s election after the date when he becomes a candidate at the election.”⁶⁵

2.16 Both acts cover only cover expenditure during a specified “regulated period” leading up to an election. In the case of parliamentary elections, that period is 365 days ending with the day of the election. In the case of candidates, this is split into the “long campaign” and the “short campaign” and different spending limits apply to each period.⁶⁶ The “long campaign” covers pre-candidacy expenses and applies where there has not been a general election for 4 years and 7 months. The “short campaign” is the period between the date a person becomes a candidate and the date of the poll.

2.17 All parties contesting the following elections are subject to limits on expenditure: Parliamentary general elections, elections to the Scottish Parliament, the National Assembly for Wales, the Northern Ireland Assembly and the European Parliament.⁶⁷ There are no separate limits on campaign expenditure incurred during local election campaigns.

2.18 Parties’ expenditure limits are determined by the number of constituencies and/or regions that the party is contesting. In the case of a UK Parliamentary Election, the limit is £30,000 per constituency contested or £810,000 in England, £120,000 in Scotland, or £60,000 in Wales, whichever is the greater.⁶⁸

2.19 Individual candidates standing at elections are also subject to expenditure restrictions, with some exceptions. In the case of candidates in UK parliamentary elections, the long and short campaigns have a baseline limit of £25,000 and £7,150 respectively, with a top-up of 5p per elector in a borough/burgh constituency and 7p per elector in a county constituency. In the case of the long campaign, the full amount is only available when the dissolution is in the 60th month of the current Parliament and a percentage of that amount is available from the 56th month.⁶⁹

Disclosure

2.20 Extensive disclosure requirements apply to political parties, regulated donees and electoral candidates.

Political Parties

2.21 Political parties must report all donations and loans which either they or their accounting units have received and which are over the reporting thresholds.⁷⁰ They must also disclose their electoral expenditure.⁷¹ An accounting unit is essentially a section of a party whose finances are not managed directly by party headquarters.

2.22 All parties must report: all impermissible donations; all permissible donations or loans over €7,500; all permissible donations and loans that are over, or add up to £1,500 and come from a source that has already been reported in the same calendar years. Different thresholds apply to account units, which must report all permissible donations or loans in excess of £1,500.

2.23 Generally, donations must be disclosed on a quarterly basis, however during a general election parties must report on a weekly basis.⁷² Similarly, in each quarter, a party must report details for: new loans entered into by the party in that quarter; loans whose terms have changed in that quarter, including loans that have ended. Again, this period changes to a weekly period in a general election period.⁷³

2.24 In respect of each donation which is over the reporting threshold, the information which must be disclosed includes⁷⁴: the amount or nature and value of the donations; whether it was sponsorship or not; the donor's name and address; where the donor is a company, the company's registration number; the date on which the donation was received and the date on which it was accepted. In the case of impermissible donations and unidentifiable donors, slightly different information must be disclosed. In particular, in the case of impermissible donations, the recipient must disclose the date on which the donation was returned and the manner in which it was dealt with (i.e. the person or institution to which it was returned). In the case of a donation from an unidentifiable source, the recipient must disclose details of the manner in which the donation was made and the manner in which it was dealt with.

2.25 In so far as electoral expenditure is concerned, political parties that contested an election must submit an expenditure return to the Electoral Commission detailing the campaign expenditure incurred by the party at that election.⁷⁵ The return must itemise each individual item of expenditure, and give a breakdown of total expenditure incurred by reporting category and in each part of the UK. It must include invoices and receipts for any payment over £200 and a declaration from a “responsible person” to say that the return is complete and correct. The time limits for making that return depend on the amount of expenditure incurred.⁷⁶ Where that amount is less than £250,000, the political party has 3 months in which to make the return and otherwise it has 6 months. Parties that spent more than £250,000 must submit a statement from an independent auditor with their report.⁷⁷

2.26 National parties are required to produce statements of accounts annually under the PPERA.⁷⁸ Information about the local accounting units of national parties is not included in these statements of accounts. However accounting units which have an income and expenditure of more than £25,000 but less than £250,000 must submit a Statement of Accounts to the Commission within three months of the end of the financial year.⁷⁹ An accounting unit which has income and expenditure over £250,000 requires an independent audit and has six months from financial year end to submit the Statement of Accounts to the Commission.

2.27 It is an offence to fail to submit a donation or loan report within the required time limit or to submit an incomplete or false report of donations or loans.⁸⁰ It is also an offence to knowingly or recklessly make a false electoral expenditure declaration.⁸¹

Regulated Donees

2.28 Regulated donees who are holders of elective office or members of a political party must disclose any donations of more than £1,500 received from permissible donors and any donations of more than £500 received from impermissible or unidentified donors.⁸²

2.29 In so far as loans are concerned, they must identify any new loans which they have entered with authorised participants into with a value of over

£1,000 and loans whose terms have changed. In addition they must identify loans they have entered into with a value of over £500 where one or more of the other participants is not an authorised participant.

2.30 Regulated donees must report all the donations and loans they receive that are over the relevant reporting threshold within 30 days of accepting the donation or entering into the loan.⁸³ Aggregated loans and donations are reported when the aggregation exceeds the reporting threshold.⁸⁴ It is an offence to fail to deliver a report to the commission or to deliver a report which does not comply with the disclosure requirements.⁸⁵

Electoral Candidates

2.31 Electoral candidates must submit an election expenses return for both the long and short period of the campaign.⁸⁶ This return requires information about the expenses incurred by the candidate as well as of any donation over £50 given to the candidate for his or her election expenses.⁸⁷ It must be made within 35 days of declaration of result. Both the candidate and his or her agent must also sign a declaration that the return is complete and accurate to the best of their knowledge and belief.⁸⁸

Exchequer funding

2.32 Eligible political parties may obtain payments of policy development grants.⁸⁹ The total grant is £2 million and it is divided between represented registered parties to assist them with the development of policies for the inclusion in a manifesto. To qualify, parties must have at least two sitting members in the U.K. House of Commons who are not disqualified from either voting or sitting in the House.

2.33 Operating funds are also made available to opposition parties in the U.K. House of Commons, called Short money, on the basis of their showing in the last election. Parties receive £14,351 for each seat won along with an addition £28.66 for every 200 votes received. There is a comparable system for the House of Lords, called Cranborne money.

ENFORCEMENT

2.34 Political finance measures are monitored and regulated by the Electoral Commission, which is an independent regulator established by the UK parliament.⁹⁰ The key elements of the Commission's regulatory work to promote compliance are advice, risk assessment, supervisory work and enforcement case-work including sanctioning.

2.35 The Commission's supervisory powers only apply to those regulated under the PPERA. It may issue a disclosure notice to a supervised organisation or individual requiring it to provide the Commission with specified documentation or information. Where the examination of documents is insufficient for the Commission's regulatory purposes it may seek to inspect documents on premises. If necessary it may apply to a Justice of the Peace to obtain a warrant for this purpose.

2.36 The Commission has extensive investigatory powers and may require documents or information as well as requiring a person to attend an interview.⁹¹ These powers may be used when the Commission has reasonable grounds to consider that there has been a breach of the law on party and election finance. The Commission's powers to request information apply to and may be enforced against both the subject of any investigation and any other person or organisation that holds relevant information.

2.37 Persons who commit an offence under the PPERA or who contravene one of its statutory provisions may be subject to sanctions. Some breaches attract civil and/or criminal sanctions while others may only be dealt with using either civil or criminal enforcement action. The Commission does not have powers to impose criminal sanctions but may refer a breach for criminal investigation or seek prosecution in cases which it judges to have a significant impact on confidence in the transparency and integrity of party and election finance.

USA

3.01 In the U.S.A., at federal level, campaign finance is regulated by the Federal Election Campaign Act 1974 (the "FECA") as amended, and by Title 11 of the Code of Federal Regulations (the "CFR") adopted by the Federal Election Commission (the "FEC"). FECA (1) places limits on the sources and amounts of contributions which may be received by federal candidates and political party committees; (2) imposes restrictions on certain types of expenditure (but not the overall amount of expenditure); (3) requires the disclosure of all receipts and reimbursements intended to influence the outcome of an election.

⁹⁰ See PPERA, Schedule 1

3.02 This overview focuses on the application of the campaign finance provisions to political parties and candidates for federal office. FECA applies to political party committees which are organisations, officially affiliated with a political party which raise and spend money for political campaigning. To fall within the scope of FECA, a political party committee must spend more than $1,000 per calendar year on contributions and other expenditures or receive more than £1,000 in contributions.⁹²

3.03 An individual becomes a candidate for federal office when his or her campaign activity exceeds $5,000 in either contributions or expenditure.⁹³ Each candidate must designate a principal campaign committee and may designate other authorised committees to receive contributions or make expenditures on his or her behalf.⁹⁴

3.04 Once a party organisation spends more than $1,000 in contributions and other expenditures or raises more than $1,000 in connection with a federal election, it becomes a political committee.⁹⁵ It then has 10 days to file an FEC registration form and a Statement of Organisation.⁹⁶ A political party must designate a treasurer on that Statement.⁹⁷

3.05 A candidate must register as a candidate with the FEC within 15 days of receiving contributions or making expenditure of over $5,000.⁹⁸ In that same period, he or she must also designate a principal campaign committee.⁹⁹ That committee then has 10 days in which to register by filing a Statement of Organisation, including details of its treasurer and custodian of records.

3.06 A candidate may also designate other authorised committees for receiving contributions or making expenditures on his or her behalf by filing a statement with the principal campaign committees.¹⁰⁰ Within 10 days of designating the committee, the candidate must file a registration with the candidate's principal campaign committee which in turn files the documents with the stipulated federal and state offices.¹⁰¹

Contribution restrictions

3.07 As mentioned, FECA prohibits contributions from certain sources and limits the amount of a contribution which may be accepted from a particular source. A contribution is defined as anything of value given for the purpose of influencing a federal election.¹⁰² The definition includes guarantees or endorsements of bank loans although it does not include loans made in an institution's ordinary course of business. In the case of candidates, the term contribution includes contributions made by a candidate from his or her personal funds.

3.08 Both political party committees and candidates are prohibited from accepting contributions from:

- A person who is not a U.S. citizen or who is not permanently resident in the USA¹⁰³
- The general treasury funds of corporations, labour organisations or national banks¹⁰⁴
- Federal government contractors¹⁰⁵
- Cash donations in excess of $100¹⁰⁶
- Anonymous donations in excess of $50¹⁰⁷
- A contribution made in the name of another¹⁰⁸

3.09 Both political party committees and candidates are subject to contribution limits, which are index linked. A national party committee may receive up to $15,000 per calendar year from a multicandidate committee and up to $30,800 per calendar year from non multi-candidate committees and individual contributors.¹⁰⁹ In addition, over a two year calendar cycle, an individual may not contribute more than a total of $117,000 to all political party committees combined ($46,200 to all candidates and $70,800 to all PACs and parties).

3.10 Individuals and groups may contribute a maximum of $2,500 per election to a candidate's campaign.¹¹⁰ Both national party committees and a multicandidate committee may contribute up to $5,000 per election.

3.11 The contribution limits do not apply to contributions made from a candidate's personal funds to his or her election campaign. Previously, where a candidate spent large amounts of his or her own funds on his or her electoral campaign, this resulted in increased contribution limits for that candidate's opponents. However, in *Davis v FEC*¹¹¹, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down this provision as being unconstitutional. According to that Court, the burden placed on wealthy candidates by the relevant provisions was not justified by any governmental interest in preventing corruption or the appearance of corruption.

3.12 Both political party committees and individuals are prohibited from knowingly accepting a contribution that violates the prohibitions on contributions.

Expenditure restrictions

3.13 Generally, neither political party committees nor candidates are subject to restrictions on their overall amount of expenditure. In Buckley v Valeo,¹¹² the U.S. Supreme Court declared the electoral expenditure restrictions contained in the FECA 1974 to be unconstitutional because they interfere with free speech and association. According to that court, expenditure limitations limit "the quantity of expression by restricting the number of issues discussed, the depth of their exploration and the size of the audience." For example, political party committees can incur unlimited amounts of "independent expenditure", which is expenditure for a communication that expressly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate and which is not made in co-ordination with any candidate or his or her campaign or political party.

3.14 Nevertheless, FECA does limit types of permissible "expenditure", defined as purchase or payment to influence a federal election. Specifically, as mentioned, political party committees are limited as to the amounts which they can contribute to electoral candidates and other persons. Moreover, candidates are subject to the same contribution restrictions as other individuals.

Disclosure

3.01 Disclosure is the mainstay of U.S. campaign finance law. Political party committees must file 1) a monthly schedule; 2) 48 and 24 hour independent expenditure reports. A candidate's principal campaign committee must file quarterly reports on their financial activity. Additional disclosure requirements apply in an electoral year. In certain cases individual donors must also file disclosure reports.

Political Party Committees

3.02 All national party committees that engage in reportable Federal Election Activity must file monthly¹¹³ and must file a year-end report due January 31st of the next year.¹¹⁴ A committee filing on a monthly schedule files reports covering each month's activity by the 20th of the following month. In even-numbered years (years in which there are regularly scheduled federal elections), party committees that generally file monthly reports file pre-general and post-general election reports in lieu of the reports otherwise due in November and December. The pre-general election report is due 12 days before the general election¹¹⁵ and the post-general election report is due 30 days after the general election.¹¹⁶

3.03 Political committees who make independent expenditures at any time during the calendar year, up to and including the 20th day before an election, are required to disclose this activity within 48 hours each time that the expenditure aggregates $10,000 or more.¹¹⁷ In addition, during the last 20 days – up to 24 hours – before an election - political committees are required to file 24-hour reports of independent expenditures each time disbursements for independent expenditures aggregate or exceed $1,000.¹¹⁸ Political committees must report independent expenditures that do not trigger the 48 or 24-hour reporting thresholds on their regularly-scheduled disclosure reports as stated above.

3.04 National party committees are required to provide extremely comprehensive disclosure in their statements/reports including: itemized receipts; itemized disbursements; loans; loans and lines of credit from lending institutions; debts and obligations; independent expenditures; and itemized coordinated party expenditures.¹¹⁹

3.05 All reports filed by political committees are available for public inspection and copying both in the FEC's Public Record Office and its website.

Candidates

3.06 A candidate's principal campaign committee (and other authorized committees) must file quarterly reports which are due on April 15, July 15, October 15, and on January 31 of the following year.¹²⁰

3.07 Additional obligations apply in election years, which are years in which regularly scheduled federal elections are held. In election years, as well as quarterly reports, a committee for a House or Senate candidate must file:¹²¹

- A pre-election report before the election in which the candidate seeks nomination;
- A pre-general election report if the candidate runs in a general election;
- A pre-runoff report when a candidate is involved in a run-off election.

3.08 A pre-election report is due 12 days before the election and covers activity through the 20th day before the election.

3.09 There is no requirement for post-primary reports, but a committee must file a post-general election report if the candidate runs in the general election. A post-general election report covers activity through the 20th day after the election and is due 30 days after the election.

3.10 Campaign committees must file special notices regarding contributions of $1,000 or more received less than 20 days but more than 48 hours before 12.01am of the day of any election in which the candidate is running. This rule applies to all types of contributions to any authorized committee of the candidate.¹²² The FEC or the Secretary of State, as the case may be, must receive the notice within 48 hours of the committee's receipt of the contribution.

3.11 Generally, committees may file a paper report or an electronic report, however some committees are obliged to file electronically.¹²³ Campaign committees of House and Presidential candidates must file all reports and statements electronically if their total contributions or total expenditures exceed, or are expected to exceed, $50,000 in a calendar year. Campaign committees are required to disclose very detailed information regarding receipts and disbursements in reports filed.

3.12 All reports filed by political committees are available for public inspection and copying in the FEC's Public Records Office. They are also available on the Commission's website.

Individuals

3.13 Once an individual spends more than $250 during a calendar year on independent expenditures with respect to a given election, he or she must file a report with the Federal Election Commission or a signed statement containing the same information).¹²⁴ Every expenditure thereafter must be reported to the Commission.

3.14 In addition, an individual who makes electioneering communications that aggregate more than $10,000 in the calendar year must file the "24 Hour Notice of Disbursements/Obligations for Electioneering Communications" with the Commission within 24 hours of the disclosure date.¹²⁵

Public funding

3.01 Public funding is available to both political parties and presidential candidates. It is financed exclusively by a voluntary tax check off. By checking a box on their income tax returns, individual tax payers may direct $3 of their tax to the Fund.

3.02 Political parties receive public funding for their national nominating conventions, which are held every 4 years. In 2008 each of the major parties received $16.82 million. Other parties may also be eligible for partial public financing of their nominating conventions, provided that their nominees received at least 5% of the vote in the previous presidential election.

3.03 In so far as presidential candidates are concerned, funds to qualified Presidential candidates are distributed under two programmes:

- primary matching payments under which eligible candidates in the Presidential primaries may receive public funds to match the first $250 of each individual private contribution they raise. Candidates must agree to use public funds only for campaign expenses, and they must comply with spending limits.
- Republican and Democratic candidates who win their parties' nominations for President are each eligible to receive a grant to cover all the expenses of their general election campaigns. In 2008, the grant was $84.1 million.

¹²⁵ 11 CFR 104.20(b).

Nominees who accept the funds must agree not to raise private contributions and to limit their campaign expenditure to the amount of public funds they receive. They may use the funds only for campaign expenses.

Monitoring and enforcement

3.04 The FEC is the independent regulatory agency charged with administering and enforcing the federal campaign finance law. It has exclusive jurisdiction over the civil enforcement of the FECA.¹²⁶

3.05 The FEC may commence an enforcement action based on reviews carried out by FEC staff on reports filed by committees. In addition, individuals or groups may file complaints and other government agencies may refer an enforcement matter to the FEC. If 4 of the 6 Commissioners vote reason to believe that a violation of the law has occurred, the Commission may investigate the matter. The investigation is conducted by the FEC's Office of General Counsel.

3.06 If the Commission decides that the investigation confirms that the law has been violated, it tries to resolve the matter by reaching a conciliation agreement with the respondents. The agreement may require them to pay a civil penalty which is proportionate to the gravity of the offence and take other remedial steps. If an agreement cannot be reached, the Commission may file suit against the appropriate persons in a U.S. District Court.

CHAPTER TWO – THE QUARRYVALE MODULEAPPENDIX 1*MR TOM GILMARTIN'S PRIOR STATEMENTS

STATEMENT OF THOMAS P. GILMARTIN
17th May 2001

1. I am making this Statement for the assistance of the Tribunal based on my best recollection of events some of which happened some fifteen years ago. While I am not entirely certain about some of the dates referred to in this Statement, I believe the facts contained in the Statement are correct.
2. My initial interest in becoming involved in property development in Dublin arose in late 1986 when, following a visit to Dublin, I decided to assemble a site at Bachelor's Walk for the purpose of carrying out a retail development.
3. I commenced assembling the site in late 1986 and through 1987. I also entered into negotiations with a number of potential investors including a London - based property development company, Arlington Securities plc. ("Arlington"). Arlington agreed to take 80% of the project and agreed to retain me to "project manage" the development. I retained a 20% interest in the project. In late 1987 I entered into a consultancy agreement with Arlington.
4. While I was engaged in assembling the site at Bachelor's Walk I had considerable contact with Dublin Corporation which owned much of the land in the area. I and representatives of Arlington had many meetings with Dublin Corporation during this period. The officials in Dublin Corporation were very supportive of the development plans for Bachelor's Walk and provided much encouragement to us. One concern I had was that only part of the site at Bachelor's Walk had received a favourable tax designation and I was concerned that either all or none of the site should be so designated. I was told by the Corporation officials that this was an issue I would have to discuss with the then Minister for the Environment, Padraig Flynn, T.D.
5. Following correspondence which I wrote to Mr. Flynn, the Minister for the Environment, in October 1987, a meeting was arranged with him for 4 November 1987. I was accompanied to that meeting by Richard Forman, my property adviser who was then of Wilson & Partners. The main focus of the meeting was to persuade the Minister to extend the tax designation status to cover the entire of the site at Bachelor's Walk. An alternative (but not the preferred alternative) was to have the tax designation removed from the site altogether. While Mr. Flynn was generally supportive of our development plans he was non-committal as to whether he would extend the tax designation status to the whole of the site or withdraw it from that part of the site to which it already applied. Mr. Flynn did, however, leave the door open for further discussions. In subsequent correspondence from the Minister to Arlington in February 1988 it was confirmed that the whole of the site would be designated and that the deadline for qualifying expenditure to avail of the tax designated status was to be extended. A Ministerial Order was subsequently made to give effect to the Minister's decision.

6. During the course of my discussions with Dublin Corporation officials and, in particular, Sean Haughey, who was then, I think, the Assistant City Manager, Mick McLoone, the then Chief Valuer for Dublin Corporation and Paddy Morrissey, the then Deputy City Manager asked whether I would be interested in doing anything to get development off the ground in any of the four western towns identified in a plan produced by Myles Wright for the Minister for Local Government in December 1966. That plan set out as a guiding principle for the development of the western part of the city of Dublin, the creation of four new towns in an area running from Blanchardstown to Tallaght. However, none of those developments had taken place. I was told by the Corporation officials that there was considerable political pressure being applied to get the development of the new town centres, referred to in the Myles Wright plan, underway, and that this was the reason why they had approached me. I said I would have a look at it. I then went to view Neilstown, one of the areas concerned. However, for various reasons, I felt that development of that site would be very difficult. While examining maps of the area in the offices of Dublin County Council it struck me that there was an area of land which would make an ideal site for a shopping centre / town centre which was adjacent to where what is now the new M50 ring road was to be built. This is the area which I described as "West Park" and which subsequently became known as "Quarryvale". I will henceforth refer to the area as Quarryvale for ease of reference. I decided immediately to investigate ownership of the lands in that area with a view to a possible shopping centre / town centre development. This was in early 1988.

7. My first contact with Liam Lawlor T.D. occurred in the following circumstances. My bank account was in the Blanchardstown branch of Bank of Ireland where Paul Sheeran, a friend of mine, was the Manager. I was in the Bank one Tuesday afternoon in early May 1988 when I asked Mr. Sheeran if he knew anyone from the Lucan / Palmerstown area who might know who owned the lands along the Galway road. Mr. Sheeran then introduced me to Brendan Fassnidge who had come into the Bank as we were speaking. Mr. Fassnidge said that while he did not know who owned the lands he did know someone who might know who the owners were. He left the bank for a short while and when he returned he asked me whether I would be available for a meeting with an unnamed third party that evening. A meeting took place that evening in the Deadman's Inn Public House in Palmerstown. Mr. Sheeran accompanied me to the meeting. Mr. Fassnidge introduced us to Mr. Lawlor whom he described as a "Government Official". After some small talk I broached the issue of land ownership in the Quarryvale area. However, Mr. Lawlor did not show much interest in my query and said he was more interested in the development at Bachelor's Walk. He stated that he had been appointed by the Government to "take care" of the Bachelor's Walk development and to make sure that it got off the ground. He asked me if I would introduce him to the directors of Arlington. I informed him that I had arranged to attend a meeting of the Board of Arlington the following Thursday in London and that I would ask the Board whether they were interested in meeting with Mr. Lawlor. At the end of our conversation, Mr. Lawlor agreed that he would try to help me to identify the owners of the lands at Quarryvale.
8. I attended the meeting of the Board of Arlington the following Thursday in London. During the course of that meeting Mr. Lawlor arrived at Arlington's premises unannounced and uninvited. Given that Mr. Lawlor had introduced himself as the person appointed by the Government to look after the Bachelor's Walk development it was felt that it was better to invite Mr. Lawlor to come into the meeting so as not to offend him or the Government. Mr.

Lawlor then joined the meeting and commenced by stating that he was an official of the Government instructed to "take care of" the Bachelor's Walk development as it was located on "his patch". He insisted that his involvement could make the difference between the development getting off the ground or not. He proposed that he be given on behalf of the Government a 20% stake in the project. I objected to this and he reiterated that if he was involved it could make the difference between the development succeeding or not and that his involvement could take years off the whole process. The meeting then broke down into a series of private conversations after which I and Ted Dadley, a member of Arlington's management, left the meeting to go for a cup of tea in a nearby hotel. We were subsequently joined by Mr. Lawlor who informed us that Arlington had appointed him as a consultant for the Bachelor's Walk project in return for a payment of IRE£3,500 per month. Mr. Lawlor also said that Raymond Mould, then Chief Executive Officer of Arlington, had told him that I would have to give Mr. Lawlor half of my 20% stake in the project. I informed Mr. Lawlor that this was completely unacceptable and the matter was left there. I later ascertained from Mr. Dadley that Mr. Lawlor had originally sought IRE£100,000 as the price for his involvement and that when this was rejected a compromise involving the payment of IRE£3,500 per month was agreed. While I objected to Mr. Lawlor having a role in the project, Arlington felt that it would be worthwhile involving him in light of his contention that his involvement could make the difference between the project succeeding or not and I was prepared to go along with this. I was asked by Arlington and agreed to pay Mr. Lawlor the IRE£3,500 per month out of my bank account since I was acting as project manager for Arlington in respect of the development. Arlington agreed to reimburse me for that expenditure in the same way that I was to be reimbursed for other expenditure which I was incurring on the project. To the best of my recollection commencing in June 1988 I paid Mr. Lawlor a total of IRE£35,500 over a ten month period. The payments were as follows:

Cheques drawn on BOI account at Blanchardstown (Account No. 7380792)

(1) Cheque No. 000026 dated 28 June, 1988 for IRE£3,500.00

(2) Cheque No. 000027 dated 15 July, 1988 for IR£3,500.00

(3) Cheque No. 000036 dated 6 September, 1988 for IR£7,500.00

(4) Cheque No. 000040 dated 5 October, 1988 for IR£3,500.00

(5) Cheque No. 000042 dated 14 October, 1988 for IR£7,000.00

(6) Cheque No. 000014 dated 14 January, 1989 for IR£7,000.00

9. The total of the above cheques is IR£32,000. However, I have a recollection of making a further payment of IR£3,500 to Mr. Lawlor at Heathrow Airport when Mr. Lawlor was in the company of Ned O'Keeffe T.D. on route to Baghdad. Mr. Lawlor had telephoned me with a request that I meet him at a hotel near the airport. At that meeting I recall handing over a cheque or a draft for IR£3,500 to Mr. Lawlor. Unfortunately, I have been unable to locate evidence of that payment although I have a recollection of paying it. All of the above payments were reimbursed to me by Arlington when I sold my 20% stake in the project to Arlington.
10. A week or so after Mr. Lawlor's attendance at the meeting of the Board of Arlington in London in mid-1988, I was introduced by Mr. Lawlor to George Redmond at the offices of Dublin County Council in O'Connell Street. Mr. Lawlor brought me to Mr. Redmond's office where Mr. Redmond produced a coloured map which contained the names of the land owners for each plot of land in the Quarryvale area. Unfortunately, I do not have that map in my possession. I recall furnishing it to AIB, I think, in 1991. At one point during the meeting with Mr. Lawlor and Mr. Redmond, Mr. Redmond got up from his desk and walked to another table in his room where he picked up a telephone as if to make a call. He turned his back on Mr. Lawlor and myself. At that stage Mr. Lawlor told me that I was going to need both his help and that of Mr. Redmond, whom he referred to as "George", and that if I wanted their assistance I would have to pay them IR£100,000. I assumed this meant IR£100,000 each although I did not seek clarification on the point. I had no intention of making such a payment and I said something non-committal before leaving Mr. Redmond's office. On the way to his car Mr. Lawlor again stated that "George" would have to be taken care of. I understood this to mean that Mr. Lawlor was linking the map that Mr. Redmond had made available to me with the request for payment to Mr. Lawlor and Mr. Redmond. I was not prepared to make such payments. While I had several more meetings with Mr. Redmond he never directly asked me for money. However, the subject did come up in subsequent meetings which I had with Mr. Lawlor.

11. I used the information on the map which Mr. Redmond had provided to me to assemble lands in the Quarryvale area. I negotiated the purchase of approximately 28 acres from Grove Developments for IR£1.24 million. I also purchased approximately 32 acres from Des Bruton for IR£1.52 million. These two blocks of land together with a further four acres which I purchased, made up the prime site fronting the Lucan By-Pass. Subsequently, I purchased other parcels of lands of various sizes which made up the entire Quarryvale site.
12. Mr. Lawlor did provide some assistance to me in assembling the Quarryvale site. For example, he introduced me to Mr. Redmond. He also prepared a draft of a fax which he suggested I should send to Mr. Flynn, then Minister for the Environment, to inform him about the plans which I had for Quarryvale. I cannot recall whether that fax was sent. Around the same time, Mr. Lawlor asked me for a 20% stake in the Quarryvale project in return for his help. While I appreciated that he was providing some assistance I considered his demand to be grossly exorbitant. I dismissed his request for a percentage stake in the development out of hand and Mr. Lawlor never raised the issue again.
13. On 3 November, 1988 Mr. Lawlor sent by fax a newspaper extract referring to the purchase by O'Callaghan Properties Limited of the interest of another company Merrygrove Limited, in property located between Lucan and Clondalkin, being the site at Neilstown. The article referred to the plans of O'Callaghan Properties to develop a major shopping centre and leisure complex on the site.

14. Following another meeting which I had with Mr. Redmond in late October / early November 1988, Mr. Redmond confirmed to me that approximately 12.04 acres of land owned by Dublin County Council and approximately 68.82 acres of land owned by Dublin Corporation at Quarryvale were available for sale. These blocks of land were important for the Quarryvale development. Following further correspondence I entered into negotiations with Mr. McLoone, Chief Valuer, for the purchase of both sites. Those negotiations took a number of months to progress as would have been normal.

15. Mr. Lawlor turned up at a meeting with my professional team of advisers at the Trusthouse Forte Hotel at Dublin Airport in November 1988. He had not been invited to the meeting. Shortly after his arrival, Mr. Lawlor stated that if I wished to get anywhere with the Quarryvale project I would have to deal with Owen O'Callaghan. I was aware that Mr. O'Callaghan was a property developer from Cork who had good political connections. Mr. Lawlor referred to Mr. O'Callaghan's deal with Albert Gubay in relation to the Neilstown site, in which O'Callaghan Properties had purchased from Mr. Gubay an option to purchase the Neilstown site from Dublin Corporation for IR£500,000. Mr. Lawlor pointed out that the value of the Neilstown site was that it was zoned for a town centre while the site at Quarryvale was zoned for industrial use. Mr. Lawlor emphasised that Dublin County Council (of which Mr. Lawlor was a member) would not zone both Neilstown and Quarryvale for town centres because of their close proximity to each other. He said that the zoning would have to be shifted from Neilstown to Quarryvale and that whoever was in possession of the zoning was in a much stronger position. The strong impression I got from what Mr. Lawlor was saying was that I had no option but to deal with Mr. O'Callaghan. Mr. Lawlor put me in contact with Mr. O'Callaghan by giving me his home telephone number and asked me to contact him. My recollection is that Mr. Lawlor set up a meeting with Mr. O'Callaghan which took place, I believe, on 7 December, 1988.

16. I met with Mr. O'Callaghan in the Royal Dublin Hotel. Mr. Lawlor had arranged the meeting. At the meeting Mr. O'Callaghan informed me that he intended building on the Neilstown site and he produced a drawing. He indicated that his plans including the construction of a shopping centre of approximately 300,000 square feet on the Neilstown site and that he was only prepared to sell his interest for IR£7 million. He also informed me that he had purchased Mr. Gubay's interest in the site for IR£500,000. It was eventually agreed that I would pay Mr. O'Callaghan the sum of IR£3.5 million in return for which I would acquire Merrygrove Estates Limited, the company which owned the option over the Neilstown site. We shook hands on the agreement which involved the payment of IR£3.5 million in the following tranches.
- (17) IR£800,000 up front representing the IR£500,000, which Mr. O'Callaghan claimed he was paying to Mr. Gubay, together with a deposit of IR£300,000 on the Neilstown site which I was informed Mr. Gubay had paid to secure his option.
- (18) The sum of IR£1.35 million was to be paid to Mr. O'Callaghan one year from the signature of the agreement.
- (19) A further sum of IR£1.35 million was to be paid on planning permission and rezoning being obtained for the Quarryvale site.
17. Mr. O'Callaghan's solicitor, John Deane, prepared a draft agreement which was sent to my solicitors, Seamus Maguire & Co. As I was very heavily involved in a development in the United Kingdom at the time, I did not have an opportunity of reviewing the agreement in detail before it was executed on the 31 January, 1989. I, subsequently realised that the agreement did not contain one of the terms which I believed I had agreed with Mr. O'Callaghan, namely, that the final payment of IR£1.35 million would be paid subject to planning permission and rezoning being obtained in respect of the Quarryvale site.

Furthermore, the agreement was contradictory in certain respects and I am at a loss to understand how this occurred. Subsequent correspondence from Mr. O'Callaghan in December 1988 did not refer to the agreement which I reached with him on 7 December, 1988. Mr. O'Callaghan expressed a desire to become involved in the Quarryvale project and suggested that he and I should set up a joint venture to undertake this. He stated in a letter of 8 December, 1988 that he:

".....could have a very major beneficial role in the project in assisting in having the planning application granted in a relatively short programme"

I saw this as confirmation of what Mr. Lawlor had informed me and of what I understood about Mr. O'Callaghan's good political contacts. In my response to Mr. O'Callaghan, by letter of 20 December, 1988, I explicitly ruled out any joint venture agreement with Mr. O'Callaghan. I did, however, leave open the possibility of a project consultancy role for Mr. O'Callaghan as I did not wish to completely alienate him.

18. In or around Christmas 1988 Mr. Lawlor provided me with the names and telephone numbers of councillors whom he suggested I should meet in order to get their support for the Quarryvale development. The names which Mr. Lawlor gave me and which I wrote down at the time included Marian McGennis (FF), and Finbarr Hanrahan (FF). Mr. Lawlor also gave me the name of Colm McGrath (FF) and I subsequently had a considerable amount of contact with Mr. McGrath as he represented the area in which the development was to be carried out. Mr. McGrath often mentioned that he was in need of money although he never asked me directly for money. I got the impression, however, that Mr. McGrath expected me to give him some money in return for his support for the development. However, I did not do so and notwithstanding this Mr. McGrath did verbally express support for the development.

19. I arranged a meeting with one of the councillors whose name had been given to me by Mr. Lawlor, Finbarr Hanrahan, to seek his support for the development. That meeting took place on 28 December, 1988 at Buswell's Hotel in Dublin. When I arrived I noticed Mr. Lawlor in the company of Mr. O'Callaghan, Mr. Deane and Ambrose Kelly, an architect. When I arrived into the bar Mr. Lawlor got up and moved away. Mr. O'Callaghan greeted me and gave a nod in the direction of Mr. Hanrahan who by that stage was sitting alone. I introduced myself to Mr. Hanrahan and we went through the brochure which I had produced for the Quarryvale development. I made it clear to Mr. Hanrahan that I was seeking his support for the rezoning of the Quarryvale site. He made it clear to me that if he was to support the rezoning of the site he would require IR£100,000 with IR£50,000 of that amount up front. I had no intention of making any such payment to Mr. Hanrahan and I got up and left. On my way out of the bar Mr. O'Callaghan said to me "Did he tap you?". This strongly suggested to me that both Mr. Lawlor and Mr. O'Callaghan must have been aware that Mr. Hanrahan would be seeking money from me to support the rezoning of Quarryvale.
20. In the meantime my negotiations with Mr. McLoone, the Chief Valuer, for the purchase of the Dublin Corporation land and the Dublin County Council lands were progressing. I was informed by Mr. McLoone on 19 December, 1988 that he was recommending a sale of the 68.62 acres owned by Dublin Corporation for IR£2,744,800. On 20 December, 1988 I was informed that he was recommending a sale to me of the 12.04 acres of lands zoned by Dublin County Council for IR£481,600. This was the subject of correspondence between Mr. McLoone and myself in December 1988 and January 1989.
21. In late January 1989 I was approached by Mr. Lawlor who informed me that his "boss" wanted to see me. I understood this to be a reference to the then Taoiseach, Charles J. Haughey. A meeting was set up and I met with Mr. Lawlor at Buswell's Hotel at 4.30pm on Wednesday 1 February, 1989 in advance of a meeting with Mr. Haughey later that day. Mr. Lawlor told me that the purpose of the meeting was to inform Mr. Haughey and the Cabinet about my development plans. Mr. Lawlor brought me across to Leinster House and brought me by lift up to the fourth or fifth floor. I was then led into a room in which there were a number of Ministers present. To the best of my recollection the Ministers present when I arrived were Gerry Collins, Brian Lenihan, Seamus Brennan, Albert Reynolds, Bertie Ahern and Pdraig Flynn. Ray Burke (to whom I was briefly introduced at the lift coming up to the meeting) entered after me as did Mary O'Rourke who passed through the room. I was introduced to Mr. Haughey by Mr. Flynn. I had a brief conversation with Mr. Haughey in which Mr. Haughey encouraged me to "keep up the good work". As I was leaving Mr. Haughey said that he hoped that "Liam" was "taking good care of me". I was then led out of the room. Mr. Lawlor was waiting outside the room talking to someone else. As I came out of the meeting Mr. Lawlor moved as if to come in my direction but then moved back against the wall as I was approached from my right hand side by another man whom I did not recognise. The man came up to me and referred to my involvement in the development plans for Quarryvale and Bachelor's Walk and stated that a lot of money was going to be made out of those developments. He suggested that I make a payment of IR£5 million and gave me a piece of paper which he told me contained a bank account number in the Isle of Man to which he asked me to pay the IR£5 million. I could not believe what I was hearing and I did not respond to the man until the piece of paper was put into my hand. Bearing in mind that I had just left a meeting with Mr. Haughey and Ministers of the Government and that Mr. Lawlor was waiting outside the room and witnessed this encounter, I assumed that this approach must in some way have been connected with Mr. Lawlor and with Mr. Haughey. I rejected the man's approach forcefully and in colourful terms and I got the impression that the man was quite taken aback by my response. What I said was that "You make the f... Mafia look like monks". As I walked away he tapped me on the arm and said to me "you could end up in the Liffey for that statement". I responded with an expletive. I then walked towards the lift and left. Mr Lawlor walked away in front of me. As I approached the lift along a gangway another man came up to me and introduced himself as Sean Walsh T.D. He asked me what Mr. Lawlor was up to and told me to be wary of Mr. Lawlor as he was probably double-crossing me. I had no idea what Mr. Walsh meant nor where he was coming from and I did not pass on any information to him. Mr. Walsh's parting words to me were "watch yourself, watch Lawlor". I then went down in the lift and left Leinster House. Mr. Lawlor had by that stage left and when I subsequently asked him about the identity of the man who had spoken to me as I had come out of the meeting with Mr. Haughey, Mr. Lawlor said that he did not remember me meeting any man.

22. A number of days later I informed a family acquaintance, Senator Willie Farrell, of what had happened following my meeting with Mr. Haughey. Mr. Farrell suggested that I should meet with a former neighbour of his in Sligo who was then a Dublin Councillor, John Gilbride. A few days later I was introduced by Mr. Farrell to Mr. Gilbride. I again recounted what happened following my meeting with Mr. Haughey. Mr. Gilbride told me not to worry about Mr. Lawlor and that Mr. Lawlor was "all right if you stayed on the right side of him". I subsequently discovered that Mr. Gilbride was closely aligned to Mr. Lawlor and indeed to Mr. O'Callaghan.

23. On 2 February, 1989 I received a letter from Mr. McLoone confirming that the contract for the purchase of 68.62 acres from Dublin Corporation had been referred to his principals for approval. I was reasonably optimistic therefore, about my prospects for the Quarryvale development, notwithstanding the extraordinary incidents referred to above. However, a further incident occurred in February 1989 which caused me considerable concern. I had a meeting arranged with Mr. Redmond and Dublin County Council Road Engineers with my team of professional advisors. The meeting was scheduled for 10am in the morning. My team assembled at the Gresham Hotel at 9am in advance of the meeting. I rang Mr. Redmond to inform him that we were about to leave to come across for the meeting. However, Mr. Redmond denied we had any arrangement for a meeting and terminated the call abruptly. I ascertained with members of my professional team that they had independently verified that the meeting had been arranged for that day with Mr. Redmond. I telephoned Mr. Redmond's office again and I was informed by his secretary that the Road Engineers had been waiting for us at Mr. Redmond's office but had left when we had not turned up for the meeting. Needless to say, I and my team were extremely annoyed at this. We went across to Mr. Redmond's office and I and John McCammon of Taggarts, Architects, rebuked Mr. Redmond for misrepresenting that a meeting had not been arranged. Mr. Redmond ordered us out of his office. I took the matter up with Sean Haughey, who was then Assistant City Manager. He rearranged the meeting with the Dublin County Council Road Engineers for 2pm that afternoon. As we were being led to the meeting room by Mr. Haughey, I witnessed Mr. Haughey going into Mr. Redmond's office during which a heated exchange took place. My recollection is that Mr. Haughey said to Mr. Redmond "George, what the hell is going on?" and that Mr. Redmond replied "Ask your brother". Mr. Haughey then replied "I am not my brother's keeper" and "George, your tricks are going to stop", or words to that effect. The meeting then took place with the Road Engineers which focused on the technical feasibility of the plans drawn up for a road network to service the Quarryvale development. However, there was a bad atmosphere at the meeting due to the events of earlier that day. I felt that Mr. Redmond was going to do his utmost to impede or prevent the development going ahead.

24. Sean Haughey asked to meet me on the following day, 3 February, 1989. I met with Mr. Haughey that day and he expressed concern to me about the events of the previous day and in particular about the actions of Mr. Redmond. He then brought me to meet the City Manger, Frank Feeley and the Deputy City Manager in charge of planning, Paddy Morrissey. There was another person present whose identity I cannot recall. I explained to those present what had happened and I referred to the previous request by Mr. Lawlor in the presence of Mr. Redmond that I pay each of them IR£100,000. I expressed my belief that Mr. Redmond's subsequent actions were taken to sabotage my development plans because I had refused to pay the money to him. I was subsequently informed that Mr. Feeley had reported my complaints to Superintendent Hugh Sreenan of the Garda Fraud Squad and that an investigation was initiated in March 1989.

25. Superintendent Sreenan did telephone me to arrange an interview sometime in March 1989. When he telephoned me we had a lengthy discussion during which I again recounted the actions of Mr. Redmond and my belief that Mr. Redmond's actions were modified by my refusal to pay him the IR£100,000 which Mr. Lawlor had suggested should be paid. Superintendent Sreenan indicated that he would contact me again but did not suggest that I make a formal statement at the time. Subsequently, a person who represented himself as a member of An Garda Siochana and identifying himself as Garda Burns, telephoned me and referred to the allegations which I had made to Superintendent Sreenan. I do not recall exactly what he said although my recollection is that he had enough knowledge of what I had said to Superintendent Sreenan to lead me to believe that he was working as part of Superintendent Sreenan's team. He adopted a very confrontational tone with me and stated that many people were making allegations about decent people and that I would be far better served by packing up and going back to England. I was extremely demoralised by this approach and when Superintendent Sreenan called me some time later to request that I provide a formal statement I told him that I would prefer not to do so. I believe that this was in March / April 1989. Nonetheless I still believed that I could make the development succeed as I felt I had sufficient support among County Councillors. I was confident that the development was a very good development and that I had acquired most of the land required for it. I felt that the best approach I could take was to create as few waves as possible and to try and get the development done with as little fuss as possible.
26. I had another meeting with Mr. Flynn, then Minister for the Environment, in early 1989. I believe the meeting took place in the afternoon of Friday 3 February, 1989. I had outlined the difficulties which I had encountered with the Quarryvale development. I referred to the demands for money which I had received and to the trouble which Mr. Redmond had been causing. I outlined that I felt that both Mr. Lawlor and Mr. Redmond were behind a campaign to frustrate the Quarryvale development. Mr. Flynn had very little to say other than that I should make a "substantial donation" as it might help to curb the activities of Mr. Redmond and others. While I felt that Mr. Flynn was talking about a contribution to Fianna Fail I did not know what he meant by "substantial" as he did not specify a figure. Mr. Flynn also stated that he was aware that a report had been made to the Gardai about the matters of which I had informed him and that the matter should be left to them. After the meeting I gave some consideration to Mr. Flynn's request that I should make a donation. At the time, however, I did not feel that I should do so, although my view was to change.

27. In the meantime correspondence in relation to the acquisition of the 68.62 acres of land from Dublin Corporation and the 12.04 acres of land from Dublin Corporation was on-going and Mr. Forman, my property advisor, wrote a letter to Mr. McLoone on 6 March, 1989 confirming my agreement to purchase the lands on the terms set out in the letter. Following that letter I had a meeting with Paddy Morrissey and Sean Haughey on 15 March, 1989. At that meeting, however, I was informed that a second application had been made from another party to purchase both tracts of land (which became known as the "Irishtown" and the "Wood Farm" lands). I subsequently ascertained that that application came from Green Property plc. At the meeting Mr. Morrissey expressed the view that the offer which I had made for the lands (which equated to approximately IRE40,000 per acre) might not represent good value for the relevant Local Authorities. It was also pointed out to me at the meeting that my proposal to obtain planning permission for a retail development on the Quarryvale site would contravene the zoning divisions in the County Development Plan and this would be a problem. However, I informed the meeting I was prepared to take my chances with the planning application but that I was not prepared to pay any more than I had offered for the lands. We also discussed the agreement which I had reached with Mr. O'Callaghan and the terms of Mr. Forman's letter of 6 March, 1989. No conclusions were reached at the meeting.

28. At around the time I was attempting to conclude the purchase of the Irishtown lands another incident involving Mr. Lawlor occurred. In March or April 1989 I received a call from my bank manager, Mr. Sheeran who informed me that Mr. Lawlor had arrived at the branch in Blanchardstown and informed Mr. Sheeran that I had authorised a payment to him of IR£10,000 from my bank account there. While Mr. Lawlor was aware that on occasions in the past I had authorised Mr. Sheeran to pay monies out of my account without having to sign a cheque or withdrawal slip in respect of those monies, Mr. Lawlor was equally aware that I had not authorised any such payment to him. When I was contacted by Mr. Sheeran I informed him that I had not authorised that payment and Mr. Sheeran declined to make the payment in response to Mr. Lawlor's request. After this incident I decided that if Arlington wished to make any further monthly payments to Mr. Lawlor it could do so itself and that I would not make the payments for it.

29. Following my meeting with Mr. Morrissey and Mr. Haughey on 15 March, 1989, Dublin Corporation and Dublin County Council put the sale of the Irishtown and Wood Farm lands out to tender. Needless to say, I was very annoyed at this as my involvement in the project had only come about because I had been approached by the local authority officials in the first place and I felt that I had reached an agreement for the purchase of those lands already. However, following the advertisement of the Notice to Tender I increased the offer which I made for the lands to a total of IR£5,100,000. This valued the Irishtown lands at approximately IR£70,000 per acre. Clearly, having to come up with an increased amount of money significantly increased financial pressure on me.

30. Although I had submitted an increased and I believe inflated tender price to acquire the Irishtown lands in order to complete my acquisition of lands for the Quarryvale development, I was still concerned that Mr. Redmond or Mr. Lawlor, or both of them, would take some further action to prevent my tender being accepted. I decided that I would try to arrange another meeting with Mr.

Flynn to see whether anything could be done about Mr. Redmond and Mr. Lawlor. A meeting with Mr. Flynn was arranged through his private secretary, Gerry Rice. The meeting took place in early June 1989. I believe it was Friday 2 June, 1989 at 7pm in the evening at Mr. Flynn's office in the Customs House. I informed Mr. Flynn that I had decided to make a donation to the Fianna Fail party of IR£50,000. I wrote a cheque for IR£50,000 drawn on my bank account in Bank of Ireland Blanchardstown there and then. I did not complete the payee of the cheque and when I asked Mr. Flynn to whom I should make the cheque payable he told me to "just leave it there" gesturing towards his desk. It was left to Mr. Flynn to complete the payee. At the time I asked Mr. Flynn this question he was on his feet packing his briefcase.

31. I was subsequently informed by Mr. McLoone in a telephone conversation in June 1985 that Mr. Redmond was responsible for what had happened (i.e. that the lands had been put out to tender), that "there was a game going on" and that I was being "shafted". It was suggested that if I knew someone in Government I could trust I should contact them. I subsequently decided to contact Bertie Ahern T.D., who was then a Minister in the Government, as I had previously spoken with him on a number of occasions and found him approachable and very supportive of the development plans for Bachelor's Walk. I had met Mr. Ahern on two prior occasions. To the best of my recollection the first meeting took place in autumn 1987 in Mr. Ahern's office in the Department of Labour Building in Mespil Road. At this meeting we discussed the plans for the Bachelor's Walk development. Mr. Ahern was affable and approachable and he was very supportive of my plans. The next meeting I had with Mr. Ahern was in October 1988. To the best of my recollection that meeting took place on Monday 10 October, 1988 in Mr. Ahern's constituency office located above Fagan's Public House in Drumcondra. I do not recall anything of significance from that meeting other than the fact that I informed Mr. Ahern of the plans for Quarryvale as well as updating him on the progress of the Bachelor's Walk development. Mr. Ahern was again supportive about both of those developments. Following my conversation with Mr. McLoone I telephoned Mr. Ahern and informed him about the difficulties which I was experiencing in relation to the purchase of the Irishtown and Wood Farm lands. He told me that he would see what he could do. I was contacted a few days later by Joe Burke who arranged to meet me at my office at 25 St. Stephen's Green in the middle of June 1989. He told me that he had been instructed by Mr. Ahern to look into my complaints and I told him about the problems that I was encountering. A few days later the final approval was given for the sale of the Irishtown and Wood Farm lands. Mr. Burke informed me of this news in a subsequent telephone conversation and also told me that I would have no further problems. Mr. Burke met me in my office afterwards and suggested I should meet with Mr. Ahern later that evening. However, Mr. Burke was unsuccessful in locating Mr. Ahern. On 20 June, 1989 I telephoned Mr. Ahern to thank him for his intervention. During the course of that conversation he asked me whether I had given a donation to the Fianna Fail party. I informed him that I had given IR£50,000 to Mr. Flynn and Mr. Ahern made no further reference to the matter.

32. In August 1989 I appointed Touche Ross in London as financial advisors in respect of the Quarryvale project. In the winter of 1989 / 1990 I approached a number of banks in order to seek finance to fund the development of Quarryvale. Various brochures were prepared for this purpose.

33. I entered into discussions with Allied Irish Banks ("AIB") for funding for the Quarryvale development. AIB agreed to lend me IR£8 million repayable over six months. A loan agreement was finalised on 19 February, 1990. I had required a three year loan period but this was not acceptable to AIB. I dealt primarily with Eddie Kay, AIB's Corporate Finance Manager and his assistant, Jim Donagh. I am producing to the Tribunal a copy of the loan agreement of 19 February, 1990. The purpose of the loan agreement was to part finance the purchase of certain lands including approximately 70 acres from Dublin Corporation. The total monies drawn down under the loan agreement were IR£7,949,000. The loan agreement provided for a repayment in full by 31

August, 1990 or such later date as might be agreed between my development company, Barkhill Limited and AIB.

34. Later, I became suspicious that there was some collusion between Mr. O'Callaghan and AIB. The option agreement dated 31 January, 1989, which I had entered into with Mr. O'Callaghan's company, was referred to in the recitals to the loan agreement. I do not know why that was so. I was also surprised to see Mr. O'Callaghan in the offices of AIB's solicitors when I attended there to finalise the terms of the loan agreement and to execute the agreement. This was only one of a number of occasions on which I came across Mr. O'Callaghan or his solicitor or both in AIB's premises when I called there for various meetings with AIB's representatives.
35. As my negotiations with possible sources of finance were not successful, and as Dublin County Council was much slower than expected in considering shifting the zoning for a town centre from Nellstown to Westpark/Quarryvale, AIB Bank appeared to get increasingly concerned as the six-month loan period ran its course.. Accordingly, I received a letter dated 26 June, 1990 from Eddie Kay stating that the bank would be unwilling to permit the loan facility to outstand after 31 August, 1990, unless a definite agreement was entered into between Barkhill and a suitable development partner. Mr. Kay put the alternatives to that as being the refinancing of the Barkhill debt or the orderly disposal of the site on a phased basis. I interpreted Mr. Kay's letter as putting pressure on me to enter into some agreement with Owen O'Callaghan as I interpreted the phrase used in the letter, "major property developer", as referring to him.
36. Following on from the 26 June, 1990, letter, I recall that both Mr. Donagh and Mr. Kay travelled over to England to meet me at Trusthouse Forte Hotel at Heathrow Airport. My recollection is that this meeting took place some time towards the end of June, perhaps on 27 June, 1990. Mr. Donagh forcefully reminded me that the money I had received from AIB was only temporary and indicated that AIB were very doubtful as to whether or not I was going to get the Quarryvale project off the ground. Mr. Donagh expressed scepticism about the Quarryvale site being rezoned. My reply to Mr. Donagh was that I had arranged for a PR firm run by Eileen Gleeson, to take a poll of the councillors and that showed that a sizeable majority of them were in favour of the rezoning. I attach a copy of a list of County Councillors, dated June 1990, with "Yes" and "No" written in against names on the list, indicating those for and against my development proposals. By my reckoning, this informal poll of Councillors showed 32 for my development, 19 against and 29 "Don't Know's". Mr. Donagh, however, remained sceptical and the meeting ended inconclusively.

37. I decided with my team of advisers that we would make a presentation to any interested parties, be they Government, local authority, social or residential groups or to the media. This presentation took place in the Berkeley Court Hotel in Ballsbridge, as best I can recollect on 5 July, 1990. There was a brochure available to attendees at the presentation. During the course of the presentation, I was asked questions and in response to one of those, I explained that I believed the Neilstown site was not viable for a shopping centre development, because all that could be built there were "sheds in a field". This remark appeared to irritate Mr. O' Callaghan, who was present. Jim Donagh of AIB, who was in the company of Mr. O'Callaghan at the presentation, also rebuked me for my remarks, commenting that it was easy for me to make comments "with other people's money". This presentation did not have the desired effect of giving momentum to the Quarryvale project.
38. Subsequent to that presentation, my then solicitor, Seamus Maguire, received a letter from Owen O'Callaghan's solicitor, John Deane, dated 16 July, 1990 which referred to the application for planning permission made by Mr. O' Callaghan. Mr. Deane also demanded payment of the outstanding balance due in respect of my purchase of the option on the Neilstown lands.

39. At the same time, I felt under pressure from AIB to make some agreement with Mr. O'Callaghan whereby he would agree to shelve his plans for Neilstown in consideration of me giving him some share in the development of Quarryvale. At that stage I was vehemently opposed to any such proposal.
40. The pressure on me from AIB increased on the expiry of the loan period on 31 August, 1990, by which date the loan agreement required me to repay in full the borrowings of £8m. plus interest then accrued. Because I had not been able to refinance the borrowings, and because Dublin County Council had not even put the rezoning of the site on their agenda to be voted on, I was placed in a very difficult financial position. This led me to make determined efforts to attract in new investors. On one occasion, which I recall was around the end of September 1990, perhaps 21 September, 1990, I and my property adviser Richard Forman met with some potential investors. I recall that, when we were having lunch in a hotel near the site, Liam Lawlor arrived uninvited and unexpectedly. He then joined our table and proceeded to make a series of comments which appeared to be intended to deter the investors from making any investment in Quarryvale and which succeeded in discomfiting the investors. Unsurprisingly, this effort to obtain investment proved unsuccessful.
41. At around this time, my contract with Des Bruton lapsed because, due to my financial circumstances at the time, I was unable to make a payment of £1,020,000 which was due to him under the contract. These lands were crucial to the Quarryvale project and I had no choice but to re-negotiate the contract with Mr. Bruton. Mr. Bruton sought an increased price of £70,000 per acre (the price I had agreed to pay Dublin Corporation) which in the circumstances I had to agree to pay. This increased price cost me £800,000.
42. In the course of 1990, I suffered a number of additional setbacks to my proposals for Westpark/Quarryvale. One was the decision by Dublin Corporation to withdraw the option previously offered to me, to make available for development 180 acres of Corporation land which was also in the Quarryvale area. I was told by the local authority's chief valuer, Mick McLoone, that the IDA wanted the land and the Corporation felt obliged to yield to the IDA's wishes. Around the same time, the Eastern Health Board withdrew from negotiations to sell me an adjoining 70 acre site which again cut down on the area available for development in line with the ambitious plans I had revealed at my 5 July, 1990, presentation.

43. All along, I was pressing Dublin County Council to consider shifting the zoning for a town centre from Neilstown to Quarryvale, but the issue was not even finding its way onto the agenda for Council meetings, notwithstanding the support I had previously been promised by various Government ministers and by the senior Corporation officials who had first asked me to get involved in this project. As a result, I came under ever-increasing pressure from AIB to enter into some form of arrangement with Mr. O' Callaghan. I believe that AIB were convinced that Mr. O' Callaghan was in a better position than I was to obtain the necessary re-zoning and planning permissions and that he had the political contacts to get the project off the ground. Ultimately, I began to give some credence to this suggestion myself.
44. It was in these circumstances that I entered into Heads of Agreement with AIB dated 14 December, 1990. This document made detailed provision for the future development of Quarryvale and Mr. O' Callaghan's participation in that development. Clause 8 of the Heads of Agreement provided that the board of directors of Barkhill would comprise myself, Owen O'Callaghan and two representatives of AIB, and AIB would also have the right to appoint a third director at any time during the currency of its loan facility. Subject to the conditions set out in the document, AIB agreed to continue financial support to Barkhill.

45. To the best of my recollection, Mr. O'Callaghan never signed up to these terms because I understand he was dissatisfied with the 25% share which the Heads of Agreement provided that he be given. As far as I was concerned, there were a number of aspects of the Heads of Agreement with which I was unhappy. However, I felt I did not have much choice but to sign it at the time, though I never intended to enter into a binding legal agreement on the basis of those terms.
46. I also recall that late in 1990, just prior to Christmas, I was sitting in the Arlington office at 25 St. Stephen's Green, when Colm Scallon called into my office. Mr. Scallon was an acquaintance of mine. In the course of our conversation, I told Mr. Scallon about all of the difficulties which I had experienced in relation to the Quarryvale development. Having listened to me, Mr. Scallon asked me whether he could make a telephone call, whereafter he asked me to accompany him to meet with someone. We walked to an office in Mount Street where I was introduced to Sean Sherwin, whom I understand was the then General Secretary of Fianna Fail. Mr. Scallon asked me to repeat in the presence of Sean Sherwin what I had said to him earlier, and I did so. In particular, I recounted my complaints against Mr. Redmond and Mr. Lawlor, because I thought it was in dealing with these individuals that Mr. Sherwin might be able to enlist some political support which would arrest the activities of both of them. However, Mr. Sherwin did not express any surprise at what I told him, but merely asked whether I would give a donation to the Party as he thought that would probably help to smooth things out. I told him that I had already given a donation approximately 18 months previously. He asked how much and I told him that I had handed a cheque for £50,000 to Padraig Flynn. At that stage, he went back into his office for a couple of minutes and he re-emerged to tell me that no such donation had been received by the party. Mr. Sherwin said that he would have to talk to "the powers that be".

47. At this time, I was convinced that as soon as the rezoning motion was considered by Dublin County Council, and a vote to zone the Quarryvale site was taken, I would be very much strengthened, in terms of the enhancement of the value of the site and in terms of increased confidence that the development would ultimately succeed. However, I was coming under increasing pressure at that time, much of which was coming from AIB.
48. In February, 1991, I received another letter (dated 7 February, 1991) from Eddie Kay of AIB, in which he referred to the expiry of the Barkhill loan facility at the end of August 1990, and he referred also to the Heads of Terms dated 14 December, 1990, signed by, AIB and Barkhill Limited and also, it was suggested, by O' Callaghan Properties. As I have said, I do not believe that O' Callaghan Properties ever signed these Heads of Terms. Mr. Kay's letter went on to refer to the rezoning motion coming before Dublin County Council on 8 February, 1991, but that AIB's information was that the presentation of the motion was to be postponed until the 15 February, 1991 meeting. This was what subsequently transpired. This postponement further increased the pressure on me.
49. This pressure further increased by reason of difficulties which I experienced with the Inland Revenue in the United Kingdom in 1991, which led to the raising of a very substantial tax assessment for which there was no proper basis as far as I was concerned. My dealings with the Revenue, which were of course confidential, were given extensive coverage in the media both here and in the United Kingdom, which adversely affected my personal and professional standing. I still do not know how details of my confidential tax affairs were released to the media.
50. The pressure being exerted on me steadily increased up to 15 February, 1991. I recall that AIB sent to me by fax, revised Heads of Agreement and informed me that if I did not sign them, that they would put in a Receiver. I also recall getting a telephone call from Councillor Colm McGrath around this time. Mr. McGrath suggested that he was being prevented from putting a motion to rezone Quarryvale before the Council by AIB and Mr. O' Callaghan. At the time, I found this suggestion difficult to understand. Later that same evening, I recall receiving a further telephone call from Eddie Kay of AIB. In the course of this conversation, Mr. Kay again expressed concerns about the prospects for the Quarryvale development and emphasised how important AIB believed it to be to accommodate the requirements of Mr. O' Callaghan. Mr. Kay also referred to monies allegedly owed by me to Mr. O' Callaghan. I expressed the view that this was not a matter for the Bank and that the monies referred to were not, in fact, due at that time. This conversation, in which Mr. Donogh also participated, was, as far as I was concerned, very unpleasant.

51. Shortly after my conversation with Mr. Donogh, I received a telephone call from Councillor John Gilbride, telling me that I had to come to an agreement with the bank and Mr. O'Callaghan or I would risk postponing the presentation of the rezoning motion until December 1991. Again, I made it clear that I did not understand why my dealings with AIB and Mr. O'Callaghan could have anything to do with the business of the Council. Following on from that, I received a fax from AIB signed by Mr. Donogh, sometime around 7/8pm on the evening of 15 February, 1991. The fax contained a demand for the repayment of the AIB loan, plus interest. Unfortunately, I cannot locate a copy of that faxed letter and I assume that it must have been mislaid or destroyed, with some of my other papers. While I believed that, if a Receiver was appointed, the bank and I would recover all of our money, the motion to rezone the site would obviously further enhance its value. In the circumstances, I concluded that the better course was to sign the revised Heads of Terms the bank had faxed to me. Again, I am not able to locate a copy of these 15 February, 1991, Heads of Terms, which I recall provided for Mr. O'Callaghan and AIB to acquire a substantial shareholding in Barkhill Limited, but more exact details of which I cannot recall.

52. I also recall receiving a telephone call from Councillor Colm McGrath on 16 February, 1991, and he informed me that the Council had agreed to put the rezoning motion on the Agenda late the previous night. On the same day, 16 February, 1991, I received a call from Mr. Kay who also informed me that the motion had been accepted and Mr. Kay invited me to come to Dublin for a meeting, in order to sort out the Heads of Terms. In the course of this conversation with Mr. Kay, I informed him that, as far as I was concerned, I had been coerced into signing the Heads of Agreement and that the terms of that agreement were not binding on me in the circumstances.
53. During the period between February and May of 1991, I was subjected to even more severe pressure from the Bank to come to some arrangement with Mr. O'Callaghan. At this stage, I had become convinced that there was some form of common interest as between Mr. O'Callaghan and the Bank and that the Bank was determined on bringing him into the Quarryvale project.
54. After a meeting with Mr. Kay at the Bankcentre in late April 1991, to which Mr. O' Callaghan had also turned up, Mr. O'Callaghan asked me to accompany him to the Dáil to meet some very important people whom he indicated were Senior Politicians. As I knew that Mr. O'Callaghan had very good political connections, and that the purpose of the meeting was to do with the Quarryvale project, I agreed to go. We went to Buswells Hotel, where Mr. O' Callaghan met with Mr. Lawlor. I remained at the door of the hotel while Mr. O'Callaghan spoke to Mr. Lawlor. I recall that Mr. Lawlor then got up, walked towards me, greeted me and then passed out through the doorway. Mr. Lawlor walked away at speed, in through the gate of Dáil Eireann with both myself and Mr. O'Callaghan following. We went through the Dáil building and out the back door through to the other side, eventually arriving at an office in Mount Street. We followed Mr. Lawlor up the stairs and into a room where we found Mr. Frank Dunlop sitting at a table. At this stage, I realised that we must be in Mr. Dunlop's office in Mount Street. Greetings were exchanged between Mr. O'Callaghan, Mr. Lawlor and Mr. Dunlop, and some conversation passed between them which was conducted out of my earshot. I believe I was in the office for about 30 minutes, during which time the others came in and out of a back room. Eventually, I decided I had had enough of whatever game was being played. I left the office and walked out onto the street whereupon Mr. O'Callaghan followed me and asked me what was the matter. I replied that "this is a f..... set up" and I told him I wanted nothing to do with Mr. Dunlop nor did I want him involved in any way in my business. At the time, I harboured a dim view of Mr. Dunlop and I had heard him mentioned as a "bagman" for politicians on the take. I also suspected that he had had a role in circulating information to the tax authorities in the UK which had led to the exorbitant tax assessments which had been sent to me and in generating publicity in relation to the subsequent difficulties I had had with the Revenue.

55. Mr. O'Callaghan said to me at that time "f... you! You will never build a f... foot on that site." This hardened my resolve against involving Mr. O'Callaghan in my development in any way, notwithstanding the immense pressure to which the Bank was subjecting me, to agree to Mr. O'Callaghan's involvement. The pressure was increased as 16 May, 1991 approached and the rezoning motion was scheduled to come before the County Council for a vote to re-zone Quarryvale for town centre development and to so include it in the draft Development Plan.

56. I should say that it was around this time that I yielded to the pressure to bring in Mr O'Callaghan on my development. My recollection is that I signed further Heads of Agreement with Mr O'Callaghan's company, Riga Limited and with AIB, before the rezoning motion went before the County Council on 16 May, 1991. This document (which was, I believe, prepared by AIB), stated that Mr. O'Callaghan's company, Riga Limited, had a 33 1/3% stake in Barkhill and that I have remaining 66 2/3% stake. I did not and do not agree that that represented the true position at that time, because I had not accepted the validity of the 15 February, 1991, Heads of Terms, because of the circumstances in which that document had been signed by me. In any case, the new Heads of Agreement proposed that, in consideration of Riga lending £1m to Barkhill, and in consideration of Riga guaranteeing Barkhill in the further sum of £1m, Riga would get a 44 4/9% share of Barkhill, AIB would get a 22 2/9% share of Barkhill and I would have the remaining 33 1/3% share. These terms are contained in a Heads of Agreement dated 31 May, 1991 but my recollection is that I had agreed to the terms earlier in May and signed a document containing those terms at that time. This agreement contained detailed provisions concerning the financing of Barkhill and the future conduct of its affairs. It was difficult for me to accept these terms. However, by this time, I am reached the bitter conclusion that Mr. O' Callaghan had, through his political connections, the power of veto over the Westpark/Quarryvale project and that I had no alternative but to seek to obtain his co-operation.

57. I travelled over to Dublin on 14 May, 1991, in advance of the rezoning motion, coming before the Council on 16 May, 1991. My understanding of the County Council's procedure was that the Motion was presented for consideration in February, 1991, to effectively transfer the designation for a town/shopping centre from Neilstown to Westpark/Quarryvale and that needed to be approved by the County Council at the May meeting held three months later.
58. On the morning of 16 May, 1991, I met with Mr O'Callaghan at the Royal Dublin Hotel, where he had retained a large upstairs room. In the course of the day, a procession of Councillors came in and out of the room to consult with Mr O'Callaghan and his associates. Throughout the day, Mr Lawlor was also present and I recall that John Gilbride, Frank Dunlop and Mr Deane worked in close consultation with Mr O'Callaghan.
59. The scheduled meeting of Dublin County Council proceeded on the evening of 16 May, 1991. The Motion relating to the lands at Quarryvale, was proposed by Councillor Colm McGrath and seconded by Councillor Tom Hand, and in essence proposed the rezoning of Quarryvale for a major town centre, business and industrial park. The County Manager stated his objection to the rezoning of Quarryvale on the ground that to do so would create a major change in the new town strategy and would disrupt the form, balance and nature of the entire area. He also noted that the Dublin Planning Officer was strongly of the view that the town centre designation should remain on the original designated site i.e. Neilstown, and that it would be illogical and contrary to proper planning to locate two major town centres so close to each other.

60. Following on from the Manager's report, Messrs. McGrath, Hand and Hanrahan submitted an amending motion curtailing the area to be developed at Quarryvale and providing that it not exceed the total area for commercial development which would be appropriate to the Lucan/Clondalkin town centre site designated by the 1983 development plan (to which I have been referring as the Neilstown site).
61. Eventually, the rezoning motion was passed, together with the limitation on the amount of land to be developed. While I was happy that the motion had gone through, I was unhappy that the site to be developed, had been restricted to 500,000 square feet. Nevertheless, I recall meeting with Councillors that evening, who called into Mr O'Callaghan's suite at the Royal Dublin Hotel, and both Mr O'Callaghan and I thanked them for getting the motion through. Subsequently, I attended a function which was organised by Mr O'Callaghan to celebrate the passing of the rezoning motion
62. Since I had signed the Heads of Agreement in May 1991, I had avoided signing any formal agreement to give effect to those Heads. While AIB and Mr O'Callaghan were anxious to bind me to a deal which would mean handing over majority control of Barkhill to a combination of AIB and Mr O'Callaghan's company, Riga Limited, I was doing everything in my power to try to find an alternative investor. Eddie Kay of AIB sent a letter to me, complaining of my failure to sign a Shareholders Agreement and giving me an ultimatum expiring on the 13 September, 1991.

63. So it was in early September, 1991, that I was effectively summoned to attend a meeting at Bankcentre to negotiate the formal agreement giving effect to the Heads of Agreement signed in May 1991.
64. When I went to AIB that afternoon, I met with Eddie Kay and he showed me into a room where we were joined by a man who was introduced as Dave McGrath and who described himself as an "AIB troubleshooter". I had a very contentious discussion with Mr. McGrath, with him insisting that I was obliged to enter into an agreement with Barkhill whereas I was insisting that the various heads of agreement signed by me previously were unenforceable due to the circumstances in which I had signed them and the lack of independent legal advice.
65. AIB expressed discomfort with the fact that I did not have legal representation and Mr McGrath and Mr Kay then attempted to make contact with Seamus Maguire, who had previously handled the conveyancing of the properties at both Bachelor's Walk and Quarryvale. I well knew that Seamus Maguire's practice did not involve much of commercial law but at the same time, it appeared better to have the assistance of a solicitor rather than to negotiate by myself.
66. It was not until 7:00 p.m. that Mr Maguire was located and he agreed to come in to meet with me at William Fry's offices (the solicitors acting for AIB) at approximately 8:00 p.m. that evening. After Mr Maguire arrived, he participated in the negotiations which eventually resulted in a copper fastening of the May 1991 Heads of Agreement, requiring Mr O'Callaghan's company, Riga Limited, to provide a loan to Barkhill in the amount of £1 million and to provide a guarantee for £1 million plus interest to AIB in respect of all borrowings of Barkhill from AIB. I was eventually persuaded by Mr Maguire that in the best interests of my family, and having regard to the pressure being exerted by the UK tax authorities on my other business and financial interests, I should sign up to this agreement and the agreement was executed late that night of 13 September, 1991.

67. The minutes of a meeting of the Board of Directors of Barkhill Limited indicate that the meeting was held at 11:10 p.m. on the night of 13 September, 1991. At that meeting, it was agreed that my wife and I would retain 40% of the shares in Barkhill, Mr. O'Callaghan's company, Riga Limited, was to be issued with 40% of the shares and AIB Capital Markets Plc, was to be issued with the balance of 20% of the shares. That was an increase of 6 2/3% in my shareholding from that disclosed in the May 1991 Heads of Agreement, and a consequent reduction in the shareholdings allocated to AIB and to Mr. O'Callaghan's company.
68. I returned to the bank the following day, 14 September, 1991, at the request of Mr. Kay, to tie up some loose ends. I saw Mr. Lawlor's car parked in the car park at AIB Headquarters, as was Mr. Dunlop's car. While I did not meet Mr. Lawlor at the Bank, I did see him leaving the Bank. I believed that Mr. Lawlor had been meeting at the Bank with Messrs. Dunlop, Kay, McGrath, Deane and O'Callaghan. After Mr. Lawlor left, Eddie Kay met me in the foyer of the building and asked me to join Frank Dunlop, John Deane, Owen O'Callaghan, Dave McGrath and himself for a drink at the nearby Horse Show House public house. I declined that invitation but did agree to visit the Dáil in the company of Mr. O' Callaghan. I recall that Mr. Dunlop led us into the Dáil where we met Liam Lawlor and we went to his office. Mr. O'Callaghan then left the office and as I did not know the reasons for my presence there I became somewhat edgy. I asked Mr. Dunlop why I was there but he would not give me a straight answer. I distrusted Mr. Dunlop and I got fed up and I left the office. In the corridor I met with Mr. O'Callaghan who was there talking to Albert Reynolds. When I passed Mr. O'Callaghan, he asked me to wait for a little while but I declined and made my way out of the building. Mr. O'Callaghan followed me out and we had a sharp exchange of words. I put it to Mr. O'Callaghan that he was trying to use me as "a Patsy". Mr. O'Callaghan responded by saying that I would never put "a f..... foot on that site and neither will any f..... unionist. That is the best site in Europe"

69. The agreement which I was forced to conclude with Riga Limited on 13 September, 1991, included the following terms:

- It was noted that my wife and I had advanced to Barkhill sums of money totalling £5.25m, but those loans were subordinated to loans given by AIB to Barkhill.
- Riga was to pay to my wife and I, the sum of £100,000 on 16 September, 1991. When I received that money, it went to pay professional costs incurred over the previous period.
- There was also provision for Riga to make further repayments of the monies owed to us, on a phased basis, but that was conditional on procuring institutional support, and on my wife and I transferring all our shareholding in Barkhill to Riga for a nominal consideration.
- The Share Subscription Agreement to which my wife and I were parties, and which was executed on 13 September, 1991, with Riga, AIB Capital Markets, Barkhill and Mr. O'Callaghan, in essence set out the basis on which Riga was to get a 40% of the shares of Barkhill, and AIB Capital Markets was to get 20% of Barkhill's shares. At Clause 5.1, it was provided that so long as AIB Capital Markets was a shareholder in Barkhill, Riga and Mr. O'Callaghan and anyone associated with them, was precluded from undertaking any development of property in the region of the Quarryvale site.
- Clause 5.5 obliged Riga Limited to provide a loan to Barkhill in the amount of £1m and it was further expressly provided at clause 5.6 that the loans made by my wife and I to the company, and the Riga loan were to be subordinated to the loans made by AIB.

- Clause 5.7 provided that Riga Limited was also to provide a guarantee of repayment of the AIB loans up to a maximum amount of £1m, together with interest.
- Clause 5.8 expressly provided that Riga Limited and Mr. O'Callaghan would procure that Merrygrove Estates Limited would not take any action without the prior consent of the Board of Barkhill, and the purpose of this was to effectively prevent any development proceeding at the Neilstown site, unless it had Barkhill approval.
- Clause 6.2 appointed Riga as a Project Manager for Barkhill, subject to the control and direction of the Board of Barkhill. It was expressly provided that Riga would not be entitled to charge any project management fees in respect of that appointment.
- Clause 6.5(d) provided that the quorum necessary for the transaction of Board business would be two directors, one of whom would have to be the nominee of AIB Capital Markets. This clause was significant in the light of the dissatisfaction which I later expressed in relation to the conduct of business at board meetings.

70. While I have outlined some of the principal terms of the agreement of 13 September, 1991, a separate agreement was entered into between my wife and I on the one hand, and Riga Limited on the other hand. My agreement with Riga Limited expressly provided that my wife and I had advanced to Barkhill, £5.25m, which amount was subordinated to the AIB loans to Barkhill. In accordance with the terms of that agreement, I was to receive £100,000 on or before 16 September, 1991, and subject to obtaining institutional support to secure repayment, Mr. O'Callaghan was then to buy out my shareholding for £5.15m. It was expressly provided at clause 4 that that agreement was subject to the approval of AIB Capital Markets under the terms of the Share Subscription Agreement entered into on the same date.

71. From this point on, I felt myself excluded from the management and control of Barkhill because Mr. O'Callaghan and AIB had a majority on the Board of Directors and could push through any decisions that they wanted, notwithstanding any objections which I might raise to them. As a practical matter, I was spending most of my time at my residence in Luton, I had little or no money and I was preoccupied with fighting the demands of the UK Inland Revenue authorities. My then solicitor, Mr. Seamus Maguire acted as secretary to the company but in essence, Mr. O'Callaghan controlled the company's affairs in his role as Managing Director.
72. Riga Limited had been appointed the Project Manager for Barkhill and this led to Mr. O'Callaghan bringing in his own advisory team including Ambrose Kelly as architects and McCarthy & Company as civil engineers. While I accepted this as an inevitable consequence of the agreement I had signed, I was dismayed by the continuing refusal of Mr. O'Callaghan and AIB to sanction the payment of costs due to my team of professional advisers who were discharged once Mr. O'Callaghan came onto the board of Barkhill. Some of my previous advisers were forced to threaten proceedings in an effort to get their bills paid and in this regard, for example, on the 15 of November, 1991 White McMillan & Wheeler Solicitors wrote on behalf of W.D.R. & R.T. Taggart, to Barkhill seeking payment of their fees in the amount of Stg£221,119.93. There was no doubt whatsoever that these monies were due and owing to W.D.R. & R.T. Taggart and that they should have been paid, but AIB and Mr. O'Callaghan refused to authorise the discharge of those fees.
73. I became aware that substantial amounts of money were being paid out of the Barkhill account to various people, including Frank Dunlop, Ambrose Kelly and a company called Shefran Limited. I recall querying such payments from time to time, particularly those payments going to Mr. Dunlop and Shefran Limited. I never got a satisfactory answer as to what services Shefran Limited was providing to Barkhill and I was also sceptical about any monies being paid out to Mr. Dunlop.
74. I persistently raised the issue with AIB, in particular, Mr. McGrath and Mr. Kay, as I was concerned by what I saw appearing in draft accounts which I received for the year ended 30 April, 1992. Queries were raised by Barkhill's auditors, Messrs. Deloitte & Touche, in relation to the accounts and I pursued these queries with AIB. The queries were, I believe, drawn up by Deloitte & Touche and contained in a document which is headed "unresolved audit matters".

75. Eventually, I received a letter from Eddie Kay dated 10 June 1992 under cover of which I recall Mr. Kay provided me with a copy of an invoice for £30,000 drawn in the name of Shefran Limited. Unfortunately, I did not retain a copy of that invoice. I do however have a copy of an invoice received from Frank Dunlop & Associates dated 1 October, 1992, which was for £21,063.36, in respect of which VAT was not charged. This was another curious aspect of the bills sent by Mr. Dunlop. However, I never received a satisfactory answer from Mr. McGrath or Mr. Kay or indeed Michael O'Farrell, who then replaced Mr. Kay, as to why Barkhill was paying such large amounts of monies to Mr. Dunlop and to Shefran Limited. Of course, I am now aware that Shefran was a company owned by Mr. Dunlop.
76. At this time, I was having major difficulties with the UK Revenue which ultimately culminated in my being made bankrupt. In the circumstances, it was very difficult for me to attend to the business of Barkhill to any extent or to follow up the concerns that I had regarding the payments to Mr. Dunlop and Shefran. I did however continue to raise such issues at board meetings of Barkhill from time to time, particularly in the context of the contrast between the approach of the company to such payments and its failure to discharge its lawful debts to the professional advisers which had been engaged by the company before I had been forced to relinquish control.
77. At other board meetings which I attended during 1992, I expressed concern about the delay in getting the Quarryvale project off the ground. My concern was grounded on the fact that Tallaght had obtained a special tax designation and I was concerned that if the Blanchardstown site also received tax designation, all available investment would flock to both of those sites.

78. I recall Mr. O'Callaghan being adamant that Blanchardstown would never get tax designation and during the course of one board meeting which Mr. O'Callaghan and I attended, I recall him leaving the room and being absent for approximately half an hour. When Mr. O'Callaghan returned, he announced to the board meeting that Blanchardstown was definitely not getting tax designation and he had that direct from "the horse's mouth". I asked him who he meant by the horse's mouth and he said he had been given an assurance by Bertie Ahern, the then Minister for Finance. I recall that those present at that meeting included Michael O'Farrell, Mary Basquille, John Deane, Barry Pitcher and Seamus Maguire, although I cannot recall the exact date of the meeting.
79. It was characteristic of Mr. O'Callaghan that he would take every opportunity to remind me how significant were his political connections. It was by this time very clear to me that he had far greater political influence and support than I had initially understood and that I had been wholly naïve in believing that I could somehow counter that influence. Mr. O' Callaghan had, I believe, considerable influence both at Local Government and Central Government levels and was able to, and did in fact, use that influence to stymie my plans for the development of Westpark/Quarryvale and obtain the benefits of the development for himself. I now believe that, with the assistance of Mr. Dunlop, Mr. O' Callaghan was effectively able to control the manner in which Dublin County Council dealt with this development.
80. Typical of Mr. O'Callaghan's style was that he told me in the course of 1992, that Liam Lawlor had been given £50,000 by Frank Dunlop and that Mr. Lawlor was extremely annoyed because he had claimed that he had been promised £100,000 but he had not received it. Mr. O'Callaghan told me that he was in a back office when Mr. Lawlor came to collect the cash from Mr. Dunlop and that, when a row developed between Mr. Lawlor and Mr. Dunlop, he remained in the back office listening to it. Mr. O'Callaghan found it very humorous indeed that Mr. Dunlop later rounded on him for not coming to his assistance in warding off an angry Mr. Lawlor.

81. I also recall Mr. O'Callaghan telling me, again I believe that it was some time in 1992, that he had given £50,000 to Bertie Ahern in 1989 and that he had given him a further £30,000 some time later, when Mr. Ahern had apparently been instrumental in blocking Green Property Plc getting special tax designation for Blanchardstown. I inferred from what Mr. O'Callaghan told me that, on the basis that he was paying monies to Bertie Ahern, he had been able to call on the support of Mr. Ahern in his efforts to frustrate my project for Westpark/Quarryvale, even though I thought at one stage that Mr. Ahern was supportive of the project.
82. I never paid Colm McGrath any money, but I do recall at some time in 1992, when I was travelling in a taxi to Dublin Airport with Mr O'Callaghan, he told me that he was meeting with Mr. McGrath, and that Mr. McGrath was always after money. Mr. O'Callaghan then put his hand into his pocket and he pulled out what looked to me like a cheque or a banker's draft. While I did not see the sum of money written on the cheque or draft, Mr. O'Callaghan told me that he had already given Mr. McGrath £20,000 and he indicated to me that the cheque or draft represented a further £10,000.
83. Throughout 1992, nothing much happened insofar as I could see, in relation to pushing ahead with the planning and rezoning of West Park/Quarryvale, even though large amounts of fees were being paid out to Mr. Dunlop and others.
84. During the early part of 1993, there was a media campaign which focused on capping the size of the Westpark/Quarryvale Development. The apparent basis for the campaign was that if the development were to go ahead in the form it was conceived, it would suck the business out of country towns up to 50 miles away. While I cannot say for certain who was behind the campaign, I believe that it was orchestrated by Mr. O'Callaghan with the assistance of Mr. Dunlop. I suspect that the purpose behind the campaign was to maintain a low value on my shareholding in Barkhill, so that Mr. O'Callaghan would be able to buy me out at an undervalue. Eventually the matter came before a special meeting of Dublin County Council held on the 19 October, 1993. In those minutes, the report of the County Manager recommended the retention of the re-zoning of Quarryvale, but with a retail shopping element restricted to 250,000 sq. ft. and that report was subsequently adopted by the Council. This was a very disappointing outcome as far as I was concerned.

85. I expressed opposition to the capping of the site area and I expressed this opposition at board meetings which I attended at AIB Bankcentre throughout 1993. However, my efforts to persuade the Council not to adopt the capping proposal were frustrated, and the vote to cap the Quarryvale site went ahead and the development was capped at 250,000 sq. ft.
86. Ultimately, my investment was tied up with Barkhill and Mr. O'Callaghan and AIB refused to unlock my investment until pressure was brought to bear on them by a solicitor whom I engaged in 1996, Noel Smyth of Noel Smyth & Partners. At that time, there was a proposal that a major investor, the Duke of Westminster, would get involved in the Quarryvale development. The involvement of that investor, coupled with pressure brought to bear by Mr. Smyth on my behalf, resulted in my recovering the value of my investment in Barkhill, in return for the sale of my shareholding in that company.

Re: Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters & Payments

Dear Sirs,

We refer to our telephone conversation of even date which your Mr Patrick Hanratty S.C.

1. We confirm that we have spoken on the telephone to our client this morning and he has told us that he cannot locate the small blue notebook in which he believes he recorded an account number given to him by Mr Liam Lawlor T.D. While we have asked our client to continue searching for this information, he was not hopeful that he would find it.

Our client has informed us that the assortment of documentation through which he has been searching, has mainly to do with the Grosvenor House deal and for this reason, he did not think he would find the notebook amongst those documents. Our instructions are that our client's son destroyed much of the documentation which was in our client's possession, and which related to his business dealings in Ireland over the past 10/15 years.

 Tribunal of Inquiry Into Certain Planning Matters and Payments

Dear Sirs,

We refer to your letter dated 19 January, 2004.

We have taken our client's instructions regarding queries raised by you in relation to an entry in our client's note book on 4 February, 1989 in which reference was made to bank account [REDACTED]. Adopting the numbering used by you in your letter, we respond as follows:

1. Mr. Gilmartin instructs us that he was the holder of the above account.
2. Not applicable.
3. We are instructed that the account was set up by our client for the purposes of a business venture which was to involve the Gilmartin Settlement Trust and trading in property bonds. The account was set up for the purposes of receiving funds as part of that business venture. We are further instructed that our client was later advised by Cameron Markby Hewitt Solicitors in London not to proceed with the business venture as they believed that it might not be bona fide. No funds were ever transferred into this account.

Yours faithfully,

A&L Goodbody

Thomas P Gilmartin
 Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments

Dear Sirs,

We refer to your letter dated 23 January, 2004 which raises queries in relation to certain matters contained in our client's statement of 17 May, 2001.

Firstly, in relation to the queries concerning payments made by our client to Liam Lawlor, we respond on foot of our client's instructions as follows:

1. The payments were made to Mr. Lawlor at various meetings that took place in Dublin. Our client is unable to be more specific than this.
2. The funds emanated from Mr. Gilmartin's Bank of Ireland account in Blanchardstown, account no. [REDACTED]
3. The monies were paid from Mr. Gilmartin's own funds and he was later reimbursed for these payments by Arlington Securities plc.

In relation to the queries raised by you concerning the payment made to Padraig Flynn we respond on foot of our client's instructions as follows.

1. The donation of IR£50,000 to the Flanna Fall Party was paid from Mr. Gilmartin's Bank of Ireland, Blanchardstown account no. [REDACTED]. This was paid from his own funds.
2. Our client was not reimbursed by any third party in respect of this payment.

Yours faithfully,

Thomas P Gilmartin
Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments

Dear Sirs,

We refer to your letter dated 15 January, 2004.

We have taken our client's instructions in relation to the queries raised by you and we respond as follows:

- As far as our client is aware there was only one cheque book operating from his Bank of Ireland account in Blanchardstown, account no. [REDACTED]
- Mr. Gilmartin does not believe that Mr. Sheeran ever signed cheques drawing funds from this account. Mr. Gilmartin had an arrangement with Paul Sheeran whereby Mr. Sheeran would pay out money on behalf of Mr. Gilmartin and he would later deduct this amount from Mr. Gilmartin's account. Before paying out any such monies, Mr. Sheeran would first telephone Mr. Gilmartin to seek his authorization for the payment.

Mr. Gilmartin recalls providing Mr. Sheeran with a written authority in relation to this arrangement, but he does not have a copy of that authority.

Yours faithfully,

Mr Thomas P Gilmartin
 Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments

Dear Sirs,

We refer to two letters received from you both dated 27 February, 2004, raising additional queries in relation to our letter to the Tribunal of 20 February, 2004.

In relation to the additional queries raised by you, we are instructed by our client to respond as follows:-

1. As stated in our letter of 20 February, 2004, our client was assured that if he was able to secure investment for the Bachelor's Walk area, that all "roadblocks" would be removed.
2. We are instructed by our client that he was given these assurances by Bertie Ahern when he met with him at the Department of Labour in the Autumn of 1987, by Padraig Flynn on numerous occasions when he met with him at his offices at the Customs House and at Leinster House, by Ray McSharry when he met with him in December, 1987 at his office in the Department of Finance and by Brian Lenihan on several occasions. We are instructed by our client that while he did not have any formal meeting with Brian Lenihan he did have chance meetings with him on several occasions, usually in the Shelbourne Hotel, and that these assurances were given by Mr Lenihan during those informal meetings.
3. In relation to the rezoning of the Quarryvale lands, we are instructed by our client that he was given the hope/expectation regarding the planning status of the Quarryvale lands during the various meetings that he had with Mr Flynn, Mr Lenihan and Mr Ahern as mentioned at number 2 above.

Yours faithfully,

Dear Sirs,

We refer to your letter dated 26 February 2004 and to the attached memorandum prepared by "JK", dated 15 December, 1987.

In relation to the queries raised by you in relation to that memorandum, we are instructed by our client as follows:-

1. Our client did not personally attend the meeting which was due to take place on Friday 18 December, 1987.
2. We are instructed by our client that he believes that the meeting between representatives of the Department of Finance and the Revenue Commissioners scheduled for Friday, 18 December 1987 was an internal meeting and that he has no information in relation to the matters discussed at the meeting or the conclusions or decisions made at that meeting.

TRIBUNAL OF INQUIRY INTO CERTAIN PLANNING MATTERS AND PAYMENTS

EVIDENCE OF THOMAS P GILMARTIN

10 March, 2004

I remember that Joe Burke came to meet me at my Arlington office located on St Stephen's Green, some time in September, 1990. I recall that Mr Burke admired a model of the Quarryvale Development which was on display in my office. At that time, Arlington had all but decided to withdraw from any involvement in the Quarryvale project. On that account, I wanted to remove the model from the office in Dublin and bring it back to England with me.

During the course of some chitchat with Mr Burke, he mentioned half a million pounds. Before I could respond to him, my telephone rang. It was Barry Boland, Arlington's representative in Dublin, who was telephoning to ask me to turn off the lights in the office, when I left.

Picking up again on my conversation with Mr Burke, I said to him that I was not concerned about recovering the half a million pounds which was approximately the amount which I had submitted with my tender for the Dublin Corporation lands. I had thought that Mr Burke was referring to that transaction, when he had made a reference to half a million pounds earlier. I told him that even if my tender was refused, I was confident that I would recover that half a million.

I remember that Mr Burke followed up by saying he was not talking about the Dublin Corporation transaction, but asked me would I not be prepared to pay half a million pounds because I knew that Bertie Ahern was looking after me.

Naturally, I was taken aback by that statement and I thought that if the demand was being made on behalf of Bertie Ahern, I should hear it from him first hand. I told Mr Burke that I would consider the request. Mr Burke then asked me whether or not I could meet with Bertie Ahern. I said that I could not on this occasion because I had to go back to England that evening, and in fact, I was about to leave for the airport. Mr Burke offered to take me to the airport, and on the way, he said he would take me to meet Mr Ahern.

We then made arrangements to leave the office and Mr Burke gave me assistance to take from the office, the model of the Quarryvale Development which I was bringing back to England.

Mr Burke then drove to the Deadman's Inn Public House and he went inside. I was concerned that I would miss my plane back to Luton. I recall that Mr Burke was in the pub for about 20 minutes. When he came out, he told me that Mr Ahern was not inside but he thought he might be in another pub.

I recall Mr Burke then driving me to another pub located in the vicinity of Beaumont Hospital. Again, I remember Mr Burke going inside and being in the pub for about 10 minutes, while I waited outside in his car. When Mr Burke came out, he told me that Mr Ahern would be there shortly. However, I was very anxious at that stage that I would miss my flight back to Luton.

I told Mr Burke that I had a commitment to attend a meeting the following morning which I could not miss and I had to insist that he drive me immediately to the airport. Mr Burke tried to persuade me to wait for Mr Ahern's arrival but when I refused to do so, Mr Burke got very upset. During the drive to the airport, I recall Mr Burke not saying very much and that a sort of unhappy silence was maintained. Before I left his car, I said to Mr Burke in rather bitter terms, that "this is a great little country isn't it".

TRIBUNAL OF INQUIRY INTO CERTAIN PLANNING MATTERS AND PAYMENTS

EVIDENCE OF THOMAS P GILMARTIN

24 March, 2004

This statement is made by me at the request of the Tribunal following evidence given by me to the Tribunal on Tuesday, 16 March 2004 in relation to discussions I had with Mary Harney at a house warming party in Dalkey.

I met Mary Harney at a house warming party in Dalkey in December 1988. I began to talk to Ms Harney about my business dealings in Dublin. I knew that Ms Harney was opposed to my scheme (either Bachelor's Walk or Quarryvale I cannot quite recollect which one) and I questioned her as to what her objections to the scheme were. During that conversation, I also informed her of some of the problems that I had encountered whilst doing business in Dublin up to that point in time. These included the activities of Liam Lawlor. Ms Harney did not respond when I spoke to her about these problems.

In my evidence to the Tribunal, I told the Tribunal that I had told Ms Harney about my visit to the Dáil. However, having reflected on the matter, I now believe that I did not tell Ms Harney about my meeting with the then Taoiseach and the Ministers in Dáil Eireann as this discussion with Mary Harney was prior to that meeting. At the time that I gave that evidence to the Tribunal, I may have been confused with another house warming party which also took place in Dalkey a year later and I mistakenly assumed that it was at this party that I had met Ms Harney, although I now believe that Ms. Harney was not present at this second house warming.

Therefore, Mary Harney was not one of the people that I told about a meeting with the then Taoiseach and the Ministers in the Dáil and about the demand made for IR£5,000,000.00.

TRIBUNAL OF INQUIRY INTO CERTAIN
PLANNING MATTERS AND PAYMENTS

EVIDENCE OF THOMAS P GILMARTIN

26 May, 2004

This statement is made supplemental to and for the purposes of clarification of certain matters addressed in my statement to the Tribunal dated 10 March, 2004.

At the time that I made that statement to the Tribunal I was in the middle of cross examination. Having reflected on that statement, I see there are a number of inaccuracies which I now wish to correct as follows:

- (a) The reference to "Quarryvale" at line 4 of paragraph 1 should read "Bachelors Walk".
- (b) In paragraph 6 it is stated that I was bringing the model of the Quarryvale Development back to England. In fact, the model was brought to a storage unit in Arlington's office located on St Stephen's Green.
- (c) The reference to the "Deadman's Inn Public House" in the first line of paragraph 7 should read "Fagan's Public House".
- (d) In paragraphs 8 & 9 I refer to Mr Burke's "car". However, I recall that Mr Burke was driving a "pick-up truck" at that time.

I also wish to clarify the comments made by me about my conversation with Joe Burke as follows:

As set out in my statement, during the course of some chit-chat with Joe Burke, Mr Burke mentioned a figure of £500,000 to me. This figure was mentioned on several occasions by Mr Burke during that conversation and I initially believed that the reference to £500,000 was to the deposit which I had paid for the tender of the Dublin Corporation lands. As the conversation developed, I became aware that Mr Burke seemed, in a roundabout fashion, to be asking for £500,000. I did not let on to Mr Burke that I had formed that impression and the chit-chat continued.

Mr Burke, later in that conversation, clarified that he was not talking about the Dublin Corporation transaction. He said Quarryvale was going to be a big scheme and mentioned "big bucks" and said that surely Bertie's help was worth something. I said to him "well I would pay £500,000 to get out of here if I got my money back" (I was

referring to the money that I had spent on assembling the Quarryvale site).

Mr. Burke then said "would you?" and I replied "would I what". Mr. Burke then asked "would you pay?", and I understood this to mean would I pay £500,000. Mr. Burke then said "you know you can trust Bertie" and "you know that Bertie is looking after you".

Mr. Burke then asked if I would meet Bertie Ahern and said that we could meet him on the way to the airport. Therefore, while Mr Burke did not specifically ask me to pay £500,000, this is what I understood to be the gist of the conversation.

I believed that the money was being sought on behalf of Bertie Ahern. However, I wanted to confirm whether it was actually Mr Ahern or Mr Burke himself who was seeking the £500,000 and therefore, I agreed to go with Mr Burke when he offered to take me to see Mr Ahern on the way to the airport.

Irish Times Report of 3 December 2004

Dear Sirs

Further to our letter to you of 9 December, we have since had the opportunity of taking instructions from our client.

1. Our client instructs us that in response to a question, he confirmed to Mr Cullen that he would be back before the Tribunal to give evidence, but he did not state that he would be back in February, contrary to what is quoted in your letter of 6 December 2004.
2. Our client recently spent a week in Hospital and he is currently taking medication, following on from the serious heart surgery which he had to undergo. Our client has been told that he will be contacted early in the New Year to set up an appointment for him to see his cardiologist, Dr Conor O'Shea. We have already asked Dr O'Shea to provide a written opinion on Mr Gilmartin's state of health, after he has had an opportunity to examine our client.
3. In your letter of 8 December 2004, you have referred to information alleged to have been provided by our client to a journalist, and that has been quoted as if it were a fact. Our client categorically denies stating to the journalist, Mr Cullen, that he was in possession of any new information in relation to the attendance of the Taoiseach at a meeting in Dail Eireann in 1989. Our client instructs us that there is no question whatsoever of him communicating any new evidence coming to his attention, to a journalist rather than to the Tribunal.

Yours faithfully

Dear Sirs

We refer to your letter dated 15 February 2005 requesting information in relation to the details surrounding the IR£50,000 payment made by Mr. Gilmartin to Mr. Flynn in or around June 1989.

Adopting the numbering used by you in your letter, we are instructed by our client to respond as follows:

1. Assuming you are referring to the audited accounts of Barkhill Limited, we are instructed by our client that Deloitte & Touche were the company's auditors during the period 1989/1990. We attach an authority from our client authorising the Tribunal to take up the audited accounts of Barkhill Limited from Deloitte & Touche. We are instructed by our client that to the best of his knowledge, that company's accounts were not audited until in or about 1992.
2. We are instructed by our client that while he does not recall giving specific instructions to Deloitte & Touche in respect of the treatment of the IR£50,000 political donation to Fianna Fáil, he presumes that this was treated as an expense. We are instructed that again while Mr. Gilmartin has no specific recollection in relation to the treatment of this particular expense, he believes that it would have been included in a list of expenses incurred by him which he would have given to Deloitte & Touche.
3. We are instructed by our client that he is unaware of how the IR£50,000 was dealt with for tax purposes.
4. We attach a copy of our client's consent authorising the UK Revenue Authorities to provide

Dear Sirs

We refer to your letters dated 27 September, 2004 and 17 November, 2004.

We are instructed by our client that there is absolutely no truth in the allegation made by Mr. Flynn that Mr. Gilmartin was told by Mr. Pat Hanratty, then Senior Counsel to the Tribunal, that if he was to say that the cheque in the amount of IR£50,000 was given to Mr. Flynn for his personal election campaign that it would be/might be interpreted as a bribe.

We are instructed by our client that Mr. Hanratty did question Mr. Gilmartin in relation to the payment of IR£50,000, but that he never advised Mr. Gilmartin to say anything in relation to that payment one way or the other.

EVIDENCE OF THOMAS P. GILMARTIN IN RELATION TO THE PLANNING STATUS AND THE PROPOSED DESIGNATION OF THE LANDS AT WESTPARK, COUNTY DUBLIN AS REQUESTED BY THE TRIBUNAL IN ITS LETTER DATED 28 SEPTEMBER, 2004

The lands at Westpark which I had identified as a proposed site for a shopping centre/retail park, consisted of approximately 180 acres of land. Most of this land (approximately 120 acres) was zoned for industrial use and the remaining 60 acres (approximately) was zoned for residential use. As part of the overall development at Westpark, it was intended that approximately 120 acres would be rezoned for retail shopping and the remaining 60 acres would be rezoned for retail warehousing.

I was advised by my planning consultant Kieran O'Malley that the following methods could be used to bring about that rezoning.

1. That the land could be designated as an enterprise zone similar to the Custom House Docks area. While this would have proved extremely useful to the project, it became clear at an early stage that this redesignation was unlikely to happen as there would be too much controversy associated with such a status being given to lands which were to be developed by a private developer. If such status was granted to lands owned by a private developer it was thought that there would be a flood of similar requests from other private developers.
2. The second option was to bring a motion for material contravention of the Dublin Development Plan.
3. The third option was to await the review of the Dublin Development Plan which I was told would result in a rezoning of the land. This third option was recommended as a preferred option by a number of people including Bertie Ahern, Pdraig Flynn, Brian Lenihan and my planning consultant.

I was also told by Mr. Ahern, Mr. Flynn and Mr. Lenihan that all three town centres (i.e. Tallaght, Blanchardstown and Westpark) would be designated for tax purposes. While I was not looking for this tax status for Westpark, it would have been a bonus.

I was continually told by Mr. Flynn, Mr. Lenihan and Mr. Ahern and various Dublin County Councillors that a review of the Dublin Development Plan in respect of Westpark was imminent throughout 1988 and 1989. While the Dublin Development Plan was reviewed in respect of the other areas in Dublin, including Tallaght and North Dublin, the rezoning of the lands in respect of West Dublin, was not forthcoming.

I had four meetings with Bertie Ahern, two in the Department of Labour in the autumn of 1987 and late 1988 and two in Fagan's Public House on 10 October, 1988 and on 28 September, 1989. The rezoning of the Westpark lands was not discussed at the first meeting. To the best of recollection it was discussed at all of the other meetings. I also discussed this matter with Pdraig Flynn on the numerous occasions when I met with him at his offices at the Customs House and at Leinster House and with Ray McSharry when I met with him in December, 1987 at his offices in the Department of Finance and when I met with him at his clinic in Sligo. I also discussed these issues with Brian Lenihan during chance meetings that I had with him on several occasions usually in the Shelbourne Hotel in Dublin.

Dear Sirs

We refer to your letter dated 29 July 2005.

Your letter of 29 July states that our client previously informed the Tribunal that in or around 1991 and 1992 IR£15,000 or IR£20,000 was given by Owen O'Callaghan to the then Minister for Industry & Commerce. You have now asked our client to identify this particular Minister and to provide any further details that our clients may have in respect of this payment.

We are instructed by our client that he was informed by Mr. O'Callaghan in or around 1991/1992 that he had already given a five figure sum to Michéal Martin. Our client is unaware as to whether there is any basis for the statement made by Mr. O'Callaghan. We are instructed by our client that he did not know who Mr. Martin was at that time but that he had assumed that he was a member of Government.

We are instructed by our client that he is unaware of when this payment was made or the circumstances in which it came to be made.

Dear Sirs

Our client has now reviewed most of the brief received from the Tribunal in relation to the Quarryvale II module. We are instructed by our client that he recalls a letter dated 15 February 1991 which was faxed by the AIB Bank to Mr. Gilmartin at approximately 7/8pm in the evening. In that letter our client recalls that it stated that Bank was calling in its loan after Mr. Gilmartin had refused to sign the Heads of Agreement for the Shareholders Agreement.

This letter does not appear to be included in the brief received from the Tribunal. Our client did have a copy of this letter but we are instructed that it is no longer in his possession and that he has no knowledge of its whereabouts. Can you please confirm whether or not this letter was provided by the AIB Bank as part of its discovery

We await hearing from you.

Dear Sirs,

We refer to your letters dated 1 June 2004 in which you requested narrative statements from both Mr & Mrs Gilmartin. As stated in our letter to you of 8 June 2004, Mr Gilmartin is responding on his own behalf and on behalf of Mrs Gilmartin.

Adopting the numbering/lettering used by you in your letters of 1 June 2004, we are instructed by our client to respond as follows:-

- A. Our client understands that Mr Noel Gilson is a friend of Liam Lawlor. However, we are instructed by our client that neither he nor Mrs Gilmartin has or had any involvement whatsoever with Mr Gilson. We are instructed that neither our client nor Mrs Gilmartin either know, or have ever met, Mr Gilson.
- B. We are instructed by our client that he did not sign the cheque dated 7 September 1988 in the amount of IRE7,700, a copy of which was attached to your letter of 1 June. Our client has reflected carefully on the matter, and instructs us that he believes that the circumstances in which this cheque came to be written are as follows:-
- On 6 September 1988, Mr Gilmartin was due to meet Mr Lawlor in London to pay him consultancy fees on behalf of Arlington. Mr Gilmartin wrote out a cheque for the amount of IRE7,500 (we are instructed that this was an error on Mr Gilmartin's part as the cheque should have been in the amount of IRE7,000) but was unable to meet Mr Lawlor on that date.

Mr Gilmartin believes that on the following day Mr Lawlor went into the Bank of Ireland branch in Blanchardstown and requested the manager, Mr Paul Sheeran, to provide him with a cheque to cover the consultancy fees. We are instructed that Mr Lawlor also claimed that expenses were due to him. As per Mr Gilmartin's arrangement with the Bank of Ireland, Mr Sheeran phoned Mr Gilmartin to obtain authority to write the cheque.

Mr Gilmartin believes that the cheque attached to your letter was signed by Paul Sheeran on his behalf and that this was in keeping with an authorisation given by our client to Mr Sheeran.

We are instructed that Mr Lawlor requested Mr Sheeran to leave the payee blank and that this is what Mr Sheeran did. We are further instructed that the cheque attached to your letter dated 7 September 1988, in the amount of IR£7,700, is the cheque that was signed by Mr Sheeran on that date. We are instructed that the figure of IR£7,700 includes two months consultancy fees paid on behalf of Arlington, plus IR£700 in respect of expenses.

- C. We are instructed by our client that he has no information in relation to the circumstances in which Mr Gilson came to endorse this cheque.
1. In your second letter of 1 June 2004 you indicated that the name on the cheque was that of Vera Gilmartin. As the payee was left blank on the cheque when it was issued by Mr Sheeran to Mr Lawlor, our client instructs us that neither he nor Mrs Gilmartin have any information on the identity of the payee. Notwithstanding the foregoing, we are instructed by our client that from reviewing a copy of the cheque, he does not believe that the name on the cheque is that of Vera Gilmartin. Our client believes that the payee on the cheque may in fact be "N Gilson".
 2. We are instructed by our client that neither he nor his wife have any knowledge whatsoever of the circumstances in which Mr Gilson came to endorse the cheque.
 3. We are instructed by our client that neither he nor his wife have any involvement and/or relationship whatsoever with Mr Gilson.

Yours faithfully,

Dear Sirs

We refer to your letter dated 8 May 2006 which was received by us on 9 May 2006.

You have stated in your letter that you have received an inquiry from a witness regarding claims made by our client that he tapes certain meetings. You have not identified in your letter who this witness is and therefore our client is not aware exactly what meetings you are referring to.

However, we are instructed by our client that he did tape certain meetings from time to time. We are also instructed by our client that he no longer has these tapes as they were destroyed by his son in a fire.

3 This is a statement of Thomas Gilmartin, No. 22 Whitehill

4 Avenue, Luton, Bedfordshire, LU13 5P.

6 This statement is taken by Noel Smyth at 20 Upper Grosvenor

7 Street, London SW1, on Wednesday the 20th of May, 1998.

8 Time 12:00.

10 Background.

11

12 Prior to coming to Ireland to carry out proposed development

13 work I was a successful property entrepreneur and engineer in 14 England.

16 I had accumulated over a number of years several millions of 17 pounds to various projects and I had worked with some of the 18 largest companies in the UK. These included Arlington

19 Securities plc, British Aerospace, Ford Group, to name but a 20 few, Vauxhall Chrysler etc..

21

22 In 1985 I decided to --

23 A. -- enter into -- that the new motorway was going to 24 go through there, just along a walk down to where -- oh, yeah

25 Gland Lough actually was the bridge, they started to build a

1 bridge. They had -- there was some cranes down and a fucking
2 blingo. So I worked out the route of the road from the 3 bridge, from where they started to build the bridge, because 4 at that time they were just beginning to build the bridge. I
5 think this was 1986 now they were beginning to build -- you
6 know the bridge at Palmerstown? So I came back and now I
7 wanted to find out who owned the land on either side, and I
8 couldn't get -- the only thing I knew was cottages. So there
9 was a wee cottage and there was a gypsy going along the road.
10 So I done a deal with him for one of the first cottages right
11 on the corner of Fonthill Road for 50,000 pounds. He thought 12 fucking Santa Claus had arrived.

13 Q. Uh-huh.

14 A. But I thought I'd get the other one, you see.

15 Q. Uh-huh.

16 A. The other cottage as well. So that was -- anyway, 17 that was me first beginning. I went down to Paul Sheeran in 18 Blanchardstown in to the bank and I had a chat with Paul
19 Sheeran, because he was the only one I could trust.

20 Q. But you knew him beforehand?

21 A. Oh, yeah; I knew Paul for years. He was a friend
22 of mine for years.

23 Q. Okay.

24 A. He was a bank manager in Luton. He opened up for 25 the Bank of Ireland in Lucan. And Tom Tom Mulcahy.

1 Q. Uh-huh.

2 A. Now, because I was mates with them over here.

3 Q. Uh-huh.

4 A. Now head of the bank for AIB. They came over from 5 Athlone, both of them. And Tom Mulcahy was setting up the 6 Allied Irish Finance.

7 Q. Uh-huh.

8 A. He was originally with the Bank of Ireland and he 9 switched to AIB and he came over here to develop the AIB
10 Finance. Now, while I mention the name, and I don't mean to 11 be name dropping, and I never had any much dealings with him
12 other than used to have friendly meetings and out to dinner
13 with him and the wife June, and his brother in law I'm very 14 friendly with, Chris Lambert, he is back now from Galway. So
15 anyway, to make a long story short, I said to Paul Sheeran, I
16 went down to the Bank of Ireland. Now, I didn't tell them
17 the location, I just said I was in a certain location, I
18 didn't say it was in the Bank of Ireland or didn't mention
19 Paul Sheeran's name.

20 Q. Uh-huh.

21 A. I said to Paul about this site and I said it's the 22 fucking best in Ireland, I said, if I can put it together.
23 And he says after Arlington I'd fucking believe anything, he 24 said. After the Bachelor's Walk, you know.

25 Q. Uh-huh.

1 A. So he started saying to me that never mind him, he
2 says, do you know any fucker I could trust, I says, that knows
3 who owns the land there. And he didn't. So I was in his
4 office, you know. So he was called out, to go out to the
5 counter. So he went out and he came back and he says there's 6 a fucking man out here and he says and if anybody knows, and
7 he owes me a favour, knows. There is a man outside he says
8 that knows every inch of that place. So he says will I say
9 it to him. I says can you trust him. He said well to tell
10 you the truth I don't think so -- no, sorry -- to tell you the 11 truth, I don't know but he owes me he said. So I said who is 12 he. He said Fassnidge, Brendan Fassnidge is his name. So
13 he takes me out and he introduced me to Fassnidge. And he
14 said to me, he said to Fassnidge that I wanted to buy a piece
15 of land up on the Galway Road there right beside them. And 16 he was in car dealing.

17 Q. Yeah, I remember.

18 A. And there was a bit of a story about his going bust
19  And there was all sorts of 20 weird and wonderful things.

21 Q. Yeah.

22 A. Eventually came to light. Paul did tell me that,
23 you know, there was a bit of an under current there, you know,
24 and all that. And he said I helped him out, you know, he got 25 into difficulty and I've helped him out he says and he put him

1 under strict confidence, you know, etc.. But anyways he 2 went out into the car and he picked up a mobile phone and he
3 rung somebody on the phone and he came back in and he said to 4 me will you be in the Deadman's Inn he said at seven o'clock
5 this evening, I want you to meet somebody, he said a man that 6 knows every inch of the thing, this was Fassnidge now.

7 Q. Yeah.

8 A. So I went to the Deadman's Inn and Paul Sheeran came 9 with me and Fassnidge was there. So this big fella walks in 10 all blustered and what have ya. Fassnidge introduced me to 11 him. He introduced himself as Liam Lawlor. And there
12 started my fucking nightmare. Anyways, I didn't know him
13 from Adam. He seemed a good enough kind of a fella, you
14 know, happy go lucky kind of fella. I told him what I
15 wanted, that I wanted looking to find to buy a piece of land, 16 I didn't tell him for what but in that area and asked him who 17 owned the plots. So he takes me in and arranged to meet me
18 the next morning -- no, no, before that all happened. Not 19 the next morning at all. That was on a Tuesday. On the 20 Wednesday -- I had to go back to England. And I had a meeting
21 with Arlington, a board meeting with Arlington, on the 22 Thursday. Now, I don't know during the course of the 23 meeting -- Lawlor wanted me to meet him in the Council offices
24 the following day and I couldn't meet him because I told him I
25 had to go back to England. And he wasn't interested in what

1 I was talking about at all. He wanted to know what I was
2 doing on Bachelor's Walk, that he heard about all this thing
3 and all the rest of it, and that he was speaking on behalf of 4 the Government, particularly Charlie Haughey. And that it
5 was vitally important that I introduce him to Arlington. So
6 I said I've a meeting with him on Thursday I said and I'll ask
7 them. I said I can't just, you know, introduce you. I'll 8 ask him. He said I'm a TD and I'm involved in the whole
9 development of the West side. Bachelor's Walk is part of 10 the West side he says and I have to be involved because I've 11 been appointed by the Government. And he was so delighted to 12 meet me etc. etc.. He wasn't a bit concerned about that at 13 all. Anyways, I went to the Arlington -- I came back, went 14 to the Arlington board meeting, was sitting in the meeting.
15 The next thing the phone rings. Raymond Mould secretary's --
16 Raymond Mould was there, Humphrey Price, all the top brass, 17 Ted Dudley, a fella called Andrew Parker and one of -- their 18 top project engineer. We were around the table, we were 19 going into Bachelor's Walk. So Raymond Mould came up red in 20 the face and he said there's a fella downstairs called Liam
21 Lawlor who said that you invited him to this meeting. And I
22 said what? He says well he's downstairs, he said, he said who 23 is he. Oh, I said he's a TD, he's an MP as you would call
24 him, a member of Parliament. But he said did you invite him.
25 I said I didn't invite him to the meeting. I said I spoke to

1 him last Tuesday and I told him that I would mention when I
2 met you today that he wanted an instruction. Well he said
3 whether you invited him or not he's here. So they told him
4 to come on up. So the bastard walks into the meeting, you
5 know, no bye or leave, no apology, nothing. And he was here,
6 on behalf of the Government, particularly on behalf of Charlie
7 Haughey. He had to be taken on board in this deal because it
8 would make the difference in it getting off the ground or not.
9 That's his opening statement, as God is my judge. So I said
10 to him -- I said what's all this about. Well he said, you
11 know, he said I'm looking after this project, I've been 12 appointed by the Government to look after this project and I
13 have to be taken on board. So Raymond Mould says to him, you
14 know, well what does that entail and what's this all about.
15 He asked me what. I couldn't fucking -- if the ground opened
16 and swallowed me, you know. But anyways, the brave Lawlor
17 announced that he wanted a stake in it. He wanted a 20%
18 stake. And that was for the Government. And before Raymond 19 Mould said a word I said it's not fucking on. They're 20 getting no stake in it. I said it's not on. And Lawlor
21 said it might be the difference between it getting off the 22 ground and it not he said. So the meeting went into a sort
23 of disarray. There was nothing further discussed. Raymond
24 Mould, Humphrey Price and co. went out to the room. I was so 25 fucking embarrassed that I felt sick in me stomach. That was

1 honest to God, now, that is a fact.

2 Q. I accept that fully.

3 A. What?

4 Q. I accept that fully.

5 A. So they went out of the room. They were out for a

6 good while and they came back in and they said they had to

7 discuss all this. In the meantime Dadley was in, well Dadley

8 was a kind of a hale fella, well met anyway, you know, he ha

9 ha ha. He couldn't keep his concentration [REDACTED]

10 [REDACTED] -- you lost him, but he

11 was a very nice fella. Anyways, the meeting sort of broke up

12 and I left the meeting. Dadley arranged to meet me in the 13 hotel down from -- just down there off Brewers Green. We

14 went to the hotel. Dadley told Lawlor where he was going,

15 where he was building. Lawlor came into the hotel. So I

16 said to Lawlor what the fuck is going on, what's this about.

17 So he said oh, well that's the way it is, I have to be taken

18 on board. Now, I had left and Lawlor was still sitting down

19 as I left because the meeting sort of broke up and there was

20 people talking in corners and outside doors and I thought to

21 myself Jesus Christ. So myself and Dadley went off down to

22 this hotel. Lawlor eventually came in and he said that they

23 had agreed to take him on. But I said but I hadn't. So if

24 I have anything to do with it, I says, I'm going to have a

25 fucking say in it. So anyways, Dadley says, you know, to me,

1 I suppose himself and Raymond Mould is looking at it in the 2 way that it's better to be safe than sorry because we were in 3 for a lot of money as it is, we already had paid out I think
4 by that time about 7 million, or more. So I asked Lawlor
5 then what agreement did Raymond Mould come to with him. So
6 he said he agreed to take him on as a consultant and he was 7 going to pay him 3,500 a month. I said over my fucking dead
8 body.

9 Q. What did Lawlor say?

10 A. He said well it's fuck all to do with you he says.
11 It's the difference he said between getting it off the ground
12 he said because I can assure you, you won't fucking get it off
13 the ground if I don't. So he said I'm not happy with it he 14 says, I'm not happy with the arrangement he said. And what's 15 more, he said Raymond Mould said that I had to give him half
16 of mine, that I had to give half of my shareholding, my 20%.

17 Q. To Lawlor?

18 A. To Lawlor. That Raymond Mould had said it. And I
19 said and turned to Dudley and I said Raymond Mould if he has 20 said that, I says, you can tell him from me that I'll give it
21 to any charity, I'll give it to any nominated thing but 22 fucking Lawlor will never get it.

23 Q. Did Lawlor at that stage indicate who he was looking 24 for the 50% shareholding for?

25 A. He claimed the Government. He was speaking on

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

10

1 behalf of the Government. And at that time he was like that
2 with Charlie.

3 Q. Yeah.

4 A. And Flynn and co..

5 Q. Okay. Go ahead.

6 A. Anyways, it went along and so -- Arlington wouldn't 7 pay him direct. So because they were paying me any expenses
8 incurred on the thing was paid through me. They decided to 9 pay Lawlor through me. So it was me that was paying him.

10 Q. So did you object to that?

11 A. I did, I objected to it eventually. I paid him ten 12 payments for ten months.

13 Q. Uh-huh.

14 A. Of 3,500 a month, 35,000 pounds in total, which 15 Arlington refunded me.

16 Q. And who were the cheques payable to, Tom?

17 A. They were blank. I mean, the figure was on it but 18 the name was left blank.

19 Q. And at whose request was it blank?

20 A. Lawlor's.

21 Q. When he came to collect the first cheque did he give 22 you any instructions as to how the cheque was to be paid?

23 A. Oh, no. On one occasion he went into the Bank of 24 Ireland at one occasion and instructed Paul Sheeran. He knew
25 I was friendly with Paul Sheeran. And instructed Paul

1 Sheeran to pay him a load of money on my instructions. That
2 he had the go ahead from me.

3 Q. And how much money was involved?

4 A. Oh, I forget now, 10,000 quid or something he was 5 looking for and that I had ...

6 Q. You had authorised it?

7 A. I had authorised it and he was in to collect it.

8 Q. But you hadn't authorised it, I take it?

9 A. No, no. Paul Sheeran rang me of course straight
10 away here in England and I said you tell that cunt to fuck off
11 now, I says, you're giving him nothing. So to make a long
12 story short -- sorry, now, I'm boring you ...

13 Q. No, no, this is crucial.

14 A. Your valuable time.

15 Q. Tom, just to be clear. The whole purpose of this 16 Tribunal effectively is to be able to say that it has 17 investigated all of the information and all of the sources
18 from all of the leads. And the more detailed information you
19 can give them, the more credible the actual inquiry becomes 20 from their point of view. And the Judge is only interested 21 in one thing, and that is he is in charge of making sure he 22 gets to the bottom of all of these unsavoury matters. And I
23 have total confidence that if you give the information in the 24 detail that we'll give it back to them. It means that your 25 exposure, therefore, is going to be limited because they're

1 just going to be able to present the piece and say look that
2 was said, that was done, if you want to challenge it now
3 challenge it but the detail is such and you have corroborating
4 evidence from Paul Sheeran.

5 A. If Arlington talk they'll agree. If Arlington will 6 tell the same story as me if they do talk, you know, but I am
7 persona non grata because of all of this with them as well:

8 Q. But Arlington are a different company now; aren't 9 they?

10 A. They're Pillar Properties, yeah. The people, the 11 personnel are Pillar Properties.

12 Q. That's right, yeah. I know some of those people.
13 Anyway, we'll deal with it.

14 A. They are very good people.

15 Q. I know some of those people. I've dealt with them
16 both in terms of -- because I bought over the old Burrwood
17 House in Bachelor's Walk where all of the losses where and I
18 bought that on its own by Dunloe. And I'm dealing with 19 Arlington as part of British Aerospace in terms of the 20 Cherrywood site on behalf of Dunloe.

21 A. Yeah.

22 Q. And I'm dealing with Pillar Properties, who are 23 interested in another part of the commercial site at 24 Cherrywood. So I know some of these people.

25 A. Anyway, Raymond Mould, he's excellent on the

13

1 commercial side.

2 Q. Sorry. I beg your pardon. Anyway, go ahead.

3 A. Anyway, where was I now?

4 Q. We had got to the stage where he had gone into the 5 bank on one occasion and looked for 10,000. You had paid him
6 35,000 over ten months by ten payments and at his request the 7 cheque payee was left blank.

8 A. Yeah. Now, in the meantime -- there was a lot of 9 things that were running parallel with that. In the meantime
10 I was assembling the site. In the meantime I met him in the 11 County Hall in O'Connell Street.

12 Q. You met Lawlor?

13 A. It was in O'Connell Street anyway. Lawlor, yeah.
14 And he introduced me to a George Redmond who told me that 15 Redmond would have a say in anything I was doing.

16 Q. Uh-huh.

17 A. They produced a map to me with various colours on it 18 of all of the ownerships of the land in Quarryvale in that 19 total site.

20 Q. Right.

21 A. Every ownership. There was a price tag put on it
22 but I can't remember exactly but I think it was 100,000
23 pounds, but I wouldn't pay it anyway.

24 Q. Who was looking for the 100,000 pounds?

25 A. I don't know who was looking for it. Lawlor. At 1 every drop of the hat there was something, there was a tag on

2 everything. And by this time I was latching on to the fact
3 that there was some form of a game going on. But anyway. I
4 found out in the meantime that there was a fella called Sharp,
5 I think a Paul Sharp, had a company Grove Developments that 6 was already involved in 28 acres of the site and there was two 7 houses being built on it. So I approached him. And at the 8 time I approached him he had access off the Galway Road into 9 the site but it was denied him and it was withdrawn and he was 10 suing the authorities because the two houses he had built were 11 two detached houses and had a price tag, at that time, in the 12 50,000 or 60,000.

13 Q. Uh-huh.

14 A. Whereas, with the access to the Galway Road. But 15 if he had of come in from Fonhill through the Quarryvale
16 estate. Of course he couldn't give the fuckers away. So 17 the two houses were built and he couldn't get access so he 18 couldn't sell the two houses. Right? And he was into the 19 bank, I think it was Hill Samuel Bank, for some money.
20 Again, somebody volunteered that information to me, I wasn't 21 looking for it but it was volunteered. And I was told that 22 Sharp would do a deal. So I offered him 40,000 an acre --
23 no, sorry, I offered him 30,000 an acre.

24 Q. Uh-huh.

25 A. For it, but he had done development work and he had

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

15

1 .built the two houses as separate. So eventually I gave him
2 something around 40,000. The whole site was 1 million. So I
3 bought the site off him for cash. So that was the first site.
4 I already had the wee cottage. So the next site to it was 5 this one Bruton's. And so I went in and walked in to Bruton
6 to see if he would sell it. At this time Gunne was following
7 me around as well, Fintan Gunne, and you know, so ...

8 Q. Which Bruton are we talking about here?

9 A. Des Bruton, he was a first cousin or relation of 10 John Bruton. So Bruton wouldn't deal at all. It was the 11 home place etc. etc.

12 Q. Uh-huh.

13 A. But he had just sold some of the land here and 14 Roderick Downer of Jackson Stops was his agent or his advisor.

15 Q. Uh-huh.

16 A. Right. So Bruton told me that. So I got on to 17 Roderick Downer. And between hopping and trotting Roderick 18 says because of the housing estate at the back etc. etc. he 19 might be persuaded to sell, although it was the home place and 20 so on and so forth, you know. And somewhere along the line I
21 was out there and by a stroke of luck I went into the old 22 Luttrellstown, you know where the Luttrellstown House is.

23 Q. Yeah.

24 A. Well I happened to go in there. And I was having a 25 drink with Maguire and Paul Sheeran. And there was some

1 bloke who came over, and to this day I don't know -- well I
2 took no notice of who he was. I wasn't introduced to him
3 anyway but he was chatting away. And Paul Sheeran says to 4 him hey, don't you know that Des Bruton up there and he said
5 yeah. He said was he selling land or is he. Oh, he said he
6 has his eye on a stud but he can't get hold of it. So Paul
7 said to him what stud is that and he said I think it's called 8 Convey Stud. So Paul said to him who owns that and he said
9 oh, it was, you know Goffs, the Horsing Association.

10 Q. Yeah?

11 A. Bloodstock.

12 Q. Bloodstock?

13 A. The Bloodstock Association. Soy done nothing but 14 out the door, up to the Bloodstock Association, walked in and 15 I said you have a stud farm down there that you're not using 16 very much and would you sell it. So they said well we have 17 nothing in mind. I said well I'm over from England I says
18 and I heard it was for sale. I said will you sell it. And 19 they said well, they didn't know but they weren't sure. And 20 I didn't really get very far. But I knew Pat Harrington.

21 Q. Uh-huh. Stewart's brother?

22 A. Yeah. Stewart's brother. So I rang Pat. I
23 didn't know much about him but I knew he was a nice enough
24 bloke and I knew he was in the business, as far as I
25 discovered he was with Dunnes. So I said to Pat there's a

1 stud farm out there and I want you to go out and buy it for me
2 and telling him what it was.

3 Q. Uh-huh.

4 A. So he said what are you prepared to go on it. Well
5 I said there's 200 acres and there's a house on it I said.
6 In my opinion I says 3 or 400,000 I said would be it, 300 you
7 know or 350 would be it. But I said if you have to go the 8 half a million, do it. So he fucking bought it there that 9 day.

10 Q. For half a million?

11 A. 470.

12 Q. Okay?

13 A. 470,000. So I went straight back into Bruton late
14 in the evening.

15 Q. Uh-huh.

16 A. And he was always very mannerly. I could knock on 17 the door, and he was always very -- he'd never tell you fuck
18 off or get annoyed or anything like that, he was always 19 gentlemanly, you know, so much so that I used to feel 20 embarrassed even driving in his drive.

21 Q. Uh-huh.

22 A. And I started chatting to him and all of that. And 23 I said are you sure now that you won't sell because I'm 24 prepared to do a deal with you. And again I got Pat
25 Harrington. So the next time Pat was with me. So we bought

18

1 the thing -- no, in the course of the conversation I mentioned
2 to him that I'd just farm that I had just bought but I wasn't
3 that keen on it. I had one before that down in Maynooth.

4 Q. Uh-huh.

5 A. And I wasn't that keen on it. So he said what one
6 is that. And I said Convey Stud. And I seen his face drop
7 all of a sudden, you know. I was watching and watching. It
8 registered.

9 Q. Uh-huh

10 A. And I said I got you. So I said to him I'll tell 11 you what I'll do with you, I won't mess you about. So he 12 wouldn't do the deal without Roderick Downer. So I got 13 Roderick Downer and we started hopping and trotting. I gave 14 him 1.5 million for the 32 acres subject to planning or two 15 year or subject to planning, whichever was the soonest.
16 Right? And I gave him the stud then in part payment. So 17 no -- I gave him 1,000 pounds deposit just in good faith just 18 in the contract. And what was that Pelor or Pelar, or 19 whatever.

20 Q. Pelo. Peter Shannon in Bachelor's Walk.

21 A. That's right, well it's Ormond Quay. So they drew 22 up the contract on that and so that was that. I paid him 23 1,000 pounds. I gave him Convey Stud at cost at the end of 24 the two years and it was deducted from the 1.5 million.

25 Q. Right.

19

1 A. So basically I owed him a million pound for the rest
2 of the site.

3 Q. Very good.

4 A. So that was that site.

5 Q. Turning over the tape. Would you just go back to,
6 the point where we were talking about -- where you stopped the 7 payments to Lawlor, before we get on to the meeting that you
8 were talking about. So you had stopped the payments to 9 Lawlor by the time you had done the deal for ...

10 A. Well there was various things going on and all the 11 rest of it and various things happening. The various demands
12 being made on me.

13 Q. Yeah.

14 A. And I was being blackmailed from a number of 15 sources.

16 Q. Uh-huh.

17 A. And I decided I wasn't having any more of it. I 18 was ...

19 Q. You'd stopped the payments. Go ahead.

20 A. Yeah. Well there was a number of other things
21 going on parallel with that, you know, between Ambrose Kelly
22 and various other people. So I decided I was having nothing
23 more to do with any -- with Lawlor or anything like that.

24 Q. Uh-huh.

25 A. And I just stopped the payments. Arlington said

Premier Captioning & Realltime Ltd

1 that they were a bit upset about it because they said, you
2 know, it could leave them in jeopardy, as it were. And I
3 said well you pay him. So they wouldn't direct. I says you
4 pay him, I'm not, he's getting no more money from me or 5 through me, whether you like it or you don't. I'm out I said
6 and I said I don't care if he hands your 20% back.

7 Q. Uh-huh.

8 A. So anyway.

9 Q. When you were talking to Arlington. When you were 10 talking at that stage was it to Raymond Mould or to someone 11 else in Arlington?

12 A. Ted Dadley.

13 Q. Test Dadley, okay.

14 A. Mostly Ted Dadley because by this time he was 15 Managing Director of a retail development. But I made no
16 bones about it at the meetings either where Raymond Mould and 17 them were present. Right? But by this time they were in 18 difficulty anyway because there were -- there was various 19 things. Flynn and Bertie Ahern arrived over demanding -- 20 over in London -- I hope I'm not interrupting.

21 Q. No, no, no, no.

22 A. They arrived over in London in Park Lane looking for 23 money.

24 Q. Who arrived over?

25 A. Flynn and Bertie Ahern. And on the grounds that 21

1 they were fundraising for Fianna Fail.

2 Q. Right.

3 A. And they were demanding money off Arlington and they
4 invited Ted Dadley and Raymond Mould and her to -- here
5 somewhere, the Inn in the Park or somewhere. And they got the 6 wrong end of the stick Arlington, or they pretended they got 7 the wrong end of the stick. Dadley got up on the stage and 8 made some statements there was people there about how they 9 were so happy to be involved in Dublin etc. etc. and the fine
10 job the Government were doing and all the rest of it but they 11 didn't volunteer any money. And Flynn was put out about 12 that. Now, Flynn arranged to meet me later that evening and 13 I turned up for a meeting that was arranged. And I can't for 14 the life of me remember the name of the rooms but I went in 15 there. Flynn was definitely there because I had seen him but 16 I had to wait for over an hour and a half and I eventually met 17 him at ten o'clock at which he suggested having something to 18 eat. And Flynn talked to me. He was kind of -- seemed to 19 be put out about something. And he talked in sort of reels,
20 he didn't, there was nothing specific, you know, nothing
21 specific at all. But he kept -- and then I began to get the 22 message, you know, that there was money involved, that they 23 wanted money and if these were to get off the ground etc.
24 etc.. It was important that certain things were taken care
25 of, so I didn't bite at all. So I walked out of that

1 meeting. I walked out of that. I did have a meal with him.
2 And I left the thing and I began to realise the extent of what 3 was going on.

4 Q. So stopping here. Did that meeting with Flynn take 5 place before or after the famous meeting in the Dail where the,

6 --

7 A. Oh, it was after.

8 Q. Okay. So can we go back to the meeting that took 9 place in the Dail.

10 A. Oh, yes there was so many things running in 11 parallel, this is not for the tape, I'm just saying it to you.
12 That over a period from 1985 to '91. Now, you just imagine
13 the run of things that went on in that space of time.

14 Q. Yeah.

15 A. So try and sit here and put it into a brief

16 Q. I know, it's very difficult.

17 A. It's very difficult.

18 Q. What I'm trying to do is to get a picture so that we 19 can at least put the leads in place. And it is then up to the 20 Tribunal to pick up on those leads insofar as what they are 21 looking for is the macro picture with the leads going in 22 directions and then they can interview other people once they 23 have the information that we can give them.

24 A. Yes. Well ...

25 Q. Can we go back to the meeting in the Dail first

1 because I

2 A. Yeah. I was taken into the Dail and I was 3 introduced and there was a number of Ministers around the 4 table.

5 Q. Well who took you in, first?

6 A. It was Liam Lawlor.

7 Q. Right.

8 A. That there was people wanting to meet me. Right?

9 Q. So you had paid him at this stage?

10 A. I had met various people separately. I had met
11 Flynn on a number of occasions.

12 Q. Yeah?

13 A. Discussing the project and all of the rest of it.

14 Q. Uh-huh.

15 A. I was stone walled at a lot of the meetings because 16 I wasn't approaching the right subject.

17 Q. Uh-huh. When you were taken into the Dail at this 18 stage were you still paying Lawlor or had you stopped paying 19 him at this stage?

20 A. No, I was still paying him at this stage. This was 21 within that ten month period.

22 Q. Okay. Sorry. Go ahead.

23 A. I was introduced. There was nothing much in that 24 meeting. Charlie came in eventually and I was introduced to 25 each one, chatting to them.

1 Q. Who was at the meeting?

2 A. Reynolds, he was the Minister for Industry or 3 something, I don't know what he was, something else. I think 4 McSharry was still Minister of Finance or he was just about to 5 go to Europe as Commissioner in Europe, but he wasn't there.
6 Lenihan, Flynn, and I'm sure Brennan.

7 Q. Seamus Brennan?

8 A. Yeah. And Burke appeared at the meeting and stood
9 at the end of the table, he appeared there.

10 Q. This is Ray Burke now?

11 A. Ray Burke. And he seemed sort of disinterested in 12 the whole proceedings. So anyways, there was four or five of 13 them there. But when I left the meeting I was approached by 14 a bloke on the way out, I don't know who he is, to this day I 15 don't know who he is, approached me on the way out and said to 16 me that I was in to make an awful lot of money on these 17 projects that I was involved in. And it was suggested to me
18 that a deposit be made in the Isle of Man, in an account in 19 the Isle of Man.

20 Q. Uh-huh.

21 A. Lawlor was in the background.

22 Q. Uh-huh. Did Lawlor hear that conversation?

23 A. He knew it was going on I would say so because he 24 conveniently went, supposedly, out of ear shot. He sort
25 of -- it was the way it was done. And Lawlor was beside me,

25

1 then Lawlor was turned and another fella appeared and Lawlor
2 moved over a bit.

3 Q. But who was this person, was he a Government person
4 or is he ...

5 A. I haven't got a clue. I did try to find out but I
6 didn't succeed.

7 Q. When you were --

8 A. I was even given an account number, which I wrote
9 down and I had somewhere and I've been trying to find it.

10 Q. But you don't know where it is. Do you know the 11 bank even?

12 A. No. It was an account number, it was a number,
13 just a number.

14 Q. But you must have been given the name of a bank?

15 A. Like, it was the Isle of Man.

16 Q. Isle of Man Bank, no?

17 A. No. Anyway.

18 Q. All right. Sure we'll ...

19 A. I left there and I came out with Lawlor and I didn't 20 speak another word, hardly a word to him. But he was haring
21 along and I was coming behind him anyway, if you know what I
22 mean, he was going like a train way in front of me.

23 Q. What was said at that meeting?

24 A. Then I was approached by a wee fat fella, who I
25 discovered afterwards as a bloke called Walsh.

1 Q. Right.

2 A. And he said to me, he came out of an office and he
3 beckoned me.

4 Q. This is in the Dail now?

5 A. This was in the Dail. And he beckoned me. So he 6 asked me what was Lawlor up to.

7 Q. Uh-huh.

8 A. I said what do you mean what's he up to? Well he 9 said ah well, you don't want to trust him, he said, he'll take 10 you to the cleaners. You know, you want to be careful, take 11 my advice, he says talk to me, he said.

12 Q. And was Walsh a TD himself or was he a ...

13 A. Sean Walsh. I think he was a Councillor or a 14 former TD, I don't know.

15 Q. He was some part of the officialdom?

16 A. He died anyway. I know he died of a heart attack
17 sometime later. And I don't want to talk ill of the dead, if 18 you know what I mean. But anyways, he started advising me 19 against Lawlor and wanted to know who I met in the Dail and 20 what was said etc. etc.

21 Q. And where was Lawlor when all of this conversation
22 took place?

23 A. He had gone on in front. Right? So I stopped, I
24 went into the office. It was a little cubby hole kind of 25 office, you know. I came out of the office and this fella

1 seen me to the lift, as far as the lift. And his last words
2 going into the lift were now remember what I'm telling you,
3 remember what I'm telling you, come and see me. I never seen
4 him again because I walked away and I said fuck the whole lot
5 of you.

6 Q. Can we just go back for a second. The famous
7 meeting where all of the Ministers were present. I mean,
8 what was discussed at that meeting?

9 A. Nothing much at all now. There was nothing 10 specific.

11 Q. No money was mentioned?

12 A. No. Other than when I came out of the meeting I 13 was approached by this man.

14 Q. By this man?

15 A. By this man from the Isle of Man.

16 Q. The famous claim, or the famous request or demand to 17 pay the 5 million. Where did that come from?

18 A. I don't know, it was supposed to be on behalf of the 19 Government.

20 Q. But who made that demand?

21 A. I don't know. I don't know who he was. And --

22 Q. But --

23 A. Lawlor didn't introduce him and neither did anybody
24 else but he was outside of the door of the meeting where I 25 came out of.

1 Q. And what did he say to you, that he wanted you to 2 pay 5 million into an account?

3 A. Cash. Yeah. That I was in to make a hell of a
4 lot of money, you know, and etc.. But in the mean time I had 5 numerous Councillors demanding 100,000 each as well.

6 Q. And can you name those?

7 A. Oh, I can, yeah, I can name them all right.

8 Q. Go ahead. Who are they?

9 A. Well Hanratty was one, a fella called Finbarr

10 Hanratty, he was out in Lucan, he was a Councillor in the 11 Lucan area, Fianna Fail Councillor. There was a fella called

12 McGrath there as well, Colm McGrath, he was looking for money

13 all of the time, he was a councillor for the actual 14 Clondalkin area. He used to run a thing called or a company

15 called Clondalkin distributors. And he was always strapped

16 for money. He was always looking for -- I never gave him

17 any.

18 Q. Uh-huh.

19 A. There was Pat Dunne. Now, that man is dead so I'll 20 leave him alone.

21 Q. Pat Dunne?

22 A. I don't like talking about the dead at all.

23 Q. Which Pat Dunne is he now?

24 A. He lives down in Balbriggan. I was getting 25 bugged up to then on every corner with George Redmond, at

1 meeting and various other things. And one of the things was 2 when I bid on the land, the Corporation lands, Redmond tried
3 to block it.

4 Q. Was he involved in the Corporation still at that 5 stage?

6 A. He was the County Councillor, the County Manager.
7 So he went in. He used to go in and accuse Paddy Morrissey
8 of wrongdoing and of doing cosy deals with me.

9 Q. Uh-huh.

10 A. Simply because I wouldn't pay him anything. He 11 used to fuck up me meetings with the Councillors as well, not 12 the Councillors but with the 13 Q. Executives?

14 A. The roads people and all of that. Like, it's a 15 whole long story.

16 Q. It's all right. We have all day.

17 A. Well if you have the patience.

18 Q. I've got the patience.

19 A. We had arranged a meeting because we were sorting 20 out the roads and the access to the site and all the rest of 21 it and I had some agreement from Flynn.

22 Q. Uh-huh.

23 A. Because I was told I had to have some form of 24 approval from Flynn if I was going to gain access off any of 25 the new roads.

1 Q. Was Flynn's role at this stage in the environment?

2 A. He was the Minister for the Environment. While I
3 had to agree it with the roads engineers but I had to discuss
4 it with Flynn.

5 Q. Uh-huh.

6 A. Right? And we were talking at that time of putting 7 a bridge on with an access to the motorway, to the new 8 motorway, but we discovered it was too near the roundabout.

9 Q. Uh-huh.

10 A. So consequently we couldn't put another access
11 between that and the proposed new Naas Road, which was further 12 up past the Irishtown Road, if you know what I mean.

13 Q. Yeah.

14 A. Which was back here somewhere.

15 Q. Yeah, I know what you mean.

16 A. Right. Because there had to be a mile or something 17 between the two.

18 Q. Yeah.

19 A. And we were proposing to come into the site off here
20 coming from the south.

21 Q. Yeah.

22 A. And bring a bridge from the north side across.

23 Q. Which would be a fly over back from here.

24 A. But we were too close to this roundabout.

25 Q. Yeah. So you needed to be further away again?

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 A. So we needed to be further away. So we decided 2 we'd come in on this roundabout and use it to come in to the 3 site here. That's where that -- we had a show here.

4 Q. You needed to get that agreed with the roads
5 department before you went to get detailed planning?

6 A. That's right. The other thing was that coming in 7 from the south here, there was the slip road onto the Galway
8 road. Now, we could come round in here. But one I suggest 9 that had instead of coming off the main motorway we could come 10 off the Galway Road slip road by widening it and putting 11 another lane on it with -- you know the way they put the split
12 sign off.

13 Q. Yep.

14 A. The one to the left is Westpark Shopping Centre and 15 that's what I decided to do. And I showed it to Flynn. And 16 Flynn took the drawing.

17 Q. Uh-huh.

18 A. And showed it to the roads engineer. So there was 19 technically no objection. Technically.

20 Q. Yeah.

21 A. They didn't know whether environment or whether 22 there would be any roads objections but technically it was 23 okay. It was okay.

24 Q. And Westpark was what you were involved in?

25 A. So Flynn gave the nod that it was technically okay.

1 This was coming in. Westpark was the name of the 2 development, because it was on the western parkway so it was 3 the sort of name that I picked, you know. So anyways, we 4 arranged then a meeting with all the roads engineers and it
5 was stated that we had to arrange a meeting with the County
6 Manager himself, George Redmond. So we organised a meeting
7 with George Redmond. So I was bringing over top engineers.
8 There was Ove Arup's men in Dublin, John Higgins and the man
9 that died, Morgan Hussey. Morgan Hussey, yeah. He was a 10 very nice fella as well. And then I had Malcom Noyce and 11 others from here. Then I had the architects from here and I
12 had other experts.

13 Q. Right.

14 A. I had environmental people.

15 Q. And who were you using as architects at that stage?

16 A. It was Taggart.

17 Q. Taggarts. From the North?

18 A. From the North. Well they came with Marks and 19 Spencers, you see. Now, when they seen the site, and when 20 Marks seen the site they wanted it. You see, although they 21 never committed themselves in writing until the planning was 22 there. They would only commit themselves when we had the 23 planning. Anyway, but I knew there was no better site in 24 Ireland, apart from the City Centre, that they would have one 25 there. Anyway, so that's why Taggarts were on it, there was

1 no reason other than that. And Taggarts came to me because
2 they done some work on Clandeboy and they were already doing
3 Sprucefield work for Marks and Spencer, Lough Derry at the Foy
4 and they wanted me to do that one. But that was my fucking
5 mistake, wasn't it. But anyway. Actually the DOE in the 6 North were underwriting me if I was to do that, the Foy one.

7 Q. The Foy one which the Americans eventually did?

8 A. Yeah, they were underwriting me, guaranteeing that I
9 wouldn't make a loss, the DOE.

10 Q. I knew that deal was around. Very good.

11 A. So I went down to see it. Why I didn't do that 12 deal was I was followed by three IRA men all day.

13 Q. Right.

14 A. They were there for a whole day. We measured the 15 site and all. There was an old derelict house and these 16 three guys appeared in that derelict house and they followed
17 us everywhere we went, all day long. John McCannon of 18 Taggarts kept saying to me, he's a Protestant but he's sort of 19 a semi-republican Protestant

20 Q. Wolfe Tone?

21 A. No, I wouldn't say that strong but he's more

22

24 But he's a great character. Anyway, he told me to ignore
25 them, take no notice, you know. But in the evening we were

1 walking up along the back of the site and he turned to me and
2 he said head for the car he said now. Don't run, he said,
3 don't -- just turn he says now walk. Ask no questions, just 4 walk to the car.

5 Q. Uh-huh

6 A. And he walked away in front of me and I followed him
7 back down but the three guys were following. He got to the 8 car and he said now let's get the fuck out of here fast. So
9 I said what was wrong. He said ah he said I see things you
10 wouldn't see but he said it was time to get out of there. So
11 I said were we in danger and he said too fucking right you
12 were he said. So I said fuck that I'm having nothing to do 13 with that site life is too short for that.

14 Q. Absolutely.

15 A. So I never went back. And he had arranged for me
16 to meet John Hume as well, but I didn't. I met him in Dublin
17 later but I never went back.

18 Q. John Hume actually swung the deal eventually with 19 the DOE for that crowd out of Boston, but that's another 20 story. Sorry. Go on back to our friends in ...

21 A. Yeah. Well that was handed to me on a plate.
22 That's a fact now.

23 Q. So we met back in Dublin?

24 A. Oh, yes. Now, we arranged to meet George Redmond
25 and his roads engineers.

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

35

1 Q. What time are we in now? What year, what process,
2 what month?

3 A. This would have been 1986-ish, late '86 coming into 4 '87 I suppose. I have got these dates in my diary.

5 Q. Uh-huh.

6 A. So we arrived in Dublin on the Thursday morning of 7 the meeting. The meeting was to be at ten o'clock in the 8 Council offices in O'Connell Street. So we all met at the 9 Ove Arup, the architects, myself, Richard Foreman, again the 10 agents was with me and Roy Harris was over this time, the 11 fella I told you about and he was over. There was a whole
12 group of us and some other experts and I had some 13 environmental people. And so it was a board room at the 14 Council offices was made available. So the roads engineers,
15 one of the planners called, what's this his name was, Christ,
16 I can't think of all of their names now.

17 Q. Was he the City Planner or the County Planner?

18 A. He was a County Planner on the West side. It'll 19 come to me in a second. He was representing the planners
20 anyway. They were all there. We arranged for the meeting
21 for ten o'clock. So at ten minutes to ten we were in the 22 Shelbourne Hotel. Is it -- not the Shelbourne, the one
23 across the road, the Gresham. So we had a cup of tea and all
24 of that there about half nine. We arrived in at eight 25 something and we had the tea and some sandwiches and what have

1 you, there was a whole crowd of us. So I decided anyway I'd 2 ring over to the Council offices coming up at ten to ten, just
3 to make sure everybody was in place and all of that. So I
4 rung over to speak to George Redmond. So George comes on the 5 phone and he asks me what meeting. I said the meeting was 6 arranged with you, I said, for today. I said we arrived for 7 the ten o'clock meeting. He said I know nothing about a
8 meeting, there's no meeting here. I said but all of these 9 people are over from England and here, I says, altogether.
10 He said there is no fucking meeting, I know nothing about a 11 meeting. I said but I arranged it with you, I arranged the 12 whole thing with you. Oh, you arranged nothing with me he 13 said. I said what?! He said there's no meeting here, there
14 is nobody here. And I felt sick as a fucking parrot. I
15 thought was I going doolally or what the fuck is wrong. So I 16 went back and they said to me what's wrong, you look as if 17 you've seen a ghost. Well I said I've just rung Redmond just 18 to say we were all here and we were arriving across in a
19 minute and Redmond tells me there's no meeting, he knows 20 nothing about it. So McCannon pipes up and says what the 21 fuck is he talking about, sure I was talking to John -- to 22 some clarification I wanted yesterday with the roads engineer
23 and he says we agreed we were meeting today. He said they 24 wanted a sketch from me. No, they rung him actually and 25 before he came to bring a sketch. Some other specific detail

37

1 they wanted on the drawing that we had given. And he said
2 sure they rung me, they're all ready for the meeting. I said
3 Redmond tells me there's no meeting and he knows nothing about
4 it. So then John Higgins of Ove Arup, I don't know if you
5 know John, he's a civil engineer in Ove Arup's in Dublin.

6 Q. Yeah.

7 A. He's the head guy there since Morgan Hussey died.

8 Q. Uh-huh.

9 A. Morgan was there as well. John Higgins was there
10 and they piped up and they said sure we arranged it with the 11 engineers, we were talking yesterday as well and we were all 12 meeting today at ten o'clock. So I said fuck Redmond. So I
13 rung back again and Redmond said there was no fucking meeting, 14 there was no one there for the meeting, he didn't know what 15 the fuck I was talking about. Right. So we sat down anyway
16 and we decided well fuck it, it was a wasted journey. So we 17 decided we would go out and walk the site etc. etc. and had 18 another round of tea and that before we went. And at about 19 quarter past or twenty past ten the fucking penny dropped with 20 me. There was something amiss here, something radically
21 amiss. So I went back to the phone, I picked up the phone
22 and rung the secretary, you know, George Redmond's secretary.
23 Instead of asking for George, this time I said to her is all
24 the people in place for a meeting today, you know, I said
25 we're a bit late at the moment to her like that. Oh, she

1 says, they've been waiting here for you for the last half hour
2 and they're just leaving. They've been waiting here and 3 decided you're not coming. I says what?! So slammed down
4 the phone and I shouted to the boys follow me quick quick.
5 We got to the thing and the planner man was Willie Murray.
6 The only one left was there, the roads engineers had already 7 gone and the only one left was Willie Murray. And he was in 8 with George Redmond. So I walked in to Redmond's office and 9 I asked him what the fuck was going on, what's the game.
10 What's your fucking game I said to him. And Murray was 11 there. I says you told me there was no fucking meeting and 12 them all waiting in that office all morning. You told me you
13 knew nothing and there was no meeting. Twice. I said
14 what's your fucking game. And he said oh, I don't know he 15 said and he threw the hands up and he started I'm busy, I'm 16 busy, I've something going on here and Willie Murray was in 17 the office with him. Anyway, I decided that I had enough of 18 this. By this time between the demands for money, the 19 blackmailing and being fucked up and thwarted everywhere I
20 decided I was going to do something about it. So I rang Sean 21 Haughey. I rung McCloone first and McCloone didn't really 22 want to know because his job was at stake etc. etc. and these 23 fuckers, you know.

24 Q. Understandable.

25 A. A wife and family etc. etc.

1 Q. Yeah.

2 A. But he did agree that something should be done
3 because bastards like Redmond is getting away with murder. So
4 he said why don't you talk to Haughey. So I got on to Sean
5 Haughey and he said what's going on. I told him what 6 happened and all the rest of it.

7 Q. This is this Sean Haughey now in Dublin Corporation?

8 A. Yeah, he was Charlie's brother Sean. And I said I
9 don't know what's going on I says but there's something
10 radically wrong. And by this time Arlington was getting 11 bugged up at every corner as well, every site they would go
12 for and all that would multiply by ten in price etc.. There 13 was all sorts of cowboys appearing buying sites and holding 14 them to ransom, you know, or getting options on sites.
15 Anyway, to make the long story short, but in the meantime of 16 course I had O'Callaghan, which is another story but 17 O'Callaghan as well. Sean Haughey came in and he says to 18 rearrange the meeting for 2:30 or 2:30 in the afternoon since 19 you have all the people there and their day would probably be 20 wasted on the journey anyway so rearrange it. So I
21 rearranged it. Redmond reluctantly rearranged the meeting
22 and Sean Haughey arrived for the meeting and he came in and 23 they were all assembled, the roads engineers and they were 24 upset, they were up all tight with us.

3 Interview with Tom Gilmartin at 20 Upper Grosvenor Street,
4 London, on Wednesday. Go to the Britainia for lunch where we 5 continue the interview in relation to the involvement of 6 Barkhill, who is the company set up to purchase the property
7 in relation to this matter.

9 Testing 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.

10

11 Q. Okay. So the file had then been sent to the Fraud
12 Squad. But were you interviewed then by the Fraud Squad?

13 A. No, I didn't. Well they tried to get hold of me
14 but I was told -- I was phoned and told not to burn my 15 bridges.

16 Q. Who told you to do that?

17 A. Well a number of people. Fintan Gunne was one of 18 them.

19 Q. You know he has died since?

20 A. Yeah.

21

22 (phone rings)

23

24 A. I do.

25 Q. Okay. So we're back on again in relation to ...

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 A. So many characters and so many things running
2 parallel with those.

3 Q. That's fine. We'll keep them going. We had got 4 to the stage where we were talking about Barkhill. Barkhill
5 was the company that had bought ...

6 A. We formed Barkhill when we borrowed the money from 7 the bank.

8 Q. Yeah.

9 A. And so all the properties was put into Barkhill and 10 all the contracts.

11 Q. Right.

12 A. And options that were in place, were in place, which 13 was most of the site.

14 Q. So where does Frank Dunlop come into the picture
15 then, or when does he come into the picture?

16 A. No, Frank Dunlop came in with O'Callaghan.

17 Q. Right.

18 A. Frank Dunlop, like Ambrose Kelly, was chasing me.

19 Q. Yeah. Okay. Go ahead, Tom.

20 A. Frank Dunlop wrote me letters as Murray Consultants
21 to take him on board, which I didn't. I didn't have a need
22 for him. And he appeared on the scene with O'Callaghan
23 Properties. O'Callaghan -- a fella called Albert Gubay 24 bought the Neilstown site. I should have bought it, I should 25 have done a deal on it but I didn't. So ...

1 Q. This was Albert Gubay, this was the site that had 2 the zoning on it?

3 A. That had the zoning for the town centre, the 4 Neilstown site. But I didn't think anybody in their sane
5 senses would buy it but I didn't figure on the ransom element
6 of it, if you know what I mean.

7 Q. Right.

8 A. So Albert Gubay bought the site. McCloone did tell
9 me that he had done a deal or was doing a never never deal
10 with Gubay. And my comment to him was how is it you never 11 offered me any deals like that, I used to pay up front. But 12 anyway, next thing I discover was it was announced to me by 13 Liam Lawlor and others that Owen O'Callaghan had moved in on 14 the site and had done a deal. So -- that I was going
15 nowhere. So eventually I contacted -- I arranged a meeting 16 with Owen O'Callaghan. Now, the first meeting I had with 17 Owen O'Callaghan was in the Buswells Hotel. And at that same 18 evening, on that very same evening Hanrahan was at the 19 meeting.

20 Q. Who is Hanrahan now?

21 A. He was the Councillor from Lucan that demanded the 22 100,000 pounds.

23 Q. Hanrahan. You said Hanratty earlier on but you
24 mean Hanrahan?

25 A. Oh, no, I beg your pardon. Hanrahan was his name.

43

1 Finbarr Hanrahan and he was a Councillor for Lucan.

2 Q. Yeah.

3 A. And he happened to be in Buswells, Owen O'Callaghan
4 and there was others. There was numerous politicians there.

5 Q. Uh-huh.

6 A. Owen O'Callaghan suggested to me he would do a deal.
7 That I would be going nowhere but I was going to do a deal
8 with him first.

9 Q. Uh-huh.

10 A. And the first thing he wanted was a 50% stake in my 11 deal.

12 Q. For how much?

13 A. For nothing. For him to throw off the other site
14 because he had done a deal with Albert Gubay. He had bought 15 it for half a million. Gubay's rights to it he said he had 16 paid half a million for it. So I said to him so if you are a
17 developer I know you'll never build on it because I said
18 number one there is a drainage problem and number two you
19 can't get into it and you have to build a fly over. And to 20 get a shopping centre in there I said it's going to cost you
21 more to build the fly over than the shopping center. So he 22 said that doesn't matter, you are going nowhere while I'm 23 there.

24 Q. Because he had the zoning?

25 A. Yeah. Well I knew this by then, you know. So I

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

44

1 decided to do a deal with him. So I met him again in the 2 Airport Hotel, in a room in the Airport Hotel. So I
3 negotiated a deal with him for 3.5 million pounds because he 4 claimed he was all ready to start building. And he had 5 everything in place and he had slotted in for his work
6 programme etc. etc.. So there was 3.5 million pounds. He 7 wanted 800,000 up front. The 800,000 was the 300 deposit
8 that was paid for the land by Gubay, the 500,000 that he paid
9 to Gubay, that reimbursed.

10 Q. Uh-huh.

11 A. And then a year later I paid him 1,150,000 pounds.

12 Q. Yes.

13 A. And the following -- subject to planning.

14 Q. Yeah.

15 A. I paid him the final payment.

16 Q. That was the deal?

17 A. That was the deal. That was the deal I agreed on.

18 So he went off and his solicitor, and through his solicitor,
19 John Deane drew up the contract. And I paid him the 800,000.
20 Right? It was a year later before I completed the -- almost a 21 year before I completed the Corporation deal and that, buying
22 the Corporation land.

23 Q. This was the 70 acres that had been tendered for?

24 A. Yeah. And by this time, it was exactly a year
25 later when I borrowed the money from Allied Irish Bank and

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 formed the company and put the or transferred the property.
2 The company was formed before that and I put the properties
3 into the company. So I paid him the second 1.5 million the 4 year later. I completed all the deals on the land. And 5 then I drew up the whole programme and the complete design for 6 the building, the complete, survey of the site done, all the 7 roads, drainage and everything else sorted out. And I was 8 going for planning but it was suggested -- it was suggested to 9 me instead of going for a material contravention that there
10 was a review of the Dublin Plan and that I should wait for the 11 review of the Dublin Plan and have that site adapted.
12 Anyway, I borrowed the money but it was only short term. I 13 mean, it was only twelve months and under twelve months, the 14 money from AIB, because I had numerous institutions who had 15 taken it over and according to the promises that I was given
16 previously by the Government. This I'm talking about now
17 runs parallel with some of the stuff I've already talked 18 about. Right, some of the Lawlor stuff. I was absolutely
19 guaranteed that the site would be designated, this was all
20 verbal mind you now from Flynn and various politicians, 21 including Lenihan etc.. And when everything was in place and 22 ready the whole lot of them done a complete about turn.

23 Q. That complete about turn coincide ...

24 A. Coincided with my refusal to pay any money to 25 anybody.

46

1 Q. Okay. You were saying that they ...

2 A. It coincided also with me stopping Lawlor. And it
3 coincided, presumably, with George Redmond and with the files
4 going to the Police.

5 Q. All right.

6 A. Incidentally, one incident that happened. There
7 was a meeting arranged by Sean Haughey before it went to the 8 Police with the then City Manager, who was Feely.

9 Q. Frank Feely?

10 A. Frank Feely. And that meeting took place in the 11 top of Lord Edward Street. What's that building across 12 there?

13 Q. Exchange Buildings?

14 A. No, no, the big one.

15 Q. The big one in the Lord Mayor's Mansion?

16 A. No, you know where the Exchange Building was?

17 McCloone and them were in there. Well across the road there
18 is a water fountain and statues.

19 Q. Beside Dublin Castle?

20 A. Dublin Castle. That's where the meeting took 21 place. In there somewhere. In there somewhere. You know
22 where that?

23 Q. I do, yeah. That used to be the Lord Mayor's 24 Mansion.

25 A. Was it?

1 Q. Called that. But anyway, go on.

2 A. Well in there the meeting took place. And McCloone
3 was at that meeting, Haughey, Paddy ...

4 Q. Morrissey?

5 A. Morrissey. And they seemed to express shock at,
6 what was going on etc.. And it was Feely I think that told
7 Sean Haughey, irrespective of what the outcome was, that it
8 had to go, something to be done with it. Sean Haughey is 9 alleged to have discussed it with Flynn.

10 Q. Yeah.

11 A. Whether he has or not I don't know. Then it went 12 to the Fraud Squad. Because --

13 Q. But Frank Feely was pushing it to the Fraud Squad?

14 A. He was. Yes. I don't know Frank Feely. I don't 15 know anything about the man. No. Well, I mean, he was an 16 honest man. That was the one and only time I ever met him.

17 Q. Right.

18 A. Paddy Morrissey was, to me, an honest man but he was 19 frightened of his own shadow and Redmond knew that, Redmond
20 used to play on him. Every time Redmond wanted to get his 21 way he would accuse Paddy of something and Paddy would run for 22 cover. Because Redmond was the type. Between him, Lawlor
23 and Dunne and co. and our honourable retired friend, Burke,
24 amongst others, that they were great men at pointing fingers
25 if things weren't going their way.

48

1 Q. Uh-huh.

2 A. Anyway, but it was then and there my problem really
3 started. And then I was held to ransom all of the way
4 between O'Callaghan ... O'Callaghan then had the IDA, through 5 the help of Albert Reynolds, jumped in on the site across
6 because I had included the site, which I was given the option
7 from the Dublin Corporation, to include in the overall
8 development across from Fonthill Road.

9 Q. Right.

10 A. There was an 80 acre site across there that I was to 11 include. The other deal was I had an option on the St.
12 Patrick's trust land as well.

13 Q. Which is Edmundsbury?

14 A. Edmundsbury. I paid 150,000 for that.

15 Q. Who did you pay that to?

16 A. St. Patrick's trust.

17 Q. St. Patrick's trust?

18 A. Ah no, drawn up by -- I didn't have the best end of 19 the deal, I didn't do that deal right because I said I'd have 20 a five year option on that but I didn't. And I paid for the 21 option but they wanted me included to get it included in the 22 overall development because at that time there was nothing
23 happening in Ireland or Dublin and this was the biggest thing
24 that would ...

25 Q. Hit the scene?

Tribunal Ref : RED: TGS 3

49

1 A. That would probably ever hit the scene. The whole
2 overall project was to so enticing that numerous funds and 3 institutions wanted a hand in it.

4 Q. Yeah. Makes sense.

5 A. But I was held to ransom then all the way.

6 Q. Well let's just talk about --

7 A. Lawlor, O'Callaghan, Frank Dunlop. The help of the 8 IDA was enlisted to block me and they jumped in on the site
9 across the way.

10 Q. Lets go back --

11 A. He claimed to Paddy Morrissey that he was doing cosy
12 deals with me and he had to back off and handed over the site
13 to the IDA. Who when, as soon as I was out of the way, when 14 I was forced into doing the deal, they ditched.

15 Q. So the IDA didn't end up with the land at the end of 16 it?

17 A. No, no, they ditched it. They were only in there
18 to block me and once I was out of the way. Then O'Callaghan 19 was operating out of the bank centre branch. He was 20 convincing the bank that I would never get the zoning or the 21 planning. They used their good offices with the Councillors, 22 including John Gilbride, Pat Dunne, Lawlor, Hanrahan, etc..
23 O'Callaghan had them all enlisted with the help of Frank 24 Dunlop.

25 Q. And did you actually pay any money, directly or

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 Indirectly, to Dunlop?

2 A. No.

3 Q. No. Did you ever authorise --

4 A. I wouldn't talk to him. I would have nothing to do
5 with him.

6 Q. Okay. Did you ever authorise Barkhill, which was 7 your company?

8 A. No.

9 Q. So how come on the invoices, some of them that you
10 see from --

11 A. Well I wasn't in control then. But I wasn't in 12 control then. The bank took control.

13 Q. Okay.

14 A. The bank put the demand on me when I refused to hand
15 over to O'Callaghan the 50% stake because I had already had 16 paid O'Callaghan 2,250,000 pound and I honoured my deal. But 17 unfortunately in my contract I left it to Maguire, Seamus
18 Maguire, to complete the contract. And he omitted -- we 19 omitted that -- John Deane drew up the contract but omitted.
20 He drew up the contract as a totally one-sided, including the 21 final payment being subject to planning. And when the zoning
22 came up for this site to go in for the zoning. On the night
23 that the motion was to be presented.

24 Q. Yeah.

25 A. I have got these dates because I've also got the 1 motion that went in.

2 Q. Yeah.

3 A. On the night that the motion was to be presented
4 O'Callaghan was blackmailing me from the bank centre branch,
5 with the help of the bank, to hand over before he would allow 6 Neilstown site to be dezoned or mine to go in for zoning.

7 Right? Number one, he wanted the shares in the company.

8 Number two, he wanted the full payment which I refused to pay
9 because I had done a deal and I shook hands on a deal subject
10 to the final payment. I paid him 2 million pounds, the type 11 of money that he never parted with on a deal in his life. He 12 never paid for anything actually because he had too many 13 politicians giving it to him. So between him and the bank.

14 So then when I refused the bank sent me a demand for my money.

15 Q. Uh-huh.

16 A. To pay up the 8 million. Now, I had no zoning, I 17 had no planning, I had paid over the top for the site. I was 18 out -- I personally was out 7.5 million pounds.

19 Q. Who in the bank in AIB at that stage were you 20 dealing with?

21 A. I was dealing with a fella called Eddie Kay but he 22 had nothing to do with this.

23 Q. Right.

24 A. In my opinion Eddie Kay was as honourable a man as I
25 had ever met. But the fellas behind the scenes. There was

1 another fella called Jim Donoagh who was an understudy of 2 Eddie Kay's was doing a lot of the talking. Now, by this 3 time I actually owed the money back to the bank. So they 4 were quite within their right to demand it but they had no
5 right whatsoever for Owen O'Callaghan to be sitting in their 6 office and blackmailing me at the same time. And that's what 7 I took exception to.

8 Q. But let's go back. I mean, we're not at the point
9 yet. But I want to get to the point that the bank
10 effectively were now beginning to take a more proactive role
11 in relation to the property?

12 A. Yeah.

13 Q. Either to protect their own interest, or for 14 whatever reason we can ...

15 A. Well they were protecting -- it was O'Callaghan's
16 interest they were more interested in than their own.

17 Q. Okay. We will keep that apart for the moment.

18 A. Eddie Kay didn't agree with what was going on.

19 Q. But who was directing Eddie Kay?

20 A. That's the guy I'm trying to remember the name of.

21 Well obviously Dave Maguire was.

22 Q. Was his superior?

23 A. Yeah.

24 Q. Where was Chambers in this or was he in it at all?

25 A. Donal Chambers was the man I was looking for. He

1 was always with O'Callaghan in his side office. Every time I
2 went to a meeting which was nothing whatsoever got to do with 3 O'Callaghan. But somehow or other O'Callaghan always 4 happened to be in an office next door when I had a meeting
5 with the bank and Donal Chambers was always, always around,
6 somewhere. And this Farrell was brought in from Cork,
7 Michael Farrell. He was brought in and replaced Eddie Kay.
8 Eddie Kay was moved sideways. He was moved out into the bank
9 centre branch as manager and this Farrell who was in Cork ...

10 Q. Okay. So the bank, at this point of the story we 11 now have, have basically put a demand on you for the return of 12 the 8 million. You are not disputing their right to the 13 return of the money. But the bank then decide that they will 14 leave the 8 million in Barkhill, on what condition? What 15 conditions did they impose on you?

16 A. That I hand over 40% of the company to Owen
17 O'Callaghan.

18 Q. Yeah.

19 A. Well O'Callaghan wanted 50% but they watered it down
20 to 40% but he already had 2 million of my cash, my money.

21 Q. So did you have 60% of the company then?

22 A. No, I didn't -- I wouldn't agree to it.

23 Q. Right. So what happened then?

24 A. They wrote me a letter demanding their money back.

25 No, they sent me an agreement to sign and I refused to sign

1 it.

2 Q. What did that agreement effectively say, Tom?

3 A. The agreement said -- the agreement was that I -- it
4 was between Riga Limited, O'Callaghan's company, and the bank
5 and me. Where hand over 40% to Riga, 20% to the bank and I
6 have got these letters and the dates of them as well and they 7 will coincide with the dates of the night of the motion. And 8 I refused to sign them. So the bank then sent me a letter
9 demanding the money. This was at eleven o'clock at night.
10 So I told them -- they said then they demanded their money.
11 So I told them then -- by this time then, you see, there had 12 been various institutions that I had -- sorry, this doesn't 13 sound so coordinated but there was so many things went on.
14 The bank then -- when I refused to sign then they sent me a 15 letter demanding their money back and the following day they 16 withdrew it.

17 Q. They withdrew the letter?

18 A. And insisted that I come over to a meeting.

19 Q. Lets just break and have lunch.

20

21 (broke for lunch)

22

23 A. Well I was just saying then that at the time that I
24 made the complaint and went to the Fraud Squad and all the 25 rest. Flynn had Phil Monaghan show him around the site. I

55

1 had a phone call from Phil Monaghan then one day. I had 2 never spoken to the man, I didn't even know him. I heard of 3 him, I heard of Monarch Properties but I didn't even know who 4 the personnel were. I had this phone call one day at home so
5 they said it was Phil Monaghan when I answered the phone.
6 This was in Luton so I think Flynn gave him my number. His 7 opening statement to me was "that site you got, you know,
8 you'll have trouble with that site, you'll never build on it".
9 And I said "why do you say that" and he said "because I got my 10 foot on you" so I said "who are you". So he said he was Phil
11 Monaghan of Monarch Properties and I wasn't going to come in 12 and take the bread out of people's mouths, that he had his 13 foot on me. I said "you have your foot on me". I said "the 14 only fucking time you'll have your foot on me is when you 15 visit my grave" and I put the phone down. So that was my 16 first and last conversation with him, with Phil Monaghan.
17 Funny enough, O'Callaghan made the same statement to me about 18 two days later. That I would never build a foot on it.

19 Q. Okay. We are now back to the stage where, can you
20 remember the payments that were made from Barkhill to people 21 like Frank Dunlop? Did you authorise those or what were they 22 for?

23 A. No.

24 Q. How much were they for do you think?

25 A. Pardon?

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

56

1 Q. How much did they amount to?

2 A. I reckon --

3 Q. Yeah. How much did they amount to?

4 A. There was various amounts of 30 and 40,000 pounds.

5 There was payments due to various people.

6 Q. Uh-huh.

7 A. Architects and engineers and all the rest of it and 8 Ambrose Kelly and Co.. This was after, of course, the 9 agreement was forced on me by AIB.

10 Q. Uh-huh.

11 A. That agreement was signed at about three o'clock in 12 the morning because I categorically refused but they actually 13 had Neville Byrne of William Fry issue me with a letter.

14 Q. Yeah.

15 A. Saying that they were going to bankrupt us or put in 16 the receiver and guarantee I would never collect a penny of my 17 Fing money.

18 Q. Yeah.

19 A. This was Dave Maguire, this statement to be exact.

20 You will never get one penny of your fucking money back and 21 I'll ensure you won't or you sign this agreement. Well

22 Maguire is a witness to that statement. So I categorically

23 refused. Then somebody suggested that I take this Murphy on 24 board, a solicitor, that I needed a solicitor. He was 25 recommended to me by some bloke who had no connection at all.

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 So I think it was Hargan & Co. or Horgan & Co. in Cork and he 2 was supposed to be ...

3 Q. MJ Horgan, yeah.

4 A. Was that the one?

5 Q. Yeah.

6 A. It was a fella called John Murphy. So he came up
7 to meet me and I met him in the Berkley Court and I had dinner
8 with him. And he told me that he had a word with John Deane
9 before he came to see me, that's O'Callaghan's solicitor.
10 And that John Deane said that he would be wasting his Fing
11 time having anything to do with me, I was a man of straw.
12 Between hopping and trotting on that day anyway, that was at 13 lunchtime of the day, I had a meeting later with the AIB and 14 Murphy never turned up at the meeting.

15 Q. Oh, right.

16 A. Well he didn't turn up. Eddie Kay or someone asked 17 where he was or why and I said well he was told I was a man of 18 straw and O'Callaghan and John Deane were sitting.

19 Q. Did you ever meet Murphy then?

20 A. What?

21 Q. Did you meet Murphy?

22 A. I met Murphy, yeah. He came to meet me.

23 Q. At dinner?

24 A. For dinner, yeah. And we had dinner in the Berkley
25 Court.

1 Q. And did he agree to act for you?

2 A. He didn't quite agree to act but I assumed he did.

3 Q. Yeah.

4 A. The indications were that that's what he was there

5 for.

6 Q. And you were asking him to come to a meeting with 7 you?

8 A. Yeah. That I had a meeting that afternoon but he 9 never showed up to the meeting.

10 Q. All right. So therefore you assumed that he had 11 been warned off or something?

12 A. Well he told me that he was told by John Deane that 13 I was a man of straw. So anyway we waited in the meeting and 14 he didn't turn up. So John Deane proposedly made a phone call 15 and came back and said that Murphy was on his way back to 16 Cork.

17 Q. Right.

18 A. And that he wasn't coming. You know, as if I was 19 stupid or something. And I said yeah, you told him I was a 20 man of straw.

21 Q. Uh-huh.

22 A. So Deane, of course, denied that he said it and 23 Eddie Kay said what is that? I said well Murphy said that 24 Deane went to see him and he must have heard or Murphy must

1 Deane told him I was a man of straw. Oh, I never said a
2 thing like that, Dean said. So I looked at him and I said to 3 him the only fucking straw around this table is on your head.

4 Q. Yeah. Because you were referring to his ...

5 A. Wig! I said that's coming. That's coming loud I
6 says from someone who has had 2.5 million of my money as a
7 result of blackmail.

8 Q. Yeah.

15 Q. We had got to the stage where McGrath was basically
16 -- where you had said to John Deane that he had got 2.5
17 million pounds of your money at that stage. Go back to that.

18 A. Yeah. And I told him with the help of the bank he 19 was blackmailing me for the company and he had no Fing
20 right to be there in the first place. It was nothing to do
21 with him. So McGrath piped up and says you owe them money
22 and I'm going to see they get it. And he said you're going
23 to sign this Fing agreement or you'll never collect a 24 penny. He says I'm here to sort it out. It's my head or 25 your's he says and it's not going to be mine.

1 Q. What --

2 A. So I said to him well what has -- why are you so
3 concerned about O'Callaghan, O'Callaghan Properties. What
4 has this got to do with O'Callaghan, why is it is O'Callaghan
5 here, why is John Deane here, this is my company? So you have 6 a right to put in a receiver if you want to put in a receiver
7 but you have no fucking right to have them at the table and 8 you have no right to hand over my company to them. So 9 whatever he said, some crude comment to me, I said to him for 10 two tens I'd put you through that fucking window. I said ten 11 years ago I said you'd be through it by now. So then he said
12 to me you don't threaten me etc. etc.. I says you don't make 13 comments like that to me again.

14 Q. Go back to --

15 A. He called me -- he called me something that was 16 totally uncalled for and I --

17 Q. You reacted, obviously?

18 A. And I said to him ten years ago you would have been 19 through the fucking window by now.

20 Q. 'Em. Back to just the Barkhill. Once they had 21 got into Barkhill, you had 50%, the bank had 10%, is that 22 right, the bank had 10%?

23 A. No, I had 40%. They reduced me to a minority.
24 The bank had 20%, O'Callaghan had 40% and I had 40%.

25 Q. Okay. Now, what was the make-up of the board of

61

1 Barkhill at that stage?

2 A. The make-up of the board was there a fella from 3 Capital Markets, AIB Capital Markets.

4 Q. Who was that? I have the record in the office.
5 It's not relevant if you can't remember. And who else was on,
6 the board?

7 A. Owen O'Callaghan.

8 Q. Yeah?

9 A. Maguire as secretary, to replace my wife.

10 Q. Yeah?

11 A. Well an affidavit, not an affidavit, a power of 12 attorney was signed. And O'Callaghan, he was the secretary, 13 Maguire. O'Callaghan was appointed -- I was supposed to be 14 the Chairman but I wasn't. Because of -- so all control was 15 taken out of my hands.

16 Q. Okay.. So now when --

17 A. I was presented at twelve o'clock at night or 18 something with this letter from your man ...

19 Q. O'Beirne?

20 A. O'Beirne of ...

21 Q. William Fry.

22 A. William fry.

23 Q. Just retrace your steps to me for a moment --

24 A. And the letter stated to me of course that the 25 receiver was appointed there and then. This was ten o'clock

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 at night, or I sign. So I said I'm signing this under 2 duress.

3 Q. Go back to the point where we're now in a situation
4 whereby you are no longer in control of the company,
5 O'Callaghan, somebody from AIB and yourself were on board and 6 payments are now being made to Frank Dunlop.

7 A. I had an agreement from the bank that all
8 commitments from me to various people like Ove Arup, Taggart
9 and Co., the architects, O'Malley and people that was owed
10 money, that they would be paid. That was welshed on and it
11 took writs later on, years later, from these various companies
12 to recover the money. I was in the terrible position that I
13 had to sign an affidavit against myself for to get them paid.
14 But apart from all of that, in the meantime everybody
15 connected with me was ousted from the company, everybody
16 connected with the deal, Ove Arups, everybody was sidelined
17 and all these, Ambrose Kelly was brought in, McCarthy was 18 brought in as engineers.

19 Q. Let's just talk about the control. Because, I 20 mean, what the Tribunal are going to be interested in is the 21 payments that would have been made to Frank Dunlop. They 22 seem to have been substantial after that day.

23 A. I started getting notes from the bank. There was 24 various board meetings called and rarely was there money
25 discussed at them. And usually when it was discussed the 1 bank was always saying they were paid -- they were not going

2 to pay anything. But in the meantime when I'd be back in 3 Luton I would get these list things from the bank listing the 4 number of people they had paid, signed by Owen O'Callaghan and 5 looking for my signature on the grounds that if I was ever to 6 get me money back, that I had to sign these to give the 7 authority. So I signed them and I used to send them back
8 until I began to realise that there was a load of money going
9 to Frank Dunlop. So I said what's the money to Frank Dunlop
10 for? Oh, it was for work done, PR work. And there was this 11 Shefran. I asked who Shefran Limited was and nobody would 12 answer me. So then I asked were these payments, were these 13 spurious payments to politicians and I didn't get an answer so 14 the next ones I refused to sign. So I wouldn't sign them.
15 So they said they didn't need my signature because whatever
16 needs to be done, they were doing it and they didn't need me.
17 And when I'd go to a board meeting I'd be told a pack of lies
18 so I decided not to go to board meetings either, it was a 19 waste of time, a waste of my money.

20 Q. Who was signing those cheques that you believed were 21 going to --

22 A. They were signed by the bank. They were paid by 23 the bank, seemingly, on Owen O'Callaghan's instructions but 24 signed by their representative. The first ones were signed
25 by me because I assumed they were paid legitimate payments

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 until I seen this figure mounting up to hundreds of 2 thousands.

3 Q. Do you -- or is it your view, and I think it can't 4 be any stronger than this at this stage, Tom, because it's up
5 to somebody else to find out this. Do you think the bank
6 were aware of who that money was going to?

7 A. Of course they were, they wouldn't pay a penny to 8 anybody without their sanctioning it. - And it was Michael 9 O'Farrell and whoever was above him was sanctioning the money.

10 Q. And who would sanction it above O'Farrell?

11 A. Because every time I was there. I was owed 25,000
12 and I was desperate at the time because of the tax hitting me
13 for 10 million I didn't owe them.

14 Q. The tax now in the UK?

15 A. In the UK tax, yeah.

16 Q. But who would have given O'Farrell his instructions?

17 A. Well it was Donal Chambers.

18 Q. And you think that Chambers was effectively the 19 promoter of O'Callaghan who basically ... I am kind of like 20 trying to identify who --

21 A. I am qualifying the statement -- I am qualifying it
22 insofar as I suspect.

23 Q. Yeah?

24 A. Rather than know exactly that Donal Chambers was the 25 king pin.

1 Q. Yeah.

2 A. There was others.

3 Q. Yeah.

4 A. McGrath was like that with O'Callaghan, Dave

5 McGrath. The night of the zoning meeting when McGrath,

6 O'Callaghan agreed -- it was a Council meeting and O'Callaghan

7 was in at the meeting and that night they were given the 8 zoning from the site.

9 21 Q. [REDACTED] C

10 [REDACTED]

11 A. I know one bloke was given a show jumper horse for 12 his daughter from O'Callaghan.

13 22 Q. [REDACTED] C

14 A. I'm positive he didn't.

15 Q. Okay. Let's move on to payments to other people
16 because --

17 A. As a matter of fact it was one of the things
18 O'Callaghan said.

19 Q. To who?

20 A. When he wanted to sicken me he used to say things.
21 When he would tell me I would never put a foot or get a foot
22 of planning on the place. He took Sean -- I went to Willie
23 Farrell, who was a Senator. He was from Sligo. I knew him,
24 I grew up with him, you know, and I told him what was going
25 on and all the rest. And so he suggested to me, he didn't

1 have much say there. He was a Senator, so he didn't really
2 know much. So he suggested that John Gilbride was a
3 Councillor. Now, John Gilbride -- Eugene Gilbride was our TD
4 at home for -- when I was a kid and I grew up with John
5 Gilbride so that I brought in John Gilbride. That I should
6 go to John Gilbride. And he arranged to meet me the 7 following day. So he took me out and he introduced me to 8 John Gilbride. I hadn't met him for thirty years.

Anyway,
Gilbride said that he would see. I told him about Lawlor.
He kept insisting Lawlor was all right, to get on the right side of him. And I said no, he's a gangster. To me he's a gangster, along with quite a few others. Gangsters.
Gilbride came in and he was supposed to be on my side.

Q. Yeah.

A. And it looked as if he was. And he enlisted the help of McGrath and Marian McGuinness.

Q. In AIB?

A. No, Marian McGuinness. These were Councillors.

Q. Oh, Councillors. I'm sorry. Yes.

A. And numerous others. They were all supposed to be

1 on my side. Right? And as far as Gilbride was concerned, he
2 was looking after my interests and to prevent Lawlor and co.
3 from the carry on that was going on but the next thing I
4 discovered some time later was that O'Callaghan had bought
5 Gilbride and promised him, I think it was 100,000 pounds, and 6 eventually Gilbride, he's teaching in Balbriggan College, gave 7 up his job for a year, took a sabbatical, or whatever you call
8 it.

9 Q. Yeah.

10 A. And went on board with O'Callaghan, for to campaign
11 for getting the zoning through with Owen O'Callaghan. As far
12 as I'm aware, I know he got quite a substantial sum of money,
13 mostly paid out of Barkhill, out of my money, quite frankly.

14 Q. But who would have authorised that payment?

15 A. The bank and O'Callaghan.

16 Q. You would certainly not have contributed to that?

17 A. No. I wouldn't sign it. I refused to sign them.

18 After that, after the first two on the list and when I began
19 to see this Frank Dunlop's name cropping up I started 20 querying. After that I wasn't asked for my signature because 21 the one they did send to me I sent it back, I wouldn't sign
22 it. I said I wouldn't have anything to do with it. I'm 23 telling you an honest to God fact. I accused the bank at the 24 next board meeting that they were a shower of gangsters.

25 Q. Yeah.

1 A. And the bank told me the only person you are doing
2 is yourself.

3 Q. And who would have been at that meeting in the bank?

4 A. They wouldn't give me a cent. Not a cent. The 5 money I was owed they wouldn't give it to me and despite the 6 fact I couldn't even come over to the board meetings because 7 between the tax man and all I was totally screwed. At 8 weekends I didn't have a tenner to buy the grub for the family
9 and me a millionaire. That's what Dublin done to me.

10 Q. Come back to me for a second --

11 A. But I'm a stubborn bastard, aren't I?

12 Q. Oh, yeah. There's no doubt about that, Tom. What 13 I want to try and identify is that at some time in the 14 preparation of the proceedings there was a payment requested
15 by another person.

16 A. Yeah, I was told -- oh, this was before all -- 17 before I realised what the whole set up. I was told I had to 18 contribute. There was an election coming up and there was 19 one election and Charlie had barely won it or something. It
20 was a hung parliament. And he lost his majority and there
21 was elections. So I was approached to pay a donation. I 22 don't know was it by Flynn, I think it was Flynn actually that 23 suggested that I give a donation to the party. So I thought 24 well if it's a political donation, it's neither here nor 25 there, you know. And I made the statement that, you know,

1 the donation to the party but I said I'd give a donation to
2 either party because I'm not affiliated to either, it didn't
3 matter to me. But I must say that none of the Fine Gael,
4 although they were in the frame, because Gilbride, what I
5 didn't know was, was the coordinator. So when it was I
6 scratch your back and you scratch mine between the Fine Gael
7 Councillors and him and other Councillors had this arrangement
8 where the Fine Gael fellas done, certain ones of them, not all
9 of them, done exactly what certain Fianna Fail blokes wanted.
10 But they got a cut out of the cake, as I understand the 11 situation. So they had an arrangement with, a cross party 12 arrangement but I don't know who the personal area are. The 13 ones I know weren't part of it was Eithne Fitzgerald and 14 Mitchell, a fella called Jim Mitchell, Tom Boland. It's 15 easier for me to name who I know weren't part of the thing.
16 Eithne Fitzgerald opposed me, she opposed the whole deal on 17 the grounds that Neilstown was nearer to the people in 18 Clondalkin and it was more a Clondalkin site and she done it
19 on principle and I respected her for that. So she was 20 opposed to it. But one thing she wasn't was corrupt. And 21 Jim Mitchell, he was another one. He definitely wasn't.
22 Tom Boland, as far as I was concerned, was an honourable man.
23 But as for the rest that I knew involved, every one of them
24 wanted 100,000 pounds. 7 million pound it would have taken.

25 Q. To do it?

1 A. To buy the Councillors. That wasn't talking about
2 the main politicians.

3 Q. Go back to where you were talking about your 4 donation with Fianna Fail and Padraig Flynn.

5 A. Oh, yeah. So I talked it over with one or two 6 people I knew, you know, what would be an appropriate. So
7 they said it was up to me, you know, it was quite a big deal
8 and all the rest of it and that they wouldn't sort of be 9 looking for peanuts. So I then in the end decided to give 10 50,000 donation. So I gave Fianna Fail a donation of 50,000
11 pound. So I paid the cheque. I was told to leave, again, 12 the cheque blank. In other words, no name on it.

13 Q. No payee.

14 A. No payee. So I wrote out the 50,000 pounds and I
15 signed the cheque and I gave it to Flynn, Padraig Flynn.
16 Now, some time later I was taken up to ... there was a fella
17 got to hear that knew me, he was a fella called Scallan and he 18 came in to see me one day and he knew that there was some 19 shenanigan going on and all the rest of it and that I was up 20 against a blank wall. And he came in to see me. So he took 21 me up through the Dail premises, out the other side into 22 Merrion Square is it?

23 Q. Yeah.

24 A. And into an office and into this little poky office
25 and he introduced me to a fella called Sean Sherwin. And he

1 told me that Sherwin was the main organiser of the Dublin
2 Fianna Fail party. He also was involved in the collection in 3 the, you know, in the funds and the arranging of funds and one
4 thing and another. So eventually after sitting there for 5 about three quarters of an hour Sherwin came on the scene.
6 So your man kept insisting on me to tell him what was going
7 on, Sherwin. So I told what I knew. But he wasn't 8 seemingly interested at all. The only thing he was 9 interested in was that he had a sister in law running for one
10 of the parties in the area and whether I'd give her a big 11 donation. Right? And that he'd see what he could do in 12 sorting all of this out for me but I would have to give a 13 donation to his sister in law. I think, I'm certain it was 14 his sister in law and she was running not for Fianna Fail for 15 one of the other parties, either Independent or Labour or one 16 of those parties in that area, in the Clondalkin area. He 17 then arranged to meet me in a hotel, up in the new hotel, the 18 one up at the top of Stephen's Green there, the Westbury, no, 19 the Conrad. So he met me in the Conrad Hotel. Who was with 20 me now. Oh, yeah. Sherwin, Sherwin came along and he had a 21 Northern Ireland fella with him. I don't know who the 22 Northern Ireland fella was, some bloke. And introduced me to 23 this American who had a load of funds. And that the American 24 wanted to get involved in the deal and he had these millions
25 and millions of pounds. So he introduced me to this fella

1 who turned out to be a fella called McMullen. And he was 2 involved in all of these bonds and deals and what have you.
3 But it turned out that the man was a fraudster. He was a
4 conmerchant. Up front free conmerchant. You paid him
5 50,000 pounds up front and he was going to arrange all these 6 funds etc. etc.. So he was a fraudster. So there you are.

7 Q. Just go back. In terms of the actual payment that 8 you made to Flynn. When you got your cheque back was it
9 actually made payable to Fianna Fail or Flynn or ...

10 A. Well the bank kept the cheque. At this time they 11 didn't send back the cheques. The bank kept all the old
12 cheques.

13 Q. Was that cheque written on Barkhill or was it
14 written on the Bank of Ireland or who was it with now?

15 A. It was Bank of Ireland, Blanchardstown. When I 16 spoke to Sherwin, which was a lot later after I paid that, 17 Sherwin said to me that Flynn never gave the donation in to 18 Fianna Fail, that he kept it for himself. That it went into 19 Flynn's account. I asked him how did he know that. I said
20 how do you know. Because he asked me for some donation and I
21 said to him I've already paid a donation.

22 Q. Yeah.

23 A. So he says what did you pay and I said I paid 50,000
24 pounds donation to the party. So he said but we never got 25 that money. He said who did you give it to. I said I gave

1 It to Flynn. He said well Flynn kept it and we never got it.

2 Q. He could have actually paid it in to the party, I
3 mean, we just don't know.

4 A. Oh, I don't know. The bank stub -- the bank kept
5 the stubs but I never bothered enquiring from the bank as to 6 who. Although I did hear a name it was paid to but for the 7 life of me I can't remember. Paul Sheeran told me, he was 8 the Bank Manager at the time.

9 Q. And he actually saw the actual ...

10 A. Yeah.

11 Q. So maybe Paul Sheeran would have the information.

12 A. No, Paul wouldn't remember. The bank would have it
13 though,

14 Q. I know that the authorities for the bank, I must 15 actually get copies of what information the bank released to 16 the Tribunal so they can give it back to you. Maybe it might 17 jog some of your memory. Okay. Is there any other payments
18 that you think may be of interest or other leads that the 19 Tribunal should be pursuing?

20 A. Well, you see, a lot of what I have is hearsay. A 21 lot of what I know to be fact would be hearsay to a Tribunal,
22 if you know what I mean.

23 Q. With this exception. A Tribunal is different to 24 every other inquiry mechanism that you would normally have 25 because there isn't the same degree of privilege available to

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 people. Once you get into the Tribunal, you are nearly
2 forced to ...

3 A. Take Bertie Ahern, for instance. I trusted Bertie
4 Ahern because when I did the land deal, now, I tendered for
5 that, an open tender.

6 Q. This is the 70 acres now?

7 A. The 70 acres. An open tender and I paid way over
8 the top. I bought all the land around it for 40,000 and I
9 paid 70,000 odd an acre for that land from Dublin Corporation.

10 Q. From Dublin Corporation?

11 A. From Dublin Corporation, yeah. in a tender. For 12 the simple reason is that John Corcoran of Green Property
13 started mouthing and he was being aided and abetted by certain 14 politicians who was trying to fuck me up, you know? And he 15 wrote in letters. Not only that.

16
17

18

19 And this phillistine that arrived over from England to destroy
20 Dublin etc. etc. was all the comments. But it was all
21 engineered. It was all engineered for to force the bank into 22 putting the screws on me. To encourage the bank. It was 23 all orchestrated by Ambrose Kelly and O'Callaghan.

24 Q. What wrong doing, if any, can you accuse Bertie
25 Ahern of insofar as all he did was probably do the

1 representation for Green Property?

2 A. The only favour I had done, Bertie Ahern done it for 3 me. And that was when George Redmond and Lawlor and co. had 4 tried to block me completing the land. I had paid the 5 deposit, my tender had been accepted and the contract was 6 going through and the meeting to ratify the deal took place.
7 Lawlor and others, I think Dunne was involved, I think Ray
8 Burke was even involved, done everything in their power to 9 block me getting the land from the Corporation. So in the 10 first meeting they started accusing Paddy Morrissey of doing
11 cosy deals, despite the fact this was a tender, an open
12 tender. So they had adjourned the meeting because Paddy
13 Morrissey and co. didn't know whether he could go through 14 legally and complete the deal despite the fact that they had 15 accepted the deposit. Somebody -- again, I was told that I 16 wasn't going to get the 70 acres despite the fact that I had 17 the highest tender etc. etc. and that there was somebody in 18 blocking it or stirring up shit. I rang up McCloone and I
19 asked McCloone what the hell was going on. He didn't know.
20 He said that Redmond and Lawlor and co. were at it, stirring 21 up shit. As far as he was concerned the deal was done, I had 22 tendered, I had won the tender, I had paid my deposit, the 23 deposit was accepted and they had no option but to complete
24 it. But that there was certain accusations being made etc.
25 etc. and they were holding up on it. And he said to me who

1 do you know, what politician do you know that you can trust.
2 And I said well there's nobody really, I know nobody. He
3 said well is there anyone left he said. I said well Bertie
4 Ahern. I met Bertie Ahern on two occasions but he's the only
5 one. He was the Minister for Labour. So I rang Bertie
6 Ahern and I told him what was going on because I had discussed
7 the whole deal with him prior to that. And he was in favour 8 of the deal because of the amount of employment it was,
9 between that and Arlington he wanted these deals to go down,
10 according to him anyway. So he was all in favour. He 11 thought it was the best thing ever to happen to Dublin, that 12 it was a unique proposal. And on his -- as far as he was 13 concerned that something like this would be like the rising
14 ship, it would bring everything up with it, you know.
15 Anyway, he sent in a guy called Joe Burke, who was a Dublin
16 City Councillor, into Dublin Corporation when the next meeting
17 came up the following week, to monitor what was going on and 18 whatever was said or what, the deal went through.

19 Q. So what you are saying is that, I mean, as a result 20 of the direct intervention of Bertie Ahern or his 21 representatives?

22 A. Yeah, the deal went through.

office because I was in No. 20, where Arlington's office, I think it was 25, next door to Lisney's in Stephen's Green.

15

16

17

A. 25 Stephen's Green. So Burke came in to see me.

18

And he had no real appointment or that but he came and he stayed and he was talking. And he was talking round in reels and he was giving me the impression that a favour was due etc.

19

20

21 but he had no real purpose in the meeting. Now, I

22 deliberately didn't bite because I was prompted on many occasions to ask well what's it going to cost me. What's 24 this going to cost me. But I didn't. I decided not to.

23

25

So consequently I believe he came to let me know there was a

1 cost attached to it but I didn't give him the opportunity and

2 ...

3 Q. You were never specifically asked?

4 A. He never specifically asked for anything, neither
5 did I take the bait. Now, in the meantime Bertie Ahern I
6 think had come -- he became Minister of Finance and there was 7 a guaranteed zoning of Tallaght, Clondalkin. Not necessarily 8 our site but Clondalkin.

9 Q. Yeah?

10 A. Neilstown or whichever, whichever would do the 11 building. Anyway, all the three were to get designation
12 status. Now, Tallaght had got it because by this time --
13 because I was thwarted all along the way. Nearly ten years
14 went by and the interest rate was rolling up on the money.

15 Q. Yeah.

16 A. The -- Owen O'Callaghan. I came up with a fund,
17 people who were interested. So I asked the bank that if I
18 took them out would they go. And they said they were always 19 interested in the money but they didn't see how I could or 20 would take them out. So I said to them not to be too sure of 21 that. The next thing I had a phone call from O'Callaghan
22 wanting to know who this was.

23 Q. Yeah.

24 A. So I sent a letter to O'Callaghan asking him if he 25 was paid out.

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 Q. Yeah.

2 A. Now, what that amount of money would be, so I got 3 back some figures anyway, some millions of pounds figures from 4 him and I got it from the bank. Now, this was based on the 5 thing having zoning and that it was guaranteed. By this time
6 it had the zoning and it was guaranteed more or less the 7 planning but with the designation. The funding was no
8 problem at all. Right? And I could bring in the funds.
9 The next thing I discover was that Owen O'Callaghan had paid
10 Bertie Ahern to block the designation on Blanchardstown and on 11 this one. On a zoned site.

12 Q. But why would he do that?

13 A. What?

14 Q. Why would he do that?

15 A. Well, you see, the site stood up on its own. If 16 the site needed, what I always said was if it needed
17 designation to make it work it was a poor site.

18 Q. Yeah.

19 A. It didn't need designation.

20 Q. Yeah.

21 A. Right?

22 Q. Uh-huh.

23 A. But if it got the designation O'Callaghan was out.

24 Q. Right.

25 A. I challenged the bank, I challenged the bank that

1 they'd have to go.

2 Q. Yeah. So how did you know --

3 A. The bank, on the grounds, you see, that the deal
4 they forced me into was illegal and that they'd no right
5 whatsoever to give my company away.

6 Q. But going back --

7 A. And I challenged them on that.

8 Q. Just in terms of how, how do you know that Bertie 9 Ahern got a brass farthing from O'Callaghan. Was there any 10 record of that?

11 A. Well I had a meeting then with the bank and I was 12 discussing the possibility of taking them out and raising the 13 funds to take them out.

14 Q. Yeah.

15 A. Which they were very sceptical of because they said
16 I was bankrupt.

17 Q. Yeah.

18 A. Which was all engineered probably anyway.

19 Q. Uh-huh.

20 A. And I said it had nothing to do with that.

21 Q. Yeah.

22 A. It had to do with the company, nothing to do with me
23 personally but that the site itself stood up and with the 24 designation it was 100% certain. The next time -- the minute
25 I said that O'Callaghan left the meeting.

1 Q. Yeah.

2 A. Right? And he didn't come back for about the best
3 part of an hour or so. And he then came back and he said
4 there'll be no designation on the site. And I said there
5 fucking will be. I said it's guaranteed designation. I
6 said it will get that or everybody in Dublin has to go back on 7 their word. He said there will be no designation on the 8 site. You check it up. And when I check it had the 9 pronouncement had been made or was going to be made the 10 following day that there was no further designation. And who 11 was at that -- O'Callaghan openly stated that Bertie Ahern was 12 ensuring that neither Green nor that site would get 13 designation.

14 Q. But, I mean, was that a political decision? Are you 15 saying that he was paid for doing that?

16 A. Oh, no, he was paid for doing that. Because he 17 would have been out. I have no proof of that.

18 Q. No, no, no --

19 A. All I know is what I heard.

20 Q. But did O'Callaghan ever say he gave Bertie any 21 money?

22 A. He did. He said Bertie was taken care of.

23 Q. And he didn't say an amount or ...

24 A. He used to openly brag about it. O'Callaghan used
25 to openly brag about it. And he never said you would never

1 get a fucking foot of planning on that. You will never get
2 it. And I said well if you get a foot on it I'll get a foot
3 on it. He said -- he says you're talking a different ball
4 game he said. You see a lot of it I can't -- I know what 5 happened but I can't prove it.

6 Q. No, no, no, that's not your job to prove anything.
7 Your job, as I see it, is insofar as I'm able --

8 A. Albert Reynolds got involved through the Minister of 9 Industry and whatever.

10 Q. Commerce.

11 A. Industry and Commerce.

12 Q. When was this now?

13 A. They left the IDA. Dan, Flinter and McGowan. I
14 know it took place. I know it happened.

15 Q. Is this in relation to ...

16 A. The site across the road. Just to block me and 17 they did. Because Paddy Morrissey -- the IDA went into Paddy
18 Morrissey and said that I was not going to fucking build a 19 stone on that site.

20 Q. But what role did Albert Reynolds have in that?

21 A. Albert was the coordinator for ... Owen O'Callaghan
22 went to Albert when he wanted any strings pulled. So
23 O'Callaghan and -- like, for instance, Albert spend the night
24 of the 11th of March, 1994, in O'Callaghan's house.

25 Q. Uh-huh.

1 A. To make his financial collection of, there were 2 three or four other notorieties there to pay him his money.
3 And he flew from O'Callaghan's house in the morning to catch
4 the plane to go to the St. Patrick's do in America on the 12th
5 of March.

6 Q. And why is the 11th of March a significant date?

7 A. Because I know Albert Reynolds was in O'Callaghan's
8 house that night. I also know the previous year when Albert
9 was making his collections.

10 Q. Who was he making his collections from and for what 11 purpose? I mean, what is your suspicion?

12 A. What?

13 Q. What is your suspicion?

14 A. Now, you are in Dublin the same as I was.

15 Q. Absolutely.

16 A. You know more about Dublin than I ever will learn.

17 Q. Yeah. But, I mean --

18 A. You know more about Dublin --

19 Q. This is not my evidence.

20 A. Yeah but --

21 Q. What we are not trying to do here, as I keep saying
22 to you. All we're trying to do and what we basically told 23 the Tribunal we would do, is we would give them sign posts and 24 it's up to them to follow the trail. We will give them
25 whatever we can do to help. And I'm saying that, you know,

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 If they have a name or a specific amount or a detail, they
2 then have powers to go looking at that, in much more scrutiny
3 than you'll actually believe.

4 A. Well what I know is that the best part a million
5 pound went out of my account.

6 Q. Yeah.

7 A. Without my authority.

8 Q. Uh-huh.

9 A. Paid out by O'Callaghan and the bank.

10 Q. Uh-huh.

11 A. The bank would not pay one cent. The bank agreed
12 first before O'Callaghan would pay anything. Right? And it
13 was sanctioned by, what's this him name was, they brought him
14 in, he was only a paper, he was a rubber stamp anyway, for the 15 Capital Markets to sign with O'Callaghan when they wanted to 16 pay it. A million pounds went out of my account when I
17 didn't have a fucking tender to buy me dinner.

18 Q. Okay. But who sanctioned that, in your view?

19 A. What?

20 Q. Who sanctioned that? We know O'Callaghan --

21 A. Oh, it was sanctioned by the senior management at 22 the bank.

23 Q. We've already said who the senior management are.
24 On the basis of 25 A. Eddie Kay asked questions and he was moved out of

1 the way. He did not like what was going on so he was moved
2 sideways.

3 Q. And the ultimate person, as far as you're concerned,
4 who was pushing O'Callaghan was our friend, Mr. Chambers?

5 A. Donal Chambers was a great friend of O'Callaghan's,
6 that's for certain. And O'Callaghan happened -- was around
7 outside the door. Every time there was a board meeting or 8 anything, Donal Chambers would be outside the door and talking
9 to O'Callaghan. O'Callaghan had another stunt. Just before
10 there was a break up, you know, for tea or something and you'd 11 go to the toilet he'd be out in front of you and he'd be in 12 the broom cupboard in the toilet. He done that. I caught
13 him out, deliberately caught him out. He'd be in the broom 14 cupboard because if I was talking to Maguire, or whatever, and 15 it took me a while to latch on to this. We used to meet
16 down -- I used to have meetings down with Taggarts and all of 17 that down in Jury's and we might be sitting in the foyer.

18 Q. Yeah.

19 A. Discussing everything. And we'd go to the toilet
20 and I latched on to this as well. So they had a man planted
21 and he was always sitting with his back to us somewhere close 22 by. And we began to notice this fella. And I didn't put 23 two and two together for, oh, a long time, until I was being 24 set up one night. But anyway, I began to realise John Deane 25 or O'Callaghan would be somewhere, if not John Deane, one of

1 their cohorts or Ambrose Kelly. And you went from the Foyer
2 and you had to go up a sort of a ramp to the toilets. But
3 there would be somebody sitting behind the bush.

4 Q. Yeah, yeah, yeah.

5 A. You know the little trees. And as soon as we would
6 start walking up there someone would go scuttling into the 7 toilet. Now, for a long time I took no notice of this until 8 we noticed this guy tailing us all of the time. And if we 9 sat here he'd be sitting there, you know. And do you know
10 who he was?

11 Q. No.

12 A. The fella that Ambrose Kelly and O'Callaghan used to 13 bring the Minister down, [REDACTED]

14 [REDACTED]
15 Q. Which fella?

16 A. Do you remember the Gas Board, the fella made the 17 suggestion to the Gas Board to remember his company.

18 Q. Ah, the fella down in Cork?

19 A. The Fine Gael Minister. Well it was Owen
20 O'Callaghan that grassed on him. It was Owen O'Callaghan.
21 He was appointed by Charlie Haughey as a Director of the Gas
22 Board.

23 Q. Who was?

24 A. Owen O'Callaghan.

25 Q. Oh, Owen O'Callaghan.

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

87

1 A. Yeah. And he brought down that Minister because.

2 Q. Covney?

3 A. Hugh Covney. He died there recently. [REDACTED]

4 [REDACTED] And then the Lowry affair started.

5 Nothing to do with Ben Dunne at this time. This was Lowry
6 got involved and Ambrose Kelly and O'Callaghan started writing
7 letters and they had this defraud accountant, what's this his 8 name was.

9 Q. The guy who was involved. I know the guy you mean,
10 yeah.

11 A. Writing the letters. They were dictating the 12 letters and he was writing them. So he was totally 13 discredited, if you remember.

14 Q. That's right, yeah.

15 A. And when O'Leary came into it with CIE, when Lowry
16 attacked O'Leary CIE.

17 Q. Go back one step for a second. As far as the main
18 plank we're trying to achieve at the moment, you see, what I
19 need to know now --

20 A. The guy that was tailing us was that accountant.
21 Yeah.

22 Q. That was the Fianna Fail?

23 A. I forget the name now. It was O'Callaghan and 24 Ambrose Kelly. Another maggot.

25 Q. What we need to do, I mean, whatever papers you have

88

1 at the moment are fine. What we need to do is that we need
2 to get your diary or diaries, whatever you've got. I need
3 you to get them.

4 A. I'm -- not everything I have in detail.

5 Q. I wouldn't worry about it.

6 A. When I knew this was going on I taped conversations
7 where I was being blackmailed. I had these life threats you
8 see.

9 Q. Yeah.

10 A. Like, I was threatened. You didn't hear the tip of 11 the iceberg of the story yet. And I decided I was going to 12 protect myself and have the -- tape the conversations.

13 Q. Yeah.

14 A. Including one where O'Callaghan invited me one day
15 from a board meeting that I had to go out to Clondalkin
16 because there was people out there would like to see me. And 17 when I went out it was a Sinn Fein Councillor and others was 18 there. And this fella came in and he sat down and he 19 announced, I have his name incidentally at home, I've got a 20 list anyway, and he sat down. We met in a pub in Clondalkin.
21 O'Callaghan paid the taxi all the way out. Introduced me to 22 this fella, for him to announce to me that they had a file on 23 me. So I said who has. We have. I said who are you.
24 All you need to know is I'm a Sinn Fein Councillor. And I
25 said I don't give a fuck who you are. I said what's that got

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 to do with me. So he said oh, you operated in Northern
2 Ireland, he says, and the boys has got a file on you. But I
3 says what is this supposed to mean, what does it mean I said
4 you've got a file on me. I said King Farouk, I said the 5 Special Branch in England has a file on me but what's that got,
6 to do with me, what's the relevance. And he said to me you
7 remember it. But I said what's -- what have I to remember?
8 What's it in aid of I said, what's the bottom line here. And 9 O'Callaghan said you better listen to him, to me. Owen
10 O'Callaghan said to me.

11 Q. You better listen?

12 A. I said is this a threat. So O'Callaghan said you
13 better listen now he said. I said listen to what. I said
14 is it a threat, are you making a threat to me. He says well
15 you take what you like. Well I said wait till I tell you a 16 wee story now. I said if you are who you say you are I said
17 which I fucking doubt, because I says in my old man's day I
18 said the likes of you would be terminated. That's number one
19 I says. And people don't go round mouthing or threatening
20 other people, I said. I said not that the genuine product,
21 meaning the IRA, of course. Not the genuine product. But I
22 said if you're one of the scum then I said fair enough. So 23 he said to me do you know where you are fucking talking he 24 said to me, you know, and he was real fucking threatening.
25 Do you know where you're fucking talking. I don't give a

1 monkey's fuck where I'm talking I said. If you're making a
2 threat to me I said you fucking carry it out but don't talk.
3 So he said -- I said to him I have three of your boys call on 4 me in Luton once and they demanded money. They demanded it,
5 I said, or they called. I told him I wouldn't pay it. They 6 told me I was an Irish businessman and I was going to pay up.
7 And I said I told them I would not pay a penny to buy a bullet
8 to kill anybody. I said if the Irish Government or the Irish 9 were at war with England I'd subscribe to that. But they're 10 not I said. As a matter of fact, I said, they're more allies
11 of the English in the whole fucking set up. So why should I
12 bother I said. And why should I bother. So I said -- I 13 told them they would never get a penny. And I said I put 14 them out of the house and they told me at the door that they 15 would be back the following Thursday and I better have the 16 money and I said my answer to them was you better make a good
17 job of me but you'll never collect one fucking penny. Now, I
18 said if you're making the same threat you carry it out now I
19 said or go and fuck yourself and I walked out the door. That 20 was Owen O'Callaghan. So Owen came back. Owen went to the 21 phone and I assumed for a taxi. I walked out and I stayed 22 out and I sat on the wall outside. So Owen came out and he 23 said you want to be very fucking careful. You don't know
24 where you are. I said what's your fucking purpose, Owen.
25 What's the object of bringing me down from a board meeting to

1 Clondalkin to meet a scum bag like that. I said what's your
2 item, what's your purpose? So I said you're just a fucking
3 scoundrel. So he said if you're not careful you'll fucking
4 walk back. Well I said fuck off, I said, I'll find me way
5 back.

6 Q. What about? Do you have any of the conversations
7 that you taped, any tapes at all now?

8 A. What?

9 Q. Any of the tapes of the conversations.

10 A. I had threats to the house, you see.

11 Q. Yeah.

12 A. And me eldest fella knew about it. Well he knew I 13 was being threatened. I was being threatened at the time by 14 Lawlor and Charlie sent me a threat or it is alleged now. It
15 is alleged.

16 Q. Yeah.

17 A. That I would end up one day in the Fing Liffey
18 and if I didn't shut my mouth, at the time of the Fraud Squad.

19 Q. But you don't have any copies of those recording
20 left; do you?

21 A. No. Well I can't find them. He said he burned
22 them.

23 Q. Do you think he did?

24 A. Well he said that you don't want to get involved.
25 You don't want to get involved. He wanted to burn the whole

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

92

1 lot, all that paper and everything. He did burn a lot of it.

2 He did.

3 Q. Is there any way --

4 A. I was over in Dublin and so he discussed it with 5 Vera as well, with my wife, you know. And of course he was 6 saying that you don't want to, under her circumstances, and 7 this distress to the family and what have you. One of the 8 reasons I wanted to get out of Dublin was I wanted to settle.
9 In truth I should have taken the bastards to the cleaners.
10 Everything that's going on now, you know, the exposes and all
11 of that, I believe I would have fucking won it.

12 Q. Oh, yeah. I don't think there's any doubt at the 13 time that, you know, when you were pursuing that angle?

14 A. Hanrahan is it, Hanratty.

15 Q. Yeah. Hanratty?

16 A. Hanrahan is the other fella, the councillor. He 17 was trying to tell me that my case was that strong that they 18 would have to open it again.

19 Q. Yeah. Well, I mean, I wouldn't go against a 20 view --

21 A. I said that I signed the form for litigation.

22 Q. Well I think the answer is that if the revelations
23 come out of this planning Tribunal, it could well be something 24 that you would have to re look at. But I think that for 25 now --

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

93

1 A. He said that they will prove fraud against
2 O'Callaghan and the bank. He said that they will prove it.
3 But I don't know whether he's just saying it to get me
4 talking.

5 Q. I don't think so. I mean, I think -- again, as far
6 as I'm concerned, I mean, they have got a job to do. They 7 are charged, you know, under a piece of legislation, they have 8 to do the job. And I mean, the Judge who is looking after it
9 is taking it very seriously. I mean, very, very seriously.
10 You can be assured of one thing, there is no question but that 11 they, like most Tribunals, anybody who knows anything about a 12 Tribunal will tell you one thing, the Tribunal usually gets to 13 the bottom of it because they have powers way in excess of 14 anything that you would normally find in court. In court,
15 Tom, you have procedures, you have the rules of the superior
16 court which kind of like set the ground rules as to what you 17 can introduce, the manner you can introduce it, and how the 18 case and how effectively the game is to be played. In a 19 Tribunal, in effect, the Sole Member of the Tribunal makes up
20 the rules as he goes along, albeit within the actual Terms of 21 Reference that he has got. But within that he has got nearly 22 unlimited power. And from that point of view, as I said, to 23 be fair to them, if people shut up and keep their mouth shut
24 and don't give them the ammunition that they need to pursue
25 it, their difficulty is and then that is part of the problem

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 about, I suppose, their frustration.

2 A. I know I was a fool, I should never have got 3 involved. But it is just a moral sin, I will not take 4 corruption. If a fella does me a favour I'll pay him for it.

5 Q. That's --

6 A. After the event.

7 Q. Yes. Well if somebody performs a service that they 8 are entitled to be remunerated for --

9 A. I will not buy favours.

10 Q. I think we'll -- I am going to finish it there.

11 But I do need to get ...

12 A. I will definitely go through the whole pile of shit
13 I have at home. I have proof anyway the bank's blackmailing
14 on the night of the zoning and I have got the letters sent to 15 me and the withdrawal letters. It was to force me in to 16 handing over

17 Q. I will -- that probably out of all of this will I
18 make a statement and I'll give it back to you. Because we're 19 going to end up in a situation whereby we are going to get 20 probably a voluntary Order from the Tribunal to make discovery
21 of all the documents within your power, procurement or 22 possession. I don't know if there is any documents you can 23 get, where we can list them out

24 A. No.

25 Q. Swear an affidavit and hand it back to them. Out

1 of that they can then basically follow through.

2 A. The one thing I can't understand as well in the 3 Touche Ross accounts. Like, Touche Ross, I appointed Touche
4 Ross. O'Callaghan took them over and he had a guy in there.
5 I forget now his name. The names will come back to me.
6 John Piddock was my man in there but this was under another
7 bloke. And eventually this Leo Flemming was doing the 8 accounts. But on the accounts it said 3 million, that I was 9 owed 3 million pounds. But O'Callaghan had 2 million, two 10 and a quarter million. Right. The stud farm I paid cash for 11 was half a million.

12 Q. Yeah.

13 A. Over half a million, with the legal fees and all.
14 The deposit on the Corporation land was over half a million,
15 510,000. That's another million. That's three and a 16 quarter million.

17 Q. Yeah.

18 A. Sharp's land I paid cash. One and a quarter
19 million plus the VAT. Right?

20 Q. Yeah.

21 A. One and a quarter. So there was 125 on top of 22 that. So there was 1.4 million roughly.

23 Q. Which is 4.6 million at this stage.

24 A. I paid one and a half million for the complete
25 designs, surveys, drainage, the presentation, everything like

1 that. On top of that I paid 150,000 to St. Patrick's trust.

2 I paid 300,000 for the Maguire land -- O'Dwyer land.

3 Q. Which is the O'Dwyer land now?

4 A. It was a chunk of land that was owned by the pub.

5 Q. Oh, yeah, yeah.

6 A. They were O'Dwyers. I paid cash for that. I paid

7 it for the cottages. I bought two or three cottages. I

8 paid 85,000 for one, all cash. I paid out in total, without 9 the interest roll up, over 6 million pounds.

10 Q. Yeah.

11 A. And yet on the account it had showed only three. I

12 came and I queried that with Touche Ross but it still appeared

13 on the accounts.

14 Q. I remember we were querying it at the time of the 15 settlement as well.

16 A. The rest of the land was paid for by the bank.

17 Q. Out of bank loans.

18 A. There was 5 million to the Corporation. There was 19 three and a half million and they ran out of dates and we had

20 to pay a lot more money. We had to pay another three

21 quarters of a million to Bruton. And that was the bank's

22 fault. Their negligence done that. They started playing

23 games while they were, at the same time, paying out a million

24 to corrupt Councillors.

25 Q. Okay. Well we'll leave it there. But what I want

1 to do is that, would you just literally, all of the papers
2 that you have. What I propose to do with them is, no matter
3 what it is, even if it's only a match box cover with a number
4 on it, put it in a case, everything. What I'll do is that 5 I'll separate it by date, I'll copy it and I'll give you back
6 a copy, I'll keep a copy and I'll send a copy of it to the 7 Tribunal.

8 A. What do you think of that story?

9 Q. Well I think that, because I have had to -- if you
10 remember the time that we were down in the bank and the bank
11 were threatening to sue me personally because I relayed some 12 of the things that you had said to me and then Curran was 13 doing his stunt. I can turn this thing off now.

14

15 (turns tape off)

16

17 Q. Just before we finish off. Just going back to the 18 very beginning again, Tom. When Pat Hanratty came to see you
19 initially, did you give him any papers?

20 A. I gave him -- I let him look at one or two.

21 Q. Did he take anything away with him?

22 A. No. No.

23 Q. He took nothing?

24 A. No, no. He made notes.

25 Q. Right.

- 1 A. He made notes of -- Gallagher did.
- 2 Q. But John Gallagher was with him, was he?
- 3 A. Yeah. They made notes of some of these figures
- 4 here. They compared them because they had these.
- 5 Q. Can you remember when that meeting took place or
- 6 would you have a date for it?
- 7 A. I don't know offhand. It was in March anyway.
- 8 March-ish. March or April.
- 9 Q. So this was within the last, what, six to eight
- 10 weeks?
- 11 A. Ah, no, it would be longer than that.
- 12 Q. Would it be before Christmas?
- 13 A. I have lost track of time, you know. No, no, since
- 14 Christmas.
- 15 Q. Do you remember there was a scenario, I'm just
- 16 trying to put it into context in terms of time. There was a
- 17 scenario where I wrote to Hanratty and I basically said that
- 18 if there was going to be any meetings, that it was your wish,
- 19 at least at that stage, that somebody from my office,
- 20 specifically if possible myself, be in attendance?
- 21 A. I think it was before that. The significance of
- 22 them didn't mean anything to me. I felt I was outside of the
- 23 jurisdiction and my comment was at the time originally when
- 24 they contacted me was as far as I was concerned they were only
- 25 there to do a white wash. They were political appointees.

1 Q. But when they came did they come with the Judge or 2 did the Judge come separately?

3 A. Oh, when they came over, they came with the Judge.

4 Q. Right. And they came to your home?

5 A. No, no, I met them at the airport.

6 Q. At Heathrow?

7 A. At Heathrow airport, at the hotel. The basis that 8 they insisted on was only to introduce me to the Judge and.

9 Q. Yeah.

10 A. And to assure me that he wasn't a white wash man.

11 Q. No. Well he's definitely not that.

12 A. That was the only reason. He did not discuss or go
13 into anything on that, he got up and walked out.

14 Q. Uh-huh.

15 A. But they had certain information at the time.

16 Q. And what information did they have? Was there
17 anything that they said that was new to you or was it all ...

18 A. No, I knew about the things they said. Number one,
19 they had the files from the Fraud Squad, previously, they knew 20 about that. They didn't show it to me but they said they had 21 it. And number two, they were aware of donations I made to 22 the party or to somebody.

23 Q. That was the 50,000 we were talking about?

24 A. That was the 50,000. I told them I gave 50,000 to 25 Flynn as a donation to the party. And they wanted to know

1 why etc.. So I said I was more or less asked for it. And
2 so that did I not consider it a corruption payment. I said
3 no because I said why should I go to the Fraud Squad long
4 before that, because I was being blackmailed but I considered
5 that a donation to this party in light of the whole
6 development.

7 Q. How long did the meeting take?

8 A. A couple of hours, I would say. An hour, over an 9 hour anyway, an hour and a half or so.

10 Q. And they would have taken notes at that meeting.

11 I'm only concerned insofar as if you had any papers that 12 you've already given them, then we can't put them into 13 discovery. If they haven't had any papers then all the 14 papers that you have, we now must put into discovery?

15 A. No, I didn't give them any papers.

16 Q. Okay. Well then we have to put all the papers we 17 can find ...

18 A. The one or two figures they had, and I just showed 19 it to them.

20 Q. Okay. That's fine.

21 A. They took a note of the dates on one or two of them
22 but this is only -- this is not the tip of the iceberg, you
23 know that. They knew nothing.

24 Q. What I'm saying to you is that what I need 25 effectively is for you to put all of the papers, good, bad and

1 Indifferent, into -- just into a case, literally.

2 A. Yeah.

3 Q. I'll send somebody over, take them back, photocopy
4 them, catalogue them, put them into date order. And then I'm 5 going to sit down with you again when we've done up the 6 statement to basically say now, are you happy that that's what 7 it says and then give it to them.

8 A. I don't know what I got because Liam destroyed a lot
9 of stuff on me.

10 Q. I know. But whatever you have got left ...

11 A. I have enough to sink them anyway. That's a 12 certainty.

13 Q. Well whatever you have left. We have to put it
14 together and will you just check with Liam. I know you said
15 that Liam said that he had destroyed the tapes. Will you
16 actually get him to confirm that he didn't hide them away
17 somewhere. Because they would be invaluable now.

18 A. Oh, yeah. I started -- when I began to get threats
19 and that, that's when I started taping. I had a little 20 recorder about that size and I had one of the briefcases with 21 the little vent hole in it and I had it set up in that.

22 Q. Well, I mean, they -- how many tapes did you have do
23 you know?

24 A. I had about six.

25 Q. Well if there's any --

1 A. Six of these little cassettes. Mind you, they are 2 seven hour tapes.

3 Q. Okay. Well I think it is imperative at this stage
4 that you check with Liam that, you know, that he just didn't
5 put them away somewhere. That he didn't just destroy them.
6 If he has destroyed them, fine.

7 A. If Thomas had anything to do with it they would be 8 all gone, the whole lot, all this would be gone as well.

9 Q. Well okay. I'm going to start with this lot, start
10 copying this lot and I will send it back to you.

11 A. There's a lot more that runs parallel with that, 12 while all that was going on. And with my diary, I will put 13 dates to a lot of it.

14 Q. Okay. Well what I am going to do is the original
15 statement. When you are doing up your thing will you give me
16 your diaries so I can pick out dates as well?

17 A. There was another false thing there, Furlong, 18 Furlong Limited. I was telling you about the office, the 19 other office block in Milton Keynes I had and I had a million
20 and a half pounds -- well I had 5 million pounds in it. Let 21 me see, three plus one, four and a half million.

22 Q. And what was that for?

23 A. It was for an office block I built. I paid for in 24 cash and all that but a lot of it was lost.

25 Q. Ah yes, I remember you saying that before.

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 A. But one thing I totally forgot in all that scenario
2 was I had a tenant for it and I had it sold on to an
3 institution. Right? I said I lost all that. I lost the 4 profit. I didn't lose the actual cost. I had it sold on to 5 an institution and I had Legal & General, the insurance
6 company, one of their offices was put into it. Right?

7 Q. Yeah.

8 A. The AIB came along, out of the blue, and they wanted
9 it for their card company in England. They had a plastic
10 card set up in England. So because it was the AIB I decided 11 I would go along with them. So we had them in at 16 pound at 12 first. And they hooked and they thwarted about and they 13 farted about and farted about and investigations and layouts
14 and freeholds and, you know, the whole thing. And they kept 15 it going and going and going and going and going and going 16 until ...

17 Q. Yeah.

18 A. Anyway, at the very last minute after they put the 19 screws on me and I handed over to O'Callaghan they pulled 20 out. But I never thought of the significance of that. The 21 next thing was the crash came over here and I couldn't let the 22 place at the same money and I lost out one and a half million
23 pounds. I began to realise that had I -- the extra one and a 24 half million pound O'Callaghan would have been out of my hair
25 because I would have paid him off.

1 Q. He would have been gone?

2 A. He was gone and the bank couldn't do a fucking thing
3 about it.

4 Q. Jesus, painful, Tom.

5 A. So I lost that one and a half million. That was my,
6 nest egg here. Because I'm not a money man, you know.

7 Q. Yeah, yeah, yeah.

8 A. I used to build fantastically good canopy equipment
9 and all that. It wasn't the money I was making out of it but 10 I used to get a great kick out of doing it. But there was 11 one and a half million pound. That's what Vera always said 12 to me, you should have stuck to Milton Keynes, you should have 13 stuck to here.

14 Q. You got some hiding when you came to Ireland.

15 A. There was some of the companies, some of the big 16 boys, John Whitblack and people like that would pay me a 17 million pound just so set up a deal for them and I wouldn't 18 bother.

19 Q. Back to where we need to be. Two things we need.

20 One --

21 A. It's all fucked up anyway.

22 Q. It is. Yeah. But I mean also let's keep going 23 where we're going at the moment. Two things I need. One 24 is, whatever papers you can find. They may be the most 25 insignificant as far as you're concerned. Still, I need to 1 get them.

2 A. I hope he hasn't burned them but there is a whole
3 room full. It's a daunting task because there's a lot of 4 other stuff in with it, you know, liquor deals I did. Milton
5 Keynes, Northern Ireland, you know it, you know.

6 Q. Yeah. But, I mean, anything. I don't have a
7 difficulty of actually going through all of those papers. If 8 you want me to come up, I'll do it.

9 A. Ah no, no. I'll get it out for you. It was when 10 I was so tied between Vera and one thing and another but 11 Thomas is free now for the next few months. So he'll be able 12 to do a lot of the work and help with Vera.

13 Q. Right. And then you can pull it out.

14 A. And I'll pull it or I'll spend my time on it and 15 pull it all out and sort it out.

16 Q. And just, as I said, put it in a case. I'll copy
17 it. I'll tabulate it ...

18 A. Well if I thought I would get the fucking bank then 19 I would go for it, I would.

20 Q. But you're not doing yourself any harm, believe you 21 and me. That if they reopen the case on the basis that they 22 showed the bank did not --

23 A. Not that it's the money I'm after. But it's my 24 family who were fucking put through it by gangsters.

25 Q. Well, I mean, if for no other reason than the

1 justification of showing up the corruption that went on.

2 That's what the Tribunal is all about.

3 A. But you must know more about that than I do. I'm
4 not pointing the finger at you. Between you and I, you're a
5 man of the world, you're a businessman and you're in Dublin.

6 Q. Yeah.

7 A. It's the most fucking corrupt place on earth. [REDACTED]

8 [REDACTED] I know he is a client of your's.

9 Now you don't comment.

10 Q. I can't.

11 A. You don't comment at all but I used to meet Lawlor
12 and O'Keeffe and them and they used to insist on me meeting
13 them. They were on their way to Baghdad and some of the 14 fucking things they were discussing, the rip off that was

MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION BETWEEN PAT HANRATTY AND THOMAS GILMARTIN ON THE MORNING OF THURSDAY 5TH FEBRUARY 1998

↓ [REDACTED] C
[REDACTED]

Mr. Gilmartin said that he did not want to become involved in the Planning Tribunal. He said that his wife suffers from [REDACTED] and he has a family to rear. He has already been threatened on a number of occasions.

He says there are a number of honest people in Dublin to whom we can talk but they may be reluctant to talk because they are fearful for their positions in their employment. One is Mick McCloone, the Borough Valuer. Mr. Gilmartin says that Mick McCloone has an enormous amount of damning information about corruption in the planning process but he may be reluctant to become involved as well.

Mr. Gilmartin says that the amount of money changing hands in bribes in the planning process in Dublin can be counted in millions if not tens of millions. Most of the money in question is held in offshore accounts.

In relation to his own situation, his experience in Dublin was horrendous. He was involved in two projects - one involving Bachelor's Walk and the other on the west side of Dublin in Clondalkin. In relation to the proposed development on the west side of Dublin, he had bought the land and he found himself in a situation where he was being put under pressure from all kinds of "spin doctors" who were trying to shaft him. He says that O'Callaghan of Cork was involved in the shafting operation. He says that the shafting did not take place in the form of a refusal of planning. He said that he would be unable to deal with any planning issue. It was more a question of undermining his project, presumably for the benefit or in the interest of others.

There was a development group in Dublin Corporation (most of whom were straight). They included Bill Lacey, Paddy Morrissey, Sean Haughey and Mick McCloone and some others.

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED] They were of the view that Burke would have to resign to stop the investigation of planning matters. The parties involved consisted of a consortium, [REDACTED]

The offices in which the meetings took place were the offices of Seamus Maguire, Solicitor, in Blanchardstown. Maguire wanted no part of it. Mr. Gilmartin believes that if Mr. Maguire was subpoenaed, he would not lie because of his concerns viz. a viz. the Law Society.

Mr. Gilmartin spoke of a deal between Mr. Brady of Brady Garages and George Redmond and Liam Lawlor, T.D. Brady wanted access to the new motorway which went behind his premises in Blanchardstown. The deal was that he would pay £40,000 to Liam Lawlor and George Redmond.

Later, Liam Lawlor bought a second Mercedes motor car from Brady. The car previously belonged to a Mr. Keating of Kepak. Brady sold the car to Lawlor for £40,000 including servicing, cleaning and delivery. He sent a young fellow with the car to deliver it to Lawlor and to collect the cheque for £40,000. Lawlor gave him a cheque for £20,000 and said that everything was okay. The young fellow came back to Brady and told him that Lawlor says that the price was £20,000. Brady went spare. He telephoned Liam Lawlor and Lawlor told him that he (Brady) owed Lawlor £40,000 in respect of the motorway deal. Brady said that he had paid the £40,000 to George Redmond. Lawlor said that he had got nothing and Brady told him to "fuck off" because he had paid the £40,000 that was agreed. Apparently, Lawlor then got on to George Redmond and he also told Lawlor to "fuck off". Lawlor said he was holding on to the car and not paying any more and that this was part of his consideration for the motorway deal.

Mr. Gilmartin alleged that Albert Reynolds was using Ray Burke in relation to IDA matters. He said that after Ansbacher Bank pulled back, Ansbacher was kept on by a number of people as a front to maintain the respectability of the name. This involved a fellow called Moloney, Charlie Haughey and, to a considerable lesser extent, Phil Manahan.

Ph memo of

Mr. Gilmartin alleged that the Cork County Manager is in the pocket of O'Callaghan. The appointment of Fitzgerald was engineered. It should have been Brady. The County Manager had the casting vote.

Mr. Brennan alleged that people who were "up to their eyes" in it were Pádraig Flynn, Albert Reynolds, Ray Burke and Seamus Brennan.

He said that on a particular date in 1994, the 11th March, 1994, Albert Reynolds was in a particular private house in Cork to collect his views before flying off to America. He went to this house and got his "bag" and then left in the Government helicopter. The house belonged to O'Callaghan. Noel C. Duggan was also involved. Gilmartin says that these people were blatant in relation to the influence they had and tended to talk about it.

There was also a huge collection in Millstreet where, again, Reynolds flew down in the Government helicopter and received a huge collection of donations.

The people who Mr. Gilmartin believes to be honest in the Local Authority are Al Smith, Mick McCloone, Paddy Morrissey and Sean Haughey. Apparently, Sean Haughey told Redmond in Gilmartin's presence that he would have him out of his job if he played anymore of his dirty tricks. Redmond made an application for a one year extension to his contract and Haughey blocked this.

One of the councillors who should be looked is John Gilbride. He was an organiser for Ray Burke.

Another councillor to look at is Hanrahan and another one is McGrath. The latter was described by Gilmartin as a person who had his hand out all the time, individually and collectively.

He asked me had I ever spoken to Maeve Sheehan of the Sunday Times. He said that he made an off-the-record statement to her a number of years ago.

Mr. Gilmartin says that Frank Dunlop is a major bag-man for cash payments to Fianna Fail. He had a major input in relation to Council decisions and rezoning decisions. He also played a major "bag-man" role in relation to the International Financial Services Centre. He said that there were major dirty deals involved in that venture and that at one stage, a lot of the big players fell out and it nearly got to the stage where the "cat got out of the bag". However, eventually in their own interests, they all compromised their disagreement.

Mr. Gilmartin referred to an incident where the Corporation wanted to buy a certain property in Dublin. George Reynolds engineered that this property should not be bought by the Corporation. Subsequently, it was bought by a private developer and sold to the Corporation at a huge profit. Mick McCloone knows all about this. We should ask him about it.

- When the money was paid out of Barkhill to F. Dunlop and Shefran it was at a time when Barkhill was virtually dormant. It was waiting on the review of the development plan which was supposed to have occurred in 1988 but did not occur until 1993. Barkhill was not trading at all and was not in fact involved in PR or marketing. At the time of these pay-outs there was no zoning and no planning permission. There was nothing to market or to do PR about. AIB must have known this.

6 Going back to the conversation on the telephone with Mr. Gilmartin, he said that basically he had been shafted by O'Callaghan. In the first instance, he had to pay O'Callaghan £2m. to go away. However, O'Callaghan came back, the second time with the support of a number of politicians. Mr. Gilmartin pointed out that he had put together one of the best developments the country had ever seen and that O'Callaghan and others were keen to get in on the act. The second time that O'Callaghan came back, he had the dirty tricks brigade of the Government who started a dis-information campaign against him orchestrated by Frank Dunlop.

7 The dis-information campaign extended to the Inland Revenue in England who, as a result, pursued him and petitioned him in bankruptcy successfully for £10m. He had subsequently had this set aside but at great difficulty and at substantial cost. This placed him in the position were Allied Irish Banks in Ireland forced him out and forced him to sell-out to O'Callaghan which was the object of the exercise of O'Callaghan and the dirty tricks politicians.

8 O'Callaghan then got money (£300,000) paid to Frank Dunlop (who was the "bag man") and he paid off the Councillors including Hanrahan, Lawlor and others. There had been meetings between Lawlor, O'Callaghan and Dunlop in Dail Eireann and elsewhere. The reason that he was forced out was that he would not pay-off the corrupt politicians. Subsequent to his departure, O'Callaghan paid-off the corrupt politicians and ultimately got rezoning for the development.

9 Gilmartin had to engage Noel Smyth to extricate his money. Smyth threatened proceedings all around the place including Allied Irish Banks and in particular threatened that he would subpoena Albert Reynolds to give evidence if Gilmartin did not get his money back. It was for this reason that he got his money back. He had to pay Smyth £750,000 to get his £7m. back.

11 Mr. Gilmartin said that there were occasions where he had to meet delegations from the Irish Government on their way to negotiate beef contracts in Iraq. He actually was called to meet these politicians in the airport where they were sitting around the table waiting to receive payment from Mr. Gilmartin.

12 In relation to the Bachelor's Walk site, the deal was that 20% of this multi-million Pound development would be set aside for the politicians. They designated a part of the quays as a tax-free area to "show calm" to Arlington

Investments Limited (and, presumably, Gilmartin) to show that they could deliver. Ambrose Kelly was in on the act with O'Callaghan. Mr. Gilmartin said that Liam Lawlor was only a small fry compared to some of the real players.

- 13 During the course of the telephone conversation, Mr. Gilmartin mentioned a company known as Sefran Limited. This was a company through which monies were paid either to or by O'Callaghan. He also mentioned a company called Barkhill Limited. This was Mr. Gilmartin's own company which was taken over by O'Callaghan. Mr. Gilmartin indicated that it would be worthwhile looking at these companies.

MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION BETWEEN JOHN GALLAGHER AND THOMAS GILMARTIN ON FRIDAY 20TH
FEBRUARY 1998

1. On Friday 20th February, 1998, I spoke with Tom Gilmartin on the telephone. He suggested that we should make enquiries with Deloitte & Touche and should serve Orders of Production and Discovery in relation to Barkhill Limited. This was a company set up by him in relation to the Quarryvale site which was taken over and which he still believes is trading. He says that Frank Dunlop and Ambrose Kelly were paid out of this account and that Dunlop got between £300,000 - £500,000 to pay politicians. He was under pressure from AIB at one stage and Michael O'Farrell of AIB was brought in to deal with the problem that Gilmartin posed for the Bank. He had previously dealt with Eddie Kaye who was a very decent man who was sidelined and is now retired and living some place in the south Dublin area. He is a great yachting and sailing enthusiast. Another AIB Executive dealing with the matter was Dave McGrath.
2. Gilmartin recalled that he had been at a private dinner in Finnstown House on one occasion when Liam Lawlor arrived unannounced and started to bad-mouth the site in question - described it as being in bandit country.
3. Gilmartin says that he would draw the line at stealing and corruption as he believed in an after life and believed that you could not bring money in a shroud.

4. He believed that Frank McDonnell of the Irish Times had been paid to write articles which were derogatory of the proposed development at Quarryvale.

5. He said that he had been forced to sign documents by the Bank and had been held captive until 12 o'clock midnight on the night that the Quarryvale zoning went through.

7. He said that Arlington Securities plc owned the Bachelor's Walk site and did so through a number of companies including a company called Desk Top Securities Limited. He said that after the Bachelor's Walk deal went sour, he was paid £1.25m. for his share in the Bachelor's Walk properties and that he had been very fairly and very decently treated by Arlington Securities. British Aerospace later took over Arlington Securities plc and Ray Mould (?-spelling) later established Pillar Properties which own a shopping centre in Clondeboy and in Derry.

8. Gilmartin says that he met Flynn and Ahern in the Park Lane Hotel. They said that they were collecting for Fianna Fail. The directors of Arlington thought that the request was for a contribution towards the party funds but he implied that it was otherwise.

9. Gilmartin said that he gave £50,000 to Pdraig Flynn as a contribution towards the Fianna Fail Party. This was about 1988 when there was a "hung Parliament". He says that Fianna Fail never got this amount and that Flynn kept it for himself. He says that Flynn told him to leave the name on the cheque blank and he handed a blank cheque to Flynn. He was later approached by Sean Sherwin on behalf of Fianna Fail who was seeking a contribution. He told Sherwin that he had already contributed substantially towards Fianna Fail by paying £50,000 to the Party and Sherwin told him that Pdraig Flynn had put it in his pocket.
10. He said that the cheque was drawn on Bank of Ireland in the Blanchardstown Branch in Tom Gilmartin's own name. He had the account in the Blanchardstown Branch using his Luton address.
11. He also said that Liam Lawlor was paid £3,500 per month out of this account also. These payments continued -- that Lawlor was paid a total of £35,000 - so the contributions continued for approximately ten months.
12. Lawlor attended a meeting with Arlington and arrived unannounced and unexpectedly to the meeting. He said that he had been sent by the Government and wanted 20% of the action.

13. At that meeting were Ray Mould, Humphrey Price – who was the Financial Director of Arlington – Ted Dadley and Gilmartin. Gilmartin says that he left that meeting because he was so ashamed of the demands that were being made.
14. He said that the cheques for £3,500 which came out of his account and which were paid by him on the instructions of Arlington were made payable to cash except on one occasion when the name was left blank and he does not know what name was inserted as payee.
15. He said he was introduced by Senator Willie Farrell to John Gilbride, a Dublin County Councillor. Gilbride was a native of County Sligo and Gilmartin knew Gilbride when he was a young man. He was a reformed alcoholic and was a son of the late Eugene Gilbride, a Fianna Fail T.D.
16. Gilmartin explained to Gilbride the problems he was having in relation to the Arlington situation and the site on the Galway Road. He said that Gilbride always defended Lawlor and Burke and Gilmartin then realised that Owen O'Callaghan and Ambrose Kelly were directing operations. He said that O'Callaghan was very big in Fianna Fail and was able to deliver the Cork Fianna Fail vote to Charlie Haughey in internal party situations.
17. He said that O'Callaghan and Frank Dunlop, the Fianna Fail Public Relations man, were very close. County Councillors started backing off the Quarryvale project Gilmartin was being held to ransom. He was under pressure from the Bank and from the Revenue Commissioners. He said that Gilbride was being paid by O'Callaghan and Gilbride was under instructions from Charlie Haughey and Ray Burke. Gilmartin says that Gilbride got £100,000 approximately.

MEMORANDUM

26th February, 1998RE: Planning Tribunal of Inquiry

1. Following the departure of the Sole Member, Mr. G. who was wary at first, got down to discussing his experiences with the various relevances in which he was involved. He repeated virtually everything he had said in the course of his earlier conversations with Pat Hanratty.
2. He informed us that Leo Fleming of Deloitte & Touche was the accountant dealing with the Barkhill Limited accounts.
3. He talked of his concern at the number of payments that were made out of the accounts of that company to Chevron and to Frank Dunlop and furnished to us a photocopy of an invoice No. 740 of the 1st October, 1992 from Frank Dunlop to Barkhill and a copy of Schedule 5 of the Public Relations/Marketing Costs of Barkhill Limited to the 30th April, 1992.
4. He does not know what the payments to Chevron were for.

6. He also furnished a location map showing the location of the Quarryvale development and adjoining developments and suggested that we should talk with Michael McClune who has a significant amount of information available to him.
7. He recounted an occasion when he was asked by an Eoin O'Callaghan to Clondalkin. He felt that he was going to inspect a site or meet somebody of some significance. O'Callaghan took him to a pub where they sat for some time. They were then approached by a man wearing dark glasses who threatened Mr. G. and said that they had a file on him in relation to his activities in the North.
8. Mr. G. explained that this meeting was intended to frighten him and to ensure that he would not continue with any development in the Clondalkin area.
9. He explained how he had come to acquire the sites in the Bachelor's Walk area and the pressure that was put upon him by politicians. He repeated the stories about Liam Lalor, O'Hanrahan and named Cathal McGrath and Sean Gilmore as two other councillors who had looked for £100,000. He said that Marian McGuinness was a very close associate of Liam Lalor's [REDACTED]. He said that Gilmore had taken a sabbatical for one year and had been paid £100,000 presumably by O'Callaghan or one of O'Callaghan's companies.

10. He said that he had been present in the forecourt of Brady's garage when Brady learned that Lalor had only paid half the price of the £40,000 car and was also present - but not known to Brady - when Brady decided that he would re-possess the car and employed two young men to do this. The AIB Corporate Banking reference was 5519/32 and the lady dealing with the matter there was a Mary Basquille. He said that Michael O'Farrell was transferred from AIB in Cork to manage the section to which he was dealing and Des McGrath of AIB was also the "hard man" who forced him to deal with O'Callaghan and to give a share in Barkhill to AIB.
11. Mr. G. readily acknowledged that AIB was entitled to take action to recover the money it was owed in respect of the Quarryvale site but he said that they had no entitlement to require him to give a substantial part of his company to AIB and to Eoin O'Callaghan. He says that O'Callaghan has never paid any money in respect of the Gubay site at Irishtown Road/Fonthill Road and that he (O'Callaghan) acquired the Quarryvale site in circumstances where Mr. G. had paid him close on £2m. and owed O'Callaghan approximately £1m. arising from O'Callaghan's decision not to develop the Clondalkin/Neilstown Shopping Centre which, according to Mr. G., would never be viable in any event because of the inadequate road access in the area. He confirmed that he had paid £50,000 to Padraig Flynn in the Park Lane Hotel or in a hotel in Park Lane in or about the time of the "hung Parliament" in 1987 or 1988 approximately. This was drawn on his own account in Blanchardstown and the name of the payee was left blank on the cheque. This was at a time when he was endeavouring to have the development at Bachelor's Walk and Quarryvale get off the ground. He said that the designation of an area extending westwards along the quay to Jervis Street (Capel Street?) was done in order to show him what could be done by the politicians who had requested a 20% share in the company.
12. Mr. G. stressed that his wife is seriously ill and is pleading with him not to become involved. He also stressed that his family is very strongly against his becoming involved in any way.

I subsequently received a telephone call from Thomas Gilmartin himself and he also made the point that it was as a result of his delay and not that of Noel Smyth and Partners that we did not yet have his statement.

12

He said he was coming over next Thursday. [REDACTED]

C

He suggested that we should have a close look at Rega. Mr. Gilmartin said that he had a huge volume of documents but that his son burned a large volume of them about a year ago.

Mr. Gilmartin said that Colin McGrath a Councillor from Clondalkin got £30,000 from Callaghan. Gilbride was a gofer for Burke and apologist for Lawlor.

Mr. Gilmartin made the point that the bank pulled the plug on him at the time of the re-zoning motion. He raised the question "why would a bank pull the plug the day before a re-zoning proposal which would hugely enhance its value"?

It would be worthwhile talking to Eddie Keyes. He is a Protestant and he is straight and was not treated terribly well.

We should also have a look at Ambrose Kelly and An Bord Pleanála. There is an issue relating to Pat Dunne but he said he did not wish to speak ill of the dead.

Raymond Mold is with Pillar Properties Plc. Humphrey Price is the Pillar Properties Finance Director. Mr. McCloone has a lot of information. It was Pánsnidge who introduced me to Lawlor. He made an arrangement for me to meet him in the Dead Man's Inn. Lawlor asked for £5m. He first asked for a stake in the Batchelor's Walk Project and I told him that this was not a runner. It was then that he asked for a stake of £5m and I said that it still was not a runner.

Padraig Flynn and Bertie Ahern invited Arlington to a hotel (in London?). This was a "fund raising event for Fianna Fáil". Demands were made for money off Arlington Securities Ltd. I met Padraig Flynn later that day for a meal. He talked around in reels. I pretended not to know what he was on about. After that evening Flynn and me were cool.

In the cheques which were given to Liam Lawlor the Payee was left blank and he filled in the Payee himself.

Berkhill was set up by Oliver Freney.

ATTENDANCE16TH June, 1998MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION BETWEEN
PAT HANRATTY, S. C. AND THOMAS GILMARTIN ON 16TH JUNE 1998

1. I received a telephone call today from Tom Gilmartin at 1.10 p.m. It lasted approximately one hour and fifty minutes.
2. Mr. Gilmartin said that he had recently been speaking to his solicitor, Noel Smyth, and that he was concerned about something he said to him. Apparently, Mr. Smyth told him that he had received a visit from Liam Lawlor on the basis that Mr. Lawlor asked for a meeting to discuss a proposed land purchase. According to Mr. Smyth, this turned out to be a pretext and what Mr. Lawlor really wanted to discuss was "other clients of his office". Mr. Smyth said that Mr. Lawlor was talking about Tom Gilmartin and appeared to want to get Mr. Gilmartin "on side".
3. Mr. Gilmartin enquired from me whether we had been engaged in any activity recently concerning Mr. Lawlor [REDACTED] C
26 [REDACTED] Mr. Gilmartin said that that was what he thought and that his real concern was in relation to Mr. Smyth and why Mr. Smyth would introduce the subject of Mr. Lawlor at this stage.
4. Mr. Gilmartin said that Mr. Smyth acted for Phil Monaghan and that he and Mr. Lawlor would be no strangers. He appeared to be concerned that Noel Smyth might be in some kind of a conflict of interests situation. [REDACTED] C

7. Mr. Gilmartin then went on to recount some of the matters about which we had previously spoken. He said that in the early stages he was given a Government document that outlined three options. They were:-

- (i) Designate the area;
- (ii) Apply for a material contravention; and
- (iii) Wait for a review of the Dublin Plan.

Mr. Gilmartin said that Mr. O'Callaghan paid politicians to stall the review of the Dublin Plan because they knew he was on borrowed money from AIB. Mr. Gilmartin said that he would not, under any circumstances, bring in Ambrose Kelly. He said that O'Callaghan was trying through Fintan Gunne to get on board. He said that Frank Dunlop set up office in Dail Eireann beside Liam Lawlor. They brought in Marian McGuinness who was operating out of Lawlor's office. Marian McGuinness was one of Gilbride's stars.

8. Liam Lawlor and Batt O'Keeffe were involved in the Baghdad affair. There was huge money involved.
9. Fintan Gunne told Mr. Gilmartin that he would never get planning in Dublin unless he got Ambrose Kelly on board. Fintan Gunne lined up Ambrose Kelly, Ollie Freaney and another man called O'Hara from Bruce Shaw & Partners. Mr. Gilmartin did not wish to use any of these people because he did not want too many people in Dublin knowing his business. Somebody put about a rumour that he was dealing with a bunch of loyalists. This was presumably due to his Lisburn development.
10. It was Ambrose Kelly who brought Callaghan into the picture. Mr. Gilmartin had been told that Ambrose Kelly had An Bord Pleanala sewn up. This was around 1986/1987. He had a man in there. He could not remember his name. He did not think it was Liam Tobin although he had heard the name Tobin. He had also heard the name Phibbs but it was not him either.
11. There is a planning issue in Ballsbridge at this moment. A friend of his had to pay substantial money to a planner to obtain planning permission. It related to a bed and breakfast development. It was his whole livelihood. There were also three or four others who paid up (presumably in relation to different developments). Mr. Gilmartin was unwilling to provide the name of the individual who had to pay this money. He said that he would be betraying a close friendship if he did that.
12.   He said that it would frighten the life out of his friend if he told him to do that.

He then went on to discuss a number of matters. From this point the note is expressed in the first person singular.

The date of my abortive meeting with George Redmond was the day that I made my complaint to Sean Haughey. It was the 23rd of February 1989. A Mr. Vaughan was at the meeting. He may now be deceased.

John Higgins of Ove Arrup was at the George Redmond meeting. So was Morgan ??? (now deceased). We also had a Mr. McCammin. John Higgins can confirm that this meeting was arranged.

We should talk to Martin McLoone about his meeting with TG on the 23rd of February 1989. This was the day TG went and made his complaint to Sean Haughey and the day before the meeting with Frank Feeley.

In January 1989 I had a meeting with the Bank of Nova Scotia. I met Brian Perry. He said that the previous day he was at a meeting with a bank called Ansbacker which was attended by a man called Maloney and Phil Monahan.

Perry said to me that O'Callaghan has done it again and that you are in for a rough ride.

The shopping centre cost was #8 million to buy the land and #70 million to build. When it was built a pension fund would buy it for #200 million. Scottish Widows and LET were interested. Pension funds were queing up for it. They would finance the building of it and then buy it when it was built. It would cost me nothing.

I won two design awards for the brochure for Quarryvale.

I paid St Patrick's Trust #150,000 for an option on the lands on either side of Hermitage golf club. The idea was to build a 700,000 sq. ft. shopping centre the proceeds from which would then fund the next phase of the development which was the leisure centre. This was to be on the Dublin side of Hermitage golf club. This consisted of a full facility leisure centre including olympic pool, tennis, restaurants etc.

The shopping centre would yield in excess of #100 million in profit. The first thing you do is to talk to the retailers. Roy Harris of Shearer Harris was the best retailing agent in England. Taggarts from Marks & Spencer were on board. The breakdown of the centre was 350,000 sq. ft. Superstores

250,000 sq. ft. Unit shops

42

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

Tribunal Ref : REQ. TGS 3

150,000-200,000 sq. ft. malls

The malls would generate advertising income. All the big units were sold. The big operators would buy their own units. The 350,000 sq. ft. of Superstores would be sold for about #35 million. They would cost about #10 million to build so there was about #25 million profit. The unit shops would be let (by the pension fund) at rents ranging from #100 per sq. ft. to #40 per sq. ft. It averaged down to about #60-70 per sq. ft. In our calculations we were using #40 per sq. ft. and that would calculate out at an income of #10 million. These figures were very conservative and in fact the actual income worked out at #16 million. We would sell at 6%.

The brochure got the design award for 2 years running.

Donal Cullen of the IDA attacked me that night (the night of the launch ?) So did Frank McDonald.

I started this in 1983. In 85/86 I presented my plan to the Government and they begged me to put it together.

I had meetings with Joe Hayes of the Independent.

I met O'Hanrahan in Buswells hotel one day in January 1989 at 4.30 pm. I met Seamus Brennan the following day.

On Wednesday the 29th January 1989 I met O'Hanrahan. O'Callaghan was standing at the bar with Ambrose Kelly. I was told I had to meet councillors and this was arranged.

I met Gannon (Labour) at 2.30 pm at the Council offices. I was given a phone number to ring Fleming. I met Marian McGennis at 3.30 and O'Hanrahan at 4.30. I was told the councillors who would be doing the voting and that I would have to see them. Hanrahan said that Flynn had fuck all to do with it, it was down to the Councillors. I met Flynn that day in the Custom House in the evening; maybe 7.00 pm.

I had several meetings with Flynn in the Custom House.

I had a planning consultant called Kieran O'Malley. He knows what went on.
(He may have been at some of the meetings with Flynn???)

The people who assembled for the meeting with George Redmond in his offices in O'Connell St. were

John McCammin, Taggarts (Marks & Spencers architects)

Malcolm Noyce + 2 English Ove Arrup people

John Higgins

Kieran O'Malley, Planning Consultant.

Richard Foreman, Connell Wilson, now Lambert Smith, Hampton.

Ian Bond, Bruce Shaw & Partners.

McLoone warned me that Neilstown had the zoning.

It was intimated to me by Liam Lawlor that McGennis had to be looked after

I had offices in 25 St. Stephen's Green. McGennis came to these offices and I showed her the plans.

A statutory instrument was handed to me by P. Flynn. This was at a meeting in the Dall. Seamus Brennan and Brian Lenihan were at the meeting. It was an options document. [REDACTED] A IBI KeyIn Doyle was in Bank of Ireland, Isle of man. He was promoted to Jersey.

I met a Mr. James Palmer at 178-202 Great Portland St. I think it was in January 1989 and that it was on a Monday. There was not a proper stick of furniture in the place. He said that it was a fantastic scheme but that I did not seem very co-operative. He said that I did not have the right people on board. He advised me to take on certain people. me. He said that I should make an appointment to meet a man whose name he was giving me. He said he would be in touch with me. Two days later I got a phone call to tell me to telephone a man called Dr. P. McCarthy at 00 01 460000. I was told that he was in Balgriffin Dublin 17 on the Malahide side of a cemetery. Near Campion's pub.

I rang Dr. McCarthy and I arranged to go out to meet him. The inference was that I was to take him on but I already had Ove Arrup. The inference was that he had Charlie's ear. Success or failure depended on whether I took him on. Palmer also said that I had to take on Ambrose Kelly.

Dr. McCarthy was an enlightened intelligent man. He made no demands. [REDACTED] He said that it was a great scheme. I left him as I found him. I never went back to him.

Fintan Gunne insisted that I took on Ollie Freaney. Ollie had Charlie's ear. Every time I made an appointment to see Fintan Gunne, Ambrose Kelly and O'M (? O'Callaghan) were standing in the hall. Ambrose Kelly followed me around Dublin. I took exception to Ambrose Kelly. He is not even an architect. Every hotel I booked into he appeared. I was told by Gunne I had to have him on board. As it happened, Ollie Freaney set up Barkhill. Gunne double dealt me on Van Hool land. The deal was #600,000 but wound up at 1.3 million because Gunne was taking commission of the vendor as well. That finished me with Gunne.

Harrington was a witness to some of this. Gunne told me I had burned my bridges. He talked about having Charlie's ear. Callaghan was operating out of Kelly's office.

Mulryan of Ballymore homes got zoning on St. Pat's. There is a bit of a story behind that.

He wanted to discuss the degree of support for the project and possible methods of applying for planning and timing and tax incentives. I have a diary entry about this.

There was a meeting in the Department of Industry and Commerce in Kildare St. Seamus Brennan and Padraig Flynn were there as well as a civil servant called Farrelly. Farrelly was also at another meeting I attended with Derek Brady of the County Council. Farrelly started to appear after I made the complaint. He was a small dour fellow.¹

He suggested that I ask Raymond Mould about the meeting(s) in industry and Commerce with Seamus Brennan.

TG said that he had heard that Liam Lawlor had seen the statement given to the Tribunal by TG's Solicitor and that it was "a load of bollocks". TG said that he was making inquiries to see if it is true that LL had seen his statement.

TG said that he had asked on several occasions who Sheeran was and was not given an answer. He said that Seamus Maguire had witnessed him asking for this information and the fact that it had not been given. So had Paul Sheeran who had sat in at a meeting with him at one stage.

After he refused to sign these "chits" any more Barry Pritchard was substituted as a signatory. The shareholders agreement required that there be two signatures.

TG said that he believed that Eddie Kaye had been approached in connection with the Tribunal.

He mentioned the night that Dave McGrath flew over to London with Eddie Kaye to see him in a bid to stop him scuttling the zoning motion. The motion was for voting that day and O'Callaghan had painted himself into a capping corner. TG did not want capping and felt that it was not within the power of the local authority. They had already sanctioned the development without capping so their options were to zone or not to zone but not to zone with capping. O'Callaghan had tried to denigrate TG's plan by saying it was too big and would destroy the rest of Dublin. Eithne Fitzgerald, the chairman of the Council said "then you wont mind capping, will you" and O'Callaghan had to agree.

TG had someone in the Council ready to move an adjournment. McGrath who came over to London to bully me organised that TG could not get telephone access to the chamber. He had O'Callaghan on one phone extension, John Deane on another and Sean Gilbride on another. TG was blocked from communicating with his contact in the chamber (whose name he may give later- he does not wish to get too many people involved). Consequently the motion was passed. The reason McGrath came to London was to try to stop me having the motion put back. I had told Eddie Kaye that this was my intention.

It was said afterwards that I was pleased with the result of the motion. On the contrary I was very disappointed.

A few days after this incident Eddie Kaye expressed amazement at what was going on. It was then that he was shifted sideways. Eddie Kaye was also there the night I said to the bank that while they were entitled to liquidate my company or to appoint a receiver, they had no right to give it to O'Callaghan.

He made reference to the Bank of Ireland in New England and New York. He also referred again to Bank of Ireland in Jersey and the name which he had previously given us. He was not prepared to say any more at this stage.

MEMORANDUM

(Wednesday)
13th October, 1998

Planning Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments
Re: Thomas Gilmartin

1. Thomas Gilmartin telephoned at approximately 5.00 p.m. He said that he might be in a position to furnish to the Tribunal tapes of the interview between Jodi Corcoran and Frank Dunlop from which quotations appeared in last Sunday's Independent.
 2. He said that well over £1m. had been paid through Frank Dunlop to politicians. He said that the work in relation to the promotion and letting of a shopping centre is not done by public relations people because agents such as Hamilton Osborne King do the work. In his experience, PR people were not to accept close to the launch of a particular project. In his case, the Eileen Gleeson company did a survey of councillors and showed a ratio of 7:1 in favour of the scheme.
 3. The interview between Corcoran and Dunlop took place in the presence of Dunlop's solicitor and was recorded. At one stage, Dunlop turned off his recording and said that he and O'Callaghan were scared that Gilmartin would sue them - this may be by way of explanation as to why he was recording the interview and why it was taking place in the presence of a solicitor.

71 for which he worked [REDACTED] A

4. Gilmartin said that there is another story about to break in relation to AIB and Charlie Haughey and that affidavits have been sworn. There is a concern in Independent Newspapers about the story and it appears that they have withheld publication for the moment because of our pending legal advice. He said that his information was that either Councillor Hanrahan, Colm McGrath or John Gilbride are close to cracking. He says that Gilbride is seriously rattled but not yet broken. He says that Gilbride was a gofer for Ray Burke as Liam Lalor was a gofer for Charlie Haughey.

5. Arising from the interview given by Frank Dunlop to the newspapers, Eoin O'Callaghan is up in arms with him and O'Callaghan and Dean have been trying to get Dunlop to shut his mouth.

6. [REDACTED] K

7. He said that Charlie Bird had telephoned him on numerous occasions during the past week or so and after been refused an interview on a number of occasions said today "I won't be fuckin' bothering you anymore". Bird then went on to say that Padraig Flynn had been questioned in Brussels today about the alleged payment of £50,000.

8. Gilmartin then turned to talk about the photocopies of documents in the possession of the Tribunal. [REDACTED] C

9. He said that there was a list of payments to Frank Dunlop on one letter. Then, there was a letter from Eddie Kaye of the 3rd February, 1991 showing three payments one to Vera Gilmartin and two to Frank Dunlop.

10. He said that he would not pay or give any payment to Chevron and demanded a list of payments that had been made by or on behalf of Barkhill to Dunlop/Chevron. Following this, he got a long list from AIB and on the same day, I received another fax from David McGrath demanding a meeting. McGrath flew over with Eddie Kaye and around this time, Gilmartin threatened that he would "blow the whole thing out of the water".
11. Because Eddie Kaye faxed the information to Gilmartin, he was moved out immediately and was replaced by Michael O'Farrell from Cork.
12. At the next meeting of AIB, he called Frank Dunlop a "scumbag" and accused O'Callaghan and his solicitor, John Deane, of embezzling his (Gilmartin's) monies. He told us he called O'Callaghan a "low down gangster" and referred to Deane as a crooked solicitor to which O'Callaghan and Deane replied "that's libellous" and Gilmartin retorted "then sue me".
13. Michael O'Farrell said that there was no need for this carry on.
14. Barry Pritchard was a subsequent co-signatory on the cheques/bank documents after Gilmartin refused to pay.
15. O'Farrell said "what's going to be done" and Gilmartin replied to O'Farrell "You're running this company - you decide what's to be done".
16. Gilmartin says that Eddie Kaye/AIB had a right to call in cash that was owed to the Bank but had no right to take over the company.
17. He said that Paul Sheeran was present on his behalf at one or two of the meetings with AIB. At that time, Gilmartin was having terrible trouble with the Revenue in the UK and Barkhill and/or AIB paid his fare over to enable him to attend meetings.
18. On the night of the Council meeting at which a decision was to be taken in relation to rezoning, Gilmartin had someone in the Council Chamber who was

prepared to seek an adjournment of the meeting. He declines to name this person but says that every attempt to contact that person by telephone was thwarted because Gilmore, John Deane or O'Callaghan manned the telephone extensions and whenever he got through, they said that the person he was looking for was not there. It may be that this was the meeting that took place on the 16th May, 1991.

19. I asked Tom about the proposed sale of lands to him by Dublin Corporation and Dublin County Council. He said he did not know what the procedure was in relation to sale and in relation to the obtaining of necessary statutory consents. He assumed that as the Government had paid for the lands that they would have had some interest or involvement in the giving of approval for the sale. They had sold 120 acres across the road. He had agreed to buy 80 acres at Irishtown and Quarryvale for the site. He agreed to £510,000 approximately for 70 acres to the Corporation and had agreed to purchase 12 acres from the County Council at the same price i.e. £70,000 per acre. This had been agreed with Michael McCloone. The 12 acres was a slip or sliver between the 70 acres and the new motorway. He had obtained an option on the 12 acres.

20. He went on to refer to three documents which he believed the Tribunal has seen (has a copy of). They are as follows:-

- (i) Letter of the 3rd February, 1991 from AIB Corporate Bank bearing reference 5576/52 re Barkhill Limited.

This document which was unsigned, showed the following payments:-

- (a) £21,633 approximately to Frank Dunlop;
- (b) £9,760 approximately to Frank Dunlop;
- (c) £4,773.04 to A.V. Gilmartin.

These figures were payments in respect of telephone and tax bills payable by Gilmartin.

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

Tribunal Ref : REP. TGS 3

The document was unsigned.

Gilmartin refused to sign the letter and said that he asked Eddie Kaye how much Dunlop and Chevron were being paid.

(ii) Letter from AIB plc which was undated, addressed to Gilmartin and showed the following payments – amounts are approximate:-

- (a) Auveen Byrne - £4,235;
- (b) A. Kelly (an architect) – £19,764;
- (c) F. Dunlop - £13,530;
- (d) F. Dunlop - £6,314.76;
- (e) RIGA - £10,253.27.

Gilmartin believes that the latter sum was paid by Eoin O'Callaghan to Colm McGrath at Dublin Airport and that this sum was later reimbursed to RIGA through the Barkhill account.

Gilmartin says that O'Callaghan and John Deane met Colm McGrath at Dublin Airport. He knows this because he had attended a meeting in AIB at which Deane and O'Callaghan were present. Gilmartin was waiting for a taxi to the airport. O'Callaghan and Deane had earlier ordered a taxi and outside the Bankcentre, they offered Gilmartin a lift to the airport. Gilmartin accepted the offer and in the course of the journey, O'Callaghan said that he had to meet McGrath at the airport and said "I've already paid him and he is looking for more". O'Callaghan insisted that Gilmartin should not be seen at the airport by McGrath. Gilmartin went to the Ryanair desk.

O'Callaghan later said that McGrath had seen him (Gilmartin) to which Gilmartin replied "So what?".

O'Callaghan said it was important that McGrath should not see Gilmartin at the airport.

- (iii) The next payment on that document was £11,490 to Frank Dunlop.
- (iv) There was a payment to Deloitte & Touche in the sum of £6,050 that was paid by Eddie Kaye who had been queried by Eddie Gilmartin in relation to the payments of Dunlop.
- (v) On the 10th June, 1992 Gilmartin questioned who Chevron Limited is. After he asked that question, no one told him about Chevron or asked him to sign any cheques or authorised payments to Chevron.

He identified the 3rd February, 1993 as the day he "blew up". I asked for a list of what Chevron/Frank Dunlop were being paid. There is an AIB Bank reference 5412/91.

This information was faxed and on that day, Eddie Kaye wrote to him. May Baskill, an assistant to Michael Farrell, also contacted him and demanded that he attend a meeting with McGrath. He has a copy of that letter.

Gilmartin says that AIB wheeled in McGrath anytime they wanted to put the hammer on him (Gilmartin).

McGrath had a problem with the funding of Clondalkin Distributors. He had a cheque for £10,000 approximately from RIGA Limited and RIGA was reimbursed the £10,000 by Barkhill.

MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION BETWEEN PATRICK HANRATTY, S.C. AND TOM GILMARTIN ON THURSDAY 22ND OCTOBER, 1998

75

[REDACTED] C, A

76

[REDACTED] C, A

I asked Mr. Gilmartin about the political donation of £50,000 which he gave to Padraig Flynn for Fianna Fail and, in particular, who he had discussed his proposed donation with prior to making it. He said that Councillors McGrath and Gilbride had suggested to him that he should make a donation without saying how much. However, they did say that it should be substantial. Mr. Gilmartin said that he first went to Willie Farrell to tell him about the difficulties he was having. He was introduced to Councillor Gilbride and was shown around the Dail and Seanad. Padraig Flynn was making a speech at the time. Subsequently, he was introduced briefly to Padraig Flynn. When he was telling Willie Farrell outside the Seanad of the fact that he was being held to ransom, etc., Willie Farrell told him to keep his voice down.

When Mr. Gilmartin was introduced to Councillor Gilbride, the latter would hear no criticism of Liam Lalor. Councillors Gilbride and McGrath suggested that Mr. Gilmartin should make a donation to the Party. Padraig Flynn also suggested a donation. So did Bertie Ahern.

Mr. Gilmartin then told me about three Shefran payments that were made in or about May of 1992. It was either in late May or early June 1992. One of them was to Albert Reynolds for either £40,000 or £50,000. One was to Bertie Ahern for £30,000 and the other was either £15,000 or £20,000 and was to whoever was the Minister for Industry and Commerce in 1991/1992.

The payment to Bertie Ahern was connected with blocking the tax designation to

Green Property company. At the time, Albert Reynolds was the Taoiseach and Bertie Ahern was the Minister for Finance and Labour. The payment to Albert Reynolds was connected with preventing Mr. Gilmartin from getting the land across the way. The Corporation owned around 400 acres where St. Lomans was situated. The Corporation were going to sell this land and they had given Tom Gilmartin permission to include it in his brochure and in his maps. It was where he intended to put the conference centre and hotel. Tom Gilmartin wanted to buy 200 acres and the Corporation intended to give him an option to purchase it if the development was going ahead.

Tom Gilmartin said that notwithstanding all of the demands that were made upon him, he refused to pay anything other than the donation to the Party.

The dirty tricks started when he stopped the Lawor payments.

Mr. Gilmartin made a presentation in relation to his development in the Berkeley Court Hotel. This involved demonstration by reference to plans and maps around the walls. He also had a model of the development and a video. It was mostly councillors and others who attended at this presentation. O'Callaghan was there with Jim Donagh of AIB. On the way out, O'Callaghan attacked Tom Gilmartin about some remark he had made during the presentation about sheds in a field.

Padraig Flynn was the only one from the Government who had turned up. He turned up at 12 o'clock at night when most people had gone and there were only two or three left. He had to do the presentation again and show the video to Padraig Flynn.

Around that time, it was official policy that there was a ban on the IDA buying any more land. In fact, they had so much land that they were under instructions to sell some of the land which they held. Albert Reynolds and O'Callaghan blocked Tom Gilmartin getting the land by sending the IDA in to acquire the land. The IDA went to the Corporation and openly stated to McCloone and Derek Brady that they were under instructions to stop Tom Gilmartin acquiring this land. This was Donal Cullen and Dan Flinter and ultimately Ciaran McGowan. They said that it was Government land and had to be handed over to the IDA.

The Bank took over the development with O'Callaghan in September 1991.

Bertie Ahern's payment was connected with stopping the Green Property company from getting tax designation.

Originally, Tallaght, Clondalkin and Blanchardstown, the three western towns, were virtually guaranteed designation. There was no development in these areas and it was clear that an incentive was essential to encourage development in these areas. The Government had given more or less a guarantee that designation would be forthcoming for developments in these areas.

Most of the money that was paid out was for councillors. It was paid out between the 30th September, 1991 and June 1992. All of it was O'Callaghan's payments to councillors and the objective was to stall the review of the Development Plan.

Mr. Gilmartin referred to the three options referred to in the Statutory Instrument document which he has given us. One of the options was to get an enterprise zone status which would by-pass planning altogether. Another option was to go for rezoning. This was the option which Tom Gilmartin chose. At the time, there were only twelve dissenters out of the whole 78 councillors. Since he was bringing the money in and was going to create 30,000 jobs, he had the wholehearted support of the councillors. It was only when he stopped the payments to Lalor that the thing started to fall apart and O'Callaghan was brought in. It was Lalor that brought in O'Callaghan in the first place. O'Callaghan was doing something in Leixlip at the time. Gubay had the Neilstown site and decided to get rid of it. This site was completely incapable of being developed. It would require a massive fly-over 20/30 feet in height and was totally non-viable.

The suggestion by O'Callaghan about building a stadium is nonsense. O'Callaghan does not have the slightest intention of building any stadium and never did. He raises the prospect of building a stadium when he is looking for something such as recently when he was looking for the area limit of the development to be increased to 700,000 square feet, the original size which Tom Gilmartin had envisaged in the first place.

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

When O'Callaghan came in, he brought in Ambrose Kelly and Frank Dunlop.

By 1990, Tom Gilmartin had to borrow money from the Bank. This was his biggest mistake. O'Callaghan was actually there on the day he got the money apart from the fact that he was subsequently there on a regular basis anytime that Mr. Gilmartin was having a meeting with the Bank.

On the night of the motion to propose the rezoning of Quarryvale in 1992, Eddie Kaye and D. F. McGrath were in the Bank with O'Callaghan. Councillor McGrath was proposing the motion. On that night, the Bank and O'Callaghan were blackmailing Tom Gilmartin until 11 o'clock that night. He had Gilbride and McGrath ringing him that night saying that if he did not sign over to O'Callaghan, the motion would not go in unless they got the go ahead from O'Callaghan. Tom Gilmartin signed the document and faxed it back to the Bank. Tom Gilmartin said that Eddie Kaye would verify this.

The people who were in the Bank with O'Callaghan on that night were:-

Jim Donagh,
Dave McGrath,
Donal Chambers,
Eddie Kaye.

Tom Gilmartin says that he has letters that were faxed to and from the Bank that night. Shortly after this, Jim Donagh left and went to NIB. Eddie Kaye was moved sideways.

Tom Gilmartin mentioned to the Bank that he was negotiating with the Revenue in England for a claim they had for £7,000 in relation to his development in Northern Ireland. He mentioned this to Mary Basquelle of the Bank. She was Michael O'Farrell's assistant.

A week after he mentioned this to the Bank, he was raided by the English Revenue at his home in Luton. Tom Gilmartin believes that the Bank told O'Callaghan and that he got Albert Reynolds to set matters in motion with the English Revenue.

Tom Gilmartin mentioned that he had a letter of the 10th June, 1992 from Eddie Kaye looking for sanction of a payment to Shefran.

The payment to Councillor McGrath of £10,000 by O'Callaghan was at Dublin Airport on the 9th February, 1993. This was the day of a Board meeting of Barkhill Limited in Dublin. The Bank had to send Tom Gilmartin his airfare because he had no money because of the affair with the Revenue. He had hardly any money to buy food, the previous Christmas. He had received a letter from D. F. McGrath, having indicated to McGrath that he was unhappy with and wanted to discuss the payments to Shefran and Dunlop which he was being asked to sanction.

The meeting took place in Dublin on the 9th February, 1993. At that meeting, Tom Gilmartin called O'Callaghan and his solicitor, Deane, a pair of gangsters. He challenged the payments to Shefran and Dunlop and said these monies were for corrupt payments to politicians. He actually stated this to the Bank. O'Callaghan objected that it was not £500,000. Tom Gilmartin then added it up and found that it was more than £350,000. Tom Gilmartin says that the Bank knew exactly what these payments were for and what was going on. He said that they would not pay out £10 without knowing what it was for. He thinks that Seamus Maguire may have taken a note of this meeting.

Mr. Gilmartin contrasted the Bank's cagerness to make these payments to Shefran and Dunlop for no apparent services with their absolute refusal to make payments to people who genuinely had provided services i.e. Taggarts, Richard Foreman, and Oye Arup. The Bank were disgraceful in the manner in which they treated these people and ultimately, these people had to take proceedings to recover their money. Tom Gilmartin found himself in the position of having to swear affidavits against himself to enable these people to get paid. He has the sworn Affidavits from these proceedings.

in the early 1990s, Frank Dunlop was the Pianna Rail Press Secretary.

Tom Gilmartin says that there was over £1m. paid out in gangster money. He said that Shefran existed before 1991 but that it had its name changed in September 1991. He said that Dunlop had got some payments from Riga.

MEMORANDUM

(Typed on 3RD November, 1998)MEMORANDUM OF A TELEPHONE CONVERSATION BETWEEN PATRICK HANRATTY, S.C. AND THOMAS GILMARTIN ON FRIDAY 30TH
OCTOBER, 1998

I received a telephone call this morning from Thomas Gilmartin. The call lasted approximately two hours. Mr. Gilmartin informed me that Frank Dunlop and Matt Cooper were seen together in a hotel in Dublin last Friday. He believes that this was connected with the article written by Matt Cooper in last Sunday's Sunday Tribune. Mr. Gilmartin said that on the previous Saturday he received a telephone call in which he was informed of what would be in the story. The story was modified somewhat from what he was told.

He says that Bertie Ahern is panicking and that he has all sorts of people working desperately for him. We discussed two letters from Allied Irish Banks to him - one dated 10th June, 1992 and the other dated 2nd February, 1993. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] C

We discussed the letter of the 10th June, 1992. There is a reference in that letter to Mr. Gilmartin having agreed to a £30,000 payment payable to Shefran Limited. Mr. Gilmartin said that he had not agreed to this payment. In fact, he had a running battle with Allied Irish Banks for six months about these payments. He refused to go to meetings because he was being told a pack of lies as to what these payments were for by the Bank. This running battle culminated in a meeting that was held on the 9th February, 1993. The letter of the 2nd February, 1993 was in connection with this meeting. This meeting was totally negative [REDACTED] A

82

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

Mr. Gilmartin said that the £30,000 referred to in the letter of the 10th June, 1992 was for Bertie Ahern. He was told at the time by Eoin O'Callaghan that he (O'Callaghan) would see to it that Green Property Company would not get tax designation. He said that he had taken care of Bertie Ahern.

Mr. Gilmartin said that, as far as he knew, no money ever went into Shefran. This company was always in the red.

At some stage, monies were reimbursed to RIGA.

In relation to the letter of the 2nd February, 1993, Mr. Gilmartin said that the meeting that he had on the 9th February, 1993 was not, as stated in the letter of the 2nd February, 1993, about facilities. It had nothing to do with facilities. The lunch that was arranged prior to the meeting was unusual. At that time, there was £25,000 owed to him by Barkhill for fees and various items which they would not pay him. Mr. Gilmartin tried to get the Bank to pay but they refused to pay. He says that Eddie Kaye will confirm this.

Mr. Gilmartin said that it was the beginning of 1992 when he started "kicking". Dunlop then started appearing.

Most of the money that was paid out for politicians was paid out between December 1991 and July 1992.

Mr. Gilmartin said Liam Lalor moved into Frank Dunlop's office when he wanted to work outside the Dail. So did Marion McGuinness.

Green Property Company was creating a fuss about councillors from Blanchardstown supporting Quarryvale. This gave a problem to Marion McGuinness. Consequently, when Charlie Haughey appointed O'Callaghan as a director of the Gas Board, he promised her that he would make it up to her by allowing her to announce the provision of a gas supply to Blanchardstown and the provision of such gas to subscribers at reasonable rates. He did in fact arrange this and she made the announcement.

Mr. Gilmartin told me that it was possible that the name of the civil servant to which he referred in our previous conversation, who was at the meeting in the Department of Industry and Commerce, was Farrelly although he said that he may have been mistaken and that it might have been Farrell. He thought his first name was Jim or Jimmy. [REDACTED]

83 [REDACTED] Padraig Flynn knew him. Mr. Gilmartin believed he was a civil servant from the Department of the Environment. Mr. Gilmartin's recollection was that after he made his complaint, Mr. Farrelly began to appear at meetings in the Corporation. A

Mr. Gilmartin said that any meeting in which Brennan was involved seemed to be in the Department of Industry and Commerce. He thinks Mr. Brennan was involved in transport at the time. He was more involved in Arlington.

We went on to discuss the question of Bachelor's Walk. Mr. Gilmartin said that when he started this development, there was no tax designation on Bachelor's Walk. He set about assembling the properties. He first bought Nos. 9-15 from Hill Samuel. He then bought Nos. 1-4 from Healy Homes who went bust. He subsequently bought Nos. 5 & 6. By the time Arlington became involved, he had bought Nos. 1-6 and 9-15. Nos. 9-15 cost £600,000. Nos. 5 & 6 cost £240,000. One of the buildings he had bought was Carrolls Furniture Store.

Designation was announced all along the quays down as far as Smithfield.

There were a number of people interested in a proposed development but Mr. Gilmartin decided to talk to Ted Dudley who had told him about Clandeboy in Northern Ireland.

Ted Dudley brought Richard Mould over. They came over on a Thursday. They stood on O'Connell Street and could not believe their eyes. They reckoned there were 100,000 people walking up and down the street every day and here were these wrecks of buildings along the length of Bachelor's Walk.

Mr. Gilmartin discussed Bachelor's Walk with people in Dublin Corporation because they had a number of freeholds in Bachelor's Walk. He was dealing with Paddy Morrissey, Hegarty, Sean Haughey, Mick McCloone and Bill Lacey. Bill Lacey was brought in by somebody. After the designation was announced, Dublin Corporation set up a committee or a development unit which was headed by Bill Lacey.

Mr. Gilmartin says that he was offered the sun, moon and stars by Dublin Corporation if he would develop this site. They were very keen for somebody to do something about Bachelor's Walk.

Mr. Gilmartin says that Padraig Flynn had a special interest in it.

Unfortunately, when they announced the designation, they did so from Bachelor's Walk to the Lots which was halfway between Bachelor's Walk and Abbey Street. This was no good to Thomas Gilmartin because his idea was to develop over as far as Abbey Street. You could not have a shopping centre half of which was designated and half of which was not. It was not feasible. Either you removed the designation altogether or designated the lot. He told this to the Corporation and Flynn increased the designation up to Abbey Street. Consequently, the entirety of the site for the proposed development had full designation before Arlington came in.

Mr. Gilmartin said that they almost had the Bachelor's Walk assembled for somewhere in the range of £7m. - £10m.

Unfortunately, however, things started to go off the rails when Mr. Gilmartin stopped the payments to Lalor. Arlington immediately started running into trouble. George Redmond blocked the sale of the freeholds. Properties which the Corporation had talked of selling to them for £200,000 suddenly went up to £5m. overnight. Lalor and Redmond then went around advising people not to sell cheap with the result that the owners of other properties which needed to be acquired started looking for ridiculous sums of money. It got to a stage where Arlington were up to £20m. to assemble a site and they still were not halfway there. This all happened after Lalor and Redmond had demanded £100,000 and had been refused.

Lalor also then started going into the Corporation and making allegations. He poisoned the water. Mr. Gilmartin strongly believed that Charlie Haughey was involved as well. He says that it is important that we talk to Bill Lacey and Martin McCloone. Mr. Gilmartin says that McCloone warned him several times that he was going to get done. Ciaran O'Malley was warning him as well. Mr. Gilmartin says that Lalor and Redmond were working hand in hand.

Ray Burke and Charlie Haughey had a ring going and Bertie Ahern was in the middle of it. There used to be meetings in a pub on the northside. It was near Griffith Avenue between the Airport and Fairview or Drumcondra.

Ray Burke, Bertie Ahern and other "gophers" including Gilbride were among the coterie.

Mr. Gilmartin says that we should look at Mulryan and Gannon. He said that Mulryan got zoning on the St. Patrick's Trust land at Quarryvale.

MEMORANDUM9th November, 1998

Telephone conversation between Thomas Gilmartin and John Gallagher, S.C. on 6th November, 1998

1. Thomas Gilmartin telephoned and began the conversation by enquiring whether the Tribunal was going to get anywhere and whether the recent comments at the Public Hearing by Counsel would mean that the Tribunal would not be able to proceed. He said that if the Tribunal did not proceed and carry out its investigations fully, it would mean that the Mafia would be taking over.
2. He wondered why the Press gave such emphasis to the other side.
3. He said that Albert Reynolds has now joined the fray and is linked up with Pdraig Flynn and Ray McSharry - who are now described as "the has beings". He said that Albert Reynolds is desperate to find out how much Gilmartin knows. He said that Albert Reynolds is very very concerned and they believe that Bertie Ahern is going to dump everything on them.
4. They are scared.
5. Albert Reynolds thinks that Bertie Ahern is trying to shovel everything in their direction and is scared that somebody may get immunity.
6. He said that there was concern about an article in last week's paper about the attempts to move the Department of Agriculture to Cork. He said that Albert Reynolds was involved in trying to force the Department to Cork and in doing so, was acting on behalf of Eoghan O'Callaghan. The intention was that O'Callaghan's property in Cork would be leased by the State to accommodate the Department of Agriculture staff. However, departmental staff refused to move and threatened to sue.

7. Albert Reynolds had a hand in the "missing documents" i.e. the documents that had been taken from the Department of the Environment (as reported to us by the then junior Minister). He said that the documents were taken from the Minister for the Environment and were considered at a meeting in the Mont Clare Hotel. He said Albert Reynolds told him this and he thinks he was present at that meeting but is not sure. He said there were also reports about money that went missing in transit from the U.S. to the Fianna Fail Party in Ireland. He said that Albert Reynolds has good reason to be scared.

8. He said that there are a lot of spin doctors operating in relation to all matters affecting the Tribunal and that Brian Cowan has got special authority from the Taoiseach to set up whatever structure is necessary to keep the Tribunal from Bertie Ahern.

24. Gilmartin says that he did release a few things to the media to counter Frank Dunlop and his spins and pointed out that he got Dunlop to admit that he had received payments of approximately £.45m. although he (Gilmartin) knows that there is more than £1m. about it.

25. In relation to the missing files above referred to, Gilmartin said that this occurred under the Albert Reynolds Government when he was in coalition with Labour and he believed Emmet Stagg was the Junior Minister.
26. He said that a designated area at the top of Dame Street in the Temple Bar/Christchurch area had been designated and that properties had been bought in that area between the time the files were shown and the designation announced. This was a quick purchase in respect of properties which did not have a great deal of value prior to designation but he said the same thing occurred in relation to a designation in Kilkenny and an extension to a designated area in Limerick.
27. He said there had been huge pressure on the Department of Agriculture to move to Cork to create a value in the development in Cork on the CIE lands. He said in order to get the project off the ground, O'Callaghan needed a tenant. They needed to get a covenant to create 6% of the value.
28. Gilmartin says that he know that part of the Chefran money went to Albert Reynolds, part to Bertie Ahern and a smaller sum to one other person whose names he does not know at the present but he does not think it was Ray Burke.
29. He does not think the cash went into the Chefran accounts although the payments may appear to have been made from Barkhill to Chefran.
30. He said that Albert Reynolds in trying to find out how much Gilmartin knows has approached a number of people and that Ray McSharry also is scared because he furnished a draft of a letter which he wanted Gilmartin to sign which indicated that Gilmartin did not know and did not have any connection with McSharry. However, in the period 1990-1991, Gilmartin's sister had contacted McSharry in Brussels to complain about the obstruction that Gilmartin was experiencing in Dublin.
31. He says that at the end of 1992/1993, a sum of £40,000 was paid to [REDACTED] and £30,000 was paid to Bertie Ahern whom he believed were

Prime Minister and Minister for Finance respectively. No money went into Chefran. The money was paid direct. Chefran was being used as a money laundering operation.

32. He said that Brian Cowan had been instructed to hire whatever assistance he required to deflect the heat from Bertie Ahern to the has beens - Albert Reynolds, Charlie Haughey and Pdraig Flynn whom he described as "practically gone". He said that Flynn will not be re-appointed to Europe. Albert Reynolds fees certain of this although he believes that Pdraig Flynn does not yet know. Gilmartin says that Flynn was not the worst of them and that he does not like double-crossing but that Flynn had closed ranks with Fianna Fail when Gilmartin was in trouble.
33. Gilmartin says that O'Callaghan is scared and is getting totally rattled. He said that O'Callaghan has about ten solicitors trying to undo what Frank Dunlop has said.
34. Gilmartin drew attention to an article entitled "Lunch with Frank Dunlop" and said that Dunlop has been told to keep his mouth shut.
35. Dunlop said that solicitors are around him like flies around a pot. Gilmartin describes Dunlop as a low life scumbag.
36. He says that there is a story simmering about a major plc which is associated with the missing documents i.e. documents that are missing from the Department of the Environment. He says that he is aware that a few TDs on the Government side want the truth told.
37. Gilmartin says that Dunlop is alleged to have gone to John Bruton complaining about the amount of money being demanded by Fianna Gael Councillors to support the Quarryvale project and that Bruton is alleged to have replied "that's politics".

38. Gilmartin says that in Athlone O'Callaghan sent his cohorts to Mary O'Rourke who threatened to call the Gardai. This approach to Mary O'Rourke appears to have arisen in relation to O'Callaghan's attempts to have an area in Athlone designated. This question of designation - according to our enquiries in the Department of Finance - had been deferred because of a row between imposing Fianna Fail groups in Athlone but the Minister for the Environment made the necessary order - on foot of an instruction by telephone from Albert Reynolds - the day before that Government fell. He said that O'Callaghan had taken over the property and that in Limerick the designated area development also got into financial difficulty.

39. Gilmartin returned to the fact that Charlie Bird had been on today as had a woman from RTE who wanted to tape an interview with him and who asked him to go on the Pat Kenny programme.

Note of telephone conversation between Patrick Hanratty SC and Thomas Gilmartin on Friday the 27th November 1998

Mr. Gilmartin telephone me to-day. He said that Paul Sheeran was appointed to the Board of Barkhill Ltd. It was sometime prior to the meeting of February 1993. He was at the meeting of February 1993 and was witness to my calling Owen O'Callaghan a gangster. Maguire took minutes at these meetings. Mr. Gilmartin says that we can get these from him. I asked him to send me a letter of authority.

London & Edinburgh trust may have been the body to whom a presentation was being made when Lawlor showed up at Finnstown House.

Mr. Gilmartin spoke to Mr. McCammin. They discussed the occasion when Liam Lawlor walked in and demanded money. [REDACTED] A
Mr. McNeill of Taggarts was there.

Mr. Gilmartin then referred to a meeting in the Horse Show House pub in Ballsbridge which was attended by representatives of AIB and Liam Lawlor. This was before the bank put the screws on Mr Gilmartin. He said that Frank Dunlop was present at at least two meetings in the bank. Liam Lawlor used to drive Owen O'Callaghan around. He used to pick Mr Gilmartin up occasionally as well. On one occasion he picked up Mr Gilmartin and brought him into the Dall where there was a meeting involving Owen O'Callaghan, Marian McGennis, Frank Dunlop and John Deane. Mr Gilmartin was left sitting in Liam Lawlor's office.

The meeting in the Horse Show House was on the 14th of February 1991,

Mr Gilmartin said that Jody Corcoran telephoned on Saturday and asked him about the Owen O'Callaghan/Barkhill discovery documents which had recently been circulated by the Tribunal. He asked Mr Gilmartin if he had received such a letter. Mr Gilmartin said that he told him nothing and that he asked Jody Corcoran how he got this information. Jody Corcoran told him that Owen O'Callaghan had discussed the matter with Bertie Ahern. He had to tell him because the Taoiseach was due to open Quarryvale on the 24th of November 1998. [REDACTED] A [REDACTED] This opening was postponed and Jody Corcoran indicated that there was no way that the Taoiseach was ever going to open this shopping centre.

Bertie Ahern (or the Taoiseach's office) gave this information to Des Richardson. Jody Corcoran was at the Fianna Fail Ard Fheis on Friday the 20th of November where he met Des Richardson. Mr. Richardson gave him the information about the Owen O'Callaghan/Barkhill discovery circular letter. [REDACTED] A

Mr Gilmartin said that Jody Corcoran called him back on Monday and said that he was concerned that he had been set up. His fear was that he was being used as a vehicle to leak information concerning the Tribunal by parties who wished to undermine the Tribunal.

Mr Gilmartin made reference to a tax adviser called Cochran of Noel Cochran & Partners. He was often with Liam Lawlor and Phil Monaghan.

AIB approached Stewart Harrington of Harrington Bannon to do a valuation of the lands after the loan was up. Instead of keeping this confidential, Harrington told a number of people at a meeting at Monaghan's office attended by a number of people including Noel Cochran.

Pat Gleeson of IBI recommended Mr. Cochran to THOMAS GILMARTIN. Consequently Mr Gilmartin met Cochran in Bank of Ireland in London. He subsequently met him in Camden Markby's office.

One day he said to Mr Gilmartin that his name had come up. He Mr Gilmartin was he having any trouble with AIB. He said that Stewart Harrington was appointed to do a valuation for AIB and that he had come to a meeting at which he (Cochran) was present in Monaghan's office. He told the whole thing to the meeting and suggested that Mr Gilmartin was in trouble.

It was after this that Monaghan took Padraig Flynn around the site in a helicopter. This was at a point in time after Mr Gilmartin had made his complaints.

Mr Gilmartin said that he had found out that Bertie Ahern had personally briefed Ken Whelan before his "self styled whistle blower" article.

Barry Pritchard was the AIB nominee on the board of Barkhill Ltd. He was a signatory on the cheques which were paid out to this company Mr Gilmartin said that he had reason to believe that Barry Pritchard had some connection with Shefran Ltd.

Mr Gilmartin said that Frank Connolly had told him that Ted Harding had told him that he (Harding) had obtained the information about Mr Gilmartin's financial difficulties which he published from Frank Dunlop. This information was circulated to the Irish and British dailies and even to the local Luton newspaper.

Mr Gilmartin said that Eddie Kaye would be a witness to the fact of the occurrence of the meeting in the Horse Show House and to the fact that Liam Lawlor was there. Eddie Kaye was invited but did not attend himself. THOMAS GILMARTIN said that he himself looked in and saw them. He did not attend the meeting himself. He did not see Lawlor when he looked in. He saw McGrath and Owen O'Callaghan talking. Dunlop and Deane were a few feet away.

There was another lunch attended by McGrath, Dunlop, Owen O'Callaghan and Deane in Jurys. Eddie Kaye would know about this as well.

Note of telephone conversation between Patrick Hanratty SC and Thomas Gilmartin on Monday the 30th of November 1998

Mr. Gilmartin telephone me again to-day. He said that Michael Bailey had told Jody Corcoran that he had evidence that the bank took him (Thomas Gilmartin) to the cleaners and that he was set up. He said that the bank were up to their eyes in it.

Mr. Gilmartin said that he had discovered that Liam Lawlor had attended a meeting in Allied Irish Banks with Owen O'Callaghan. Mr. Gilmartin said that he himself was not there. The discussion was about zoning. The conclusion was that Mr. Gilmartin would not get zoning. Eddie Kaye was at the meeting and would be in a position to verify that it occurred and what was discussed. It was attended by McGrath, Frank Dunlop, John Deane, Liam Lawlor and Owen O'Callaghan.

Mr. Gilmartin said that he had also discovered that there was a phone call from the bank to a senior politician in connection with Quarryvale. This was before the meeting with Liam Lawlor. Mr. Gilmartin was not told the name of the senior politician but he thinks it was Albert Reynolds.

Mr. Gilmartin stated that Liam Lawlor has been to Australia in the recent past. He says that he was sent out to a conference there by Bertie Ahern. The theme of the conference was "Ethics in politics". Mr Gilmartin thinks that it is sick that this country should be represented at such a conference by the likes of Liam Lawlor. He says that it is incredible that Bertie Ahern sent Liam Lawlor to such a conference.

Mr. Gilmartin said that on several occasions when he had meetings in AIB Liam Lawlor was parked outside. He used to drive Owen O'Callaghan around. He dropped Thomas Gilmartin to the airport on a few occasions.

The Sunday Times and two other english newspapers were on to him last week. They were asking about Arlington and looking for Raymond Mould. Ursula Halligan of the Sunday Times phoned to say she was coming to see him. Mr. Gilmartin told her not to come because he had nothing to say to the press. She came anyway and he sent her away. He subsequently received a bouquet of flowers from her.

Maeve Sheehan has also been on enquiring about Arlington.

Mr. Gilmartin said that Therese Ridge was supposed to have been in Owen O'Callaghan's camp. Jody Corcoran asked Mr. Gilmartin about her. Mr. Gilmartin said that Owen O'Callaghan campaigned for her senate campaign in Cork.

The meeting in the Horse Show House was on the 14th of February 1991, the day after the shareholders agreement was signed. Liam Lawlor was also in a meeting in the bank prior to February 1991.

On the night that the agreement was signed there was liaison between the bank, the Council chamber and Mr. Gilmartin. Again, he says, that Eddie Kaye will confirm this.

Liam Lawlor wanted a 20% stake in Quarryvale.

Paul Sheeran was at a meeting in the Dead Man's inn when Mr. Gilmartin first met Mr. Lawlor.

Paul Sheeran went to some bank meetings in place of Mr. Gilmartin as an observer. McGrath was unhappy with this.

Paul Sheeran was talking to Barry Pritchard the other day. Paul's daughter runs a Jewellers shop in Nutgrove. Paul Sheeran wanted to buy it out. Pritchard is in AIB Capital markets.

Mr. Gilmartin raised the question as to why Owen O'Callaghan and John Deane were present on the night of the long knives. What business did they have there? He said that the night the motion went in was the night that they were blackmailing him. This was different than the night that it was passed. The motion was not allowed in and was held back until Mr. Gilmartin signed over. Colm McGrath was proposing the motion. A number of Councillors telephoned Mr. Gilmartin including McGrath and Gilbride. Cllr. McGrath told Mr. Gilmartin on the telephone that he had to reach agreement with Owen O'Callaghan before he would put the motion in. Gilbride said that without Owen O'Callaghan he was going nowhere. He said that if the motion did not go in it would not go in this year.

The third anonymous call was a death threat. JC had telephoned TG to ask him about the threats which he, TG, had received and whether he knew who was behind them. I asked TG if this might have been a ruse by a journalist to get information. TG did not think so. He said that JC was concerned and his wife was very concerned. It was the third one they were concerned about.

JC told TG on Saturday that McDowell and Allen were in with the Tribunal during the week. JC had been told that it was suggested to the Sole Member that he could not go to every county in Ireland in his enquiries. The Sole Member said that he would carry on until his dying day.

He was told that McDowell and Allen said that they would go to the High Court and to the Supreme Court if necessary to stop it.

TG said that Albert Reynolds was panicking because Bertie Ahern was trying to shovel it all towards the has beens. AR thinks that he will be dumped on.

JC has a source close to BA. He believes that BA read the Tribunal's letter (O'Callaghan discovery letter). JC does not know for certain if BA read TG's statement to the Tribunal. The source read it but if BA read it he did not see him do so.

Mr. Gilmartin telephoned me at 12.10 pm.

He said that he had decided to end his involvement with the Tribunal. He had given the matter a lot of thought in the last two days and he had a family meeting yesterday. It was their view that he was making a spectacle of himself and that it would achieve nothing. They did not think that the Tribunal would achieve anything or change anything. His friends were saying the same thing to him. He referred to the fact that Charles Haughey had this week escaped a tax assessment for £2,000,000 on a technicality. He said that he had no confidence in the Irish legal system. He said that it was a banana republic.

Mr. Gilmartin said that he had been going through a lot of his documents over the weekend and that he came across another document dated the 5th May, 1992 indicating a £25,000 payment to Shefran. [REDACTED]

128 [REDACTED] He had also come across a set of accounts prepared by Deloitte & Touche which were heavily qualified by Deloitte & Touche on the basis that there was no supporting material for a number of transaction. There was another separate payment of £30,000 to Dunlop. A,C

Mr. Gilmartin made reference to the current controversy over how many meetings the Taoiseach had with him. Mr. Gilmartin said that he had witnesses to these meetings. One of them was attended by Mr. Ted Dudley and another was attended by Mr. Richard Foreman. In the case of the other two meetings, they were recorded meetings. By recorded meetings he meant that they had been arranged well in advance through a secretary of the Department and, therefore, there would be a record of them.

Mr. Gilmartin went on then to refer to the Corporation land which he bought in Quarryvale. He said that initially the Green Property company would not bid on this land. Then they wrote a letter to the Corporation saying it was worth £12m. if it had planning permission. They put in a conditional bid for about £2.5m. The condition was that it would be given planning permission for retail. This was not possible because Neilstown already had planning permission for retail. Mr. Gilmartin said, that consequently, the Green Property condition could never be complied with and the bid was null and void.

Mr. Gilmartin also put in a bid for this land in the sum of £5.1m. which was over twice the Green Property bid. At the time this bid was being submitted, there was no reason in the world why it should not have been accepted. The Corporation definitely wanted to sell the land. The tender had to go before the Corporation for approval. Mr. Gilmartin's bid won the tender and there was no reason at all why he should not be successful and the sale should not be ratified. However, when it went before the Corporation, George Redmond and Liam Lalor tried to block Corporation approval.

In those days, the tactics they used was that George Redmond would accuse Paddy Morrissey of having a back-hand deal with the developer. Mr. Gilmartin is not sure if this happened in this case. However, he is sure that Redmond and Lalor went to considerable lengths to block approval of his tender. He said that we should talk to McCloone about it. It occurs to me that we should also talk to Mr. Morrissey. Mr. Gilmartin says that Mr. McCloone and Mr. Morrissey are both honest.

Mr. Gilmartin went on to say that George Redmond's modus operandi was that if the Corporation decided to buy land, he would go down to the Corporation meeting and "kick up shit" at the meeting. He would say that the Corporation were building up a land bank of unnecessary proportions and public expense and that it was unnecessary and come with all kinds of reasons why it should not go through. He might also get Paddy Morrissey to back off by accusing him of something or putting pressure on him in some way.

George Redmond would then notify his friends in Green Property or somewhere else that the Corporation was interested. They would then go and buy the land at the price that the Corporation was contemplating or even lower.

The question of purchase by the Corporation would then come up again at a later stage and the Corporation would buy the land from George Redmond's friend for a profit of £1m. or more to them.

If Paddy Morrissey was not playing ball, he might accuse Paddy Morrissey of doing cosy deals to make Paddy Morrissey back off. Paddy Morrissey was afraid of George Redmond.

In the case of the Corporation Quarryvale lands, Mr. Gilmartin said that he went to Bertie Ahern to complain about what was going on. He said that the first time he spoke to Mr. Ahern about this, Mr. Ahern suggested that he make a donation to the Flanna Fail Party. In any event, Mr. Ahern said that he would send in someone to sort out the problem. He sent in Joe Burke who was from Donegal but who was on the Corporation. Joe Burke came to see Mr. Gilmartin and asked him what was going on. Mr. Gilmartin told him that Redmond and Lalor were pulling a stroke. Mr. Gilmartin told Mr. Burke that he was fed up with the corruption that was going on and might do something about it. Mr. Gilmartin said that he believed that Bertie Ahern sent Burke in as a damage limitation exercise for Fianna Fail and for the purpose of protecting the Party. In any event, Mr. Burke went in and did something. Mr. Gilmartin says that the Corporation has details of the Burke intervention. Mr. Gilmartin did not know precisely what Bertie Ahern did. However, at the second meeting a week later, the tender was approved.

About a week after that, Burke arrived to Gilmartin's office. He himmed and hawed and while he did not overtly refer to money, Mr. Gilmartin got the distinct impression that he was looking for a donation of money. Mr. Gilmartin said that he did not "take the bait" and then Mr. Burke said that Bertie Ahern would like to meet him. Mr. Gilmartin said that he was going out to Dublin Airport to catch a flight to England. Mr. Burke said that he would give him a lift and that they could call to see Bertie on the way out to the airport. Mr. Burke gave Mr. Gilmartin a lift in a truck and they stopped at a pub in Drumcondra. Mr. Burke asked Mr. Gilmartin to wait in the truck and went into the pub. He was in there for about twenty minutes. He came out after twenty minutes and said that Bertie was not in there. He then drove to another pub somewhere off Griffith Avenue or somewhere like that which he said was Bertie Ahern's own local. He again asked Mr. Gilmartin to wait in the truck and went into the pub. After a few minutes, he came out and said that Bertie was not there yet. Mr. Gilmartin said that he had to go and Mr. Burke drove him to the airport.

MEMORANDUM22nd February, 1999

Memorandum of telephone conversation between Patrick Hanratty, S.C. and Thomas Gilmartin on Monday, 15th February, 1999.

[REDACTED]

131

Mr. Gilmartin said that he believed that all of the payments were made after September, 1991. The shareholders' agreement was signed on the 15th September, 1991. Shefran did not exist until September, 1991 [REDACTED]

132

Mr. Gilmartin said that the payments are described in some document as coming from the RIGA subordinated loan for £1m. The RIGA loan of £1m. was not made until September, 1991 after the shareholders' agreement was executed. On the date the shareholders' agreement was executed, there was a facility letter from the bank increasing the facility for Barkhill Limited.

Mr. Gilmartin then turned to the meeting of Barkhill Limited at the Allied Irish Banks' premises in Ballsbridge which took place on the 9th February, 1993. He said that he refused to go to this meeting until he got a list of the payments to Shefran Limited. The day after he got the letter about the meeting, he spoke to Eddie Kaye and said that he would not go until he had a list setting out what these payments were. Eddie Kaye then faxed him a list of the payments. That's where this list came from. Eddie Kaye was then suddenly moved. Mr. Gilmartin believes that Mr. Kaye was moved as a result of sending him this list. Mr. Gilmartin says that he felt embarrassed because he felt that he had cost Mr. Kaye his job.

The meeting took place on the 9th February and Mr. Gilmartin believes that Mr. Kaye was not at this meeting.

The night of the zoning meeting of Dublin County Council when the area capping was put on the development was the 17th December, 1992. Mr. Gilmartin said that the capping was a farce and there was never any serious intention that the development would be limited to this size. This was the night that Eddie Kaye and D. F. McGrath came over to London.

Mr. Gilmartin then referred to a meeting on the 14th February, 1991 in the bank. This was the meeting after which some of the participants went to the Horse Show House for a drink. Eddie Kaye did not go and Tom Gilmartin did not go. After the meeting in the pub, Mr. O'Callaghan said to Mr. Gilmartin that he wanted to see him. Mr. O'Callaghan said that Mr. O'Callaghan was wanted in the Dail. Mr. O'Callaghan brought Mr. Gilmartin to Liam Lawlor's office on the fourth floor in the Dail. Marian McGennis and Liam Lawlor were there. Eoin O'Callaghan and Frank Dunlop were in and out all of the time. Frank Dunlop and Eoin O'Callaghan were talking outside intermittently. After a period, Tom Gilmartin walked out of Liam Lawlor's office. He said to O'Callaghan that this was some kind of a set-up. O'Callaghan said to him that neither he (Gilmartin) or any Unionist will ever put a foot on that site. Mr. Gilmartin said that he walked down the corridor. In an alcove, he saw O'Callaghan and Albert Reynolds talking. Liam Lawlor followed him down the corridor and pulled up at the alcove and joined Eoin O'Callaghan and Albert Reynolds. Mr. Gilmartin walked out.

Before they had gone to the Dail, they went to Frank Dunlop's office in Mount Street. They were there for a while and there was somebody else in an office adjoining Dunlop's office. Mr. Gilmartin believes that it was Ambrose Kelly. Frank Dunlop was coming in and out like a jack rabbit. They were talking amongst each other. Mr. Gilmartin said that he got "pissed off".

Going back to the Dail meeting, Mr. Gilmartin said that Mr. O'Callaghan disappeared after the Unionist remark. Mr. Gilmartin said that he does not really know what this meeting was all about.

There was another bank meeting that evening. Mr. Gilmartin was brought back to Ballsbridge in Frank Dunlop's Volvo. He was talking about John Corcoran. Mr. Gilmartin says that at the meeting, he accused the bank of being involved in a set-up. He had the feeling that there was somebody else in the next door office to the office in which the bank meeting was held - perhaps Donal Chambers or somebody else senior in the bank.

Mr. Gilmartin said that he had a running battle with the bank from the minute he borrowed the money. He said that they put the interest up to 30% - 40% at one stage.

133 On the 13th September, 1991, Mr. Gilmartin said that he "kicked up shit". This was the time when he was being pressurised into signing the shareholders' agreement. Mr. Gilmartin refused to sign the agreement unless O'Callaghan put back in £1m. of the £2.5m. which he had been paid in respect of Neilstown. [REDACTED] A
Mr. Gilmartin said that he would not sign the agreement unless he did.

The first Barkhill loan was for £8m. The second Barkhill loan was an extended loan for rezoning, etc. That was to be taken out when the zoning went through.

The first Tom Gilmartin heard of Shefran was around Christmas 1991.

Note of telephone conversation between Patrick Hanratty SC and Thomas Gilmartin on Monday the 1st June 1999

135 I telephoned Mr. Gilmartin this afternoon, returning his call of the week before last. [REDACTED] A

TG said that Ted Dadley had recently indicated that he did not want to be involved with the Tribunal. Up to a week ago he was fully supportive and intending to support TG. However, in the last few days something had happened. TG believed that TD had been "got at." There was some talk of a development in Ireland, possibly involving Noel Smyth. TG also understood that Raymond Mould had changed his mind about co-operating with the Tribunal. TG was trying to find out what was going on. He said that he had also recently got the impression that Richard Foreman had become less than enthusiastic. Lambert, Smith Hampton in Dublin had been given some lettings in Liffey Valley

I asked TG if his domestic circumstances had changed and he said that they had not. I said that we still wished to meet him to discuss a number of matters particularly to fill gaps in the chronology. He said that he was no good on dates. I pointed out that he could assist us with the detail of events and the sequence of events which would assist us in identifying dates.

Note of telephone conversation between Patrick Hanratty SC and Thomas Gilmartin on Wednesday the 3rd June 1999

I telephoned TG to-day. I asked him when did he think that OOC first discussed Quarryvale with AIB. [REDACTED]

39

A, C

TG said that he did not know although he had always suspected that OOC had been talking to the bank at an early stage. However, he had no evidence of this. At one stage, possibly December 1988 OOC said that AIB was the biggest property investor in Ireland and that they were well aware of the value of the site. OOC would have known from an early stage that, sooner or later, TG would require bank facilities for the development. He would also have known because TG told him that Bank of Ireland was not a runner. TG said that he was very open with OOC and, in hindsight, told him far too much.

TG said that he thinks that Donal Chambers was the strategist in AIB in relation to Quarryvale. TG never actually met Chambers although he believed that he was heavily involved with OOC.

TG then referred to the meeting in Dail Eireann to which he was brought by Liam Lawlor. He was adamant that this took place on the 1st of February 1989. There is a record of it in Tom Gilmartin's 1989 diary.

He arranged to meet Liam Lawlor in Buswells hotel at 4.30 pm. Lawlor was late. When he arrived Lawlor brought him over to the Dail and signed him in. They met Ray Burke standing at an elevator. Lawlor introduced TG to RB. RB said nothing. They went up in the elevator and down a corridor. They went into a big board room. Present in the room were Seamus Brennan, Padraig Flynn, Brian Lenihan, Albert Reynolds and Bertie Ahern. Ray Burke was standing at the top of the table. Bertie Ahern was at the top left hand side of the table as you look up the room. It was all men at the table. At one stage Mary O'Rourke came in and went out again. Charlie Haughey came in. He was introduced to TG and said that he knew him. TG asked how he knew him and CJH said that he knew his people in Lislary. CJH said that he believed that TG was bringing a good investment to Dublin. He complimented TG. He then turned to the others and said "is he alright" or words to that effect. He then left. None of the other ministers except Brian Lenihan spoke to him. BL exchanged pleasantries.

TG can describe in detail where everybody in the room was sitting.

After the meeting a number of other things happened which are described in previous memos. However, at one stage he saw Albert Reynolds talking in an alcove to OOC. TG had decided to leave and saw this on his way out. OOC called him back and asked him where he was going. TG said that he was fed up

with him and his gangster friends. OOC said that neither he nor any unionist would put a foot on Quarryvale. This was the second time that OOC had said this to him. He said that TG said something about OOC using his friend Albert Reynolds. OOC said that AR would not be supporting TG anyway.

One of the Revenue Inspectors who raided TG's house after the tip off from Ireland was a man called Lyons. Some days after the raid Mr. Lyons knocked on TG's door. TG thought it was another raid. Lyons said that he was calling in a private capacity. TG invited him in. Mr. Lyons said that he regretted being part of what happened the other day and he apologised for it. Lyons told him that the raid was as a result of a tip off to the English Revenue from a high Government source in Ireland.

Lyons said that he was fed up doing other people's dirty work. He left the revenue shortly thereafter and TG does not know where he can be found. The number of the Revenue office in Bristol is 0454 611068. They may know where he is.

Susan Ryan is trying to get Machlins, Solicitors to look at TG's revenue file under the Freedom of Information Act. I said that I would telephone SR to get her to expedite this. He mentioned that SR had spoken to Richard Foreman. He did not think that she had received any documents from him.

TG referred to a letter which he had not previously sent to us. It was a letter written by OOC to him in 1989 asking for a 50% stake in Quarryvale in return for the Neilstown site. TG refused this request. He will FAX this letter over to me.

He also has no objection to our obtaining a copy of his 1989 diary from Susan Ryan. He has destroyed his 1988, 1990 and 1991 diaries.

Note of telephone conversation between Patrick Hanratty SC and Thomas Gilmartin on Thursday the 4th June 1999

I had two long telephone conversations to-day with TG.

TG said that he had sent the letter he referred to yesterday to Susan Ryan and had not kept a copy. [REDACTED]

142 He mentioned the difficulty which he had had in relation to the purchase of the corporation lands at Irishtown and the attempts by LL and GR to block him.

TG referred to the statement by Bertie Ahern to the Dail in January of this year. He said that BA had misled the Dail on 8 occasions during that speech. One of the things he said was that Joe Burke had met TG in relation to Batchelors Walk. TG said that JB had nothing to do with Batchelors walk. His involvement related to Quarryvale and the Corporation lands which TG was trying to purchase.

He said that there were two meetings of the planning committee within a week or so of each other for the purpose of ratifying the sale to him. It was not ratified at the first meeting. After that meeting he received a call from McCloone to tell him that he would have to do something because there were people trying to block him. This led TG to call Bertie Ahern. BA said that he would get Joe Burke to do something. JB called to TG. JB was a member of the committee. The proposal was approved at the second meeting of the Corporation. I said to TG that my recollection of the documentation was that there was no indication of any difficulty or delay in getting this approval.

After the first telephone call I checked the minutes of the meeting of the planning committee for May 1989. The closing date for tenders was the 19th of May 1989. The next meeting of the planning committee was the 26th of May at which the TG tender was approved. There does not appear to have been a meeting between the 19th and 26th of May at which the tender was not approved. I put this to TG during our second telephone conversation and he said that maybe it was not an official meeting but that there was definitely something going on which led McCloone to telephone him to warn him and which, in turn, led him to contact Bertie Ahern. He said that he had also been warned by two County Councillors, Paddy Hickey and James Murphy. He was introduced to these in Buswells hotel by Sean Gilbride. He was also warned at some stage by Tom Boland who was chairman of the county council in 1988/89. TG said that he had a number of meetings with him (but not, I gather, necessarily in May 1989).

TG mentioned the purchase of the Bruton lands. This site was a crucial part of the whole Quarryvale site. The original deal was a part exchange of the Convey stud and a part payment of cash, mostly payable in August 1990. As this deadline approached the bank were putting heavy pressure on TG to hand over control to OOC. They kept sending him heads of terms. TG was emphasising the

absolute necessity to close this deal on time at all costs because the site was so important. They did not come up with the cash and, eventually it was necessary to re-negotiate and pay nearly an extra million. At that stage TG did not care because he had already been "screwed." Under the original facility letter TG said that the bank had a charge over the contract of sale on the Bruton land and also over the Convey stud.

TG says that the bank themselves approached Bruton to see if they could buy the lands behind TG's back. However, Bruton refused to deal with anybody but TG. Roderick Downer of Jackson Stops & McCabe acted for Desmond Bruton. The deal was supposed to close in August 1990. It did not in fact close until September 1991. It cost 2.3 million instead of 1.5

TG referred to the question of tax designation. He said that he had heard from two different sources of an incident where tax designation files were taken from the Department of finance.

TG emphasised that he did not know any of this from his own knowledge but said that he had heard it from two sources. He said that these were independent sources. I asked TG if he was prepared to divulge the identity of these sources and he was not. I then asked him to inquire from these sources if they would speak to us on a confidential basis. He said that he would do this. I asked him if one of these sources was a labour politician. He immediately assumed that I was referring to Emmet Stagg's public statement on the matter and he confirmed that Emmet Stagg was not one of the persons from whom he had received the information. All he would say was that one of his sources was a "person in the media" and the other was not.

TG said that John Deane had two offices in Cork, one in Lavitt's Quay and the other in South Mall. In the basement of one of these offices there was a microfilm relating to OOC containing names amounts and dates. It was an "insurance" file. I asked him how he knew this and he declined to say. However later he mentioned that there was somebody in that organisation talking to Frank Connolly. He also mentioned that there was a former employee of Ambrose Kelly who was also talking. He used to be a trustee. (?)

TG telephoned this afternoon. He said that Paul Sheeran had recently reminded him of a meeting which he attended at which TG and Joe Burke were present. TG had forgotten about this meeting. It was the third meeting which TG had with Burke. It took place in Stephen's Green in June 1989. Sometime in July Paul Sheeran wrote a letter to JB saying he was pleased to meet him. They are both from Donegal. PS is to let TG have a copy of the letter and TG will send it to me.

MEMORANDUM

1st July, 1999

1. On Monday, 27th June, 1999, I received a telephone call from Tom Gilmartin who informed me that CAB were actively investigating matters arising from the information they obtained from George Redmond and had interviewed Brendan Fastridge and a businessman. He said that Fastridge was trying to get a newspaper to buy his story but was not telling the full story to CAB.
2. He said that he had had various journalists on to him during the week, who were looking for information in relation to a story Frank Connolly was alleged to have. He said that the Sunday Business Post, The Independent and Magill had all been in contact with him and at first, he was told that Gerry Brady had made an admission to CAB which confirmed the story about the car to Lawlor but subsequently they said that that story was untrue i.e. about Brady and that it was Fastridge who had spoken to the newspapers.
3. Gilmartin said that he had received a writ from Ambrose Kelly arising out of what Gilmartin was alleged to have said about Tim Collins and his relationship with Ambrose Kelly. This was in the context of the rezoning of lands in South County Dublin. He said that Tim Collins was Bertie's mate and that although the Sunday Independent and The Sunday Business Post had published the stories, neither newspaper had been sued.
4. He said that it was a coincidence that on the same dates that he received a statement of claim from Ambrose Kelly, he received proceedings from Dublin Corporation seeking £400,000 which the Corporation claimed were due to the Corporation from Gilmartin.

5. He said that John J. Coffey & Company were acting for Ambrose Kelly and that the number of the proceedings is 99 No. 3698P. He said that James Salafia, S.C. and Martin Hayden, B.L. have signed the pleadings in which Kelly seeks damages for defamation and malicious falsehood.
6. He said that Dadley & Company are now back on board. He said that they had been dealing with Ciaran Murray in connection with a project in the Ballymun area and that they had tried to set Dadley up and advised him to stay out of the Tribunal. He said that Dadley is now prepared to come on board and to talk to Gilmartin's solicitor. His (Gilmartin) understanding was that a land and/or deal was offered to Pillar and Arlington as part of a major development in Dublin although Ciaran Murray's company/project did not own the lands in question.
7. He went on to refer to the man he describes as "the Cuckoo" and said that there was £1m. missing from Barkhill.
8. He said that Liam Lawlor is top of the CAB list and that the challenge to the Tribunal by Lawlor is because Lawlor does not know what the Tribunal has found out and what information the Tribunal may have obtained from George Redmond. The challenge is in order to find out what information we have other than the information from Gilmartin. He said that their biggest worry was about what had been uncovered and said that there was still £50,000 that had to be found.

MEMORANDUM

12th July, 1999Re: Meeting with Thomas Gilmartin on Thursday 8th July, 1999*Venue: Thistle Hotel, Luton*PRESENT: Susan Ryan, Terry Leggett of Eugene F. Collins, Solicitors, Thomas Gilmartin and Patrick Hanratty, S.C.

The meeting lasted from 1 p.m. until 5.30 p.m. The meeting was arranged at my request to enable me to obtain further information from Mr. Gilmartin in relation to particular events and to, as far as possible, identify dates and to clarify the sequence of certain events in the absence of a specific date.

Mr. Gilmartin informed me that the Arlington meeting at which Mr. Lawlor arrived, took place in May, 1988. It was shortly after his meeting with Mr. Pastnidge and Mr. Lawlor in Dublin which was in May, 1988.

Mr. Gilmartin said that he believed that he met Mr. Owen O'Callaghan for the first time on the 7th December, 1988. He believed that he may have seen him on a few occasions previously in Allied Irish Banks. These would have been meetings which he attended in connection with Arlington business.

B

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

Mr. Gilmartin then mentioned a meeting which took place in the Trusthouse Forte Hotel in Dublin Airport. He believed that this meeting took place in November, 1998. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the project with Taggarts. Present at the meeting were Tom Gilmartin, John McCammin, a Mr. McNeill (architect) and a Mr. Ian Bond. The meeting was "gate crashed" by Mr. Liam Lawlor. Mr. Gilmartin believes that Mr. Lawlor may have known that he was coming to Dublin. He telephoned Thomas (Mr. Gilmartin's son) and he was told that Mr. Gilmartin was at this meeting.

Mr. Lawlor arrived and attended the meeting as if he was invited. He said that Mr. Gilmartin would have to deal with Owen O'Callaghan because the Neilstown site had the zoning. This was the first time that Tom Gilmartin had heard about Owen O'Callaghan. Mr. Gilmartin said that he immediately realised the significance of this and the error that he had made in not getting some kind of an agreement in relation to the Neilstown site. Mr. Gilmartin said that he had previously been shown the Neilstown site by Mr. McCloone and Mr. Morrissey. Originally, they brought him out to see the Tallaght site. However, they told him that there was some deal with Phil Monaghan although Mr. Monaghan appeared to be slow in putting together a development. Mr. Gilmartin therefore said that he was not interested in a site in which somebody else had a deal.

Then, Mr. McCloone and Mr. Morrissey showed him the Clondalkin site. Mr. McCloone and Mr. Morrissey then showed him around the Neilstown site which was of interest to him. Richard Foreman was with him. He remembers it well because when they were in some distance into the site, Mr. McCloone ran back to change the location of his car. When Mr. Gilmartin asked him why he had done this, Mr. McCloone said that it would be unsafe to leave your car unattended in a place where it could not be seen. Mr. Gilmartin thought that it was ironic that the Council officials were trying to interest them in a site which was situated in a location where it was unsafe to leave your car. The site was about 120 acres and it took them most of the day to look at it. This was the Neilstown site. The portion that O'Callaghan ultimately from Gubay only consisted of 33 acres.

Mr. Gilmartin said that he would have walked the site in August/September, 1987. Mr. Gubay did not have a contract at this time. When he did enter into a contract with the Corporation, he paid a deposit of £300,000 but the contract into which he entered was a very loose contract and enabled Mr. Gubay to get out on a number of possible grounds. Mr. Gilmartin did not regard this as a binding contract.

Mr. Gilmartin said that he found out after the Trusthouse Forte meeting that Owen O'Callaghan became involved in Clondalkin about a week before that meeting. That would have made it some time in November, 1988. Mr. Gilmartin heard that Mr. O'Callaghan flew over to the Isle of Man some time in later November, 1988 or early December, 1988 to see Mr. Gubay, who lived in the Isle of Man. The deal which Mr. O'Callaghan did with Mr. Gubay was to repay him his deposit of £300,000 together with a "profit" of £500,000.

Merrygrove Estates Limited, the company which Mr. Gubay used for this contract, was incorporated in March, 1988. Mr. O'Callaghan appears to have taken over the contract by taking over this company.

We then turned to discuss the dates of Mr. Gilmartin's meetings with Bertie Ahern. I drew his attention to the fact that we had two dates, 10th October, 1988 and the 13th October, 1988 which had been extrapolated from Mr. Ahern's Dail statement on the 27th January, 1999. In that statement, Mr. Ahern said that he met Mr. Gilmartin on the 10th October, 1988 in his office over Fagan's pub in Drumcondra and that Tim Collins was present. Mr. Ahern said that the Arlington name was recorded in his diary.

Mr. Gilmartin says that he never met Bertie Ahern within three days of each other. It seems that Mr. Bertie Ahern's date of the 13th October, 1988 is incorrect. In fact, it seems that he may have the wrong year because Tom Gilmartin says that his first meeting with Bertie Ahern was not long before the stock market crash on Black Monday in November, 1987. Consequently, it could have been that his first meeting with Bertie Ahern was on the 13th October, 1987. This first meeting, according to Mr. Gilmartin, took place in Mr. Bertie Ahern's office in Mespil Road in Dublin (this is the old Department of Labour building which used to be the venue for unfair dismissal claims).

Mr. Gilmartin says that he remembers the event well. He arrived in this big, open, cold lobby of a very dreary building. He had a conversation with the porter who was a former member of the Garda Siochana. He went up to Bertie Ahern's office which he said was very stark and had a desk and not much else in it.

Mr. Gilmartin's next meeting with Bertie Ahern was on the 10th October, 1988 in Pagan's pub as stated by Bertie Ahern. However, Tom Gilmartin is sceptical of the claim that the person present was Tim Collins. The man who was present had a ruddy complexion and bushy hair. Mr. Gilmartin believes that it was some union man and not Tim Collins who was present. The next meeting he had with Bertie Ahern was on the 28th September, 1989. This was a busy day for Mr. Gilmartin. At 9 a.m. that morning, he had a meeting in Dublin with Raymond Mould, Ted Dadley, Andrew McFarland and Barry Boland. This meeting took place at 25, St. Stephen's Green at 9 a.m. Mr. Mould and Mr. Dadley had sore heads because they were out late the previous evening. After their meeting in St. Stephen's Green, they walked down Kildare Street to the Department of Industry and Commerce. There, they met Padraig Flynn, Seamus Brennan, Jim Farrelly and some other person. The discussion at that meeting related to CIE.

At 3 p.m. that day, Mr. Raymond Mould and Mr. McFarland went back to London. Mr. Mould purchased a mirror in James Adams of St. Stephen's Green before he returned to London. Having purchased the mirror, he came to the offices in St. Stephen's Green and then departed.

Mr. Gilmartin recalls that he was supposed to meet Brian Lemhan that day but is not absolutely clear whether he did or not.

After the departure of Raymond Mould and Mr. McFarland, Mr. Gilmartin and Mr. Dadley travelled out to meet Bertie Ahern in his office over Pagan's pub in Drumcondra. There was only the three of them there on that occasion.

Mr. Gilmartin then discussed his meetings with the bank in relation to Quarryvale. He says that literally every time he had a meeting in the bank relating to Quarryvale, Owen O'Callaghan and John Deane were present in the building. They had open-plan offices and frequently Mr. O'Callaghan and Mr. Deane would be in an adjoining "partitioned" office. Frequently, Mr. Jim Donagh would go out from his meeting with Mr. Gilmartin to have a discussion with Messrs. O'Callaghan and Deane.

Mr. Gilmartin said that he believes that his meeting with Brian Perry of the Bank of Nova Scotia in Dublin was on the 18th January, 1989. Prior to that, he had had a meeting with personnel from the Bank of Nova Scotia in London. He spoke to executors of the bank including one from Canada. They were interested in his proposal and arranged a meeting with Mr. Perry.

When Mr. Gilmartin attended for this meeting for Mr. Perry, probably on the 18th January, 1989, Mr. Perry came to meet them in the lobby. They did not go to his office. Mr. Perry told them of his meeting the previous day with Ansbacher attended by Mr. Moloney and Phil Monaghan. Mr. Gilmartin showed his brochure to Mr. Perry and Mr. Perry laughed. Mr. Perry said that he would never complete this development and that Owen O'Callaghan had done it again and that Tom Gilmartin was in for a rough ride.

I asked Mr. Gilmartin what he thought Mr. Perry meant when he said that Owen O'Callaghan had done it again. Mr. Gilmartin said that Mr. O'Callaghan had done the same thing before to somebody else in Limerick. He said that the longstanding owners of lands in Limerick could not get planning permission for retail from Limerick Corporation. They were in some financial difficulty and Owen O'Callaghan sent in the bank to put the squeeze on the owners. The bank was Allied Irish Banks. The owner in question found that he had a "cuckoo in the nest". O'Callaghan ended up running the whole deal and the owner turned into a minor partner.

Mr. Gilmartin said that the same thing happened to [REDACTED] in Kilkenny. Mr. Gilmartin said that Owen O'Callaghan was around there before Carney knew he was in trouble with the bank. The bank was Allied Irish Banks and David McGrath was involved. Mr. Gilmartin said that the same thing also happened in relation to the Golden Island development in Athlone.

Mr. Gilmartin said that there were two incidents when tax designation files went missing. One was where files went missing from the Department of the Environment. These files were brought to the Mont Clare Hotel.

He said that the Department of Finance files which went missing were brought to the Westbury Hotel. Bertie Ahern was at both meetings.

When I mentioned that Celtic Nominees was one of the companies (with Buckfast Limited) granting the option to O'Callaghan on the Neilstown lands in January, 1989, Tom Gilmartin said that he "smelt a rat" and said that he feels that he was screwed here again. He seemed to be implying some kind of a connection between this and O'Callaghan.

We then discussed the date of the abortive meeting in George Redmond's offices in O'Connell Street which Mr. Gilmartin had previously told us was on the 23rd February, 1989. There was some suggestion that it may have been on the 2nd February, 1989. Susan Ryan agreed that somebody must know the actual date of this meeting. It was attended by John O'Higgins of Ovo Arup in Dublin and also representatives from Taggart. It was also attended by Richard Porenan and John

McCammin. Richard Foreman arranged for Ian Fowler and Malcolm MacNoyce to go to this meeting. Some of these people are bound to have a note of when the meeting was scheduled for.

Mr. Gilmartin says that after Mr. Redmond's antics, Mr. Sean Haughey rescheduled the abortive morning meeting for 2 p.m. When they went in at 2 p.m., Sean Haughey asked George Redmond "What the fuck is going on.". George Redmond said "Ask your brother." Sean Haughey said "I am not my brother's keeper.". Mr. Gilmartin said that the meeting which he had with Sean Haughey (which he believes was on the 23rd February, 1989 when he made his complaints to Mr. Haughey; were in Exchange Buildings in Dublin. Apparently, this was a County Council office at the time.

I then asked Mr. Gilmartin if he could assist me with the date of the meeting in George Redmond's offices in O'Connell Street when, he says, Mr. Lawlor asked Mr. Gilmartin to pay £100,000 each to Mr. Lawlor and to Mr. Redmond. Mr. Gilmartin says that it was in May/June 1988. In the course of that meeting, Liam Lawlor said that it would cost Mr. Gilmartin £100,000 for each of them. At that meeting, George Redmond produced a coloured drawings which indicated the ownership of all the lands in Quarryvale. The bank got this drawing and gave it to O'Callaghan. At the time when Liam Lawlor asked for £100,000 for himself and George Redmond, George Redmond was at the other end of the room with a phone to his ear. Tom Gilmartin thinks that he was talking to nobody but pretending to be pre-occupied on the phone.

I asked Mr. Gilmartin about the date of the meeting in May, 1989 when he gave a cheque for £50,000 to Pdraig Flynn. Mr. Gilmartin reiterated that this was intended for Fianna Fail and not for Pdraig Flynn personally. Mr. Gilmartin said that he thought that the meeting at which the cheque was given was the 10th May, 1989. This meeting was at 7 p.m. He said that the date of the meeting was the date he wrote on the cheque. [Unfortunately, the date is illegible on the microfiche printout of the cheque which we have. Perhaps AIF might be in a position to furnish a better copy.]

Mr. Gilmartin said that the reason that he decided to make his donation to Fianna Fail through Pdraig Flynn was that he knew that Pdraig Flynn and Bertie Ahern were the fundraisers for Fianna Fail. He cannot actually remember whether he knew that Padraig Flynn was a treasurer at the time but he certainly does remember that he was collecting money on behalf of the Party. Mr. Flynn was also the one that he was "panned off with" and, at that time, he was the person in Fianna Fail with whom he had most dealings. Consequently, Mr. Gilmartin decided to make his Fianna Fail donation through Mr. Flynn.

We then turned to discuss the date of Mr. Gilmartin's meetings with Mr. Joe Burke. Mr. Gilmartin says that he had previously overlooked the fact that he had had a third meeting with Mr. Burke. There were three meetings in total. The first meeting came about after Mr. Gilmartin had been told by Paddy Morrissey and Martin McCloone that George Redmond and Liam Lawlor were doing everything in their power to block his purchase. Mr. Gilmartin already knew that George Redmond had tipped off Green Properties and that it was as a result of this that the matter was put out to tender. Martin McCloone asked Mr. Gilmartin did he know anybody and strongly suggested that if he did, he'd better do something or his tender might be defeated. Tom Gilmartin said that Paddy Morrissey was sick and tired of Lawlor and Redmond's antics.

Mr. Gilmartin pointed out that the Corporation had previously agreed £30,000 per acre but they put it up to £40,000 per acre when they heard that he (Gilmartin) had paid Bruton £40,000 per acre. Mr. Gilmartin says that they nearly snapped his hand off.

Mr. Gilmartin believes that it was probably between the Planning and Development Committee meeting on the 26th May (which decided to recommend his tender) and the Council meeting on the 12th June, 1989 (at which the tender was agreed) that Redmond and Lawlor attempted to interfere. When Mr. Gilmartin was tipped off by McCloone and Morrissey, he telephoned Bertie Ahern who said that he would send somebody down to see him. He sent down Joe Burke. This was Mr. Gilmartin's first meeting with Joe Burke. The second meeting with Joe Burke was the occasion when Mr. Burke drove Mr. Gilmartin to the airport in a pick-up truck, stopping at two publichouses on the way looking for Bertie Ahern. This was after the Gilmartin tender had been approved on the 12th June, 1989. The third meeting with Mr. Burke which was also attended by Mr. Paul Sheerin, occurred later in June, 1989. Mr. Gilmartin said that all three meetings with Mr. Burke occurred within the space of one month.

Mr. Gilmartin said that Paddy Morrissey was saying to him that somebody had to do something about George Redmond.

I then asked Mr. Gilmartin to explain the circumstances surrounding the agreement of the 31st January, 1989 whereby he agreed to buy over the Neilstown contract for £3.5m. from Owen O'Callaghan. Mr. Gilmartin explained that the £800,000 which he then paid to O'Callaghan (£300,000 which O'Callaghan had paid to Gubay together with the additional £500,000 "profit") was paid out of his own funds. He did have a £1m. loan with Bank of Ireland at that time but it did not come out of this money.

Mr. Gilmartin said that the actual deal which was agreed was that he would pay £800,000 on signing, £1.3m. one year later and £1.3m. upon the receipt of planning permission.

The contract, which was drawn up by John Deane, did not accurately reflect what was agreed and, through the negligence of Seamus Maguire, the contract which Mr. Gilmartin actually signed, provided that £1.35m. should be paid in October, 1989 and a further £1.35m. on the 31st January, 1990. This was absolutely not what was agreed but it did put Tom Gilmartin in a very invidious position. The total of all these sums is £3.5m. which is the original £3m. which Gubay had agreed with the Corporation and the £500,000 "profit".

Mr. Gilmartin then discussed the events of 1990. He said that after he obtained the facility from Allied Irish Banks in February, 1990, they had him "over a barrel". He would have had no difficulty whatsoever in paying off this loan once the zoning came through because once he obtained zoning, the cash would start to flow from institutional investors. However, Mr. Gilmartin believes that O'Callaghan and the bank orchestrated a situation whereby the zoning motions in respect of Quarryvale were stalled throughout 1990. In this way, Mr. Gilmartin would be unable to obtain finance, would default of his obligations under the terms of his loan with AIB thereby giving them leverage to force Mr. Gilmartin to hand over equity to O'Callaghan. This is what in fact happened. Mr. Gilmartin says that O'Callaghan successfully orchestrated the stalling of the zoning of Quarryvale in 1990.

It should be noted that the facility given to Mr. Gilmartin in February, 1990 made no requirement for the payment of the £1.35m. then due to Mr. O'Callaghan. This was not an oversight by the bank because there is a reference to the option agreement in the facility letter. This is a very surprising omission given that failure to pay this particular sum by Mr. Gilmartin could result in his losing control over having the zoning switched from Neilstown to Quarryvale. This could be a significant detriment to the bank's security, the principal item of which was security over the Quarryvale lands themselves, the value of which depended hugely on whether they were rezoned or not. The facility letter refers specifically to the various items for which the finance is being provided and there is no reference in it at all to the £1.35m. which was due to O'Callaghan. The only possible explanation for this is that they had some kind of "comfort" or arrangement with O'Callaghan which satisfied them that "in appropriate circumstances, the zoning would be switched". Mr. Gilmartin said that the bank started putting pressure on him in June, 1990 saying that he was going to have to repay the loan by August, 1990 as originally arranged. They knew full well that he did not have the where-with-all to do this without zoning. The first zoning relating to Quarryvale was due to have been on the 9th February, 1991 but was adjourned to the 15th February, 1991. Prior to that, the bank had been putting severe pressure on Tom Gilmartin to bring in a partner who was experienced in development in Ireland (obviously O'Callaghan). They prepared heads of agreement which were dated 14th December, 1990. Susan Ryan showed me a copy of this document which bore on it the imprint of a date of the 13th February, 1990. I suspect this is a fax record of the date the document was sent by fax to Tom Gilmartin.

The Council meeting at which the proposal to rezone Quarryvale was to be first put was dated 15th February, 1990. Prior to that, Mr. Gilmartin had received a threatening letter from the bank dated the 7th February, 1991. He received an even more threatening letter, he believes dated 13th February, 1991 although this letter was subsequently withdrawn. [REDACTED]

The evening of the 15th February, 1991 was the night of the three way link-up between O'Callaghan, the councillors and Tom Gilmartin. It was the "night of the long knives". Mr. Gilmartin says that Owen O'Callaghan was orchestrating the councillors in Dublin County Council to put pressure on Mr. Gilmartin to sign the heads of agreement. Mr. O'Callaghan was in the Bankcentre in Ballsbridge with a number of bank personnel. Mr. Gilmartin was in Luton. Mr. Gilmartin believes that the Council meeting started at around 7 p.m. During the course of this evening, Mr. Gilmartin received telephone calls from Councillors Colm McGrath and Gilbride, both of whom told him that he would have to reach agreement with O'Callaghan and the bank before they would propose the motion. Mr. Gilmartin considers that this was an outrageous attempt by both of them to force his hand to sign an agreement involving a transfer of equity to O'Callaghan. He said that this was a direct result of O'Callaghan having both of these councillors "vote in his pocket".

Mr. Gilmartin says that the motion was supposed to have been put in early. Councillors Gilbride and McGrath were threatening him by saying that if he did not act quickly, the motion would not be reached. Mr. McGrath said that he would not put the motion until Mr. Gilmartin signed the agreement. Mr. McGrath telephoned him and said to Mr. Gilmartin "What the fuck am I supposed to do.". Mr. Gilmartin asked them what was the problem. Mr. Gilbride asked had he sorted out the problem with O'Callaghan and the bank. He said that they were blocking it. Mr. Gilmartin says that he told Mr. McGrath that he was a public official and what had either O'Callaghan or the bank got to do with zoning on this site. Mr. McGrath said that he could not put in the motion until he (Mr. Gilmartin) sorted them out. He got a similar line from Councillor Gilbride. Mr. Gilmartin says that the bank were on to him that evening putting pressure on him: [REDACTED] A

Mr. Gilmartin said that as a result of all of this pressure, he decided to sign the agreement and he did so and sent the same by fax to Allied Irish Banks, i.e. the signed agreement dated the 14th December, 1990 has a fax date of the 13th January, 1991 and was actually signed by Tom Gilmartin on the 15th January, 1991 under pressure. following day, Mr. Gilmartin informed the bank that he was repudiating that agreement, that he had no legal advice.

[REDACTED] We briefly discussed the further agreement which Mr. Gilmartin signed on the 31st May, 1991 in which 44.49% of Barkhill Limited was transferred to O'Callaghan and in which Allied Irish Banks themselves took 22.25% equity in the company. Mr. Gilmartin pointed out that this agreement was not in fact signed until September. It was signed by Seamus Maguire under his power of attorney for Vera, Mr. Gilmartin's wife. Mr. Gilmartin did not get the power of attorney until September, 1991. He thinks that the agreement may have been back-dated to the 31st May, 1991 but he is not sure if this is so and if it is so, he is not sure why. We will have to discuss this again.

TG then referred to the £150,000 paid by OO'C to Albert Reynolds in Cork in 1994. This was a few days before St. Patrick's day. TG said that this was not, as alleged by AR the result of a fund raising dinner. There was a dinner but it was in OO'C's house and it was not a fund raising dinner. AR stayed in OO'C's house that night. At 3 am in an upstairs bedroom OO'C handed AR £150,000 in cash. TG said that this was a payment for tax designation in Athlone. TG said that Bertie Ahern got a cut out of this money. AR was picked up by helicopter the following day. I asked TG if his informant would be prepared to talk to the Tribunal. TG said that people were wary of the Tribunal and he was not prepared to disclose his name to me. He told me previously that his informant does not want to get involved.

TG then referred to the appointment of ? Fitzgerald as manager of one of the Dublin Local Authorities. OO'C had the casting vote ? of two already fixed. He had CJH in his pocket. He said that Hugh Coveny's demise was brought about indirectly by OO'C. He said that OO'C had more power than people realised. The original plan for the Cork tunnel was altered and re-routed so that it came out on land owned by OO'C. CJH was behind this change. He says that we can easily verify this. OO'C had complete control of Cork. The other developers there did not get a look in.

TG said that the £80k paid to Shefran was paid by OO'C personally and that he subsequently got reimbursed by Barkhill. He said that Eddie Kay told him that AIB enquired from Government sources whether TG would get zoning for Quarryvale. They were told that TG would never get zoning. This was in 1990.

He also referred to the delays in the development plan. He says that these were orchestrated by OO'C with the collusion of Councillors to whom he paid money including Colm McGrath. OO'C wanted to get into QV at all costs. He knew that if TG got zoning the value of the land would rise and TG would then have no difficulty in raising further finance and OO'C would have missed it. However if he could delay the zoning until after the default date on the loan he would be in business with the help of the bank.

TG said that George Redmond received substantial payments from John Corcoran of Green Property Company in 1990/91 in connection with the Blanchardstown site. In return GR procured an alteration of the line of the Navan Road to make it run close to the Blanchardstown site and secondly provided a "hammerhead" spur with a roundabout to give access from the Navan Road to the site. This spur was not paid for by Green. From the Brady's garage roundabout the road was bent south and the spur was taken south to the Blanchardstown site on the Blanchardstown side of Mulhuddart. GR also tipped off Corcoran that TG was buying the Irishtown site.

I asked TG about the fact that it appeared that OO'C had applied for and obtained planning permission on the Neilstown site. TG said that he got this with "line" drawings. I asked him would he not have had to submit full drawings. TG said that he thinks that we will find that this was an outline permission. OO'C never had the slightest intention of building a shopping centre there. Nobody in their right mind would do so. It is, he says, obvious to any developer that it would not be a feasible prospect because of the cost of providing road access.

TG said that there was a Councillor who we should look at called [REDACTED]. He works [REDACTED] and is in the pocket of Ambrose Kelly.

Going back to my discussion with TG, he said that he had received information to the effect that the Shefran payments were in fact reimbursements to O'C from the Barkhill account for payments to senior politicians which OOC had already made. OOC had paid around £150,000 to senior politicians in 1989 and, in total, had paid £250,000 to senior politicians in connection with Quarryvale. In 1989 £50,000 was paid to Ray McSharry and £50,000 to Bertie Ahern. Bertie Ahern also got another £30,000 subsequently.

I asked where he got this information and whether the person providing it would be prepared to speak to the Tribunal. He said that the information came to him indirectly through an intermediary and that the person providing the information was afraid to come forward. However, he said that he would make efforts to have this person persuaded to come forward. I asked him whether and why he considered this person to be a reliable source and he said that he was 90% certain that he was reliable. I asked whether his knowledge of the source, such as it was, was sufficient to enable him to make this judgement he said that the source had previously been a partner with OOC in a development in Cork.

I asked him whether the information about the 1989 payments came from Frank Connolly (the O'Brien matter) and he said that his was a different source to Connolly's. I asked him how he knew this and he said that he was certain that his source would never talk to a journalist "in a million years". I did, however, get the impression that TG is aware of at least the broad outline of FC's story.

TG said that his source was the source of the information that OOC keeps a shotgun in the boot of his car. It was the same source that provided the information that

TG then said that in the 80s and 90s the fashionable place for "hot" money was Macau (sic) in the Dutch Antilles. The Cayman Islands became unfashionable because the American Government giving the FBI powers, in certain circumstances, to get access to Cayman accounts. This was related to drug trafficking. Lichtenstein fell out of favour because there was a strong republican movement and because it was thought that this might undermine the power of the prince and thus render the banking system more "open". He himself was told this by Deloitte & Touche and was given documents in the late 80s setting out an elaborate tax scheme involving the Dutch Antilles. He said that a lot of Irish "hot" money went there around that time and that if the Moriarty Tribunal were not looking there for some at least of the Ansbacker money they were looking in the wrong place.

TG mentioned the time he was told by a Mr. Palmer in January 89 when he told him that Mr. Haughey thought he should bring the right people on board. He suggested Dr. McCarthy and Ambrose Kelly. He went to see TG also mentioned his meeting in the Bank of Nova Scotia in Dublin with Brian Perry. He says that he was accompanied to this meeting by either Brian Laxton or Roy Harris of Lambert Smith Hampton and not Richard Foreman as he originally thought.

MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION BETWEEN PATRICK HANRATTY, S.C. AND TOM GILMARTIN ON THURSDAY THE 1ST DECEMBER, 1999

From: Patrick Hanratty SC

180 [REDACTED] C
Date: 3rd December 1999

Tom Gilmartin telephoned this morning. He referred to the meeting at Finnstown House to which Liam Lawlor turned up. This meeting was in June 1991. The meeting was with two investors who were interested in investing in QV. One of them flew in from Heathrow and another from Luton. The one coming from Luton travelled with Richard Foreman of Lambert Smith Hampton who also attended the meeting. TG had them collected by limousine (Neville Breen 480678). They were brought to meet with TG in the Shelbourne hotel where they were shown the brochure and plans. They then all travelled together in the limousine to walk the site. When they had done so TG thought that they were quite impressed. As it was coming up to lunchtime Richard Foreman asked TG if there was anywhere decent in the locality to have lunch. They did not want to go into town for lunch because they decided to walk the site again after lunch.

TG suggested Finnstown House which he had heard about. They went to Finnstown House and had a couple of pre lunch drinks. At about 12.30 TG decided to telephone Allied Irish Banks to re-schedule a meeting which he had previously arranged with Michael O'Farrell of AIB at 2.00 pm. He wanted either to put the meeting back to 3.30 or postpone it until another day. He rang from a public telephone in Finnstown House and spoke to Mary Basquille. He mentioned that he was meeting prospective investors and that they were about to have lunch and that he would be unable to make the meeting at 2.00 pm. She asked if they were going somewhere nice for lunch and he told her that they were in Finnstown House. MB agreed to put the meeting back until 3.30.

After the call TG re-joined the party and they went into the restaurant. They were given a table for four and they all ordered one course. Just after their lunch was served, at around 12.50 Liam Lawlor came in. He was sweating. Without being invited to join them he pulled over a chair from another table and sat down. He arrived within about twenty minutes of the telephone call to the bank. He had not previously been told of the meeting. He could not have been because it was only by chance that they went to Finnstown House and it was not pre-booked.

When he sat down he said that he was a representative of the Government and he was delighted to see that they were interested in this area because this was "mad dog" country, real "bandit" territory. TG took this to be an allusion to South Armagh. TG said this was an obvious attempt by LL to scare off the investors. During the lunch, to the dismay of TG and Richard Foreman LL, made several references to the problems of the area and of the difficulties which they had in getting people to invest in the area. After the lunch, LL left abruptly. Out of the earshot of the investors Richard Foreman said to TG "somebody should do something about that fucker." He does not normally use that kind of language. He was livid with rage at what had happened. The investors said that they did not require to re-visit the site and asked to be driven to the airport.

TG thinks that Mary Basquille told Michael O'Farrell what she had been told by him on the telephone. TG believes that MO'F telephoned Owen O'Callaghan and that he telephoned LL.

TG said that LL had received £50,000 from OO'C in connection with Quarryvale. There was a meeting in the offices of Frank Dunlop in Mount Street towards the end of 1991 when Lawlor demanded £100,000 from Dunlop. There was a big row. OO'C was in the next room when it was going on. Dunlop gave him a payment which brought the total he received from OO'C to £50,000. Colm McGrath complained about LL getting more than him even though he was the one who proposed the motions.

MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION BETWEEN PATRICK HANRATTY, S.C. AND TOM GILMARTIN ON WEDNESDAY THE 8TH DECEMBER, 1999

From: Patrick Hanratty SC

181 [REDACTED] C

Date: 9th December 1999

Tom Gilmartin telephoned yesterday afternoon.

He said that Tom Boland and others said that the re-zoning of the Quarryvale site was never in doubt. Owen O'Callaghan was always confident that he would get it through.

182 [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] He said that he was certain that O'C had no concern.

183 [REDACTED]

I asked him about the capping motion, also in December 1992. The reason is that what happened during the meeting of the 17th of December 1992 was that a motion was brought (probably at the behest of Green Property Company) to reverse the resolution of the 16th of May 1991 to re-zone Quarryvale from industrial to retail. The December motion to reverse the May 91 decision was defeated. However, after this had been achieved a separate motion to cap the size of the retail area at 250,000 was proposed by Anne Devitt and Colm McGrath (both believed to have been working with or for OO'C-McGrath is known to have received £30,000 in cash from OO'C). The question is why did O'C cap his own development when he did not appear to need to.

TG said that he did it with a view to ultimately buying out TG's remaining share. The capping obviously kept the value down and it made no sense for him at that stage to unnecessarily increase the value of the company if he intended ultimately to buy the

remaining equity. He knew that the capping was illegal and that he could, in any event have it removed in due course when it suited his purpose. It is TG's belief that the bank were privy to the capping and the reason for it. TG says that O'C has in fact already had the capping removed.

TG also said that there was an objection to the Quarryvale planning application both at planning stage and at an Board Pleanala stage. He says that if we look closely at this we will find that the objection is traceable back to O'Callaghan himself and Ambrose Kelly. I asked why he would object to his own development TG said that the reason was explained to him but he cannot recall the detail of it. However he is absolutely clear that the objection came from OO'C.

I asked TG again about what he had told me about the payment of a total of £50,000 to Liam Lawlor and the row which happened in Frank Dunlop's office. I pointed out that LL lost his seat in the June 1991 election and queried whether any payment would have been made to him after that. TG said that it certainly would. LL was a man of considerable influence and who had to be kept onside. TG said that it was OO'C that told him about the Dunlop office incident.

[REDACTED] TG said that he believed that the bigger payments were made by O'C. What FD did was to provide invoices to O'C which enabled him to get refunded from Barkhill. FD did distribute a lot of smaller payments, maybe up to £5,000 but the bigger payments came from O'C/Riga.

MEMORANDUM OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION BETWEEN PATRICK HANRATTY, S.C. AND TOM GILMARTIN ON FRIDAY THE 14TH JANUARY, 2000

STRICTLY PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL

From: Patrick Hanratty SC

185

[REDACTED] C
Date: 17TH JANUARY 2000

Tom Gilmartin telephoned on Friday. He said that he had information about the Golden Island development in Athlone.

The development was being carried out by a man called Diskin who is now dead. He got into trouble with the bank. TG is not sure which bank but he thinks it was AIB. They put pressure on Diskin to enter into partnership in his development with Owen O'Callaghan. There was also a developer called Kieran who had some development in Limerick and he also got into trouble with the bank and in his case also the bank inserted Owen O'Callaghan.

There was a problem getting either planning permission or zoning for the Golden Island development. TG thinks that it was zoning. There were four councillors who were very supportive of the project but 5 very much against including a Senator called Fallon and a Councillor Molloy. Eventually they persuaded Molloy to change his mind and support the project.

There was a meeting in the Prince of Wales hotel in Athlone to see what could be done about the vote. This was attended by Mr. Diskin, Owen O'Callaghan, John Deane, the man called Kieran from Limerick, Frank Dunlop, Ambrose Kelly and Tim Collins.

They decided to send a deputation to Mary O'Rourke. Owen O'Callaghan would not go himself and asked Frank Dunlop if he would go. He said "no fucking way-she knows me and will only fuck me out of it".

The delegation which in fact went to see Mary O'Rourke was Diskin and Tim Collins. They went to see her in her home. She would not entertain them and threatened to call the gardai if they did not leave.

TG then made reference to an incident which took place

TG then referred to the week before the Government fell in 1994. This was the occasion when a number of tax designations were given the night before the Government fell over the Harry Whelehan affair. Bertie Ahern admitted that there had been a meeting between himself and Owen O'Callaghan the previous evening or the evening before that. TG said that he had heard that Bertie was now going to change his story and say that he got mixed up and that the person who he met for dinner was TG mentioned that at one stage there was a proposal that he move the shopping centre portion of his development to a site across the Fonthill Road owned by the Corporation. The Council had concerns about road access to the original site. Dublin Corporation owned this site. TG said that he would be willing to take this site and "flip" the shopping centre portion over to that site. The Corporation actually decided to go with this and Martin McCloone wrote a letter on the 25th of September 1990 opening negotiations. TG also got permission from the Co. Co. to include this site in his drawings and in his brochure and the brochure shows the shopping centre on this site.

He pointed out that this was at a time when the local authorities and the IDA were under instructions from the Government to reduce their land holdings. However, when it became known that TG was incorporating the DCC site across the Fonthill Road O'Callaghan got Albert Reynolds to send the IDA in to DCC to say that they wanted the site. The IDA went in to Derek Brady and said that they wanted the land. They said that they were going to stop TG. Paddy Morrissey ran for cover and the Corporation withdrew. McCloone rang TG to tell TG what had happened and TG subsequently received a letter from the Corporation notifying him that they were not proceeding with the sale. This effectively scuttled this proposal and left TG with his original road access problems as well as the embarrassment of his plans not being accurate.

The IDA never actually took the site and after O'Callaghan took control they quietly faded away.

TG says that the reason that O'Callaghan did this was to discredit and undermine him because his plans and brochure incorporated this site.

Derek Brady was the runner up in the contest for Manager of South Dublin County Council (referred to by TG as "Feely's job"). He was regarded as the obvious successor and everybody assumed that he would get the job. However, O'Callaghan told TG a year prior to the appointment that Brady would never get the job. He said that it had to be decided by 5 county managers and that 2 were "onside". In the event Fitzgerald got the job on the casting vote of the Cork County Manager.

TG said that Claran O'Malley was with him on one of the occasions when he met Fintan Gunne. It might have been the occasion when FG said that he was going nowhere without Ambrose Kelly. Every time he met Gunne Ambrose Kelly was hanging around. Gunne said that AK had the ear of Charlie Haughey and Bord Pleenala. TG said that he responded by saying "Is he a boutree (?). This is a West of Ireland expression for a hollow tree with fungi resembling ears. When TG told FG that he would not use AK FG said that he had burned his bridges.

TG referred to the fact that Ambrose Kelly had been paid £300,000 in 1992 even though he had not as much as produced one drawing at that time. He said that we should be looking at what that money was used for.

TG again mentioned [REDACTED] who had told TG about a client who was "stung" by Liam Lawlor. The client had to borrow money to bribe Lawlor to get a planning permission which was essential for the survival of his business.

[REDACTED]

On the day that Fassenige introduced TG to LL he brought TG and Paul Sheeran to see the "state of the art" garage which he had built but which the bank had re-possessed. All he had left was a site with planning permission for a filling station which he showed them. However, he did not have access onto the motorway because the Council owned a narrow strip of land between his site and the motorway

Date: 28th June 2000

Subject: Telephone call from Tom Gilmartin re. Meetings in the recent past between Frank Dunlop and Owen O'Callaghan

Tom Gilmartin telephoned to-day. He said that he had heard on good authority that shortly after Frank Dunlop gave his evidence in public he had a series of meetings with Owen O'Callaghan in a place called the County Club near Dunshaughlin. There were at least three such meetings on different dates but all around the same time. A room was booked for these meetings. TG thinks that they took place in the afternoon.

TG said that he received this information from a friend of his called Mike Keane. It was in the house of Mike Keane in Dalkey that TG met Mary Harney at a party. Mike Keane used to run the Dalkey Island Hotel and other hotels. TG gave him some advice in relation to property investments in England and that is how he knows him.

The County Club was owned by Paddy Peters who died in the relatively recent past. Mike Keane is married to a daughter of the late Mr. Peters.

I asked TG if he knew the dates of these meetings and he said that he did not but that he would try to find out.

TG said that Frank Connolly also had heard, from another source, that these meetings had taken place. His source was a person who saw them in the County Club and recognised them. FC did not publish the story because he was unable to check it.

TG said that he was more convinced than ever that the Shefran monies went to politicians higher up than Councillors.

Re: Tom Gilmartin - PTB/34

I received a phonecall from Tom Gilmartin. He commenced by inquiring about the health of a mutual friend whom he had heard was recently in the Mater Hospital. He then went on to say that he was anxious to establish who was present in Frank Dunlop's office at a meeting held there on the 28th April, 1991. I did not have the files readily available to me and asked him to remind me of what happened on that date. He said that he had been called by AIB to attend a meeting in their offices but there was no discussion or no meaningful discussion at that meeting and Owen O'Callaghan appeared. Eddie Kay said there were important people who wanted to meet TG. O'Callaghan had a taxi waiting at the bank. They went to Buswell's Hotel. O'Callaghan got out of the taxi and went in to the Hotel followed by Gilmartin. Liam Lawlor was sitting at a table in Buswell's. He got up and the three walked through the grounds of Dáil Éireann entering by the Kildare Street gate and exiting on the other side. They went to Frank Dunlop's office. Gilmartin was left in a room and O'Callaghan went into another room with Liam Lawlor. There was someone else in the room with whom Lawlor and O'Callaghan had a discussion. Dunlop was in and out of that room and Gilmartin was left sitting on his own. He, Gilmartin, says that he believes that that £40,000 was paid to Liam Lawlor on that day which was a few days before an important vote by DCC. He says that £40,000 had been taken out of his company before he had knowledge of it. He said that was the day that O'Callaghan said to him "you will never build a foot on that site".

Gilmartin initially thought that Ambrose Kelly may have been the unknown person in Frank Dunlop's office but he now thinks it may have been a representative of AIB, either Jim Donagh or — Ahern (of AIB, College St.).

He inquired if the Tribunal knew the identity of the unknown person and I explained that even if we did know we would not be able to give him that information. He understood our difficulty in this regard but he then went on to talk about Frank Dunlop and said that he had been

warned about Dunlop on a previous occasion and although Dunlop had written personally to Gilmartin he was not anxious to employ him.

He recalled a meeting held at the offices of Irish Life which was attended by himself and Seamus Maguire with a number of representatives of Irish Life including Bill Nowlan. Gilmartin was endeavoring to buy two properties in O'Connell Street including the Rainbow Café. Irish Life were looking for £1m. At that time Garreth Fitzgerald's government were endeavoring to get the Financial Services Centre off the ground and the principal of Taylor Woodrow had done a deal with the Fitzgerald government to start the work.

He heard this at the meeting with the Irish Life people and was warned off Dunlop at that meeting. He believes that two senior politicians got £100k and £150k respectively from O'Callaghan but he is unable to prove this.

He informs me that his wife's health has deteriorated and that she is now being cared for in St. John's in Sligo.

He asked when he was likely to be called as a witness and expressed the view whether it was likely that he would not be called before May next when the election is to be held. I told him that it appeared to me that that was a likely scenario.

MEMORANDUM OF A DISCUSSION BETWEEN
PATRICK HANRATTY, S.C. AND TOM GILMARTIN*THURSDAY 26TH SEPTEMBER, 2002

1. Tom Gilmartin rang me in my offices today following publication of the Interim Report of the Tribunal. He told me that he had received two telephone calls from a banker in England. He declined to tell me the identity of the person concerned because this person was extremely anxious not to become involved with the Tribunal although he did want to help Mr. Gilmartin. He said that Mr. Bertie Ahern had in excess of £15m in a bank account in the Bank of Ireland in Jersey. A substantial proportion of this money went through Allied Irish Banks in O'Connell Street. The man that was dealing with it in the Bank of Ireland was a man called Kevin Doyle. Kevin Doyle was sent over to deal with the matter.
2. Owen O'Callaghan made offshore payments to politicians including Bertie Ahern and Albert Reynolds. He made payments into Bertie Ahern's account in Jersey. Bertie Ahern and Albert Reynolds have accounts in Jersey, Liechtenstein and the Dutch Antilles. Bertie Ahern also has deposits in England. On one occasion he brought a briefcase full of cash over with him when he was attending a Manchester United football match. He was met by a courier from the Bank of Ireland to whom he handed the money.
3. Bertie Ahern got in excess of £100,000 from Owen O'Callaghan. Over £1million was stolen from Barkhill and it was from this money that O'Callaghan paid Bertie Ahern and Albert Reynolds.
4. The O'Brien affair was a set up from start to finish. Tom Gilmartin wasn't sure what to think of it at the start but one thing that always puzzled him was the fact that O'Brien said that he made the payment to Bertie Ahern. This was contrary to what Owen O'Callaghan himself had told Mr. Gilmartin, namely that he (O'Callaghan) had made a payment to Bertie Ahern. He never said anything about Mr. O'Brien or any other person. The O'Brien affair was a set up and an attempt to exonerate Bertie Ahern by diverting attention with a false allegation which O'Brien would subsequently withdraw.

5. After the affair all of O'Brien's debts were cleared by Owen O'Callaghan. He went on a holiday to Lanzarote and got a new car.
6. In 1990 Owen O'Callaghan gave Bertie Ahern a large sum of cash at a football match in Cork. The second lot of money was paid by O'Callaghan to Bertie Ahern in 1992 in connection with the blocking of tax designation for the Green Property company. Mr. Gilmartin said something about the "three towns designation" which I could not follow. He said that at the time O'Callaghan was involved in deliberate delays in the review of the Dublin Development Plan particularly in relation to Quarryvale connected with his attempts to rest control/ownership of Quarryvale from Mr. Gilmartin. However Green came up the inside track and got off the ground and were about to get tax designation for Blanchardstown. If they did get off the ground this would have had extremely serious consequences for Quarryvale and would have affected the interest of anchor tenants including and in particular Marks & Spencer. John Corcoran was on the brink of getting tax designation. However it was blocked by Bertie Ahern and Albert Reynolds. Owen O'Callaghan paid Bertie Ahern £30,000 after a Barkhill Board meeting held in Bank of Ireland (Mr. Gilmartin thinks) in 1992. This was the Board meeting at which Mr. O'Callaghan left the room for a period and came back and announced that Blanchardstown was not going to get tax designation.
7. Frank Dunlop is not telling the full story. He is delivering "minnows" to the Tribunal but is withholding information about the bigger players. Over £1m was stolen from Barkhill and this was used to bribe politicians.

D10

B

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

8. Large sums of money were taken from the O'Connell Street account to England. Bertie Ahern held an offshore facility with an Irish bank which Mr. Gilmartin thinks is Bank of Ireland but says it might be Allied Irish under which he can trade in relation to the English account but in an Irish branch.

9. The man from the Bank of Ireland who gave the information to Mr. Gilmartin was on one of his telephone conversations about to give him an account number when he was interrupted and he suddenly said that he could not talk anymore and he had to go. Mr. Gilmartin thinks that he was making the telephone call from work.

Mr. Gilmartin heard this story from the banker who made the two telephone calls to him. He mentioned it to Frank Connolly and Frank Connolly already had it.

10. Finally, Mr. Gilmartin drew attention to the fact that when Bertie Ahern sued Mr. O'Brien he did not sue the Sunday Business Post. He says the reason for that was that he did not want to involve a third party in circumstances where Mr. O'Brien was part of the set up.

3. T.G. says that F.D. was involved in the Battle of the Boyne Site.
4. John Gilmartin said that he met Mary Harney at a party hosted by Mike Kerrins in Killiney quite a few years ago and that he told Mary Harney at that time what was going on.
5. Gilmartin says that Dunlop goes to Spain to meet people there -- that Dunlop is being kept on-side; that he is very rich and would be made richer.
6. Dunlop is alleged to have met a number of people in the Bayview Hotel, shortly after his appearance before the Tribunal.
7. Dunlop is very friendly with Colm Peters.
8. Dunlop is alleged to have received monies out of the £6 million Government monies paid after the Battle of the Boyne Site was sold.

Re: Thomas Gilmartin – PTB/34

Mr. Tom Gilmartin telephoned me on the 25th July, 2006.

Mr. Gilmartin inquired whether he could speak "off the record". I informed Mr. Gilmartin that I was not in a position to have an "off the record" conversation. Mr. Gilmartin confirmed that he had heard today that the Judgment in the O'Callaghan matter had now been deferred until the 10th October, 2006. I told him that this was correct. He said that it was all a game and it was all for the purpose of delay.

He queried as to whether the matter would go to the Supreme Court and I confirmed to him that there was a strong possibility that it would. Mr. Gilmartin indicated that if the matter did go to the Supreme Court he would lodge an objection to the proceedings being heard before [REDACTED]. He said his name was being dragged through the mud in the High Court proceedings and that he did not have the money to proceed with the matter himself in Court. He said he was being accused of lying and making up stories and this was not the case. Mr. Gilmartin indicated that when he returned to the Tribunal, he would elaborate more on the allegations he has made including the Mary Harney situation. He indicated that previously he had not been used to Courts and consequently had only responded under pressure but that he was telling the truth at all times. He said he understands the position of the Tribunal because we are investigating wrongdoing.

In relation to [REDACTED], Mr. Gilmartin indicated that he should not hear any case involving Mr. Gilmartin himself as he had acted for Mr. Lawlor in the past and had taken instructions from Mr. Owen O'Callaghan. In addition, in his Judgment in the previous O'Callaghan matter, he had made disparaging remarks about Mr. Gilmartin and had compared him to thugs who had accused Mr. Roy Keane of assault. Mr. Gilmartin went on to say that he expected that the Tribunal would support him in his objection to [REDACTED]. He indicated that when he was in England he did not want to become involved with the Tribunal because he felt the odds were stacked against him but he felt, in fairness, the Tribunal was doing a good job. He said that he had heard that there had been a resolution in Dáil Eireann that the Tribunal was to be terminated in 2007. He said this was more of the same. Mr. Gilmartin terminated the phone call and thanked me for taking his call.

Re: Thomas Gilmartin – PTB/34

I confirm that on 6th November, 2006 Mr. Tom Gilmartin telephoned me.

He said he was very concerned that it would appear that [REDACTED] will sit on the Supreme Court that will hear the appeal from [REDACTED] in the High Court. He said his reasons for such a concern were that [REDACTED] had made very derogatory comments about him and that Mr. Gilmartin had no right to address this. In addition, he said that the Courts are allowing Mr. O'Callaghan to make false and spurious allegations about Mr. Tom Gilmartin and Mr. Gilmartin has no comeback from this. I told Mr. Gilmartin that as yet the Tribunal is not aware as to whether or not [REDACTED] would sit on the Court that will hear the Appeal. Mr. Gilmartin said that he was aware that the Tribunal were doing their very best in relation to this matter and that he was very happy that they had been successful in the High Court. He said he is very frustrated as Mr. O'Callaghan has been allowed in the High Court to make all of these allegations. I told him that was the nature of Court cases and that the Tribunal was not in a position to do anything to assist him in relation to that. I asked Mr. Gilmartin as to why he had not communicated through his solicitor. He informed that his solicitors had advised to "stay out of it".

He told me that when and if he came back to the Tribunal he would again address the Mary Harney issue and the Lee Tunnel issue. I told Mr. Gilmartin at this stage that anything he would tell me in that regard would constitute a prior statement and would have to be circulated.

Mr. Gilmartin said that he did not mean to put me in any difficult position and he apologised for taking up time. I informed Mr. Gilmartin that there was no apology required but that in light of the first O'Callaghan case that anything he said to me in relation to any matter would constitute a prior statement.

He told me he appreciated this and he thanked me for my time.

Re: Tom Gilmartin – PTB/34

I telephoned Tom Gilmartin this afternoon in response to his earlier call to Susan. She was unable to take his call as she was attending the public hearings so, in her absence, I returned his call.

His concern was in relation to his barristers. They could not be expected to continue on an ad-hoc basis and there was no certainty as to when the Quarryvale II module would recommence or when it would conclude. The legal challenges against the Tribunal were also adding to the uncertainty. He noted that he was now involved with the Tribunal for 10 years and he did not want to lose his legal team – “the cards are stacked against me”.

He was meeting next Thursday with his barristers and he had nothing to say to them about what was happening. They could not be expected to drop their own clients whatever the Tribunal decides. What had happened to him was 20 years ago - he had been involved with the Tribunal for 10.

He said that he was only telephoning the Tribunal out of his major concern - what could he say to his legal team? I explained to him that the matter was listed again in the Supreme Court on Friday 15th December next. The Tribunal, at present, intended to resume its public hearings on the 16th January next subject to anything the Supreme Court may decide.

He had some concerns about the Supreme Court, in particular with [REDACTED] [REDACTED] in the past. He said [REDACTED] also took instructions from [REDACTED] and was also a friend of [REDACTED]. He said the judicial review challenges were only a game to obstruct and delay the Tribunal, in his opinion, and he noted that Hazel Lawlor was contemplating a challenge also. The allegations made by Owen O' Callaghan in the High Court were "baloney".

He said the process was just frustrating for him and his health wasn't great. He apologised twice for bothering the Tribunal on the matter. I said to him that there was no need to apologise and that if his legal representatives required any further clarification, they could correspond with the Tribunal.

Re: Thomas Gilmartin – PTB/34

I received a telephone call this afternoon from Mr. Gilmartin. He was looking for my colleague Susan Gilvarry who was in a meeting and so asked to speak to me.

Essentially, he was responding to some of the matters which had been aired in the Supreme Court that day in the case of O'Callaghan & Ors -v- The Planning Tribunal. It seemed that the matters to which he referred arose out of exchanges between Counsel for the Applicant/Appellants and [REDACTED]. He did not appear to be satisfied with some of these exchanges. However, the fact that he was not a part of the proceedings meant he felt unable to do anything to counter them. Obviously, I could not advise him in this regard and, to that end, suggested he liaise with his own legal advisers.

23 February 1989: T.K made allegations to S.H. in the course of an interview, concerning LL, Cllr. H & G.R. S.H informed C/M who asked him to arrange interview with T.K.

24 February 1989: C/M interviewed T.K with S.H + H.N.

T.K alleged that L.L said he was commissioned by the Government to look after the 'Arlington' site. He asked for a 5% interest. T.K responded by calling LL a gangster. L.L said men had ended up in the Liffey for less. Shortly after to T.K's surprise, LL walked into a meeting of Arlington in London. T.K had mentioned the meeting in his earlier conversation with L.L. At the London meeting LL again said he was commissioned by the Govt. + asked to be compensated. Arlington, against T.K.'s advice told T.K to pay LL £3,500 p. month. He did so, the cheques not being made payable to LL except in one case, when the cheque was issued by Mr. S, a bank manager friend.

T.K also said that LL had asked for £5 mill to be paid into a bank account in the Isle of Man, in respect of his support for a development which TK proposed at Irishtown, which development would represent a material contravention of the County Plan.

T.K also said LL had bought a Mercedes car from a Mr. B in Lucan, but had left the vendor short by £20,000 saying this was due in respect of services rendered in relation to a permission obtained giving access for a garage to the new road.

TK said LL got a payment in respect of a permission for a 'Mc Donalds' at Palmerstown.

T.K said that S.W. who was innocent of any wrongdoing, gave him the names of 8 members of C.C. who would be involved in any material contravention vote for the Irishtown lands. He (T.K) met four of them. Cllr. H asked for £100,000 in a brown paper bag - notes - no cheques. The other three, whose names he did not recall took a similar line. He did not meet the other four, feeling he might be expected to pay such money to 40 members.

TK said G.R was opposing his development at Irishtown for the wrong reasons. Within one hour of a meeting of Managers with Government Ministers. [We did not confirm whether there had been such a meeting] Mr G.R had told Mr Sha that the Minister had said that Mr K had bought out Mr. OC. [Mr. Sha owns land adjacent to Mr OCs]. Mr K said Mr. R was a friend of Mr Sha.

T.K said a recent announcement by J.C that the Blanchardstown Centre was going ahead was to stymie T.K. He felt G.R advised J.C, who he believed was going to employ G.R when he retired shortly. He also felt G.R had informed PM. to go back on an agreement concerning price for Corp Lands at Irishtown.

T.K. said G.R had received payment in respect of a permission for a Mc Donalds in Palmerstown. In the Mr B case mentioned earlier Mr K said when LL said he was holding back money in respect of the car, Mr B responded that he had already paid

Mr. G.R. He T.K also alleged that concessions were made in relation to roads at Blanchardstown, by G.R, which the Council would not normally make.

The allegations against G.R were not substantiated in any way by reference to source or otherwise [except in the case of the alleged passing of information to Mr Sha., in which case TK mentioned the name of a person phoned by Mr. Sha] although C/M asked TK for sources.

T.K said he met G.R + told him he 'would see him all right' if the permission went through. G.R said there was 'no need for that'. T.K said he wanted to stress that G.R never demanded money and never made any improper suggestion to him. He also said that S.H, P.M whom he had met were absolutely honest as were J.P and C/M whom he had not met but he knew this from all he had heard. He had told this to the Min.

T.K said he had give much if not all of the information given to SH + C/M to the Minister recently

C/M told T.K. they could not tolerate any improper conduct of which they had notice in dealings on property or permissions and advised T.K. that if at any time he felt he was being improperly dealt with, he should come to C/M about it.

On the afternoon of Fri. 24th C/M appraised J.P of the allegations + asked him to examine the files concerned.

NOTE OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION WITH MR. T. P. GILMARTIN ON 20TH MARCH, 1989, AT 11.25 A.M.

Chief Superintendent Sreenan telephoned Mr. Gilmartin at 11.25 a.m. on 20th March, 1989, and referred to the fact that Mr. Gilmartin had not contacted him, as arranged, when in Dublin last week.

MR. GILMARTIN

"I was only there for two days. I ran into problems and went from Meeting to Meeting. I had problems with the land there. I had to be back here for St. Patrick's Day.

On this thing, I'm being told by all and sundry that it is not in my interest to open this can of worms up. I'm thinking of pulling out altogether. The thing I've been talking to you about, it's as far as I'm going to take it. I've made my living over here and kept nice and quiet and I think I'll stay that way. It's a waste of time over there. There are too many involved and too much to get involved in. There are too many dirty tricks .

Yes, I did say that at a Meeting over there on Friday. Officially, I'll probably announce it within the next couple of weeks. It's not my problem to clean it up. You can't do anything except that someone has the will and the power to do something about it. There is neither the will nor the power there. The General thinks he is a fly boy but he is way behind some of these fellows.

(about the effects of withdrawal from West Side Project and the consequences for the unemployed in the area who might have got jobs because of the Project).

Those are forgotten people. I'm not suprised at this now because of what I know. They may be Housebreakers or Criminals but I can excuse them. They are left there as dogs to rot. In fact that is what they have been referred to as by some of the people I've met, dogs. I left Ireland young. Like many others I had a romantic view of Ireland but that is not the case with me now.

The fellows that brought that (reports of Bribery, etc.) to notice have lived and known of fraudulent deals for the last thirty years. They acted because I made a Complaint and at the same time they are telling me - you won't get anywhere because these fellows are well able to cover their tracks. I can be the villain for them and leave myself open to libel actions, but I am not interested and I am not going to be used. I accept that your interest is genuine but I am not going to let myself in for something that is not my responsibility. I know that I could do it (West Side Project) but there are too many hills to climb.

They are not allegations.. They are true but difficult to prove. Yes, I have your Telephone Number and will contact you if I decide to change but you can take it that that's it. There would not be any point in coming over here to me."

Note of responses made by Mr. T. P. Gilmartin, 20 White Hill Avenue, Luton (Tel. 0582 25846) in course of conversation on telephone with Chief Superintendent Hugh Sreenan on Saturday, 4th March, 1989.

Saturday, 4th March, 1989 - 3.12 p.m.

Chief Superintendent Sreenan telephoned Mr. Gilmartin and explained purpose of his call.

Mr. Gilmartin.

" I don't know if I want to get involved in that. A number of things have gone on. A lot of things have happened. I won't be over there until sometime later on. Obviously I did not want to really get involved in what was going on. As I saw it I could go away without doing anything. I was involved in something and if I failed after going in with my eyes open then that was my fault but if I had to fail because of dubious tricks being pulled, then I felt I should do something about it. I would not really want to get involved in things that have been going on for years.

They are not as naive over there as not to realise at this point in time what is going on. If you go out to the west side of Dublin that is where you will get to know all about it. I don't know that I want to become involved. I do not know that I could help in terms of providing any evidence. I am pretty well tied up all next week here even if you were to come over. I have meetings in London all of Tuesday and Wednesday and other things to attend to.

There are a number of people around Dublin complaining bitterly about things that are going on. Why are they not doing something about it? No way was I going to walk away and lose myself a substantial sum of money without saying what was going on.

It was because of the current so called boom in Dublin that I got involved. I got in on the Bachelor's Walk project. I formed a joint venture with Arlington Securities in this project. Then came the question of a development on the west side of Dublin and I was asked to have a look at it. I began to run up against problems motivated by greed or worse than that in a contract involving the City and Council. Land disappeared. We had agreed a contract on a substantial chunk of land and it was withdrawn. They would not deal. There were some dirty tricks being pulled. There were people I was not prepared to talk to. People in authority were trying to put the screws on for money.

I have resolved the land problem for the moment. Proving anything would be

DJ.1-44

(2)

would be very difficult for me except that I lined up meetings and taped what was happening. One guy is more subtle than all the rest - saying one thing to my face and something else behind my back.

There was no point in walking away losing a lot of money due to dirty tricks. I'm not complaining because of opposition, genuine opposition. If I'm in I deal straight and will not bribe or corrupt.

I was involved on the west side of Dublin and in Dublin City. Things are going on absolutely on a very wide scale. I'm an emigrant myself, arrived here in the 1950's and took the opportunities. I'm from Lissadell in north Sligo and I go back there to visit my sister. There are thousands of young people still coming over here and they won't go back because they say there is no hope there. I felt the time was ripe with the so called property boom in Dublin. I risked a hell of a lot of money in Bachelor's Walk. Arlington Securities only wanted to come in when I had got it going. There is a one hundred and fifty million pound investment there and when that was under way the other development, in the middle of Clondalkin/Palmerstown, came up. This will lift that area for all time. There is a hell of a risk there but I knew that. I was prepared to ride along with it until they began to take the feet from under me without a chance. I was told 'if this goes you are making a lot and pay up or else we will make it f - ing difficult'. To prove that land disappeared would be difficult but that was what happened to me.

I avoid publicity like the plague and do not want to be involved in anything which would bring me into it.

There is one particular gentleman. One or two others in positions of power told me to keep quiet. I decided that before I would disappear I would do something about it.

The site in Clondalkin was zoned for retail to build something here. I had a look at it and there were major road problems. I told them it was in the wrong place and could not work. It would be a slum. I thought, if I were to do anything there, where would I do it. I moved to another spot, about 500 yards away and near the west link road, and decided that's where it should be. I set about seeing if I could make it work. I got a terrific response from major international traders. The Clondalkin site had in the meantime been sold to Gubay and he would not go in on it either. O'Callaghan from Cork was then trying to do one in Lucan but he ran up against my problems. His architect and agent persuaded him to get involved in Clondalkin and then he heard of my one. I was told by the Ministers that the Government would want my scheme. The other one was zoned for retail. It was suggested that

It was suggested that

I and O'Callaghan should get together. We met and he agreed that his was a mistake. He had paid a deposit and there was no way that he could make it work and he did not know what to do. We agreed to work together and if mine was a success I would see he would be reimbursed and and if mine failed he could go ahead with his own then. A meeting was called and there was an announcement to the Managers that O'Callaghan and I were getting together so the conflict was gone. The development to go ahead was to be mine. One of the Managers came out - he had taken mine all along as a joke and he realised now it was a goer. He rang some people with vested interests and informed them of the possibility of making money. They, in turn, started pulling strokes. It was delicate because of the deal with O'Callaghan. The land was not worth more than ten grand an acre but I paid over forty grand an acre. There was a great risk to me but because I already owned some of the land the worst I felt I could do was to get my money back. This Manager started putting out rumours that I was doing a cosy deal and the Corporation were forced to withdraw land. I was not aware at the time why this was happening. Completely apart from that fellows were trying to hold me to ransom. I lost the land vital to the whole thing. I had land which I had bought from Bruton, Sharpe and others but I could not get in or out of there. This was going to be a major retail, such as D I Y warehousing, with a major business park and a liesure development. It would create 10,000 jobs. It would cover 180 acres. Nothing like it has been seen before in Ireland. It would solve the problems of the area for ever. It rattled me that this should happen. I was told long before the Corporation pulled out that it was going to happen. O'Callaghan was told by some of the boys that the Manager had 'phoned people. He is the Co. Council Manager. He has been involved in lots of things.

I had no problem at all of that kind in Bachelor's Walk. The only one thing was a press report which put up the price of some of the properties which we had not finalised at the time. Arlington Securities are not street wise as far as deals in Dublin are concerned. I was dealing with Paddy Morrissey, Sean Haughey and others and they have assisted and so have the Ministers, who were anxious to get investment in. Many others, Abbey and so on, were pulling out at the time I decided to go in.

I must say that in one way I'm happy with your call. I took a risk and was not sure about what I was doing but it reassures me that the people I decided to trust are genuine and are anxious to have things done right. I was beginning to wonder where it might end.

That gentleman is at this for years but it will be very difficult to pin

know it and say

nothing. He is retiring in June. He is one of the king-pins but the circle extends to a lot of elected members. I called one gentleman a gangster and said that the mafia paled by comparison with them. He told me that was dangerous talk and that a person could find himself in the Liffey for saying something like that. I took that to be a threat.

I will be in Dublin probably on Tuesday week. There are people whom I would like to see - the people I have already talked to there - and I would like to think this whole thing over, but I will contact you. If it came to a Court case it would be difficult to prove and I don't know that I want to get involved. There are things going on over there in the news at the moment about a certain representative but I bet they will all come out whiter than white. I can tell you that they are not even the tip of the iceberg as far as that person is concerned.

I'm in a delicate situation. From one point of view it could be seen to be in my interest to expose all and to be only an act on my part to get what I am looking for. From the other point of view the thing is only beginning and if I go ahead it can only get worse. I am not concerned with genuine objections to my plans. I know, for instance, that the Planning Manager, Mr. Prendergast, is entirely opposed to my development but I also know that this is a genuine belief on his part as it is contrary to the overall plan already adopted for the area and it is up to me to prove that my proposals have merit if I am to succeed.

I believe in the country and would like to do what I can. I'm in the business of trying to make money but apart from that I would like to do something to help stem the flow of young people. I visited my sister in the village of Dromahair the week before last and heard that three hundred young people have left the area. Soon all that will be left will be old people and children. To have this continue will only ruin the country.

I have you telephone No. and I will contact you the week after next."

23 February 1989

T.K. made allegations to S.H. in the course of an interview, concerning LL, C.H. & G.R.

S.H. informed C/M, who asked him to arrange interview with T.K.

24 February 1989

C/M interviewed T.K. with S.H. & H.N.

T.K. alleged that L.L. said he was commissioned by the Government to look after the 'Arlington' site. He asked for a 5% interest. T.K. responded by calling L.L. a gangster. L.L. said men had ended up in the huffery for less. Shortly after to T.K.'s surprise, L.L. walked into a meeting of Arlington in London. T.K. had mentioned the meeting in his earlier conversation with L.L. At the London meeting LL again said he was commissioned by the Govt. & asked to be compensated. Arlington, against T.K.'s advice told T.K. to pay LL £3500 per month. He did so, the cheques not being made payable to LL except in one case, when the cheque was issued by Mr S, a bank manager friend.

T.K. also said that LL had asked for £5,000 to be paid into a bank account in the name of Allen, in respect of his support for a development which T.K. prepared at Orishdown, which development would represent a material contravention of the County Plan.

T.K. also said LL had bought a Mercedes car from a Mr B. i. Lucan, but had left the vendor short by £20,000, saying this was due in respect of services rendered in relation to a permission obtained giving access for a garage to the new road.

T.K. said LL got a payment in respect of a permission for a 'McDonalds' at Palmerstown.

T.K. said that S.W., who was innocent of any wrongdoing, gave him the names of 8 members of C.C. who would be involved in any material contravention vote for the Orishdown lands. He (T.K.) met four of them. C.H.H. asked for £100,000 in a brown paper bag - notes - no cheques. The other three, whose names he did not recall look a similar line. He did not meet the other four, feeling he might be expected to pay such money to 40 members.

T.K. said G.R. was opposing the development at Brackisham for the wrong reasons. Whether one hour of a meeting of members with Government Ministers [we did not confirm whether there had been such a meeting] Mr G.R. had told Mr S.H. that the Minister had said that Mr K had brought out Mr O.C. [Mr S.H. owns land adjacent to Mr O.C.]. Mr K said Mr R was a friend of Mr S.H.

T.K. said a recent announcement by J.C. that the Blakenstone Centre was going ahead was to stymie T.K. He felt G.R. advised J.C. who he believed was going to employ G.R. when he retired shortly. He also felt G.R. had influenced P.M. to go back on an agreement concerning price for Cow lands at IRISH TOWN.

 In the Mr B case mentioned earlier. Mr K said when LL said he was holding back money in respect of the car, Mr B responded that he had already paid Mr G.R. He T.K. also alleged that concessions were made in relation to roads at Blakenstone by G.R., which the Council would not normally make.

The allegations against G.R. were not substantiated in any way by reference to source or otherwise [except in the case of the alleged passing of information to Mr S.H., in which case I'd mentioned the name of a person named by Mr S.H.]
 Method C/H asked TK for sources.

T.K said he met G.R & told him he 'would see him all right if the permission went through. G.R said there was 'no need for that'. T.K said he wanted to stress that G.R never demanded money and never made any improper suggestion to him. He also said that S.H, P.M whom he had met were absolutely honest as were J.P & C/M whom he had not met but he knew this from all he had heard. He had related this to the Min.

T.K said he had given much if not all of the information given to S.H & C/M to the Minish recently

C/M told T.K they could not tolerate any improper conduct of which they had notice in dealings on property or permissions and advised T.K. that if at any time he felt he was being improperly dealt with, he should come to C/M about it

On the afternoon of Fri 24th C/M appraised J.P of the allegations & asked him to examine the files concerned.

(Appointed by Instrument of The Minister for the Environment and Local Government dated the 4th day of November 1997 and as amended by Instrument dated the 15th day of July 1998)

AFFIDAVIT OF THOMAS GILMARTIN

I, Thomas Gilmartin aged 18 years and upwards make oath and say as follows:-

1. I am a Property Developer. I make this affidavit from facts within my own knowledge, save where otherwise appears, and where so otherwise appearing I believe the same to be true.
2. I have been involved in the property development business in England and Ireland for many years.
3. In the 1980's, I was employed by Arlington Securities Plc (hereinafter "Arlington") as a consultant in connection with a proposed development of properties at Bachelors Walk, Dublin. I had a 20% equity stake in the proposal and was also paid a sum annually by Arlington as their consultant.

4. About this time, I was also endeavoring to acquire properties at Quarryvale, St Lomans Hospital and St Edmondsbury in County Dublin for a development which subsequently became known as Quarryvale.

Liam Lawlor

5. I was introduced to Liam Lawlor about this time and in the course of a discussion, I informed him of my involvement with the Bachelors Walk project. Mr Lawlor suggested that I should meet him the following day at the Council Offices to explore in what way he could provide assistance to me, but I was unable to meet him because I had to return to England for a meeting of the Board of Arlington.
6. Mr. Lawlor told me that he was aware of the proposed development at Bachelor's Walk. He said that he was in a position to speak on behalf of the Government and, particularly, the Taoiseach, Mr. Charles Haughey and that he would be very interested in being introduced to the directors of Arlington. He said that he was involved in the whole development of the West side of Dublin and also Bachelor's Walk. He said that he was very anxious to meet the directors of Arlington. I said that I would discuss the matter with them at my next meeting, which was due to take place that Thursday.

7. I attended the meeting of Arlington in London. The meeting was attended by ~~Ray Mould~~, Ted Dadley, Raymond Mould, Humphrey Price, Andrew ^{Mr Parker} ~~Parker~~, a project engineer, whose name I cannot remember and myself.

8. During the course of the meeting, Raymond Mould received a telephone call from his secretary, following which he informed the meeting that he had been told by his secretary that a Mr. Liam Lawlor, a member of the Irish Parliament, was downstairs and that he had stated that I had invited him to this meeting.

9. I was totally flabbergasted and profoundly embarrassed by this turn of events. I told the meeting that I certainly had not invited Mr. Lawlor to this meeting and that his statement to the contrary was absolutely false. I explained to the meeting that I had met Mr. Lawlor the previous Tuesday, that I had briefly discussed my involvement in the Bachelor's Walk development with him, without disclosing any detail in relation to it, and that Mr. Lawlor had informed me that he was a representative of the Irish Government and that he was anxious to have an introduction to the directors of Arlington. I also explained to them that I had informed Mr. Lawlor that I would mention his desire for an introduction to the directors and that it had been my intention to do so at that meeting. K

10. It was decided that since he was there, whether he had been invited or not, he should be invited to come upstairs. He came into the meeting. He was totally brazen in his attitude. He made no apology of any kind and he stated that he was there on behalf of the Irish Government, particularly on behalf of Mr. Charles Haughey, the Taoiseach. He stated that he wished to be involved with the development because this would make the difference as to whether it would get off the ground or not. This was his opening statement to the meeting. Mr. ^{ould} Meran asked him what he meant by becoming involved in the deal and Mr. Lawlor said that he wanted a 20% stake in the development and that this was for the Government.

11. I was deeply embarrassed and disquieted by this turn of events.

I said that this was completely out of the question and that there was no possibility of Mr. Lawlor getting any stake whatsoever in the proposed development. Mr. Lawlor said that if he did not get a stake, it would make the difference between the development getting off the ground or not. At that stage, the meeting went into disarray.

12. Raymond Mould, Humphrey Price and perhaps others left the meeting for a few minutes. In the meantime, I remained in the room with the others. After about five minutes, they came back into the room and people broke up into groups. Ted Dadley asked me to come down to a hotel down from the Green. Mr. Dadley told me that he had informed Mr. Lawlor where he was going. I went down to the hotel with Mr. Dadley. The remaining directors and Mr. Lawlor remained behind. After a while in the hotel, Mr. Lawlor arrived and informed Mr. Dadley and myself that Arlington had agreed to take him on. I said that I had not agreed to any such thing. Mr. Lawlor said that we were better to be safe than sorry because there was a lot of money involved and that a sum of about seven million pounds had already been invested.

Tribunal Ref : TG.AFF DRAFT

13. Mr. Lawlor informed me that Raymond Mould had agreed to take him on as a consultant and to pay him £3,500 per month. I was appalled at this and made my views clear to Mr. Lawlor. Mr. Lawlor informed me that it had nothing to do with me. He said that the project would not get off the ground without him. He also said that Mr. Moran had informed him that I would have to give him half of my 20% shareholding as well. I informed Mr. Lawlor that this was completely out of the question and that there was no way I was going to give him anything.

14. I subsequently discovered that Arlington had in fact agreed to pay a consultancy fee of £3,500 per month to Mr. Lawlor. They had also decided that this money should be paid through me since all disbursements and expenses in respect of the Bachelor's Walk project were being paid by me through my Bank Account. As a result of this arrangement, I paid the sum of £3,500 per month to Mr. Lawlor on behalf of Arlington Securities ~~plc.~~ ^{plc.} Limited for a period of ten months. All of this money was refunded to me by Arlington.

15. The monies were paid by cheque drawn on my account at Bank of Ireland in Blanchardstown. Liam Lawlor would come to the offices in St. Stephen's Green and I would give him the cheque

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

there. On most occasions, he asked me to leave the payee of the cheque blank and that he would fill this in himself. Mr. Lawlor did not, to the best of my knowledge, provide any form of consultancy services of any kind whatsoever to Arlington and did not provide any for or through me for Arlington or for or on my behalf. After approximately ten months, I decided to stop these payments. I just did not see why we should be paying Mr. Lawlor for nothing. I felt that we were being blackmailed. I stopped the payments. Arlington were unhappy about this because they felt it could place the development in jeopardy. I informed them that if they wished to continue paying Mr. Lawlor, they could pay him directly.

16. On one occasion during this period, Mr. Lawlor arrived into the Bank of Ireland in Blanchardstown and informed the Bank that I had given instructions that he (Mr. Lawlor) be paid £10,000 and he requested the Bank to pay this money out of my account to him. I was phoned by the Bank to verify these instructions and I informed the Bank that I had given no such instructions, that the statement to the contrary by Mr. Lawlor was totally false and that no monies should be paid to him. Consequently, the Bank did not make any payment to Mr. Lawlor.

17. Ultimately Arlington decided to abandon the Batchelor's Walk project and to pull out of Ireland altogether. They thought it was corrupt and were fed up with it. They incurred a substantial loss on the project. They treated me fairly and paid me £1.25 million for my share although I was embarrassed because I felt that they were lumping me in with what they perceived to be "a bunch of Irish Gangsters."

18. Liam Lawlor brought me to the offices of Dublin County Council in O'Connell Street where he introduced me to George Redmond, Assistant City and County Manager. Mr. Lawlor explained to me that Mr. Redmond was a man of great influence and that he would have a say in anything I was doing. They produced a map to me in Mr. Redmond's office which showed the ownership of the lands at Quarryvale. The map was quite detailed and appeared to show the ownership of each of the parts of land in Quarryvale. Both Mr. Lawlor and Mr. Redmond indicated that they could be of assistance to me, ^{and Lawlor said that} but that they ^{he} would require payment of £100,000. I did not make any payment to either of them.

19. I was obstructed in relation to my proposed development by George Redmond, who on one occasion, aborted a meeting which had been arranged in his office and which was to be attended by my consultants, many of whom came from England, and council engineers. On that occasion, I complained about his behaviour to Sean Haughey who was a deputy City Manager. Mr Haughey rearranged the meeting for that afternoon. On the following day, I met ^{Sean} Mr Haughey and Mr Frank Feely and complained to them in relation to Mr Redmond. I am also satisfied Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor blocked a deal which I had agreed with the Council to purchase land, notwithstanding that I was the highest bidder.

Tribunal Ref : GILMARTIN THOMAS WF/RED

Padraig Flynn

20. I had met Padraig Flynn, who was Minister for the Environment on many occasions in connection with my project at Quarryvale ^{Westpark} and how it could be advanced in the context of planning, roads, designation, tax status and so forth. In about June, 1989, I decided to give a cheque for £50,000 to the Fianna Fáil party. I asked ^{him} (Mr Flynn) ^{"Who do I make it payable to?"} how I would describe the party in inserting the name of the payee ^{"leave it" i.e.} and he told me to leave ~~that~~ blank. I ^{now know} ^{it} (subsequently learned) that the name of the payee was inserted as "CASH" ^{and} the sum of £50,000 was debited to my account ^{Colin Scallan long} in Bank of Ireland in Blanchardstown. Some time later, Sean ^{met to} ^{meet}

21. On one occasion, I attended a meeting at Dáil Éireann. This meeting was attended by ~~Ray McSharry~~, Brian Lenihan, Padraig and others
Flynn and Seamus Brennan. Ray Burke also appeared as did Charlie Haughey. At the meeting the proposed Quarryvale project was discussed. After the meeting and after I left the room, I was approached by a man who told me I could make a lot
very substantial sum of money out of the projects I was involved in and suggested I should make a deposit in an account in the Isle of Man in the sum of £5,000,000. He gave me an account number in the Isle of Man. Liam Lawlor was in the vicinity at that time, although he was not within earshot. I never paid money to him etc

22. On another occasion, I was discussing with AIB the implication of designation of the site. Owen O'Callaghan left the meeting for about an hour and came back and said there would be no designation of this site and said that a political friend of his had taken care of the designation. Bertie Ahern

the green properties site of any size

Owen O'Callaghan to politicians ~~and that these include~~

Councillors

24. I was also asked for £100,000 by a number of Councillors. One of them was Finbarr Hanrahan, a Councillor from Lucan for Fianna Fáil. Another was Colm McGrath. I never gave him any money.

25. There was a Senator from Sligo called Willie Farrell. I knew him because I had grown up with him. I approached him to see if he could assist me about the problems which I was having and he told me that there was not terribly much he could do because he was only a Senator. However, he suggested that I should speak to John Gilbride who was a Councillor.

26. ~~Eugene Gilbride, John Gilbride's father was a T.D. in our area~~
~~when I was a child.~~ I agreed to see him and Willie Farrell arranged to introduce me to John Gilbride the day after I approached him. I explained to Mr. Gilbride the difficulties that I had been having, particularly with Liam Lawlor. I said that in my opinion he was a gangster, along with a few others. Mr. Gilbride said that Mr. Lawlor was alright if you got on the right side of him. In any event, he agreed to help me. He told me that he had the assistance of Councillors called McGrath, Marian ^{GINNIS} McGinness and some others.

27. However, subsequently, I ^{was for} discovered that ~~O'Callaghan had~~ promised Gilbride £100,000 and that Gilbride, who was a teacher in Balbriggan College, gave up his job for a year and ~~worked for O'Callaghan~~ ^{worked for O'Callaghan Properties or one of his other companies} in the campaign to get zoning for the Quarryvale development. I believe that the monies paid to Gilbride went through the Bank and O'Callaghan. I did not personally authorise it. It may have been paid by Barkhill Limited through Frank Dunlop.

During the course of the meeting, Raymond Mould received a telephone call from his secretary, following which he informed the meeting that he had been told by his secretary that a Mr. Liam Lawlor, a member of the Irish Parliament, was downstairs and that he had stated that I had invited him to this meeting.
9. I was totally flabbergasted and profoundly embarrassed by this turn of events. I told the meeting that I certainly had not invited Mr. Lawlor to this meeting and that his statement to the contrary was absolutely false. I explained to the meeting that I had met Mr. Lawlor the previous Tuesday, that I had briefly discussed my involvement in the Bachelor's Walk development with him, without disclosing any detail in relation to it, and that Mr. Lawlor had informed me that he was a representative of the Irish Government and that he was anxious to have an introduction to the directors of Arlington. I also explained to them that I had informed Mr. Lawlor that I would mention his desire for an introduction to the directors and that it had been my intention to do so at that meeting.

10. It was decided that since he was there, whether he had been invited or not, he should be invited to come upstairs. He came into the meeting. He was totally brazen in his attitude. He made no apology of any kind and he stated that he was there on behalf of the Irish Government, particularly on behalf of Mr. Charles Haughey, the Taoiseach. He stated that he wished to be involved with the development because this would make the difference as to whether it would get off the ground or not. This was his opening statement to the meeting. Mr. Mould asked him what he meant by becoming involved in the deal and Mr. Lawlor said that he wanted a 20% stake in the development and that this was for the Government.

11. I was deeply embarrassed and disquieted by this turn of events.

I said that this was completely out of the question and that there was no possibility of Mr. Lawlor getting any stake whatsoever in the proposed development. Mr. Lawlor said that if he did not get a stake, it would make the difference between the development getting off the ground or not. At that stage, the meeting went into disarray.

12. Raymond Mould, Humphrey Price and perhaps others left the meeting for a few minutes. In the meantime, I remained in the room with the others. After about five minutes, they came back into the room and people broke up into groups. Ted Dadley asked me to come down to a hotel down from the Green. Mr. Dadley told me that he had informed Mr. Lawlor where he was going. I went down to the hotel with Mr. Dadley. The remaining directors and Mr. Lawlor remained behind. After a while in the hotel, Mr. Lawlor arrived and informed Mr. Dadley and myself that Arlington had agreed to take him on. I said that I had not agreed to any such thing. Mr. Lawlor said that we were better to be safe than sorry because there was a lot of money involved and that a sum of about seven million pounds had already been invested.

13. Mr. Lawlor informed me that Raymond Mould had agreed to take him on as a consultant and to pay him £3,500 per month. I was appalled at this and made my views clear to Mr. Lawlor. Mr. Lawlor informed me that it had nothing to do with me. He said that the project would not get off the ground without him. He also said that Mr. Mould had informed him that I would have to give him half of my 20% shareholding as well. I informed Mr. Lawlor that this was completely out of the question and that there was no way I was going to give him anything.

14. I subsequently discovered that Arlington had in fact agreed to pay a consultancy fee of £3,500 per month to Mr. Lawlor. They had also decided that this money should be paid through me since all disbursements, and expenses in respect of the Bachelor's Walk project were ^{initially} being paid by me through my Bank Account. As a result of this arrangement, I paid the sum of £3,500 per month to Mr. Lawlor on behalf of Arlington Securities plc for a period of ^{approximately} ten months. All of this money was refunded to me by Arlington.

15. The monies were paid by cheque drawn on my account at Bank of Ireland in Blanchardstown. Liam Lawlor would come to the offices in St. Stephen's Green and I would give him the cheque

there. On most occasions, he asked me to leave the payee of the cheque blank and that he would fill this in himself. Mr. Lawlor did not, to the best of my knowledge, provide any form of consultancy services of any kind whatsoever to Arlington and did not provide any such services for or through me for Arlington or for or on my behalf. After approximately ten months, I decided to stop these payments. I just did not see why we should be paying Mr. Lawlor for nothing. I felt that we were being blackmailed. I stopped the payments. Arlington were unhappy about this because they felt it could place the development in jeopardy. I informed them that if they wished to continue paying Mr. Lawlor, they could pay him directly.

16. On one occasion during this period, Mr. Lawlor arrived into the Bank of Ireland in Blanchardstown and informed the Bank that I had given instructions that he (Mr. Lawlor) be paid £10,000 and he requested the Bank to pay this money out of my account to him. I was phoned by the Bank to verify these instructions and I informed the Bank that I had given no such instructions, that the statement to the contrary by Mr. Lawlor was totally false and that no monies should be paid to him. Consequently, the Bank did not make any payment to Mr. Lawlor.

17. Ultimately Arlington decided to abandon the Batchelor's Walk project and to pull out of Ireland altogether. They thought it was corrupt and were fed up with it. They incurred a substantial loss on the project. They treated me fairly and paid me £1.25 million for my share although I was embarrassed because I felt that they were lumping me in with what they perceived to be "a bunch of Irish Gangsters."

18. Liam Lawlor brought me to the offices of Dublin County Council in O'Connell Street where he introduced me to George Redmond, Assistant City and County Manager. Mr. Lawlor explained to me that Mr. Redmond was a man of great influence and that he would have a say in anything I was doing. They produced a map to me in Mr. Redmond's office which showed the ownership of the lands at Quarryvale. The map was quite detailed and appeared to show the ownership of each of the parts of land in Quarryvale. Mr. Lawlor said to me in the presence of Mr. Redmond that they could be of assistance to me but that I would have to pay ^{THEM} £100,000 to both him and Mr. ~~Redmond~~ ^{Redmond}. I understood this to mean that I would have to pay ^{THEM} £100,000 to each of them. I said to Mr. Lawlor "you can fuck off" On a previous occasion Mr. Lawlor asked me for a 20% stake in the Quarryvale development. On the same occasion he said he was speaking on behalf of the Government. He offered to introduce me to Mr. Charles Haughey and other Ministers. I refused to give Mr. Lawlor any stake in the development.

19. I was obstructed in relation to my proposed development by George Redmond, who on one occasion, aborted a meeting which had been arranged in his office and which was to be attended by my consultants, many of whom came from England, and council engineers. On that occasion, I complained about his behaviour to Sean Haughey who was a deputy City Manager. Mr Sean Haughey rearranged the meeting for that afternoon. On the following day, I met Mr. Sean Haughey and Mr Frank Feely and complained to them in relation to Mr Redmond. I am also satisfied Mr Redmond and Mr Lawlor attempted to block a deal which I had agreed with the Council to purchase land, notwithstanding that I was the highest bidder by a substantial margin.

Padraig Flynn

20. I had met Padraig Flynn, who was Minister for the Environment on many occasions in connection with my project at Westpark/Quarryvale and how it could be advanced in the context of planning, roads, designation, tax status and so forth. I had also spoken to many other Ministers including Seamus

Brennan and Bertie Ahern. In the first half of 1989 I was being obstructed in every possible way by some County Councillors (and others) including Liam Lawlor, Finbar Hanrahan and Colm McGrath because I refused to pay them to support the rezoning of Quarryvale. I had a number of meetings with Bertie Ahern and complained to him about the way I was being obstructed. Later Councillor Joe Burke told me that he had been asked by Bertie Ahern to speak to George Redmond and to attend the Corporation meeting where the sale of the land to me was being considered. Later Padraig Flynn (and others) asked me for a donation to the Fianna Fail party and said that this could help to resolve the problems I was having. This was sometime before an election in 1989, probably in late Spring of that year. The impression I got was that if I paid a donation some of these "games" would stop.

21. In about June, 1989, I decided to give a cheque for £50,000 to the Fianna Fáil party. I wrote the cheque out in Mr. Flynn's presence and signed it. I asked "who do I make it payable to" and he told me to "leave it" meaning that I should leave it blank. I now know that the name of the payee was inserted by someone as "CASH". The sum of £50,000 was debited to my account in Bank of Ireland in Blanchardstown. Some time later, Colm Scallion took me to meet Sean Sherwin who asked me for a donation to Fianna Fail. I told him that I had already paid £50000 as a donation to the party. He said "if you did we never got it."

22. On another occasion, I attended a meeting at Dáil Éireann. This meeting was attended by Brian Lenihan, Padraig Flynn, Seamus Brennan and others. Ray Burke also appeared as did Charlie Haughey. At the meeting the proposed Quarryvale project was discussed. After the meeting and after I left the room, I was approached by a man who told me I was going to make a lot of money out of the projects I was involved in and suggested I should deposit £5,000,000 in an account in the Isle of Man. He gave me an account number in the Isle of Man. I never paid any money into that account. Liam Lawlor was in the vicinity at that time.

23. On another occasion, I was discussing with AIB the implication of designation of the site. Owen O'Callaghan left the meeting for about an hour and came back and said there would be no designation of this site and said that Bertie Ahern had seen to it that the Green Property site and my site would never receive designation and also that I would never build a square foot on the site.

24. I believe that substantial sums of monies were paid as bribes by Owen O'Callaghan to politicians from the account of Barkhill Limited through Shefran Limited and Frank Dunlop.

Councillors

25. I was also asked for £100,000 by a number of Councillors. One of them was Finbarr Hanrahan, a Councillor from ^{Thom} Lucan for Fianna Fáil. Another was Colm McGrath. I never gave ^{him} any money. etc. m

26. There was a Senator from Sligo called Willie Farrell. I knew him because I had grown up with him. I approached him to see if he could assist me about the problems which I was having and he told me that there was not terribly much he could do because he was only a Senator. However, he suggested that I should speak to John Gilbride who was a Councillor. I agreed to see him and Willie Farrell arranged to introduce me to John Gilbride the day after I approached him. I explained to Mr. Gilbride the difficulties that I had been having, particularly with Liam Lawlor. I said that in my opinion he was a gangster, along with a few others. Mr. Gilbride said that Mr. Lawlor was alright if you got on the right side of him. In any event, he agreed to help me. He told me that he had the assistance of Councillors called McGrath, Marian McGinniss and some others.

27. Subsequently, I was informed that Councillor Gilbride, who was a teacher in Balbriggan College, gave up his job for a year and worked for O'Callaghan in the campaign to get zoning for the Quarryvale development.

28. This affidavit is but an outline of the events referred to in respect of which I can give additional and more detailed evidence.

Dear Sirs,

We refer to your letter dated 19 January, 2004.

We have taken our client's instructions regarding queries raised by you in relation to an entry in our client's note book on 4 February, 1989 in which reference was made to bank account no. 005828 for B&I Jersey Limited, sort code 404888. Adopting the numbering used by you in your letter, we respond as follows:

1. Mr. Gilmartin instructs us that he was the holder of the above account.
2. Not applicable.
3. We are instructed that the account was set up by our client for the purposes of a business venture which was to involve the Gilmartin Settlement Trust and trading in property bonds. The account was set up for the purposes of receiving funds as part of that business venture. We are further instructed that our client was later advised by Cameron Markby Hewitt Solicitors in London not to proceed with the business venture as they believed that it might not be bona fide. No funds were ever transferred into this account.

Yours faithfully,

 Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments

Dear Sirs,

We refer to your letter dated 23 January, 2004 which raises queries in relation to certain matters contained in our client's statement of 17 May, 2001.

Firstly, in relation to the queries concerning payments made by our client to Liam Lawlor, we respond on foot of our client's instructions as follows:

1. The payments were made to Mr. Lawlor at various meetings that took place in Dublin. Our client is unable to be more specific than this.
2. The funds emanated from Mr. Gilmartin's Bank of Ireland account in Blanchardstown, account no. 73807892.
3. The monies were paid from Mr. Gilmartin's own funds and he was later reimbursed for these payments by Arlington Securities plc.

In relation to the queries raised by you concerning the payment made to Peadar Flynn we respond on foot of our client's instructions as follows.

1. The donation of IR£250,000 to the Flanna Fail Party was paid from Mr. Gilmartin's Bank of Ireland, Blanchardstown account no. 73807892. This was paid from his own funds.
2. Our client was not reimbursed by any third party in respect of this payment.

Yours faithfully,

Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments

Dear Sirs,

We refer to your letter dated 15 January, 2004.

We have taken our client's instructions in relation to the queries raised by you and we respond as follows:

1. As far as our client is aware there was only one cheque book operating from his Bank of Ireland account in Blanchardstown, account no. 73807892.
2. Mr. Gilmartin does not believe that Mr. Sheeran ever signed cheques drawing funds from this account. Mr. Gilmartin had an arrangement with Paul Sheeran whereby Mr. Sheeran would pay out money on behalf of Mr. Gilmartin and he would later deduct this amount from Mr. Gilmartin's account. Before paying out any such monies, Mr. Sheeran would first telephone Mr. Gilmartin to seek his authorisation for the payment.

Mr. Gilmartin recalls providing Mr. Sheeran with a written authority in relation to this arrangement, but he does not have a copy of that authority.

Yours faithfully,

1 A. So he started saying to me that never mind him, he
2 says, do you know any fucker I could trust, I says, that knows
3 who owns the land there. And he didn't. So I was in his
4 office, you know. So he was called out, to go out to the
5 counter. So he went out and he came back and he says there's 6 a fucking man out here and he says and if anybody knows, and
7 he owes me a favour, knows. There is a man outside he says
8 that knows every inch of that place. So he says will I say
9 it to him. I says can you trust him. He said well to tell
10 you the truth I don't think so -- no, sorry -- to tell you the 11 truth, I don't know but he owes me he said. So I said who is 12 he. He said Fassnidge, Brendan Fassnidge is his name. So
13 he takes me out and he introduced me to Fassnidge. And he
14 said to me, he said to Fassnidge that I wanted to buy a piece
15 of land up on the Galway Road there right beside them. And 16 he was in car dealing.

17 Q. Yeah, I remember.

18 A. And there was a bit of a story about his going bust
19 and then was beating the wife up. And there was all sorts of 20 weird and wonderful things.

21 Q. Yeah.

22 A. Eventually came to light. Paul did tell me that,
23 you know, there was a bit of an under current there, you know,
24 and all that. And he said I helped him out, you know, he got 25 into difficulty and I've helped him out he says and he put him

1 honest to God, now, that is a fact.

2 Q. I accept that fully.

3 A. What?

4 Q. I accept that fully.

5 A. So they went out of the room. They were out for a

6 good while and they came back in and they said they had to

7 discuss all this. In the meantime Dadley was in, well Dadley

8 was a kind of a hale fella, well met anyway, you know, he ha

9 ha ha. He couldn't keep his concentration if there was a bit

10 of leg around or a skirt Dadley was -- you lost him, but he

11 was a very nice fella. Anyways, the meeting sort of broke up

12 and I left the meeting. Dadley arranged to meet me in the

13 hotel down from -- just down there off Brewers Green. We

14 went to the hotel. Dadley told Lawlor where he was going,

15 where he was building. Lawlor came into the hotel. So I

16 said to Lawlor what the fuck is going on, what's this about.

17 So he said oh, well that's the way it is, I have to be taken

18 on board. Now, I had left and Lawlor was still sitting down

19 as I left because the meeting sort of broke up and there was

20 people talking in corners and outside doors and I thought to

21 myself Jesus Christ. So myself and Dadley went off down to

22 this hotel. Lawlor eventually came in and he said that they

23 had agreed to take him on. But I said but I hadn't. So if

24 I have anything to do with it, I says, I'm going to have a

25 fucking say in it. So anyways, Dadley says, you know, to me,

1 no reason other than that. And Taggarts came to me because
2 they done some work on Clandeboy and they were already doing
3 Sprucefield work for Marks and Spencer, Lough Derry at the Foy
4 and they wanted me to do that one. But that was my fucking
5 mistake, wasn't it. But anyway. Actually the DOE in the 6 North were underwriting me if I was to do that, the Foy one.

7 Q. The Foy one which the Americans eventually did?

8 A. Yeah, they were underwriting me, guaranteeing that I
9 wouldn't make a loss, the DOE.

10 Q. I knew that deal was around. Very good.

11 A. So I went down to see it. Why I didn't do that 12 deal was I was followed by three IRA men all day.

13 Q. Right.

14 A. They were there for a whole day. We measured the 15 site and all. There was an old derelict house and these 16 three guys appeared in that derelict house and they followed
17 us everywhere we went, all day long. John McCannon of 18 Taggarts kept saying to me, he's a Protestant but he's sort of 19 a semi-republican Protestant

20 Q. Wolfe Tone?

21 A. No, I wouldn't say that strong but he's more -- he 22 hates the English with a passion. He does hate the English
23 with a passion and that's a fact, although he's a Protestant.
24 But he's a great character. Anyway, he told me to ignore
25 them, take no notice, you know. But in the evening we were

1 have much say there. He was a Senator, so he didn't really
2 know much. So he suggested that John Gilbride was a
3 Councillor. Now, John Gilbride -- Eugene Gilbride was our TD
4 at home for -- when I was a kid and I grew up with John
5 Gilbride so that I brought in John Gilbride. That I should
6 go to John Gilbride. And he arranged to meet me the 7 following day. So he took me out and he introduced me to 8 John Gilbride. I hadn't met him for thirty years. So I met
9 this fella. John Gilbride was an ex alcoholic, when he was a 10 young fella he was on the drink and crashed cars and all, he 11 went a little bit haywire, you know. His father was married
12 three times and the family didn't want the wives and all this 13 caper, you know, and he went a little bit wayward. Anyway,
14 Gilbride said that he would see. I told him about Lawlor.
15 He kept insisting Lawlor was all right, to get on the right
16 side of him. And I said no, he's a gangster. To me he's a
17 gangster, along with quite a few others. Gangsters.
18 Gilbride came in and he was supposed to be on my side.

19 Q. Yeah.

20 A. And it looked as if he was. And he enlisted the 21 help of McGrath and Marian McGuinness.

22 Q. In AIB?

23 A. No, Marian McGuinness. These were Councillors.

24 Q. Oh, Councillors. I'm sorry. Yes.

25 A. And numerous others. They were all supposed to be

1 people. Once you get into the Tribunal, you are nearly
2 forced to ...

3 A. Take Bertie Ahern, for instance. I trusted Bertie
4 Ahern because when I did the land deal, now, I tendered for
5 that, an open tender.

6 Q. This is the 70 acres now?

7 A. The 70 acres. An open tender and I paid way over
8 the top. I bought all the land around it for 40,000 and I
9 paid 70,000 odd an acre for that land from Dublin Corporation.

10 Q. From Dublin Corporation?

11 A. From Dublin Corporation, yeah. in a tender. For 12 the simple reason is that John Corcoran of Green Property
13 started mouthing and he was being aided and abetted by certain 14 politicians who was trying to fuck me up, you know? And he 15 wrote in letters. Not only that. Frank Dunlop at the same
16 time had Frank McDonald of the Times on an anti me campaign.

17 Q. Yeah.

18 A. And he was the hurler on the ditch, Frank McDonald.
19 And this philistine that arrived over from England to destroy
20 Dublin etc. etc. was all the comments. But it was all
21 engineered. It was all engineered for to force the bank into 22 putting the screws on me. To encourage the bank. It was 23 all orchestrated by Ambrose Kelly and O'Callaghan.

24 Q. What wrong doing, if any, can you accuse Bertie
25 Ahern of insofar as all he did was probably do the

1 their cohorts or Ambrose Kelly. And you went from the Foyer
2 and you had to go up a sort of a ramp to the toilets. But
3 there would be somebody sitting behind the bush.

4 Q. Yeah, yeah, yeah.

5 A. You know the little trees. And as soon as we would
6 start walking up there someone would go scuttling into the 7 toilet. Now, for a long time I took no notice of this until 8 we noticed this guy tailing us all of the time. And if we 9 sat here he'd be sitting there, you know. And do you know
10 who he was?

11 Q. No.

12 A. The fella that Ambrose Kelly and O'Callaghan used to 13 bring the Minister down, you know the fella that topped 14 himself or that drowned.

15 Q. Which fella?

16 A. Do you remember the Gas Board, the fella made the 17 suggestion to the Gas Board to remember his company.

18 Q. Ah, the fella down in Cork?

19 A. The Fine Gael Minister. Well it was Owen
20 O'Callaghan that grassed on him. It was Owen O'Callaghan.
21 He was appointed by Charlie Haughey as a Director of the Gas
22 Board.

23 Q. Who was?

24 A. Owen O'Callaghan.

25 Q. Oh, Owen O'Callaghan.

1 A. Yeah. And he brought down that Minister because.

2 Q. Covney?

3 A. Hugh Covney. He died there recently. He was 4 drowned tragically. And then the Lowry affair started.

5 Nothing to do with Ben Dunne at this time. This was Lowry
6 got involved and Ambrose Kelly and O'Callaghan started writing
7 letters and they had this defraud accountant, what's this his 8 name was.

9 Q. The guy who was involved. I know the guy you mean,
10 yeah.

11 A. Writing the letters. They were dictating the 12 letters and he was writing them. So he was totally 13 discredited, if you remember.

14 Q. That's right, yeah.

15 A. And when O'Leary came into it with CIE, when Lowry
16 attacked O'Leary CIE.

17 Q. Go back one step for a second. As far as the main
18 plank we're trying to achieve at the moment, you see, what I
19 need to know now --

20 A. The guy that was talking us was that accountant.
21 Yeah.

22 Q. That was the Fianna Fail?

23 A. I forget the name now. It was O'Callaghan and 24 Ambrose Kelly. Another maggot.

25 Q. What we need to do, I mean, whatever papers you have

Premier Captioning & Realtime Ltd

1 justification of showing up the corruption that went on.
2 That's what the Tribunal is all about.

3 A. But you must know more about that than I do. I'm
4 not pointing the finger at you. Between you and I, you're a
5 man of the world, you're a businessman and you're in Dublin.

6 Q. Yeah.

7 A. It's the most fucking corrupt place on earth. Like
8 the Larry Goodman thing. I know he is a client of your's.
9 Now you don't comment.

10 Q. I can't.

11 A. You don't comment at all but I used to meet Lawlor
12 and O'Keeffe and them and they used to insist on me meeting
13 them. They were on their way to Baghdad and some of the 14 fucking things they were discussing, the rip off that was

of Dublin in Clondalkin. In relation to the proposed development on the west side of Dublin, he had bought the land and he found himself in a situation where he was being put under pressure from all kinds of "spin doctors" who were trying to shaft him. He says that O'Callaghan of Cork was involved in the shafting operation. He says that the shafting did not take place in the form of a refusal of planning. He said that he would be unable to deal with any planning issue. It was more a question of undermining his project, presumably for the benefit or in the interest of others.

There was a development group in Dublin Corporation (most of whom were straight). They included Bill Lacey, Paddy Morrissey, Sean Haughey and Mick McCloone and some others.

Mr. Gilmartin indicated that we should look into how Mr. Ray Burke resigned his position as Minister for Foreign Affairs. Mr. Gilmartin says that he received a figure believed to be between £0.5m. and £.75m. to resign.

There were a series of meetings in an office in Blanchardstown. Apparently, it arose out of a demand which Burke had made that he would resign if he was paid a particular sum of money to get the individuals concerned off the hook. They were of the view that Burke would have to resign to stop the investigation of planning matters. The parties involved consisted of a consortium, the principal member (and payer) of which was JMSE or Joe Murphy.

of the bag". However, eventually in their own interests, they all compromised their disagreement.

Another individual who is suspect was Willie Murray. Mr. Gilmartin says he was too close to Lawlor.

Mr. Gilmartin referred to an incident where the Corporation wanted to buy a certain property in Dublin. George Reynolds engineered that this property should not be bought by the Corporation. Subsequently, it was bought by a private developer and sold to the Corporation at a huge profit. Mick McCloone knows all about this. We should ask him about it.

- When the money was paid out of Barkhill to F. Dunlop and Shefran it was at a time when Barkhill was virtually dormant. It was waiting on the review of the development plan which was supposed to have occurred in 1988 but did not occur until 1993. Barkhill was not trading at all and was not in fact involved in PR or marketing. At the time of these pay-outs there was no zoning and no planning permission. There was nothing to market or to do PR about. AIB must have known this.

4 We left his office and in the car on the way back to the Tribunal office, we rang Thomas Gilmartin to put to him that Mr. Maguire had absolutely denied any knowledge whatsoever of the matters of which Mr. Gilmartin told us. Mr. Gilmartin said that everything he had said was true. I said that Mr. Maguire had denied he had ever met Mr. Burke. Mr. Gilmartin said that Mr. Burke was not at the meetings. He did however say that he would be surprised if Mr. Maguire never met Mr. Burke. He said that the meetings definitely took place, that they were JMSE led and that they happened in the offices of Seamus Maguire & Company in Blanchardstown. He said that Mr. Maguire may not have been present for all of them or for the duration of them but that he certainly knew that they were going on and what they were about.

5 I asked Mr. Gilmartin why would Seamus Maguire tell him of these events or, for that matter, why he would tell anybody about these events. Mr. Gilmartin said that he was a personal friend of Seamus Maguire. Mr. Gilmartin was alarmed that his name was mentioned in the conversation. I re-assured him that we did not tell Mr. Maguire that Mr. Gilmartin was our informant. We told Mr. Maguire that we had a number of sources of information. Mr. Gilmartin's name came up in the context that Mr. Maguire had commented to me that he had seen me on television and that he had been talking about me recently in the context of his telephone conversation with Mr. Gilmartin during which Mr. Gilmartin had mentioned that I had spoken to him. 6 Going back to the conversation on the telephone with Mr. Gilmartin, he said that basically he had been shafted by O'Callaghan. In the first instance, he had to pay O'Callaghan £2m. to go away. However, O'Callaghan came back, the second time with the support of a number of politicians. Mr. Gilmartin pointed out that he had put together one of the best developments the country had ever seen and that O'Callaghan and others were keen to get in on the act. The second time that O'Callaghan came back, he had the dirty tricks brigade of the Government who started a dis-information campaign against him orchestrated by Frank Dunlop.

7 The dis-information campaign extended to the Inland Revenue in England who, as a result, pursued him and petitioned him in bankruptcy successfully for £10m. He had subsequently had this set aside but at great difficulty and at substantial cost. This placed him in the position where Allied Irish Banks in Ireland forced him out and forced him to sell-out to O'Callaghan which was the object of the exercise of O'Callaghan and the dirty tricks politicians.

8 O'Callaghan then got money (£300,000) paid to Frank Dunlop (who was the "bag man") and he paid off the Councillors including Hanrahan, Lawlor and others. There had been meetings between Lawlor, O'Callaghan and Dunlop in Dail Eireann and elsewhere. The reason that he was forced out was that he would not pay-off the corrupt politicians. Subsequent to his departure, O'Callaghan paid-off the corrupt politicians and ultimately got rezoning for the development.

- 9 Gilmartin had to engage Noel Smyth to extricate his money. Smyth threatened proceedings all around the place including Allied Irish Banks and in particular threatened that he would subpoena Albert Reynolds to give evidence if Gilmartin did not get his money back. It was for this reason that he got his money back. He had to pay Smyth £750,000 to get his £7m. back.
- 10 Mr. Gilmartin told me that the figure of £700,000 was the figure which was paid to Mr. Burke. He said it was the figure which Maguire told him had been paid. Ironically, it was the same figure as he had to pay Smyth to get his money back.
- 11 Mr. Gilmartin said that there were occasions where he had to meet delegations from the Irish Government on their way to negotiate beef contracts in Iraq. He actually was called to meet these politicians in the airport where they were sitting around the table waiting to receive payment from Mr. Gilmartin.
- 12 In relation to the Bachelor's Walk site, the deal was that 20% of this multi-million Pound development would be set aside for the politicians. They designated a part of the quays as a tax-free area to "show calm" to Arlington

4. He believed that Frank McDonnell of the Irish Times had been paid to write articles which were derogatory of the proposed development at Quarryvale.
5. He said that he had been forced to sign documents by the Bank and had been held captive until 12 o'clock midnight on the night that the Quarryvale zoning went through.
6. He said that the daughter of Eamonn McKeown, top Executive in AIB, had got a showjumper from someone and although he did not expressly say so, he implied that this was some sort of a pay-off by an unnamed benefactor who may be one of the O'Callaghans.
7. He said that Arlington Securities plc owned the Bachelor's Walk site and did so through a number of companies including a company called Desk Top Securities Limited. He said that after the Bachelor's Walk deal went sour, he was paid £1.25m. for his share in the Bachelor's Walk properties and that he had been very fairly and very decently treated by Arlington Securities. British Aerospace later took over Arlington Securities plc and Ray Mould (?-spelling) later established Pillar Properties which own a shopping centre in Clandeboy and in Derry.
8. Gilmartin says that he met Flynn and Ahern in the Park Lane Hotel. They said that they were collecting for Fianna Fail. The directors of Arlington thought

6. He also furnished a location map showing the location of the Quarryvale development and adjoining developments and suggested that we should talk with Michael McClune who has a significant amount of information available to him.
7. He recounted an occasion when he was asked by an Eoin O'Callaghan to Clondalkin. He felt that he was going to inspect a site or meet somebody of some significance. O'Callaghan took him to a pub where they sat for some time. They were then approached by a man wearing dark glasses who threatened Mr. G. and said that they had a file on him in relation to his activities in the North.
8. Mr. G. explained that this meeting was intended to frighten him and to ensure that he would not continue with any development in the Clondalkin area.
9. He explained how he had come to acquire the sites in the Bachelor's Walk area and the pressure that was put upon him by politicians. He repeated the stories about Liam Lalor, O'Hanrahan and named Cathal McGrath and Sean Gilmore as two other councillors who had looked for £100,000. He said that Marian McGuinness was a very close associate of Liam Lalor's and shared an office (and perhaps more) with Lalor for a period. He said that Gilmore had taken a sabbatical for one year and had been paid £100,000 presumably by O'Callaghan or one of O'Callaghan's companies.

Mr. Gilmartin made the point that the bank pulled the plug on him at the time of the re-zoning motion. He raised the question "why would a bank pull the plug the day before a re-zoning proposal which would hugely enhance its value"?

It would be worthwhile talking to Eddie Keyes. He is a Protestant and he is straight and was not treated terribly well.

We should also have a look at Ambrose Kelly and An Bord Pleanála. There is an issue relating to Pat Dunne but he said he did not wish to speak ill of the dead. He said that Ted Dudley's phone no. is 071-6361673. He is with Wintrush. He is a bit of a womaniser and when the Batchelor's Walk Project was current he tended to talk too much around Dublin night clubs.

Raymond Mold is with Pillar Properties Plc. Humphrey Price is the Pillar Properties Finance Director. Mr. McCloone has a lot of information. It was Fassnidge who introduced me to Lawlor. He made an arrangement for me to meet him in the Dead Man's Inn. Lawlor asked for £5m. He first asked for a stake in the Batchelor's Walk Project and I told him that this was not a runner. It was then that he asked for a stake of £5m and I said that it still was not a runner.

Padraig Flynn and Bertie Ahern invited Arlington to a hotel (in London?). This was a "fund raising event for Fianna Fáil". Demands were made for money off Arlington Securities Ltd.. I met Padraig Flynn later that day for a meal. He talked around in reels. I pretended not to know what he was on about. After that evening Flynn and me were cool.

In the cheques which were given to Liam Lawlor the Payee was left blank and he filled in the Payee himself.

Berkhill was set up by Oliver Freaney.

I have a friend in Cork who told me of a high powered meeting which took place in Cork last week attended by a TD whose name I will give you later if necessary. me. He said that I should make an appointment to meet a man whose name he was giving me. He said he would be in touch with me. Two days later I got a phone call to tell me to telephone a man called Dr. P. McCarthy at 00 01 460000. I was told that he was in Balgriffin Dublin 17 on the Malahide side of a cemetery. Near Campion's pub.

I rang Dr. McCarthy and I arranged to go out to meet him. The inference was that I was to take him on but I already had Ove Arrup. The inference was that he had Charlie's ear. Success or failure depended on whether I took him on. Palmer also said that I had to take on Ambrose Kelly.

Dr. McCarthy was an enlightened intelligent man. He made no demands. He talked of his wife who he said was an alcoholic. He said that it was a great scheme. I left him as I found him. I never went back to him.

Fintan Gunne insisted that I took on Ollie Freaney. Ollie had Charlie's ear. Every time I made an appointment to see Fintan Gunne, Ambrose Kelly and O'M (? O'Callaghan) were standing in the hall. Ambrose Kelly followed me around Dublin. I took exception to Ambrose Kelly. He is not even an architect. Every hotel I booked into he appeared. I was told by Gunne I had to have him on board. As it happened, Ollie Freaney set up Barkhill. Gunne double dealt me on Van Hool land. The deal was #600,000 but wound up at 1.3 million because Gunne was taking commission of the vendor as well. That finished me with Gunne.

Harrington was a witness to some of this. Gunne told me I had burned my bridges. He talked about having Charlie's ear. Callaghan was operating out of Kelly's office.

Mulryan of Ballymore homes got zoning on St. Pat's. There is a bit of a story behind that.

MEMORANDUM

(Wednesday)
13th October, 1998

Planning Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments
Re: Thomas Gilmartin

1. Thomas Gilmartin telephoned at approximately 5.00 p.m. He said that he might be in a position to furnish to the Tribunal tapes of the interview between Jodi Corcoran and Frank Dunlop from which quotations appeared in last Sunday's Independent.
2. He said that well over £1m. had been paid through Frank Dunlop to politicians. He said that the work in relation to the promotion and letting of a shopping centre is not done by public relations people because agents such as Hamilton Osborne King do the work. In his experience, PR people were not to accept close to the launch of a particular project. In his case, the Eileen Gleeson company did a survey of councillors and showed a ratio of 7:1 in favour of the scheme.
3. The interview between Corcoran and Dunlop took place in the presence of Dunlop's solicitor and was recorded. At one stage, Dunlop turned off his recording and said that he and O'Callaghan were scared that Gilmartin would sue them - this may be by way of explanation as to why he was recording the interview and why it was taking place in the presence of a solicitor. He said that a fellow called Ken Whelan of "Ireland on Sunday" had been in contact with him and was writing a story about the workings of the Tribunal and was doing so putting a Fianna Fail and Liam Lalor spin on matters. He indicated that he did not know Ken Whelan and he was unsure of the name of the paper

24. Gilmartin says that he did release a few things to the media to counter Frank Dunlop and his spins and pointed out that he got Dunlop to admit that he had received payments of approximately £.45m. although he (Gilmartin) knows that there is more than £1m. about it.

25. In relation to the missing files above referred to, Gilmartin said that this occurred under the Albert Reynolds Government when he was in coalition with Labour and he believed Emmet Stagg was the Junior Minister.
26. He said that a designated area at the top of Dame Street in the Temple Bar/Christchurch area had been designated and that properties had been bought in that area between the time the files were shown and the designation announced. This was a quick purchase in respect of properties which did not have a great deal of value prior to designation but he said the same thing occurred in relation to a designation in Kilkenny and an extension to a designated area in Limerick.
27. He said there had been huge pressure on the Department of Agriculture to move to Cork to create a value in the development in Cork on the CIB lands. He said in order to get the project off the ground, O'Callaghan needed a tenant. They needed to get a covenant to create 6% of the value.
28. Gilmartin says that he know that part of the Chefran money went to Albert Reynolds, part to Bertie Ahern and a smaller sum to one other person whose names he does not know at the present but he does not think it was Ray Burke.
29. He does not think the cash went into the Chefran accounts although the payments may appear to have been made from Barkhill to Chefran.
30. He said that Albert Reynolds in trying to find out how much Gilmartin knows has approached a number of people and that Ray McSharry also is scared because he furnished a draft of a letter which he wanted Gilmartin to sign which indicated that Gilmartin did not know and did not have any connection with McSharry. However, in the period 1990-1991, Gilmartin's sister had contacted McSharry in Brussels to complain about the obstruction that Gilmartin was experiencing in Dublin.
31. He says that at the end of 1992/1993, a sum of £40,000 was paid to Albert Reynolds and £30,000 was paid to Bertie Ahern whom he believed were

Mr Gilmartin said that Jody Corcoran called him back on Monday and said that he was concerned that he had been set up. His fear was that he was being used as a vehicle to leak information concerning the Tribunal by parties who wished to undermine the Tribunal.

Mr Gilmartin said that Jody Corcoran told him that James Gogarty's affidavit had arrived on his desk anonymously together with some note from a man called Redmond [REDACTED] A

Mr Gilmartin made reference to a tax adviser called Cochran of Noel Cochran & Partners. He was often with Liam Lawlor and Phil Monaghan.

AIB approached Stewart Harrington of Harrington Bannon to do a valuation of the lands after the loan was up. Instead of keeping this confidential, Harrington told a number of people at a meeting at Monaghan's office attended by a number of people including Noel Cochran.

Pat Gleeson of IBI recommended Mr. Cochran to THOMAS GILMARTIN. Consequently Mr Gilmartin met Cochran in Bank of Ireland in London. He subsequently met him in Camden Markby's office.

One day he said to Mr Gilmartin that his name had come up. He Mr Gilmartin was he having any trouble with AIB. He said that Stewart Harrington was appointed to do a valuation for AIB and that he had come to a meeting at which he (Cochran) was present in Monaghan's office. He told the whole thing to the meeting and suggested that Mr Gilmartin was in trouble.

It was after this that Monaghan took Padraig Flynn around the site in a helicopter. This was at a point in time after Mr Gilmartin had made his complaints.

Note of telephone conversation between Patrick Hanratty SC and Thomas Gilmartin on Tuesday the 8th of December 1998

Mr. Gilmartin telephoned me this morning.

He had just been speaking to Jody Corcoran on the telephone. Mr. Corcoran told Mr. Gilmartin that he had been offered a job by the Government for £75,000 per annum. It was something to do with the millennium. The offer had been made by Seamus Brennan but Jody Corcoran believed that it had come from Bertie Ahern. Mr. Corcoran declined the offer because he felt that it was some sort of bribe and because he felt it would be short term.

I asked Mr. Gilmartin why the Government would want to benefit Mr. Corcoran. He said that they are afraid of what he knows. (This was Mr. Gilmartin's own opinion).

Mr. Corcoran told Mr. Gilmartin that the lawyers for the Independent had advised them against publication of some of the material which they had. They were concerned about the leaking of information and the publication of such information by the Independent.

Mr. Gilmartin said that Jody Corcoran also told him that somebody from Ambrose Kelly's office had the inside track on everything to do with Quarryvale. This person was still working in that office. Mr. Gilmartin had no idea who it was other than to say that it was a man: [REDACTED]

I spoke to TG this afternoon on the telephone. He had received calls from Jody Corcoran last Saturday and, most recently, last night. JC told TG that he had received three threatening telephone calls last evening. He knew two of them but the third was anonymous. The two which he knew were along the lines that he needn't think that he would fucking work in this town again and that he was doing himself no good or words to that effect. JC did not say who the two he knew were but TG's impression that one of them was Des Richardson. This was only an impression and JC did not mention his name.

The third anonymous call was a death threat. JC had telephoned TG to ask him about the threats which he, TG, had received and whether he knew who was behind them. I asked TG if this might have been a ruse by a journalist to get information. TG did not think so. He said that JC was concerned and his wife was very concerned. It was the third one they were concerned about.

JC told TG on Saturday that McDowell and Allen were in with the Tribunal during the week. JC had been told that it was suggested to the Sole Member that he could not go to every county in Ireland in his enquiries. The Sole Member said that he would carry on until his dying day.

He was told that McDowell and Allen said that they would go to the High Court and to the Supreme Court if necessary to stop it.

TG said that Albert Reynolds was panicking because Bertie Ahern was trying to shovel it all towards the has beens. AR thinks that he will be dumped on.

JC has a source close to BA. He believes that BA read the Tribunal's letter (O'Callaghan discovery letter). JC does not know for certain if BA read TG's statement to the Tribunal. The source read it but if BA read it he did not see him do so.

Note of telephone conversation between Patrick Hanratty SC and Thomas Gilmartin on Monday the 1st June 1999

135 I telephoned Mr. Gilmartin this afternoon, returning his call of the week before last. [REDACTED] A

TG said that Ted Dudley had recently indicated that he did not want to be involved with the Tribunal. Up to a week ago he was fully supportive and intending to support TG. However, in the last few days something had happened. TG believed that TD had been "got at." There was some talk of a development in Ireland, possibly involving Noel Smyth. TG also understood that Raymond Mould had changed his mind about co-operating with the Tribunal. TG was trying to find out what was going on. He said that he had also recently got the impression that Richard Foreman had become less than enthusiastic. Lambert Smith Hampton in Dublin had been given some lettings in Liffey Valley TG referred to the "golden handshake". He repeated what he had already told me about the payment of a substantial sum of money to Ray Burke by a consortium of developers led by JMSE and including Michael Bailey to persuade RB to resign his position as Minister for Foreign Affairs and thereby forestall the setting up of a planning Tribunal. He said that this arrangement was agreed in the offices of Seamus Maguire. Seamus Maguire was personally present as was a Solicitor called Moran. Tim Collins was also involved. TG emphatically stated that this definitely happened. He said that he had been told this by Seamus Maguire although he was reluctant to get him involved with the Tribunal. Seamus Maguire believed that I had set him up but that John Gallagher was a decent chap.

136 [REDACTED] C

TG said that it was a pity that I did not call him before Desmond O'Neill and I had got into the witness box because, he said, he had a couple of "excuses" which we could have used. I asked him what these were and he said that the proposal to "buy off" Burke by JMSE coming up with a payment came from Bertie Ahern. TG said that BA did not put the proposition directly to RB but that it was done through an intermediary. The intermediary was Dermot Ahern. TG said that Mary Harney knew that RB had been paid off in some way to persuade him to go. I asked him where he had obtained this information and he was not prepared to say but said that it was a different source than Seamus Maguire.

I asked TG if his domestic circumstances had changed and he said that they had not. I said that we still wished to meet him to discuss a number of matters particularly to fill gaps in the chronology. He said that he was no good on dates. I pointed out that he could assist us with the detail of events and the sequence of events which would assist us in identifying dates.

137 [REDACTED] A, C

absolute necessity to close this deal on time at all costs because the site was so important. They did not come up with the cash and, eventually it was necessary to re-negotiate and pay nearly an extra million. At that stage TG did not care because he had already been "screwed." Under the original facility letter TG said that the bank had a charge over the contract of sale on the Bruton land and also over the Convey stud.

TG says that the bank themselves approached Bruton to see if they could buy the lands behind TG's back. However, Bruton refused to deal with anybody but TG. Roderick Downer of Jackson Stops & McCabe acted for Desmond Bruton. The deal was supposed to close in August 1990. It did not in fact close until September 1991. It cost 2.3 million instead of 1.5

TG referred to the question of tax designation. He said that he had heard from two different sources of an incident where tax designation files were taken from the Department of finance. They were produced by Bertie Ahern at a meeting at the Mont Clare hotel where information was disclosed as to proposed designation areas. Money changed hands. Time was allowed to enable the purchase of properties in these areas and after which the designations went ahead. Among those present at the meeting were Ken Rohan, Owen O'Callaghan, John Deane, a property developer from Dublin called Kavanagh (Mark Kavanagh ?) and Harry Crosbie. He said that decisions relating to designation were made at this meeting. A deal was done later around the Christ Church area. This was designated shortly afterwards. There was another one on the quays. Harry Crosbie assembled bits and pieces in a hurry in 91/92.

TG said that when Padraig Flynn left the Department of the Environment tax designation drawings went missing. He thinks that Mary Harney was there at the time as Junior Minister. In any event he was told that she became aware of the drawings going missing.

TG emphasised that he did not know any of this from his own knowledge but said that he had heard it from two sources. He said that these were independent sources. I asked TG if he was prepared to divulge the identity of these sources and he was not. I then asked him to inquire from these sources if they would speak to us on a confidential basis. He said that he would do this. I asked him if one of these sources was a labour politician. He immediately assumed that I was referring to Emmet Stagg's public statement on the matter and he confirmed that Emmet Stagg was not one of the persons from whom he had received the information. All he would say was that one of his sources was a "person in the media" and the other was not.

TG said that John Deane had two offices in Cork, one in Lavitt's Quay and the other in South Mall. In the basement of one of these offices there was a microfilm relating to OOC containing names amounts and dates. It was an "insurance" file. I asked him how he knew this and he declined to say. However later he mentioned that there was somebody in that organisation talking to Frank Connolly. He also mentioned that there was a former employee of Ambrose Kelly who was also talking. He used to be a trustee. (?)

Mr. Gilmartin said that the same thing happened to Carney Kent in Kilkenny. Mr. Gilmartin said that Owen O'Callaghan was around there before Carney knew he was in trouble with the bank. The bank was Allied Irish Banks and David McGrath was involved. Mr. Gilmartin said that the same thing also happened in relation to the Golden Island development in Athlone.

Mr. Gilmartin said that there were two incidents when tax designation files went missing. One was where files went missing from the Department of the Environment. These files were brought to the Mont Clare Hotel.

He said that the Department of Finance files which went missing were brought to the Westbury Hotel. Bertie Ahern was at both meetings.

Mr. Gilmartin says that Mary Harney knows a lot more than she pretends and that she is fully aware of the incident involving the Department of the Environment files. She was a junior Minister in that Department at the time.

Mr. Gilmartin says that Celtic Nominees was Vanhool. His deal with Vanhool was originally agreed at £600,000 but, with the assistance of Fintan Gunne, who was supposed to be working for Tom Gilmartin, the price went up to £1.3m. Fintan Gunne collected from both vendor and purchaser.

When I mentioned that Celtic Nominees was one of the companies (with Buckfast Limited) granting the option to O'Callaghan on the Neilstown lands in January, 1989, Tom Gilmartin said that he "smelt a rat" and said that he feels that he was screwed here again. He seemed to be implying some kind of a connection between this and O'Callaghan.

We then discussed the date of the abortive meeting in George Redmond's offices in O'Connell Street which Mr. Gilmartin had previously told us was on the 23rd February, 1989. There was some suggestion that it may have been on the 2nd February, 1989. Susan Ryan agreed that somebody must know the actual date of this meeting. It was attended by John O'Higgins of Ove Arup in Dublin and also representatives from Taggart. It was also attended by Richard Foreman and John and it was not a fund raising dinner. AR stayed in OO'C's house that night. At 3 am in an upstairs bedroom OO'C handed AR £150,000 in cash. TG said that this was a payment for tax designation in Athlone. TG said that Bertie Ahern got a cut out of this money. AR was picked up by helicopter the following day. I asked TG if his informant would be prepared to talk to the Tribunal. TG said that people were wary of the Tribunal and he was not prepared to disclose his name to me. He told me previously that his informant does not want to get involved.

AR then went on a fun-raising trip to America. TG says that this was a massive fund raising effort. It was in the context of the euphoria over the Northern Ireland "settlement". AR was giving speeches about what he was doing for Ireland and a huge number of Irish Americans gave money generously. TG says that over $1m was raised on this trip which included Chicago, Boston and New York. However, only £70,000 was handed over to Fianna Fail. The rest was lodged in accounts in the Dutch Antilles and in Lichtenstein.

TG then referred to the appointment of ? Fitzgerald as manager of one of the Dublin Local Authorities. OO'C had the casting vote ? of two already fixed. He had CJH in his pocket. He said that Hugh Coveny's demise was brought about indirectly by OO'C. He said that OO'C had more power than people realised. The original plan for the Cork tunnel was altered and re-routed so that it came out on land owned by OO'C. CJH was behind this change. He says that we can easily verify this. OO'C had complete control of Cork. The other developers there did not get a look in.

TG said that the £80k paid to Shefran was paid by OO'C personally and that he subsequently got reimbursed by Barkhill. He said that Eddie Kay told him that AIB enquired from Government sources whether TG would get zoning for Quarryvale. They were told that TG would never get zoning. This was in 1990.

He also referred to the delays in the development plan. He says that these were orchestrated by OO'C with the collusion of Councillors to whom he paid money including Colm McGrath. OO'C wanted to get into QV at all costs. He knew that if TG got zoning the value of the land would rise and TG would then have no difficulty in raising further finance and OO'C would have missed it. However if he could delay the zoning until after the default date on the loan he would be in business with the help of the bank.

TG said that George Redmond received substantial payments from John Corcoran of Green Property Company in 1990/91 in connection with the Blanchardstown site. In return GR procured an alteration of the line of the Navan Road to make it run close to the Blanchardstown site and secondly provided a "hammerhead" spur with a roundabout to give access from the Navan Road to the site. This spur was not paid for by Green. From the Brady's garage roundabout the road was bent south and the spur was taken south to the Blanchardstown site on the Blanchardstown side of Mulhuddart. GR also tipped off Corcoran that TG was buying the Irishtown site.

I asked TG about the fact that it appeared that OO'C had applied for and obtained planning permission on the Neilstown site. TG said that he got this with "line" drawings. I asked him would he not have had to submit full drawings. TG said that he thinks that we will find that this was an outline permission. OO'C never had the slightest intention of building a shopping centre there. Nobody in their right mind would do so. It is, he says, obvious to any developer that it would not be a feasible prospect because of the cost of providing road access.

TG said that there was a Councillor who we should look at called Ed McDonald. He works in PB Gunnes and is in the pocket of Ambrose Kelly.

reimbursements to O'C from the Barkhill account for payments to senior politicians which OO'C had already made. OO'C had paid around £150,000 to senior politicians in 1989 and, in total, had paid £250,000 to senior politicians in connection with Quarryvale. In 1989 £50,000 was paid to Ray McSharry and £50,000 to Bertie Ahern. Bertie Ahern also got another £30,000 subsequently.

I asked where he got this information and whether the person providing it would be prepared to speak to the Tribunal. He said that the information came to him indirectly through an intermediary and that the person providing the information was afraid to come forward. However, he said that he would make efforts to have this person persuaded to come forward. I asked him whether and why he considered this person to be a reliable source and he said that he was 90% certain that he was reliable. I asked whether his knowledge of the source, such as it was, was sufficient to enable him to make this judgement he said that the source had previously been a partner with OO'C in a development in Cork.

I asked him whether the information about the 1989 payments came from Frank Connolly (the O'Brien matter) and he said that his was a different source to Connolly's. I asked him how he knew this and he said that he was certain that his source would never talk to a journalist "in a million years". I did, however, get the impression that TG is aware of at least the broad outline of FC's story.

TG said that his source was the source of the information that OO'C keeps a shotgun in the boot of his car. It was the same source that provided the information that Albert Reynolds got £40,000 from OO'C. (This is separate to the allegation that AR was given £150,000 in cash in OO'C's house in Cork in March 1994).

TG then said that in the 80s and 90s the fashionable place for "hot" money was Macau (sic) in the Dutch Antilles. The Cayman Islands became unfashionable because the American Government giving the FBI powers, in certain circumstances, to get access to Cayman accounts. This was related to drug trafficking. Lichtenstein fell out of favour because there was a strong republican movement and because it was thought that this might undermine the power of the prince and thus render the banking system more "open". He himself was told this by Deloitte & Touche and was given documents in the late 80s setting out an elaborate tax scheme involving the Dutch Antilles. He said that a lot of Irish "hot" money went there around that time and that if the Moriarty Tribunal were not looking there for some at least of the Ansbacker money they were looking in the wrong place.

TG mentioned the time he was told by a Mr. Palmer in January 89 when he told him that Mr. Haughey thought he should bring the right people on board. He suggested Dr. McCarthy and Ambrose Kelly. He went to see Dr. McCarthy; the directions he got were that he lived in Balgriffin Dublin 17, on the Malahide side of Campion's pub. Dr. McCarthy seemed embarrassed. He did not in any way solicit the work or make any pitch. He spent most of the time talking about his wife whom, he said, suffered from alcoholism.

TG also mentioned his meeting in the Bank of Nova Scotia in Dublin with Brian Perry. He says that he was accompanied to this meeting by either Brian Laxton or Roy Harris of Lambert Smith Hampton and not Richard Foreman as he originally thought.

TG then made reference to an incident which took place involving Emmet Stagg. Shortly after he was reported in the media about his misgivings about the granting of tax designations Bertie Ahern sent a delegation to him comprising of Noel Dempsey and a Minister called Smith (Michael ?). They produced photographs of him in the Phoenix park with rent boys. They also mentioned a case where ES was supposed to have made an indecent approach to a young teenager and where, it is said there was a huge row with the boy's parents. They threatened to sue but ultimately did nothing because of fear of publicity. TG says that Dempsey and Smith told ES that if he did not "keep his fucking mouth shut" they would release this material to the media.

TG then referred to the week before the Government fell in 1994. This was the occasion when a number of tax designations were given the night before the Government fell over the Harry Whelehan affair. Bertie Ahern admitted that there had been a meeting between himself and Owen O'Callaghan the previous evening or the evening before that. TG said that he had heard that Bertie was now going to change his story and say that he got mixed up and that the person who he met for dinner was the Dublin hotelier, Noel O'Callaghan.

and he said that he would but that he thought that it was unlikely that his Informant would agree to do so.

happened and TG subsequently received a letter from the Corporation notifying him that they were not proceeding with the sale. This effectively scuttled this proposal and left TG with his original road access problems as well as the embarrassment of his plans not being accurate.

The IDA never actually took the site and after O'Callaghan took control they quietly faded away.

TG says that the reason that O'Callaghan did this was to discredit and undermine him because his plans and brochure incorporated this site.

Derek Brady was the runner up in the contest for Manager of South Dublin County Council (referred to by TG as "Feely's job"). He was regarded as the obvious successor and everybody assumed that he would get the job. However, O'Callaghan told TG a year prior to the appointment that Brady would never get the job. He said that it had to be decided by 5 county managers and that 2 were "onside". In the event Fitzgerald got the job on the casting vote of the Cork County Manager.

TG said that Claran O'Malley was with him on one of the occasions when he met Fintan Gunne. It might have been the occasion when FG said that he was going nowhere without Ambrose Kelly. Every time he met Gunne Ambrose Kelly was hanging around. Gunne said that AK had the ear of Charlie Haughey and an Bord Pleanala. TG said that he responded by saying "Is he a boutree (?). This is a West of Ireland expression for a hollow tree with fungi resembling ears. When TG told FG that he would not use AK FG said that he had burned his bridges.

TG referred to the fact that Ambrose Kelly had been paid £300,000 in 1992 even though he had not as much as produced one drawing at that time. He said that we should be looking at what that money was used for.

TG again mentioned John McDonald, the Lucan auctioneer who had told TG about a client who was "stung" by Liam Lawlor. The client had to borrow money to bribe Lawlor to get a planning permission which was essential for the survival of his business.

TG said that Brendan Fassnige definitely paid £10,000 each to George Redmond and Liam Lawlor. On the day that Fassnige introduced TG to LL he brought TG and Paul Sheeran to see the "state of the art" garage which he had built but which the bank had re-possessed. All he had left was a site with planning permission for a filling station which he showed them. However, he did not have access onto the motorway because the Council owned a narrow strip of land between his site and the motorway. He went to Liam Lawlor and LL asked him for £10,000 for him and £10,000 for George Redmond. He paid the money and got his access. He complained to TG that he had to give half of the proceeds of his site to LL and GR. Apparently he got £40,000 for his site.

The money to pay GR and LL was obtained from Bank of Ireland, Blanchardstown. It was obtained on an undertaking from Seamus Maguire who acted for Fassnige at that time. It was drawn down in the form of two bank drafts signed by Paul Sheeran. TG believes that the drafts were given to Seamus Maguire.

warned about Dunlop on a previous occasion and although Dunlop had written personally to Gilmartin he was not anxious to employ him.

He recalled a meeting held at the offices of Irish Life which was attended by himself and Seamus Maguire with a number of representatives of Irish Life including Bill Nowlan. Gilmartin was endeavoring to buy two properties in O'Connell Street including the Rainbow Café. Irish Life were looking for £1m. At that time Garreth Fitzgerald's government were endeavoring to get the Financial Services Centre off the ground and the principal of Taylor Woodrow had done a deal with the Fitzgerald government to start the work. However they got shafted because Charlie Haughey, Dermot Desmond, Padraig Kavanagh and Frank Dunlop arrived with loads of money. He heard this at the meeting with the Irish Life people and was warned off Dunlop at that meeting. He believes that two senior politicians got £100k and £150k respectively from O'Callaghan but he is unable to prove this.

He informs me that his wife's health has deteriorated and that she is now being cared for in St. John's in Sligo.

He asked when he was likely to be called as a witness and expressed the view whether it was likely that he would not be called before May next when the election is to be held. I told him that it appeared to me that that was a likely scenario.

8. Large sums of money were taken from the O'Connell Street account to England. Bertie Ahern held an offshore facility with an Irish bank which Mr. Gilmartin thinks is Bank of Ireland but says it might be Allied Irish under which he can trade in relation to the English account but in an Irish branch.
9. The man from the Bank of Ireland who gave the information to Mr. Gilmartin was on one of his telephone conversations about to give him an account number when he was interrupted and he suddenly said that he could not talk anymore and he had to go. Mr. Gilmartin thinks that he was making the telephone call from work. Mr. Gilmartin told me the story about the temporary chauffeur who drove Celia Larkin to a bank in O'Connell Street and withdrew a substantial sum in cash which was put in the boot of the car. Mr. Gilmartin heard this story from the banker who made the two telephone calls to him. He mentioned it to Frank Connolly and Frank Connolly already had it.
10. Finally, Mr. Gilmartin drew attention to the fact that when Bertie Ahern sued Mr. O'Brien he did not sue the Sunday Business Post. He says the reason for that was that he did not want to involve a third party in circumstances where Mr. O'Brien was part of the set up.

Re: Thomas Gilmartin – PTB/34

Mr. Tom Gilmartin telephoned me on the 25th July, 2006.

Mr. Gilmartin inquired whether he could speak "off the record". I informed Mr. Gilmartin that I was not in a position to have an "off the record" conversation. Mr. Gilmartin confirmed that he had heard today that the Judgment in the O'Callaghan matter had now been deferred until the 10th October, 2006. I told him that this was correct. He said that it was all a game and it was all for the purpose of delay.

He queried as to whether the matter would go to the Supreme Court and I confirmed to him that there was a strong possibility that it would. Mr. Gilmartin indicated that if the matter did go to the Supreme Court he would lodge an objection to the proceedings being heard before Mr. Justice Adrian Hardiman. He said his name was being dragged through the mud in the High Court proceedings and that he did not have the money to proceed with the matter himself in Court. He said he was being accused of lying and making up stories and this was not the case. Mr. Gilmartin indicated that when he returned to the Tribunal, he would elaborate more on the allegations he has made including the Mary Harney situation. He indicated that previously he had not been used to Courts and consequently had only responded under pressure but that he was telling the truth at all times. He said he understands the position of the Tribunal because we are investigating wrongdoing.

In relation to Mr. Justice Hardiman, Mr. Gilmartin indicated that he should not hear any case involving Mr. Gilmartin himself as he had acted for Mr. Lawlor in the past and had taken instructions from Mr. Owen O'Callaghan. In addition, in his Judgment in the previous O'Callaghan matter, he had made disparaging remarks about Mr. Gilmartin and had compared him to thugs who had accused Mr. Roy Keane of assault. Mr. Gilmartin went on to say that he expected that the Tribunal would support him in his objection to Mr. Justice Hardiman. He indicated that when he was in England he did not want to become involved with the Tribunal because he felt the odds were stacked against him but he felt, in fairness, the Tribunal was doing a good job. He said that he had heard that there had been a resolution in Dáil Eireann that the Tribunal was to be terminated in 2007. He said this was more of the same. Mr. Gilmartin terminated the phone call and thanked me for taking his call.

Re: Thomas Gilmartin – PTB/34

I confirm that on 6th November, 2006 Mr. Tom Gilmartin telephoned me.

He said he was very concerned that it would appear that Mr. Justice Hardiman will sit on the Supreme Court that will hear the appeal from Mr. Justice Smyth in the High Court. He said his reasons for such a concern were that Mr. Justice Hardiman had made very derogatory comments about him and that Mr. Gilmartin had no right to address this. In addition, he said that the Courts are allowing Mr. O'Callaghan to make false and spurious allegations about Mr. Tom Gilmartin and Mr. Gilmartin has no comeback from this. I told Mr. Gilmartin that as yet the Tribunal is not aware as to whether or not Mr. Justice Hardiman would sit on the Court that will hear the Appeal. Mr. Gilmartin said that he was aware that the Tribunal were doing their very best in relation to this matter and that he was very happy that they had been successful in the High Court. He said he is very frustrated as Mr. O'Callaghan has been allowed in the High Court to make all of these allegations. I told him that was the nature of Court cases and that the Tribunal was not in a position to do anything to assist him in relation to that. I asked Mr. Gilmartin as to why he had not communicated through his solicitor. He informed that his solicitors had advised to "stay out of it".

He told me that when and if he came back to the Tribunal he would again address the Mary Harney issue and the Lee Tunnel issue. I told Mr. Gilmartin at this stage that anything he would tell me in that regard would constitute a prior statement and would have to be circulated.

Mr. Gilmartin said that he did not mean to put me in any difficult position and he apologised for taking up time. I informed Mr. Gilmartin that there was no apology required but that in light of the first O'Callaghan case that anything he said to me in relation to any matter would constitute a prior statement.

He told me he appreciated this and he thanked me for my time.

Susan

He had some concerns about the Supreme Court, in particular with Mr. Justice Hardiman who acted for Liam Lawlor in the past. He said Justice Hardiman also took instructions from Owen O'Callaghan and was also a friend of Michael McDowell. However the others in the Supreme Court were "okay". He said the judicial review challenges were only a game to obstruct and delay the Tribunal, in his opinion, and he noted that Hazel Lawlor was contemplating a challenge also. The allegations made by Owen O' Callaghan in the High Court were "baloney".

He said the process was just frustrating for him and his health wasn't great. He apologised twice for bothering the Tribunal on the matter. I said to him that there was no need to apologise and that if his legal representatives required any further clarification, they could correspond with the Tribunal.

Re: Thomas Gilmartin – PTB/34

I received a telephone call this afternoon from Mr. Gilmartin. He was looking for my colleague Susan Gilvarry who was in a meeting and so asked to speak to me.

Essentially, he was responding to some of the matters which had been aired in the Supreme Court that day in the case of O'Callaghan & Ors -v- The Planning Tribunal. It seemed that the matters to which he referred arose out of exchanges between Counsel for the Applicant/Appellants and Mr. Justice Hardiman. He did not appear to be satisfied with some of these exchanges. However, the fact that he was not a part of the proceedings meant he felt unable to do anything to counter them. Obviously, I could not advise him in this regard and, to that end, suggested he liaise with his own legal advisers.

four of them. Clift asked for £100,000 in a brown paper bag - notes - no cheques. The other three, whose names he did not recall look a similar line. He did not meet the other four, feeling he might be expected to pay such money to 40 members.

T.K. said G.R. was opposing the development at Bushlton for the wrong reasons. Within one hour of a meeting of councillors with Government Ministers [we did not confirm whether there had been such a meeting] Mr G.R. had told Mr Siva. that the Minister had said that Mr K had bought out Mr O.C. [Mr Siva. owns land adjacent to Mr O.C.]. Mr K said Mr R was a friend of Mr Siva.

T.K. said a recent announcement by J.C. that the Blanchetown Centre was going ahead was to annoy T.K. He felt G.R. advised J.C. who he believed was going to employ G.R. when he retired shortly. He also felt G.R. had influenced P.M. to go back on an agreement concerning price for Carr lands at IRISH TOWN.

T.K. said G.R. had received payment in respect of a permission for a McDonald's in Palmerston. In the Mr B case mentioned earlier. Mr K said when LL said he was holding back money in respect of the car, Mr B responded that he had already paid Mr G.R. He T.K. also alleged that concessions were made in relation to roads at Blanchetown, by G.R., which the Council would not normally make.

The allegations against G.R. were not substantiated in any way by reference to source of or otherwise [except in the case of the alleged passing of information to Mr Siva., in which case T.K. mentioned the name of a person named by Mr Siva.] although C/H asked T.K. for sources.

STATEMENT OF OWEN O'CALLAGHAN
MADE THIS 12TH DAY OF APRIL 2000

I, Owen O'Callaghan, of Glen Farm, Upper Rochestown, Cork make this Statement on my own behalf and on behalf of Barkhill Limited and Riga Limited.

The context in which I make this Statement is a letter received by my Solicitor Richard Martin of Ronan Daly Jermyn, Solicitors, 12 South Mall, Cork from the Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments dated the 17th of December 1999. The heading of that letter sets out the parameters for the scope of the Statement as being "Barkhill Ltd. Owen O'Callaghan Riga Ltd. - Orders for the discovery and production of documents dated the 12th of February 1999." The Orders referred to are for discovery in respect of the period from the 1st of September 1991 to the 1st of September 1993 and, in the circumstances, I confine my Statement to that period.

In the course of the aforementioned letter of the 17th of December 1999, I have been requested, through my Solicitor, by the Sole Member to provide assistance in the matter and, in particular, if I would deal with a number of specific matters in my Statement.

The first matter, which appears at number 1 of the letter aforesaid, is as follows:

"1. Whether payments or donations of money were made by or on behalf of Barkhill Ltd., and/or Riga Ltd., and/or Mr. O'Callaghan to Members of Dublin County Council and/or other public representatives and, if so:-

- (i) the identity of the recipient(s) of such payment(s)/donation(s),*
- (ii) The amount of such payment(s)/donation(s)*
- (iii) The date of such payment(s)/donation(s)*
- (iv) The reason for such payment(s)/donation(s)*
- (v) The identity of the party on whose behalf such payment(s)/donation(s) was/were made*
- (vi) Whether such payment(s)/donation(s) were made in cash, by cheque, bank draft or otherwise. If by cheque the account(s) on which the cheque(s) were drawn.*
- (vii) The source of the funds used to make such payments including, if appropriate, the bank account(s) from which they were drawn."*

I beg to refer to a schedule to my Statement, marked "Question 1" in which I have set out, in tabular form, each of the matters canvassed at sub-paragraphs (i) to (vii) of question 1.

Question 2 of the letter aforesaid appears as follows:

"2. Whether any benefits, other than the payment or donation of money, including gifts, services, entertainment, facilities or otherwise were provided to any member of Dublin County Council and/or any other public representative(s) and, if so:-

- (i) the identity of the recipient(s) of such benefit(s),*
- (ii) The nature of such benefit(s)*
- (iii) The date and place of the provision of such benefit(s)*
- (iv) The reason for the provision of such benefit(s)*
- (v) The identity of the party on whose behalf such benefit(s) was/were provided*
- (viii) The source of the funds used to make such payments including, if appropriate, the bank account(s) from which they were drawn."*

In or about March or April 1992, Councillor Colm McGrath issued leaflets in the Clondalkin area supporting the Quarryvale Project. The cost of these leaflets (£1,422.67) was discharged by Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited who were reimbursed by Riga Limited. Riga Limited were ultimately reimbursed by Barkhill Limited.

In December 1992, Christmas hampers were distributed to a number of elected members of Dublin County Council as a gesture of appreciation for the time and effort put into the Quarryvale Project. The cost of these hampers was discharged by Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited and reimbursed by Riga Limited.

The only other issue which could be construed as a benefit having been provided by me or by Barkhill Limited or by Riga Limited to any member of Dublin County Council and/or any other public representatives was the provision of meals at various times to such representatives. These meals were incidental to meetings which were set up at my request and were paid for by Barkhill/Riga or by Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited (who was then reimbursed).

Question 3 of the letter aforesaid was set out as follows:

"3. The payments to Shefran Ltd. including:-

- (i) The amount of such payments*
- (ii) The date of such payments*
- (iii) Whether any services were provided for such payments and, if so, the details of such services, the identity of the persons who provided them and the dates when they were provided*
- (iv) The identity of the party on whose behalf such payments were made*
- (v) Whether such payments were made in case, by cheque, bank draft or otherwise. If by cheque the account(s) on which the cheque(s) were drawn and the manner in which the cheques were negotiated*
- (ix) The source of the funds used to make such payments including, if appropriate, the bank account(s) from which they were drawn."*

I attach a further schedule to this Statement, marked "Question 3" in which I have set out, in tabular form, details of all of the matters canvassed in (i) to (ix) (sic) of question 3.

I am anxious to point out that the matters the subject of this Statement, which I have been requested to furnish to the Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments and have agreed to do so, concern events which took place between seven and nine years ago and, accordingly, I must caution that this Statement sets out matters which I believe to be true, from the best of my recollection and honest belief.

I have read over the above Statement and it is correct.

IN THE MATTER OF THE TRIBUNAL OF INQUIRY INTO CERTAIN PLANNING MATTERS AND PAYMENTS

AND IN THE MATTER OF BARKHILL LIMITED

AND IN THE MATTER OF RIGA LIMITED

AND IN THE MATTER OF OWEN O'CALLAGHAN

STATEMENT OF OWEN O'CALLAGHAN
MADE THIS 3rd DAY OF May 2000

I, Owen O'Callaghan, of Glen Farm, Upper Rochestown, Cork make this Statement on my own behalf and on behalf of Barkhill Limited and Riga Limited. The various Companies referred to in this Statement are as follows:

- a. O'Callaghan Properties Limited. This Company holds a number of non retail investments but carries out no direct development work itself. However generally all letters written on behalf of any of the various Companies in which I have an involvement are written on O'Callaghan Properties Limited notepaper.
- b. Riga Limited. Riga Limited is the Company which has carried out all the major retail developments and holds some investment properties.
- c. Merrygrove Estates Limited. This Company was originally owned by Albert Gubay but was acquired by Riga Limited as part of the transaction relating to the Neilstown Site referred to below. Subsequently when arrangements were made for me to become involved in Barkhill Limited this Company became a subsidiary of Barkhill Limited. Subsequent to the purchase by Riga Limited of Tom Gilmartin's interest in Barkhill in 1996 the Company again reverted to Riga ownership.
- d. Barkhill Limited. This Company was owned by Tom Gilmartin which became involved in the Quarryvale Site. Riga Limited and AIB later became shareholders in this Company.

Neilstown Site

Riga Limited was involved in various developments in and around Cork City in the early 80's. In the late 80's I sought to expand the Company's interest to Dublin. The first site I looked at was a site at Cooldrinagh, Lucan, Co. Dublin. The site was sufficient to accommodate a shopping scheme but after further investigation it transpired that the site was not correctly zoned for retail. Following various discussions with members of my professional team I discovered for the first time the difficulties which were likely to be encountered in having land re-zoned. My professional team explained to me that in order to have the Cooldrinagh lands re-zoned it would be necessary to canvass local councillors to put through a Section 4 motion effectively forcing the Local Authority officials to grant the Planning Permission. I decided at this stage that I did not wish to be involved and consequently dropped the site. Subsequently Riga became interested in a site at Neilstown. This site was zoned "Town Centre" since 1972 as part of the original three town centres planned on the western side of Dublin. One was Tallaght, the other Blanchardstown and Neilstown was the third.

Merrygrove Estates a Company owned by Albert Gubay had arrangements made with Dublin Corporation to purchase the Neilstown Site. Riga Limited purchased the shareholding in Merrygrove in 1988/early 1989.

As part of ongoing discussions with prospective anchor tenants as to their interest in the Neilstown site I was informed by Quinnsnorth that there was a competing site owned by a Tom Gilmartin on the junction of the N4 and M50. On making enquiries I discovered that this site was not zoned for retail and took no further action. This site is known variously as Westpark, Quarryvale, Liffey Valley, Lucan/Clondalkin Town Centre.

In due course a Planning application for Neilstown was prepared and submitted to the Local Authority.

I believe that I was contacted first by Tom Gilmartin in late 1988 to see if I would be interested in selling my interest in the Neilstown site. My initial reaction to this was that I would not be interested and wished to continue my own development. However Tom Gilmartin persisted in his approach and I decided to visit the Gilmartin site. It was apparent that should Tom Gilmartin be successful in re-zoning the site at Quarryvale there would be no contest between the two sites as clearly the Gilmartin site was in a superior location. Any possibility of successful rezoning would have "killed off" any interest from Anchor Tenants in my Neilstown site as they would certainly have waited until the possibility of zoning of the Quarryvale Site was clarified.

Discussions followed with Tom Gilmartin. Frank Connolly in an article in the Sunday Business Post describes correspondence between me and Tom Gilmartin as follows (I do not have copies of this correspondence):

"The letter followed a meeting between Gilmartin and O'Callaghan in December 1988 held to discuss possible co-operation in the scheme for what was then known as the proposed Clondalkin/Lucan satellite town.

In a letter to Gilmartin the following day, December 8, O'Callaghan recorded that among the options discussed was a joint venture 50/50 agreement for the development or a complete buy-out of the project by O'Callaghan.

- "1. We believe the most suitable proposition would be a Joint Venture 50/50 agreement.
- "2. We also outline our interest in exploring details with you of a buy out of the project subject to your agreement to remain an integral part of the team"

In his letter, O'Callaghan also pointed to the experienced team of in-house architects, engineers and other project co-ordinating personnel before indicating that he could achieve early planning permissions on the project.

"On reflection, since our meeting, if we can come to a suitable working arrangement, we would suggest we could have a very major beneficial role in the project in assisting in having the planning application granted in a relatively short programme which would be to the advantage of all concerned", O'Callaghan wrote.

Gilmartin subsequently replied and claimed that any joint venture proposal could place the finances he had in place for the ambitious project in jeopardy.

"In looking at what involvement I could envisage you having within my scheme, at this stage I am afraid that I would have to rule out any consideration of either a joint venture agreement or indeed selling out my interest to you," Gilmartin wrote on December 20, 1988.

QUARRYVALE

NO. 9434 P. 6 27

"You will appreciate in respect of the joint venture proposal that while I have my finances arranged in principal, the details of these arrangements could be placed in danger should an agreement such as you suggest be entered into by me.... On the question of selling my entire interest in the project, I have decided that this proposal is completely out of the question."

The reference to a "beneficial role in the project in assisting in having the planning application granted in a relatively short programme" related to the fact that Tom Gilmartin told me (and I believed at the time) that once the zoned site at Neilstown and the Quarryvale site were under the same ownership the zoning could have been easily transferred from one site to another.

Option Agreement dated 31st January, 1989

O'Callaghan Properties and Thomas Gilmartin

(Being an option for Tom Gilmartin to acquire Riga's interest in the Neilstown Site)

(Copy extract attached in Appendix 1)

Various discussions followed and finally an Option Agreement was entered into by O'Callaghan Properties Limited (on behalf of Riga Limited) with Tom Gilmartin for him to purchase the interest of Riga in the Neilstown site.

When the final terms were agreed, the Option Agreements were duly prepared and sent to Seamus Maguire, Tom Gilmartin's Solicitor. At a meeting in Seamus Maguire's office the documents were finalised.

The terms finally agreed provided for:

- (a) payment of £800,000.00 on the signing of the Agreement
- (b) the option to be exercised on or before the 31st October, 1989 by payment of £1.35m on the 31st day of October 1989, and handing over a bank guarantee guaranteeing the payment of the sum of £1.35m on the 31st day of January 1990.
- (c) Tom Gilmartin to use his best endeavours to obtain the return of the deposit of £300,000 paid by O'Callaghan Properties through Merrygrove to Dublin Corporation.
- (d) In the event of Tom Gilmartin not exercising the option in the manner provided in (b) above, then Tom Gilmartin was to procure that the Quarryvale site would be subject to a covenant not to be used for retail purposes for five years from the date of the Agreement. This was to enable O'Callaghan Properties to build the Neilstown scheme without threat from Quarryvale.

During the final discussions in Seamus Maguire's office, Seamus Maguire advised Tom Gilmartin that the Option Agreement should not be signed by Tom Gilmartin unless it was subject to Tom Gilmartin obtaining Planning Permission for the Quarryvale site. Tom Gilmartin said this was not a term of the Agreement with me and he did not expect me to wait for the money. He was prepared to take the risk.

Seamus Maguire later advised at the same meeting that in his opinion Tom Gilmartin would be unwise to sign any agreement which was not subject to Planning Permission. My Solicitor, John Deane indicated that the obtaining of Planning Permission by Tom Gilmartin for his Quarryvale Site was not a term of the Agreement and Tom Gilmartin agreed with this. Tom Gilmartin subsequently signed the Option Agreement unconditionally and handed over a cheque for £800,000.00.

The second payment (£1.35m) was not made on the due date of the 31st January 1990 but was paid some months later. Thereafter I contacted Tom Gilmartin on a regular basis seeking payment of the remaining £1.35m but same was not forthcoming. During the period of time when I was waiting for the balance of the proceeds of the Neilstown sale, Tom Gilmartin would tell me about the various funding packages that he was trying to put in place to pay the balance of our money. In all cases, these proposed funding arrangements were "definitely going to happen", it was just a matter of days. Every time I tried to help a refinancing project by speaking to those involved at Tom Gilmartin's request, I was accused by Tom Gilmartin of taking over the project.

Despite being given a number of extensions Tom Gilmartin still did not complete the purchase. Following Tom Gilmartin's failure to complete I finally decided that I had no option but to continue with the development at the Neilstown site.

Nonetheless, I was subsequently still prepared to consider allowing Tom Gilmartin to complete the Agreement. I even wrote at Tom Gilmartin's request to Minister Flynn on the 5th February, 1990 (copy of this letter is attached in Appendix 2) confirming this fact and also the fact that Tom Gilmartin had confirmed that he would complete the transaction that week. Tom Gilmartin (I believe) had told the Minister that he had an agreement with me to buy out my interest in the Neilstown Site which was properly zoned for retail. Apparently the Minister asked Tom Gilmartin for some confirmation that such arrangements were in place. Tom Gilmartin asked me to give the necessary confirmation to the Minister which I did.

Despite that fact that Tom Gilmartin was unable to pay the £1.35m to O'Callaghan Properties, he still made preliminary soundings to have the zoning changed from the Neilstown site to the Quarryvale site.

I became aware of this fact and made it clear to Tom Gilmartin that I would not agree to this happening until I was paid and furthermore in the event of any formal efforts being made by Tom Gilmartin to have the Neilstown site zoning transferred to Quarryvale I would object to any such transfer. In fact Sean O'Leary, B.L. was instructed in this matter on the 22nd March 1990 and his advice sought on the issue of transferring the zoning from the Neilstown Site to the Quarryvale Site as I was extremely concerned that Tom Gilmartin might be able to change the zoning from Neilstown to Quarryvale to my detriment. (Copy letter of instruction from Deane & Co., to Sean O'Leary, B.L. is annexed hereto in Appendix 3).

In July 1990, an attempt was made by Tom Gilmartin to revive the transaction and correspondence passed between Deane & Co., and Seamus Maguire. The suggestions made by Tom Gilmartin were not acceptable. (Copy correspondence annexed hereto in Appendix 4).

In October 1990 another attempt was made by Tom Gilmartin to finance and finalise the transaction and again I was prepared to co-operate. This time he was using a Derek Saunders of Parkgrange Investments to put the refinancing package in place. Derek Saunders was in contact with AIB directly and apparently confirmed the transaction could be completed by Friday 19th October 1990. This did not happen. My Solicitor received a list of queries by letter dated the 4th December 1990 from Kieran Murphy & Co., Solicitors, 9 The Crescent, Galway, (copy letter and queries annexed hereto in Appendix 5) but the refinancing package never materialised.

Heads of Terms of 14th December 1990

(These relate to Riga obtaining a 25% interest in Barkhill in lieu of the payment of the sum of £1.35m due to it under the Option Agreement dated 31/1/1989)

(Copy attached in Appendix 6)

In a telephone call from Mr Eddie Kaye of AIB to my Solicitor John Deane the issues between Tom Gilmartin and O'Callaghan Properties were discussed. Eddie Kaye felt that there were three parties with varying interests which needed to be addressed.

- a. O'Callaghan Properties were due the balance of its money for the Neilstown site.
- b. Tom Gilmartin needed to have control of the Neilstown site in order to pursue a retail zoning for Quarryvale.

- c. Allied Irish Banks had lent a considerable amount of money to Tom Gilmartin by way of a short term bridging loan which now looked like being turned into a long term situation.

As far as I am aware AIB were never paid a penny interest on their loans since they were first granted to Tom Gilmartin in about February 1990 until after Tom Gilmartin was bought out of Barkhill Limited in May 1996 by which time the indebtedness of Barkhill to AIB had risen from £7.7m to £24.5m.

In these discussions with Mr Kaye it was agreed that I would take a phone call from Tom Gilmartin.

Tom Gilmartin and I subsequently reached an agreement that Riga would be allocated 25% of the Shares in Barkhill in order for it not to pursue its own site at Neilstown and that in effect Merrygrove Estates would become a subsidiary of Barkhill. This agreement was also based on the fact that AIB indicated to me that it would continue to support Barkhill Limited. At that time as far as I was concerned no further financial investment or commitment would be required from me.

At the time of the Agreement Tom Gilmartin had approximately £4.0m invested in the Quarryvale site and the release of the obligation to pay £1.35m would equate to approximately 25% interest in the Company.

At about this time (December 1990) Tom Gilmartin told AIB Bank and me that one of his re-financing schemes was about to come to fruition and it was guaranteed to be in place by that Christmas. Accordingly he wanted a window of opportunity until the 10th January 1991 to effectively re-finance Barkhill and re-acquire 100% of the shares. In the event he did not produce the re-financing scheme.

Some of the salient points in relation to these Heads of Terms of 14th December 1990 are as follows:

- a. Condition 1 relates to a satisfactory agreement reached with O'Callaghan Properties in relation to an outstanding payment of £1.35m, to complete the purchase of the Neilstown Site. This was to ensure that Merrygrove would not develop their Neilstown site in competition with Barkhill's Quarryvale site in return for which O'Callaghan Properties were to receive a 25% equity stake in lieu of the balance of money due to it under the Option Agreement of 31st January 1989.

- NO. 9434
- b. There is no mention in these Heads of Terms that O'Callaghan Properties should invest any further money in Barkhill nor guarantee Barkhill's indebtedness to the Bank.
 - c. Condition 3 relates to AIB permitting a roll up of interest for a further six months and in the event of the site being re-zoned for retail within the six month period AIB would consider a further extension of time to enable formal Planning Permission to be granted. In the event the zoning did not take place until the final approval of the Development Plan in October 1993.
 - d. The Bruton land, O'Rahilly land and the Murray lands referred to in Condition No. 5 were contracts entered into by Barkhill for the purchase of these lands forming part of the Quarryvale Site. Facilities were not available from AIB to allow these lands to be purchased so the purpose of this clause was to defer completion of those Contracts until after the AIB's six months extension of time had expired by which time zoning was to be obtained.
 - e. Condition 8 provides for AIB to have effective control of the Board. This clause was never implemented.
 - f. Condition 9. The mortgage over 51% of the equity of Barkhill was as far as I am aware never implemented.
 - g. Condition 11 provided that in the event of AIB being paid their principal and interest in full and O'Callaghan Properties being paid £1.35m on or before the 10th January 1991 the Agreement could be terminated.

Following the signing of these Heads of Terms, Tom Gilmartin expressed to me his dissatisfaction at the Agreement and he wanted to cancel the Agreement. He arranged to meet me in Dublin. Not only did he fail to turn up but also failed to cancel the meeting in Dublin as a result of which I had a totally wasted trip to Dublin. I then wrote about the 24th January, 1991 to Tom Gilmartin agreeing to cancel the agreement and stated that if matters were not resolved on or before the 31st January, 1991. I would proceed with my own site at Neilstown. (Copy of draft letter annexed hereto in Appendix 7).

By the 8th February, 1991 discussions with Tom Gilmartin had again resumed. Tom Gilmartin was in contact with Edmund Mc Mullan of Sentinel Investments B.V. Grand Cayman who was putting together another refinancing package. McMullan sent me some background information which included amongst his references the following names:

8 MAY 2000 0:50

QUARRYVALE

NO. 9434 11 21

- Arthur Jordan, Regal Trust Bank London.
- Steve Dacko, Royal Bank of Canada, Ontario, Canada.
- Walter Beatty, Vincent & Beatty, Solicitors, Dublin.
- James Mullaney, Coopers & Lybrand, Dublin.

McMullan wrote some letters to Eddie Kaye of AIB and to me, one of which suggested security for balance due to O'Callaghan Properties (copy of correspondence annexed hereto in Appendix 8). I presume that the Bank did not agree to the proposals and that the discussions then ceased between the parties as I never heard anymore about this particular package.

Heads of Agreement dated the 16th February 1991
(These replaced Heads of Terms dated 14th December 1990)
(Copy attached in Appendix 9)

This Agreement is in substantially similar form to the Agreement of the 14th December 1990 with the exception of Clause 10.

It was clear that Barkhill needed more funds. Both Tom Gilmartin and O'Callaghan Properties were to use their best endeavours to find an Investor to invest £4m for a 33 1/3% equity in the Company. In the event of that happening Tom Gilmartin, O'Callaghan Properties and the Investor were to each hold a 33 1/3% equity in Barkhill.

Following the signing of these Heads of Terms I became actively involved in Quarryvale with Tom Gilmartin. Tom Gilmartin however resented my involvement in Barkhill and began to reduce his active participation in the project. Added to this funds were required to close sales and Tom Gilmartin could not produce the funds.

In fact the following payments were made on behalf of Barkhill or for its benefit following the signing of these Heads of Terms.

28/2/91	Lending & Administration AIB - Tom Gilmartin	.. £ 26,192.52
5/3/91	Lending & Administration AIB - Tom Gilmartin	.. £ 10,028.00

NO. 9434 - 12 21

These amounts came from the Riga Current Account. Subsequently an amount of £230,000.00 was transferred from the Riga Loan Account back to the Riga Current Account to cover this expenditure. This was in fact the manner in which part of the Riga sub-ordinated £1m loan was utilised.

Relations with Tom Gilmartin were never easy as Tom Gilmartin always felt that he should be sole developer of the Quarryvale Site and that I should have no interest whatsoever in the site or Barkhill. On a number of occasions I offered to return my shareholding on the basis that whatever money had been put into Barkhill would be repaid and the balance of the consideration on the Neilstown site would also be paid. At various times Tom Gilmartin promised a refunding package but failed to deliver.

During the course of relationship, Tom Gilmartin on many occasions would spend up to 1½ hours on the telephone to me either at the office or at home, discussing matters.

After I first became involved with Tom Gilmartin the question of re-zoning of Quarryvale was discussed. Tom Gilmartin indicated that it was a simple matter to transfer the Town Centre zoning from Neilstown to Quarryvale and that he saw no difficulty whatsoever in achieving this transfer once both sites were under the same ownership. Tom Gilmartin introduced me to Councillors Colm McGrath and Sean Gilbride. Councillors Colm McGrath and Sean Gilbride were ardent supporters of the project well prior to my involvement and appeared to be Tom Gilmartin's main advisors on the political front.

It soon became apparent to me that Tom Gilmartin's ambition of having 1.5m square feet of retail space, (about 5 times the size of Stephen's Green Shopping Centre or about 3 times the size of Tallaght Shopping Centre) 500,000 square feet of retail warehouse space and ultimately to build 1,000 houses down the Liffey Valley on lands which were subsequently to be acquired was an ambition which could never realistically be achieved.

Tom Gilmartin obviously felt that with £4m to invest he should have been very welcome back in Dublin and everyone should support him. Clearly however, any politician would have welcomed with open arms anybody prepared to spend £4m on a development project which would have created substantial employment in Dublin in the middle/late 80's. However a scheme of the size proposed by Tom Gilmartin was of such a size as would cause severe damage to Dublin City and the other potential Town Centres at Tallaght and Blanchardstown.

In or about late February 1991 I met Frank Dunlop for the first time with Tom Gilmartin and Councillor Liam Lawlor. Liam Lawlor met Tom Gilmartin and I in the lobby of Dail Eireann, Tom Gilmartin and I having failed to meet whomever Tom Gilmartin had arranged for us to meet. Liam Lawlor brought us into Frank Dunlop's office and introduced us to Frank Dunlop as a person familiar with political lobbying and someone who would help to guide us through the process.

At that meeting it became obvious to me that Tom Gilmartin totally rejected any involvement by Frank Dunlop. However I realised that Frank Dunlop seemed to know a lot of Councillors in Dublin and having been a Government Press Secretary for successive Governments, was a person who could be very helpful making introductions to Councillors. It should be borne in mind that at this stage Dublin County Council was still in being with 78 members, the largest body outside the Oireachtas.

Subsequently I met Frank Dunlop myself without Tom Gilmartin. During the course of the discussions Frank Dunlop indicated that he would be prepared to undertake the entire political lobbying which would involve three or four days work per week and that in effect he may have to drop some clients if he was to undertake the work. I would have to be prepared to attend in Dublin up to 4 days each week to meet Councillors. Frank Dunlop wanted me to take and staff an office in Dublin but later agreed to provide me with office facilities and allowed me use his office as my Dublin base. Frank Dunlop introduced me to the vast majority of the 78 Councillors on both an individual and collective basis. Some were met on several occasions. I also made representations to over 20 Community Groups and Residents Associations.

In view of Tom Gilmartin's opposition to using Frank Dunlop I agreed with Frank Dunlop that he could invoice using his Company Shefran Limited in order to keep Frank Dunlop's involvement from Tom Gilmartin. However when I sought funds from AIB as Barkhill's Bankers to discharge the invoices or to reimburse Riga, then Frank Dunlop's position had to be disclosed. Some of the Invoices were VAT rated O. I did not complain. However there would not be any loss of revenue as if the Invoices did contain a VAT element, then this would have been recoverable by Barkhill/Riga.

Dublin County Council vote 16th May 1991

During the course of the lobbying of Councillors serious opposition was encountered from Green Properties who threatened that if Quarryvale was zoned for retail they would never build their scheme at Blanchardstown. This immediately meant that the Blanchardstown Councillors, who were terrified that Green Properties would not build the Blanchardstown scheme despite the fact that Green Properties had the land for almost eighteen years, would not support the Quarryvale re-zoning despite the fact that some of them genuinely believed the project should proceed.

MAY 2000 3158

NO. 9434 P. 14 27

NO. 9434 P. 14 27

Tom Gilmartin maintained that he could deliver a favourable vote if he was left to carry out the re-zoning process on his own. He always refused to tell me how he could achieve this. Even immediately prior to the first vote on 16th May 1991 he still maintained that if left to him he could ensure the correct result.

The first motion to re-zone the land was held on the 16th May 1991 and was carried by a comfortable majority of 29 votes to 13. In making a speech after the vote Tom Gilmartin begrudgingly acknowledged my involvement in the Company and the efforts I had made on behalf of the Company. Frank Dunlop was also present on the evening of the vote. Tom Gilmartin would have seen that he was involved in lobbying on behalf of the Quarryvale site. In fact Frank Dunlop attended the celebrations after the vote and was present when Tom Gilmartin made his speech. Tom Gilmartin shook hands with Frank Dunlop that evening and thanked him for all his help.

Heads of Terms dated the 31st May 1991

(These replace Heads of Agreement dated the 16th February 1991 and require further financial investment and guarantees by Riga)

(Copy attached in Appendix 10)

During discussions with AIB, AIB made it clear that if they were to continue their support for Barkhill, they would require a very large fee to do so. AIB were increasing their risk substantially and wanted to be properly rewarded for it.

It was pointed out to AIB that it was pointless providing for large fees for AIB for undertaking these facilities when it would only be driving Barkhill further into debt. It was suggested that there was no objection to AIB being rewarded in a profitable deal but only if the deal was profitable. The only way of achieving such a result was to provide that the AIB's fee would be converted into a financial shareholding so their ability to recover their money was directly linked to the profitability and value of Barkhill.

AIB would only agree to proceed if the shareholders were prepared to put in more equity. Riga were not prepared to do so unless its shareholding was increased to reflect the additional financial risk it was undertaking as well as the work it would have to do as project managers without payment.

The salient points in relation to these Heads of terms are as follows:-

- a This Agreement recites at Paragraph C that efforts to obtain a new investor have been unsuccessful.

b The Agreement further provides that Barkhill needs additional finance to the extent of £4m plus provision for roll up of interest on the AIB facilities of approximately £10m.

c Condition 2 provides that AIB would provide:

(i) £3m

(ii) Roll up interest until the 31st May 1993 or until such time as the amount of interest so accrued but unpaid reached £2.5m. This would effectively mean that AIB were making cash available to Barkhill of £5.5m if you include the roll up of interest. Thereafter all interest was to be paid on the due date.

The £3m was required to purchase the Bruton lands, the O'Rahilly lands and the County Council lands and costs associated with the land.

d. Riga were to provide a loan of £1m and also provide to the Bank a guarantee for Barkhill's liabilities in the sum of £1m plus interest.

e. The Riga loan and existing Directors loan were to be subordinated to the loans from the Bank.

f. I was to provide a life policy in the sum of £5m and assign this to the Bank.

g. An event of default was to be the non obtaining of Planning Permission for retail shopping of at least 500,000 sq.ft. of nett lettable space by the 31st May 1993. Despite the fact that this Planning Permission was never obtained for this amount of space, the Bank did not call in the Loan.

h. Condition 6 provided for the amendment of the percentage shareholding of the parties. As Tom Gilmartin was making no further cash available his percentage remained at 33 1/3%. Riga who were in effect supplying an additional £1m cash plus a guarantee for £1m plus interest and were undertaking the role of project manager for Barkhill for no fees were to have its shareholding increased to 44 4/9% and AIB who were providing the additional funds were to have a financial shareholding of 22 2/9% redeemable for a sum of £2m.

i. Riga were to undertake the role as Project Managers without payment

- j. The Board of Barkhill was to comprise of one representative nominated by each of Tom Gilmartin, Riga and AIB.
- k. In the event of surplus land being sold at a price in excess of £175,000.00 per acre provided no event of default has occurred 2/3rd thereof was to be applied to reducing the amounts due to AIB and 1/3rd thereof in repayment of the loans due to Tom Gilmartin.

Following the signing of Heads of Terms dated 31st May 1991 but prior to the execution of the formal Share Subscription Agreement on the 13th September 1991, Tom Gilmartin expressed dissatisfaction to AIB at O'Callaghan Properties having a larger shareholding in Barkhill that he himself held.

Council Elections 27th June 1991

There were Council elections on the 27th June 1991 resulting in many new Councillors being elected to South Dublin County Council, many of the previous Councillors having failed to be re-elected. This consequently involved lobbying the re-elected Councillors and commencing afresh with those that had been newly elected. As the motion to re-zone Quarryvale for retail had been successful, Green Properties got seriously into action with a view to endeavouring to ensure that a rescinding Motion was put in and that the retail zoning proposed would be rescinded. Furthermore on the 30th May 1991 Green Properties issued a statement through their PR Agents that they were suspending all work on the Blanchardstown site from the 30th June 1991 until the Quarryvale retail zoning was rescinded. (Copy annexed in Appendix 11).

Share Subscription Agreement dated 13th September 1991

Following representations which Tom Gilmartin made to AIB concerning the O'Callaghan Properties Shareholding the Shareholding was ultimately agreed to be amended as follows namely 40% Tom Gilmartin, 40% O'Callaghan Properties through Riga and 20% AIB. Two drafts of the Agreement was produced but no Agreement was signed within the time limits envisaged by the Heads of Term of the 31st May 1991. AIB by letter dated the 5th September 1991 wrote to Riga Limited and the other parties to the Heads of Terms as well as to Barkhill Limited indicating that unless the Share Subscription Agreement was completed by the 13th September 1991 the Bank would take such action as was open to it to recover all sums due to it by Barkhill. (Copy letter annexed hereto in Appendix 12).

At the point in time that the Share Subscription Agreement of the 13th September 1991(copy annexed hereto in Appendix 13) was executed

- (a) Tom Gilmartin had invested in cash into the Company approximately £4.0m.
- (b) Riga had invested £1m in cash and undertaken a guarantee for another £1m plus interest and foregone a payment of £1.35m and a refund of £300,000 (being the deposit it provided to Merrygrove for the Neilstown Site). In fact Riga was subsequently obliged under the terms of a facility granted by AIB to Barkhill on 18th June 1993 to extend the Guarantee to £1.450m.
- (c) AIB had provided an additional £3m in cash plus a roll up of interest to the value of £2.5m and were seeking a financial shareholding of 20% redeemable for £2m.

After the Share Subscription Agreement was entered into, AIB advanced further funds to complete the purchase of various pieces of land which were outstanding namely with Dublin Corporation and the main entrance roundabouts from St. Patrick's Land as well as the County Council yard. Following the signing of this agreement, I became a Director of Barkhill and a signatory on the Barkhill bank account for the first time.

Agreement dated 13th September 1991

(Option to acquire Tom Gilmartin's share in Barkhill and for repayment of Tom Gilmartin's investment in Barkhill - in total £5.250m).

(Copy attached in Appendix 14)

Tom Gilmartin at various times suggested that he wanted to be bought out of Quarryvale.

At the time of the signing of the Share Subscription Agreement, O'Callaghan Properties were attempting to reach an accommodation with Green Properties in order the end to feud over the zoning of the Quarryvale site.

O'Callaghan Properties were also making presentations to Green plc shareholders with a view to the merger of the respective Company's interests or a joint venture in respect of the two Shopping Centre sites.

On the same day as the execution of the Share Subscription Agreement, i.e. 13th September 1991 an agreement was entered into by Tom Gilmartin and his wife Vera Gilmartin with Riga whereby Tom Gilmartin received £100,000 on the signing of the agreement which agreement was intended to provide a mechanism to Tom Gilmartin to exit from Barkhill on the terms therein set out. The agreement was based on the premise that Riga would try to get institutional support which would allow for Tom Gilmartin to be bought out.

The Agreement was altered by correspondence between Deane & Co and Seamus Maguire & Co dated 23rd and 24th September, 1991 and also by the terms of Supplemental Agreement dated the 27th January 1992. (Copy of correspondence and Supplemental Agreement annexed hereto in Appendix 15).

In the event, such institutional support was not forthcoming.

McEnroe (Abbey Finance) Refinancing Package

In early 1992 Tom Gilmartin informed me that he was in contact with a Mr McEnroe of Abbey Finance who was putting together yet another financing package for him to enable him to repay the AIB Loan and re-acquire control of the Company. Tom Gilmartin sought the assistance of Deloitte & Touche the Company's Auditors in preparing the funding proposal. Apparently Mr McEnroe of Abbey Mortgaging & Finance Limited, based in Britain, was an intermediary arranging funding through a Swiss based Trust and provided detailed information on the structure of the transaction to Deloitte & Touche.

During the period in which Deloitte's were working on the proposal Mr Gilmartin's Solicitor Seamus Maguire and Kieran Mulcahy of Deloitte & Touche were apparently looking for further elaboration and assurances from Thomas Montgomery, Solicitors, acting for Abbey Finance and Trust regarding the availability of the Funds. Subsequently apparently Tom Gilmartin became aware of another party seeking funding through Abbey Finance and Tom Gilmartin was given the name address and telephone number of the Trust in Switzerland. Apparently Tom Gilmartin contacted the Trust and that while they knew of Mr McEnroe they knew nothing about Barkhill and would not be prepared to Fund the proposal. (Copy letter from Deloitte & Touche dated 30th October 1992 is annexed hereto in Appendix 16).

David Tristram's refinancing package

In October 1992 a David Tristram of Organisation Management & Survey Limited, of Cheshire, England, contacted me and my Solicitor John Deane. He had been introduced to the Quarryvale transaction by Tom Gilmartin who was seeking to have another refinancing scheme put in place. Discussions continued with David Tristram from that date until November 1993. The transaction was to involve US Bankers namely Interstate Johnson Lane and their lawyers Dreyer and Traub from New York. David Tristram had a firm of U.K. Lawyers involved on his behalf namely Walker Martineau. Over a period of a year the U.S. Bankers came to Dublin met AIB and had a number of meetings with me. All during that period every effort was made by me to help in putting together the financing package. At one stage I believed the purpose of the refinancing package was to take out my interest in Barkhill and pay off the money that was due to AIB and to me. Subsequently it changed to a refinancing package which would refinance AIB and involve a buy out proposal for Tom Gilmartin. Either way a large amount of correspondence was entered into during this period but the financing package never materialized. The file will be produced by John Deane as part of his discovery.

Council Vote on 17th December 1992

After eighteen months of continuous discussions and lobbying the matter finally came for a vote at Dublin County Council on 17th December 1992. There was always total opposition to the size and scale of the development proposed by Tom Gilmartin. I agreed that a development of 500,000 sq. ft. approximately would be adequate for the site and was happy to proceed on this basis. This limitation was something that was always rejected by Tom Gilmartin. Tom Gilmartin was adamant that if he was left in charge of zoning, there would not be any cap on retail space. He said that he would ensure that. Bearing in mind that at the time he was resident in the U.K., he was asked over and over again as to how this could be achieved. Tom Gilmartin refused to disclose this information so in effect he was acting in a manner detrimental to the interests of the Company. To this day I have no idea how Tom Gilmartin was going to achieve zoning without any cap. However Tom Gilmartin never lost an opportunity to criticise me for agreeing to a cap. On the day of the vote (17th December 1992) it became clear that a scheme of 500,000 square feet would not be accepted and following a lot of negotiations on the evening of the vote there was a general consensus that a scheme of 100,000 square feet would have been readily acceptable and a scheme of 250,000 square feet of retail space would just about be acceptable. On the evening of the vote on the 17th December 1992 Tom Gilmartin rang the FF Offices in Dublin County Council looking for Councillor McGrath. John Deane answered the phone, but Councillor McGrath was not in the room. Tom Gilmartin did not give his name but John Deane recognised his voice. When Councillor McGrath returned, he informed John Deane that he would not take the call if there were any people in the room as the mere mention of Tom Gilmartin's name would revive fears of 1.5m sq. ft. Shopping Development at a time when achieving 250,000 sq. ft was proving very difficult. Tom Gilmartin rang several times but I believe that on each occasion either Councillor McGrath was not in the room or else he was engaged in serious discussions in the room on the zoning issue. The votes taken on 17th December 1992 were as follows:-

The Chairman, Cllr Eithne Fitzgerald, T.D. decided to deal with the Quarryvale via three votes.

The First Vote was on the motion to put industrial development only on the Quarryvale Site. In effect this was a motion to dezone Quarryvale from Town Centre use to industrial use.

This was defeated by 37 votes to 32, with 9 abstentions.

The Second Vote was on a motion to zone the Quarryvale Site for District Centre use - capped at 100,000 sq. ft. - and for industrial use.

This was defeated by 37 votes to 32, with 9 abstentions.

The Third Vote was on a motion to provide a mixture of retail shopping and industrial uses on the site. The retail shopping was restricted to 250,000 sq.ft.

This motion, which had my support and consent was carried by 39 votes in favour, 28 against and 11 abstentions.

The discrepancy between this vote and the earlier ones is because Eithne Fitzgerald (Labour) and Eamon Gilmore (Democratic Left) voted in favour of the 250,000 sq. ft. Furthermore, Councillors Finbarr Hanrahan and Paddy Madigan, who had voted to prevent retail shopping in Quarryvale on the two previous votes, abstained. Attached in Appendix 17 are lists of the Councillors and the manner in which they voted.

1993 Ratification

Following the successful vote on the 7th December 1992 I was in constant communication with Frank Dunlop and County Councillors and met them on a regular basis to ensure that no attempts were being made by opponents of the re-zoning to put in rescinding motions or otherwise vary the size of the development which was agreed at the December 1992 vote. Over this period of time there were several attempts to galvanise support for a rescinding motion to be lodged. The Development Plan was finally ratified in late 1993.

Political Contributions/Benefits

I have made a number of political contributions during the period the 1st January 1989 to the 31st December 1993. I would like to deal with the contributions of £1,000.00 or more as follows:

1. On the 7th June 1989 I made a payment of £1,000.00 to Michael Martin in response to a request by him for support for a group of students from Colaiste Christ Ri, Cork to travel as part of their mini Company project in transition year.
2. On the 5th November 1990 I made a contribution to the Fianna Fail Party in the sum of £10,000.00 following a request from the Party.

MAY 2000 0152

QUARRYVALE

NO. 9434 P. 2: 21

3. On the 21st June 1991 I made a contribution of £5,000.00 to Michael Martin as Lord Mayor of Cork as a contribution towards the Atlantic Pond Restoration Fund. The restoration of the Atlantic Pond (an amenity area within Cork City) was the main project undertaken by the Lord Mayor that year.
4. On the 10th October 1991 I made a contribution of £10,000.00 to Councillor Colm McGrath of Dublin County Council. I had been requested by Councillor McGrath for financial support for the June 1991 Local Elections and I agreed to make a contribution to his election campaign. I did not make the payment until October 1991 but did so after being reminded by Councillor McGrath of my promise of support.
5. On the 18th November 1991 I made a contribution of £5,000.00 to Liam Lawlor of Dublin County Council. I had been requested by Councillor Lawlor to support him in the June 1991 Local Elections and I agreed to make a contribution to his election campaign. I did not make the payment until October 1991 but did so after being reminded by him.
6. Between September 1992 and April 1993 I made a number of contributions to Councillor Sean Gilbride totalling £15,500.00. Councillor Gilbride requested the support as he was running for the General Election in November 1992. Councillor Gilbride informed me that he was making a very serious effort to get elected to either the Dail or failing that to the Seanad so much so that he told me he was taking six months unpaid leave from his teaching job to try to accomplish this. It was in these circumstances that he asked me for support. In view of the support which Councillor Gilbride had given to me and prior to that to Tom Gilmartin, I agreed to support him.
7. On the 9th November 1992 I made a contribution to my local Cork T.D. Batt O'Keeffe in the sum of £10,000.00 as a contribution to his election expenses for the General Election of November 1992. This contribution was not solicited by Batt O'Keeffe.
8. On the 11th November 1992 I gave a contribution of £5,000.00 to Senator G.V. Wright as a political contribution towards his expenses in connection with the November 1992 General Election following a request from him for support.
9. On the 9th November 1993 I paid the sum of £20,000.00 to Councillor Colm McGrath. The circumstances of this payment are as follows. Councillor McGrath approached me and requested this payment on the basis that he had spent a considerable amount of money on the November 1992 elections as a result of which his business was in serious financial difficulty and he needed some financial help. As Councillor McGrath had supported me in my efforts in Liffey Valley and had supported Tom Gilmartin prior to I becoming involved in Quarryvale I felt obliged to offer support as a "thank you" for all the help and assistance which he had given.

10. On the 9th November 1993 I made a payment to Councillor John O'Halloran in the sum of £5,000.00. Councillor O'Halloran approached me for this money. He stated that due to his support for Quarryvale he was asked to leave the Labour Party. In these circumstances he was without a party and without any financial support from the Labour Party. At that time I was fully conscious of not only the assistance which Councillor O'Halloran had given to Quarryvale but also the immense amount of work which he had done (and continues to do) for the local community. In these circumstances I had no difficulty in making a contribution of £5,000.00.

I never instructed or authorized anyone, including Frank Dunlop, to pay monies on my behalf to any politician for his or her vote. Neither did I instruct or authorize anyone, including Frank Dunlop, to make political contributions on my behalf in connection with the elections to Dublin County Council in June 1991 or in connection with the General Election in November 1992.

I can state that at no stage did I feel that the votes of those Councillors which I supported were dependent on receiving a political contribution or any other benefit. In the case of Councillor McGrath and Councillor Gilbride they were ardent supporters of the scheme long before I ever became involved. They were introduced to me by Tom Gilmartin as strong supporters of the Quarryvale project. There was never any doubt in my mind that they fully supported the project.

I recall that in connection with the Quarryvale development a considerable number of leaflets were circulated about the Project. Specifically, in or about March or April 1992, Councillor Colm McGrath issued leaflets in the Clondalkin area supporting the Quarryvale Project. The cost of these leaflets (£1,422.67) was discharged by Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited who were reimbursed by Riga Limited. Riga Limited were ultimately reimbursed by Barkhill Limited.

In December 1992, Christmas hampers were distributed to a number of elected members of Dublin County Council as a gesture of appreciation for the time and effort put into the Quarryvale Project. The cost of these hampers were discharged by Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited and reimbursed by Riga Limited.

The only other issue which could be construed as a benefit having been provided by me or by Barkhill Limited or by Riga Limited to any member of Dublin County Council and/or any other public representatives was the provision of meals at various times to such representatives. These meals were incidental to meetings which were set up at my request and were paid for by Barkhill/Riga or by Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited (who was then reimbursed).

Tom Gilmartin's Financial position

An article in The People (UK Paper) on 12th May 1991 reported that High Court proceedings had been issued against Tom Gilmartin by the Inland Revenue which claims £6.6m in Tax with interest at £12,000.00 per week. This information got into the Irish Newspapers. Tom Gilmartin blamed Frank Dunlop for leaking this information.

Tom Gilmartin did not regularly attend Barkhill meetings. However his Solicitor Seamus Maguire who was also Company Secretary attended the Board Meetings and kept Tom Gilmartin informed. On the 3rd October 1994 Tom Gilmartin nominated his friend Paul Sheeran to attend Barkhill meetings and act on his behalf. (Copy of this nomination attached in Appendix 18).

Agreement December 1995.

In late 1995 Tom Gilmartin again made representations through Seamus Maguire that he would like to be bought out of Quarryvale. His wife was ill and he wanted to get back his money and forget altogether about Quarryvale. A formal letter regarding Tom Gilmartin's intentions to proceed with the sale of these shares was made by Seamus Maguire on the 15th November 1995. (Copy annexed in Appendix 19).

A number of discussions took place between Tom Gilmartin and me regarding various proposals which were put, ultimately culminating in an Agreement which was executed just prior to Christmas by Tom Gilmartin. (Copy annexed hereto in Appendix 20). He signed the document in good faith and without prejudice. He indicated at the time of signing the document that it was subject to him obtaining legal advice. A deposit of £20,000 was paid to him.

Subsequent to Christmas, I telephoned Tom Gilmartin and asked him if he had got his legal advice. He said he had done nothing about it and Tom Gilmartin suggested that the papers could be sent to Seamus Maguire.

When Seamus Maguire reviewed the papers and discussed them with Tom Gilmartin, he rang John Deane to state there were two problems:-

- 15 MAY 2010 01:55 QUARRYVALE DEPT NO. 9434 24 27
- a. Tom Gilmartin wanted a bank guarantee for his money and,
 - b. Tom Gilmartin wanted interest on the outstanding balance.

This was totally at variance with the Agreement I had reached with Tom Gilmartin. In a subsequent telephone conversation between John Deane and Seamus Maguire, it was agreed that Tom Gilmartin and I should talk in order to resolve matters.

Subsequently, Tom Gilmartin spoke to me on the telephone and identified to me that his major problem was returning the sum of £200,000 to regain ownership of his shares in certain events. I agreed to allow a six month period to facilitate Tom Gilmartin in this regard.

Tom Gilmartin, thereafter expressed his total and absolute satisfaction with the deal, his delight at being out of Quarryvale at last and the fact that he could now concentrate on looking after his wife and family. He also asked me to forget about the ill-feeling that had been between us for many years and there was now no obstacle to the transaction being completed.

Subsequently, Tom Gilmartin indicated that he was taking tax advice from Deloitte and Touche. Apparently, around the time of so doing, he met Noel Smyth, Solicitor.

By letter dated the 30th of January 1996, Noel Smyth wrote to state that he was acting on behalf of Tom Gilmartin and could not advise him to complete the agreement. The deposit of £20,000 was returned by way of client account cheque from Noel Smyth.

Tom Gilmartin eventually was bought out of the Company Barkhill Limited on the 31st May 1996 and received £7.75m. The loan from AIB was eventually cleared in 1999 (some nine years after it was advanced). Riga which has been actually involved in Barkhill since the 15th February 1991 has to date not received any profits or dividends from Barkhill. Barkhill still has losses forward on its balance sheet to the 31st March 1999 in the sum of £10.0M.

I am aware that suggestions have been made that it has been alleged by Tom Gilmartin that £1m was given by AIB to me for politicians to secure their votes. This is absolutely untrue and incorrect. It would appear to be based on the fact that AIB did lend (not give) £1m to Riga on security of Riga's assets which sum was to be invested in Barkhill or used for Barkhill's benefit. This money was expended as follows as verified by AIB as follows:-

Tom Gilmartin may have in effect "withdrawn" this allegation lately. In a newspaper article by Paul Cullen which appeared in the Irish Times on the 30th December 1999, Paul Cullen quotes Tom Gilmartin as saying "One Million Pounds was taken out of my Company's account without my knowledge". This again appears to relate to the Riga £1m sub-ordinated loan. It may well be that this money being a facility granted by AIB to Riga was drawn down on the signatures of the appropriate Riga signatories and without Tom Gilmartin's express knowledge. However as can be seen the funds were used entirely for the benefit of Barkhill. Over £860,000.00 of these funds were used for land purchase for Barkhill and payments made to Tom Gilmartin. It must be borne in mind that even if these funds were paid out without Tom Gilmartin's direct knowledge, they came from Riga not Barkhill so they were not taken from his Company's account. Riga would have appeared in Barkhill's Books as being due a reimbursement of these funds.

I am certain that Tom Gilmartin would have been supplied with these details on an ongoing basis as he would have wanted to make sure that Riga had "paid up" its £1.00m. By letter, written about the 2nd February 1993, Mary Basquille of AIB wrote to me confirming that a copy of this list of payments from the Riga sub-ordinated loan had been furnished to Tom Gilmartin as his request.

I am anxious to point out that the matters the subject of this Statement, which I have been requested to furnish to the Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments and have agreed to do so, concern events which took place up to eleven years ago and, accordingly, I must caution that this Statement sets out matters which I believe to be true, from the best of my recollection and honest belief.

I have read over the above Statement and it is correct.

THIS OPTION AGREEMENT made the 31st day of January One Thousand Nine Hundred and eighty nine BETWEEN O'CALLAGHAN (PROPERTIES) LIMITED, having their registered office at 81 South Mall, in the City of Cork, (hereinafter called "the vendor" which expression shall where the context admits or requires, shall include it's successors and assigns of the one part and THOMAS GILMARTIN (hereinafter called "the purchaser which expression where the context so admits or requires shall include his successors and assigns) of the other part.

WHEREAS:

1. By agreement for Sale dated the day of One thousand nine hundred and eighty eight (hereinafter called "the said Agreement for sale") and made between Merrygrove Estates Limited, O'Callaghan Properties Limited, Owen O'Callaghan and Jack O'Callaghan, (a copy of which is annexed hereto), Merrygrove Estates Limited agreed to sell to the Vendor the hereditaments and premises therein more particularly described subject to the conditions therein contained.

2. By Option Deed dated the day of One Thousand Nine hundred and eight eight (hereinafter called "the said Option Deed") and made between Celtic Nominees Limited and Buckfast Limited of the First Part and the Vendor of the Other Part (a copy of which is annexed hereto) the Vendor granted to Celtic Nominees Limited and Buckfast Limited the Option therein contained subject to the covenants and conditions therein specified.

3. For the consideration of Eight Hundred Thousand pounds the Vendor has agreed with the Purchaser for the grant to him of an option to purchase its interest in the said Agreement for Sale and the said Option Deed subject to the terms and conditions herein contained.

NOW THIS AGREEMENT WITNESSETH that in pursuance of the said Agreement and in consideration of the sum of Eight Hundred Thousand Pounds (IRE800,000.) paid to the Vendor on the execution hereof (the receipt whereof the Vendor doth hereby acknowledge) it is hereby agreed as follows:-

5. In the event of the Purchaser not exercising the option herein granted in the manner herein provided then the Purchaser shall procure that the owners of the land for the proposed West Park Shopping Centre at Palmerstown, County Dublin (hereinafter called "The Gilmartin Lands") enter into a Deed of Covenant prohibiting the use of the Gilmartin Lands for retail purposes which covenant shall be for the benefit of the lands referred to in the said Agreement for Sale. Provided always that that said covenant shall cease in the event of the failure of the Vendor to erect a retail development on the lands referred to in the said Agreement for Sale within a period of five years from the date hereof.

6. The Vendor will use its best endeavours to assist the Purchaser in connection with the obtaining of planning permission for the Gilmartin Lands when called upon by the Purchaser to do so.

IN WITNESS whereof the Vendor has caused its common seal to be hereunto affixed and the Purchaser has set his hand and affixed his seal, the day and year first herein written.

Re: Carrickmines 1 Inquiry

Dear Madam,

We refer to you letters of the 5th and 6th February in this matter.

We respond to your questions as follows:

1. Yes
2. There have been many communications between our client and Mr. Dunlop concerning the work of this Tribunal since the 4th November 1997. Our client and Mr. Dunlop have spoken, primarily on the telephone, on an average of one to two occasions each week (although not every week) for approximately the past four years. Each of the parties, on separate occasions, has initiated the contact. The nature of the discussions that have taken place concern the impact of the Tribunal on their respective personal lives, the likelihood of, and likely dates for, having to give evidence to the Tribunal, the likely duration of the work of the Tribunal and the date or dates upon which the "Quarryvale module" may commence. In addition, our client has spoken with Mr. Dunlop on most Saturday evenings to discuss what may be appearing in the Sunday newspapers.

Mr. Dunlop repeatedly told our client, since the commencement of his dealings

Francis D. Daly, Nicholas G. Comyn, John L. Jermyn, David B. Browne, Fergus D. Long, John J. Buckley,
Thomas J. Fox, John A. Dwyer, Richard L. Martin, James G. O'Sullivan, Patrick M. Ahern, Fergal T. Dennehy, Garvan Corkery, Rosemary Horgan, Margaret Ring,

Elaine Sweeney, Finola McCarthy, Adrian Wall, Jennifer Cashman, Deirdre Wilson, Gillian Ahern, Lynn Sheehan, Audrey O'Connor, Deirdre O'Riordan, Brian O'Halloran, Zelda O'Callaghan, Eoin Tobin, Una Barrett, Consultant John W.T. Deane.

with the Tribunal, that his legal team had advised him not to speak with our client. On a few occasions, primarily in response to various matters which had appeared in the media, our client endeavoured to seek an indication from Mr. Dunlop as to the correctness of those reports and, by inference, the evidence which he proposed to give to the Tribunal in relation to those matters. Mr. Dunlop, on each such occasion, cut our client short and changed the topic.

Mr. Dunlop occasionally sends newspaper cuttings to Mr. O'Callaghan.

There have been a few meetings between our client and Mr. Dunlop at which matters described in the foregoing paragraphs have been discussed. These meetings took place at either the Great Southern Hotel, Dublin Airport or at a restaurant close to Mr. Dunlop's home, both mutually convenient locations. They number approximately four in total.

Both the meetings and the telephone conversations referred to above took place in the absence of any other party.

There has been occasional contact between this office and the offices of LK Shields solicitors acting on behalf of Mr. Dunlop concerning procedural matters such as discovery and the provision of documents of which one party did not have copies, or had only bad copies. Specifically,

- Contact was made by this office in October 1998 with LK Shields solicitors concerning the remit of the Tribunal (the Tribunal has copies of this correspondence).
- Copy correspondence/legal submissions were exchanged between this office and solicitors for Mr. Dunlop concerning the proposed making of discovery orders.
- Copy correspondence was exchanged between this office and solicitors for Mr. Dunlop concerning leaks to the media in or about February 1999.
- A copy of the list (prepared by our client) that was given to the Tribunal by Mr. Dunlop during the course of his evidence in April 2000 was sent to this firm by solicitors for Mr. Dunlop at the request of this office
- Correspondence passed between our client and Mr. Dunlop, and between this office and Mr. Dunlop's solicitor's office, concerning monies paid by Riga Limited to Colm McGrath. This correspondence was copied to the Tribunal on 20th December 2000
- Correspondence passed between this office and solicitors for Mr. Dunlop in 2001 concerning a cheque dated 14th September 1993, Riga Limited to

Frank Dunlop & Associates Limited of which Mr. Dunlop's solicitors had only a bad copy and in respect of which they were seeking a better copy

There has been one meeting between the legal representatives of Mr. Dunlop and those of our client, in Dublin, at or about the first occasion on which discovery orders were proposed. We believe that this may have been in or around April 1999. You will recall that at that time the proposed making of these orders was resisted by our client and by Mr. Dunlop (at single hearings at which both men were legally represented). The meeting took place to discuss the respective positions and attitudes of the parties to the proposed orders having regard to the fact that all such discovery orders were proposed in single, composite, session and on notice to each of the parties.

Re: Carrickmines 1 Inquiry

Dear Madam,

Upon reviewing our letter of the 10th February 2003, sent to you in relation to this matter, we wish to draw your attention to one small error which is contained in that letter. There is a reference, in the first part of paragraph no. 2 of that letter, to a period of four years. The reference should, of course, be to a period of five and a half years (i.e. from November 1997 to the present day). Lest there be any misunderstanding, these telephone contacts did not start in November 1997. Our client has been in regular contact with Mr. Dunlop well before that date.

Kindly note the position.

Yours faithfully,

Re: Further Narrative Statement

Dear Madam,

We refer to your letter of the 11th February 2003 which was written consequent upon a telephone conversation which we had with Ms. Maire Ann Howard some time previously during the course of which we indicated that our client had prepared a further narrative statement in the matter.

The circumstances in which this statement came to be prepared are as follows:

As you will recall, our client furnished a statement on the 12th April 2000 which covered the period encompassed by the first Order for Discovery (1st September 1991 to 1st September 1993). At that stage, our client had agreed to extend the period of discovery back to the 1st January 1989 and forward to the 31st December 1993. The Tribunal complained that our client had limited his statement to the period covered by the earlier Order for Discovery of the 12th February 1999 and, accordingly, under cover of letter of the 4th May 2000 we submitted a further statement which deals with the entire period in respect of which our client had at that stage agreed to provide discovery.

On reviewing that statement, we were concerned that certain references in the final pages to events after the 31st December 1993 might lead the reader to believe that it was the intention of Mr. O'Callaghan also to deal comprehensively with payments, etc., after that date. For the avoidance of doubt, we wish to point out that this is not the case. It is in these circumstances

PLANNING MATTERS AND PAYMENTS

AND IN THE MATTER OF BARKHILL LIMITED

AND IN THE MATTER OF RIGA LIMITED

AND IN THE MATTER OF OWEN O'CALLAGHAN

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT OF OWEN O'CALLAGHAN

MADE THIS 16th DAY OF May 2003

I, Owen O'Callaghan of Glen Farm, Upper Rochestown, in the County of Cork make this Statement on my own behalf and on behalf of Barkhill Limited, Riga Limited and is supplemental to my Statement made on the 3rd day of May, Two Thousand for the purposes of bringing the history of Quarryvale up to date from 1995 where my last statement finished and listing the contributions/payment which I made to Politicians and Political Parties from 1st January 1994 to 6th June 2002.

As detailed in my Statement of the 3rd May 2000, in late 1995 Tom Gilmartin made representations through his Solicitor, Seamus Maguire that he would like to be bought out of Quarryvale. He said at that time that his wife was ill and he wanted to get back his money and forget altogether about Quarryvale.

As I stated previously, a number of discussions took place and an agreement was reached with Tom Gilmartin for the acquisition of his shares, after which Tom Gilmartin expressed his total and absolute satisfaction with the deal, his delight at being out of Quarryvale at last and the fact that he could now concentrate on looking after his wife and family. Tom Gilmartin eventually was bought out of the Company Barkhill Limited on the 31st May 1996 and received £7.75m.

During the course of the negotiations with Tom Gilmartin in connection with his request to be bought out of Barkhill, the Company was in contract negotiations with Grosvenor Estate Holdings for Grosvenor to acquire the Shopping Centre site at Quarryvale. These negotiations had commenced in approximately September 1995 and were ultimately concluded in May 1996. After I had agreed to acquire Tom Gilmartin's shares, I decided to offer to Grosvenor a 40% interest in Barkhill. Grosvenor expressed an interest in acquiring this shareholding as they were interested in having the opportunity of doing further development at Quarryvale in addition to the Shopping Centre. When Tom Gilmartin's shares were acquired Grosvenor then became involved as a 40% shareholder in Barkhill.

The 20% interest of AIB was acquired in January 1998 by Grosvenor and my company with the result that we now hold 50% each of the shareholding in Barkhill Limited. Since 1996 the Liffey Valley Shopping Centre has been constructed and opened. Barkhill has completed a Retail Park known as Retail Park West which is now open for trade. It has also sold sites for a Motor Mall, Hotel and Public House. Barkhill has completed construction of two Office Blocks of c. 60,000 square feet and 40,000 square feet and Barkhill has completed the construction of Retail Park East comprising c. 107,000 square feet. In 2000, Planning Permission for an extension of the Shopping Centre was refused by An Bord Pleanála. This section of Quarryvale is currently under review and it is hoped that in due course revised proposals would be submitted for Planning.

As indicated in my previous Statement the zoning which was achieved for Quarryvale in 1992 was subject to a cap on the amount of retail space in the amount of 250,000 square feet. At the time the cap was imposed I realised that I would have to wait until the next Development Plan before there could be any possible alteration to the size of this cap. In view of the difficulties in achieving a zoning of 250,000 square feet I thought at the time there would be enormous difficulties in having the cap lifted or extended.

With the advent of the three County Council's replacing the old Dublin County Council and the construction of the shopping centre at Blanchardstown, the debate as to whether or not a shopping centre at Quarryvale would prevent the development of a shopping centre at Blanchardstown became irrelevant. Following the division of the old Dublin County Council into three separate Councils, Blanchardstown then became part of a different County so any concerns that a shopping centre at Quarryvale could affect the shopping centre at Blanchardstown ceased to be material. I believe that Blanchardstown Shopping Centre continues to trade very successfully Gradually over the years I became aware that the feeling amongst the South Dublin County Councillors was that as both Tallaght and Blanchardstown Shopping Centres were double the size of the Shopping Centre at Quarryvale, they saw no good reason why the Shopping Centre at Quarryvale should not be allowed to expand. Likewise it was felt that the cap which was imposed was a compromise on the day and was no longer appropriate.

As I canvassed Councillors for their views on the removal of the cap it became clear to me that there was little or no objection to the removal of the cap. The removal of the cap required a change in the Development Plan which would have required the support of a simple majority of the Councillors. From my discussions with the Councillors, I felt that the removal of the cap would be supported virtually unanimously.

At some time during the course of 2000, DTZ Pineda (in association with Brian Meehan & Associates) were commissioned by Dublin City Council to prepare a retail planning strategy for the Greater Dublin Area. That process involved the holding of public consultation seminars, at which Barkhill were represented, and the delivery of written submissions. The seminars were advertised in the national press and were held, so far as I can recall, on the 15th and 16th May 2001. A consultation report was produced in late May 2001 and written submissions were made to the process on behalf of Barkhill Limited. In addition, I understand that each of the seven constituent county councils submitted a county report to the strategy. A final retail planning strategy for the Greater Dublin Area was published in early 2002.

I refer to the list of political contributions contained in my Statement of the 3rd May 2000. I would like to make two adjustments to this statement.

- A. Paragraph 3 - under this heading on page 19 of my Statement I refer to having made a contribution of £5,000 to Michael Martin as Lord Mayor of Cork being a contribution towards the Atlantic Pond Restoration Fund. This was incorrect. This payment of £5,000 was in fact a political contribution to Michael Martin for the June 1991 Local Elections. In fact the contribution to Michael Martin for the Lord Mayor's Atlantic Pond Fund was made on the 9th July 1993 in the sum of £5,000 by O'Callaghan Properties Limited.
- B. In or about the month of June 1992 I paid the sum of £10,700 to Councillor Colm McGrath of Dublin County Council. When I made my original statement I did not remember this payment as I personally held no documentation which would have helped me to recollect it. It was only when going over matters in my mind that I began to recall a payment made to Colm McGrath. I checked my records but still could not find any record of the payment. I asked Frank Dunlop if he had any recollection of the events. He told me that he would only deal with the matter through his Solicitor. In this regard I beg to refer to my third Supplemental Affidavit as to documents

I believe that this payment was made in the following circumstances.

Colm McGrath had told me on a few occasions that he was being sued for money and expressed concern that he did not have the funds to meet this litigation. In or about the 21st May 1992 I was in Frank Dunlop's Office when he received a call from Colm McGrath. Colm McGrath informed him that the litigation case was due in Court that day and that he felt Judgment was about to be given against him for the sum of £10,700. He told Frank Dunlop that he had tried to contact me and asked him if he knew where I was. Frank Dunlop told him that he would ring him back. Frank Dunlop then discussed the matter with me and I agreed to pay the amount involved. I asked Frank Dunlop if he would make the payment on my behalf and that I would reimburse him. Frank Dunlop sent a bank draft in the sum of £10,700 by courier to William Fry & Sons Solicitors to resolve the matter. From a copy of my letter to Frank Dunlop dated the 26th May 1992 it is clear that I asked Frank Dunlop to include this amount in his next Invoice. I do not have any copy of this letter other than the copy sent to my Solicitors by the Solicitors for Frank Dunlop. I believe from correspondence I have received from Frank Dunlop's Solicitor that this amount was included in an Invoice dated the 10th June 1992 from Frank Dunlop & Associates in the sum of £13,530.04. This Invoice was paid on the 28th August 1992.

I have made a number of Political Contributions during the period of the 1st January 1994 to the 6th June 2002 and I would like to deal with Political Contributions of £1,000 or more as follows:

1. On the 14th March 1994 I made a payment of £10,000 to Fianna Fail.
2. On the 13th May 1994 I made a payment of £10,000 to Niall Crowley for the European Election Fund for Brian Crowley.
3. On the 21st June 1994 I made a payment in the sum of £80,000 to Fianna Fail.

In regard to the payments described in at 1, 2 and 3 above the circumstances of these payments was as follows:

In or about the month of September 1993, I received a letter from the Office of the National Treasurers of Fianna Fail requesting a significant financial contribution for the party. The letter made it clear that I would be contacted by a Senior Representative of the National Treasurers Committee.

Subsequently I was contacted by Ray McSharry who asked me to meet him when I was next in Dublin as he wanted to discuss the request for support in more detail. I later met with Ray McSharry in Dublin. I believe that this meeting took place prior to Christmas of 1993. He informed me of the very precarious nature of Fianna Fail's finances and that the party were asking about ten businessmen to make a contribution of £100,000 each to the Party to help make inroads into the Party's serious Bank debt. I indicated I would be prepared to consider favourably such a request but in view of the large amount involved I would like some time to think further about it. After Christmas I contacted Ray McSharry to tell him that I would make the contribution as requested.

In or about the month of March 1994 I attended a fund raising dinner to which approximately twelve people were invited and at which it was indicated that Mr Albert Reynolds (then Taoiseach) would attend. It was expected that each of the invitees would contribute approximately £10,000 to the Party. On the night of the dinner I handed over a cheque in the sum of £10,000 payable to Fianna Fail.

About that time I was also contacted by the late Flor Crowley who had heard of the substantial request made of me by Fianna Fail. He told me that his son Brian was standing for the European Elections and he wanted a contribution towards his election campaign. I indicated to Flor Crowley that I would agree to make a payment of £10,000 to Brian Crowley's election fund on condition that it was cleared with Fianna Fail's Head Office and that I could deduct this amount from the sum of £100,000 being requested of me. Subsequently Flor Crowley contacted me to say that this had been agreed by Head Office and I gave him a cheque in the sum of £10,000.

I believe that some time after the Fundraising Dinner, I was again contacted by Ray McSharry regarding my promised contribution. I gave a firm commitment to forward a cheque and in June 1994 I paid the sum of £80,000 to Fianna Fail being £100,000 requested less the cheque I had already given at the Fundraising dinner of £10,000 and also less the amount of £10,000 given to Brian Crowley's Election Fund. I subsequently received letters from Ray McSharry and Bertie Ahern thanking me for these contributions. Copies of the letter of request and the letters of thanks are attached in Appendix "A".

4. On the 16th May 1995 I paid the sum of £1,000 to the Fianna Fail Forum at the request of the Forum.
5. In or about the month of March 1996 Frank Dunlop & Associates made a contribution on my behalf to John O'Halloran in the sum of £2,500. As far as I can recall, John O'Halloran contacted Frank Dunlop seeking a contribution from Frank Dunlop towards expenses in connection with the 1996 By- Election. Frank Dunlop rang me and asked me if I was prepared to contribute as well. I agreed to contribute the sum of £2,500 and I authorised Frank Dunlop to pay this amount of money on my behalf. I requested him to include it in his next Invoice to me. This amount was included in Frank Dunlop invoice dated the 30th March 1996.
6. In or about the month of July 1996 Frank Dunlop contacted me to say that he was aware that Councillor Therese Ridge was organising a Fine Gael Fundraising Dinner and he thought that I should support it. I asked Frank Dunlop to contribute on my behalf the sum of £1,000 to this event on the basis that I would reimburse him. This amount was included in Frank Dunlop's Invoice of the 17th July 1996.

7. On the 6th September 1996 I made a contribution of £1,000 to the Fianna Fail Golf Classic at the request of Mr. Pat Farrell of the Fianna Fail Fundraising Committee.
8. On the 18th October 1996 I made a contribution in the sum of £1,000 at the request of Liam Lawlor TD to a Golf Classic organised by him.
9. On the 13th May 1997 I made a contribution in the sum of £10,000 to Fianna Fail following a request from the Party.
10. On the 21st October 1997, at the request of Councillor T Ridge, I paid the sum of £1,000 to a Fine Gael Dinner Fundraiser.
11. On the 30th June 1998, at the request of the Fundraising Committee, I paid the sum of £1,000 to support a Fianna Fail Golf Classic.
12. On the 22nd February 2000, at the request of the Fundraising Committee, I paid the sum of £1,000 to support a Fianna Fail Golf Classic.

In addition to the foregoing Political Contributions, I made the following other payments during the period of the 1st January 1994 to the 6th June 2002.

- A. On the 26th September 1994, I paid the sum of £10,000 to Liam Lawlor
- B. On the 13th March 1995 I paid the sum of £20,000 to Liam Lawlor

The circumstances under which these payments were made were as follows.

I was approached by Liam Lawlor for a payment for all his help and assistance over the years. He reminded me of all his help and assistance in connection with the Quarryvale and Stadium Projects. It was he who advised that the maximum size of Quarryvale should not exceed 500,000 square feet if it was to have any chance of being rezoned. Liam Lawlor was concerned to ensure that the development should offer employment to people from the local community and wanted me to meet the local community groups to make this commitment to them. He was very familiar with the local community groups and was in a position to advise me as to the appropriate groups to meet.

Liam Lawlor had been instrumental in securing agreement with Green Properties in relation to the retail space cap at Quarryvale and had arranged for Green Properties to write to the then Chairman of South Dublin County Council confirming in effect that Green Properties would not object to Quarryvale being zoned for retail provided that the retail space was capped at 500,000 square feet .

Liam Lawlor was the person who first suggested the idea of the Stadium. He told me that he had seen it suggested in some document that Clondalkin was one of the possible locations for a National Stadium. Liam Lawlor was very supportive of all the various stages of the efforts to get a stadium built at Neilstown. He was also involved in discussions with Chilton O'Connor who were interested in providing finance for the Stadium Project.

Liam Lawlor wanted to be remunerated for his efforts. I had to accept that he was correct in these comments and that I did not object to the principle of remunerating him for his efforts. After some discussion I agreed to make a payment on account of £10,000 which I paid on the 29th September 1994. At that stage Mr Lawlor made it quite clear that he would only accept this as a payment on account as he believed that he was entitled to substantially a greater sum of money than this. I had a number of discussions with Mr Lawlor on the matter and gave him a sum of £20,000 which I paid on the 30th March 1995. I should point out that Liam Lawlor had lost his Council seat in the 1991 Local Elections over three years prior to these payments being made.

- C. On the 6th June 1997 I paid the sum of £10,000 to Citywise. The Chairman of South Dublin County Council Mr Mick Billane requested the above donation towards the provision of a bus to transport children from the Tallaght area to a Dublin City Centre Special School.

In the matter of Sean Haughey and Thomas Gilmartin

At some point during the course of 1989, on a specific date that I cannot recall, I met with Sean Haughey, at Mr Haughey's request, at his office in Dublin.

Mr Haughey told me that Thomas Gilmartin had made comments to him as follows:

1. That he (Mr Gilmartin) was having difficulties (involving George Redmond and Liam Lawlor amongst others) concerning his attempts to develop lands at Irishtown/Quarryvale.
2. That Dublin was awash with corruption and that one cannot do anything in Dublin without spending money ie, if one wanted anything done, the Councillors were the people with the power and had to be paid.

I indicated to Mr. Haughey that Mr. Gilmartin had made comments to me similar to those outlined by Mr Haughey, as having been made by Mr. Gilmartin to Mr Haughey, at 2 above. I indicated to Mr. Haughey that I was not in a position to either confirm or contradict the nature of the comments made by Mr. Gilmartin to both Mr. Haughey and I, as outlined at 2 above, as I had no familiarity whatsoever with how such matters operated in Dublin. I indicated to Mr Haughey that my only experience was in Cork and Limerick where the system operated in a different way to that perceived by Mr. Gilmartin as applying to Dublin and where (in Cork and Limerick) the managers words are final.

Re: Tax Designated Properties

Dear Madam,

We refer to your letter of the 28th November 2003 and to our telephone conversation in that regard on the 11th December 2003.

You have sought a detailed list of all properties in which our client (as effectively defined in the penultimate paragraph of your letter) has or holds an interest where he has obtained tax designation status.

There are no properties in which our client has or holds an interest where he has obtained tax designation status.

Our client has formerly held an interest in three tax designated properties as set out hereunder. His involvement, if any, in obtaining tax designation is also set out hereunder:

Arthur's Quay, Limerick

Our client's decision to invest in this project was made in December 1986. He had no involvement in the tax designation of the area which was announced in late 1985 and ratified during early 1986.

Francis D. Daly, Nicholas G. Comyn, John L. Jermyn, Rosemary Horgan, Fergus D. Long, John J. Buckley, Thomas J. Fox, John A. Dwyer,
Richard L. Martin, James G. O'Sullivan, Patrick M. Ahern, Fergal T. Dennehy, Garvan Corkery, Margaret Ring, Adrian Wall

Elaine Sweeney, Finola McCarthy, Juli Rea, Jennifer Cashman, Deirdre Wilson, Gillian Ahern, Louise Duggan, Lynn Sheehan, Audrey O'Connor,
Deirdre O'Riordan, Brian O'Halloran, Zelda O'Callaghan, Paula O'Sullivan, Ronan Geary, Sinead Corcoran, Eoin Tobin, Una Barrett, Marianne Crowley
Consultant John W.T. Deane

Carlow shopping Centre, Carlow

Our client's investment in this project was made in December 1993. He had no involvement in the tax designation of the area which, we believe, occurred during the 1980's.

Golden Island Shopping Centre, Athlone

Our client's investment in this project was made in 1994.

Our client made representations to the then Minister for the Environment, Minister Michael Smith, in 1993, in which a case was put forward for the designation of this area. Designation was announced by the Rainbow coalition (per Deputy Liz McManus) in 1994.

If you require any further information in relation to the foregoing, please do not hesitate to contact us.

OWEN O'CALLAGHAN, BARKHILL LIMITED & RIGA LIMITED

Dear Sirs,

We refer to your letter of the 15th of January 2004 and regret the delay in responding.

Dealing with each of our clients as set out in your request, we respond as follows:

Owen O'Callaghan

Owen O'Callaghan made no political contribution in the period concerned (1st of January 1985 to 1st of January 1989), either directly or through a company, agent, trustee, nominee, corporate structure, trust structure or otherwise.

Barkhill Limited

From the discovery documentation that was submitted covering the period 1st of January 1987 to 31st of December 1988 previously, it is to be noted that the first bank account of the company opened on the 20th of February 1990 and that the company was only incorporated on the 25th of November 1988. In the period mentioned (1st of January 1985 to 1st of January 1989), Owen O'Callaghan was not involved in the company Barkhill Limited and therefore did not make any political contribution through this company in the period in question. Our client is not aware of any political contribution having been made by Barkhill Limited in the period.

Francis D. Daly, Nicholas G. Comyn, John L. Jermyn, Rosemary Horgan, Fergus D. Long, John J. Buckley, Thomas J. Fox, John A. Dwyer,
Richard L. Martin, James G. O'Sullivan, Patrick M. Ahern, Fergal T. Dennehy, Garvan Corkery, Margaret Ring, Adrian Wall

Elaine Sweeney, Finola McCarthy, Juli Rea, Jennifer Cashman, Deirdre Wilson, Gillian Ahern, Louise Duggan, Lynn Sheehan, Audrey O'Connor,
Deirdre O'Riordan, Brian O'Halloran, Zelda O'Callaghan, Paula O'Sullivan, Ronan Geary, Sinead Corcoran, Eoin Tobin, Una Barrett, Marianne Crowley
Consultant John W.T. Deane

Riga Limited

Political contributions of Riga Limited during the period in question (1st of January 1985 to 1st of January 1989) are as follows:

1. 7th of January 1988 Fianna Fail £100
2. 1st of December 1988 Fianna Fail £100

In addition, on the 29th of February 1988, Riga Limited drew a cheque in favour of Hilser Brothers (jewellers) in the amount of £225. At the time it was the intention that a presentation be made to the Taoiseach at the official laying of the foundation stone of the Merchants Quay Shopping Centre. This presentation was never made as the Taoiseach was unable to attend the function.

We trust that this sets out the position as required. If you have any further queries please don't to contact us.

Yours faithfully,

Statement of Owen O'Callaghan

Dated this first day of March 2004.

During the course of 1987, 1988, and to January 1989, I had no involvement in Quarryvale. In January 1989, I executed an agreement to transfer the Balgaddy site to Tom Gilmartin. In December 1990, my company took a stake in Quarryvale.

During 1989 and 1990, even though I had no involvement in the Quarryvale site, Tom kept me informed as to progress on Quarryvale and in particular the numerous attempts he was making to finance the project and to complete the purchase of the Balgaddy site from my Company. Having regard to the fact that Tom Gilmartin was in default in completing the agreement which we reached in relation to the Balgaddy site, I was obviously interested in his progress in the Quarryvale site as funding for that development was to be used to complete the Balgaddy agreement.

Finbarr Hanrahan came to my office in Cork during the second half of 1989 to seek support as he was standing for the Senate. At his request, I gave him the name of two or three councillors to contact.

An appointment was arranged for Tom Gilmartin to meet Finbarr Hanrahan. I cannot recall whether it was arranged by Tom Gilmartin or me. This meeting took place at Buswells Hotel where I pointed out Finbarr Hanrahan to Tom Gilmartin, Finbarr Hanrahan having arrived before us. I refer to this meeting which is the subject of a separate statement.

With regard to the correspondence from Kieran O'Malley faxed to my office on the 24th March 1990, I believe I told Tom Gilmartin that some politicians were meeting in Cork and Tom Gilmartin asked me to make a presentation to them. Subsequently I must have felt that making such a presentation was not feasible because I don't believe that I actually ever made such a presentation nor do I believe I ever attended at this meeting.

I wrote to Pdraig Flynn, then Minister for the Environment on the 5th February 1990. See page 5 of my Statement submitted to the Tribunal on the 3rd May 2000 and to Appendix 2 thereto.

Statement of Owen O'Callaghan

Dated the first day of March 2004.

As outlined in my statement to the Tribunal of May 2000, when I decided to expand my companies interests to Dublin, I looked at a site at Cooldrinagh in Lucan. I was introduced to the site by my Architect Ambrose Kelly (Ambrose Kelly had acted as my architect on projects in Cork (Paul Street and Merchants Quay since 1983) who in turn introduced me to the Solicitor acting for the Vendor Mr Paul Smithwick.

The site at Cooldrinagh was sufficient to accommodate a shopping Centre but was incorrectly zoned. I was informed that there should be no difficulty in having the site rezoned for retail because the local Lucan Councillors would be supportive. My recollection is that this was said to me by Paul Smithwick. In particular I understood (again, from Paul Smithwick) that Finbarr Hanrahan who was from the Lucan/Clondalkin Ward was fully supportive of the proposed retail project at Cooldrinagh. This was the first time I heard mention of the name of Finbarr Hanrahan but to the best of my recollection I did not meet him at that time. I never proceeded with the Cooldrinagh site

At a local function in Lucan/Clondalkin, probably towards the middle of 1988, I met Finbarr Hanrahan who was one of the Local Councillors. Finbarr Hanrahan told me that as a local Councillor he fully supported my proposed development at Balgaddy. He also informed me that he was originally from the South of Ireland but I cannot remember if it was either West Cork or Kerry.

I believe the next time I met Finbarr Hanrahan was in Cork when he arrived unexpectedly at my office in Cork This would have been in the second half of 1989. He told me that he was canvassing for the Senate elections and at his request, I gave him the name of two or three councillors who he might contact. I said to him that he could use my name as a reference contact.

Sometime in 1989 Tom Gilmartin asked me to introduce him to Finbarr Hanrahan. I don't specifically recall but this request was probably made by Tom Gilmartin on the phone. Tom wanted Finbarr's Hanrahan's support for Quarryvale as he was one of the local Councillors. I am not sure if it was Tom Gilmartin or I made the appointment. The meeting was arranged for Buswells Hotel. I do not recall the date upon which this meeting took place but I am reasonably confident that it was not before the 31st January 1989 as that was the date on which Tom Gilmartin and I signed the option agreement for Balgaddy and, prior to that, our respective sites were rival (See Appendix 1 to the Statement that I submitted to the Tribunal on 3rd May 2000).

I arrived at the Hotel with Tom Gilmartin and John Deane as I believe the three of us had been meeting previously at the office Tom Gilmartin used in St. Stephens Green. I believe that these were the Arlington offices. Other than possibly arranging the meeting, I did not have any discussion with Finbarr Hanrahan in relation to the Quarryvale site either at or prior to the Buswells meeting. Finbarr Hanrahan was already there. I pointed him out to Tom Gilmartin and Tom Gilmartin went straight over to him. John Deane and I sat some distance away while Tom Gilmartin and Finbarr Hanrahan spoke to each other. We could not hear what they were saying.

Within fifteen minutes or so Tom Gilmartin walked out of the hotel and John Deane and I followed him out onto Molesworth Street. He seemed quite upset and when I asked him what was wrong he told me that Finbarr Hanrahan has asked him for £100,000. He said to me that here he was trying to bring all the barefoot Irish emigrants back from Luton and this f.... asked for £100,000. He said that he was going into the Dail the following day to tell the Ministers.

I believe the foregoing represents all the contacts I had with Finbarr Hanrahan up to the 31st December 1990. I don't believe that I had any written communications with him.

Dear Madam,

We refer to the first statement of Owen O'Callaghan submitted to the Tribunal in May 2000.

The third (full) paragraph that appears on page 5 of that statement commences with the line:

"The second payment (£1.35m.) was not made on the due date of 31st January 1990 but was paid some months later."

It appears to our client, upon review of the statement that the date referred to is clearly incorrect. The date referred to is the date for the final payment of £1.35m. The second payment under the contract was due on the 31st October 1989 and our client wishes to correct his statement in this respect.

Yours faithfully,

BARKHILL LIMITED, RIGA LIMITED, OWEN O'CALLAGHAN AND JOHN DEANE

Dear Madam

We refer to the Tribunal proceedings of the 13th May, 2004 and to the ruling made by Mr. Justice Mahon on behalf of the Tribunal that certain allegations made by Mr. Tom Gilmartin and reiterated by Mr Paul Sheeran in his evidence can be addressed by our client, Mr Owen O'Callaghan when he comes to give evidence to the Tribunal in the present module. In particular Mr Justice Mahon ruled that Mr. O'Callaghan can be examined at the appropriate time with regard to the allegation that he, through Mr. Frank Dunlop, "arranged for misinformation to be made available" to the United Kingdom Revenue Commissioners which resulted in the United Kingdom Revenue Commissioners taking proceedings against Mr. Tom Gilmartin for tax evasion, together with the allegation that Mr. O'Callaghan, through his agents or otherwise, embezzled one million euro from the bank account of Mr. Tom Gilmartin some time in the early 1990's.

We confirm it is our clients' intention to put forward his position in relation to both these very serious allegations (which, for the avoidance of doubt, are categorically denied) when the time comes for him to give evidence to the Tribunal in the present module. To assist us in this regard, we now formally request the Tribunal to circulate all information disclosed to it to-date by Mr. Gilmartin regarding his personal tax affairs in the United Kingdom, including but not limited to, all correspondence with the United Kingdom Revenue Commissioners, all demands issued by the United Kingdom Revenue Commissioners, and any submissions or other such documentation made by Mr. Gilmartin in response to same. If such documentation has not been obtained on Discovery we would be grateful if you would confirm that this is indeed the position. In such circumstances we would request that appropriate Orders should now be made against Mr. Gilmartin and all information discovered by Mr Gilmartin on foot of same should be circulated to the appropriate parties expeditiously. It is of course vital that our client has sight

AND IN THE MATTER OF BARKHILL LIMITED

AND IN THE MATTER OF RIGA LIMITED

AND IN THE MATTER OF OWEN O' CALLAGHAN

NARRATIVE STATEMENT OF OWEN O' CALLAGHAN
MADE THIS 4th DAY OF November 2005

STRICTLY PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL

I, Owen O' Callaghan, of Glen Farm, Upper Rochestown, Cork make this Statement on my own behalf and on behalf of Barkhill Limited and Riga Limited.

This Statement is in response to the Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments (hereinafter referred to as the "Tribunal") request for a further Narrative Statement in relation to the payment by Riga Limited of certain legal expenses incurred by Mr Frank Dunlop in relation to his involvement with the Tribunal.

Around November, 1998 Mr Dunlop found it necessary to engage a firm of solicitors and counsel in relation to the allegations surrounding the Quarryvale project and incurred legal expenses associated with such representation as a direct consequence, as I then understood, of his involvement in Quarryvale.

At this stage, and up to Mr Dunlop's direct evidence in 2000, neither Riga Limited, Barkhill Limited nor myself were aware of Mr Dunlop's so called 'war chest'. Whilst I was aware that he, naturally, had other clients who were developers, I was not aware of any details of this involvement. There was no mention in either the media or by the Tribunal of any investigation into any other development by the Tribunal involving Mr Dunlop other than Quarryvale.

On the basis that (i) the allegations made, it then appeared, by Mr Gilmartin were spurious and of no substance in respect of the alleged payments by Mr Dunlop and ; (ii) I was not aware that any alleged payments had been made to members of Dublin County Council other than those political donations notified by Mr Dunlop to me, it was agreed that we would consider refunding Mr Dunlop in respect of legal costs incurred arising out of the inquiries of the Tribunal. It must be reiterated and stressed that this was in the belief that Mr Dunlop's involvement with the Tribunal flowed only from allegations penned against his professional conduct in relation to the Quarryvale development. Assurances regarding this were given by Mr Dunlop throughout that period and given the nature of our professional relationship and the fact that neither I, Riga Limited nor Barkhill Limited were involved in any such payments to elected members in return for any planning favours there was no reason for me to doubt that Mr Dunlop was telling the absolute truth.

In April 2000 Mr Dunlop gave evidence at the Tribunal and his revelations came as a total surprise to me. Having thought about these revelations it became apparent to me that Mr Dunlop's involvement in the Tribunal was not one which related solely to his link with the Quarryvale development. I decided to cease any assistance given to Mr Dunlop in his involvement with the Tribunal as it would appear that (i) he was taking monies paid to him or Shefran Limited for professional work done and advices given to me and my connected companies in respect of the Quarryvale development and putting them, or a part of them, into a "war chest" which he in turn utilized for payments to certain elected members; and (ii) he was involved with other developments and developers who in turn were the subject matter of the private investigations of the Tribunal and their fees, or a part of them were also being transferred into this 'war chest' Therefore, his involvement with the Tribunal was not limited solely to the allegations made by Mr Gilmartin and those reported in the media.

The legal fees paid by Riga Limited on production of relevant invoices from Mr Dunlop related, as far as I was concerned and honestly believed, solely to the involvement of Mr Dunlop with the Tribunal to assist them in their private enquiries in relation to false allegations of certain improper payments concerning the Quarryvale development only. In order to expedite the work of the Tribunal and remove any such allegations from the media and general public I believed that by assisting Mr Dunlop in this way it would resolve the matter quickly.

NARRATIVE STATEMENT OF OWEN O' CALLAGHAN

MADE THIS 25 DAY OF April 2007

STRICTLY PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL

I, Owen O' Callaghan, of Glen Farm, Upper Rochestown, Cork make this Statement on my own behalf and on behalf of Barkhill Limited and Riga Limited.

This Statement is in response to a number of requests from the Tribunal of Inquiry into Certain Planning Matters and Payments (hereinafter referred to as the "Tribunal") for a further Narrative Statement in relation to a number of matters as follows:

The demand made by Mr Tom Hand (deceased) of Mr Frank Dunlop for the sum of IR250,000 and what knowledge, if any, I had of that demand.

In early 1992, (the exact date is not clear in my memory but it would have been during the period in which we (Mr Frank Dunlop and myself) were in contact with

26. APR. 2007 16:27

RONAN DALY JERMYN

and canvassing the relevant Councillors in relation to the proposed rezoning of the site now known as 'Quarryvale'), Mr Dunlop informed me that Mr Tom Hand had requested from him the sum of IR250,000 in consideration for or in respect of his continuing support of the rezoning of Quarryvale. Mr Dunlop did not inform me of the manner in which such payment was to be made merely that the demand had been made. This was the first (and only) instance whereby Mr Dunlop had informed me of any demand or request for money in consideration of the maintenance or provision of support for the project and was a huge surprise to me not only because of the size of the demand but the fact of the demand itself.

I considered how best to approach the matter. Frank Dunlop was anxious that I should confront Mr Hand and indicate to him that I had no intention whatsoever of making any payment to Mr. Hand. I agreed to do this.

I asked Mr Dunlop to set up a meeting whereby I proposed to speak personally with Mr Hand on the matter. Mr Dunlop set up a meeting in his offices and during the course of the meeting he asked Mr Hand to repeat the demand directly to me. Mr Hand stated that he wanted the sum of IR250,000 in return for his continued support for the rezoning of Quarryvale. Even though Mr. Dunlop had already advised me of the fact of the demand, I was nonetheless taken aback by the request. I was angry and I informed Mr Hand that if he were to ever repeat such a demand or indeed if he were to request any monies in respect of his support I would go straight to his party leader (Mr John Bruton). Tom Hand appeared not to care. I told him that I was not concerned whether he supported Quarryvale or not. I then left the meeting.

The issue of the demand made by Mr Hand never arose again and I did not inform the party leader as I was aware that Mr Dunlop would inform the relevant people in the event that Mr Hand appeared not to have taken my comments on board.

Matters concerning Eamon Dunphy and the Neilstown Stadium.

It is correct to say that Eamon Dunphy approached me and worked with me with a view to relocating Wimbledon Football Club to Neilstown. Eamon Dunphy knew Mr.

26. APR. 2007 16:27

RONAN DALY JERMYN

NO. 892 P. 5

Sam Hamam, who was then chairman of Wimbledon Football Club and introduced him to me. Eamon Dunphy also introduced me to the Football Association of Ireland.

When the whole Neilstown Stadium Plan was originally conceived, and put together, my company applied for and received planning permission for a 40,000 all seater National Stadium at Neilstown, Clondalkin.

I then approached Mr. Albert Reynolds, the then Taoiseach, for financial support for this stadium with a view to the stadium becoming the National Football Stadium. My request to the then Taoiseach was for £2 million per annum for 20 years as a contribution to the cost of the construction and running of the stadium (total £40 million). The capital cost of building the stadium at that time was £60 million and I was confident that the revenues from the stadium and the government grant would pay for the capital cost and running of the stadium over a 20 year period. Mr. Reynolds said that he felt that the government could support this proposal but felt that it was totally up to the then Minister for Finance, Mr. Bertie Ahern.

Mr. Bill O'Connor (of Chilton O'Connor of Los Angeles), whose company was prepared to provide the funding for the stadium, and myself, met with Mr. Bertie Ahern in November 1994. The meeting lasted approximately 10 minutes and Mr. Ahern abruptly told us that the Government would not support this stadium financially and that he did not envisage a stadium being built as Neilstown.

It was some time later that Eamon Dunphy approached me with a view to bringing Wimbledon to the stadium as mentioned above.

One of the problems in bringing Wimbledon to Dublin was to get permission from the EU because of the Bosman ruling. I arranged through Mr. Brian Crowley MEP to meet with Mr. Pdraig Flynn who was then an EU Commissioner in Brussels to discuss this possibility with him and to ask him to speak with his fellow Commissioners. Consequently, Mr. Sam Hamam, his brother, two London based QC's and myself met with Mr. Flynn in Brussels and had a very constructive meeting. Mr. Flynn promised to do what he could with his fellow commissioners and fully supported the idea. Nothing happened.

26. APR. 2007 16:27

RONAN DALY JERMYN

NO. 892 P. 6

In any event, the Football Association of Ireland was adamant that Wimbledon would not come to Dublin and take part in the English Premiership based in Dublin.

The English Premiership Chairmen supported the idea of Wimbledon coming to Dublin.

To date we still do not have a national soccer stadium.

Allegation by Frank Dunlop that I had been involved in sending Mr. Gus O'Connell on a "foreign junket" for the purpose of ensuring his absence for a crucial Quarryvale vote.

Gus O'Connell was a Councillor who represented Palmerstown, Co. Dublin. I was aware that he was very concerned that the additional traffic generated by the scheme would cause severe congestion in the Palmerstown area. On the basis of his apprehension that the Quarryvale proposal would cause such traffic difficulties he strenuously objected to the proposal.

I recall that Gus O'Connell was not present for one of the key Quarryvale votes. I am not certain as to whether this was the May 1991 vote or the December 1992 vote. My inclination is that it was the latter vote. Gus O'Connell was at that time an employee of the State Agency FAS. My understanding is that he was part of a FAS group who were on a course or trip to some place in mainland Europe at the time that the vote was taken. I heard this in the Council Chamber on the night of the vote as there was some surprise that he wasn't present given his opposition to the Quarryvale proposal on traffic grounds. I had no involvement whatsoever in "sending" Gus O'Connell on this FAS trip.

Allegation made by Frank Dunlop that a demand of £250,000 had been made by Ambrose Kelly Architect for himself, for Mr. Frank Dunlop and for Mr. Liam Lawlor (deceased).

26. APR. 2007 16:27 . RONAN DALY JERMYN

NO. 892 P. 7

On a night the date of which I cannot recall, Ambrose Kelly and myself were out for a meal in Dublin at Kites restaurant in Ballsbridge. We were discussing the Balgaddy/Neilstown site. In particular, we were discussing the stadium project for the Balgaddy site. Ambrose Kelly proposed that himself, Frank Dunlop and Liam Lawlor would get involved in the project. I indicated to him that if they were to get involved, they would each have to provide at least £250,000. Ambrose Kelly said to me that neither of the three would have that sort of money and that if they had to put that money into the project, I would have to lend it to them or give it to them. I said that I could not and would not do that.

I did not do it and they did not become involved in the project.

Allegation made by Frank Dunlop that I had told him that I had been asked for the sum of "50 grand" in relation to Cooldrina by a member of Dublin Corporation who Frank Dunlop went on to identify as Mr. Michael Mulcahy.

On the first occasion on which I met Mr. Paul Smithwick, the Solicitor acting for the Vendors of the Cooldrinagh site, Michael Mulcahy was with him. I was introduced to him as, simply, Michael Mulcahy. I did not know who he was and presumed him to be a Solicitor working with Paul Smithwick. I had never met Michael Mulcahy prior to this meeting with Paul Smithwick. There was at that meeting (or subsequently) no mention whatever of a demand for 50 grand and I have no recollection of anyone ever reporting to me that Michael Mulcahy had sought, or was seeking, 50 grand from me.

Fianna Fail Private Dinner March 1994

This dinner was held at the house of T Niall Welch. The purpose for holding the dinner was to raise funds for Fianna Fail. T Niall Welch and I organised this dinner at the request of Fianna Fail and the party secretary, Pat Farrell. I have already provided details to the Tribunal of the contribution which I made to the party at the dinner (see

Pursuit of Tom Gilmartin by Inland Revenue in the UK

I gave evidence in relation to this issue on 8 July 2004 (Q 294) during the course of the Quarryvale I hearings (albeit without the memorandum of the conversation between Mr Gilmartin and Tribunal Counsel being drawn to my attention or disclosed to me). I can only repeat, and do so, that I had absolutely no involvement in, or knowledge of, Mr Gilmartin being petitioned for Bankruptcy by the English Revenue authorities. I knew nothing whatever of this issue until it was drawn to my attention by Frank Dunlop following its publication in a British Tabloid in May 1991.

Allegation that I gave Albert Reynolds £150,000 at 3am in an upstairs bedroom of my house

This allegation is utterly false and patently absurd. Albert Reynolds came to Cork, by car, for the fundraising dinner (referred to above) in T Niall Welch's house. He did not stay in my house. So far as I am aware, he went back to Longford that night by car. I did not give him £150,000 either at 3am or at any other time, either in my house or at any other place.

26. APR. 2007 16:27

RONAN DALY JERMYN

NO. 892 P. 9

I never gave Albert Reynolds any money. Albert Reynolds was never in my home.

Men with dark glasses and dark clothing/ meeting with Christy Burke

I once went to Finch's pub in North Clondalkin with Tom Gilmartin. The purpose for our going there was to meet a group of 6 or 7 women representing the Quarryvale Residents. Tom Gilmartin made a fool of himself and they left. These women were very genuine and wanted work for their husbands. I introduced Tom Gilmartin to them. I started to tell them about the proposal but Tom Gilmartin shut me up. He spent about 20 minutes boasting as to what he had achieved in the UK. He said that he would build a massive complex in Quarryvale and bring the barefoot Irish back from London and Luton to Ireland. The women all left, one by one.

The allegation that Tom Gilmartin was approached by two men wearing dark clothing and dark glasses and a third man who identified himself as a Sinn Fein councillor and at which point I stepped away is utter nonsense. It never happened.

The allegations contained in the transcript of the Noel Smyth interviews in this regard comprise utter nonsense and are totally false.

I do not know Christy Burke. I did know John McCann who was a Sinn Fein community activist for North Clondalkin at the time.

Payments to senior politicians in 1989; payments in connection with Quarryvale

Allegations that I am "very big in Fianna Fail" and Gilbride payments

I have been a supporter of Fianna Fail for many years. I am not a member of the party.

I am involved in business as a property developer. Certain political parties espouse and encourage the concept of private enterprise. Others less so. Fianna Fail, in my view, have always been the party most encouraging of, and supportive of, private enterprise. In those circumstances, they are the political party whom I like most to see attaining power and serving in Government. As is detailed in my statements submitted to the Tribunal, I have assisted the party by making financial contributions. I have assisted certain politicians with their election expenses at election time.

I do not know what is meant by Tom Gilmartin when he says that I was available to deliver the Cork Fianna Fail vote to Charlie Haughey in internal party situations. If it means, as I suspect it does, that at times at which Mr. Haughey's leadership was under threat, I was in a position to ensure that Fianna Fail politicians in Cork voted for him, it is rubbish. I met Mr Haughey twice in my life. I have, and have had, no influence whatever with sitting TD's in Cork, whether to "deliver" their votes or otherwise.

I have fully detailed every payment that I have ever made to Sean Gilbride in my statement of 3 May 2000 already made to the Tribunal.

Re: £300,000 payment to Frank Dunlop

Following the imposition of the retail cap on Quarryvale in December 1992, I promised Frank Dunlop a success fee if he was successful in getting the cap lifted. I don't recall the time at which I promised Frank Dunlop this success fee but it would have been shortly after the cap was imposed in December 1992.

Frank Dunlop was paid a success fee of £300,000. I am aware that this was paid over to the Revenue Commissioners as Frank Dunlop was having difficulties in that regard at the time.

There is absolutely no truth whatsoever to the totally false suggestion that I paid Frank Dunlop monies either to tell a certain story to the Tribunal or not to talk to the Tribunal at all. That is absolute rubbish.

Re: Opening of Liffey Valley Shopping Centre

Prior to the proposed date for the opening of the Liffey Valley Shopping Centre, the date of which I am not entirely certain, Frank Dunlop and I discussed the appropriate person to be invited to opening the shopping centre and we agreed that it should be Mr. Bertie Ahern, Taoiseach. We also agreed that the Duke of Westminster, as our partner in the project, would have to be present.

So far as I can recall, the Duke gave me two or three dates upon which he would be available to attend the opening. I passed these on to Frank Dunlop who, I believe, passed them on in turn to the Taoiseach's office. The Taoiseach confirmed his availability for one of those dates. Subsequently, the Duke said that he was not, in fact, available on the date that had been selected by the Taoiseach. The Duke proposed alternative dates but, unfortunately, the Taoiseach was not available on any of those alternative dates. I understand that Frank Dunlop was advised of this by the Taoiseach's office. The matter dragged on for some time but, ultimately, there was no official opening of the shopping centre. The doors simply opened for business. The Taoiseach was not there and the Duke of Westminster was not there. There was no ceremony performed, no other persons were considered for the opening and no formal invitations were issued.

IN THE MATTER OF THE TRIBUNALS OF ENQUIRY (EVIDENCE) ACTS, 1921

AND

IN THE MATTER OF OWEN O'CALLAGHAN

STATEMENT OF OWEN O'CALLAGHAN

I make this statement in response to a request made in the course of the evidence of Frank Dunlop to the Tribunal and in the context of a letter written by me to the then Taoiseach Albert Reynolds on 17 November 1992. In that letter I referred to total support provided which exceeds a six figure sum.

I should say, firstly, that the reference to the provision of such support refers to support provided over the years (as is evident from the first paragraph of the letter). It does not mean, as has been suggested by Tribunal Counsel, that the support in excess of six figures is in connection with the 1992 election. In the context of the enormous discovery which I have made to the Tribunal dealing with every single payment made by me, Barkhill Limited, Riga Limited and O'Callaghan Properties Limited for the relevant period, and in the context of what is clearly stated in this letter, such an interpretation is not sustainable.

I should say, secondly, that I inadvertently omitted from my narrative statements, which detail all political contributions since 1989, the payment made to Fianna Fail in November 1992 referred to in this letter. Clearly, the letter itself was provided by me to the Tribunal as was a list of all payments made to politicians between 1989 and 2000 by O'Callaghan Properties Limited (see Book of Discovery 5.4 furnished to the Tribunal). However, I omitted in error to refer to this payment in my narrative statement.

By the time this letter was written, I had made, or committed to, payments to politicians in the sum of £72,200 since 1989. These are outlined in my statements and include the monthly payments to Sean Gilbride of £10,500 which were started in September 1992 and the £5,000 paid to Fianna Fail under cover of the letter to the Taoiseach. In addition, I would have made political contributions, the extent of which I am unsure, in the period since I started business in 1969.

When I stated in my letter to the Taoiseach that I had provided support of in excess of a six figure sum, I did not sit down and calculate exactly how much I had paid. My impression at that time was that payments made by me had been made in or about that order over the years. For the avoidance of doubt, and as I have repeatedly stated, there were no other payments made by me other than those which I have disclosed.
